I make this point once again—it is not a new one in this debate, either at second reading or at the committee stage—but I think it is preposterous that the public of this province or the Opposition should have to consider and to pass final judgment on a bill in which a key factor dealing with the people whose need for insurance is greatest, is being withheld by the government. I refuse to believe that a government that has seriously been studying health insurance for as long as this government said it has, would not be in a position to present us with the maximum figure that is going to be put in the legislation and now the regulations.

An hon. member: It must be even higher than $180.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly—you are only speculating, but I do not blame you.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to underline this strongly as well, and I have said it before when this debate started.

Let me mention what is happening in British Columbia. Perhaps it would be a little easier to mention what has happened in Saskatchewan where there is a premium of $24; and the hon. Minister is talking of $180—or something. But let me say this—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think it is only fair that the hon. leader of the Opposition point out that there is a very grave difference between this magical figure that they quote from Saskatchewan—$24. That is the $24 that the subscriber puts out immediately from his own pocket, but he is paying for the rest through taxes. Let us make this eminently clear.

Mr. Thompson: Let me make this eminently clear, that we are being asked to pay taxes for not only medical schools, but for a variety of health services, and we are emphasizing—and I want to make this very clear—full, complete health programmes without this sort of patchwork approach that you are taking. At times I see the hon. Minister—and I hate to say this—as Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. At one point he says that he is against compulsion and the next moment he says that he is for it—but I will not go into that further.

Again, on this situation of wanting to know what the premiums are and what the cost is, we are on third reading and for some reason the hon. Minister is silent on this. He says that he has given six years' study to this but surely the pocket book costs are the most important thing to the people of this province; but he is withholding telling us anything about it. Either he has not studied it sufficiently—if so, admit it, or else say what other reason he might have for withholding it.

Look at Premier Bennett. He said very clearly that the premiums under the scheme that they are proposing will range from $30 a year for a single person with no taxable income, to $150 for a family with a taxable income of more than $1,000. They are getting some concrete things on this and this is what we are asking of the hon. Minister. I see no reason why we cannot get an answer.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have already told the House during second reading, what the rates are on which would be based the coverage provided through the government. I have also pointed out to you that the Act states very specifically that one of the responsibilities of the council is to recommend maximum premiums, the first maximum premium and all succeeding maximum premiums. This bill has not yet become law and we have not the authority to set up the medical services insurance council and they cannot give us recommendations, but the premium structure on which our programme will be based—bearing in mind that 45 per cent of our people who the government will look after, are in the high cost bracket of $72 for a single person—is as follows: $144 for a family of two and $180 for a family of three; and for those who have not taxable income, this will be provided for them at no cost; those who have a taxable income of $70 will pay $10 and the government will pay the difference; those with a taxable income of $300 will pay $43 premium and the government will pay the rest, and so on up the scale. We have the table laid out and these are the figures on which the government's programme is based, but I have no idea whether this is the maximum that the council will recommend to us. It may be less; it may be more. I do not know yet, but the cost on which the government programme is based is set out here. We have nothing to hide. Let me make that perfectly clear to you.

My hon. friend from York South speaks about the bad risks taking all the rap. Let us remember that one bad risk for every 17 who are good risks would be a small minority. Let us remember, too, that a great many of the high insurance risks are now swallowed up in groups and this will continue because a group cannot be changed. The insurance carrier cannot, under the terms of any group contract I know of, withdraw bad risks. Many of them, as my hon. friends know very well, are carried over into retirement, as long as the actively employed group remains with the carrier. I think this is something that the labour movement has built into all of their contracts, built in very wisely over the years.

That the bad risk, as my hon. friend said—and I think I quote him correctly—will take the rap, is not a fact. This is part of the pooling, as I have just pointed out. Ten cents a month will come out of every good premium, every person who pays a premium into any of the—if my hon. friend would just wait a minute, it is rather distracting to hear that nattering—

Mr. Bryden: You gave no assurance of that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If my hon. friend would just listen. As I have already pointed out, the pooling will be built on the base of all insurance contracts and the ten cents per month will come out of every healthy risk and be put into the pool to help mitigate this so-called “rap” my hon. friend speaks about which will be suffered by the bad risk. And let us remember that that bad risk cannot get insurance today, or, if he can, as I stated—and these words which I used previously were turned to my disadvantage—what I actually said was that I am quite certain that insurance carriers will tailor any contract to meet the needs and wants of any individual. I did not say, as I was accused, that the government is going to do that.

Insurance carriers will tailor-make a plan, I am quite certain, to fit the needs and wants of any individual in any area that can be insured. So it is in the health field, but there are great numbers, by and large, who cannot get medical services insurance by virtue of their age, their state of health, or for various other reasons. Now this will be available to them, and it will be available at less cost than it would be now if they were to have it tailor-made because the risk of their high cost will be spread across the whole of the broad insurance base, with the exception of the group covered by the government.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister says that I have misunderstood, and conceivably I have misunderstood what he said. I find it very difficult to follow his line of reasoning because it appears to change. The hon. Minister did state this, and if I am wrong I hope he will correct me—the maximum rates will be fixed for individuals who are seeking coverage and who are high risks. Now presumably these people are going to be paying more than a person who is a good risk and who is also seeking individual coverage.

If I may illustrate my point with figures for the moment. A person who is in good health and seeks coverage, conceivably can get it for $150 or $160. But if he is a bad risk, he is maybe going to get it at a maximum. The maximum may be $185, it may be $200. All you are saying is that without the pooling arrangement, the maximum might have been $250. But they have pooled the risks and they have got it down some.

That still leaves him taking a rap. He is taking a rap of $200 instead of $250, when if he did not have the misfortune of having ill-health he could get it for $150. So my contention that this man is going to be taking the rap, in violation of the basic sharing of risks, particularly to meet the needs of those whose need is greatest, those who have poor health—and often when they have poor health, they have the least means to be able to buy insurance.

So my case is valid, except that all the hon. Minister is saying is that it might be even worse, he might have to pay $250, and these very considerate insurance companies are going to have a pooling arrangement that will bring the potential premium of $250 down to $180 or $200, and he should feel lucky that he is only having to pay $180 or $200. Now, this is a line of argument which I suggest to the hon. Minister is not valid in terms of the kind of insurance coverage that most countries and most provinces are seeking at this time rather than this patchwork.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister gave a figure yesterday in reply to a question I had raised in respect to the Alberta situation and suggested these figures might well apply in Ontario, although they will vary here to some extent.

This morning he has given us a figure of 10 cents, a figure which the insurance companies will set aside for the bad risks. Now, certainly if the insurance companies have arrived at a figure of 10 cents, then they must have based that upon some sort of actuarial—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend is reading something into my remarks that was not there and was not intended. I stated that, in our discussions with the actuaries, they explained the operation of the pooling in this way, and the 10 cent figure was the figure they used. This was not, I repeat, any decision or conclusion of the insurance carriers.

Mr. Young: I appreciate that information, and the 10 cents was simply an illustration.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: An illustration!

Mr. Young: A figure such as the $180, or whatever others were being pulled out of the air here to talk about—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, the $180 is not a figure pulled out of the air. It is a firm figure.

Mr. Young: The $180, I understand, is a firm figure as far as the assistance part is concerned, but we have been using that as a possible other maximum. The hon. member for York South used $200 and $250 just a moment ago. The 10 cents is in that same category. That is my point.

I think this House has had a shock this morning. At least the members in the Opposition benches have had it when it was driven home to us that the group principle was not going to apply here. I just want to add my voice of protest, because I can see that the older people, the people who have the physical infirmities of age, are the people who are going to be hardest hit. This has been talked about and illustrated.

This group will come, I suppose, in three main groups. The one group which will be covered entirely, we do not have to worry about them. Second, those who will be covered in part, who will have taxable incomes up to the $1,200 mark, or I suppose if they are older, $1,000, or whatever it may be.

Now, the people in that category are going to have very great difficulty in meeting their own part of the insurance premium, and I think many of those people will go without the insurance rather than try to meet the financial obligation there.

The other group will be just above this maximum, many of them on pensions and low incomes, because of illness or other reasons will be just above the $1,200 taxable income and again—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member uncover the mike? I am sorry, I could not hear the hon. member because the mike was covered.

Mr. Young: I am sorry. The third group would be those who will be just above the $1,200 taxable amount who have low incomes because of their infirmities, and so on. These are people who would find it very difficult to maintain the premium, whether it is $180, $200 or whatever it might be. So they, too, will be inclined to say, "Well, we'll take a chance on it as we have had to go without insurance for years past."

I think, Mr. Chairman, this aspect of this insurance is a desperately serious one for these people. They are going to pay more, and many of them are going to go without just because of financial difficulty. Even though the policy may be there available to them in law, it is not available because of a financial barrier. So again I urge upon the hon. Minister that the group principle be introduced here and that something be done to bring the premium for the standard policy into uniformity so that everybody in the province helps to bear the burden of those who may be sick, infirm or aged.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough North.

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): I would just like to underline a couple of the things that the hon. Minister has said on this very point.

First, it has been mentioned that the group principle would not apply. In effect, perhaps it does not, but I think my hon. friends should know, for instance, that to get an individual contract now, say, from PSI, paying direct as an individual contract, you pay $209 a year. That is regardless of your condition of health, whether you happen to be what might be called a good risk or a bad risk. Certainly the suggested maximum which has been mentioned is much less than this.

Mr. Bryden: How do you know that?

Mr. Wells: It has been mentioned, and I do not know what it is going to be. We do not know what it is going to be, but in all likelihood it will be less than this $209; so, in effect, there is going to be a reduction for all people in what they are going to be able to get an individual contract for.

As has been stated, it is only those who are in the bad risk category who probably will pay the maximum; and it has been stated by the hon. member for York South that these are the people who can least afford it, that these are the people who are on low income perhaps, are aged and so forth. This is probably so; a lot of these people will be in this category. But I would say, Mr. Chairman, that these people, most of these people in this bad risk category that he has talked about, will be getting their insurance for no premium at all; because all this group will fall into the category whose need is greatest and therefore will get their insurance in Ontario for no premium; they will fall into that category which obtains insurance from the medical services insurance division, and I think that the hon. members of this House should remember that in no other province in Canada will they be able to get this—only in Ontario.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, let me re-emphasize that this certainly comes as a shock to us; this situation where, if you suffer from bad health in some way, you are a poor risk. We assumed that, under a group programme, at least there would be the principle which the hon. Minister himself enunciated. He said that there would be pooling, so that the healthy would be able to ease the costs for those who were sick. But then there is the qualification that those who have ill-health may have to pay the maximum, while those who are healthier, get away with less; they do not have to pay the maximum.

The 1951 sickness survey showed that those who were of the lower income—and when I talk about a lower income, I am not talking about charity cases, or the class that you are talking about; I am talking about the fellow who is a truck driver or who gets about $5,000—were going to have to pay the whole shot. He does not want to be a charity case. But because his wife may be sick—and let me say that sickness surely should not be a stigma, it can hit any of us—but because of this situation he is going to have to pay more. And I am suggesting that he is going to have to pay something which may be impossible for him to get full adequate coverage.

I think you have been fooling us on this situation, or else we have been fooled ourselves by it; because we had felt, when you said that there was a pooling system, that this meant the healthy helped those who are not healthy. I had hoped you would have followed that principle to cover the whole of the province on this, and make it completely comprehensive. However, you do not see that; you extend your principle only a certain amount.

But let me say this: This, to me, is a show of indifference towards those who are ill.

You are putting up financial barriers for them in comparison to those who are healthy. This is meant to be a health programme; and I suggest, if it is a health programme, you should be particularly concerned that those who have ill health should have as easy a facility to get treatment as do those who are healthy. Yet by your very remarks you are saying that the person who is in ill health and whom we term a bad risk—and what a horrible thing, to be referring to citizens of this province as a bad risk; to me, it is a revolting term—must pay more.

Mr. Sopha: It is an insurance term.

Mr. Thompson: It is an insurance term but it is also utterly abhorrent.

And then there is this other situation where you show this great faith for the insurance companies. Our hon. friend over here said it: Let us look at the record again of the insurance companies. Have you ever read some of the clauses that they have had written in fine print in some of their policies? I speak as an insurance agent, and I have seen some of the situations.

Pierre Berton listed a number in Maclean's magazine where, under one policy, a fellow was told that if you are confined to home then you will get sickness benefits. So the fellow gets out in his wheelchair and pushes himself around the block, and then the technical boys come in. They are interested in technicalities, not health. They say, "You went outside your home, you weren't confined to your home, so you are through." And these are the kind of companies in which you are putting your trust, and saying, "They will advise us about how much it will be; I have to wait for their advice on it."

It is a shocking situation, particularly when we learn about the fact of you standing up and saying there will be a principle of pooling, so that the healthy will help to pool for those who are ill; and then we learn that there is a loophole. This thing is like a sieve, a leaky bucket, when you examine it.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Bryden: Here comes the voice of the insurance companies.

Mr. Cowling: Yes. I am rather shocked at the hon. leader of the Opposition referring to this term "bad risk" because, as an insurance agent, he must have certain people applying to him for insurance almost every day who, in his opinion, would be bad risks.

I know we have; we have certain people who drive cars, for example, whom we just do not want to insure because they are bad risks. The same thing applies in the health field. There are certain people, I agree—

Mr. Bryden: They are sick people.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member spoke yesterday, and was on his feet almost all day and all night. Now, for heaven's sake, shut up for a minute and give somebody else a chance. The hon. member just talked all day long; he talked on every subject that came up. I have the floor and I would like to talk, if the hon. member does not mind; then he can go on for the rest of the day and the night.

Getting back to the insurance situation, which is something I know a little bit about, the hon. member for Sudbury has had an awful lot to say, too; he has been on his feet most of the week—

Mr. Sopha: I will be on them a good deal more before this is over.

Mr. Cowling: —hollering and shouting about goodness knows what.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member for High Park has nothing to say, especially when he is speaking.

Mr. Cowling: Why does the hon. member not just shut up for a little while and learn? You know, it is an amazing thing, Mr. Chairman, how the Opposition constantly asks questions of all the Ministers concerning estimates; if they would just listen instead of opening their mouths all the time, they would learn something and they would have the questions answered; but they just have to talk all the time.

An hon. member: Talk all the time and say nothing.

Mr. Cowling: That is right, and say nothing. It is a principle of the insurance business, and most of the citizens in our province have something to do with the insurance business, whether they like it or not; it is not a big bad bogey, you know, it is a great business; they provide a wonderful service for the people.

Certain people—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cowling: Just a minute, just a minute. There are certain people, and it is not their fault, many people, who have some disability over which they have no control; but, as far as the insurance industry is concerned, they are not in the same health category as someone who has never had an illness. And their rates are predicated on this; they have to be. The normal healthy person is not in the same premium category as someone who has a disability; that is just common sense. To say that you do not like the term "bad risk" really is beside the point because, as they say in our business, we have bad risks. The lawyers get lots of bad risks, too. Everybody gets them. But I just wanted to comment on that particular point. Certain people qualify for regular premium rates because they are normal and healthy; and others, who have a certain disability—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cowling: What a mouth. He just never stops. Just never stops. Well, I am going to stop now, Mr. Chairman.

And try to say something the next time you get up, will you? Just say one thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak again as an insurance man. I would like to say that, frankly, I have had people come to me who are bad risks from the point of view of their health, through no fault of their own. This is nothing they could do anything about because, in effect, anyone, no matter what their initiative, or what their energy or anything else, can get bad health.

I can recall one case, and I am just going to exemplify what I am trying to say by this one case. A woman came to me and told me she would like to get coverage; she had been told by a doctor that she had to take a certain kind of treatment and get prescribed drugs, and I tried to find out if there was any way she could get it in her income bracket—which, I may say, was higher than that where you will get subsidies. I could not find it. And I am ashamed that we, as a government, have not recognized that we should take this out of profit making. We decide this fellow might not be ill for a while, so it is worthwhile signing him up to give him coverage for we may make some money out of him. Let us take it out of that kind of area and say that the health of our people is important. We have advances in medical research, we have magnificent medical facilities; let us bring it down so that, on an insurance basis, where it is not a bad risk at all—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: —but on the basis of providing help to people.

Mr. Chairman: Point of order.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well sir, once again I have to say that we have returned to debating the basic principles of the bill, which were debated on second reading and I am not anxious to raise these points of order, but if we are to conduct the business of the House, I think we must pay attention to the rules. What the hon. member was discussing was very fully debated. He is now talking about a broad health programme, and if he is to say this all again, I would then have to, I feel, make my speech again. This has already been decided by the House, so I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that we follow the rules and adhere to the sections with which we are dealing.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I want to say something about section 13, because until a few minutes ago, I did not realize that there were going to be different types of contracts. Certainly we elect no one in this particular section. I had no idea at all that the people who are, to use the insurance phrase, "bad risks," are going to have to pay more. What we might call normal risks—I realize full well that the hon. member for High Park said that in the automobile business we have good risks and bad risks. But in this particular instance, we are talking about living and dying, and as far as I am concerned, I think it should not be the insurance companies who could say whether a certain family is a good or a bad risk; it should be this government. Surely all people can be looked upon as good risks. We are trying to do what we can for them, no matter which government is in power, and I think that these premiums should all be the same, whether they are so-called "good" or "bad risks." I do not think that it is good enough for people either on this side of the House or the other, to compare this with the automobile insurance industry, or the finance insurance industry. These are people who tomorrow, if they do not get proper medical attention, may die because of the lack of it; and if there is a financial burden placed in their steps so that they cannot buy this coverage, then they become afraid to go to the doctors, because they know they cannot pay the bill. As a result there may be a tragedy in the family, and it is absolutely astounding to me that there should be any difference in the premium whatsoever, as far as families in Ontario are concerned, when we are going to have a government-sponsored Medicare programme.

There is just one thing more that I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, I strongly suggest to the hon. Minister of Health, that when he is looking at the premiums, or the maximum premium, or the minimum, whatever it may be, that he does not take the figures of PSI or the figures given by the insurance industry, but rather that he go to some of our local co-ops who are providing medical care to thousands of people in this province, at much cheaper rates than PSI. As far as I am concerned, there are thousands, yes, thousands of doctors in this province, who are doing nothing but fleecing the PSI, and I can quote case after case, where the maximum bill is put in by doctors in this province, simply because PSI allows so much for a certain operation, or a certain call, whatever it may be.

I strongly suggest to the hon. Minister of Health that he go to the local co-ops who are working as a non-profit business and service to the community. In my own particular area, for example, the Bruce county co-op is providing the same service for $135 per annum for which PSI now charges $209. I suggest that there is profit in there somewhere and I hope that the hon. Minister will look most attentively into these co-ops, which I regard as giving the most satisfactory service in this province, at a much cheaper rate than either the insurance industry or PSI.

I would also recommend to the hon. Minister of Health that he have a representative of these co-ops on the council—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whicher: —who, I am sure, will give not only sound advice, but much cheaper advice, than members of the medical profession or the insurance industry.

Section 13 agreed to.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few remarks—

Mr. Chairman: Is this something more on 13?

Mr. Trotter: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Woodbine is first on section 14.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, we now come to the question of enrolment periods, limitation of benefits and waiting periods. I think it should be noted first of all, Mr. Chairman, that all this faldral about enrolment periods, waiting periods and so on, is totally unnecessary in a universal plan. If everyone is covered then there is no need for enrolment periods, waiting periods, etcetera. When we have partial, half-baked plans and programmes, however, it is necessary to guard against adverse selection. In other words, if some people are in and some are out, then steps have to be taken, there is no doubt about it, to ensure that the people who come in do not happen to be all the people who are sick—the bad risks, as we have been calling them—while the people who are well and not likely to call on the service stay out. This obviously has to be done. It is an undesirable thing to have to do, but it does have to be done, there is no doubt about it.

However, the more I sit and listen to the discussion here, the more concerned I am about the way the government is wrapping this bill up for the insurance companies. I take it from the answers that the hon. Minister has given to a good many other questions relating to intentions under this legislation, that he is not in a position yet to announce any firm intentions, because he has not got the word from the insurance companies, who are certainly going to be in the driver's seat when this legislation comes into force.

We can see the pattern unfolding itself, Mr. Chairman. In section 14, provision is made with respect to enrolment periods. I wanted to say something about enrolment periods under 13, when the matter came up obliquely, and you suggested I wait and say it here.

An enrolment period, I would suggest to the hon. Minister, is a method of putting people into a group, who do not fall into a natural group. One way of eliminating adverse selection, of course, is to enrol an entire group. Then you get the good risks and the bad risks in the group. The risks are spread and a genuine insurance principle applies. Of course, there are some people, a great many people, who do not belong to any groups that can apply as a group for insurance. A way of dealing with them is the open enrolment period. For a certain period of time, all these people can make application and, in effect, they become a group that has applied in a certain period of time; thus you get the same spreading of risks.

I have agreed that under this type of legislation it is necessary to guard against adverse selection. But the open enrolment period, if that is the method you want to choose, should be sufficient by itself. We do not then have to build several more walls around the insurance companies to make sure that they hardly ever have to part with their money. But this bill is loaded in every direction. We not only have the remarkable principle that has now come to light—although I must say I was not as surprised as some of my colleagues professed to be when I heard about it. I figured that principle would be in the bill.

But we have the remarkable proposition that there will be differential premiums, not on the basis of a person's income—I am in favour of differential premiums related to income—but on the basis of the state of his health. It will be possible to charge the sick higher premiums than those who are well or whose health is good.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): A premium the residents can afford to pay.

Mr. Bryden: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You say you heard that it will be possible to charge a higher premium for the bad risks?

Mr. Bryden: Yes, indeed, we heard it!

You see, this is another method of guarding against adverse selection. One method is enrolment periods, another is differential premium, but apparently we are going to get both. The insurance companies are going to be well looked after. They are going to get both of these methods for protecting themselves, but that is not all they are going to get. To a considerable extent, an extent that we cannot determine on the basis of the legislation that is before us, it may be that they are also going to be allowed to impose waiting periods in some situations. In fact, in one situation they will be required to impose a waiting period, which I will refer to in a moment. I now refer specifically to subsection 3 of section 14, which provides that a standard contract issued under this section:

(a) shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation of benefits with respect to any pre-existing physical or mental infirmity or condition, save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations.

Here again we are in the situation where we are asked to buy a pig in a poke. We do not know what exceptions will be prescribed by the regulations. I am sure it is useless to ask the hon. Minister because he will say that the insurance companies have not handed down the word yet, but I would submit to the hon. Minister that there is no need at all for that saving clause. The insurance companies are already well protected by the provision for enrolment period and by this tragic situation under which they will apparently be allowed to charge differential premiums. So let us not put butter on both sides of their bread and on the edges as well.

Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely no need for this clause saying, "save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations." At least let us lay it down that a standard contract issued under section 14 and with the wide latitude permitted under section 13, shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation of benefits with respect to any pre-existing physical or mental infirmity or condition, period. I submit that is fair and reasonable and necessary to protect the public.

I would like to call attention to clause (c) of subsection 3 which says:

That a standard contract shall—not "may," but "shall":

—provide an eight-month waiting period and limitation of benefits with respect to pregnancy or resulting childbirth or miscarriage, save for such exceptions as are prescribed by the regulations.

Not only is there the possibility, and I would judge from what I have heard so far, but the probability, of waiting periods and limitations of benefits being imposed or being permitted by regulations, but it is also proposed that we should have a waiting period of eight months in the case of pregnancies specifically prescribed. An insurance company will not even have the option to say, if it should decide in its infinite goodness and mercy to do so, that it will waive that unnecessary waiting period. I say it is unnecessary because of the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to the hon. Minister that he can at least make this minor concession. He has looked after the interests of the insurance companies extremely well in this Legislature; now let him give minor consideration to the public, the people who will have to pay the freight, or I am afraid the people who, in many cases, will be priced out of the market because they will fall between two stools. They will not fall into the hon. Minister's charity category, and on the other hand they will not be able to afford the extremely high freight that insurance companies will be able to charge under this bill.

Therefore, to give the hon. Minister an opportunity to rectify the situation and to save him the trouble of redrafting the subsection himself, I move, Mr. Chairman:

That subsection 3 of section 14 of Bill 136 be amended:

(a) By striking out all the words after the word "condition" in the third line of clause A;

(b) By striking out clause B.

The effect of that, Mr. Chairman—if this should be adopted, as I hope it will be—would be that subsection 3 would read quite simply, as follows:

A standard contract issued under this section shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation of benefits with respect to any pre-existing physical or mental infirmity or condition.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, may I move an amendment to that amendment?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bryden moves:

That subsection 3 of section 14 of Bill 136 be amended, by striking out all the words after the word "condition" in the third line of clause A, and by striking out clause B.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment, if I may.

Mr. Chairman: Not until we decide whether there are going to be struck out.

Mr. Sopha: I want to deal with subsections 1 and 2, which my hon. friend does not deal with at all.

Mr. Chairman: We will deal with this and then the member can go on.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us keep to the rules. When this motion is defeated, the whole section passes. If it is passed, fine; but if it is defeated, the section automatically carries. You cannot keep changing the rules just as circumstances permit—

Mr. Chairman: Wait a minute—then his amendment dealing with the first part of the bill should come first.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, if it would accommodate my hon. friend and facilitate matters, and perhaps accommodate you, I would be happy to incorporate his amendment as part of mine, if he would permit me to do so. I am not entirely in agreement with it, but I think it gets to the point. We could make it all one amendment.

Mr. Chairman, continuing with the amendment that I was moving:

And that subsections 1 and 2 of section 14 be amended by striking out the words "during an open enrolment period" in subsection 1, and the words "after the expiration of an open enrolment period" in subsection 2 thereof.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Woodbine will withdraw his?

Mr. Bryden: No, I would ask that it all be made one amendment.

Mr. Sopha: Speaking very briefly to the amendment, sir, I am happy to say it shows the splendid co-operation of the two Opposition parties and their unity in principle against this terrible statute.

I also want to add that since we have begun to deal with insurance companies and their participation in this plan, I want to say that I was one of those who was conscious, in the Opposition, of the tremendous risks that we take, because we have seen in this province, in the defeat of the leader of the Liberal Party at the last election, the tremendous power of insurance companies.

I am aware that they are so powerful that I could be destroyed. They could destroy me, if they wished to. When you are talking about insurance companies you are also talking about banks and trust companies, because they are all part of one group.

This section opens up a very interesting loophole, but I want to point out that in subsection 1 if the husband has not applied for a standard contract, his wife may apply for one if she is working. Then I take it—and I see nothing in the way as a bar—if the wife becomes pregnant she may quit work and then apply for assistance under section 7. And there is nothing in section 7 to prevent the wife—the wife of a husband who has not applied, he is head of the family but he has not applied for a standard contract. She applies for one, then she gets pregnant, then she quits work and Sopha is working 90 hours a week to help subsidize the premiums for that family. This is one of the loopholes that I point out for the hon. Minister's attention.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member mind repeating that; I just did not get the force of the example.

Mr. Sopha: All right. The husband is the head of the family, as defined in section 1 (h). He has not applied, he simply does not apply for a contract. His wife is working. Under section 14 she is entitled to have a standard contract issued to her, subject to the terms. Then she becomes pregnant and she quits working. Then she is entitled to apply under section 7 because she becomes "any person who is unable to continue payment on her medical services insurance subscriptions." She applies for a subsidy, presumably—I do not see any inhibition against granting it—and it ends up that the husband, who has not applied is working, he is earning an income, and the government, the state, the people are subsidizing that family in payment of their subscription.

Now I would like to hear where the thesis goes wrong. It is one of the loopholes in this—I repeat the phrase—badly drawn statute.

I want to say something about open enrolment contracts and this matter of bad risks. I want to say that Mr. Justice Hall in his report emphasized that the prime concern in respect of health care of our people, is making available to the people the skill and knowledge and the body of learning of the medical sciences. In fact, he put payment—the matter of premium and price—he put it in a junior and subsidiary position. He said, "The problem we face in Canada is making available good health care to people." Accordingly, then, as my hon. leader has said, the term "bad risk" is not only a very abhorrent one but it is one that completely obscures the social purpose that we are trying to effect in passing a statute to provide medical and health care for our people. We simply cannot talk in terms of bad risks as we would in regard to fire insurance and the operation of a motor car. Therefore, I find the whole concept of open enrolment periods to be totally objectionable.

Why should not an individual, as in the case of life insurance, be able to go down to the office where they sell the standard contracts, or invite the salesman over to his house, and enrol on the very day that he wishes to have made available to him protection against illness?

Accordingly, I moved, or rather the hon. member for Woodbine very kindly incorporated, an amendment to take out of this section the concept of open enrolment periods. And I say that what we want to do is make available to our people health care. That is the prime consideration; that is what the Opposition is trying to effect through this statute and that is why we are trying to assist you. We are actually trying to assist you, although the words get rather bitter and acrimonious at times, especially when we think of the tremendous influence on the hon. Minister of Health that the insurance companies have. And he is such a defender of the insurance companies and so considerate of their convenience that one almost suspects—I see these people in my mind's eye, the directors of an insurance company, they are sitting up in York club and looking over this statute and saying, "Oh, we don't like that part; call Matt up and have him change that."

The open enrolment period is purely for the convenience of the insurance companies; it is for their convenience alone. I would be willing to listen with great patience to some way in which the open enrolment period is for the benefit of the public, for the benefit of the applicant for health insurance.

To extend my remarks a little bit: I always thought that the one group of people to whom we wanted to extend health care was pregnant women. After all, the greatest asset we have in this country is our youth. We want more babies, we want more healthy babies, we are mightily concerned about the future generation of Canadians, that they will be virile and healthy people to carry on the great work that is encompassed in this country. Therefore, I object most strenuously to that sub-paragraph (b) of section 3 because to me the very people I would want enrolled in a health plan would be women who are one month pregnant, so that I could feel assured that—

An hon. member: One hour.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, one hour, indeed; one hour pregnant, if it can be measured. The period of gestation, of course, is a very shifting thing. But I want to feel, and I am sure the public wants to feel the assurance that a woman who is pregnant, and especially a woman who is pregnant with the first child, is getting proper medical care from the very onset of her pregnancy through to the time that she is delivered of the child. That is our wealth, that is our wealth! And I always felt that no matter how much money a person amasses he can never accumulate any greater store of wealth than healthy children.

That, sir, is what I want to see in this country—great numbers of healthy children. Therefore, I would invite the hon. Minister seriously to consider adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Woodbine, as well as the removal of this convenience for the insurance companies, the open enrolment period.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to add one brief comment—and not only on this vague phrase, “save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations.” I protest as strongly as I can that, after all the other protections given the insurance industry, we are asked to buy this further “pig in a poke”—leaving those behind the scenes to dictate further limitations on the coverage. On this particular issue of pregnancy I find it almost unbelievable that a Minister of the Crown, who is a medical doctor, should come into this House and present that kind of a bill, with such a limitation in establishing medical insurance coverage in this province. Indeed I am a little puzzled, I would almost be tempted to ask him some rather technical questions.

Has he ever come up with any assured formula so that he can give a scientific guarantee as to when a woman is 25 days or 35 days pregnant? How is he going to calculate this very nice and tricky little problem when, horrors of horrors, or delight of delights, the young lady discovers of a morning that the whooziness that has been her problem for the last few weeks is not some mysterious illness, but is pregnancy! What are you going to do about this? It is really ludicrous, that a medical doctor should bring this in.

An hon. member: The Minister of Labour will come into the picture.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly. But, Mr. Chairman, it is even worse than that!

Mr. Chairman: Have you nearly completed?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not finished, sir.

It being 12.30 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, June 9, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Wednesday, June 9, 1965

Medical services insurance, bill respecting, in committee, continued	3905
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	3915
A certain dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees, bill respecting, Mr. Robarts, first reading	3939
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	3941
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts agreed to	3944

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

House in committee; Mr. A. W. Downer in the chair.

MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE

(continued)

On section 14:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I will have to play this by ear because I do not seem to be able to get my notes sorted out here.

When the House adjourned I was querying the hon. Minister (Mr. Dymond) with regard to section 14 and with particular reference to this waiting period of eight months in the event of pregnancy. I had said quite frankly to the hon. Minister that I was surprised; indeed I went so far as to say I thought he should be ashamed of himself as a medical doctor, to bring in a bill that would have this kind of a clause in it. My first question to him was, since we have to be rather specific here: On what basis, in light of his past experience as a doctor, can he give the House assurance as to when exactly one month of pregnancy has been concluded so that it can be said with a certainty that the person is not going to get coverage under the Act?

That in itself, it seems to me, is bad enough; but what makes it even worse: Let us assume, for example, that a young couple were to enrol in accordance with the Act during one of the enrolment periods, and because they had conformed with the Act their coverage would be immediate. And then they discovered that unbeknownst to themselves the woman in question was pregnant; indeed that she was, shall we say, 35 days pregnant. Then she is excluded from coverage for the remainder of that pregnancy.

My question to the hon. Minister is: How can he justify this kind of thing; and secondly, the specific and more detailed question is: How—and I put this seriously because there may be an air of levity about it—can he with any assurance be specific, how is he going to avoid endless legal arguments as to whether or not one month or 28 days or 32 days of pregnancy have been completed to determine whether or not the person was eligible to coverage under the Act?

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): Let us keep our thoughts—

Mr. MacDonald: Our thoughts are dealing with a bill which is a little confused, and on this point a little unclear. As a matter of fact, I think it can be said with assurance that there is many a mistake made in this area, I suspect that half the hon. members in this House might be a mistake. I am almost convinced the hon. member for Simcoe East is one of them.

There is going to be a legal point to decide at some stage because the law is specific: After one month of pregnancy then there will be no coverage and there will have to be an eight-month waiting period.

Would the hon. Minister, in his capacity as a medical doctor, care to reply to my question?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, in studying this matter, sir, we found that it is customary in all insurance contracts to state either a waiting period of ten months, nine months, eight months; in the case of pregnancy. I think it is quite readily understandable that the insurance principle is not in determining when pregnancy occurs, nor is the insurance principle concerned in the matter of providing the care. The insurance principle is only in making provision for prepayment of this care, and if the insurance principle is going to obtain, and if premiums are going to be kept at a realistic level at all, then certain safeguards must be built into all of the contracts, and one of them has relationship to pregnancy.

Actually, it is a relatively short time ago that pregnancy became an insured service under any insurance contracts and I think it was first accepted by Blue Cross. I must disagree with the hon. member who said no, because this is fact and history will prove this. After all, health care insurance is itself not very old in this country, but it is relatively recently that pregnancy was added as a routine benefit under any contract. It is readily understandable that if one becomes insured under a contract and the contract immediately has to pay out a fee for pregnancy, which is a fairly sizeable fee in relationship to the monthly premium, the insurance principle could no longer obtain and the whole purpose of the scheme would be defeated.

We chose eight months because this is halfway between them. Of course no one can determine with any great degree of accuracy, albeit some of my colleagues say they can, when pregnancy occurred. It is usually accepted that it is a ten lunar months proposition, or nine calendar months, but this is quite by the way. This is a provision in practically every insurance contract that I know. Indeed, the group coverage under most of the non-profit plans, and I am out of touch with practice at the present time, but I do know that, while I was practising, group coverage under the non-profit plans established a waiting period for pregnancy and I believe it still obtains. I do know that it obtains in every individual contract. Again I repeat I know of none that provides coverage of pregnancy as an immediately insured service.

Now there is some question about the last clause in this: "Save for such exceptions as prescribed by the regulations." There are certain complications of pregnancy which can be fatal and must be dealt with vigorously. They are usually quite costly undertakings and these are covered, or will be covered, under the regulations, so that the subscriber will not suffer in cases of this kind.

While I am on my feet, sir, I will deal with the questions raised by the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) and accepted by my hon. friend from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) while discussing the open enrolment period. How on earth, sir, the hon. members of the Opposition can claim that this open period could work for the advantage of the insurance companies is quite beyond me.

The opposite obtains. This is an incentive to enrol as many people as possible. The incentive is that they will be immediately covered for all services except pregnancy, and certain other limitations and certain exceptions which are obtainable in all cases. But the open enrolment period could possibly put a great flood of high cost cases on the insurance companies' rolls. They would be quite happy without them, I am quite certain of that. Any insurance scheme would be happy without these immediate costs and oftentimes those who need it most are the most ready—and this is a good thing—to apply for the benefits that are available to them. So they are more prone to rush into a scheme of this kind. This is what we want, because this is why we are establishing the plan, albeit some of my hon. friends seem to think that we are not concerned about the health or care of the people. This bill is to work to the advantage of the people, and we have tried to keep it in every way possible this way.

So I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is not and cannot be considered to be any advantage to the insurance carriers whatsoever.

The question also came up about the exceptions which were covered by regulation and these are laid down in the Act—exceptions which we shall cover by regulation—and they are found in schedule A on page 15. The exceptions are outlined there, the limitations as prescribed by the regulations. The exceptions as well are outlined here for all of us to see.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Surely not, Mr. Chairman! If the exceptions prescribed by regulation have not been prescribed as yet, they are not anywhere for anyone to see at this moment. They may exist in the mind of the hon. Minister, I do not know; if they do I wish he would tell us—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am trying to tell the hon. member that it is listed on page 15, schedule A, the limitations as prescribed by regulation and the exceptions. The exceptions that will be prescribed by regulation are listed in this schedule, on pages 15 and 16.

Mr. Bryden: If they are listed here—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The Minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: My friend, the hon. member for Sudbury mentioned a hypothetical case which came under this section, where the wife of a man who was looked upon by the interpretation section as the head of a family and neglected, or failed, or refused, to provide coverage for himself or his family. Under the terms of certain contracts he would not be eligible to apply for a family contract, but we have specifically written this in to protect her interest and to protect the interest of the family in the event that she did enrol and then, because of pregnancy or any other reason, fell out of work. Now it is not at all likely—I think the hon. member said a month after applying she found that she was pregnant—it is not at all likely that she would just pay a month's premium, we would expect at least that the premium would be quarterly and she would be insured for at least a quarter. However, if she did become unemployed and a contract was sought for her, then we would look at her husband's situation because he is looked upon by law as the head of the family. This, I would take it, would be his responsibility. If he were eligible for either total or partial support, this would be extended to them immediately.

I have to repeat, sir, that our concern, in spite of what all our hon. friends opposite think, is for our people, to make as sure as it is possible within the terms of this Act that we have set up provisions for prepayment of health care. We have never presumed, sir, to say within the terms of this bill that we were making available good health care. This is the important consideration, but I pointed out again, sir, that governments cannot provide health care unless they are going to go into the business of practising medicine and practising health care. We are, under this bill, trying to make it possible for all of our people, either by themselves or with the support of public funds, to ensure that the catastrophic costs of health care will not economically cripple them and so prove further detriment to their health. The bill does not provide for health care but it does provide for payment for health care, as I am quite sure is clear to our hon. friends.

I cannot see, sir, where the amendments proposed by the hon. members are going to improve this bill in any way. These amendments to section 14 at least. They are certainly going to make it far more difficult of operation and therefore I would say that the amendments should not be upheld, particularly in paragraph 2 of section 14. Again, the hon. member proposed the striking out of certain words. This paragraph is to make it possible for one who has been a dependant under a family contract on reaching the age of 21 to go over into a self-pay contract without any loss of benefit or without any waiting period and it is quite essential that this section stand as it is. Otherwise I think it would work to the harm of those young people.

Mr. Bryden: I want to follow up directly on comments that the hon. Minister made,

Mr. Chairman, with regard to the saving clause in clause (a) of subsection 3, "save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations."

I ask the hon. Minister to reconsider the explanation that he gave, because it is completely off the beam. He suggests to us that what is referred to here in the phrase, "the exceptions prescribed by the regulation" are the limitations referred to in the schedule. If they are already in the schedule, there is no need for them to be stated in regulations, but I suggest to him that he is confusing two totally different things.

The schedule sets forth the basic terms of a standard medical services insurance contract. It provides that there will be certain limitations on certain subjects as prescribed by regulation. That reference is to the definition in regulations of the exact nature of those particular limitations. And the power to enact regulations relating to that point is covered by clause (c) of section 28, which says "there will be power to prescribe limitations on benefits under standard contracts." That is one thing. But we have here another thing, which is that exceptions to the general prohibition of waiting periods and limitations may be prescribed by the regulations. That is governed by clause (e) of section 28, in which the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is given power to prescribe these exceptions. They are not set forth in the Act, they are not anywhere at the moment before us.

All we know for sure is that subsection 3 as it stands, provides that there shall be an eight-month waiting period in relation to pregnancy, save for exceptions mentioned in regulations, which are not set forth. Also it provides that there shall not be a waiting period or a limitation of benefit except as prescribed by regulation. This is exactly what we are complaining about. We say that in relation to an open enrolment period, there is no need to have any waiting period or limitation of benefits at all. This clause appears at first sight to eliminate them, apart from pregnancy; but then we have this gaping loophole about regulations. I suggest to the hon. Minister that it has nothing to do with the matter of limitations as prescribed by the regulations set forth in the schedule. This refers to the power of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to make regulations permitting waiting periods or limitation of benefits under certain circumstances, undisclosed to us at this moment.

We think the saving clause should be struck out altogether. If the hon. Minister is convinced that it is necessary, then I think he should be prepared to indicate the kind of exceptions that are likely to be made as a result of this power.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, as a hypothetical example, suppose we should find on experience that this waiting period for pregnancy is not necessary—

Mr. Bryden: I am not talking about pregnancy.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, but I am just suggesting that, should we find on experience that this waiting period we have written into legislation is not actually necessary, then the plan is not going to suffer if we make it an immediate benefit to those who enrol under the open enrolment period. If we have the right by regulations to deal with things of this kind, then we can extend that additional benefit to the subscribers, because we have found that the limitations were not necessary.

The limitations mentioned in schedule A are outlined but they are not spelled out. For instance, limitation—annual health examination. Well, what limitation? The regulations will spell that out, the regulations will say that the contract will be in effect for one year, after which time one annual routine health examination will be available to every member insured. Baby-care will be spelled out in the regulations. For instance, these are some regulations we have already considered and decided upon, that ten well-baby-care visits will be permitted in the first five years of life and that psychotherapy will be provided 25 hours per year after the contract has been in force for one year, to each individual, and a total of 50 hours to a family. Under exceptions—for instance, laboratory services—we know that the laboratory services will be limited to a total of $25 per covered person in the contract here. This is the sort of thing that will be spelled out definitely under the regulations.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I appear to be having some difficulty in making myself clear to the hon. Minister, but I will take another try at it. I would like first of all to get the pregnancy question removed so that we will not get the issues confused that way. As far as we are concerned, we are against clause B altogether. We do not think it should be in there, but if it is to be in there, then we go along with the saving clause that would provide at least the possibility that it could be made less onerous than it now is in the bill.

However, that is not what I am talking about. I am talking only about clause A, “save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations.” I put it to the hon. Minister once again, that under that clause, and the related clause E, of section 28, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council has a wide-open power to make exceptions from the general prohibition in 3 (a) and not at all related to defining the limitations under the schedule. I agree it has power to define those limitations, too, but that is not the point I am getting at. The point I am getting at is that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, if he saw fit in his wisdom to do so, could, for all practical purposes, nullify 3 (a).

He could certainly reduce its import greatly. He could provide that there may be waiting periods in some cases; that there may be limitations on benefits with respect to pre-existing conditions, and so on, not only those set forth in the schedule, but any pre-existing conditions. I do not think there is any doubt in the world that that is what the statute means. I suggest that the power is unnecessary and should not be there. If it is to be there, then we should have an explanation which we have not had yet, as to exactly what the government has in mind.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Well, sir, I was very encouraged in one aspect of this, that the hon. Minister suggested that the reason for this—“save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations”—in clause A and clause B, in connection with pregnancy, save for such exceptions as are prescribed by the regulations, he suggested to us that these will only be used to ease the situation and permit more people to have the advantage of medical insurance. Am I correct in that, sir?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is our general thinking.

Mr. Thompson: And it will not be used to raise further barriers for people? Your exceptions will be used to widen the opening for people?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Most assuredly that is the intent, sir. But it is just impossible to foresee every possibility in advance; we want to be in a position where we can make available to the people all the benefits possible.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the hon. Minister has this on record, and that we can have his assurance that, instead of raising further barriers, he is going to see that these regulations are interpreted to widen the opportunities for people. Because, sir, after this amendment is voted on, and there is a suspicion in my mind that perhaps the amendment will not win in this Legislature, and section 14 will no longer be discussed, I would like, with your indulgence, to raise two other questions.

Again I am thinking of gaps in the legislation. I notice, with respect to dependants that the definition of dependant is "up to the age of 21." I am thinking, sir, of people after they are 21—assuming they had some physical infirmity, or, for some reason, mental retardation, or a number of things, or are going to school. On your basis of a maximum age of 21, they are no longer dependants; they have to move out and pay for their own insurance. Under the income tax, and perhaps I can be corrected on this, even though a person is over 21, if the family is still looking after him, this can be deducted from income tax. I am wondering why you set so rigidly on the age of 21, when there will be many cases, particularly with illness—for reasons of illness of some kind or other—where people will be dependants after they are 21. Why do you then say that at the age of 21 they have to move out and get their own insurance?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, under The Income Tax Act, as I understand it, by and large, the dependant ceases to be a dependant upon reaching age 21. I will grant you that exemptions can be claimed under certain circumstances, some of which the hon. member has mentioned. But, in this case, we will cover the child or the dependant until 21; if, after that time, he is attending an institution of higher learning, or is specifically infirm, or for some reason or another is not self-supporting, he will be eligible under the government scheme to get complete coverage, either at no cost or by partial assistance.

Mr. Thompson: I wonder—not being a lawyer—I raise this just because it sounds rather peculiar to me; under section one, we have this terminology:

The dependant spouse is entitled to have a standard contract issued to him.

It seems to me it would be "to her."

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They tell me, Mr. Chairman, that "him" is the legal language. It is a sexless sort of thing. One of the middle sex.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I was concerned just what the hon. Minister considered a marriage at one point.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I have a number of comments on this section, because it is one of the most important sections in the bill. I would like to return, first of all, to the discussion you had with my colleague, the hon. member for Woodbine. If you look at subclause (a) of subsection 3, you will find, in that section, a provision that there can be a limitation placed in a standard contract because of a pre-existing condition in the applicant; and there is a specific provision in the regulations, as my colleague has pointed out, under clause (e) of section 28, which permits the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to establish limitations in standard contracts because of existing conditions.

In the course of the debate this morning, we were able to establish with the hon. Minister that the hon. Minister's intention is within the framework of the maximum subscription rates which are to be established by the government, that there will be differentials because of the varying physical conditions and ages of the persons who apply. We consider that this is inequitable and wrong.

Is this section, sir, in addition to the question of varying rates, also providing that there will be differentials in the coverage, depending on whether or not certain classes of people have pre-existing conditions? I ask because, if so, it is a direct refutation of the principle of the bill which the government has attempted to put before us, which is set out in section 5, that standard medical services insurance contracts shall be made available without regard to age, physical, or mental infirmity.

It is perfectly clear to me, under this bill, and I think it must be to every member of this House, that under that clause of subsection 3 of section 14, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may decide that a standard contract issued to a particular person or a particular group of people, as distinct from other groups within the community, is going to have a limitation because of a pre-existing condition. It is not going to be a general limitation applicable to all people in the province, because the government has already indicated that it is going to exclude certain ailments generally across the province as pre-existing conditions—for example, refraction for eye care. But this leaves open the possibility that there are going to be distinctions within the groups of people in the community who are applying for standard medical insurance contracts; and the provision for the exceptions prescribed by regulations is directly contrary to the principle of the bill which this government has placed before this House. Now that is the first point.

On the second point, on the question of pregnancy, we simply support the amendment as proposed because pregnancy, in our view, is not a disease in our community. It is a youthful and very convenient occurrence in our society. We think it should be covered. It should not have anything to do with whether it is eight months, two months, six months, or any other number of months. We think a person should be covered, if they have a standard medical insurance contract, regardless of when they make application for it.

The third question to which I would like to return is the question of the exclusion by the government of what, today, in insurance language, is a modern, up-to-date principle, namely, the principle of group insurance. Let us assume for the moment that the government is justified in some way—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. May I suggest to you, sir, that the discussion of group insurance is completely out of order, in that this was dealt with. That would be a principle of the bill and it was definitely excluded when the bill was presented in this House for second reading. This bill has to do with individual contracts, and it has been specifically repeated that it will not interfere with group coverage in any way.

Mr. Chairman: I will have to agree with the Minister. You are out of order.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister talked about pooling, and I assume we are doing that when we are talking about groups.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Specifically with pooling. Pooling is not grouping.

Mr. Thompson: Then let us talk about pooling, for I presume it is a collective agreement.

Mr. Renwick: I would like to address my remarks, then, to the question of enrolment periods. Enrolment periods, as I understand it, are going to be series of times, fixed by the government, during which residents in the province of Ontario may make application to these carriers under this Act for insurance coverage.

That means that, from time to time, there are going to be group admittances to the field of people who are covered by these standard contracts under this bill. By admitting groups from time to time into this scheme, why will the government not provide that the premiums to be paid by all persons in the province, coming from time to time within these groups during the enrolment period, should be the identical premium, without making differentials between classes of citizens within the community? The hon. Minister must agree that there is something ridiculous about this section because, in subsection 2, the hon. Minister is quite prepared to admit, without any enrolment period, every newcomer to the province; because every person—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no! Not at all.

Mr. Renwick: Just a moment. Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister will listen to me before he contradicts me; if you read subsection 2, it provides two things. It says:

Every dependant who becomes 21 years of age—

That is class number one; and in the second line:

—and every person who qualifies as a resident.

If this does not refer to persons who are both 21, and both residents, there are two classes of persons provided in subsection 2; and, without any enrolment period of any kind, the hon. Minister is quite prepared to admit that the large number of people who in each year will become aged 21 in our society, and the large number of people who will become residents in our society in any year, do not have to have any enrolment period of any kind. They can become insured simply by complying with the provisions of that subsection. And yet for everyone else in the province of Ontario, the government tells us that there are not all that many of them, yet for anybody else who wants to become qualified under this section 14 they must either apply during an enrolment period or they must suffer this penalty of three months.

Surely the hon. Minister cannot make any valid distinction between people in the community who are here, who are living here, who are resident and over the age of 21, people who become 21 years of age, and people who come into this province as recent arrivals and become residents in the province. In the case of the two classes there is no requirement whatsoever that there be any enrolment period; but for everyone else, whatever the number of people involved the hon. Minister has imposed an enrolment period.

The hon. Minister says this has nothing to do with group insurance. If it is purely then an administrative convenience for the medical carriers to absorb these groups of people, then I would suggest that he wipe it out completely, because the administrative convenience will be defeated by the provisions of subsection 2 under which the carriers are going to have to regularly, day in and day out throughout the year, deal with the very large classes of people comprised in the ones who are recent comers to the province and those who reach the age of 21.

Speaking again on the question of the enrolment period. If it is to the hon. Minister a matter of convenience, I think it is perfectly clear that it is serving no useful purpose. If, however, it is in some way related to the influx by way of groups into the insurance coverage throughout the province, and if there is the pooling arrangement in the province, then I think that the people of the province of Ontario are entitled to the advantage of group insurance, group insurance coverage, meaning that you spread the risk over a large group and you charge the same rate to all the people who are included in that group.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of order!

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have already suggested that the matter of group insurance is not inherent in this bill. It is specifically stated that this bill relates to individual contracts as a principle and the principle of group insurance is not involved in it. Therefore, I submit to you, sir, that it is completely out of order to discuss it at this time.

Mr. Chairman: I have already said that.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I accept your ruling on it. As I understand what the Minister is putting forward in this bill—and it is very difficult for us in the Opposition to get this clear because the Minister has refused to give us any concrete examples of how various people are going to be covered under this plan in the province of Ontario, despite the fact that there are going to be wide and varying distinctions between the classes of people within our province. You have to bear with us, because if we have not got the information the only way that we can get the information is to ask the hon. Minister for the information.

Let us accept what the hon. Minister says, that he has introduced a plan into this Legislature which will provide the minimum disruption to the insurance industry in this province. We agree that is exactly what he has done. Because he has based it on individual contracts, he has got a pooling arrangement; and he has differential premiums depending on the risk that the insurance carrier assesses is applicable to that particular person.

By analogy, what the hon. Minister has done is to take the most antiquated form of insurance and provide a bill which permits that system to continue. The antiquated form of insurance is directly comparable to automobile insurance. Automobile insurance is on the same basis, individual contracts, classifications within groups, differential premiums and an assigned risk plan. There is no group insurance implied in automobile insurance in any way, and every modern and up-to-date insurance company which is attempting to meet the problems of insurance in our society is dealing on a group principle. It is not dealing on the antiquated basis of automobile insurance which is rapidly pricing itself out of this market entirely.

Mr. Chairman: We are not dealing with group insurance.

Mr. Renwick: I accept what the hon. Minister says, but let us do away with this enrolment period unless the hon. Minister can concretely state why it has any merit whatsoever.

Let us amend clause (a) subsection 3 of section 14 by removing this power of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to provide exceptions by way of regulation which will prohibit some classes of persons within our society from being insured under standard contracts because of pre-existing physical condition.

Can the Minister please answer at least one or two, or three of those questions?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, again I have to point out that a clear reading of the bill would help the hon. member to understand the folly of what he has just said.

First of all, sir, may I repeat that the open enrolment period will accrue to the advantage of those who enrol under it. Again, I repeat that, while there will be numbers, and we hope there will always be numbers, joining the plan at an open enrolment period because of the added advantage, because of the inducement of no waiting period—with one exception—there will also be numbers of applicants, individual applicants, coming in that do not constitute a group, as is inherent in the belief of people in the insurance industry. A group, again I repeat, is a group controlled or under the direction of a central organization, if you will, where one premium is collected by that central agency and submitted to the insurance carrier by the central agency. The insurance carrier has no billing to do. This is a group in so far as insurance is concerned, as I am quite certain the hon. member knows.

Then to put on paragraph (2) the interpretation he has just put on it makes it perfectly patent to me, Mr. Chairman, that he has not read this paragraph.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order; the Minister has the floor for the moment.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This paragraph says that:

Every dependant who becomes 21 years of age—

Inherent in this is the fact that this dependant has been covered up until reaching 21 years of age under the family coverage. In order that he can switch to an individual coverage because he now has become of age, and in order to ensure that he will not lose benefits because all his waiting period has been honoured already, he can move over to an individual contract without any loss and without any waiting periods:

(3) (a) Save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations.

One exception that I can note in the list at the present time is, for instance, the laboratory which I mentioned. Regulations which we have prepared and which we shall submit for approval, suggest that at the beginning of the programme at least, there will be an exception for payment of any laboratory service over $25 per contract year per covered person.

It may well be that experience will indicate to us that this can be broadened and, if we are tied down by putting this in legislation we must wait for a year before we can give the insured parties the advantage of additional coverage. I think that this could work a hardship upon them.

My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition spoke on several occasions already about the possible case that is on the borderline, and it is probably some dear old soul who, because of infirmity or forgetfulness or something of that kind, has neglected to do something and finds himself out of benefit. If we have to stick firmly to the legislation, we would have to say that to re-enrol a person would require a waiting period of three months in the event of the person dropping the coverage and not being able to come back in again under the enrolment period.

But we can make such a case an exception under the regulations. I think this is all to the good and I have given that assurance to the House. Of course, I recognize that this does not need to be accepted and it is not very good legislation. I assure you that so long as this government is in power the regulations will be used to help the people, certainly not to militate against them nor to withdraw benefits that might rightfully be theirs.

My hon. friend from Riverdale spoke about 21-year-old residents, a matter which I have mentioned. If a 21-year-old resident wants to come in under the plan at any time other than during an enrolment period, he will have to undergo a three-month waiting period. If he has recovered, as I have already said, and wants to switch over to his own contract, then he does not have to go through the waiting period again, no matter what time he comes in.

In the case of the newcomer, as you go further on in the bill you will find that it is necessary to establish residency by being in the province 90 days. I would have to ask the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) about that, but I believe the period of time recognized as necessary to become a resident of the province is 90 days, so that that person cannot enrol until he has established residency and cannot come in without any waiting period. If they happen to establish residency at a time concurrent with an open enrolment period, then they will have immediate coverage, but that might be luck. Every new resident is not likely to strike it as lucky as that and they, therefore, will also have a waiting period.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that I have answered the questions as I noted them, from the hon. members.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, a question on the last remarks of the hon. Minister. My understanding is that to become a resident, you have to be here for 90 days, but once you have established residence in this province under subsection 2, you can apply for a standard contract without any waiting period and regardless of whether it happens to coincide with an enrolment period or not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry, I did not get that question. Would you mind repeating it, please?

Mr. Renwick: If a person qualifies as a resident of the province, I understand that under subsection 2 of section 14, he can apply for a standard contract without any further waiting period. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, a resident who qualifies can become—do you mean a newcomer, after he has been here 90 days and having established residency over that period, can apply outside of an open enrolment period?

Mr. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am advised that this is so, that this person has already been 90 days here without coverage.

Mr. Bryden: He never had a chance to get coverage.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a general comment before we leave. The hon. Minister chastises us for not reading the bill and he has just indicated that he did not know his own bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think that on a point of order I might be permitted to say that this is the first clause of the bill and we have gone quite a way from it. I am not able to give a snap answer.

Mr. MacDonald: The point I want to make is this: the hon. Minister, for example, got up earlier on his little political podium and said that any time he uses a regulation it will be to broaden the scope and make more health services available. Quite frankly, in his geniality, the hon. leader of the Opposition got led into the verbal quagmire, because he accepted the hon. Minister's explanation as being a valid one, with reference, for example, to this phraseology: "save for the exceptions prescribed by the regulations." Let me draw this to your attention, Mr. Chairman: Clause 3 (a) says:

That a standard contract issued under this section shall not provide any waiting period.

There cannot be any waiting period. That is the nub of it—"save for the exceptions"—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Pardon, Mr. Chairman, that is not the nub of it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, have I got the floor or is he going to be able to take it when he pleases?

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, but if he is going to keep bouncing in, Mr. Chairman, Minister or otherwise—

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. MacDonald: My point is simply this: that the essence of this clause as stated is that it shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation so that the only conceivable purpose of a regulation will be to put some limitations in there to make it less favourable.

There is no other conceivable purpose of this section because it starts out by saying that there shall be no waiting period because of pre-existing conditions. We have all been led up the garden path dozens of times on explanations and we are gradually getting clarification of just how incredible this bill is.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member must have been reading Shakespeare when he said, "The devil can quote the scriptures to his own ends."

If the hon. member wanted to be eminently fair, sir, he would have read the whole of that subsection 3 (a) as follows:

Shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation of benefits with respect to any pre-existing physical or mental infirmity or condition.

That is the nub of the paragraph, and not to take out of context that it "shall not provide any waiting period save for the—"

Mr. MacDonald: You are missing my point!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, now I have to throw back at the hon. member the words he threw at me.

The nub of the paragraph is in reading the full thing and keeping the full matter in proper context and in proper perspective, sir. The regulations will, I can assure you—and I am quite certain that I can speak for this government—be used to the benefit and advantage of the people who are covered under this programme.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the nub of my argument has been missed by the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not at all.

Mr. MacDonald: It is as simple as that. Let me try to make this very, very clear. The clause we are talking about says:

The standard contract issued under this section shall not provide any waiting period or any limitation of benefit with respect to any pre-existing physical or mental infirmity of condition.

In other words, the paragraph starts by saying that coverage is complete. Now what conceivable purpose for a regulation can there be, other than to reduce the coverage? You cannot add to complete coverage that is already complete and this is the point that we are trying to make. The hon. Minister either cannot grasp it or will not grasp it—I am not sure which.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the last thing I want to do is to get sidetracked into having verbal battles with my allies to my left here. May I say that I am grasping at any straw that I can get from the hon. Minister of Health, and I want to get on the record everything I can where he is talking about extraordinary exceptions. I truly agree with the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party in connection with section 1, because it seems to me that the hon. Minister is misinterpreting this, and I will accept that in a way he has beguiled me a bit on that one.

As yet, I have no clarification of what the exceptions are on section B. I have read page 15 that the hon. Minister referred to us, but I am still bewildered about the whole thing and I am hoping that what the hon. Minister is saying is that these exceptions will be for the benefit of the people.

On section A, I do not see how the exceptions could be to anything except to the detriment of the people. As the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party said, I agree that it might be interpreted for the benefit of the people.

Let me say on exceptions, sir, the hon. Minister has referred again to the fact that the leader of the Opposition has raised certain exceptions or particular situations. I talked about children over 21 who would be continuing at school, and so on. And he has said that when these situations arise, "you can count on the fact that we will do everything to be understanding and to be able to work through exceptions on this."

I want to say to the hon. Minister that from my own experience with him he has shown humanity in connection with cases that I have brought to him from my own riding, but I object strongly that I have to bring a number of these cases, and I have said that in this House. I had written to the hon. Minister at one point about a poor family who had a microcephalic child—I think I have the correct term—and they were desperate. The only way it appeared that we could arrange for this child to get institutional treatment was that they should come to me and I should write to the hon. Minister.

I did this and he was very sympathetic and the thing was cleared up. This family was very lucky that they happened to know that they could come to me, for unlike the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Carruthers), who says that he encompasses all the gripes and protests and everything else of all the people, I suggest humbly that there are people who have very many protests but they are as yet not acquainted with the whole democratic procedure of coming to a member, otherwise I would be completely at sea with this. I wish I could cover all of their needs, but I cannot.

What I am really arguing is—and I am sure the hon. Minister would be the first to say this—that when you have exceptions and you have not spelled out regulations, have not spelled out what the exceptions are but we will leave it up to the benign kindness of the Minister.

There may a case when it is not a Minister, and political patronage and everything else enters into the picture. I am not accusing this hon. Minister of that. I can say that he has dealt with me just as fairly as he has with other members, no matter what their particular stripe of politics. But it is dangerous, and I think it is bad legislation, where you say that there will be exceptions and to say, "Believe me, in my great humanity, I will look after all of them." That is bad legislation, and we should have had this spelled out more. With due respect to the hon. Minister, this is bad legislation.

I want to endorse what was said previously, both by the New Democratic Party and my own members, that this aspect of more or less segregating pregnancy as though it is something that we should abhor sounds as if the hon. Minister—with his attitude toward women—had read too much of John Knox or something in his early days, or "The Scarlet Letter" or something. We need to have more young people being developed; and one of the problems we have is that we have been relying, if I may say so, on immigration too much, and not on natural births.

And let me say again—a point which I do not think has been mentioned—that surely for young married couples, this is the time when financial circumstances become really burdensome; and this is the time when I would think the hon. Minister, a man of humanity, would want to help them as they start out raising a family. Instead of that, we have these bureaucratic, detailed restrictions, eight months and so on. The hon. Minister never gave us a definite answer about how you establish eight months, and all that other red tape and technicalities.

For a man who stood in this House—and I do not think you would get better at the Stratford festival—and said, “I detest compulsion”—it was a magnificent performance—he has laced this with all kinds of red tape. I hate to say it, but I am almost compelled to say that the hon. Minister in this bill—I will not say he is compelling young people to hold back from having children—but there is certainly an inference there.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Mr. Chairman, may I help the hon. leader of the Opposition in understanding at least one of his questions. In this very moral and chaste community in which we live, that young family will have no problem if they buy their insurance the day they are married.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. member might have been more fortunate in having the financial circumstances to buy insurance and many other things. There are many young families who start out with very little.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, perhaps for a moment or two we could get back to section 14 and the proposed amendment. Ever since this bill came into committee, the hon. Minister in his usual factious way has been hurling across the floor the accusation that we over here have not read the bill. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that it is now abundantly clear that the only difference between him and us is that he has read the bill, and we have read it and understand it. It is quite clear that he does not understand his own bill or else he is simply being evasive in his answers. He finally had to admit, his advisers got it through to him ultimately, that the interpretation by the hon. member for Riverdale, with regard to newcomers to the province, was correct.

It appears impossible to get across to him the true meaning of clause (a) of subsection 3. I am not going to belabour that point any further, Mr. Chairman. But the explanation that the hon. Minister has given repeatedly of the clause is clearly, patently wrong. It puts us in a very difficult position when we have explanations from the hon. Minister which bear no relation to the plain words in front of us. It is unfortunate but I guess we will have to put up with it. It merely indicates once again what totally inadequate preparation was involved before this bill was presented.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Bryden's amendment, say “aye.”

All opposed, say “nay.”

In my opinion the “nays” have it.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of Mr. Bryden's amendment, please stand.

All those opposed to Mr. Bryden's amendment, please stand.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the “ayes” are 20; the “nays” 44.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost, and section 14 is included in the bill.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The fifty-fifth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. E. Johnston in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I have had my own waiting period, pregnant or otherwise, and I have relished the opportunity of entering the debate on the estimates of The Department of Health. I would like to make some minor preliminary observations before moving into the main substance of my remarks.

I am going to make some restrained commendatory remarks on the hon. Minister's (Mr. Dymond's) opening statement, in three particulars.

I should first like to congratulate him on his proposal for PKU. I think it is a wise and forthright proposal. I was pleased to hear of the response to his letter from the various administrators of general hospitals throughout the province. I trust that using the facilities of the public health branch will, in fact, work effectively. It is my profound hope that not a single child slips through the screening apparatus; and that, of course, is the danger which remains in his voluntary approach to the testing for PKU. But we shall see what happens and watch the results of the experiment for the next year or two.

Second, Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend the hon. Minister on his announcements regarding the so-called war on alcohol.

I will say to him that it is about time that such an announcement has been made in this House. The Chairman who preceded us in the debate on committee of the whole has spoken many times about the preoccupation with research at the expense of treatment. That is a preoccupation which harasses this department in one branch after another; and it is good, indeed, that we have finally moved to the treatment rationale.

I am less impressed by the suggestion that we are going to spend $18 million over ten years. When viewed from the perspective, it is not a terribly formidable sum. Nonetheless, again we have taken a step, and the hon. Minister is to be congratulated.

Third, Mr. Chairman, I was particularly pleased to see that portion of the hon. Minister's remarks—I think it was four to five pages—in which he made reference to earlier debate in which both of us had engaged during the Throne speech, on February 8 of this year. He attempted to lay some of my fears at rest. I want to suggest to him that those fears, in my mind, have intensified over the intervening period. The observations I offered then, that were tentative and not fully thought through, have now conceived in my mind. I am pleased to say that what I therefore hope to do this afternoon is to set up a precise, strong and thoughtful confrontation on the whole mental health apparatus in the province of Ontario.

Quite logically, Mr. Chairman, I am going to take as my starting point, the Ontario hospital at 999 Queen Street, Toronto, but I am not going to belabour it. I can appreciate full well the agitation and anger that necessarily characterizes the feelings of hon. members on this side of the House, because the situation at Toronto OH has languished for decades, to the point where some people, inevitably, have been done damage—damage, ironically enough, in the absence of treatment.

I want to suggest to you that instead of hon. members on this side of the House indulging in that repetitive process of description, as to Toronto Ontario hospital, one paragraph from the report of the superintendent in his annual report of 1963, summed it up beautifully, and I quote:

In 1962 hopes were raised that new construction would be authorized to replace obsolete buildings. In 1963 such hopes were aborted. The majority of our patients continue to sleep, eat, work and play in quarters which were considered advanced in the 19th century but in no way fulfil the requirements of modern psychiatry.

Thus spoke the superintendent of the Ontario hospital at Toronto, in his annual report in 1963, and I ask, Mr. Chairman, what more can one possibly say? The situation is intolerable.

With relentless repetition we flog this institutional syndrome that the hon. Minister has evolved. One month it is 999 Queen. The next month it is the hospital school at Smiths Falls. One year it is the London Ontario hospital, the next year it is the Orillia hospital school. I can recall earlier in this session raising the problems at the Toronto Ontario hospital. Last year there was the grand jury report. Nothing new can come to bear. Nothing new, that is, Mr. Chairman, until the hon. members of this Legislature ultimately reach a breaking point. Until the hon. Minister of Health drives them to the breaking point, and this is precisely what he has done.

The breaking point comes when we are forced to recognize that the crisis at 999 and Smiths Falls and similar institutions, is far more profound than the mere surface despair. I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that force of logic makes it inevitable that we view those institutions merely as symptomatic of a crisis destructively eating away at the heart of the entire Ontario hospital system.

So, I submit, it becomes necessary to view that system as a whole, and to view it as a whole on the floor of this Legislature. That is my objective this afternoon.

I am going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, and try to document thoroughly, four major crises besetting the Ontario hospital system, the last of which necessarily leads to a challenge of the entire mental health pattern which is presently emerging in the province of Ontario.

Let me admit at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that my views are necessarily those of a layman, based on a good deal of book and article reading over the last few months, in an effort to develop some grasp. I look forward to the hon. Minister's comments. But lest the hon. members of this House feel that my familiarity is purely that of reading, I want to say that in order to develop a better comprehension, I visited at some length within the last two months the superintendents of Toronto Ontario hospital; New Toronto Ontario hospital; Whitby Ontario hospital; London Ontario hospital; Kingston Ontario hospital; Hamilton Ontario hospital; and St. Thomas Ontario hospital. Necessarily for much of what I want to suggest this afternoon, I am indebted to them for whatever illumination may exist.

First then, Mr. Chairman, the initial and perhaps most fundamental crisis. I can put it in very simple words: The government of Ontario is systematically, premeditatedly, consciously, starving the Ontario hospitals in this province. I suggest that it is absolutely futile to suggest adequate treatment under such appalling financial circumstances. It is an incredible indictment of government pretensions, pretensions which in fact amount to total indifference.

Mr. Chairman, a very interesting thing has happened in the press of the last few weeks and in this Legislature. There has been much talk that the per capita per diem in the province of Ontario in Ontario hospitals is $8 a day. I wish that it were $8 a day! That figure is a figure of the imagination. It is a product of hyperbole. Any revelation of the average per capita per diem in Ontario hospitals, Mr. Chairman, jolts the intellect. It is frankly embarrassing to lay them on the floor of this House, because $8 a day is, as I say, an inflated figure.

What I want to do at this stage of the debate, Mr. Chairman—because I think it is important that all hon. members of the Legislature know—is to read into the record of this House every per capita per diem of Ontario hospitals in this province: to read into the record of this House the average per capita per diem so that we know once and for all that with which we are dealing.

Let me say as a preface, Mr. Chairman, that these figures were not easy to come by. If the hon. members take a moment to read the annual report of The Department of Health they will find, peculiarly enough, that they are not there. If they read the annual report of the mental health branch they will find, peculiarly enough, that they are not there. If they read past annual reports of Ontario hospitals they will find, oddly enough, that they are not there. I suggest to the hon. Minister that these are, in fact, public figures. We are not dealing with privileged documents and they should be available to the people of Ontario.

I have before me, as I said, the net per capita per diem payments in every Ontario hospital for the year April 1, 1963 to March 31, 1964. I think that is a representative year, and I have been given to understand on good authority that the difference in the past two years may be roughly 10 cents per capita per diem. Now, let me read the figures for the interest of the hon. members:

Aurora Ontario hospital, $4.71; Brockville Ontario hospital, $6.24; Cedar Springs, $8.12; Cobourg, $5.05; Goderich, $13.28; Hamilton,

$6.67; Kingston, $7.39; London, $7.10; New Toronto, $6.68; North Bay, $6.67; Orillia, $5.82; Owen Sound, $27.60; Penetang, $6.38; Port Arthur, $7.35; St. Thomas, $6.34; Smiths Falls, $5.82; Thistletown, $39.48—let me interject that that begins to approximate it—Toronto, $7.55; Whitby, $6.55; Woodstock, $7.39; the children's psychiatric institute, $31.75; the Toronto psychiatric hospital, $34.32. And an average per capita per diem across the province of Ontario of $6.96.

Now, I ask the hon. members of the Legislature to contemplate that figure for a moment: $6.96. That is why I said the $8 was a piece of inflated hyperbole. Would it were, I repeat, $8. It is $6.96, and I look back to a speech that the hon. Minister of Health made in August, 1964, at the Canadian national exhibition when, after summarizing the mental health apparatus in the province of Ontario, including the mental hospitals, he said, and I quote:

I have tried to report these accomplishments to you—not boastfully, although I think we might be forgiven a little boasting—but factually so you may know that the mentally disturbed in Ontario are not forgotten or neglected.

Are not forgotten or neglected? Per capita per diem of $6.96 a day! Such graciousness and humility on the part of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, at $6.96 a day! It must have been his sense of humour; it must have been a sort of ribald Scottish joke to suggest an absence of neglect in terms of $6.96 a day.

What does that figure represent? Let us make a few comparisons; and I want to do it because, again, the comparisons have been couched in equal vagaries.

From the Ontario hospital services commission's report for the same period of time, 1963, I would like to read the per capita per diem costs into the record:

General hospitals—group A—$27.54; fully four times as much as we spend on Ontario hospitals. Group B, $23.65; group C, $19.97; convalescent hospitals, $15.89; chronic care hospitals, $12.05.

In other words, even convalescent care and chronic care spend between two and two and a half times as much per diem per capita as the Ontario hospitals.

And another observation: The Ontario welfare council survey of nursing homes, which was reported in the newspapers today, also demonstrates that in the majority of cases, nursing homes across the province of Ontario provide a per capita per diem greater than that in Ontario hospitals.

Let us compare a little further, because I think these comparisons are both valid and interesting. It may be of interest to the hon. members to know that there is only one training school in the entire province of Ontario which receives a lesser per capita per diem. The average spent on training schools is in excess of that spent on mental hospitals. The average spent on reformatories is in excess of that spent on mental hospitals. The average spent on industrial farms is much in excess of that spent on mental hospitals; and of the 45 to 50 county and district jails in the province of Ontario, only four have a per capita per diem of less than what we spend on Ontario hospitals. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that in some communities it is preferable to go to jail.

In Brockville you would receive treatment rated at $6.24 a day if you were in the Ontario hospital, but if you were fortunate enough to be in jail you get $9.85 a day worth of treatment. In St. Thomas you would be looked after at the rate of $6.34 in hospital; in jail you would be looked after at the rate of $9.02; and in Whitby hospital at $6.55, and jail is $12.17.

I quite appreciate that an effort at deflecting the argument can be made based on patient volume and on geographic situation. I say to the hon. Minister opposite that at this absolute bottom rate of $6.96 a day, mental hospitals could not even adequately provide for the domiciliary and geriatric care, the nursing care, in a civilized society, let alone make a pretension at acute and continued treatment.

Indeed, you know, Mr. Chairman, the ironic fact is that the hon. Minister himself realizes it. He realizes it in legislation and regulations passed by his own government. Under The Homes for Special Care Act last year, within the regulations the sum of $6.50 was set aside per diem per capita. Mr. Chairman, no one pretends that those people covered under The Homes for Special Care Act need the kind of intensive treatment required by patients in Ontario mental hospitals. Perhaps I can put it most appropriately by quoting into the record of this House the extraordinary observation of Dr. Paul Christie, superintendent of the Toronto Ontario hospital, in his most recent annual report, and I quote:

A general hospital which pretended to give comprehensive active treatment, including medical services, for about $8 per patient per day would be rightly assessed as operating on a medieval concept. Such rates are charged by mediocre nursing homes which make no pretension to treatment at all. Sooner or later the community as a whole must confront this grave discrimination against the victims of illnesses which accounts for nearly half of all hospital bed accommodation. Meanwhile, a report such as this can only seem scandalously hypocritical in any pretension which it implies as an account of an adequate treatment programme.

There is a jolting and sobering condemnation of the system if ever one was uttered, delivered by a superintendent of an Ontario hospital. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the per capita per diem expenditures that I have read into the record and the comparisons that are available to be made are a devastating commentary and proof of the government's attitude toward mental health, which can be summed up very easily as "pennies for the mind."

That is the first major crisis, Mr. Chairman, with which I wanted to deal.

Let me address myself to the second major crisis, which is harassing and undermining morale, and adequate treatment in one Ontario hospital after another in the province until they are rendered insufficient institutions.

There is a serious and continuing attrition of senior staff. I cannot put that strongly enough; and I am not now talking about the normal scandals in the newspapers of the attendants and some of the nursing aides. I am now talking about the crucial staff indispensable to hospital operations. If the hon. members of the House will grant me the indulgence, I will read into the record from one Ontario hospital after another what they feel their staff needs to be and what those staff needs actually are, and I think I faithfully interpret the information granted to me by the superintendents of the hospitals.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, this information is not privileged either. The American psychiatric association, the national institute for mental health, the world health organization and many others have established psychiatric-psychological social worker-patient ratios for Ontario hospitals, and those are the ratios the superintendents themselves reflected in assessing their needs.

1. St. Thomas Ontario hospital—1,850 beds, the highest bed content of its kind in the province. There are six pavilions at St. Thomas with three floors each, 18 wards and an outpatient department. St. Thomas should have a minimum of 19 psychiatrists, by the standard of the American psychiatric association, or any standard. What is the situation? For several years, St. Thomas Ontario hospital has steadily been losing staff. In 1958 there were 19 psychiatrists, the optimum number; in 1962 there were 15 psychiatrists and two part-time; in 1963 there were 14, and two part-time; in 1964 there were 13 and one part-time of whom two are administrative, so that in effect, you have 11 practising psychiatrists for a steady population of 1,850 patients or more, plus a greatly increased admission rate and no staff relief in sight.

I further suggest to this Legislature that St. Thomas Ontario hospital by all standards and by the standards of its superintendent, should have between 35 and 40 social workers. St. Thomas Ontario hospital, Mr. Chairman, has two—I repeat, two—qualified social workers. Unfortunately, it had to retain its three best psychiatric nurses for a social work role, so it has a total complement of five, out of an ideal staff situation of 38.

Let it be said that the numbers I have given reflect an honest clinical team formula, the ratio between psychiatrists, social workers and psychologists. And on that ratio, Mr. Chairman, there should be in St. Thomas Ontario hospital 19 or 20 psychologists. At the moment there are four.

Under nursing, Mr. Chairman, at the St. Thomas OH, there are only 40 or 50 actual registered nurses. All the others are nurses' aides; you cannot get nurses to go to St. Thomas.

Under attendants, there are presently about 240; the requirement is for 300 to do an effective job. I ask the hon. members of this House to relate an inpatient ratio of 1,850 to that number of attendants—and remember to divide the attendants by three, for eight-hour shifts.

As for occupational therapists, Mr. Chairman, there was a little chuckle between the superintendent and this member—the need is so desperate it could not be estimated.

Let us take New Toronto Ontario hospital. Built for 650 beds, New Toronto presently has 860 patients and five major units. New Toronto requires for each unit a minimum complement of three psychiatrists, making a total of 16. There are, at New Toronto, only 11 psychiatrists of whom two are on the administrative end, one is on the research end and so, in fact, you have eight practising psychiatrists in a hospital where there should be a complement of 15. Indeed, the superintendent of that Ontario hospital told me that he had a smaller medical team in 1965 than he had ever had in the history of his superintendency at New Toronto OH, and yet, Mr. Chairman, and I emphasize this, the hospital admitting and discharging rate has doubled over the same six-year period.

Again, accepting the clinical team formula, there is a serious shortage of social workers and psychologists. And under the category of nurses I thought a rather interesting fact emerged. For the year 1965, the New Toronto Ontario hospital requested a total nursing complement—again related to minimum standards—of 231. Those minimum standards were for admission and intensive treatment, for continuing treatment, for medical and surgical services, and for geriatric services. Two hundred and thirty-one, Mr. Chairman. The mental health branch was able to provide 159. They were cut back 72 nurses—cut back something like 30 per cent—probably on financial grounds. And again, I ask the hon. members of this House to contemplate the staff-patient ratio which results.

Now let me turn for just a moment, Mr. Chairman, to the London Ontario hospital. It has a rated capacity of 780 patients and there are presently a complement of 1,120. There is some more of the overcrowding to which the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) earlier made reference. Of course, there are going to be new buildings at London and I suggest strongly to the hon. members of this Legislature that they should visit London OH. It has a fascinating plan that is available. There are going to be some 650 new beds and some 400 old beds for a total complement of about 1,000. For each team in each unit, it is the opinion of the hospital that they would require two psychiatrists, two social workers, and one psychologist—which means a total of 19 psychiatrists including two administrative heads.

On July 1, 1965, Mr. Chairman, there will be nine practising psychiatrists of whom two will have totally administrative duties, making the effective ratio in London, seven out of a required 17. There is absolutely no relief in sight at the moment and the outpatient department is particularly harassed. The total patient case load in the OPD in 1963 was over 1,000, and all they had was two full-time psychiatrists, although admittedly there were many part time from the community. But let it be said that one cannot always count on part-time personnel. The situation in regard to social workers, psychologists and nursing staff is exceedingly critical.

Whitby Ontario hospital, Mr. Chairman, has 1,500 beds—Whitby established on a cottage basis, a rather interesting hangover from earlier approaches to psychiatric needs in the early part of the century—16 cottages with 50 or 60 beds each. It is interesting to note that the treatment objectives established at that time could not even be realized in 1965.

Let me read a little description from the Canadian Medical Association Journal of 1912 about what was then called the "Whitby Asylum":

The mentally afflicted of Ontario are to enjoy every advantage, and nothing is to be left undone that may add to their chances of recovery. One of the most potent factors in the development of the body is found in environment. That this is equally true of the mind is recognized by those who have planned the new asylum at Whitby. Instead of one central insane asylum, there will be several hospital buildings in which patients will be treated as their condition many demand. There will be, in addition, cottages where patients may be placed who are only temporarily afflicted or who are convalescing.

In this way, people who are suffering from slight mental trouble, who would shrink from entering an insane asylum, can be treated in the admission hospital building and avoid the horror of close proximity to those who are violently insane. The cottages, or convalescent homes will be eight in number and will be built as nearly as possible like summer residences. Each cottage will provide room for 50 patients.

The interesting thing about Whitby, Mr. Chairman, is that this government has defaulted even on the plan set up in the year 1912; this government has defaulted on the minimum staff complement necessary to prosecute a mental health programme of substance at Whitby Ontario hospital. Again, what are the requirements? For each large ward, Mr. Chairman, of which there are five, a clinic team comprised of three psychiatrists, three social workers, two psychologists and one occupational therapist, is necessary. And let it be said that that encompasses 300 patients in each ward, so it is hardly a lavish outpouring of professional expertise.

And what is the situation? Instead of 15 psychiatrists, there are nine full time. There are some part time—I believe, three—but the superintendent was quick to point out to me that one of them is only in two half-days a week, and that again it is hard to figure on part-time people. Instead of 15 social workers, there are five—one per unit of 300. Instead of ten psychologists, there is one, hired two months ago—the first psychologist they have had in Whitby Ontario hospital for a year.

As far as the outpatient department is concerned, Mr. Chairman, it does not even have a social worker, and only one psychiatrist of the total psychiatric complement. And it is noteworthy that the case load at the outpatient department at Whitby is falling rapidly, and the needs in the community are thereby being necessarily neglected, because there is simply not the staff complement to do the job. It has the same pattern as all the other Ontario hospitals. The admission rate is rising rapidly—it is up to 1,200 patients a year; it has a nursing shortage; there is only one graduate RN per shift at Whitby. And I suggest to the hon. Minister that he had best be prepared for a situation analogous to that of Toronto OH—of 250 male attendants only two are RNs. The situation is bad, and deteriorating.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, just to continue this recitation for the record of the House—I appreciate that there is a lot of detail here, but I think it important to build a substantive case and to document it for what I have to say later on—I want to mention Hamilton's Ontario hospital.

Mr. Chairman, with my good and worthy colleagues from Hamilton, I find it difficult to conceive how the staff at Hamilton survive the ordeal of working within that hospital. The needs are urgent and overwhelming. Let me put it on the table.

There are 1,700 beds in Hamilton; it had 2,000 admissions in 1965—that is the estimate, it may be an underestimate—which is the highest in the entire province. There are four overall units of between 400 and 500 patients in each. And the minimum requirement for each unit, according to Dr. Senn and I am sure he will corroborate what I say, is one certified psychiatric head, two psychiatrists at the diplomate level, and two psychiatrists in training. That is five per unit. And again it is merely a ratio of one per 100; it is not an extravagant number.

Well, Mr. Chairman, Ontario hospital at Hamilton, on this date in 1965, has three psychiatrists per unit, 12 instead of 20; and one of the units—and I emphasize this—one of the units, with from 400 to 500 patients, does not even have a certified medical head; that is of this date. They are wallowing in numbers of professionals. On July 1, 1965, something like three weeks from now, this rosy picture of 12 out of 20 presently prevailing changes; four of the psychiatrists are leaving with only one replacement coming. So, on July 1, 1965, the psychiatric complement at Hamilton OH will be nine out of a required 20; indeed nine out of a required 22, because you need a superintendent and an assistant superintendent.

If the hon. Minister says to me, as I know he will later on, and I shall deal with it shortly, that psychiatrists are hard to come by—I remind him of the fact that, in the not-too-distant past, there were 20 psychiatrists at Hamilton OH; and in the not-too-distant past there were full complements at London and at Whitby, and at others I have mentioned.

That is the psychiatric case load at Hamilton. As to the social workers, Dr. Senn could not even estimate the required number, it has been so long since he had any meaningful number. Presently, at Hamilton Ontario hospital, there are four social workers for 1,700 patients. As for psychologists—I should like to meet this human being, Mr. Chairman—there is one psychologist at Hamilton for the entire inpatient capacity of 1,700.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the pressures on the staff must necessarily be unbearable. I suggest that the situation at Hamilton Ontario hospital is more critical than any other Ontario hospital in the province. And when I asked the superintendent about nurses, I was treated with a wry smile and the observation that Hamilton has not even had a nursing application in the last several months.

I hope you, Mr. Chairman, will allow me a general overall reflection. Confining my analysis purely to the five Ontario hospitals dealt with thus far, the present or imminent shortage of full-time qualified psychiatrists is 44; and if we use the American psychiatric association ratio it means that, somewhere in those five hospitals, there are between 4,000 and 5,000 patients lacking adequate treatment. That accounts, I suggest, for the validity of the public opinion that the Ontario hospital offers inferior services. And I just make these reflections on the five involved, Mr. Chairman.

Lest the hon. Minister say later on that the part-time psychiatric picture redeems things, I want to point out to the House—and I want to point it out as strongly as I can—that many of the present full-time personnel to whom I refer include large numbers who are supposedly doing more training than serving. That is obviously not valid; in fact even the trainees are undertaking total full-time work loads.

Mr. Chairman, so much for the analysis of staff, profession, and senior staff complement at the various Ontario hospitals in the province of Ontario. It becomes important then to account for this intense crisis of top-level staff which threatens the adequate functioning of the total OH system. The visits raised many answers, and let me just offer a few to the House on this occasion.

First—and obviously, the impossibly low per capita per diem impedes the advance and experimentation, even in the areas of industrial therapy which are so important in rehabilitative terms—the lack of money allows for a contracting set-up.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, the entire salary schedule from top to bottom is haywire; it breeds insecurity, it breeds frustration, it breeds a heavy turnover, it necessarily breeds despair. Everywhere it is the same story. The salaries are crucial in many instances; the Ontario hospitals simply cannot compete. At Whitby Ontario hospital, competition is with Toronto, with Ajax, with General Motors at Oshawa. In Kingston Ontario hospital, the recently negotiated civil service agreement cutting down holidays to two weeks for the first three years, meant that, in addition to every nurse receiving less than she would receive at the general hospitals in the community, her vacation time is also less. So why come to an Ontario hospital? Staff hirings have come to a virtual halt.

Then, Mr. Chairman, just to go further, for all the psychiatric and psychological and social worker team, private practice in private agencies in the community is always more lucrative. You have a rather interesting situation in the city of Hamilton. The newly appointed head of the community psychiatric centre in Hamilton, partly city-financed, a man—and I have no doubt that he has an immense capacity and is excellent in his field—but a man who will never supervise more than three or four or five people at any time, in the development of that clinic, was hired at a starting salary much in excess of any superintendent in any Ontario hospital in this province. And I might say that, of the Toronto Ontario hospital, the views of Dr. Davidson are necessarily typical of those throughout.

As for New Toronto—so that I may move from the general to the particular, Mr. Chairman, let me give some concrete examples. This House will probably be interested. Three of them:

First, there was recently at New Toronto, a PhD psychologist. From 1962 to 1963, he was paid in the vicinity of $8,000 a year. He did inestimably good work at New Toronto, and he is now with the Toronto board of education, at $15,000 a year.

Second, Dr. Moorhouse had an MA in nursing education from Columbia. Tremendous progress was made in that field. Earnings in 1962 for this nursing MA were in the vicinity of $4,000 a year. She is now with the University of Toronto, at almost double that figure.

Third, Dr. Moorhouse had at New Toronto Ontario hospital, a PhD in social work from Columbia University, the only one in the province of Ontario. He was paid approximately $5,500 a year. He is now with the University of Ottawa.

In one concrete example after another, attrition of staff can be demonstrated by relationship to salaries and to conditions and to facilities. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that the public service of the province demands a certain dedication, but I suggest to the hon. Minister that it does not demand self-imposed austerity. You have no right to ask the senior staff in the Ontario hospitals in this province, to be philanthropists first and professionals second. But that is precisely what you are doing.

To take the explanation just a little further, Mr. Chairman, the development of psychiatric wings in general hospitals will cause even further attrition, I suggest, because the delectable prospect of a combination of hospital and private practice is vastly more attractive than the public service. So the competition develops not only with the United States, but also internally; and it will have deleterious effect on the staff complement. May I say, Mr. Chairman, that the medical care insurance bill, which is presently before debate in this House, will further add to that contraction of staff by confirming, as it does, a difference in the fee-supported and the tax-supported services. It is much more desirable in the minds of many professionals to work in the fee-supported circles.

Another very peculiar fact became manifest, Mr. Chairman, as I inquired about the contraction of staff in this desperately critical situation—a very curious fact. It appears that at the psychiatric level at least, the problem exists of the dominance of university-affiliated hospitals. Apparently, under new certification requirements, dictated by the Royal college of physicians and surgeons, training can be taken only at designated university-affiliated hospitals and this is likely to decimate the staff even further at Whitby and at St. Thomas and at Hamilton.

Mr. Chairman, if I may give a word of explanation. Until recently, students could take two years of their four-year training at any Ontario hospital—the first and the fourth year. In ten years, Mr. Chairman, Hamilton Ontario hospital, for instance, never missed a certification. Not once. But now the students are down to one year's training and soon they will probably be down to no years of training, in any non-university affiliated hospital. It means that those hospitals I have mentioned, Whitby, St. Thomas, Hamilton, will necessarily suffer an even greater and more critical reduction of staff. I say to the hon. Minister, and I hope he will give an answer later on, I simply do not understand the folly of it. It may be salutary in the long run, but why is it not possible to build some kind of bridge, until the time that McMaster has a full-time medical school? What happens to St. Thomas? And what happens to Whitby in the interim? Certainly, for the people in the hospitals themselves, there are no immediately evident answers.

Mr. Chairman, as has often been pointed out in this House, the conditions in the hospital equally militate against the attraction of staff. St. Thomas Ontario hospital is 65 acres of geographic isolation. There is no incentive to move to St. Thomas for purposes of employment. I suspect that this is partly the case at Smiths Falls as well. I do not know whether it relates to Mitchell Hepburn, or whether it relates to this hon. Minister of Health, but something has to be done about the geographic isolation and the consequences thereof at St. Thomas Ontario hospital.

Let it be said that it also has to be done for Kingston Ontario hospital. Kingston catchment area is nine counties in this province and of course Kingston can take people all the way north from Petawawa, despite the fact that they are in much closer proximity to North Bay. Yet by the very nature of the geographic boundaries relating to these Ontario hospitals, there develops in the public mind a sense of isolation which must be overcome.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, similarly, the overcrowding must be overcome. I say to the hon. Minister opposite, that I do not appreciate the epithet "snake pit," as applied to Toronto Ontario hospital. I think it is in exceedingly poor taste, but I do say to him that I can understand hon. members being driven to a certain degree of incalculable frustration, in finding adjectives to describe conditions that prevail.

Toronto is overcrowded. New Toronto should have 650 beds and has 860; London should have 780, it has 1,120. When I was in London Ontario hospital, I walked through wards where there was a capacity of 35 beds, and there were 73 people on the ward. I saw large numbers of beds in corridors. This still exists at London Ontario hospital. I noticed that the supply of facilities was exceedingly poor. It is hardly conducive to enthusiastic employment.

I also add the footnote that London OH is rebuilding, although 400 beds will still remain in the old wing. London Ontario hospital is admittedly rebuilding, Mr. Chairman, but we have as yet no concrete, authoritative evidence of what is to happen in some of the other institutions in the province.

Look at New Toronto. The hon. Minister spoke earlier this week, I think, on the occasion of the 75th anniversary of New Toronto Ontario hospital, now called, I believe, the Lakeshore psychiatric hospital. Rechristened. It was built in 1890, Mr. Chairman, and in the 75 intervening years not a single new building nor extension has been added, except let me say, a new power house in 1934, for whatever reason. And it is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, that the staff in hospitals like New Toronto, spend as much time trying to establish a proper psychiatric milieu, in buildings designed a century ago, as they do on the practice of clinical concepts of medicine. We impose on our staff the necessity for a degree of adaptability and creativity and adjustment, which newer buildings and better facilities would not impose.

That leads to another point, Mr. Chairman, and I think it is a very important point. At precisely the stage in the evolution of knowledge about mental health, at precisely the moment when we develop a revolutionary use of drugs, or psycho-pharmaceuticals—which made it possible to shift the emphasis dramatically from the custodial to active treatment, at precisely that moment over the last ten years, our hospital senior staff is steadily contracting, so that two things result. You can now treat more patients than ever before, because of this revolutionary breakthrough; but there simply are not any senior physicians and clinical teams to provide adequate treatment. Second, the teams themselves are overwhelmed and abused by the kind of staff-case ratio which exists. It is intimidating, not to say positively demoralizing. And perhaps I may make one incidental aside at this point, Mr. Chairman: The hon. Minister will obviously say there is a basic shortage of psychiatrists and there is a basic shortage of all the ancillary staff, and, Mr. Chairman, it is of course incumbent on us on this side to be honest and forthright; he is right about that—but let me add these observations; and I am going to add them, rather more strongly and I hope more thoughtfully, in the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare. In the area of social workers and psychologists and welfare workers and other career lines in the social service field, nothing, but nothing, is being done in an intelligent way by this government.

There is not a single manpower survey available, there is not a single study of requirements available, there is no evaluation of case load and distinction of career lines available, there is nothing given by this government which would boost that ancillary staff position; indeed, there is no overall plan of any kind whatsoever. And it is criminal, Mr. Chairman, that such should be allowed to exist. The burden of responsibility lies on the shoulders of the two hon. Ministers sitting almost adjacent across from you.

Although it is more severe in the area of ancillary work staff, it is, of course, equally severe in psychiatry. Across Canada we should be graduating 240 psychiatrists per year; we are graduating at the moment 119. And I have no doubt that the Ontario figures are representative of the national trend. But I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that at least the Ontario psychiatric association has set up a subcommittee to study manpower needs, which is more than we in this House have had evidence that the government has done. At least, Mr. Chairman, they are conscious of the need and will try to cultivate it through the medical schools, which is more than we have evidence that the government has done. I know about some of the bursaries and about some of the financial inducements, but I think later on in these estimates, under a sub-branch, we can develop those themes a little.

I would also point out that in that grandiose, that revolutionary, scheme of $114 million for medical schools and ancillary personnel back in October, there was never any specific contribution for the field of psychiatry. Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that if the hon. Minister believes, as he is so often on record as believing, that mental health is "Ontario's No. 1 health problem" then his reactions and his responses as a responsible Minister vibrate hollowly indeed.

That is the second major crisis and, I think, some of its reasons, Mr. Chairman.

The third major crisis paralyzing and impeding the Ontario hospital system is the soaring rates of readmission and the reasons for it. In 1960, Mr. Chairman, the readmission average across the province of Ontario hospitals was 38 per cent. In 1961 it was 39 per cent. In 1962 it was 42 per cent. A steady, inexorable rise. And one of the superintendents, Mr. Chairman, gave me the figures of readmission for six major Ontario hospitals for the month of March, 1965, and I do not think it can be any more timely. Let me read them. First admission, then readmission and the percentage:

Whitby Ontario hospital: first admissions 63, readmissions 57, percentage 48 per cent.

Toronto: first admissions 66, readmissions 101, readmission percentage 60 per cent.

New Toronto: 58 first admissions, 44 readmissions, percentage 43 per cent.

London: 36 first admissions, readmissions 24, percentage 40 per cent.

Hamilton: 115 first admissions, readmissions 77, percentage 40 per cent.

St. Thomas: first admissions 42, readmissions 35, percentage of readmissions 45 per cent.

The total percentage of readmission across the board, 46 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, that is an exceedingly high and worrying figure.

It is particularly worrying when, as I intend to show in a moment's time, it can be totally avoided. There is no excuse for it whatsoever, and the complete responsibility lies on this government in the person of the Minister of Health. The trend upwards does not parallel trends in other jurisdictions. I was very interested in this. There was an upward trend until roughly 1961 or 1962, but while it had started to go down in some of the other jurisdictions, it continues to go up in Ontario mental hospitals and there are three separate reasons advanced for that rise.

The first reason is this, Mr. Chairman, put very badly: premature discharge due to overcrowding and the relentless demand for new beds. I think that is probably true of the Ontario hospital in Toronto. Dr. Christie, in a recent article, pointed out that the rate has risen in Toronto Ontario hospital from 28 per cent in 1953 to 49 per cent in 1963. And in his article, "The Swinging Door"—a fascinating piece, a mixture of analysis and poetry; I commend it to the hon. members of this House; it is reprinted in the Canadian Psychiatric Journal, January-February, 1965—Dr. Christie had this to say:

Patients are more and more briefly, although one hopes no less cordially, processed through a sequence of diagnostic and therapeutic steps, which is ever more compressed and at times perfunctory, and returned to their original and widely various social situations with least possible delay to make room for the next in line. Readmission rates throughout the world have risen in the same period but scrutiny of individual cases during the past year or two reveal that in this particular centre, at any rate, the negative features of incomplete assessment and treatment leading to premature discharge and unnecessarily early relapse and readmission are operating to an ominously increasing extent.

Now I quote from Dr. Christie's annual report:

As predicted last year, the readmission rate has continued to rise and is approximately half of all admissions. Many psychiatric disorders are relapsing. However, as stated on many previous occasions, the rate of readmission to this hospital is known—

I repeat:

—is known increasingly to reflect inadequacies of initial treatment with premature discharge forced by the pressure for beds.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that is again an absolutely intolerable situation. I know it is nice that we can all sit here in our self-impressed capacities as members of the Legislature, and absorb with equanimity phrases like "psychiatric disorders are relapsing." But I say to the hon. Minister opposite that it is time that the equanimity of the government was jolted, because all we are doing is systematically damaging people who can in fact recuperate in much shorter periods of time. It can no longer be tolerated.

The second reason for premature discharge, Mr. Chairman, is due, in the opinion of some—and I shall just say this in passing—to the astonishing effect of new drugs. At times a seeming transformation can mislead psychiatric opinion, apparently. You get an early discharge and an early readmission and, frankly, only one or two of the superintendents felt that to be an explanation so I shall not labour the point. I shall merely advance it to make this approach a little more all-embracing.

But the third fundamental reason—and make no mistake about it—is that in almost all cases the readmission is due to a tragic lack or total absence of after-care in the province of Ontario. Of all the Ontario hospitals I visited, only Toronto had any intensive community follow-up, only Toronto had solely ten per cent of its outpatients who were formerly inpatients, unlike the others where the outpatient department was harassed by near-relapsing inpatient returnees. And let me say, Mr. Chairman, that one of the things I learned in my reading, however partial, was that outpatient departments should not be used for patients seeking readmission, certainly not in any reasonable mental health picture, because all you have then is a never-ending circle from the inpatient to the outpatient and back again. Toronto, at least, has a proper percentage, but it not reflected in other hospitals in the province.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the sad truth is, and the blatant truth, is that the Ontario hospitals simply do not know the meaning of after-care, simply cannot know the meaning of after-care. The staff inundation is such that hospitals cannot possibly cope with any further responsibility. So the discharged fend for themselves; people with acute and serious mental illness are put into the community to fend for themselves despite the critical factors of readjustment. Let me quote what the national institute of mental health in the United States is on record as saying:

The most difficult period we have in treating the psychiatric patient, especially one who has suffered a serious illness that has resulted in a period of time in a hospital, is the period immediately following his discharge during which he must relocate himself in society and work.

And, Mr. Chairman, it is a well-known and documented fact that the highest incidence of psychiatric relapse begins soon after leaving the hospital. Fifty per cent within the first three to four months, and yet after-care is frighteningly neglected in Ontario.

Let me tell you what I learned, Mr. Chairman. One of the superintendents told me that the patients were necessarily left to chance or to individual positions. "We tell them to write if they are in trouble," he said. And it was quite a natural observation to make. Another superintendent, Dr. Senn at Hamilton Ontario hospital, said that about all he was able to do was to say to the patient, "If you feel you are not well, come back to see me." That is a pathetic but unavoidable commentary on the system of rehabilitation after mental institutionalization in the province of Ontario. Dr. Senn is the first to recognize the importance of home placement, of job counselling, of vocational training or readjustment in the community. He is the first to recognize the need for social workers, for public health nurses, for general practitioners to follow their patients, but there simply is no apparatus of after-care because there is simply no staff to have that apparatus of after-care. Thus do readmission rates rise.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Except at the Lakehead.

Mr. S. Lewis: Except at the Lakehead, says the hon. Minister from Port Arthur. I am in a beneficent and charitable mood. Having not visited the hospital at the Lakehead, I will accept his feeling.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is where Dr. Senn started his work with mental health. He is one of the most knowledgeable men in Ontario in the field of mental health.

Mr. S. Lewis: Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that my friend, the hon. member for Parkdale read into the records a quote from Dr. Pratten, superintendent of Kingston Ontario hospital, writing in, I think it was, the 1964 issue of Canada's Mental Health, if I recall. I want to repeat one part of that quote because I think it was important.

Dr. Pratten pointed out that all of our mental patients are now being discharged, or that 75 per cent of them rather are being discharged within three months, and then he said:

But this, it seems to me, is a disservice to our patients. Hospital outpatient, community psychiatric, medical, social work and rehabilitation services are not sufficiently developed or sufficiently integrated with psychiatric hospitals to provide adequate after-care which the patient needs.

The combined tragedy and folly of this non-existent after-care dilemma lies in the extraordinary evidence of success where follow up is an integral part of a continuous treatment programme.

Let me give this Legislature some specific examples, because I do not want to seem to be setting out theories which cannot be corroborated in fact, and I have spent some considerable time in trying, in truth, to document it.

First, Mr. Chairman, there is a very famous study in the United States ranging across five states, a cross-section of 600 patients divided into a control group and an aftercare group. The states involved were Colorado, Kentucky, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Virginia, and in each state the study lasted ten months. What were its findings? Let me put them on the record of this House.

The rehospitalization rate during the study of the control group was 35 per cent; the rehospitalization rate during the study of the after-care group was 15 per cent.

I quote from the findings:

The study suggests that after-care programmes can cut rehospitalization rates by half.

Mr. Chairman, I ask this House to think of it for a moment; cutting rehospitalization rates in half with our present records, soaring records, of readmissions. But there were further findings:

The analysis of the five states noted that where rehospitalization did take place during the period of the study, for the control group patients the average was 36 days' stay in hospital; for the after-care patients the average was 10 days' stay in hospital.

So that in the instance of after-care you had a reduction in four weeks of hospital stay when the policy was followed.

Now the costs of after-care services—and I cannot stress this strongly enough—the costs of after-care services were extraordinarily inexpensive when compared to the regular hospital per diem rate, the average in every instance was 10 per cent of the hospital inpatient costs.

That means, Mr. Chairman, I submit, that in the province of Ontario we could run an after-care programme at 70 cents to $1 per patient per day, that is all, under the hopelessly limited grants presently dispensed.

Generally speaking the after-care approach is not difficult. It involves a social worker or public health nurse or a general practitioner, occasionally a psychiatrist. There is always considerable use of drugs, but work with families and job counsellings lead to success, and with halfway houses and after-care clinics immense things can be achieved in this field.

Mr. Chairman, I want to go further. There was a New York state survey provided by Dr. Donald Carmichael, and it reflected the establishment of convalescent clinics and day hospitals well staffed to provide the bridge from the crisis episodes after discharge. And quoting from Dr. Carmichael's survey, it indicates:

The follow-up of over 90 patients one to two years after leaving the day centre, showed a rehospitalization rate of one out of three, as compared with 90 per cent or 100 per cent who would have been rehospitalized in the absence of the centre. About 40 per cent were supporting themselves in whole or in part.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I point out that it is easy for the hon. Minister of Health to sit sanguine and self-assured in the face of presently prevailing trends. But the fact is that patient after patient in the Ontario hospitals relapse after discharge. The fact is that our readmission rates rise, the fact is that it is incumbent on the government knowing the value of after-care, to do something about it. Yet there is not so much as a hint of a meaningful programme.

It is well known by the Canadian mental health association and by this government that there was a programme of community foster homes in Winnipeg, connected with the Selkirk mental hospital in Manitoba—a very adventuresome project. The primary impetus came from volunteers, I stress this, Mr. Chairman. What they did was to contact only board-and-room advertisements in the newspapers, and where they were considered feasible they thereafter made home placements.

Let me tell the hon. members of the Legislature what happened. Within ten weeks of beginning in 1962 the hospitals were unable to keep pace. Forty-two patients were placed in the first five months; 200 patients were placed in the following 20 months; 256 patients have been placed to date and of them all only nine have been returned to hospital. Under the province of Ontario's after-care programme 130 of them would have been returned to hospital!

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I feel I must make reference to a fascinating study, recently available, of the psychiatric home care programme at University hospital, Saskatoon. This psychiatric home care programme again followed seriously ill mental patients into the community with a social worker or public health nurse. In fact, the public health nurse was the main vehicle for the follow-up. It was financed since 1961 by the province of Saskatchewan and by the national institute of mental health grants. They accepted only the most difficult cases, and let me emphasize that they also accepted older people. The evidence of rehabilitation was absolutely astonishing.

I am not going to read all the individual cases into the record but let me tell the House of one or two.

There was a man, 90 years of age, whose diagnosis was senility with sensory changes. His after-care amounted only to 16 weeks. He was visited regularly by a VON and by a social worker, once by his general practitioner. He is now well. He had one admission to a mental hospital which it was thought would be permanent. He has had no admissions in two and a half years.

Another case, a paranoid schizophrenic, 52 years of age, the duration of home care lasted only 29 weeks. Again, just a VON and public health nurse. His present state: He is at peace with his delusions, he is working. Prior to the after-care programme he had five admissions in one and a half years; now no admissions in two years since the project was instituted.

Now, no admissions in two years since the project was instituted. And so it goes with patients in manic state, patients with neurosis, patients with reactive depression, patients with all the most acutely serious psychiatric ills—a total rehabilitation. The preliminary survey is astonishing in its findings, and there is not a thing, Mr. Chairman, to approximate it in the province of Ontario.

So much then, in summary, for that part of my remarks. I realize that my remarks are somewhat extended, but I shall pursue them because I think it is important that this be given hearing in the Legislature, whether it be June of 1965 or July.

First, I repeat, we are starving our Ontario hospitals premeditatedly and consciously; second, the staff—senior staff—complement is suffering a desperate attrition with all the unhappy consequences; and, third, we have no after-care programme whatsoever so that the readmission rates continue to soar.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fourth major crisis in our Ontario hospital system is essentially the crux of my entire argument. The Ontario hospitals are tottering amidst the confusion of an undefined pattern of mental health services. Their overall role is uncertain, equivocal, haphazard and anxious; they are dismembered bodies in a dismembered system and there is simply no graphic overall plan available.

Oh yes, to do the hon. Minister justice, his original pretensions were bold. Earlier in his speech, that lilting Scottish ballad speech that I quoted earlier, the hon. Minister of Health had this to say:

From this it will be seen that the modern concept is that organization of mental health services should start at the community level.

The hon. Minister of Health, in conjunction with the head of the mental health branch and with, I think it is, Dr. Henderson, who heads the community health services wing, was going to set up—essentially—a triad of services—the hon. Minister can correct me if I am wrong—Ontario hospitals on one hand; psychiatric wings of general hospitals on another; and outpatient departments for the third. That is well and good, Mr. Chairman, we shall return to that.

But surely the community organization should have an integrated and planned framework within which all these existing systems, all the branches of the triad can function. Otherwise, I suggest, mental health in any one of them—Ontario hospitals, psychiatric wings or outpatient departments—is reduced to a catch-as-catch-can proposition. And everywhere I travelled, I found the same confusion, uncertainty, anxiety, and lack of definition.

Let me ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman: What is to become of St. Thomas Ontario hospital? Let us know what is to become of it, in its splendid geographic isolation—an increasing sense of isolation; an isolation where distance discourages early diagnosis and creates problems of rehabilitation.

Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, what is the future of Hamilton Ontario hospital before McMaster has a fully operative medical school? How many more psychiatrists can it lose before it is reduced to having the attendants in the wards administer psychiatric help? How do you stem the dramatic contraction in professional staff? What relationship does the Hamilton Ontario hospital have to the two psychiatric wings in the general hospital in Hamilton? What relationship does it have to the community psychiatric centre which is being established? Who defines the relevance? How do you overcome the fragmentation of services? A fragmentation to which Dr. Henderson has himself made reference in published articles—each facility operating under an independent and unrelated administrative authority.

Let me continue, Mr. Chairman. Will Kingston Ontario hospital get its special clinic for treatment of adolescents? Will it get its special clinic for treatment of alcoholism, for geriatrics? When will we have some definition about the facilities of Kingston, because of course, all of eastern Ontario is bereft of that entire range of services?

And, Mr. Chairman, what about research in the Ontario hospitals? We are now talking about the things which give a raison d'être to these hospitals, which give their staff and their structure and their programme some substance. What about research? The truth is that in the entire Ontario hospital system in this province, only New Toronto is doing any concerted and consistent research. Oh, the hon. Minister talks blithely of research. I remember the Ontario government submission to the Hall commission. Let me quote:

Specific methods of preventing mental illness or mental deficiency can only be achieved through research, which in proportion to the magnitude of the problem, has been grossly neglected.

I suppose the gross neglect was to be a commentary on the federal government. And then a further quote:

Research in the field of mental illness, mental retardation and epilepsy is perhaps the most pressing need in the health service field.

Brave words, Mr. Chairman; hypocritical words, Mr. Chairman, because of all the money allotted to Ontario by the federal government for mental health, only 1.2 per cent is used for research purposes. So the abdication of responsibility lies at both the federal and the provincial levels.

Why was it not possible, Mr. Chairman, for London Ontario hospital to have a small general hospital wing, or for Toronto Ontario hospital to have the same? It avoids duplication of services, it further integrates mental and physical illness and it overcomes the community stigma. Dr. Wickware wanted it. The geographic position in the east end of London made sense for a burgeoning population. The London academy of medicine wanted it—and had editorial support. The mental health branch wanted it, too, but instead, the university got a teaching hospital because here was no overall regional planning, and because this hon. Minister, as is his wont, refused to intervene. So again, Mr. Chairman, we have this hopeless lack of co-ordination, this invidious state in the Ontario hospital system. Indeed, it can be summarized in a parting quote again from Dr. Christie, because I think no one is better qualified to speak than the superintendents involved:

The clarification of the future role of this hospital both immediate and remote is an urgent community need. How should a metropolitan psychiatric hospital be planned, constructed, funded, staffed, organized and operated? No self-evident answers to these questions are available, yet their urgency becomes ever more evident here in Toronto in 1964.

No plans, no answers, nothing provided, and the Ontario hospital system continues fragmented.

Mr. Chairman, I was looking at this report on mental care in Metropolitan Toronto because, for many people—the hon. Minister of Health himself—this was to provide the plan. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this is a most limited, superficial, unimaginative document. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I think this whole survey has been intimidated by their own initial courage. When they projected the figure of hospital bed shortage in Metropolitan Toronto in the summer of 1964 at 2,360 beds, a relentless furor built to the point where the hon. Minister seemed to acquiesce and make progress—there will be more about that later on. Immediately thereafter all the observations and recommendations in subsequent reports were toned down, became temperate, moderate and cautious, until the entire report is deprived of substance; until the only thing it does is make the obvious and not very inspired observation that there is a 400-bed overcrowding in the Toronto Ontario hospital, that it would be nice to have a community board to run these hospitals and that things are not quite as they should be. Let us hope that the hon. Minister moves on it. Well, you know, the recitation of the obvious does not need to be enshrined in published documents of this kind.

It is noteworthy, Mr. Chairman, that the fundamental proposition of this report was not met by the group involved. Indeed, I want to put forth something now to this Legislature which I think may be of interest to the hon. Minister of Health; he certainly will not have seen it in this report. The only thing this report does, and does well, is to show that the commissioners are totally unable to do elementary arithmetic. Their mathematical computations are ludicrous. They are so complicated in nature that they could have been fed into some Gemini computer.

After a complete appraisal of the field and a subtraction of people who might be moving out of Toronto, and an addition of people who might be calculated into Whitby—and one projection and another projection—they came up with the astonishing decision that there would either be 171 beds too few or 45 beds too many. And that, Mr. Chairman, was a magnificent piece of contradictory nonsense. I want to tell the House how they arrived at that figure, because I think they have made a very inaccurate projection which is going to cause serious trouble in Metropolitan Toronto unless we do something about it.

This report, under its section entitled "The Needs," page 27, states categorically the following three points—I shall try to spell it out slowly, and hope that I can communicate to the hon. members because I myself am no mathematical wizard by any stretch of the imagination.

The conference of western European hospitals held in November, 1962 at the international hospital federation said that the ratio for mental hospital beds was $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 7 per 1,000 population. That was for both mental illness and mental subnormality. And Mr. Chairman, if I can extract just mental illness, it would be a range very closely approximating two to four-and-a-half beds per 1,000.

Secondly, the report pointed to a widely based American study in 1962 which recommended 6.5 beds per 1,000 population for mental illness and mental subnormality. And on that basis, Mr. Chairman, mental illness would be 3.8 beds per thousand.

Then the report referred to the British five-year plan which was based on an evaluation of the entire British network in England and Wales, and came to the conclusion of a minimum 1.8 beds per 1,000. And that, Mr. Chairman, was an absolute minimum. The figure of 1.8 per 1,000 is a reduction from the previous figure in the United Kingdom of 3.3 per 1,000, and 1.8 is accepted as a figure, also taking into account community treatment, outpatient clinics, foster homes, after-care—things which we do not have in the province of Ontario—and which would maintain patients in the community.

So the figures given by the report itself on which to project bed needs range from 1.8 per 1,000 to 4.5 per 1,000.

And then the report states—some of my hon. colleagues will be taken aback, even if the hon. Minister is not:

Present allocation and need are approximately equal, since the waiting lists reported by the Ontario hospitals are very short, comprising a fluctuating total of between 30 and 50 patients.

Now, this surely must be the first report, Mr. Chairman, by a distinguished assemblage of men, which suggests that the immediate demand is the effective need five years hence. There is absolutely nothing in the report which takes into account the effect of the opening of psychiatric wings on pressure for Ontario hospital beds, there is nothing in the report which relates to the experience of other jurisdictions which shows expansion. There is nothing in the report but this absurd proposition that because our waiting lists are not longer than the effective known needs, therefore we will establish the present percentage as a ratio. It is as if to say that because there are only 2,000 people in the city of Toronto who demand low-cost public housing that is all the number of units we must provide. The argument has been shown to be specious on endless occasions.

But what is the figure that presently provides the present satisfactory ratio?—1.26 per cent beds per 1,000, Mr. Chairman. So the report very calmly takes the 1.26 figure prevailing in 1965 and projects it to 1970 and says that that means we will either have 171 beds too few or 45 too many. It is absurd, just ludicrous!

The lowest figure that could possibly be used is the 1.8 figure, and when you apply the 1.8 figure to the projected Metropolitan Toronto population of 1970, the actual bed needs will be 3,474, which means that we are likely to have a shortage in Metro Toronto between 1970 and 1975 of 1,046 psychiatric beds.

I bring it to the attention of this House because those figures are seriously related to other jurisdictions and other studies, whereas this report is obviously a defence mechanism for the hon. Minister. Once again, Mr. Chairman, the needs of mental health are left in limbo because we have no integrated scheme, we have no field blueprints on which to plan.

What then, more precisely, is the essential rationale around which to some degree I have been speaking for so long? I shall not in fact exceed the length of other estimate speeches, but I shall approximate it. I am speaking, Mr. Chairman, of the community mental health centre—to which this government supposedly subscribes—in its most dramatic and creative format; an organization of community services which provide—not necessarily within the same building, indeed they should not provide within the same building—the whole spectrum of treatment facilities. I am talking of inpatient, outpatient, day hospitals, night hospitals, the now famous walk-ins, the 24-hour emergency service, the specialized adolescent forensic, geriatric and alcoholic units—after-care, half-way homes, foster homes, and so on—research and training. And the only facility, Mr. Chairman, in the province of Ontario which even begins to approximate that is the Toronto psychiatric hospital.

The concept of community health which I am putting forward on this side of the House, and which stands in total contradiction to the policy that is now being developed by this government, is a concept which reaches into the community, associating with all community agencies, shifting the emphasis forcefully to that of prevention as well as of treatment.

Such a scheme is difficult, but if the hon. Minister maintains the present pattern, it is fraught with peril. The head of his community mental health services branch is on record in the June, 1964 issue of the Canadian Psychiatric Association Journal as saying:

It is inherent in the basic concept of community psychiatric centres that the outpatient service will be an integral part of a more comprehensive programme. Many of these services will be located in general hospitals. Those engaged in outpatient programmes directed to broad needs in the community have expressed the fear that a service identified with a general hospital will become centred on the organic and physical elements of psychiatric practice. Such an emphasis would minimize the psycho-social aspects of psychiatry and tend to exclude the involvement of the supporting agencies and services in the local mental health effort. We must make sure this does not happen.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the sad truth is that it is happening. Our mental health services are rigidifying, and rigidifying in the wrong direction. We are sacrificing the community emphasis to the hospital emphasis; instead of the community model we have only the medical model and the focus is on mental illness rather than on mental health.

Let me be more explicit for a moment. The entire thrust at present, as the hon. Minister knows, is in the direction of psychiatric wings in general hospitals. That is where the impetus comes. And there is some very real validity in integrating mental illness with physical illness. But not absolute validity, not at the expense of the community needs as a whole.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the psychiatric profession, and the hon. Minister, and the mental care in Metro study corroborate this viewpoint of More for the Mind. But let us not think that More for the Mind is some biblical preaching before which we must all stand in awe. More for the Mind was written by eight psychiatrists, it was the reflection only of psychiatrists. I think it is worth putting to this House the fact that an even more eminent study was made by the United States joint commission on mental illness and health. This commission had 45 members, 24 with medical degrees, but 21 with various qualifications—representing the entire range of the ancillary professional field—psychology, social work, welfare work, nursing, and so on. They had a rather different community emphasis. I want to read from a review of More for the Mind, written by Dr. Clyde Marshall, in the February, 1965, issue of, I imagine, the Canadian Psychiatric Journal, and he asks:

Can all activities now being carried on by independent community mental health centres outside of a general hospital be done just as well in a hospital facility? Certainly, the definite medical functions can be done just as well in such a facility, and probably better, but what about those activities of psychiatry which relate more to community problems than to illness narrowly defined?

Can all the various services now supplied to schools, colleges, welfare organizations and private individuals be carried on just as well in a general hospital setting? Specifically, what about the school services, or when a husband and wife are having difficulties and wish to consult a psychiatrist? Is this to be interpreted as illness, and should the two be referred to an outpatient department of a general hospital?

And Dr. Walter McLay on the occasion of the Adolf Meyer lecture said, after appraising some of the hopeful aspects, and I quote:

On the other hand, psychiatric patients need more time and space than the general hospital offers. The regime of a general hospital is authoritarian, whereas the therapeutic community needs a more egalitarian approach. Regression to a state of passive co-operation and obedience may be good for the physically ill but it is bad for the psychiatric patient. Choice of patients by the general hospital may lead to a deterioration in the morale and standards of the mental hospital.

The fact of the matter is, that that is the direction in which we are going, and I suggest that not sufficient thought has been given.

Mr. Chairman, another point needs to be raised. Psychiatric wings, when first opened, were supposed to bring mental health into the community, thereby relieving the Ontario hospitals of the burden and the work load. The Ontario hospital population was supposed to grow smaller, was supposed to contract, perhaps ultimately disappear. The hon. Minister has hinted at this direction from time to time.

But, Mr. Chairman, no such thing is happening and the reverse is true; that is why this "Mental Care in Metro Toronto" is such a misleading document.

One need only visit Dr. Pratten in his Ontario hospital in Kingston and ask what happened to the pressure on that hospital when the psychiatric wing at Peterborough was opened, to know in fact what the pattern is. When you open up psychiatric facilities in a wing of a general hospital, what you are really doing in this society, in our very limited state of psychiatric development, is increasing the identification process, making it possible to assess the incidence more validly and thus the admission rates tend to rise. They do not contract. From one Ontario hospital to another across the province, the needs will be greater, rather than less. The need for definition will be greater, rather than less, but there is no such definition available.

Next, Mr. Chairman, let me say that the psychiatric wings are often exclusive and restrictive in the worst possible sense, and their exclusiveness and their restrictions militate against the community interests. Some, like those in Hamilton, for instance, will take only patients from psychiatrists practising in the community. Others will take patients only from the staff and the general practitioners of the hospital involved. In every instance, the independent boards of governors lay down policies; the community, inadvertently or otherwise, can be misplaced or discarded, and there is no policy at the provincial levels to allow for community needs.

Further, Mr. Chairman, some of our esteemed psychiatric wings move with very serious lethargy toward opening outpatient departments, and this is a complete negation of community involvement. This was the rationale, this was the test, this was the justification for Dr. Henderson's emphasis on psychiatric wings. But even this watered-down mental-care study shows that of the five general hospitals in the city of Metropolitan Toronto, only one has an outpatient department of any formalized kind, and that is not a very happy or enlightened picture.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make perhaps a more important and crucial observation. Indeed this observation and the analysis I am about to offer to the House, is fundamental to my whole argument. I submit to the hon. members present that the acid test of genuine community involvement lies in the channels of referral. Whence do the prospective patients come and how do they get there? Just how strong are the community roots of our supposed community mental health services. The answer, Mr. Chairman, is at once revealing and distressing, and the answer is found in this document, the eighth annual statistical summary, "Community Mental Health Services in Ontario, 1963."

This is a fascinating document and alone, of its own, it indicts the entire mental health pattern in the province of Ontario.

In fact, this is a description unmerited for a document of this kind, "Community Mental Health Services in Ontario." What a pretentious appellation. This is just an analysis of outpatient clinics. Community mental health services, in the meaning of the phrase as it is developing in Scandinavia and in the United Kingdom and in the United States, is an all-embracing concept, not merely outpatient departments.

But let us look at our outpatient departments for a moment. Let us take a look at that table called, I think, "New Patients by Referring Agency." It analyzes the referral channels of 26 provincial and 17 local services in Ontario in 1963—some 15,000 cases—and what does it show? It shows that of the 15,000 cases, 44.2 per cent were referred by general practitioners, and another 15.3 per cent by other health agencies. In other words, 60 per cent of the referrals to our community mental health centres, the so-called outpatient departments, come from medical sources. Again the medical model.

What about the things which we consider to be community channels? What about them? Let me give the percentage of referrals from those sources: children's agencies, 3.9 per cent; family agencies, 1.2 per cent; educational agencies, 8.8 per cent; courts, probation officers, police, 6.3 per cent; friends or relatives, 2.1 per cent, and the most important source of referral of all, the self-referral by the parent, the precise family involvement, 11 per cent.

In one centre after another, Mr. Chairman, the whole referral pattern is almost exclusively medical. Indeed, in many of the outpatient clinics of Ontario hospitals and some of the wings of general hospitals, it is from 70 to 100 per cent medical in nature. Yet in all the valid American experiments, and with all the people with whom I discussed this problem, the contention was invariably that community mental health meant exactly that—it meant family agencies, children's agencies, educational agencies, probation agencies, self-referrals, not confined, restricted medical patterns of mental health. Certainly, we want to involve the general practitioner, no one denies that; but not the general practitioner at the exclusion of the community.

Then we take a closer look at these fascinating few pages, and we look at the tables, "New Cases by Referring Agencies," and look at some of the agencies and what do we find? In some of them, Mr. Chairman—the London Ontario hospital, the Hamilton mental health clinic, the Toronto psychiatric hospital, and the Toronto mental health clinic—the medical referrals are only 15 to 25 per cent of the total. The self-referrals, the educational referrals, the children and family agency referrals are the great bulk of the channels from which people with mental problems are coming to the outpatient clinic.

And what characterizes all these outpatient clinics, what distinguishes them from every other clinic in the province? They are non-medical, Mr. Chairman. The London mental health clinic has been operating on Dufferin Street in London because there has not been room in the Ontario hospital. Hamilton mental health clinic, Toronto psychiatric hospital adult outpatient clinic, and Toronto mental health clinic are all rooted in the community, located in the community, and developing community channels. The only Ontario hospitals which are doing that are the Ontario hospital at Toronto and the Ottawa community psychiatric clinic, this on the basis of the figure—and those again come from inspired psychiatric leadership—from a premeditated and calculated and designed exploitation of all the important and relevant community resources.

Community—the word is slandered in our present mental health picture; the word is betrayed in our present mental health picture. Our emphasis is in the other direction. If you watch the pattern of the agencies that I have mentioned and singled out you will find that over the years the community involvement has risen. It is true for all of them. It is not true for the others.

I am frankly very sorry to see the London mental health clinic on Dufferin Street go back into London Ontario hospital, because as sure as I am standing here today, that will deprive the London mental health clinic of its community focus. In fact, these are not my opinions particularly, they are the opinions of the people in the field.

The hon. Minister, in his opening remarks, said it was conclusive psychiatric and medical opinion that his was the best pattern. It is not at all. In fact, there is one whole field of psychiatric opinion, reflected in that magnificent publication, the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, that advances that team approach to psychiatry is best, the attitude of community emphasis. That whole group has no use for the preoccupation that is developing in this province. Let me read from Nicholas Hobbs, a doctor in Tennessee, in a recent issue of the journal of orthopsychiatry:

There is a chance that the new mental health centres will be nothing more than a product of the general urbanization of America, a movement from country to city. Twenty years from now people may moan not over bricks and mortar, but over glass and steel. There is a real danger that we shall succeed in changing only the location and the architecture of the state hospital. If the new centres turn inward to the hospitals, they too will be monuments to failure.

That is what is happening, for with the total emphasis on psychiatric wings, the new centres are turning inward to the hospital rather than outward to the community. And they will be monuments to failure.

Mr. Chairman, let me refer to a major Boston mental health survey of outpatients which failed to find any meaningful community pattern. Dr. Ryan, very fundamental to that plan in the Massachusetts committee on mental health, came to Toronto and had this to say: "After we had analyzed the community referrals and realized that only the middle class was being served—"; not the low income earners, not the working class, not the people on $5,000 or $6,000 a year who are invariably discriminated against by this government, but purely the middle-class clientele was being served. When he found this out, he said:

This leads us to raise a very fundamental question as to the appropriateness of our basic referral model. In our Boston study, we reached the conclusion that one of the basic causes of the failure of our referral system was the fact that in many instances an inappropriate model was being used.

Let me elaborate on this point and I continue to quote Dr Ryan:

We have become so used to our standard system of identification referral that one would almost think it is spelled out somewhere in the Bible. The system is old but not that old. It goes back to the beginning of modern medicine and of modern public health. In other words, the identification referral model is primarily a medical model.

It assumes three things: first, that a person is sick; second, that he is sick with a disease, and third, that the basic difficulty to be solved is one of locomotion, of getting the person from the point at which he is identified as sick to a point where someone who is skilled in curing this disease can go to work and do something.

And then Dr. Ryan says, "Let us consider other mental health problems," and he does—problems which do not involve purely acute psychiatric illness. He comes to the conclusion that our whole trend is wrong, or at least the trend in the province of Ontario is wrong. And he says, as I quote again:

If this analysis is correct, it represents one significant instance of the difficulties that arise from a thoughtless application of medical models to situations that are at best only analogous to medical problems and at worst are quite irrelevant to them.

That is a very famous study, the Massachusetts study.

There is also—and I will not read it into the record but the hon. Minister is acquainted with it, and I am sure Dr. McNeil under the wings is far better acquainted with it than I am—the study by Hollingshead, which is a book on social class in mental illness, indicating that all the classes—the lower classes, the urban working classes, the rural farm classes—are discriminated against by the non-community orientation of outpatient departments in psychiatric wings, and by the obsession with outpatient departments in mental hospitals.

Mr. Chairman, I am much exercised, obviously, at the direction in which we are moving. I was again, let me say, sorry to see the York county health unit close down in March, 1964, when the psychiatric wing of the York county hospital opened. Grants were cut off. There is a considerable debate on comparison of services, but let me quote from Dr. R. B. Murray, the medical officer of health for the county, in the Globe and Mail story of January 1, 1965:

Dr. R. B. Murray, the medical officer of health, said that the two clinics were difficult to compare. A hospital-based psychiatrist would be more likely to slant his approach to the treatment of mental illness rather than to prevention.

That is exactly the point. That is the point that all kinds of esteemed people in the field are making. We are off the right mental health track in Ontario, Mr. Chairman. There is a neat and difficult line to maintain between treatment and prevention. But at the moment we have opted for the former at the expense of the latter, with significant fragmentation of services to boot.

We desperately lack overall planning; we lack any prototype experiment of a genuine mental health clinic; we are bent on an inflexible pattern, wrongly headed and wrongly directed; we are inclined toward mental illness rather than mental health; we have taken in the medical model and, I suggest to you, have not fully exploited other possibilities. The present trend, Mr. Chairman, may in a decade put us back inestimably in the provision of mental health services in the province.

Perhaps the key fault lies in the circumscribed limiting definition of community care. Our preoccupation with the hospital basis tends to denigrate all the other facts. But there are exciting experiments all over the world which are worth emulating and which are nowhere reflected in the province of Ontario.

There are family protection units—let me mention them—in the United States, in the United Kingdom, and particularly in Norway. The mother is considered emotionally and physically the key person in the family. They set up a centre which does not have the so-called hospital psychiatric stigma. Norway established two clinics in the two provincial capitals, and their team was much broader than we envision it: They had a public health officer, a psychiatrist, a gynaecologist, a social worker, a lawyer and a psychologist. It had unprecedented acceptability, Mr. Chairman. Five hundred cases were treated in the first three years, all manners of referrals.

Let me read some of the reasons that people came to the clinic: for disease or illness in the family, divorce problems, sterility, wanting to adopt a child, mothers wanting to give away their children for adoption by others, alcohol, unwanted pregnancies, problems related to education and adaptation to school, miscellaneous family problems such as social conditions, economic, housing, occupation, etc. These were the things that were satisfied by a family protection unit of that kind—a very creative formula and format, the best kind of front-line preventive mental health.

In the United States, Mr. Chairman, there are striking developments which also should be incorporated in the Canadian plan. There is a whole spate of day hospitals in the United States, Mr. Chairman. Let me explain it to the hon. members of the House. Day hospitals provide the full range of treatment programmes and then the mentally ill patient returns to his family at night.

They began in the Soviet Union in 1933, interestingly enough. The most important day hospital in North America was established in Montreal in 1946, at the Allen memorial institute of psychiatry. In 1948, one was opened at the Yale psychiatric clinic, and in 1949, another at the Menhinger clinic, so that what we are putting to the hon. Minister has been available in North America for a long time. It should not merely be confined to TPH.

Let me read an expert opinion from Community Psychiatry, by Dr. S. Becker, Murphy, et al, in the issue of, I think it is June, 1964, about the day hospital:

By averting hospitalization or shortening the period of hospitalization, the day hospital accomplishes a significant reduction in the cost of psychiatric services. One nursing shift suffices, whereas three are required to staff an inpatient ward. Despite the higher staff-to-patient ratio in day hospitals and in wards, the total staff budget remains less. Additional savings accrue because no beds are required and only one meal a day must be prepared. The economy and efficient use of personnel at a day centre make it particularly appropriate in communities where there are few psychiatrists and other trained mental health personnel and funds for psychiatric services are limited.

And then, Mr. Chairman, what about night hospitals designed to reduce the readmission ratios and deal with acute crises? It does not interrupt gainful employment. Where are the night hospitals across the province of Ontario?

There has been a unit at the Montreal general hospital since 1954, and all kinds of units over North America. Where are they in the province of Ontario to provide not only places to sleep, but drug therapy and psychotherapy and group therapy between 6.30 and 11 every evening? And the half-way houses, where the former patients live together with the house mother or father, and assume a rehabilitation emphasis. The three that are operating in Boston are models of their kind. Why are there not similar models patterned across the province of Ontario?

And the whole realm of ex-patients clubs, like Fountain House in New York, which are rehabilitative and vocational in direction, again relating to the after-care programme, the absence of after-care that so unhappily destroys prospects for rehabilitation in the province of Ontario.

And then, Mr. Chairman—and I cannot emphasize this strongly enough—there is the family care aspect of psychiatric illness, about which one would think the province of Ontario knows nothing. This is a matter—if I remember correctly from my reading—that began two or three centuries ago, in the community of Geel in Belgium. It is a matter of maintaining seriously ill psychiatric patients in foster homes, or real homes, in the community.

Again, in Scandinavia, Mr. Chairman, let me say to this House that fully half of all the mental patients are maintained in community foster homes. That country is not busy building psychiatric wings, beds to fill crises of their own making. But that is what the hon. Minister of Health is doing. This incredibly exciting concept of maintaining acutely ill patients in their homes has by no means been developed, and yet there are studies after studies.

I want to mention them because I think they should be on the record. There is the study, which I am sure the mental health branch has seen on the prevention of hospitalization of schizophrenics and community centre treatment of schizophrenia. Let me tell the House what these studies show. They show that you can maintain seriously ill people—schizophrenics, for instance—for over 90 per cent of the time at home, a foster home, with a little community care, with some extension of drug care and with some visits from VON or public health nurses. The surveys have been taken in one jurisdiction after another in the United States. I am going to refer to them, so the hon. Minister need not think I am talking off the top of my head. All these surveys demonstrate that the ideas work.

It was pointed out in a comparison of 50 patients, Mr. Chairman, that you could save literally 4,800 hospital days over a period of 30 months by using the community centred approach. Let me ask about the walk-in emergency treatment, the 24-hour emergency care that is provided in so many of the American centres. One thinks particularly of the trouble-shooting clinic at the city hospital, Long Island.

All these things I have mentioned, Mr. Chairman, advisedly fall within the umbrella of proper community mental health patterns. But they are only trends or forms. There are several magnificent community mental health centres which embody the best of all. I therefore suggest to the House that the hon. Minister of Health and his mental health branch, and all their cohorts and colleagues, before they formalize any further planned patterns or trends which we will forever regret, should go to the United States and visit those magnificent experiments that are available in other jurisdictions.

One of the hon. members suggests that maybe I should go along. I should be happy to accompany them. The reports make exciting reading. As a matter of fact, I commend a particular book to the Legislature called The Community Mental Health Centre, an Analysis of Existing Models. It reports on the 11 finest models in North America, chosen out over 360 that were evaluated. So those that I am reading about, I think, are properly representative of the best.

I want to say that the only Canadian model in this study, and I say it with some pride and the hon. Minister will forgive my interposing it, was the Yorkton psychiatric clinic in Saskatchewan. There was not another Canadian model that was deemed worthy of choice.

But let me tell the hon. members of this House something about the American models. Take the psychiatric receiving centre at the Greater Kansas City mental health foundation, Missouri. There is a waiting list for staff, a waiting list for nurses who want jobs. They cannot get the jobs for there is such an exciting treatment milieu provided that there is simply no staff problem. Their 24-hour emergency admitting treatment means no waiting. There is five-days-a-week day care with no fees, and 40 patients and two full treatment teams. The director says, and I quote:

It is constructive experience in living in a social system that reflects the largest community outside the hospital.

All of these men are preoccupied with both the community and inpatient care of all kinds.

And listen, Mr. Chairman, to the community aspect. There are child research councils to diagnose referrals from the school system; full-time psychologists supervising teachers of classes for disturbed children in schools; weekly seminars with teachers plus classroom visits; psychologists and social workers linked to local juvenile institutions; special training courses for general practitioners, 40 to 50 every three years. All the local police officers must have psychiatric teaching and some schooling before they get a job in the particular state of Missouri to ensure that they can handle the job. There are special units giving scientific information and consultation in reducing mental health problems that arise from the work environment, and special departments for the community work.

To name another—take the Fort Logan mental health centre in Denver, Colorado. It has special research buildings; nurseries for children; day patients; cottages and single rooms; children's units; two half-way houses; 24-hour and night patients; a day hospital; family care and after-care. And the whole emphasis again is not the medical model, as the hon. Minister and his department are obsessed with, but the community model. I cannot emphasize that strongly enough, Mr. Chairman. A decade from now, I expect we will regret the entire pattern we are developing, a pattern which is corroborated by the statistics that I read into the record from the department's own report.

There is constant work with families; group meetings with families—indeed, the families are involved in the treatment programme—after-care homes; all the ingredients of proper community centre treatment.

Take the Massachusetts mental health centre at Boston, a special hospital for the acutely ill. Thirty per cent of the referrals by courts run by a community board. The recruitment of staff has never been a problem. Let me read a quote from the medical directive:

Most of the psychiatrists are graduates of the centre's own residency programme.

All except two are graduates of U.S. or Canadian medical schools.

And why not? Where are the challenges in working under the staff situation and the per diem per capita in St. Thomas OH, or Hamilton OH, or Whitby OH in Ontario?

In Boston there are walk-ins, 24-hour facilities, no waiting at any time and the inpatients programme is completely flexible. The patients spend at least one day a week outside—or more—again the pattern is community oriented; social workers working with teachers; training courses for correction officers; summer courses for the clergy; the police trained in the hospital—obviously a mature and community centred approach.

Finally, if I could just mention it, Mr. Chairman, because I was intrigued by it, the Nebraska psychiatric institute of Omaha, Nebraska, not only provides a full spectrum of service, but it has a 48 inpatient bed unit. I want to read into the record of the House the staff complement for that 48-bed unit: three psychiatrists; eight residents; two psychologists; two psychiatric social workers; three occupational therapists; one industrial therapist; one vocational rehabilitation officer; five psychiatric nurses, and 11 part-time social work personnel of one kind or another.

Among the services they provide: A day care for children, a team of workers working in the schools in a joint evaluation programme, consultation provided for the schools, vocational counselling, testing, training, work adjustment and sheltered and competitive job placements in conjunction with state rehabilitation officers. In other words, Mr. Chairman, a community mental health programme, not a medically dominated mental health programme.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister will know, with immense relief, that this brings me very close to one or two final, short observations.

An hon. member: Not just the hon Minister.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. member says: "Not just the hon. Minister." I suppose he has a perfect right to say that and his words will be echoed by his colleagues.

What I have endeavoured to do, and the hon. Minister, in fact, may prove me wrong hereafter, is to outline the dilemma, not merely in the Ontario hospital system across the province, but in the entire mental health pattern. If that is not important—meriting two hours of this House's time—I do not know what is, particularly since the hon. Minister himself is on record as saying, and I quote: "Mental health is Ontario's number one health problem."

I, and the members of this party, will not begrudge the extra time it may take to make an analysis of that problem and the wrong-headedness which characterizes the present pattern and the present direction.

Mr. Chairman, I offer what I have offered in good faith; I have, in fact, tried to comprehend. I have visited the hospitals accordingly and I hope that the hon. Minister's response will be in good faith despite the fact that I am unequivocal in the criticism, because it is a criticism which derived from that analysis.

Mr. Chairman, the Ontario hospital system needs a massive reconstruction. The psychiatric wings cannot be considered an immutable fact; it would be a mistake to think so. The mental health services are in a sorry state. Thus far it has been a failure of understanding and a failure of will, and such self-defeating failure can no longer be tolerated. Attention must be paid and I am reminded in closing, Mr. Chairman, of a quote from Gisela Konopka, writing in the journal to which I had occasion to make previous reference, and she said on the occasion of the presidential address for the 1964 meeting of the American association of orthopsychiatrists:

Many years ago Zola called out his "J'accuse!" to make a nation aware of injustice and violation of the human rights of a single person. We social workers, psychologists, psychiatrists and all others in this vast field of mental health and social problems see such violations of the rights and dignities of thousands. We cannot and must not forsake or add to it. Our practice must consistently counteract this, and since our particular work brings those voiceless and powerless people to us, we take on the responsibility to call out for them the moving cry: "Attention must be paid."

Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House say: "J'accuse." The hon. Minister is starving the mental hospitals in the first place; he is watching staff contract so that proper treatment is not possible in the second; he is watching readmission rates soar because there is no after-care programme in the third; and he is watching a disembodied, as yet unintelligent, poorly co-ordinated mental health plan evolve in this province. A plan that is obsessed with the medical model at the expense of the community. I say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that it is time for a dramatic shift to community mental health, and preventive mental health.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

On vote 701:

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Has the hon. Minister any remarks?

Mr. Chairman: He has made his remarks.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): All the remarks of the hon. members of the Opposition were directed to the mental health vote. I shall wait to reply until we come to that vote.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a few remarks in regard to item number 4, that is, "Medical and other research services." I think our research services, according to page 54, are at $10,000. Can the hon. Minister give us any idea of just what that $10,000 is for and why it is so small?

It has been mentioned on a number of occasions how small our research work actually is. We in this province, and in this country, rank especially low. I think we spend about one-fifth per capita compared to what is spent in the United States; compared on a national basis. We, as Canadians, spend one-fifth per capita to what is spent in the United States.

I am quite willing to admit that a lot of the blame should lie with the government in Ottawa, regardless of what party has been in power in Ottawa. They have not spent nearly enough on medical research, but still the government here in this province has to face up to the fact that it has a constitutional responsibility for medical research and it certainly has not been facing up to it. Has the hon. Minister any remarks to make on why we do so poorly on medical research?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this item 4 on vote 701 cannot, by any manner of means, be considered the government contribution to research. This is a special item and it is badly named. This money is used for conducting studies at the present time. During the ensuing year I expect it will be used for the financing of the committee on the study of nurse education and related matters; that is the sort of thing for which this sum will be used. It will not be used for direct medical research in the scientific sense.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, under what item would you consider most of your research? I know that some comes up under mental health, but where would you consider that medical research could be discussed?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry, my attention was distracted, Mr. Chairman. Would the hon. member mind repeating his question?

Mr. Trotter: I would like to know where the hon. Minister would consider medical research to be discussed.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We could discuss it here.

Mr. Trotter: Well then, could the hon. Minister give us some idea of what the province does, or why we are so far behind? My question was this, that as a nation we spend one-fifth the amount per person in Canada than they do in the United States; and Ontario is similar, even as a province. I admit—as a province—we spend more on research than Prince Edward Island, but basically we are away behind. Can the hon. Minister give us some idea of what we do in this field?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Actually there is no specific item provided by the provincial government for scientific research. I have discussed this very thoroughly and very frequently. Unfortunately, the director of the medical research council for Canada died very recently. But I had discussed this with him on frequent occasions and he had always maintained that if the provincial governments provided the structures and the facilities, then the responsibility for providing the project money should lie with the federal government. This was always his policy and his philosophy. Now the province is doing this, and it is part of the special programme announced last October. For instance, there is a fairly substantial item or amount included in that money allocated for health sciences centres and teaching hospitals, either university hospitals or university affiliated hospitals which will be for the provision of research space, buildings and facilities and equipment. The province is taking responsibility for that. I would hope that the federal moneys then would all be available for the actual research projects.

Mr. Trotter: Is there much in the way of federal funds being used? I admit the federal government is poor on this, but what does it actually do?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Really, I cannot tell the hon. member what the total is. Usually the late Dr. Farquharson gave me a rundown on the total figures just about this time of the year but unfortunately, as I say, he died very recently and I did not get the report this year. I would be guessing and I am so uncertain of the amount that I would rather not hazard a guess.

Mr. Trotter: Again, still on the matter of research, could we switch over to item 37, the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation? I think we are spending $1,200,000 less this year. I think we have dropped an amount—let me see, this year it is $1,050,000, last year it was $1,200,000. Why would we drop there, because certainly cancer is still one of the major killers in the province?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, while it does not show here, this amount has been increased in the total amount that will be spent. As the hon. member will recall, last year we extended the insured services under the Ontario hospital services commission to provide radiotherapy and this will amount to something of the order of $500,000 if it is estimated for this year. This is not shown in here but it is included in the overall budget of the OHSC.

Actually we will end up the year by spending more on cancer, but the grant from this province is reduced somewhat because of the additional $500,000—partly paid for by the province, partly paid for by the federal government—which will be spent on services included in this vote until last year.

Mr. Trotter: Under this item, we have been under the impression that No. 37 had to do with research. The OHSC, we admit, is giving services, but my understanding was that this is meant for research alone.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, this, Mr. Chairman, has never been; this is research and treatment. Here again the basic research is financed by the federal government. A part of the research financed by the provincial grant is clinical research—that is, the research on patients—although the foundation has always told me that here in Ontario it has financed a good deal of basic research out of provincial and federal grants as well. But the total allocation to the foundation has always included certain outpatient services which are now paid as an insured benefit under OHSC.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I think the very fact that the hon. Minister is saying that there are different sources for research and that there are different organizations, shows that there really is not a great deal of co-ordination in research. I would suggest to him that if he looked to his sister province of Quebec, he would see that there is in Quebec a council of research set up to give co-ordination.

I am sure that the hon. Minister is as concerned as everyone would be in this province when he realizes that not only in Canada generally but also in Ontario more specifically, there is clearly a deficiency in funds in medical research. I would suggest some of the reason for that is because some of the American foundations have indicated that they are now no longer giving assistance to Canada and they are giving it to under-developed nations. I think that the danger is becoming very real now that this deficiency—and I am talking of the deficiency of grants from the federal government and from the various large wealthy foundations in the States—will not be made up. One of the problems, of course, is that with such a multiplicity of agencies concerned in medical research there can be overlapping in this.

I am looking at the list of organizations to which the hon. Minister gives grants. I know the old question is, "Which would you exclude?" I do not want to exclude any of them, but I want to get co-ordination with each of them. I suggest again that there is a lack of co-ordination of medical research and I think that this is implying serious consequences for health in the province of Ontario.

In the first place, in order to supply adequate health services for the province, there must, as is commonly recognized, be a tremendous expansion in medical education. I do not want to keep harping on this, in one sense, but I am going to—there is a need for a proper health programme throughout this province. I come back again to this ringing chapter by the Hall commission, which apparently has been ignored by the government.

I would suggest that it is difficult, in the first place, for teachers to teach properly if research is not made available to them. Research and teaching, if I could suggest this to the hon. Minister, who I suspect is a Presbyterian, are something like sin and confession. If you do not do the former, then you really have nothing to talk about in the latter.

In the second place, it is virtually impossible to attract teachers without the offer of extensive research funds and facilities. For example, I draw to the attention of the hon. Minister that the University of Toronto has built a new medical teaching and research building. I would like to hear from the hon. Minister, if I could, what the guarantee is of staff and funds for research. You have your building, but what about a guarantee of funds for staff and research?

Let me re-emphasize that I think in Ontario there is not an overall co-ordination in research in medicine. You have bodies like the Ontario cancer research and treatment foundation and the Ontario heart foundation, and they provide very valuable services in this field of research. But let us face it, they are severely handicapped by limited funds. Again, these come not only from the province but from the federal government as well as from these other American foundations.

They are also handicapped by their dual capacities of treatment as well as research. Of course, the Ontario research foundation is concerned with research in general and not medical research in particular. In Canada as a whole, there is a medical research council of Canada; in Quebec, there is a Quebec medical research council; in Ontario, there is no comparable organization.

I might just make some suggestions to you, sir. I think perhaps the hon. Minister of Health will recall that about four years ago I raised questions about the need, not only for co-ordination in medical research, but also for opportunities for PhDs to be able to work in research laboratories, to give greater recognition to those men, who if they come through with research, may open up the doors of many of our hospitals with discoveries that may enable people to walk with new health. We think particularly of Banting and Best, in the past. These are some recommendations and programmes.

I think that we should be giving greatly expanded support to these bodies because of the fact, and I am talking of the research bodies, that they may give the answer to some of the crowding of institutions. They may be able to give the key that will open the door to good health for thousands of our people. I think particularly of the national cancer institute and the other Canadian institutions which specifically carry on research activities. I think that these funds, and I am referring to the provincial government in connection with funds, should be earmarked for Ontario and for research.

The prime difficulty in this suggestion is that research is a long-term and a group matter. Funds must be guaranteed over a long period of time, say, five to ten years. I remember talking to the hon. Minister about this, I think it was about four years ago, and he talked about the fact of government responsibilities and of public funds. But I think he would agree with me that with research, the scientist has to have a feeling that he can get his equipment and can take a length of time and not worry about coming to the government every year to see if he can get an appropriation of funds.

I talked previously about a world-famous scientist. He had worked in Montreal at the centre of neurology; a Dr. Rupelski, who died some time ago. He had given me the liberty to speak about some of his problems in getting research grants. This man was examining, as I understand it, brain cells—and I am getting out of my depth here in this—but he was doing pure research. He might have been able, if he had got certain discoveries, to arrive at an answer that would do away with psychiatrists' couches. If I can be permitted a personal touch, there was a write-up in the paper saying that, if he was successful, psychiatrists' couches would no longer be needed. I think this caused a great deal of controversy in the papers; to suggest that perhaps some of the reasons for mental illness are due to the hormones, or whatever it is, that are inside a person rather than the emotions.

However, it just shows the importance of a man being able to work on this. I was astonished at the difficulty that this rather quiet and gentle man had, in going through a great deal of red tape, in order to get a laboratory set up. But he was very persistent and very persuasive, and apparently he did get the necessary funds to continue. I think he was a great man, and may I say again, while I am talking about this, that our research scientists—many of them—are not given enough recognition. I would like to see some kind of recognition by government to these men who are dedicating themselves to the health of our nation. I have said before that I would like to see Ontario known for its scientists, as it has been in the past, in medical research. Instead of giving medals to generals and so on, I would much prefer to see recognition given to men in research.

Let me say that the prevalent view—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, may I, if the hon. member has reached what I hope is a natural break in his remarks, interrupt the proceedings of the committee and perhaps we could resume.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the House revert to introduction of bills?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

TORONTO ELECTRIC COMMISSIONERS AND LOCAL NO. 1, CANADIAN UNION OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting a certain dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will give a very brief explanation of this bill. For some time now, the government, through the offices of The Department of Labour, has been attempting to conciliate the labour dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local 1 of the Canadian union of public employees. Because of the implications of a strike in this essential public utility, I have been personally interested and concerned in negotiations as they have taken place.

At four o'clock this afternoon I was informed that the negotiations between the two parties had broken down completely and that there is no hope of a settlement before the strike deadline, set for 12 midnight, Thursday, June 10, 1965. In other words, I am informed that the strike will proceed at midnight, tomorrow night.

Now, sir, any threat to the power supply of the Toronto area will affect the lives of every resident and will lead to an emergency situation. Because of the fundamental importance of electric power to the city and the citizens, the government of Ontario cannot allow this situation to arise.

While compulsory arbitration is distasteful to the government, to labour unions and to management, the public interest is paramount. The government, therefore, has decided that it is in the public interest that a bill be introduced in this House to settle some 54 outstanding issues that exist between the two parties, by compulsory arbitration.

This bill establishes a three-man arbitration board, to be so constituted: One representative from the union, one representative from management and a chairman to be chosen by the two representatives.

I want to make it very clear that the decision to institute a compulsory arbitration procedure in this dispute arises solely because of the implications of a strike in an essential public utility and because there is absolutely no hope that the two parties can be brought together under the normal conciliation process.

I should also like to make it absolutely clear that this bill applies only to this dispute and applies only to the parties who are involved in this dispute.

The bill will be given second reading and the normal procedure through the House tomorrow, and I ask the Opposition parties if they would consent to this procedure we are following in order that the bill may be before you prior to it being discussed here some time during tomorrow's proceedings.

I can only reiterate, sir, that electric power is so basic to our lives that the threat to every resident posed by even the possibility of disruption cannot be contemplated, even though compulsory arbitration, as a principle, is not accepted by this government.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I may say that it comes as a very real shock to us when we hear the words "compulsory arbitration" used by this government. It would appear to me that it is a situation of us moving from crisis to crisis in our labour relations. We have heard this term used with all the abhorrence that is attached to it and the emasculation of collective bargaining, which we stated even yesterday to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), when you bring in compulsory arbitration. We have seen it with the Ontario Hydro and we have seen it with hospitals.

Let me say that even yesterday we were trying to stop the extension of compulsory arbitration—yea, even to the cleaning women in police stations—and we are concerned that the reaching tentacles of compulsory arbitration will spread throughout the working people of this province. We have seen a corrosion taking place in the basic rights of the people; we have seen a steady nibbling taking place. This indicates to us, because there has been crisis after crisis and compulsory arbitration has been suggested to us and demanded of us, that there is almost a jungle-like law in connection with labour relations. We have not clearly identified yet what the principles are of labour relations in this great industrial province, especially when we think of other areas. We look at Norway, Sweden, West Germany and other areas where there seems to have developed a harmonious relationship and where strikes are not a usual occurrence, particularly in connection with essential public services.

It is apparent, I think, to everyone in the House, that there has to be a revamping, a revising, a new approach and a move into the twentieth century in connection with our labour relations.

It is at the eleventh hour that once again we hear that all negotiations have broken down, and we are asked to make a decision that the public welfare of the people is going to be completely cut off if we do not agree with compulsory arbitration. We have not had a chance to look through this bill closely. Indeed, we do not know if the union itself has suggested that this will not be a complete deterioration of all services, and that they are prepared to move in and insert an emergency measure, such as for hospitals and the sick and nursing, and so on. As yet we do not know that situation, and because of that we wish to reserve some judgment on this.

Let me say that if the situation is such whereby the whole of this great Metropolitan Toronto is going to be paralyzed as of tomorrow night; whereby children are going to be affected from the point of view of milk and many other necessities; whereby industry is going to be crippled and closed down; whereby hospitals and nursing homes and subways are going to be shut down and everything else, then there is no question that we would support this move on the part of the government. But we support it with the greatest of reluctance, because—and let me re-emphasize—we are concerned with the rights of working people.

It comes to a point where a partial government is saying: "We will emasculate your collective bargaining rights; we will move in with compulsory arbitration."

As far as we are concerned, we will support this move only on condition that we are satisfied that the alternative is going to imperil not only this great city, but also the people who live in it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the bill, the hon. Prime Minister stated that labour, management and the government are opposed to compulsory arbitration.

At this point I want to say only one thing, and the burden of my remarks will be made appropriately on second reading. But something is sadly wrong when the Prime Minister of a province can rise and say that his government, labour and management are opposed to something, and yet with increasing frequency he does what he is opposed to.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): In the public interest!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. gentleman interjects and says: "In the public interest." Quite true, Mr. Speaker. The public interest is of paramount consideration, but there is something wrong if the public interest has to be guarded by doing something wrong, which you yourself condemn!

Maybe the hon. member for Renfrew South does not condemn it, but the government does, and labour does and management does.

I think it is time that this House—perhaps within the context of this bill and perhaps even better, in the quieter context when the heat is not on in this specific issue—finally comes to grips with issue; finally finds the solution to this problem instead of evading it.

We do not have a solution. When faced with the same problem two years ago, the government took the easy way out with compulsory arbitration. They have done nothing in the intervening years except move in the direction of imposing compulsory arbitration across the whole board with the hospitals.

And now we come, with all the sins of omission, to the refusal and the failure to find an alternative solution. Once again, we are doing something and professing to be unhappy about doing it.

I think that on the second reading of this bill tomorrow, this House—with seriousness instead of the cheap interjections that we have this afternoon—should face up to the problem of reconciling principles and actions, instead of professing principles and then so acting that you deny them.

Clerk of the House: House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 701:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I had been talking about the need for a more co-ordinated approach with respect to research. Let me say that the prevalent view—especially the view of this government—that funds for research is a matter of charity, must be revised to see that research allocation of positive grants as investments, providing tremendous benefits to medical treatment and medical education, is enshrined in our approach.

I think that a special Ontario organization should be set up, comparable to that in Quebec, to co-ordinate medical research and the various research bodies now existing in Ontario, as well as to project long-term needs and projects in the field of medical research. This organization would work in close conjunction with the universities.

The third point I want to make is that an intensive staff recruitment programme should be begun by offering incentives to Canadian doctors and medical research personnel now practising abroad, to return to Canada. This is basically a question of money, but it must not be viewed in limited terms, but rather in the broad perspective of investment in the health of this province. I would ask the hon. Minister to reply to those suggestions.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, the reason that we do not have an Ontario research council is that it would cause duplication and overlapping. This is a programme from which Quebec has opted out I understand, and they have set up their own organization. But here in Ontario, as in all other provinces, all of our projects are screened by the Dominion medical research council—I believe that is the proper name—and all of the projects are submitted through our department to this council and to the national health advisory council on research. All the projects are screened by them.

Ontario is well represented on this council and, therefore, the needs and any other matters peculiar to Ontario would be thoroughly looked after by them.

But here again is another matter I have discussed with the late director of the medical research council, and he was in complete agreement with us. I believe he had something to do with advising us in this matter some time ago, perhaps before my time, because it has only been discussed between us as two persons since that time.

I must emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that his opinion—and I regarded it very highly indeed, because I knew of no man better qualified to give an opinion on this matter than the late director of the medical research council—was that the province should provide the buildings and the equipment, and that the federal government should take responsibility for the cost of maintaining the projects.

I would like to say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, that we wholeheartedly agree with his proposition that research money should be taken off the year-by-year allocation. Very few people will be encouraged to go into research that might be of long duration on a system of that kind, and we have asked for this many times and we continue to press for this.

I would also say to the hon. leader that, in keeping with further advice given to me by the late Dr. Farquharson, we are watching very carefully the effect of the withdrawal of moneys that have been available to Canadian researchers and Ontario researchers from the national health institutes of the United States and other bodies which are withdrawing their support of Canadian-based projects now. We are watching the effect that that might have and it may well be that I would be placed in a position of recommending to our government that we need to involve ourselves in at least partial financing of actual research projects. But, in the meantime, we believe that we can best serve the cause by providing capital construction funds and funds for facilities.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. Minister's reply to this. I raised this question and I am trying to get an answer from him. With all the grants that you do give, and looking at the mental health grant, for example, I presume they would be doing some sort of statistical tabulation, or some sort of research.

It seems to me, if I recall, that that grant was suddenly pulled out or there might have been another one. I remember a debate about three years ago where, because of a rather outspoken remark by the director of one of these associations—I thought it was the mental health association—the former Prime Minister, Mr. Frost, suggested that he might have objected to the remarks that were being made because he was moving into a decision to be made politically, but it was the decision of this government that you suddenly cut this grant.

I can remember another debate I had with the hon. Minister of Health in which I was asking what was he giving these funds for, and for what kind of projects. The hon.

Minister told me, if I am correct on this, that he gives them just on general principles and that they are worthy organizations. I was suggesting that it should be clarified what kind of projects were actually being done. Because of the hon. Minister's answer on this, and I am recalling an answer and I may have been unfair, I had the general idea that the government gives certain funds year after year traditionally and it is very hard to refuse some of these funds after this had been established.

I do not know how many, but there are something like 35 organizations that you are giving funds to and I would expect that these organizations are doing some kind of statistical research in the areas in which they are working. It would seem to me that in Ottawa they are organizing the co-ordination of research in this field. That is my first point. In other words, I just take issue, as a layman, with the fact that from Ottawa they can co-ordinate all the research of Ontario organizations and I think there could be a place for Ontario co-ordinating this itself, as a first layer to the Ottawa national group.

My second point is that I have talked to a number of research scientists and they have a feeling that the research council in Ottawa, while it is made up of thoroughly able and reputable men, is made up of men who are not active in scientific research. In the research council in the US, a scientist who has actually been in the field joins the research council for a period of two years. Because he has been in the field of research himself—he is not a dean of a medical school or something else—when he walks into these laboratories he can sense and assess whether this should be given priority. He is something like a general who goes out into the field and because he has been in the trenches, he is more aware of what the situation is when he comes back again.

I suggest that there may be within the council men who actually are not working in the laboratory and therefore they are not as well able to assess the priority of the capabilities of the research. Therefore, perhaps the priorities which are given to certain research may be on the basis more of the PR attitude on the part of the man in charge of the laboratory, or else the priority is from the point of view of public interest.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I cannot name the members of the federal research advisory council, but from the few whom I do know I can say without equivocation they have been—and some of them still are—actively engaged in the research field.

There is no doubt it would be foolish of me to ignore the fact that many scientists do apply for budgets or for project funds and they are not granted. This is usually on the basis of their having been very thoroughly screened. If we set up a council here to look after them again, we would only be duplicating the work that is done; or if we looked at them primarily before submitting them, we would only be duplicating the work that will be done by the federal government, which includes within it personnel, Ontario scientists and Ontario clinicians, people skilled in the field.

Then we would also be placed in the position of probably turning down a project that might well find merit in the eyes of the federal council, and I would be loath to do that. I would like to feel that every project submitted to us—although the applications come to us—would have every possible consideration. Really, Mr. Chairman, I can see no good flowing from the establishment of another council.

There was something else that the hon. member asked in a previous question about a programme to repatriate Canadian researchers or scientists who are now doing work in the United States, and I am told that this is being done. I know for a fact it is being done by some of the universities and they are meeting with quite remarkable success in this matter, because of an apparent awakening and an upsurge of interest in research in Ontario and in Canada which I hope will continue to grow.

The grants that are involved in most of these items are not for research. Indeed, the grants for the alcoholism and addiction research and treatment foundation, the cancer research and treatment foundation, and one other—I believe the Banting and Best research fund, which has been in our budget for many, many years—are the only items within this whole range of grants that are mainly for research. The projects of the Banting and Best research fund would all be under the direction of the university and I have no doubt that they have some well-established research advisory committee or research screening group. The cancer foundation and the addiction research foundation both have their research advisory bodies, set up by statutes of this Legislature.

There is one further item here dealing with the Ontario mental health research foundation. The amount is $250,000, which the province provides. This is provided for our own foundation, whose duty is to co-ordinate all research efforts in Ontario in the field of mental health. This is the provincial share.

Those groups also have access to federal budgets, and in their case, the projects are screened here at the provincial level by the research advisory group of the mental health foundation, and then go on to the federal government for further examination. Those that are turned down by the federal government, sometimes are brought back to our Ontario foundation and may well find merit again in the eyes of the committee and be granted here, when they had been rejected by the federal government.

In the main, these grants provided here are not for research. We spoke about the one that was cut; I have to say, sir, with great respect, it was not cut. We did ask the health league of Canada to use this money for adults for immunization against poliomyelitis and they are still using it, because we find a great number of our adults still have not availed themselves of the opportunity to be immunized against this disease.

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Chairman, while we are talking on this vote about research, I wonder if I might put into the record some feelings which I know a lot of the other hon. members of this House will share with me. There was held today, a memorial service for the man who, as the hon. Minister of Health has already said, was probably one of the outstanding physicians in Canada in this field, Dr. Ray F. Farquharson, who for many years headed the medical research council of Canada. In fact, his report brought about the founding of this council. He died last Tuesday, and I think that without itemizing the many contributions that he made to Canadian medicine, many of us who knew him know that he was an outstanding gentleman, an outstanding scholar and a man of great compassion.

While he headed this medical research council, he was not only an administrator, but also—as the hon. leader of the Opposition asked for—a man actually in the research field. Dr. Farquharson made great contributions in the field of calcium metabolism, anaemia, pigment metabolism and many other associated endocrine diseases, and I think that all of us would want to remember him, as we talk about medical research here, and the great contribution that he made.

Now, other men of his calibre are still on that council from the city of Toronto. I think of one, Dr. K. J. R. Wightman, who also is an outstanding physician and an outstanding man in research.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, we are not sitting tonight, so I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will go back into committee of the whole House to deal with Bill 136; and I will arrange an appropriate time to deal with this bill that has been introduced, I will give ample notice of when that will come. I think we might safely say it will not be before the afternoon sitting.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 10, 1965

Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 10, 1965

Report, standing committee on public accounts, Mr. McKeough	3947
Final report, select committee on consumer credit, Mr. Price	3947
Presenting reports, Mr. Yaremko	3948
Medical services insurance, bill respecting, in committee, continued	3948
Recess, 12.30 o'clock	3964

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome as guests to the Legislature today, in the west gallery, students from Bishop Townsend public school, London.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West) begs leave to present the report of the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the final report of the select committee on consumer credit.

As chairman of the select committee on consumer credit, I should like to express my thanks to the committee members for their co-operation. The opportunity of working with them on this important study has been a privilege.

The duties of any select committee are similar to those of a Royal commission, but carried out less formally. I am sure we in this House all acknowledge the contribution made by a select committee to our parliamentary system.

I do not intend today to make more than a few remarks on behalf of the committee and to summarize the recommendations of the committee contained in the report. Copies of the final report will be made available immediately to the hon. leaders of the Opposition parties and copies of the recommendations will be made available and distributed to the members of the committee and the members of the press.

During the last session of the Legislature the committee presented its interim report. Now, having completed our inquiry, we place before you the final and comprehensive report containing recommendations for your careful examination.

In our report on this complex subject, we have refrained as much as possible from any reference to legislative detail. We have pursued our investigation into consumer credit matters objectively and without regard to party politics. The secret of success of select committees, which are so much a part of our democratic process, is largely their freedom from party consideration.

A printed copy of the consumer credit report will be sent to all hon. members of the Legislature during the summer. We shall all have an opportunity of participating in the debate on the report at the next session of the Legislature.

All that remains for me to say at this time is simply that a number of recommendations have been made in the report which we feel merit your consideration in the public interest. The report on consumer credit contains 18 recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) why the provincial graduate fellowship cheques are being held up until June 30?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member understands that I had very little time to get this information this morning. It was not possible. I will be very glad to answer the question tomorrow morning.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett), I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) a question in regard to the press release this morning in the Globe and Mail. In view of the unworkable features in the police officers having to stop motorists to give them a summons under the present provincial point system, would the hon. Minister tell the House what steps are being taken to change this system?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, any change in the present system would seriously hamper the effectiveness of the demerit point system, which is considered by the department and enforcement agencies as the best method yet devised to isolate and take remedial action against a driver who abuses the privileges of operating a motor vehicle.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary) begs leave to present to the House the following reports:

1. Fourteenth annual report of the alcoholism and drug addiction research foundation, for the year ending December 31, 1964.

2. Ontario hospital services commission annual report for 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The forty-seventh order, committee of the whole House; Mr. A. W. Downer in the chair.

MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE (continued)

Section 15 agreed to.

On section 16:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): We come back again in section 16 to another phase of the problem of waiting periods and conditions and so on. We had the astounding revelation yesterday that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) envisaged the possibility that there would be discriminatory rates on the basis of the health of a person. In addition to that, we have enrolment periods and, even under the enrolment periods, we have waiting periods and an undisclosed possibility of additional conditions which the hon. Minister never did explain yesterday. Now we come to the same matter in a somewhat different phase. This section sets forth the conditions under which a person could be accepted for a standard contract or a standard co-insurance contract in the event that he did not apply during the enrolment period.

Now we see, of course, that he will have a three-month waiting period imposed on him if he does not subscribe during an open enrolment period. It is our argument, Mr. Chairman, that this is really doing it up a little too brown for the insurance companies. They have all sorts of different ways of protecting themselves against adverse selection under the bill as it now stands. The public interest is hardly considered here at all. The needs of people for medical insurance are hardly considered. We believe that the present section 16 should be relaxed. I may say that we object to subsection 2 of it, just as we objected to clause B of subsection 3 of section 14 regarding the waiting period with respect to pregnancy. However, I will not open up that discussion again, Mr. Chairman. I believe that matter was settled by a previous vote and I have no doubt that you would step in if I tried to raise it now. I mention it, however, to indicate that our failure to move an amendment relating to that point arises only from our realization of your acute appreciation of the rules, and not because we think the subsection should be there. We believe that it should be struck out.

However, there is another phase of subsection 1 where we think some little consideration can be given to the consumer—the person who wants medical care insurance, as distinct from the person who is selling it. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subsection 1 of section 16 be amended by striking out the words "three months" in the sixth and seventh lines, and substituting the words "one month."

Mr. Chairman, the words "three months" appear at the end of the second last line and at the beginning of the last line. It is simply a matter of changing those words "three months" to the words "one month," so that, in effect, what it will say is that a person who applies will be entitled to receive a contract which will be effective one month after the date of application and payment of fee.

Unfortunately, even if our amendment carries, the person will still be subject to all the other limitations and restrictions which are set forth and implied in this bill, but at least we think that the three-month restriction should be reduced to one month.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bryden moves:

That subsection 1 of section 16 be amended by striking out the words "three months" in the sixth and seventh lines, and substituting the words "one month."

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on behalf of this motion. This bill has all kinds of different qualifications. I was going to move such an amendment myself, and I am very glad to endorse the amendment of the hon. member for Woodbine.

If you look at section 14, subsection 2, you see that for people who have become 21, are residents and an open enrolment period has expired, the waiting period is only one month. Then in this section it becomes three months. I fail to see why we have all these variations and restrictions. It will take a Philadelphia lawyer, let alone any other kind of lawyer, to understand all of this. It seems as though we are barrelling steadily around the whole of the medical insurance coverage to make it more difficult for people to apply. Once again, I want to emphasize that this bill is for the advantage and for the convenience of the carriers, and disregards the health needs of the people.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment. I think it is reasonable, and I do not think that in any way, shape or form, we should leave any reason for a person to be caught with a high medical bill, and certainly if there is a three-month waiting period a person can be left with a doctor's bill that will set him back in wages for perhaps years.

I do not feel that there should be any waiting period at all, and that once a person puts his money on the line, he should be covered in continuity so that he has no fear of having doctor bills pile up, and we know what doctor bills amount to in these days. I think that the hon. member for Woodbine has been reasonable in suggesting a one-month period. Certainly there will have to be some reason for us to establish the administrative procedure such as filing, and getting things in line.

When the high pressure car insurance salesmen go out to get a person's signature on the line, one of the pressures they use is: "You sign this and you are covered from the time you put your signature on this piece of paper." But they invariably find, if this becomes a legal case, that there is a 24-hour space in between. But they do use this argument, and they try to sell their car insurance with this kind of reasoning. If this kind of reasoning is accepted, then the health of people and their medical bills should be looked after immediately.

I am afraid that if we go along with these waiting periods there will be a lot of chaos. A lot of people just do not know the regulations. I do not care what kind of an educational job the government tries to do in regard to insurance medical coverage, we are not going to be able to teach people exactly what they should do, and there are going to be a lot of people confused and a lot of them left with doctor bills.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister what the OMA schedule provides for confinement, including delivery, of a child?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I really could not tell you, but I think it is $100 for a general practitioner and $125 or $150 for a specialist. I am out of touch with present schedules as I am not practising at the present time.

Mr. Sopha: It strikes me that we are speaking here about a very moderate amount of money. When these limitations are put in in at least two places in the Act in respect of pregnancy, it leads me to—

Mr. Chairman: We have already settled this question.

Mr. Sopha: This section deals with pregnancy. It uses the words: "If the costs of such service arise from pregnancy, or resulting childbirth or miscarriage."

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it is just a repetition of what was in the other section. It has already been dealt with, I submit.

Mr. Chairman: We have already dealt with this in section 14.

Mr. Sopha: Are you ruling me out of order on the clause-by-clause study?

Mr. Chairman: I am ruling you out of order on this one.

Mr. Sopha: My democratic rights are being abrogated, then.

Mr. Chairman: We dealt with it on section 14, and you are out of order.

Mr. Sopha: I say to you that this is tyranny.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I say that the section is different—it refers to mid-section, section 16, to five months. In section 14, which you say we have passed on, it refers to eight months, and I feel that my hon. colleague is showing that there is a difference in this by referring to five months in one, and eight months in the other.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have to contradict the hon. member since it refers to five months, in addition to the three months' waiting period which is laid down, bringing it to a total of eight months for the pregnancy.

Mr. Sopha: Why did they write the section, if it is the same thing? My protest is simply this: I contend to the committee of the whole, with the greatest respect, that if the bill referred to is subject 20 times, a member of this House would still be allowed in a clause-by-clause study to make his representation in respect of that section.

Now, I wanted to say in respect of the three-month waiting period, that a quotation from a columnist—I think it is Needham, in this morning's Globe and Mail—is very apt, when he says:

The strong will do what they will, the weak will suffer what they must.

Certainly the person who has a meagre income and is without means, under this section is discriminated against by this government, in that he has to wait three months for the benefits. In respect of the references to pregnancy, I sometimes wonder if the draftsmen of this legislation know anything about the begetting of children and their importance, in their attitude toward them in this bill. Let me say that this party is for pregnancy, first, last and always. We hope we have more of them.

Surely the government has read the Hall report. The hon. Minister keeps chastising us in that we have not—according to him—read this bill. Many of us here have read the Hall report. I take it to be a cardinal principle that we are concerned in this country with making available medical services to our people, and you cannot make medical services available if you have a three-month waiting period. In addition to that, you tack on a five-month waiting period by way of discrimination against women who are pregnant. That is why we so heartily endorse this amendment to this bill.

We are not concerned with a sick person who has not got the means, and who is more likely to be sick than the person of the low income group. We are not concerned about the wealthy. They get good nutrition, they eat the right food. They take vitamin pills. They have access to the best doctors. They are inclined to be healthy and well and they do not need access to the benefit conferred by a medical insurance contract.

It is the poor, those in low income categories who have not got access. Rather than approach it from the point of view that we will do everything we can to make available as speedily as possible medical care to them, on the contrary, in this section the government says, "No, if your premiums have lapsed, your subscription rate has not been paid, then you will be penalized by having to wait another three months." I ask you, Mr. Chairman, is that justice? Is that equity to a large number of our citizens? Does that expose a willingness on the part of this government to approach the problem from a rational point of view?

I suggest to you, sir, with the greatest respect, that the amendment should be carried and the government damned for its obsequiousness to the efficient running of insurance companies and their convenience of issuing their contracts.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, may I take but a moment to remind the hon. Minister that in that country where the mother of parliaments operates—the British Isles—not only is a child entitled to free service an hour or even a minute after he is born, but they also will look after you immediately if you visit that land. May I ask the hon. Minister if we will—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not any more. There is a three-month waiting period.

Mr. Whicher: Anyway, there is no three-month waiting period for inhabitants of that country, as you are asking us to do here.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of the amendment—

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, I thought the hon. Minister was going to rise.

I would like to get, if we could, clarification from the hon. Minister as to why this is a five-month period. The hon. Minister was replying on this, but I did not catch it. Five plus three equals eight. Perhaps I could ask again, sir; I also did not get an answer.

Assuming that there is a mother who has a premature child, can you always define what a premature child is? I am getting back again to this eight-month pregnancy. I am thinking that if someone comes into the hospital and says that she became pregnant in January, and there is some debate about this situation and she has a child seven months later, she will argue that it is a premature child. Then we have the insurance companies coming down—and I think we all admit that they do on occasion—to suggest, "She was pregnant in December, therefore she has got to pay the premiums herself." How can we substantiate this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is the time or the place to get into obstetrical practice. It is not always possible to tell the exact date of conception and it is not always possible to tell the exact period of gestation. By and large, the average practitioner can tell if a baby is a seven-month baby or older. However, Mr. Chairman, I have already gone into all the arguments relative to the eight-month waiting period. It is a period that is a standard provision in all insurance contracts at the present time.

My hon. friend from Wentworth knows perfectly well that it was written into the hon. members' contract—a contract with one of the largest non-profit companies. There was an eight-month waiting period for pregnancy, even in a group contract. Every one of the members who is covered by the contract that covers us as member of this Legislature, if he has read his contract, will know that, and this is a non-profit corporation.

My hon. friend speaks of the co-operatives, and, in many of their contracts, I believe, it is a ten-month waiting period. This is to make certain that every possibility is covered for the insurance carrier in such cases. But we have taken the eight-month period, to take into consideration the possible premature child.

The three-month waiting period, vis-à-vis the one-month I will accept as a good idea. But, Mr. Chairman, and my hon. friends, this is a matter of cost. If we cut this down to a no waiting period or a one-month waiting period, the cost will automatically go up, and all of you have bombarded me with your beliefs, and they are well founded perhaps in your minds, that the cost is now already too high. This has been an accepted provision in the hospital insurance plan, ever since it came into operation here, sir. There is a three-month waiting period, and every one of us is aware of this.

Occasionally it causes trouble and I think every member is also aware that where there have been questionable, borderline cases, or where there is reason at all to believe that a decision may be made in favour of the subscriber, something has been done, by putting the case before the council of the commission which is charged with the responsibility of dealing with such matters.

For my hon. friend, the hon. leader of the Opposition, to compare this with section 14, of course, is quite wrong. The person who reaches the age of 21 and moves from the family contract to a self-supported contract, does not have any waiting period. He is immediately covered, and he is immediately covered without waiting period because he has already gone through the waiting period, having been covered by the family coverage, Mr. Chairman.

In the case of the new resident coming into our province, he must wait 90 days to establish residency. He actually, therefore, has gone through the waiting period. In many cases he would want to be insured as soon as he came into our province, but the law says that he is not a resident and this only applies to residents.

So, in both of these cases, they have gone through the waiting period.

The waiting period of three months, I again would point out to you, has nothing to do with justice or equity. It is a matter of economics. If you want us to put the cost up, we could cover these persons from the very time they are registered—

Mr. Bryden: We want you to get a proper plan.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: —then this is what it amounts to. We believe that it is wiser, and we believe also that it is an incentive, for the people to come in during open enrolment periods when they would not have to undergo the waiting period that is required if they come in outside of open enrolment periods.

Mr. Sopha: To be a Liberal means that one cannot be impressed with the statement: "It is an acceptable practice"—especially when a Liberal sees innovation as improvement. It strikes me that I would be willing to bear the additional cost involved in giving immediate care for pregnant people, if I could be assured that all of those people under section 7 would be so policed that those who do not deserve to be subsidized would not get subsidies. But I know I am going to be back here next year complaining about groups of seasonal workers who are milking this fund. In that regard, I am reminded of the fact that the great architect of social welfare in this country, William Lyon Mackenzie King, initiated—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if I heard the hon. member correctly—

Mr. Sopha: Just a moment, the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Did the hon. member say "the great architect of social welfare"?

Mr. Sopha: —can quarrel with my statement later. The great architect of social welfare, William Lyon Mackenzie King, initiated after the war the programme of family allowances, whereby we pay hundreds of millions of dollars of our tax money toward helping families through family allowances. We do that every year; we slice up part of the tax pie and then pay it to families for their children. Accordingly, since I do that with my taxes and I do it gladly to ensure that children, especially in large families, will receive those things which they ought to receive, I am more than happy in respect of pregnancy to see that expectant mothers get good health care and the children get a start in life by having the supervision of qualified medical people to ensure that start.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, every time I look at each of these sections, I see a door open that any horse could romp through, indeed a whole herd of them could. I am looking at section 2:

Such service arising from pregnancy or resulting from childbirth or miscarriage or conditions that result directly or indirectly therefrom.

Now I am not a lawyer, but I have learned colleagues who are lawyers and I can just see how they could use this section to open up a whole area. Some poor woman who has a miscarriage and suffers ill health because of it—a whole variety of things—and then has a lawyer coming in and saying: "Look, you did not pay up three months ahead of time," or whatever your technical barrier is, "therefore we are not responsible for looking after you from here on in." Or I could see a situation of a child being born because of an early childbirth.

Let me say to you, sir, that you must be aware we have mortalities in childbirth; that there are dangers to women who give birth to children; that there are children born with defects, unfortunately, and I would hope there would not be loopholes such as this: "or conditions that result directly or indirectly therefrom."

Would you tell us how closed you have made that condition? Would you define it for us? Or is this, again, a great, big wide-open escape for anyone to be incurring expenses because they did not meet your technicality of three months or five months?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, as I explained yesterday, there are certain complications of pregnancy which can be fatal and troublesome to patients and naturally, very costly to them. These are the exceptions which will be covered by regulation and payment for them will be provided. I think I can set the minds of the hon. members at rest insofar as the children born are concerned whether it be from early or late pregnancies, whether the mother be covered for her pregnancy or not. The child will be eligible for coverage from the moment it is born.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think—to be fair—that all of us can admit that William Lyon MacKenzie King is entitled to the major share of the credit for the fact that we still have no health insurance plan in Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: The Liberal Party included that concept in its platform in 1919 and, according to MacGregor Dawson's authoritative biography, Mackenzie King wrote that section of the programme. He was in power for about 25 of the succeeding 30 years. He spent those 25 years preventing the people of Canada from getting national health insurance, and his successors have carried on in that noble tradition.

As a result, Mr. Chairman, we are reduced now to fight to try to get minor improvements in a totally inadequate bill. That is the problem we are up against.

The hon. Minister made the point, in replying to the representations made from this side with respect to my amendment and other matters relating to the clause, that he was concerned about the cost of medical care insurance. Well, let us face it, the reason the costs are going to be high—and may even be higher if we try to get reasonable consideration for all of the people—is because of the basic type of plan he has.

As long as we have a phony voluntary plan under private insurance companies the cost is going to be high. There are bound to be anomalies. People are going to be faced with waiting periods, they are going to get inadequate coverage, there are going to be restrictions on their coverage, limitations and so on. This is inevitable in the nature of the beast, and I use the word advisedly, that the hon. Minister has put before us.

However, recognizing all that, and recognizing that to get a measure of equity into the bill is going to result in some increase in costs, we on this side have chosen what we think is a less objectionable principle. We will run the risk of somewhat higher costs in order to get equity. We believe in equity first and foremost. It is limited equity within a totally inequitable situation, but at least it is some measure of equity. Equals will be treated equally if our amendment is adopted.

So I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister should not have the crust to talk any more about the possibility of increasing costs when he has brought in a bill which is designed to maximize costs so that profits of insurance companies and incomes of doctors will be maximized. This is the kind of bill he has before us. Let us deal with it on the limited, inadequate basis to which we are inevitably reduced at this time, by at least trying to make the thing as fair as possible for all the people of the province.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member has made a very valid point. To show you the type of thing that can happen in respect to the interpretation of these words "that result directly or indirectly therefrom," I know of a case where a young man—professional man—paid a premium into a health insurance plan for a number of years and then had a newborn baby that had something wrong with its feet. I am told it is quite common; the bones in the feet at birth are not exactly what they should be and this requires corrective treatment—that I do not pretend to understand—which cost $10 each, and the baby has to have one over a period of several weeks.

He applied to the carrier to pay for these and the carrier came back at him and said: "We don't pay for this because if you look at your contract, it says that we pay for sickness or accident, and this is neither sickness nor accident, because the condition was present at birth." The individual had not even read the contract, but he assumed that what he had bought was medical care coverage. He discovered that he had not bought exactly that, he had only bought a specialized form of medical care coverage; that is, one to cover the incidents of living—not the totality of the human organism—in society and the proneness to accidents and illness.

Now, similarly, I point out to my hon. leader that he raised a very good point because many women, I have no idea how many, suffer from what is called post-partum psychosis as a result of pregnancy. Now I only use the term because one runs across this in the law where women unfortunately, after giving birth to a child, indulge themselves in violence; sometimes directed at their other children, sometimes directed at themselves.

A woman conceivably could be ill with post-partum psychosis for a number of months, but if she got expensive psychiatric treatment the insurance company—the carrier—would be perfectly at liberty to reply to a request for payment by saying that the condition, the costs of the service, arose directly or indirectly from pregnancy; then this family would be faced with the very expensive psychiatric care that would be required in this case.

It is but another example of the unintelligent approach that is inherent in this bill. I must say that I have come to the conclusion that the Scotsman who pilots it through the House has now got his back up in such a way—over the past two or three days—that he confuses flexibility and good judgment and willingness to accept suggestions that are put forward in good faith with a sign of weakness. And that silly matter yesterday, that they would not give in on the question of class, that was the epitome of the ridiculous. But he will not give in on anything because he feels if he changes a comma in the statute it will be a confession of weakness. In the meantime—

Mr. Bryden: The insurance companies will fix him.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. In the meantime, the insurance companies are sitting in the background, maybe some of them are here to watch his performance, and clapping their hands. That is our boy that is piloting this through; we have a champion on the floor of the Legislature. It has come to the point, I must say, that we are going to continue to talk. I have got an amendment ready for the next section. I advise you, we are going to continue to put these things across, because it is to our advantage that we get them in the record. We can go on the hustings and say, in respect of this bill, this is what we said. When the people come into my office and say, look, I paid the premium for a year, and I have got no coverage, I will just get my speech out and I will say here is what I said in respect to that child you just had; I hope the baby is well, even if you have to pay.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the hon. member for Sudbury and the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine made me feel that the temporary coalition, at least on this half of this side of the House, was a little bit strained this morning, and I hope we get back into that realm of opposition on this particular item.

In reference to the hon. Minister's remarks that the union in Hamilton had negotiated coverage that provided a waiting period in case of pregnancy, I would say to the hon. Minister that in the past ten years we have transferred from a company-sponsored plan to an insurance plan, to a PSI service plan, and back again to an insurance type of plan, and there has not been a break in ten years, of the continuity of coverage for the members in that plan.

Now there is, I agree, a waiting period in case of pregnancy for new employees just on that one item. But this is not the fault of the union. We have tried our best to remove this waiting period, and of course, you know, we were dealing with insurance companies. But I take it that here we are dealing with government legislation, and the job of the Opposition—the job that we are trying to do—is to remove from this legislation the dominant influence of the private carriers. That is our objective and we think that the government has to have more control over these sort of things that relate to the welfare of the people.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of the amendment by Mr. Bryden say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

All in favour of Mr. Bryden's amendment, please stand.

All opposed to Mr. Bryden's amendment, please stand.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 27, the "nays" 50.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost and section 16 forms part of the bill.

On section 17.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks in regard to this section. There are a couple of things wrong with this section. One of them I think an extreme abuse, especially in subsection (d) of section 1, where they use the term: "For misuse of services for which benefits are provided."

This particular subsection gives an insurance company the opening to cancel any policy they want. Any of us who have experience with insurance companies, know how they can seize upon the smallest technicality in order to cancel a policy. In fact, one of the great weaknesses of free enterprise insurance—and obviously they have to work on the weakness in order to make a profit—is to get rid of those people who cost them money.

In section 17 it already provides that a policy can be cancelled for misrepresentation or fraud, and misrepresentation or fraud can be given a legal interpretation. You can go to court and have it defined. But what in the world is a misuse of service?

For example, when speaking on this bill on principle, I mentioned as an example, where a man was in a wheelchair and was covered by insurance because he was confined to his home. Yet when it was found out that he was sitting in his back yard, the policy was cancelled, because he was not confined to his home, or if he was wheeled around the block, he was not confined to his home. So this could be interpreted as a misuse of the policy.

Again, when a person has a policy that protects him in case of accident, they often find that a certain type of accident is not covered.

The insurance companies have been notorious over the years, for tripping up the unwary on the small print, and words can be interpreted in so many ways. If you get down to what is misrepresentation or fraud, this is something that can be given a legal interpretation.

This "misuse of services," I say, is giving a wide-open policy to the insurance companies to do as they see fit. We know from the past that any interpretation that the insurance companies are going to give, is to be for their own particular benefit, because these companies simply cannot exist, unless they make a good profit. They would not want to be in the business unless they made a good profit. This subsection (d) is the subsection that certainly will make the cash register ring for the insurance companies. This is another indication that not only this particular section, but this whole Act is really written for the benefit of the insurance firms. So I would like to move an amendment to this subsection, to read as follows:

That subsection (d) of subsection 1 of section 17 be deleted.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member also include subsection (a)? I would like to speak on that in a moment.

Mr. Trotter: In other words, that is to be deleted as well? I am willing to co-operate with my hon. friend, Mr. Chairman. I move that subsection (a) as well as subsection (d) be deleted.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, in this section of the bill as the hon. member for Parkdale has already indicated, there are included certain phrases and clauses which are lifted directly from private insurance company contracts, and they are there, not for the protection of the people, but of the insurance companies.

I can quite understand that section 1, subsection (b) is all right, "non-payment of subscription," as that, of course, is a logical reason for the cancellation of a contract. And (c) "Where the covered person ceases to be a resident"—that, too, is a logical reason for the cancellation of a contract. But when it comes to misrepresentation, or fraud, or misuse of services for which benefits are provided, then we are coming into a very questionable area, and there are questions that should be asked when protection is needed and they are, "Is the man sick?" and "Does the doctor say that he needs care?" These are the fundamental questions and it is not a question of protecting insurance companies, it is a question of protection of citizens.

I think again and again we have discussed this fact, that in any kind of legislation of this type, the need of the sick person must be paramount, and it is not the person who says ultimately whether he is sick or not and needs the care, it is the doctor, and it is the doctor's responsibility to say whether he needs that care and the doctor's responsibility to say whether the bills should be forwarded to the insurance carrier or not.

Though it well may be that there are ways and means by which certain misdemeanours may be practised—I am not conversant with the law here—this is a matter for the courts to decide and once the courts decide, then action can be taken by the appropriate authority. But to give the insurance companies this power seems to me to be beyond all reason and beyond the scope of this Act.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the hon. Minister, that the only reason for cancellation of a contract should be (b) and (c); and (a) and (d) should be cut out.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, the matter of misuse of services, as has been pointed out by my hon. and able colleague from Parkdale, is purely a matter of opinion. The question then becomes: In whose opinion has there been a misuse of services? And if it is the opinion of the carrier, then I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is open to a very subjective and a very biased interpretation and, of course, may lead ultimately to the exercise of very arbitrary power on the part of the carrier.

I am concerned about the individual covered who would not fight the decision of the carrier. He would get the letter from the carrier saying that they were cancelling his contract for misuse of the services and he would merely accept the decision. The result is that that individual is left without any coverage whatsoever. He is the one who will ultimately suffer the greatest.

But, of course, one can see it. One can picture in his mind's eye the huge monolithic insurance company with its immense bureaucracy and resources and technical know-how on the one hand, and the individual policyholder on the other and there is just no equality of strength between them. The individual is in complete subjection to the whims of the insurance carrier and no one can tell me—just no one can ever tell me; never, never can I be told—that some of these insurance carriers are not arbitrary and, indeed, unethical, in their treatment of the policyholders. I have had too many cases where clients have come to me and have been refused payment of medical services or have been refused payment of income protection under a policy of insurance.

All is not lily white. The hon. Minister may think so; he may think that these inhabitants of the York and the National and the Toronto clubs, and the Ontario and Albany clubs, are all great paragons of virtue but I am one of those who must have some reservations on that score. They are in business to make money; the pursuit of private profit is their main aim in life and they will exercise all the rights given to them under the statutes and the regulations to the fullest extent, in order to enable them to arrive most effectively at the end of profit.

Then I ask aloud, what happens to the individual who wishes to resist or object to the cancellation of his contract for alleged misuse of services? Subsection 2 tells us that he may appeal to the council. Of course, as throughout this statute, we are left until we see the regulations in order to evaluate the mechanics of such an appeal. The statute and the 17 sections we have dealt with now make reference time and time again to the regulations and the faceless, nameless, anonymous bureaucrats who my hon. friend from Downsview (Mr. Singer) so eloquently portrays, are going to become, after this session is finished, a legislature unto themselves, as they sit down and put the flesh and meat on the skeleton of this statute.

Indeed, they will have more power than we, the elected representatives of the people, have, but I do not have to prove that point. The only comfort—and it is a shallow comfort—that we will have, is that they are supposed to enact this legislation in the confines of their offices under the purview and the watchfulness of the hon. Minister.

I wish we could feel comfortable about the protection we get from that source, but we cannot, so what is the individual to do if he is going to appeal against the cancellation of his contract? And I would want to ask questions like these: Where is the council going to meet? Is it going to hear oral representation on the part of the policyholder, or is it going to be in writing? Will it be needful for the policyholder to appear before the council with a lawyer?

I cannot imagine that the insurance company, wishing to uphold its cancellation of the contract, will be there without benefit of counsel and, of course, it will have the most able counsel there to protect its position that money can buy. One thing about this is that insurance companies can take you to court for about $10, if it establishes a principle. To them money is no object. No matter how small the demand or how meagre and puny the claim, they will go to court if it means they will establish a principle. They will harass the individual to such an extent that he is without means and without money to pursue the acquisition of justice that he may so richly deserve.

I would want to know such things as: What will be the test of misuse of services? To what extent will the doctor's opinion be valid? I would feel much more secure if there was a section in the statute in relation to misuse of services to the effect that if, in the opinion of a duly qualified medical practitioner, the individual required the services, then that would be the end of the matter. It would be something along the lines of what happens when an employee absents himself from work; he is away from work and he appears the next day at his work with a slip—it is called a doctor's slip in my community—saying that he required medical treatment or the state of his health did not permit him to go to work, and then that is the end of the matter. I would like to see some protection to the policyholder along those lines in this statute.

As to this debauchery of common sense that is inherent in section 17, we merely put it to the hon. Minister that this subparagraph is so dangerous from the point of view of its effects upon the policyholder, that it ought to be eliminated.

I am not completely sold, however, on the elimination of paragraph 8. The cancellation for misrepresentation or fraud is a standard in insurance policies except that it is usually spelled out that the misrepresentation or fraud must go to the heart of the contract—it must be a misrepresentation or fraud of such a nature that the insurer would be put in the position that had he known the truth about this item he would not have accepted the risk. That is the extent to which the misrepresentation and fraud is usually applied to contracts of insurance.

There may be, in other words, many misrepresentations or fraudulent answers to the questionnaire or the application which do not go to the heart of the contract; they are irrelevant, and they would not put the insurer in the position that I have postulated, that is to say that had he known the truth he would not have accepted the risk. I would have hoped then that subsection (a) would spell that out by the addition of some words for misrepresentation or fraud that enables the insurer to determine whether he would accept the risk or not. However, since it is not spelled out, I agree with my hon. friend from Yorkview that that section, in its present form, ought to be deleted, and I will vote against its inclusion.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue the argument with regard to clause (d), relating to misuse of services. I think that the iniquity of that clause has already been well established. Obviously it is a clause that gives a wide-open loophole to insurance companies to get out from under their legitimate obligations if they see fit to do so.

I would, however, like to make one or two observations with regard to clause (a) under which a contract could be cancelled for misrepresentation or fraud. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister, certainly if he follows his procedure up to date in this committee, will tell us that both (a) and (d) are clauses that appear in private insurance contracts. That has been his justification for almost everything in this bill—that this is the way the insurance companies do it, and apparently if the insurance companies do it that way, we in the Legislature are supposed to take our cue and continue their practices whether they are good or bad.

I am going to put it to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that (a) is just about as wide open for abuse as (d). As I understand it, if a man actually is guilty of misrepresentation or fraud, he can be prosecuted. Fraud is an offence. And so, if a man engages in something fraudulent then let him be prosecuted and let the law take its course. Let us not penalize a man twice for the same offence. The danger here is, you see, that if an insurance company wants to get out from under an obligation, it will allege that there has been a misrepresentation or fraud which there may, or may not, have been. The matter could be battled right up to the Supreme Court of Canada. The average person cannot engage in that sort of a fight, so he will probably just give up and permit his contract to be cancelled.

In other words, this clause (a) is wide open to abuse. It permits insurance companies to badger and harass subscribers who, for some reason or other, they want to get rid of, just as (d) can be used. So it is not enough, in our opinion, simply to strike out (d). We want (a) out, too, because we think it can be used for the same purpose, and we appreciate the courtesy of the hon. member for Parkdale in agreeing to incorporate that provision in his proposed amendment.

I think all of us know from dealing with automobile insurance policies the trivial, trumped-up reasons insurance companies will use to try to unload somebody. They will push people on to assigned risk without notice, and without any adequate reason, in fact, without even giving a reason, frequently. They just tell him he is on assigned risk.

I have found also that in respect to private medical insurance contracts, there are companies—I am not saying all of them, but there certainly are companies—that will look for every conceivable nit-picking reason to duck their obligations. As a matter of fact, I had a case not too long ago with regard to a blind man in my constituency. I referred it to my federal colleague, Mr. Brewin, who is a lawyer, and it was only because Mr. Brewin really went to work on this company that it paid up. Yet it was clearly liable to pay in his opinion as a lawyer and in my lay opinion, formed from reading the plain words of the contract. If they think they can get out from under, there are many of them that will do so.

Clauses (a) and (b) are admittedly taken out of private insurance contracts and they are now put into the legislation. But let us remember the private insurance contracts were drawn up by insurance companies and by their lawyers, and they have every conceivable provision in them to protect the interest of the insurance company and as few provisions as possible—in fact, no provisions really—designed to protect the interests of the client.

So I would say that when we pass laws in this Legislature, we should not do so simply on the basis of what one interested party wants. We should write them on the basis of the public interest. The public interest here is that where a standard contract is granted, as it must be, although the section of the Act relating to that point is quite inadequate, but if it is issued, then it should definitely stay in force, unless the man ceases to pay his subscriptions or unless he moves away.

Obviously, in cases like that, there is no point in it staying in force, but otherwise it should stay in force. The company should have to honour the obligations with respect to medical services that are provided in that contract, regardless what other issues may be at stake. If there is a fraud, well then, let it be dealt with in the courts in the normal way, let us not penalize the man by depriving him also of his medical coverage.

The hon. member for Sudbury mentioned, with regard to the question of misrepresentation or fraud, that in the courts—and I hope I get this reasonably accurate—it is usually considered that this principle is applicable only if it can be shown that the misrepresentation or fraud is of such a nature that the insurance company would not have accepted the risk if it had known about it. That being so, there is obviously no point to this clause here if we really mean what we say in section 12 and in other sections, namely, that insurance carriers must—not may, but must—sell standard contracts to people who apply for them. There is no basis on which they can refuse.

So where can a misrepresentation or fraud arise? I do not see how a misrepresentation or fraud can arise at all, unless the hon. Minister has in mind a whole lot of exceptions that he is going to put in those regulations that he has not told us about; say, where a man might omit to mention that he had had the jaundice 20 years ago or something, so that the companies can go to work on him. But if it is genuinely intended that anybody who applies is entitled to receive a standard contract, and if it is genuinely intended that standard contracts will provide a comprehensive range of medical services—not fully comprehensive, unfortunately, but at least as comprehensive as this bill envisages—then there is no point in clause (a). It should go out. Its only point could be to provide insurance companies with a weapon in the event they wanted to escape their obligation.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring in another point. Because of the term misrepresentation—and this is really a question to the hon. Minister—one of our concerns is that the people of Ontario will know that a standard coverage is available to them. I do not want to belittle every insurance company, or every insurance agent, but there can be a tendency, where there is a profit motive, that a man will in fact omit to tell a client that he can get a standard coverage, and suggest why not take some other coverage which has some frills in it and so on, and sign up for it.

I would like to see that under misrepresentation, there should be some aspect included to ensure that when an insurance agent is talking to a prospective client, that he has an obligation to tell him there is a standard coverage that is available to him, if he prefers it to the alternative. I would like to see, as we have in the human rights bill—and I congratulate the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), who I think was responsible; I think this is a most worthwhile thing, and it does my heart good when I go into a motel to see our human rights stated clearly—some similar kind of insurance or guarantee on the part of the insurance companies, that they are going to see that the agents are frank about saying that there is a standard coverage that is available, but if you want to have these extras, they are also available to you and that he just does not happen to omit that there are standard coverages, in order to try to sell the Cadillac kind of policy.

Would the hon. Minister reply please?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, here is another indication in this section of how the bill will protect the carriers and put an unbearable onus on the subscriber. I am not a lawyer, but I understand that under the contract misrepresentation or fraud is a criminal offence. It is my opinion that the only person who should make judgment upon that should be a competent legal authority of the court and certainly the carrier should not have the right to cancel on that basis. It says in section 2 that an appeal can be made, and where an appeal is made, the contract will be in force until a decision is made by the council.

Of course, the subscriber will get a letter saying the contract is cancelled for some reason, and as I explained before, in their ignorance, the majority of the people who will be covered and who are working long hours and do not know their legal rights, may just pass the thing off. The letters will go onto the windowsill and into the wastepaper basket, but the people are then out of coverage and may need the service of a doctor in between that time and when they are hooked for a large amount of money for a misuse of services for which benefits are provided.

I thought that under this programme the doctors were going to provide the services and if there would be any misuse it would be the result of the doctor's actions. I cannot for the life of me see how the subscriber can misuse the services. There are examples where doctors have, of course, misused the services provided by insurance coverage and PSL. We had an example, not long ago, of where they had to discipline some of their own members for misuse of the plan.

We had a great example in our first insurance agreement in Stelco, where the in-hospital doctor-medical coverage provided for $3 for each visit in hospital, and the first quarter of the experience showed that it was averaging two days a week. In the second quarter it went to four and in the second year, it was a blanket $21—$3 a day for seven days went onto each bill for each person who went into the hospital. The union and the company made joint application to the Hamilton medical academy to see just what was going on, and the only way that we could rectify it, keep down the premiums, was to change the coverage to a specific number of days.

I cannot see, for the life of me, how we can hold the subscriber responsible for misuse of services provided by the doctors. I would hope that the hon. Minister will give us some explanation of how this might be misused by the patient.

Mr. Sopha: If I were not, Mr. Chairman, absolutely convinced that I could write a better statute than this one, I would maintain my silence. I am also convinced, and I make the allegation to the hon. Minister, that before this bill was presented to this House—I would be willing to bet a dollar—it went to the insurance companies for their examination and for their assistance and their representations in respect of the writing of this bill, because too many terms in it come from the insurance jargon for me to think otherwise.

But as a lawmaker, elected in this province to represent 80,000 people, I am not given the same opportunity to make my representations until the bill comes on the floor of the House. I do not intend to reiterate what I said, but I only wish to call for simple justice for the policyholders of this province, and for the government to give the impression that first and foremost in its mind is the protection of the policyholders and not the protection of the insurance companies.

Before the hon. Minister gets up to speak, I wish to plead with him on behalf of all those in the Opposition that he reconsider most seriously the deletion of this clause, or spell out in some more rational way a means whereby people will be protected against arbitrary conduct.

We know, and I can state categorically, that insurance companies will strive to get out of the coverage of risks that do not bring them a profit. Everybody will have a file. Every policyholder will have a file in the insurance company's office, and as that file gets bulkier with the number of claims, that file will be examined from the point of view of getting out of the coverage of that risk, to have done with that policyholder. Then when they feel they have reached the straw that breaks the camel's back, they are at liberty to employ subclause (d) and to say to you, Mr. John Q. Policyholder, "We no longer cover you because you have misused the services."

Does a person misuse the services who feels that he has a carcinoma of the lung and goes to his doctor perhaps four or five times in a month for an examination or to express to his doctor his concern about the symptoms that he feels? Similarly, in regard to a great many other maladies. The doctor tries to reassure him. Perhaps he is neurotic about it. I postulate examples of how this can arise. Maybe he needs the counsel and comfort of the doctor. I am not a doctor and I do not know how they employ their skilled techniques in this way. But that person, in resorting to medical advice from the man he trusts in regard to the state of health of his body, is in danger of receiving the fatal letter from the insurance company, which says, "You have misused the services and we cancel your policy."

In other words, it boils down to this, and this is our position. We are concerned about maximizing the coverage of our people. We want to see the greatest number of them covered. We are not interested in devices that will leave large numbers of them uncovered by medical care insurance, or will put them in danger of losing their medical care insurance; we are not interested, over here in the Opposition, in the enunciation or the establishment of any such principle as that. We believe in universality. Having got people covered in the plan, we want to keep them covered in it and we want to limit the right of insurance companies to come along and say to any one or any group of people that they are no longer covered under the plan.

Of course that is the advantage of the universal compulsory coverage that we have promoted. We cannot get that; we have been defeated on the floor of the Legislature, our meagre numbers. But not having got that, that does not mean that we give up the battle, that we fold our sails and disappear—to mix a couple of metaphors—into the gathering sandstorm. Not at all. In the carrying out of our responsibility, we stand here and we try to make improvements to this legislation—

Mr. Thompson: It is built on sand, built on the principle of sand.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, yes, "built on the principle of sand," my hon. leader very aptly points out.

One of the reasons I rose to speak again was to say that I predict, and I look forward to it with some enthusiasm, that under subsection 2, the counsel, the adviser, the agent, the representative, the steward of people who is cancelled under subclause (d) and subclause (a) is going to be the member of the Legislature. I take great enjoyment out of appearing before the appeal tribunal of the workmen's compensation board—and here is another tribunal that I will be able to appear before on behalf of my constituents. I will not know the ground rules until the regulations are published, and until the first person comes into me with the letter saying that his coverage has been cancelled. That person, no doubt, will be some individual who will also announce at the same time, "I need the coverage; we have had it for a long time, we have had it more than the fatal eight months." Eight months has almost taken on a mystic quality in this policy in this province. "But I need it because my wife is expecting another baby; and you have got to help me get that policy reinstated." So it will be an excuse whereby I can tell my wife I have to go off to Toronto to appear before the council on this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, she keeps me close to the tether. I must appear because I cannot visualize that this council will go around the province holding hearings. I cannot visualize that. It will meet in Toronto and we will have to come down here in order to take the appeal.

Now, at the very least, if the hon. Minister will not accept this amendment, may I make this suggestion: That subclause (d) be reconsidered from the point of view that the first step must be taken by the carrier—the onus is placed upon him—and reword it by the addition of some such words as this: For which benefits are provided subject to the approval of the council. In other words, the policyholder in the initial stages is not in the picture at all; the carrier has the onus of going to the council and getting approval for the cancellation of the policy.

I say to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan), who is a very reasonable man, it may be at this stage that the council will refuse the carrier permission to cancel the policy and the policyholder will never know at that stage that his policy was up for review. In other words, it is an intermediate step of protection and the carrier would have to show the council that it had just cause to cancel the policy—even in the absence of the policyholder. If the council approved the cancellation of the policy, then subsection (2) would come into operation and the policyholder would have the right to go to the council and make his appeal and submit his evidence and make his arguments, either through himself, through his member of the Legislature, through his union leader or through his lawyer.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, it is hard to conceive of a section that is more ill-conceived than this particular one. When you really examine what the Minister is trying to do here you discover he has tried in a superficial way to give the insurance carriers the opportunity to unilaterally cancel a policy and throw the onus on a citizen of the province to do something about that cancellation. And he has provided an appeal to a council, and the medical council has absolutely no capacity to deal with what, in law, are probably two of the most difficult matters to prove or to decide; namely, misrepresentation or fraud, let alone this ambiguous phrase "misuse of services."

Without repeating all the things that the other hon. members have said about this amendment in speaking in favour of it, I point out that even if the hon. Minister were to delete this sentence—this section completely—and accept this amendment for that deletion, what position is a citizen of the province in? He has the services performed for him, he has a standard insurance contract, he goes to a doctor, the services are performed and he applies for payment under the contract. And what can the insurance carrier do? Without any reason whatsoever it can simply not pay the charges.

Once again it puts the onus on the citizen of the province to then take steps to find out why the insurance carrier has not paid the charge. Even if this amendment were accepted, you still have the citizen of the province in this strange position where the carrier will simply refuse to pay a bill. If the carrier refuses to pay a bill then the citizen must exercise all his rights and take whatever course he can to persuade somebody—and there is no provision in this bill as to whom he is to persuade—that the licensed carrier should pay that bill.

Surely the hon. Minister can withdraw this one section and make absolutely certain that if a citizen of the province—holding a standard medical insurance contract—has medical services provided for him that there will be unequivocally a payment by the insurance company of the cost of those services. Then, if the insurance carrier wants to do something about having made a payment on the grounds that he was not obligated to make them, let him take his remedy. But let us not have any misunderstanding that the individual citizen in the province can find himself in the position where the medical carrier unilaterally says: I am not going to pay this particular bill because we do not like what you have done in some way.

Again, I state my complete agreement with the remarks that have been made by the other hon. members on this amendment. But I say that even if the amendment were carried, the citizen in the province would continue to be faced by this possibility of unilateral action by the insurance company to simply refuse to make an individual payment. If the government is going to make such a play about the non-cancellable feature of these policies and about their permanent renewability, then the Minister has got to make absolutely certain that the insurance contract payments are made by the carriers for the services which are performed.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. Trotter's amendment—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think I would like to make some comment on this because this is a matter which is of great importance and a matter which received perhaps more than its share of consideration vis-à-vis the length of the section. At one time we had this out of the bill. However, after listening to representations made by the non-profit plans—and I emphasize that because it was from them that these representations came—the degree of misuse was rather staggering. We are not talking about the examples cited here, Mr. Chairman. Common sense should dictate to these hon. gentlemen that the examples they cited, with the exception of the one cited by the hon. member for Parkdale, are in a different class altogether. The hon. member for Sudbury may be a very brilliant lawyer, sir, but he certainly has no knowledge of medical practice. To think that any doctor or any insurance corporation would consider misuse of a contract with the man with carcinoma of the lung seeking advice—

Mr. Bryden: This is a legal not a medical question, sir.

Hon. Mr. Dymond:—five times a month or five times a week or seven times a week; this would not be unreasonable in such cases. These non-profit plans, the co-ops, the doctor-sponsored plans gave us the facts of cases that had visited different doctors—10, 12 and 15 of them. Just the day before they had come in to make these representations they had a case where a patient had visited 17 different doctors in one day. Now, Mr. Chairman, the only effect of this sort of thing is misuse; complete and total misuse. It hurts all of the people who are covered by insurance, and this is why it was put back in the Act, so as to provide protection for the great mass of the people.

I have heard my hon. friend say that one bad apple in the barrel can ruin the whole barrel. Why let us run the risk of ruining the whole barrel if we can extract that bad apple from the outset?

This is what is envisioned in misuse. I am not going to attempt to argue this matter of misrepresentation or fraud, because my legal advisers told me that this should be put in. I do know—and I checked it for myself—that it is in every contract of the service corporations and the non-profit plans as well, and I am quite certain that my hon. friend from Sudbury knows this very well.

All the emphasis, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. members put was on the indemnity corporations; let us remember that the non-profit plans carry a large percentage of the insurance in the province of Ontario and, in 1962—the last date I have for such complete information—they carried 31.2 per cent of all the medical services insurance.

My hon. friend from Parkdale cited the case of the man who was in a wheelchair taking a run around the block—and very probably on his doctor's orders—but his insurance, I submit to you, sir, was not his medical service insurance; it was income protection insurance or some other type of insurance, but certainly not the insurance that paid his doctor bills, because there would be nothing in a contract of that kind, Mr. Chairman.

And if it were, the standard contract, as laid down in this bill, rules that sort of thing out completely.

The bill is aimed at ruling out these loopholes that corporations have in the past clung to and used wrongly. I am quite prepared to consider changes in this bill, Mr. Chairman, but I find myself in a difficult position. I was prepared to consider changes and should probably have mentioned them first. But I find myself now in the difficult position that should these amendments that are now before the House be defeated, you will declare the section carried, and I believe that there are two amendments which I would propose that can clear up some of the doubt that apparently is in the minds of the hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I raised the question about the obligations—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: How do we control what the insurance agents take? I do not know. The only thing I can undertake to say to you on this is that we will use every available means to make certain that the availability of the insurance and the provisions of this Act are known to all the people of the province.

The industry, I hope, will police itself. I do not know, and I do not see how any legislation can control what shall be said by people who are trying to sell something. If my hon. friend with some knowledge of the insurance business, would give us some concrete assistance in this regard, I assure you that we would welcome it very much.

I would like to point out, too, Mr. Chairman, our concern for misuse is not only directed to the consumers of the service. We are just as concerned about over-service being given by doctors, and I recognize the validity of what my hon. friend from Wentworth East has already said. We have had examples of this. I agree that cases have been brought before our disciplinary committees. I have the assurance of the disciplining body of our profession that they will watch the operation of this very carefully, and they will take strong, firm and positive steps to be sure that it is kept in control insofar as it is possible.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the amendment before the House now is an amalgam of two proposals that came from the Opposition side. I wonder if you might not discover whether the hon. member for Parkdale, who was the mover, might not withdraw his amendment temporarily, to give the hon. Minister an opportunity. I would be delighted to see this government introduce one amendment; I would like to take a look at it, and at this point I have a sense of frustration that I am not going to see even one.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to it being withdrawn temporarily to see what the hon. Minister has to offer.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would move then that clause 17, 1 (a) be amended by adding the words: "as to a material fact," so that the clause shall now read:

—for misrepresentation or fraud, as to a material fact.

I am sorry that my hon. friend, the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) is not here to guide me in this matter.

Then I would also say—and I meant to speak about this—there may be some question in the minds of some of us, and it has come to my mind, that 17 (2) may not make clear to the subscriber, who should find himself in the position of having his policy cancelled, his rights of appeal to the council. In an attempt to make sure that he will know of those rights, I would like to move that section 17 be amended by adding a sub-paragraph 3, which will read as follows:

17 (3) In the notice of cancellation, the carrier shall advise the subscriber of his rights to appeal the cancellation to the medical services insurance council.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Are you doing anything about (d)?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No. I have explained (d).

Mr. Sopha: This is a special bill, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister if his legal advisers have told him whether the statutory conditions under part 7 of The Insurance Act are applicable to the standard policies under this Act?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I have to say that I cannot recall them specifically telling me that, Mr. Chairman, but I must admit that I did not ask them what paragraphs of what Act applied to ours. I took it that they had thoroughly screened our Act—

Mr. Sopha: Is this accident or sickness insurance, I wonder?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sopha: Is this accident and sickness insurance?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, this is insurance under The Insurance Act and under The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act. It has nothing to do with sickness and accident insurance.

Mr. Sopha: It is the only one that deals with this type of thing in The Insurance Act, and there are all types of insurance in The Insurance Act. There is a group of statutory conditions that form part of the policy and I have not heard, nor do I see anywhere in the statutes, where there are any statutory conditions that are to form part of this standard contract and I am worried about it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister asked me if I would give him concrete suggestions so that everyone in the province will know that there is a standard contract, and I am assuming that he is going to give very wide publicity to it through the media, papers and radio and the foreign language press. I am thinking particularly of foreign-born and some groups of newcomers can be a great constraint which is enormous from the point of view of sales, and my hon. friend from Parkdale has listed a number of occasions on which slick salesmen are able to promote everything from vacuum cleaners to everything else. So I am hoping that on that basis the hon. Minister will do something.

I also think of the consumer credit report which I have not had a chance to read as yet, but I understand from my hon. friends to my left that one of the requirements that is being considered is that the interest rate is going to have to be stated clearly. I do not see why this same requirement could not be made of insurance agents, that they would have to say that there is a standard policy, and if there is a situation where someone has complained and says that they were sold a policy and never told about the standard policy and did not know anything about it, then there is a situation where the insurance agent could be hauled up before the superintendent.

I also would like to emphasize again that I like the idea that in hotels and motels—I do not know if this is mandatory, but I ask the hon. Provincial Secretary if he knows if it is mandatory—that they have the charter stated clearly so that people know their rights. I do not see why an insurance agent should not have a bylaw requesting him to put out a statement saying there are certain standard contracts which a person can have and the coverage that is given.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we would be very pleased to consider the feasibility of this, and if there is any possibility of it having a salutary effect, we would entertain it. However, my understanding is that a great deal of insurance is sold away from the office and though we might lay down in law that the insurance agent shall make certain statements, how in the world would we ever police it or enforce it?

It is quite true, the subscriber, the policyholder, or the policyholder who was refused might say: "Well, I was told nothing about it," and then become involved, I presume, in lengthy, costly and probably difficult litigation. As I understand the law, it would be one word against one word and whose is to be taken? I can see very grave difficulties and a very cumbersome type of redress available to the purchaser in this regard.

We will, as I have already told the House, use the broadest possible type of information dissemination across the province, and we will keep this up periodically. One of the things we plan to do—as we did in the case of the inception of the hospital care insurance plan—is to produce a pamphlet. I would certainly hope that our planning will include that this be reproduced in ordinary language, particularly in places where we have many different ethnic groups, to the end that all it is possible to reach be advised of what is available to them.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I am really thinking of suggestions on my feet for the most part. I am sure the hon. Minister will look into this thoroughly and get much advice. One suggestion that comes to mind is the fact that on an application for insurance you might have in big bold letters the fact of the availability of a standard contract. I realized when I spoke previously, the very real difficulties of how you can tell what one man said to another when he signed something. However, if you are making a contract, it is obvious that you need signatures when you are making the application for contracts and that might be the point to inform the public about.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I was just looking through The Fair Accommodation Practices Act and I do not think that is a mandatory provision. It is as a result of the education campaign carried on by the commission in co-operation with the people involved.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the amendment now before the House—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. gentlemen opposite think it would be better if the Opposition just accepted anything the government proposed, but we have a different conception of the role of Opposition.

I now wish to make some comments with regard to the amendments that the hon. Minister has put before us. I suppose one could say that they are unobjectionable, one could also add that they are innocuous. With regard to his proposal to add a subsection 3, I would think it would be elementary that the carrier, after arbitrarily cancelling somebody's contract, should be expected to advise that person at least that he may appeal; this I would take to be elementary. We obviously would accept that great new departure by the hon. Minister.

As for the proposed amendment to clause (a), it would appear now that the hon. Minister has got himself fully into line with the insurance companies. Previously he had outdone even them. He had put it in on broader terms than even they do it in their own policies, but now he has, I would judge, suggested that we write into our bill the actual language of the private insurance company policies rather than having it broader even than they want it. I am suggesting to him again that the whole thing is meaningless. I take it this term, "as a material fact," refers to what the hon. member for Sudbury was talking about, that is that it must be shown that the misrepresentation or fraud was of such a nature that the insurer would not have accepted the contract if he had known about it.

If he is required to accept a contract under our law—and we are told that he is required to accept that type of contract—what is the material fact on which he would refuse to accept one? I submit to the hon. Minister that if he really means that insurance companies must have standard contracts available and must be willing to sell them to those who apply for them, subject to such conditions as to rates that apply, then there is no point in this at all. This is applicable, it makes sense in an insurance contract only where the insurer has discretion. If he has no discretion to refuse in the first place, then how could it be said that a so-called misrepresentation or fraud is a matter that would have led him to refuse?

I suggest to the hon. Minister that his amendment to clause (a) adds nothing to the clause, it does not improve it, there is no point to it. I hope that my friend, the hon. member for Parkdale, will come back in again and move his amendment when an opportunity arises and really clean up this section.

The hon. Minister, of course, does not touch (d) at all, the really vicious section relating to the ill-defined term "misuse." The example the hon. Minister gave us of the type of thing he was trying to legislate against, was such an atrocious, far-fetched, ridiculous example that it really gives rise to concern as to the type of stuff that is going to be pulled under this clause. The hon. Minister said that he had a case of a man who had consulted 17 different doctors in one day. I assume, Mr. Chairman, that that man was working not on a 24-hour day, but a 36-hour day, because any time I have gone to consult a doctor, I have had to wait at least two hours before I could even say hello to the guy. And how you can consult 17 different doctors—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, is the hon. member doubting my word?

Mr. Bryden: —over a 24-hour period, I do not know.

Mr. MacDonald: No, we think your suggestion was absurd.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I was stating a fact as presented to me by a non-profit insurance carrier.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Since the hon. Minister raised the question of whether or not I was questioning his word, I thought I should clear that up.

Mr. Chairman: We will finish that at two o'clock.

The House took recess at 12.30 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 10, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 10, 1965

Medical services insurance, bill respecting, in committee, continued	3967
Recess, 6 o'clock	4004

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

House in committee, Mr. A. W. Downer in the chair.

MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE

(continued)

On section 17:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, just before you left the chair at 12.30, the hon. Minister (Mr. Dymond) had asked whether or not I was accepting his word as to the accuracy of the cases presented to us. Well, Mr. Chairman, obviously I must accept his word for what he says, difficult as that may be in this particular case.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): He only said he heard it.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Oh, no—

Mr. Bryden: Well, I accept his word that he heard it, and yet he further asserts he knows it for a fact. I accept that, too.

I would like to say however, Mr. Chairman, that we now begin to get some light on the six years of research that the hon. Minister claims he and his people had been doing prior to the preparation of this bill. I would suggest that they probably spent the entire six years digging through about ten million cases, in order to find the one that the hon. Minister put before us this morning, the case of a man, who it is said, went to 17 different doctors in one day. I certainly think he was reaching for an example, and if that is the best he can provide as the reason for including in this bill a provision that a policy can be cancelled by an insurance company for alleged misuse of services, then I would say that there is no reason at all for including the section in the bill. That, I would suggest, happens about once in ten million cases.

Furthermore, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if it does happen, then the person concerned is one who is obviously in need of medical services. He is obviously a man who needs psychiatric treatment. There is something the matter with a man who would go to 17 different doctors in one day. He may not need treatment for the ailment that he imagines afflicts him, but he obviously is afflicted with perhaps an even more serious ailment that should be treated.

We still face the question that we, on this side of the House, have been urging from the very beginning, that there is no need at all for the provision that the hon. Minister has included in this bill and which he has copied directly out of private insurance contracts. Why should we enact what private insurance carriers want, whether or not that is in the public interest? In this case, it clearly is not in the public interest. Therefore, as far as I am concerned, I hope that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), at the appropriate time, will reintroduce his amendment in an effort to get rid of this offensive clause in the bill.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, that when misuse occurs—and no doubt it occasionally does occur—it is misuse by medical practitioners, not by sick patients. Or at the very least, a medical practitioner will be a party to the misuse. He will be part of a conspiracy to misuse the benefits. There is no way whereby a patient can submit a bill for medical services by himself. He has to have a bill from a medical practitioner, or alternatively, the medical practitioner must submit the bill directly. So why should a patient's contract be cancelled arbitrarily because of misuse on the part of the medical profession?

The hon. Minister said this morning that the college of physicians and surgeons is trying to police this phase of the matter to make sure that there is no abuse of insurance contracts by its members. I think that is the best way to handle that problem. In every professional group there will always be someone who tries to take advantage of a situation, and the professional group itself is best able to deal with the matter. But the patient should not be involved at all, and should not face the possibility of arbitrary cancellation of his contract.

While I am on my feet, with regard to this clause, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if it is intended that the two amendments proposed by the hon. Minister will be submitted as two separate questions?

Mr. Chairman: Just as one.

Mr. Bryden: Well, may I request, sir—and I think it is possible in a matter of this kind, where an amendment covers two quite unrelated subjects—that they be separated into two questions?

Mr. Chairman: It can be, but I thought we might—

Mr. Bryden: I would request that you do so because so far as this group is concerned, we are prepared to support one of the hon. Minister's amendments, but not the other.

Mr. Chairman: We will vote one by one, then.

Mr. Bryden: Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I take it that the first one, relating to clause (a), is the one that is now before us, and I do not think I have to repeat our reasons. We have already stated them. We do not think that the hon. Minister's amendment makes any change in the clause that is worth mentioning. It is not worth the trouble to amend it in the way he suggested. We are opposed to the clause in total, and therefore opposed to the amendment as it is now.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment of the hon. Minister of Health, that is in section—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Before we go on, Mr. Chairman, we cannot support the amendment to subsection (a), because we, on this side of the House, we do not think it makes any difference whatsoever, so that subsection 3, it is going to be read separately, I guess.

Mr. Chairman: Yes. The Minister's motion is:

Section 17, subsection (a) be amended by adding the words: "as a material fact," so that the clause shall now read:

"for misrepresentation or fraud as to a material fact."

All in favour of the amendment—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, if I may suggest, that the words are: "as to a material fact."

Mr. Chairman: "as to a material fact."

All in favour of the amendment, please say "aye."

Opposed to the amendment, say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

All in favour of the first amendment by the Minister of Health, please stand.

All opposed, please stand.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 41, the "nays" 24.

Mr. Chairman: The first amendment is carried.

Second amendment.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I will have to amend my amendment. It will be to the section as amended.

Mr. Chairman: After this one.

Mr. Trotter: After this one?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

All in favour of the second amendment, that in the notice of cancellation the carrier shall advise the subscriber of his right to appeal the cancellation to the medical services insurance council.

All in favour of the amendment, please say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You come up with a reasonable amendment and we will support it.

Mr. Chairman: Carried.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I said earlier that I would withdraw my amendment temporarily, providing the government did something worthwhile. We have come to the conclusion that their suggested amendments were not worthwhile, and I would like my amendment to stand, only it should read: "to the section as amended."

Mr. Chairman: All the arguments have already been made.

Mr. Trotter: If the arguments have already been made, we must repeat the arguments.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. Trotter's amendment, say "aye."

All opposed say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

The amendment is lost.

Section 17, as amended, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, in section 18, subsection (1), we now come to grips with this question of maximum subscription rates.

Yesterday, the hon. Minister finally revealed something of the nature of these maximum rates, and I think it would be accurate to state his revelation produced nothing less than a shock in this House. Indeed, it was so much of a shock that it even captured the attention of the press that had really lost interest in this whole medicare debate and has been burying it on page 45 or thereabouts. We find that this morning it is the headlines on the front page. Headlines which read: "That the maximum rates are going to be for the sickly and the aged."

It seems to me that this is a very serious kind of situation. The bill reads:

Section 18 (1) No licensed carrier shall charge a subscription rate under a standard contract in excess of the applicable maximum subscription rate prescribed by the regulations.

We do not know what that maximum is. We have been trying after six years to discover. The hon. Minister of Health apparently has not had the green light yet from the insurance companies, so he is not in a position to tell us what it is. But what we do know now is that this maximum rate is going to be reserved for those who are least in a position to cope with it economically—it is going to be for the sickly and the aged. For those who will be best able to cope with it, they will be able to get a lower rate because they will be a better risk. The bad risks are going to carry the maximum rate. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, I think this is an intolerable kind of situation. Now that the hon. Minister has made clear the nature of his bill, I think that we should do something about it.

I think there are two ways in which we could do something about it. One, you could fix a number of maximums in various categories along the lines the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) pointed out yesterday, in which you would, in effect, be duplicating the outmoded car insurance kind of approach. Alternatively, it seems to me, and this is preferable, you could eliminate the discrimination against the various other people.

Therefore, I would like to move, Mr. Chairman, that subsection (1) of section 18 be amended by adding thereto the following:

and no licensed carrier shall discriminate among individuals or families in the subscription rates it charges.

Therefore, the subsection would read:

No licensed carrier shall charge a subscription rate under a standard contract in excess of the applicable maximum subscription rate prescribed by the regulations and no licensed carrier shall discriminate among individuals or families in the subscription rates it charges.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that this would create an opportunity for a genuine pooling of risks within this limited area of the high risks, the bad risks, and conceivably come up with a maximum which would be less onerous on the higher risk group.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. MacDonald moves that subsection (1) of section 18 be amended by adding thereto the following:

and no licensed carrier shall discriminate among individuals or families in the subscription rates it charges.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that we endorse this. It came as a considerable shock to us yesterday to realize that pooling did not mean that both poor risks and good health risks were all going to be included on an equal basis. As the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party has said, when this was exposed, naturally there was an outraged reaction not only in the newspapers through headlines but also from senior citizens and the very people who are concerned.

I notice where Dr. Hannah has said in the past that some of the poorest risks—if you want to put it that way, which I also find obnoxious—are young mothers and young babies. I think the doctor recognizes that they are the people who are very liable to suffer ill-health in some way or other. Yet these people, young mothers with babies, are going to be looked on, not from the fact of their financial resources, but on the basis of their health. Surely we should be trying to arrange that this group gets, in the easiest possible way, complete health services made available to it, rather than it being suggested as it will be that, "You are going to cost us more because you are more liable to get ill-health, therefore, you are going to have to pay more."

I agree thoroughly with the suggestion behind this amendment. I may say, sir, there are other aspects of section 18 that I think should be considered. The hon. Minister will correct me if I am wrong in this, but I think that within the past year the college of physicians and surgeons has raised its fees 20 per cent. I understand that one non-profit organization had based its premiums on the understanding that they would only be raised 10 per cent, and they have now been raised 20 per cent. Assuming that the college of physicians and surgeons were to raise them another 10 per cent, there could be a situation where the whole premium structure would have to go up within the two years, and yet it cannot be changed in two years. I can see a great many difficulties attached to this.

It also raises a question concerning a carrier who goes bankrupt. Again I think of remarks by Dr. Hannah, with a suggestion that perhaps they would not be able to keep their premiums at the rate they had and that these non-profit organizations might be going out of business if this continued. The hon. Minister has told us, and I would like to have this clarified by him, that if people buy policies from one carrier and if the carrier should go bankrupt, they automatically can be covered by another carrier without a waiting period.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. As far as the maximum premium is concerned, we know from the explanation that he has given that if a person is in poor health, the premium will be more than for someone who is in good health. May I ask, will there be any difference necessarily in the premium between our citizens who are in good health? We will take a person who is 65 years of age, in excellent health, and somebody who is 25; will there be a difference in premium as far as age is concerned?

If you wish to answer all of these questions at once, I have another one. We see that there will be one rate for a family of two, and one rate for a family of three or more. Does that mean that where a husband and wife have already paid their premium and then the mother has a child, that immediately, on that day, the premium rate is going to be advanced? As I read it in the bill, it does, and I think that this is most unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, as to some of the questions raised by the hon. member for York South in his amendment, I am not just sure that I understand exactly what he is trying to get at with his amendment. Did I get it right? "And no licensed carrier shall discriminate among individuals and families in the subscription rates charged?"

Mr. MacDonald: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I must have eaten too much dinner or I am not celebrating very well because I just cannot see what on earth this does to the—

Mr. Thompson: It provides one common premium for everyone.

Mr. MacDonald: It would eliminate penalizing—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It eliminates the maximum fee—

Mr. Bryden: No, it does not.

Mr. Thompson: Just one set premium, not a maximum one for some people; a lower one for others.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I see it now, this does change what we are trying to do. It is a maximum premium and this is the reason for pooling.

Mr. Chairman, the cost of illness can only be paid out of the moneys taken in. If enough money is not taken in, then the fees cannot be paid, or, if the demand for outgo exceeds the intake, then of course only one thing can happen, the fees must go up.

I have already explained the system of pooling, that a small factor is built into the premium of every insured person across the board and that factor is taken out each month and put into the pool in order to bring the maximum premium down below what it would have to be to carry the risk, if the risk were to carry itself.

Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) pointed out yesterday, the existing premiums, by at least one of the non-profit plans, are far in excess of what I would anticipate—and I underline that word "anticipate"—would be the approved maximum. The maximum that is now being charged, not to high-cost risks but to all individual families who insure under our plan will automatically come down. I believe that this system is a very sound one in that it brings down the cost of insurance below what these people must now pay and below that which is being paid by families who are not looked upon as particularly high-cost risks, but are charged at a rate known as community rates. To adopt the amendment offered by the hon. member would completely change this and would leave us in the position that the high-cost risks would have to carry themselves altogether.

A great deal has been said about the poor, and of course we are concerned about the poor. The bill points this out, and if they are poor or if they are in the low income groups—again, if they are not subject to income tax or if their tax is below a certain acceptable level—they are subsidized or totally supported by government funds in the first case, and partially in the second case. The aged and those who cannot afford it will be looked after. That is one of the purposes of our bill. If those who are able to afford their own insurance are high-cost risks, or are suffering from chronic illness, or if they are of an age where to carry insurance upon them costs more and they can afford it, of course they will have to pay the higher rate, and, to protect them so far as is possible by legislation, we are setting a maximum beyond which the insurance carriers cannot charge.

Again I repeat that we ought to be at least realistic about all this talk about the profit to insurance companies. I repeat what I have said so frequently, that a large number of non-profit carriers—my hon. friend, the member for Bruce spoke about them, the medical co-ops who cover a very large segment of rural Ontario—have done a tremendous job in this area. Anybody can buy insurance from them, just the same as they can from any of the other corporations. They do not make any profit and their records will show this. They have not great reserves, any more than are demanded by the superintendent of insurance in keeping with the Act.

Mr. Whicher: Would the hon. Minister say how somebody from the city of Toronto, downtown Toronto, would buy from a medical co-op in this province?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There is a medical co-op operating right in the city of Toronto. I think they call it CUMBA. It has been operating here for years.

Mr. Whicher: Is that well known to the public?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe the municipal employees, at least some of the municipal employees in some of the municipalities in the area, used to be covered by that in a group policy.

The hon. leader of the Opposition, I believe it was, suggested that we are not looking at this from the standpoint of financial resources, that we should be looking at it from the standpoint of physical needs. This is quite true. But we are also concerned about the financial resources.

I repeat, if the individual cannot afford it or if they are in an income bracket below a taxable level of $2,000 for a family, then, of course, we are concerned about the financial resources, because the public has provided, or the government has provided out of the public purse, moneys to support those. Carriers are going bankrupt, and some of the small carriers tell us that they may very well go bankrupt because of the provisions of this Act. We hope they will not, but if they cannot provide the standard contract as we have proposed in our Act, then there is not very much we can do about it.

On the OMA fees, we will come to this later on. For the information of the House, the college of physicians and surgeons has nothing to do with setting fees. It was suggested that the OMA schedule of fees could be changed at the same time. But as we come to section 20 you will find that a ceiling is put on that, at least insofar as payments under the plan are concerned, and that the fees in effect when this Act is proclaimed will obtain for the first two years, just as the maximum premium will have a ceiling put upon it.

Does the married couple go into the other bracket as soon as a new arrival comes to the home? I would expect that they would, but, whether it takes effect immediately the baby is born or not, I cannot tell you. On the cost differential as to age, certain contracts, many carriers, non-profit and profit alike, have that ruling now and have had it for a long time, that when a person reaches the age of 65 he is considered a higher cost risk. But they do not all observe it, and there are many carriers who I know are continuing to carry their healthy aged people. I believe there is a nominal charge in the case of some, 24 cents a month, I believe. One of the biggest non-profit groups has this provision when one reaches age 65 or a certain age considered as retirement age. But I cannot give you specific information as to what all of them do. I do know that into many contracts is written the provision now that they either be cancelled or they go into a different rate structure. Under the bill, without any regard to age or state of health, they must have the opportunity to buy, or to have provided for them, a standard contract.

Mr. Whicher: May I ask the hon. Minister one more question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, it would seem that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for York South is one amendment that tries to bring some commonsense into this bill. Now, the hon. Minister of Health did not know what the amendment was trying to do. Obviously, it is trying to overcome one of the greatest weaknesses in the bill, and that is to protect those who are older and those who are sick. If, as he admitted yesterday, that these people—those who are sick and those who are aged—are going to have to pay higher rates, it is obviously a very great weakness in the bill. After all, the whole idea is to spread the risk across the population, and we should have a set premium right across the board in order to protect those who need this insurance most.

The hon. Minister has said that so much goes into the pool and you have to have that money in there in order to pay it out. But we are going to have to realize that insofar as medical insurance is concerned, or so far as the whole broad spectrum of health insurance is concerned, that a large proportion of the payment of these services is going to have to come out of the consolidated revenue fund, and this section points out the whole weakness of this bill, that too much of the support of this bill is thrown upon the people who can least afford to pay. This is why we in this party are strongly in support of the amendment as suggested by the hon. member for York South.

Again, this section shows how the premiums can get completely out of hand. True, they are set for a two-year period, but do not forget we are setting an Act in operation that is going to operate, for all we know, for a long time. I hope in the very near future there is going to be some very radical amendments made in the future sittings of this House in order to make the legislation more modern and to meet its needs. But as we see it today, we know this is going to operate in the future and two years is a very small period of time. And what happens? The insurance companies under this section will have to go to the council for the approval of their fees, but the OMA who set the fees, which are set out in section 20, do not seem to have to seek anybody's approval.

Again, I think it is obvious that the hon. Minister of Health is certainly taking good care of the OMA. So that we can have a situation here where the OMA, after a two-year period, can raise its fees as far as it likes, and yet the insurance companies must have theirs approved by the council.

I am not here to defend the insurance companies. I am sure they can work out a smoke-filled room deal with the doctors in order to get a proper rate set, but it just shows that when this legislation was drawn up that there was a great hiatus between section 18 and section 20 insofar as the amount of fees is concerned.

The tragedy of it is—the essence of it is—that the person who is paying the premium is left almost utterly at the mercy of the insurance companies and the doctors, and in every section we seem to have come back to this single dominating point in this bill—that the general public, which is approximately 75 per cent of the public of this province, is virtually, insofar as costs of their medical services are concerned, at the mercy of two strong groups. And those groups are strong in any event. But when we bring in sections such as section 18, it only legalizes and makes more entrenched a power already too strong.

I would urge hon. members of this House to support the amendment as presented by the hon. member for York South in this at least; we must see to it that those people who need the protection the most, those who can least afford to pay, the aged and the sick, are assured that they are not going to be the hewers of wood and the drawers of water in this whole scheme that has been set up to help insurance interests.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give a hypothetical case here. Supposing a young man was in good health with his young family for a five-year period and then suddenly he developed some heart trouble. Does this mean that automatically, under this section, his premium could be increased? If it could, I suggest that it is entirely wrong that this once healthy person who paid a set premium, now that he is sick has to pay a higher premium. This is completely wrong and against our way of doing business in this country.

Generally speaking, we have healthy doctors looking after unhealthy patients. We have healthy nurses looking after unhealthy patients. What is wrong with me, as a healthy layman, by my pocketbook, helping to look after unhealthy patients in this country? I suggest that it should be done. Surely, this is one instance where the insurance companies have a common fee and just because a man has heart trouble the insurance premium does not go up after the policy has been issued. If I buy an insurance policy tomorrow and the premium costs me $30 for $1,000, and I develop heart trouble next year, the premium does not go up. Why? Because there is a common rate and I think that it should certainly be done in a case such as this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asks what is wrong with the healthy person looking after the unhealthy? We have been doing that; the healthy person has been looking after the unhealthy person, as indicated by the fact that a certain amount is taken out of the healthy person's premium every month and put in the pool so that the maximum premium will be less than it would otherwise be if the unhealthy person had to look after the total cost of his own illness. To liken medical services insurance to life insurance is a completely different thing altogether—

Mr. Whicher: Why—because they are both trying to make money?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course they are trying to make money. Did you ever hear of a non-profit company selling life insurance? It is built into the premium structure of the life insurance policy from the very start—

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister asked me if I ever heard of a non-profit company selling life insurance and the answer is "yes."

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, mutual companies, but they are making a profit—

Mr. Whicher: What about the co-operatives in this province? The same co-ops that are selling medical insurance at cost today are selling life insurance at cost. The hon. Minister asked me that question, and there is the answer.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Thank you for the answer.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I think if the hon. Minister would clear his mind of the actuarial jargon that seems to be in there, and would think rather in terms of the need of the people of Ontario, then he might understand more clearly the thing we are driving at. He indicated that that 10 cents, or whatever the amount may be, will be taken from the premium of a healthy person to help another person, but the fact still remains that there will be a differentiation between the amount that the poor risk, so-called, will pay and that which will be paid by the good risk.

In other words—if we could use hypothetical figures here—if the poor risk is paying $180, then the good risk will pay $150, but if something were not taken out of that $150 and added to the pool for the bad risk then the bad risk might be paying $200 instead of $180. This is the hon. Minister's argument, but why in the name of commonsense, can we not think in terms of a basic premium across the board? If it costs X number of millions of dollars to administer this plan in the province of Ontario, that number of dollars can be divided among the number of people and that is the premium rate for bad risks and good risks. In other words, those who are well will help to carry the burden of the unwell and those who are good risks will help to carry the burden of the poor risks and the cost will have evened out.

I agree with the hon. Minister that perhaps there is some compensating factor here but it still leaves the poor risk, the aged, the infirm and the halt and the blind, if you will, at high rates, while the person who has strength—and on that account, perhaps more income—at lower ones. This, we think, is a wrong principle. If we are going to think in terms of insurance of this kind, then it should be insurance. The "group" should be the people of Ontario, and even if we are going to help the people with lower incomes, then that group should be the people above the subsidy level—all the people.

As the hon. member for Bruce has said, we are going to have the weak assist the strong in this case. We want to reverse that. We want the strong to assist the weak, we want to cut right across this distinction between these two groups and we want to set one rate for all the people of this province.

Again I come back to the fact that clause 18, section 1 again asks this House to vote for something we know not of. We are asked to pass this legislation, but we still have no idea what is involved as far as cost is concerned. Between the time that this Act is passed and when it comes into effect, the Ontario medical association has the power under this legislation to raise the rate again, so it has, in effect, the power to determine what the subscription rate will be at that time.

It is true that afterward, raising the rate can be accomplished by the OMA raising its scale, but between now and the time the legislation becomes operative, it can, in effect, set the rate which will be charged at that point. This is wrong, and I think the hon. Minister ought to give this House far more information as to what the people of Ontario are going to pay. The information should be a unified price so that—if we are going to get into this kind of a bind and keep this kind of unrealistic legislation—the people of this province should know when they go to an insurance company, no matter how sick or how well they may be, exactly what they are going to pay for a standard policy in the province of Ontario.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment, of course, and I would like to give just a brief reasoning as to why. I can imagine what can happen with the present section whereby there is a maximum rate set and then the carrier can have various other rates. I have had some personal experience with insurance people both in the life insurance field and in the field of medical coverage.

They would have no trouble with the persons who they knew were going to be covered by the maximum rate. Of course, they would tell them that their health condition demanded that they be in this rate and they would get them covered. If they had three or four other rates for those in better health—and, of course, insurance companies do have areas for negotiation and for salesmanship in selling their programmes—we could have situations where the insurance man makes his first visit and he finds out that he is not going to make a quick sale and he says: "Well, after asking you a few questions I have come to the conclusion that you are not going to be coverable. It is too bad, but if you get sick you are going to have to pay your own doctor's bill." He leaves at that and the person gets pretty concerned, but the insurance man comes back the next day and says: "I have just rechecked our rate book and I find that I can cover you for this rate." And the person is tickled to death, so he buys the rate.

In all fairness, to make this plan work properly if we want to talk about sharing the cost of insurance for those who are sick, one rate is the best way to do it. It removes the discrimination, as has been mentioned in the amendment. I do not think this really does the job. I do not think this is the real method of sharing the costs, where you have one premium covering the good risk as well as the poor risk. My feeling about sharing the costs of health insurance is that you pay a premium based on your ability to pay in the same ratio that you pay income tax to cover other costs that governments are responsible for. But this is a step toward sharing the cost in an equitable manner and it does remove that area of insurance salesmanship where they have one or more rates in their books.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, whenever we raise the question of the premiums that are likely to be charged to the majority of the public when this legislation comes into effect, the hon. Minister always insists on getting out of order by referring back to that part of the bill relating to subsidization. I would suggest that we do not confuse this part of the bill with a discussion that was held under another part of the bill.

It is true that the bill provides for subsidization—indeed, for 100 per cent subsidization—of people living in stark poverty; people who are so poor that they do not even pay income tax. I was shocked to hear that there are a million such people in the province. But their medical needs, provided they are aware of their privileges, will presumably be taken care of. What we are talking about is the other 5.5 million people. There is a small number of them who may get some subsidization under this bill, but most of them will not get much. In fact, there is a group of 800,000, the hon. Minister said, eligible for subsidization; but about 600,000 of them still will not be able to afford to pay the premium even with the limited subsidization the hon. Minister proposes.

So what we are now talking about are the rates chargeable to something like 75 to 85 per cent of the people of the province. Section 18, as it now stands, purports to suggest that there will be a maximum rate of subscription imposed by law for this 75 to 85 per cent. I say that it "purports" to provide that. Actually, Mr. Chairman, the section as it now stands is like so many other sections in this bill; nothing but window-dressing. It is quite clear from what the hon. Minister has said that the maximum will be totally meaningless.

I am going to suggest to the hon. Minister that the only way to give it any meaning at all will be by the incorporation of the amendment proposed by my hon. leader. As the matter stands now, the hon. Minister has made it abundantly clear that there will be differential rates. The people whose need is greatest—that is, the people whose health needs are greatest, the people whose health is not good, the "bad risks," as the insurance industry calls them, will be subject to specially high premiums.

Now, the government, in setting its maximum, has to take that fact into account and the maximum will have to be calculated in terms of the worst risks from an insurance point of view. That may be 10 per cent of the population; therefore, there is no maximum for all the rest because the ceiling will be so high in order to make sure that insurance companies can still get their 35 to 40 per cent cut for selling costs and profits that it will be meaningless.

We are suggesting to the hon. Minister that we give some meaning to a maximum. If we establish the principle that there cannot be discrimination in the rates charged as between so-called "bad risks" and "good risks," the risks will be pooled. There will be one rate for all of them. Then it is possible to establish a maximum that means something. But as the matter now stands, your maximum will just be a maximum for a small number of people and it will leave so much leeway for the rest that there will be no maximum for them at all.

Actually, I would support the amendment of my hon. leader on an even broader principle than that. I would support it in terms of basic equity. It is just incredible that the hon. Minister quite blithely and blandly stands in front of us and suggests that it is perfectly all right that those who can afford the least are the ones that should be soaked the most. And bear in mind I am not talking about the subsidized groups. There are a great many people who will be high risks that are not within the subsidized groups; it will include some older people—older people tend to be from a health point of view in a higher risk category.

Not all of the old people in this province are going to fall within the hon. Minister's subsidized group; some of them will just be beyond it—they still will not have very high incomes but they will not qualify for subsidization. Yet there is going to be a higher premium for them. As one of the gentlemen over here pointed out, young mothers and children are high risk groups.

Let us consider this. The morbidity rate, I think they call it, is highest for human beings when the wife in a young family is still in the child-bearing age.

Mr. Thompson: Mortality rate?

Mr. Bryden: Pardon? No, morbidity rate.

Mr. Thompson: Doctor Hannah states that medical expenses are highest for women of child-bearing age, and for children under the age of one year.

Mr. Bryden: Are you denying that statement?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Bryden: Well, then, you are just denying all the evidence that has been produced over 50 years. The morbidity curve goes up for women in the child-bearing stages and goes down again for obvious reasons; the child-bearing itself will increase it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is just denying it. It is obvious that he is completely beyond his depth in this bill from beginning to end; he does not know what is in the bill; he does not know what the problems are that are being faced; and now he just denies facts that are well established. There is no point arguing with him.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What do you know about the cost ratio?

Mr. Bryden: Just to continue with the point that I was trying to make. Let us take a young family where the wife is in the child-bearing period and the family is growing; they will be one of the high risks. Let us say their income is $4,200 a year; they will not qualify under your legislation. Say it is a family with two children; they will not qualify under your legislation for any subsidy at all. They will have to pay the entire premium themselves. And from anything the hon. Minister has said, in this debate, he has been remarkably coy when we try to get down to specifics.

He does not know, he says. He is bringing legislation before us, but he does not know what it will mean. From anything that has been said it would appear to me that the kind of premium that those people will be called upon to pay will be something like $200, $225 or $250 a year. They simply will not be able to afford it. The hon. Minister's talk about setting maximums under this section of the bill is nothing but a lot of talk. It merely misleads the people. There will be no effective maximum. The hon. Minister, in this bill, has simply declared open season for the insurance companies to exploit the people and get what they can out of them.

If the hon. Minister is so concerned about cost, as he professes to be—every time we bring in an amendment to try to improve the bill a little bit, to try to make it a little more equitable, the hon. Minister always starts talking about costs—the first thing he should do is take out that 35 per cent cushion for the private insurance companies which he envisages in his rates. The cushion for profit and for selling costs.

Under a genuine public plan—universal plan—you do not need selling costs; you do not need profit; you can reduce the 35 or 40 per cent to two or three per cent for administration, especially since you already have a well-qualified administrative establishment administering hospital insurance. It would just be a matter of expanding that establishment. So please let us not hear anything more from the hon. Minister about minimizing costs. He has put before us legislation that will put costs at the highest possible level; costs to the public Treasury; costs for the private individual as subscriber. We can do nothing about this, since the government with its steamroller majority has decreed that is the way it will be, but at least within that framework, let us try to provide some equity. Let us not penalize the people who happen to be more subject to sickness than others.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would urge hon. members to support the reasonable and intelligent amendment brought forth by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the amendment of Mr. MacDonald—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, in speaking in favour of this amendment, I simply point out to the hon. Minister that he cannot, as he has attempted to do on every item we have discussed, have it both ways.

Yesterday, he stated in this House that the experience in Alberta—and I use his words for it, because I do not know myself what the experience in Alberta has been—would indicate that there are fewer than 15 per cent of the people applying under the maximum premium rate. Translated in terms of the population of the province of Ontario, that is some 1,000,000 people. The hon. Minister then proceeded to say that in the province of Ontario, because of the arrangements either to defray the whole of the cost for those people who are in dire straits, or to defray a portion of the cost for another 800,000 people who are in slightly less dire straits, there will be a few people in the province of Ontario who will pay that maximum rate.

If that is the case, and if the number is going to be as small as the hon. Minister indicated in his remarks, then surely the hon. Minister can now accept this amendment and include that group in the plan for all contracts so that the premium rate to those people, rather than being at the maximum, will be identical with the premium rate for other people in the province of Ontario. Then we can remove this iniquity of charging those people whose health is poor, more than those people who are in good health, and therefore doubly penalizing them, not only for having ill health, but because they will not be able to earn the kind of money to pay the extra premium.

If the hon. Minister really accepts the basis that he put forward to this House yesterday, then he must accept the basis of this argument. If he does not accept it, and if in fact, there are a large number of people who are going to pay the maximum rate, then it is even more essential that those people should have the benefit of a uniform rate which is applicable to all the people in the province of Ontario.

I think the hon. Minister should comment on the complete inconsistency of the viewpoint which he expressed yesterday and I think he should comment specifically as to the reasons why he is not prepared to accept the amendment of the hon. leader of this party, by giving us some statement, other than his desire not to interfere at all in the business of the insurance companies.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. MacDonald's amendment, say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister has no answer. He just sits there and takes it.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. MacDonald's amendment, please stand.

All opposed to Mr. MacDonald's amendment, please stand.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 25, the "nays" 50.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost and section 18 is part of the bill.

We welcome students from grade 8, Hillcrest School, Owen Sound.

On section 19:

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, on section 19, we have in here in this section, once again, recognition of the private companies who serve particular groups, or as the government prefers to call them classes, at the expense of those who are unable to take advantage of being in these certain groups or classes. For example, PSI has a standard rate, pretty well based on the individual or family plan and it has that rate open to everybody.

It is true that a private company can come along and say, "We give better and cheaper rates than those non-profit plans. In other words, even though we, as a company, have to compete in an insurance market, and we have to make a profit, we can still come along and sell policies to people at a lower rate." This might be true, if you are within a particular group. Again, lawyers can usually get their health insurance at a lower rate than the average person. Engineers have one of the lowest rates, certainly the lowest life insurance rates of anybody in the country, so that if you are lucky to be within a particular group, or a particular class, you can get insurance at a lower rate.

But what we should do, even under the present principle of this bill, is protect the non-profit plans. For example, in 1964, PSI opened its plan to anyone who wanted to join, and as a result, many of the aged and sick joined, and PSI lost in 1964, $1,800,000. In so doing, PSI did a good public service, but at the same time it is obvious that such a plan cannot keep operating under the present system.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, a private insurance company that insists on having nothing to do with the aged or the sick can certainly come along and sell a plan to a certain class.

Even the insurance people call it a group plan, and I understand the hon. Minister says he uses that word "class" because that is what his legal advisers have told him. But certainly in the insurance trade and insurance business, the word "group" is accepted. I think the word "class" appeals more to his Tory mentality than the word "group."

But I would like to emphasize to the hon. members of this House, through you, Mr. Chairman, that by introducing this section as it is, we are again putting the non-profit operating plans at a disadvantage to the profit-making plans, and secondly, we are again putting the main risk, the main financial burden, on those who can least afford to pay—that is those who are older and those who are sick, because it is most difficult for them to get into a particular plan where they have any particular advantage.

Again, in this whole legislation, we are missing what is most important and that is to have a standard plan right across the board at a certain basic minimum premium. Once again this section is another further step to entrench the profit-making plans.

Therefore, I would like to move an amendment, Mr. Chairman, and the essence of that amendment is that we should not allow a class-risk basis. That is, in line 5 of subsection 1 of section 19, the word "not" shall be inserted between the words "shall" and "be," and also in line 5, the word "not" between the words "and" and "on" shall be deleted and inserted in its stead shall be the words

"shall be." Then subsection 1 would read as follows:

Any licensed carrier may from time to time but not more often than once in any 12-month period, adjust its subscription rates in respect of standard contracts in accordance with its normal business practice but any such adjustment shall not be on a class-risk basis and shall be on an individual or family basis and shall in no event exceed the maximum subscription rates for the time being in force.

I so move.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter moves that section 19 be amended as follows: The word "not" shall be inserted between the words "shall" and "be" in line 5, and so in line 5, the word "not" between the words "and" and "on" shall be deleted and inserted in its stead shall be the words "shall be," so the subsection shall read:

Any licensed carrier may from time to time but not more often than once in any 12-month period adjust its subscription rates in respect of standard contracts in accordance with its normal business practice but any such adjustment shall not be on a class-risk basis and shall be on an individual or family basis and shall in no event exceed the maximum subscription rates for the time being in force.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite certain that the wording of the amendment conveys the meaning which I believe the hon. member for Parkdale intended. I am going to take it that the amendment is placed by the hon. member for Parkdale before the committee of the House means in substance that at all times there will be a single subscription rate for all individuals, a single subscription rate for all families of two, and a single subscription rate for all families of three or more, so that there will be in fact uniform rates for individuals, uniform rates for families of two and uniform rates for all families of three or more. We will then get away from this invidious distinction between the health risk of various individuals in our community and their having to pay different premium subscription rates.

The other item which I would comment on, and which is not included in this amendment, is that this section provides that the licensed carrier itself may change that subscription rate every 12 months without the approval of anybody at all, without anybody suggesting to him that he is not entitled to change it or that the change is not consistent with the purpose of the bill. It would be our wish the the government would consider, of its own volition, to provide at least at the beginning of this section that any such changes should be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Without those words, it simply reinforces the conclusion which we have been driven to, that the hon. Minister is not prepared in any way at any time to interfere with the activities of licensed carriers.

My colleague, the hon. member for Woodbine, has conclusively shown to this House that there is going to be one maximum subscription rate for each of those three groups that I have spoken about, and that that rate is going to be so high that in fact it is not going to impede, in any way, the area within which the licensed carrier may, in its own discretion, from time to time, every year if it chooses to do so, change the subscription rate.

For that reason, if my interpretation of the amendment of the hon. member for Parkdale is correct, we will vote in favour of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on this. I hope that every hon. member of the Opposition will vote against the amendment if it means what I read it to mean. This amendment would really give rise to a jungle, nothing else, because it would mean that any carrier could charge every family a different premium structure. I think I am quite certain the hon. member does not mean that.

This means that no insurance carrier can alter a premium unless he does it on a class risk; he cannot single out one individual because of occupation or because of certain other reasons and put up his premium without involving the whole of the class. The way the hon. member has worded his amendment, it looks as if they are not to be allowed to do that, but they are to pick out each individual and therefore apply whatever premium structure within the maximum they like to each individual.

The hon. member for Riverdale suggested that we should make all changes in premium structure subject to the order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. I am afraid I have to say to you, Mr. Chairman, my department has no authority to do that or to recommend that, because under the terms of this bill—and this is the only insurance bill outside of the hospital plan that we have anything to do with—we only have right of control over the maximum premium for the standard contract.

Mr. Bryden: We would like you to assume control.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have no control over general insurance.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, just to clarify that. The idea of the amendment was that we wanted to do away with this class-risk basis, the fact that a private insurance company, even under this scheme, could cause a great deal of harm to a non-profit organization.

For example, even today it is possible for an individual or a family under certain circumstances to join PSI. This is what I had in mind. PSI has a certain standard rate. There are also those schemes where a private insurance company can set up a class group, such as lawyers or engineers, and it can certainly undersell PSI under certain circumstances. I realize this section has to operate on the principle that the private insurance companies are going to exist, which principle I do not like but we are bound by it and that has been decided by this House. Under these subsections we then must try to change the Act so that first of all we can have a standard plan across the province, and then also, if that fails, where these various groups, whether profit or non-profit, have an opportunity to sell insurance, we do not wish to put the non-profit schemes at a disadvantage, which this section as the government has it, makes it read.

But I completely agree with what the hon. member for Riverdale said. What we need in this province is a standard plan with a standard rate right across the board so that the expense of those who are the most sickly and the most aged is borne by the population as a whole.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister's explanations of why these amendments we propose should not be adopted always require a little clarification because they usually succeed in confusing the issue. I may say that as far as we are concerned we are not voting for the specific words contained in any proposed amendment, we are voting for or against the principles in them. The government has all sorts of qualified draftsmen who can straighten out any drafting problems if the words do not exactly carry out the intention as expressed by the member moving the amendment. I think that is a matter of no consequence at all. The important thing is to vote on the principle of the amendment, and as we understand the intention of the hon. member's amendment, we think it is sound and we will vote for it.

I would like to make one or two observations on the hon. Minister's comments with regard to the freedom of action given to licensed carriers to change their rates once every 12 months without let or hindrance. The hon. Minister says that he has no power to alter that situation; of course he has no power, but we are in the process of making a law. We can change the law so that he will have the power; that is our proposition. He seems to want to be in a position of being powerless vis-à-vis insurance companies. That is the import of the last dozen clauses we have dealt with in this bill, that the insurance companies and their representatives will have the power and the hon. Minister will have the excuse that he could not do anything about it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): How can you get so mad at yourself so fast—no one's mad at you.

Mr. MacDonald: What an inane interjection!

Mr. Bryden: We can recognize that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions, when he puts his mind to it, can be a master of inanity—if nothing else. He apparently is not interested in the bill. I can understand it; I would think that he would want to remove himself as far from it as possible. It seems that very few of the hon. gentlemen on the government side of the House are really very interested in trying to present any justification for this bill. The—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are not interested in obstruction!

Mr. Bryden: Well, I know your attitude. The trouble is that this bill is not going to give the people any medical insurance, and we are interested in getting them medical insurance. That is why we are making an effort to make even minor improvements in what is essentially a bad bill. We can see that it is a difficult effort. We are facing people with closed minds. Indeed, they are minds that never were open at any time; they are people who do not want to hear anything and who do not—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): We might listen to you if you made your language acceptable.

Mr. Bryden: I think my language is quite acceptable.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, it is not, and what you are saying now is quite incorrect.

Mr. Bryden: Are you suggesting that anything I have said is not correct?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I certainly am.

Mr. Bryden: I suggest that a good many of those gentlemen over there have never given any consideration to what is in this bill. I cannot imagine that they would go along with the totally unacceptable principles that are in it, and the only explanation I can see is that they really do not know what is in it. Their silence indicated that they are not much interested.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment of the member for Parkdale say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

All in favour of the amendment, please stand.

All those opposed, please stand.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 25, the "nays" 51.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment is lost and section 19 forms part of the bill.

On section 20:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, on section 20, this is probably one of the most extraordinary sections in the whole of the bill and I suggest, sir, that it defies every principle of democratic government. Surely within government there is a responsibility by the Treasury benches to have some control over finances, and here we have a situation where there is almost a blank cheque to the doctors.

All of us respect the practice of medicine, but all of us realize that people are human and fallible. I am particularly concerned because there is one doctor in this Legislature—the hon. Minister of Health—and I was surprised that he had emphasized profit in the introduction of the bill, and had re-asserted that he was for the principle of profit in health.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did not.

Mr. Thompson: You certainly did. When we were talking on the bill you said you were all for insurance companies and what was wrong with them making profits on this health scheme?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I never said any such thing.

Mr. Thompson: We can quote from Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have told you time and time again I do not care whether they make a profit.

Mr. Thompson: You mentioned there is nothing wrong in connection with the insurance companies in health services making profit.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I never said such a thing; find it.

Mr. Thompson: I will, sir, and I will quote this to you. But I am saying that if you did not say that, you are certainly giving opportunity for it in this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Ah, you would like me to have said it.

Mr. Thompson: No, I would not. It is the last thing I would like you to have said.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You would like to get me to say it all wrong.

Mr. Thompson: I hate to see the clay feet that have been exposed on the hon. Minister of Health. I told him once before, there was a day when I looked on him as a radical reformer.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, not your type of reformation! We are reformers in this respect.

Mr. Thompson: Some of his statements, as I say, have shown his feet of clay.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I thought one time that he was on a white charger, steady in the saddle and pushing this government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I am always uncomfortable on a horse.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Thompson: Do you know what has happened to you, and I say this before the Chairman leaves, with his biblical background, you remind me a little bit of Absalom—

An hon. member: Do not bring religion into it.

Mr. Thompson: Absalom was hung by his hair as he travelled through the forest, and I suggest to you, sir, that you have abdicated the responsibility you have in this section. You have given a blank cheque to the doctors. How can you possibly estimate your costs? Perhaps this is one of the reasons for your silence on this. As a Scottish man with a Scottish background, it would seem to me that would be the one thing you would be coming out with—the cost of this, the cost of premiums, and so on. There is still a blur about all that. How can the other carriers possibly estimate the costs?

There is nothing to prevent, nothing whatsoever to prevent the Ontario medical association from doubling or tripling the doctors' fee schedule on May 31, 1966. And you may say they would never do it! I come back to the point again that they increased it—10 per cent to 20 per cent, as I understand—in the past year. Some people have said, and I am sure this is unfair to them, that one of the reasons why the college of physicians and surgeons increased the fees was in anticipation of the Hagey commission—

An hon. member: Straighten that out, it was the OMA.

Mr. Thompson: —and because of your bill coming in. I would suggest, sir, that this creates a very real problem.

Mr. Chairman: Do you have another amendment?

Mr. Thompson: Yes. I am trying to think of some analogy to this. If the government were to pass, for example, a bill saying that 1,000,000 people can be provided with television sets and then it said to the television operators or the people who fix television sets, "You fellows go out and you have carte blanche to fix these sets all over the place. As for the fees you will charge, we will pay the fees for the 1,000,000 people, and you can raise the fees when you want to with no advisory board to check on it. Just you go ahead on it," would you not consider that irresponsibility? It is because of this, because of the carte blanche to the people who are going to be carrying through on this bill that they can raise fees to whatever they want at any time, that I move that section 20 be amended by adding subsection (4) to read as follows:

No increase in fees at any time will be enforced until approved by the medical services insurance council.

May I say, sir, that if, as we had hoped in the previous amendment, the medical services insurance council had had some of the representation as suggested in a previous amendment, I would still have a greater feeling of security that there could then be an examination and a justification for any raise in fees which might take place. But because that has been lost, we still make a last-ditch stand in the hope that this amendment might come through. I argue with the hon. Minister on this and I suggest to him as a reasonable man, taking the example of the TV operator, that he knows that is wrong and surely he realizes that in this section it must have been an omission on his part. I am sure he can see the necessity for the amendment which I propose.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am attempting to adapt what I would like to have presented to the House to what the hon. leader of the Opposition has moved. He has, in his way, incorporated two of the three points that I wanted to make, and with that amendment, presumably I will have to rest content. I have a third point that I would like to suggest in a moment in the hope that perhaps he can incorporate it, since our rules permit of only one amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I read through this bill I have some difficulty in deciding which is the worst section, because one is almost inclined to purple passages in talking about some of them in terms of their effect. But in my view this is the worst of the whole lot, not only for the reasons the hon. leader of the Opposition has presented in that it makes a travesty of all of the normal controls in the expenditure of public money, but for two or three other reasons.

In the first place, the bill states, for example, that the schedule of fees will be the schedule of fees at the time the bill goes into effect. He has intimated to us on another occasion that it is likely to be July 1, 1966. In other words, you have an open invitation here for another increase in fees, and do not have any illusions it may well come.

An hon. member: He wants it.

Mr. MacDonald: Indeed, he is asking for it. It is an invitation for another increase in the OMA schedule of fees between now and July 1, 1966, if this is the time that the bill is to go into effect. That is the first point.

The second point is that this bill is now going to increase the payment to the doctors—at least those who are in PSI, if not in some of the insurance companies—to 100 per cent of the OMA schedule of fees rather than 90 per cent. On what basis any Minister of the Crown, and particularly a man who is a medical doctor and is almost in a position of conflict of interests vis-à-vis his colleagues in the profession, can come into this House and say that what the doctors themselves have been content with—a 90 per cent payment on the OMA schedule of fees—is going to be increased so that out of the public Treasury he places $10 million in addition to their already highest incomes in the province of Ontario, I do not know.

The latest annual report of PSI—actually it is 1963, there may be a 1964 figure—indicates $52 million was paid to the doctors out of PSI and this is on the basis of an 85 per cent OMA schedule of fees. Now it is going to 100 per cent, so that you hand them now something in excess of $60 million. The figure for 1964 and 1965 is likely to be up at $65 million or $70 million, because there has been this kind of an increase.

I ask the hon. Minister, how can he justify this kind of thing? How can he justify in conjunction with this the fact that 250,000 people are on medical welfare in the province of Ontario, to whom this government, through The Department of Public Welfare, has been paying a nominal amount—$1.25 a month, $15 a year, a total outlay of approximately $2 million? As was pointed out in the Hagey report, they pay doctors for precisely the same services, no more work at all. If this bill covers these people who are unfortunate enough to have to be on medical welfare, the doctors' income will jump, from this area alone, from approximately $2 million to $12.9 million. In other words, once again out of the public Treasury, you are going to dip in and hand to the doctors an extra $10 million.

The simple fact of the matter is that this increase is a gratuitous handout from the public Treasury to a profession which is now the highest paid profession. I have said many times—I have no objection to it being the highest paid profession—I know of no other profession that deserves to be the highest paid profession in view of its contribution to human needs—but the proposition is that the doctors are now receiving on an average in excess of $19,000 a year, yet we should dip into the public Treasury and hand them on a silver platter, overnight, for precisely the same work, something in excess of $20 million more. If this is a Scotsman I am talking to, I do not know what sort of renegade Scotsman he is, because he certainly is not protecting the public Treasury.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You are using dirty adjectives.

Mr. MacDonald: I am using them in reference to what I thought was one of the finest qualities of the Scot. He would guard not only his own money, but particularly, when he holds it in the position of trust, as a Minister of the Crown, the public's money.

What justification, I ask the hon. Minister, what conceivable justification—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I heard you the first time.

Mr. MacDonald: What conceivable justification can he give to this House for altering existing procedures so that he hands to the doctors that amount more of money? Mr. Chairman, there is very good reason as to why in PSI they fixed the figure at 85 per cent, very good reason.

An hon. member: Ninety per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, 90 per cent or 85 per cent, whichever figure it happens to be at the time. The very good reason is that if you have paid all of your bills and you have no poor bills that you have to chase, or none that are not going to be paid at all, you will end up with as much money in pocket as though you were getting 100 per cent from those who pay and do not get from some other, if I may use this horrible term, bad risk from the doctor's point of view. There is justification for the 85 per cent or 90 per cent, which varies in various jurisdictions.

This government not only is solicitous to the insurance company, but it is solicitous to the medical profession. In fact, months ago, when the Hagey report came down, this is what the Globe and Mail said, the government is far more interested in meeting the needs of the insurance companies and the medical profession than they are in meeting the needs of the people of the province of Ontario. This was their reference to the Hagey report, and I hope after the revelations of the last few days, as we go through this clause by clause, that the Globe and Mail will be convinced that this bill is subject to exactly the same criticism as the criticism they attributed to the Hagey report when it came down.

Now there is a final point, Mr. Chairman. It just makes a shambles of the whole government's alleged approach on maximum premiums. When we were talking a few moments ago the hon. Minister stated that income must match outgo. That is sensible, but will the hon. Minister tell this House how he is going to make income match outgo? He has set down in this section, that the OMA schedule of fees shall be whatever is in effect at the time the bill comes into effect and it will remain that way for two years. Beyond that, the OMA regains complete freedom to change its fees whenever it wishes without negotiating with anybody.

Now how is the government going to fix maximums—maximum premiums that are meaningful—when the doctors are going to be able to increase their schedule of fees and in effect raid the Treasury, deplete the funds, so that the income will not be able to match your outgo? You have actually no control over it at all.

I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, if there is one organization in this country which has shown that it is ruthless in terms of looking after its own interests, it is the medical profession. Somebody at one time commented that they act just like the teamsters. It was at a time when public opinion was rather critical of the teamsters in their actions in protecting their own interests, and this is what the medical profession has done. They did it in Saskatchewan and some hon. members cheered for an action of which they should have been ashamed. I expect maybe they learned their lesson and they will never resort to it again.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment that the hon. leader of the Opposition has brought in says that any fee schedule change will have to be subject to the medical council. This is an alternative way of meeting the proposition that is now in the bill, namely, that it will be whatever happens to be the schedule of the fees when the bill comes into effect. Quite frankly, I would like to see it set as the schedule of fees as of June 1, 1965. Why should this House, under the leadership of this government, in effect, invite the OMA to introduce another increase in fees before the medical council is set up? This is what they have done in effect.

Also, presumably, under the amendment the hon. leader of the Opposition has introduced they will not have freedom to do as they please after the two years without negotiating with anybody. It will have to be okayed by the medical services council, so that in a fashion the two points that I have in mind have been met by what the hon. leader of the Opposition has stated.

But I come back to the one that has not been met, and that is: Why, when the doctors are going to be paid out of this fund, should you pay 100 per cent of the schedule of OMA fees, when they themselves have not followed this practice in their own plan, PSI, up until now? Why should you have this additional handout of the public Treasury? I am wondering whether the hon. leader of the Opposition, in the fashion that has been followed on a number of times to keep within the rules of our House, would add to his amendment that the payment should be made on the basis of 85 per cent, rather than the 100 per cent OMA schedule of fees? I am sorry, 90 per cent!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would concur completely with the amendment that you make on this. I have been looking again just at PSI rates and I talked to people previously about why these rates are so high. Again I re-emphasize that to a large extent it has been because of the sudden change of schedule of fees by the college of physicians and surgeons and the OMA.

May I say also, to the hon. Minister, if he read Joan Hollobon's articles as thoroughly as I am sure he has, he knows that doctors can be as fallible as anyone else; and he has read where one doctor had made $80,000. I was talking to someone a couple of weeks ago, someone connected with the medical profession, in fact a doctor himself, and he told me that in Toronto there are 200 doctors who are making over $100,000 a year.

I suggest to you, sir, that you did say that you had no worries about profit being made in connection with health. I want to quote to you your remarks on this. This is on page 3529. Here is the hon. Minister of Health giving carte blanche to the doctors. This is the kind of philosophy he has and I quote him:

I really cannot become worried about whether the insurance companies make a profit or not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is an entirely different thing.

Mr. Thompson: You are referring to health services on this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I do not care if they do not make a profit. I have no interest in their profit. I said this in the context of stating to the House that the indemnity carriers have undersold the non-profit plans. If they did that and still made a profit then I think they deserve to do business, because the non-profit plan, as has been rightly accepted by the hon. members of the Opposition, is the plan to be advocated for our people; if they can buy it more cheaply than that, more power to them.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest, sir, that if you are concerned about people buying health coverage more cheaply, then you should have read that Hall commission far more thoroughly.

The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) said he has an abhorrence of Saskatchewan; you should have checked that emotion and looked at Saskatchewan and looked at the fee of $24 in comparison with the fee you are contemplating.

All right, I am repeating this and repeating it—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, it is not, that is only a part of it!

Mr. Thompson: Well what are you doing? Do you mean to say that you are suggesting in this bill that by the payment of $178—or it could be $200, we do not know—you are suggesting the people will get complete health coverage? There are great gaps in your whole approach, great gaps in connection with health coverage that they pay for, and still they have to pay for hospital services. There are a number of areas where, by compulsion—let me emphasize that—I am proud to be able to contribute through my taxes to pay for research, to pay for hospitals. The premiums alone do not pay. I am proud to pay for a number of the research advances and I have to pay for it. I hate this hypocrisy of saying that there is no compulsion in connection with health.

I simply say to you that I agree thoroughly with what the hon. leader of the new party has said. As far as I am concerned, and I realize it is very difficult to know which is the worst section in this ridiculously weak Act, but I suggest this one is.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Eglinton.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition has suggested that there has been a doctor who has earned some $80,000 yearly. He has referred to some doctors in the Toronto area that have earned over $100,000 yearly; he did not tell the House whether it was on the basis of the OMA scale or not. The truth of the matter is that by having a schedule we are restricting the doctors.

Mr. Bryden: They are the highest paid group in the country.

Mr. Reilly: Yes. Of 11,000 doctors that we have in the province, 8,000 of them now operate under the OMA schedule and 3,000 operate beyond the OMA schedule and without it. What we are doing is saying to them that if they want to come in and operate under this plan, they must adhere to a schedule.

Mr. Thompson: He made them change the schedule.

Mr. Reilly: They changed it. Two years from now you suggest perhaps there could be a change. I am suggesting to you that, if there is a change two years from now, what would actually happen is that there would be an outcry for a public, universal, compulsory scheme throughout the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I assure the hon. member for Eglinton, who is a very fair man, that the word that they had changed it in the last year—they raised it 20 per cent.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party has suggested that perhaps we should continue to serve the people who are on welfare on the basis that we have done formerly.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not say that.

Mr. Reilly: He has suggested it; he did not say it in so many words, but he has suggested that they now receive somewhere between $2 million and $3 million, and under this proposal, they will receive between $11 million and $12 million. Now I am suggesting to the House, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps the treatment they received formerly was not as complete—not nearly as complete a service, as what they are going to receive under a universal scheme such as provided here.

Surely the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party is not suggesting that people should come with their hands out, and ask that people should give of their skilled services at a lower rate. Surely the professional men are entitled to the rate, whatever the rate may be, whether they are dealing with people on welfare or people who are receiving large amounts of money for their services.

Surely the New Democratic Party leader will agree with me, and with other hon. members of the House, that they are not entitled to a lesser service because they happen to be on welfare—

Mr. MacDonald: In the framework of the right kind of Medicare policy, your argument would be right, but not with this patchwork plan.

Mr. Reilly: —and on all services. So under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, the only reason I rose to my feet was because I heard one of the hon. members here say that perhaps the hon. Minister had some conflict of interests and I thought that, under the circumstances, nobody in this House could associate me with a conflict of interests in the interests of the medical or insurance business.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would be inclined to say this, that perhaps nobody has done more for the doctors and for the insurance companies than the hon. members of the New Democratic Party. They say that we have created a bonanza for them. It has been done through the aid of the New Democratic Party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): How do you explain that?

Mr. Reilly: The hon. member for Sudbury asked me to explain it and I would be delighted to. In 1950 I think we had 25 per cent of the people here who were covered by some kind of surgical or medical insurance. By 1962 we had 75 per cent of the people covered. This was brought about because of creating a need in the minds of people that they should be covered from the standpoint of health insurance; and in this way members of the NDP have contributed, innocently or intentionally—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: I shall be delighted to relay those remarks to the House, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Young: When the hon. leader of the Opposition says to include us, I cannot help but think back to his statement a few minutes ago about Absalom who rode through the forest and got caught up in his hair, because this is the only Liberal Party in Canada which is talking in these terms today and so the horse of the Liberal Party has gone out from under the hon. leader of the Opposition and he is hanging there. However, we are glad to see him hanging there, and we are glad to see him working in this way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as far as this section 20 is concerned, it is the culmination, I think, of the slickest operation that the doctors of Ontario have ever performed, and today, as they are scrubbing up after that operation, they are rubbing their hands in glee at the way they have been able to use their scalpels and implant into the mind of the hon. Minister and the hon. members of the Treasury benches the idea that they should have 100 per cent of their schedule fees all along the line.

I say this is the slickest operation because I do not think that the general practitioners across the board have ever thought that they wanted that. I talked to a good many of my doctor friends and they would be quite happy to continue the scale that PSI is paying.

Even today they still have to do quite a bit of charity work, work for which they get no pay. People come in in good faith, who are not covered by insurance or PSI, and the doctor sends the bill and he just does not get paid. He has to put it into the hands of a collection agency and the agency has expense and trouble and bother. It means that if this plan comes in and they get all their bills paid, it will cut down their expense, and so they would be quite happy to have the bills pro rated, as they are pro rated today.

One of my doctor friends told me the other night about a payment on account from the medical welfare fund. He was getting 85 per cent of his fee for work which he had done and he felt he was doing pretty well and was rather pleased with the kind of service that he was getting through that fund. But these people now are going to be transferred to the so-called "free" section of the plan and the 100 per cent is coming in.

Mr. Chairman, it just does not seem to be commonsense for us to pass legislation which puts the stamp of approval on the 100 per cent, because I do not think that most of the doctors themselves would ask for this. There is no question that if the hon. Minister went to the rank and file of the Ontario medical association and said that he was willing to pay them 85 per cent of scale, there would be no objection to this.

I would hope that some bargaining may be done in the future in this respect. Perhaps some of it may be done by the hon. Minister, and certainly it will be done by industry and by the other plans of this nature. But to enshrine in legislation this kind of scale, seems to me to be extremely uncalled for and the kind of thing this Legislature should not be guilty of at this moment.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge that this amendment be supported by this House and that certainly the fee schedule in operation now should be adopted as the one which is going to be carried through—for at least the first two years—and that the 85 per cent feature be incorporated into the legislation. As I said before, I do not think there is going to be any great objection from the rank and file of the doctors if this is done.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and perhaps he will correct me if I am wrong, it proposes to place the earnings of the medical profession under the control of a government agency. For my own information, I would be interested to know what other major groups outside the public service have their income controlled by a government agency. It seems to me that we would be substantially placing the doctors in a position different from other members of our community, and a position which might be regarded as intolerable.

So far as the points made by the hon. member for York South are concerned, I suspect that the Ontario medical association will be quite prudent in the determination of its fee schedule in the future because I think it would recognize that if it was not, it might bring many of the carriers, both private and doctor-sponsored and commercial, into economic chaos and ruin, which would put its own profession very much more quickly under the direct gun of this Legislature.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I hope the hon. member for Yorkview, who now has the hon. leader of the Opposition attached by the hair to his particular limb, will not saw it off.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health, through you, has the medical profession of this province requested that after this plan comes into effect, they be paid 100 per cent of the fees, whereas at the present time they are only paid 90 per cent through PSI? Have they requested this?

If they have, and held a stone over the hon. Minister's head, I could see where he would be willing to attempt to fight this legislation through this Legislature. But if they have not requested, and I doubt very much if they have, then I would say that there is no conceivable excuse why this government should take money from the taxpayers of this province and give it to the medical profession, who already are the highest-paid profession in this province. Like other hon. members in this Legislature, I have no quarrel as to why they should not be the highest, because I think that they do a wonderful duty to mankind as a whole, but on the other hand they have been quite content up to the moment in getting 90 per cent of the fees as laid down in PSI. Why all of a sudden the taxpayers of this province should have to pay an additional 10 per cent through the grace of the hon. Minister of Health of this province is absolutely beyond me. Last year, as I understand it, approximately $50 million was paid out by PSI to the doctors of this province and the hon. Minister of Health this afternoon suggested that $55 million be given to them instead of the $50 million.

This may be all right in the city of Toronto, where you talk in big figures and big incomes are made, but I appeal to the rural members of the Conservative Party—I appeal to members, for example, like the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Olde), who comes from a rural area, or the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. McNeil), or many of the rest here. When you go back to your small towns and villages, where the doctor is already making $20,000 or $25,000 a year and is a highly respected citizen of that area, say to the people that you represent, "They have not even asked for an additional ten per cent of the fees, but we, the Conservative government of this province, are going to give it to them, the poor medical profession. Why, my goodness, we should cry for them."

They are making more money than they know what to do with now, but this Minister of Health and this government is going to take the money, particularly in these cases where the fees are going to be exceptionally high, and by giving the doctors an extra ten per cent, which I fully believe they have not even asked for—the hon. Minister of Health certainly has not suggested that they have asked for it, so far this afternoon—he is going to make the fees additionally higher than the figures quoted for last year, by giving an additional $5 million.

If I cannot get to the heart of the government or those hon. members who represent the city of Toronto or the highly industrialized areas, I say to you rural members who represent the farmers of this province, whose net income is in the neighbourhood of $1,500 a year, and who represent the poor areas of this province, have you got the gumption to go back to your people and say, "The doctors have not asked for this extra ten per cent but we are going to give it to them anyway, and you poor people, who are the high risks, are going to pay this money."

Mr. Chairman, this is absolutely inconceivable to me. I hope that the hon. Minister of Health will tell us in this instance he has made a mistake. Evidently in all the other sections that we have had in this bill, he has not made one single error, but I want him to admit that he is not infallible and that in this one instance he has made one mistake, and that the doctors, who are the highest paid people in the province today, are going to be very happy by getting the 90 per cent fees that they got last year. Particularly do I emphasize this when I am positive that they never asked for the 100 per cent fee in the first place.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, there are two things that the hon. members of the Conservative government in this House like to do, and like some of their friends want to be able to do, and that is to set their own income levels. Certainly, I have heard no one of the Opposition yet say that he felt that the medical profession was making too much money, but what I take the emphasis as and the complaint as, is that they should not have the right to increase their rates, the government should not give them this right without justification and without putting to the public the reasons why they should have the increase.

Certainly, there are groups in this province and in this country today that have to go through lengthy steps of negotiations, even to the point of taking economic power on a picket line, to gain a few cents out of the product that they produce. This is all part of our democratic system.

In the past two years, PSI raised its cost twice. I came before this House in January, 1964, on the first increase and asked the hon. Prime Minister at least to have an investigation and show good cause and justification for the increase. Of course, the answer we got in so many words, was that the government, the hon. Prime Minister of this province, did not wish to interfere in the pricing of a free-enterprise system.

But I feel that it is the responsibility of government at least to give some direction and some control, if necessary, to a monopoly and to a group which has so much importance to our society. I have said before that I have not complained about the income of the medical profession, but the time must come, when we are going into the whole field of medical insurance and into the broad field of comprehensive coverage in the coming years, that there has to be some control and direction as to what the medical profession and the insurance carriers can charge for their services.

If other groups in our society have to be open to public scrutiny in gaining a fair share of the product, then everyone should be under the same responsibility. The Hydro workers in Toronto at the present time, who have been bargaining for some months, are now in the likelihood of being faced with a dictatorial approach—compulsory arbitration. I still have hopes that it will not be necessary, but this is what one group of our society has to do to gain an increase in its purchasing power, and others just have the right to establish their own rates and no one seems to want to make them justify the rates.

I think the time has come when all sections of our society must be responsible for what they charge to the consuming public.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, this section, like all others in the bill, cannot be read alone; it must be read in the context of the other sections that are referable to it. Of course, this one must be read in relation to subsection 5 of section 4, and subsection 2 of section 18. I would say that the statute is positively neurotic—a good medical term—about changes in maximum subscription rates.

There will be few present who will be able to tell me of instances where the price of any service or product has gone down in the last 25 years. The trend, of course, is to increase prices. But one will note, of course, that there is an interaction between the amount paid to doctors—who are the very warp and woof of the medical care plan—and their services and the subscription rates charged by the licensed carriers. Indeed, in anticipation of increases in maximum subscription rates, I will never get over the startled feeling I had when I read subsection 5 of section 4, where it says in mandatory terms—not permissive—that the corporation shall recommend to the council from time to time changes in maximum subscription rates, they are required to do it by law. If they sit silent and do not recommend changes, then somebody is going to say to them: "You are not doing your job; you are not obeying the very definite and specific provisions of section 4."

Then again, in section 18, there is a little window-dressing, because they put in there that they cannot raise the rates more than once in any year; in other words, they are saying: "Boys, we must have a little restraint." Now we come to section 20 and it clearly anticipates that, after the two-year period, there are going to be changes in the schedule of fees of the association from time to time. In other words, they are going to go up. There is going to be an ascending curve over the years, I suppose, as the Ontario medical association feels that it is paid inadequately for the services that it performs.

Now, I say to the hon. member for Forest Hill that it does not readily come to my mind whereby other professions are regulated in the amount of income they shall be able to earn. But I do say this to him, that my learned friend, the hon. member for Downsview, and myself strove mightily this winter to have a regulation imposed upon the amount of income that lawyers earn from the munificence of this government. And we are successful to the extent that the report of the public accounts committee tabled yesterday recommends certain procedures whereby we shall regulate the amount that professionals may charge from the public purse.

I do not think it is offensive to good sense, to morality or to good economics, for the public Treasury to regulate any person who is drawing benefits from it. That is protection of the public moneys; that is exercising care and restraint upon their squandering. We cannot treat the public moneys with the sense of lavishing them on any professional group. So we merely say to the doctors, in accordance with the amendment of my hon. leader, that if you are going to be paid from the public purse, then we have the right to exercise a limit on the amount of payment that you may take for your services.

Mr. Dunlop: Does the hon. member restrict the amendment so that it applies only to the first section?

Mr. Sopha: No, to the whole thing, but—

Mr. Dunlop: Both public and private?

Mr. Sopha: Both public and private, because they are inextricably interlocked here.

Mr. Dunlop: Would the hon. member do that with the lawyers, too?

Mr. Sopha: Indeed.

Mr. Dunlop: I am glad to hear the hon. member say that.

Mr. Sopha: In any system of legal aid, I would not feel it was a proper system unless there was a limit prescribed by the guardians of the public purse. Indeed, I believe that. Let me tell my friend, the hon. member for Forest Hill, by illustration, that I pointed out the payment of $11,000 to a law firm downtown to draft the statute of this Legislature. I just wish they would pay $11,000 to some law firm to write a better one than this.

Mr. Chairman: As many as are in favour—

Mr. Bryden: No, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid this is far from over. We have, for the past number of sections, been dealing with those parts of the bill that string the public up so that they can be plucked by the insurance companies; here we have come to the $20 million melon for the medical profession. Indeed, my hon. leader understates the case when he says it is a $20 million melon. He indicates how two phases of this proposal by themselves will provide the doctors with $20 million that they are not now getting. But there are additional benefits that they will get out of this, including those that they can get simply by jacking up their fee schedule, and they can do that almost without let or hindrance.

The hon. member for Eglinton was somewhat concerned that the doctors should receive a lower fee for the so-called charity cases than they receive for others. Well, let us face facts, Mr. Chairman. The doctors have always made a public parade of the fact that for many years they do a certain amount of charity work; they take either low fees or no fees for a certain amount of charity work. Their fee schedule makes allowance for that fact. They set their fees higher than they would otherwise do in order to cover their charity work. This is obvious because, under the present fee schedule they now have and with the charity work they now do, they are by all odds the highest paid group in the community.

So what we are proposing—at least what the government is proposing—is that the doctors should now be paid 100 per cent of that schedule, not only for non-charity cases, but for the charity cases, too—giving no allowance for the fact that the schedule of fees was unnecessarily high in order to make allowance for the charity work. Furthermore, a fee schedule of this kind in a free enterprise situation necessarily has to take account of bad debts. It is higher than it would otherwise be if there were not any bad debts to be written off. This is necessary in any form of pricing.

The medical coverage that will be paid for by insurance, whether it is through the public subsidization portion of this bill or through private plans, eliminates the risk of bad debts. There are no bad debts. Yet the government envisages that the doctors will be able to continue a schedule of fees put unnecessarily high in order to cover bad debts, even when the bad debts are eliminated. The thing is completely preposterous, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Dunlop: I am glad the hon. member recognizes there will not be any bad debts; that there is going to be coverage and they will be eliminated.

Mr. Bryden: For anybody who will be covered. There are some people who still will not be covered. But this bill relates to the people who will be covered. It says for the people covered by insurance or by government subsidization that there will be payment of 100 per cent of the OMA schedule of fees. This is what we are talking about. I trust that the hon. member for Forest Hill can follow it this far, that we are talking only about those for whom there will be no bad debts.

There will, of course, continue to be large groups in the community who will not be able to afford any sort of coverage under this bill and I am afraid a substantial number of bad debts will arise in their case. But in their case I assume the doctors will continue to charge 100 per cent of the OMA schedule. We are talking about what they will be permitted to charge for the insured part of the coverage. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would say that my hon. leader and the hon. leader of the Opposition were both a little soft when they agreed that this amendment will be in terms of 90 per cent of the schedule of fees; that is what PSI is now paying.

In the province of Saskatchewan, where a complete plan is in effect and where practically all medical bills are paid under the public insurance plan, payment is on the basis of 85 per cent of the schedule of fees; not 90 but 85 per cent. The doctors, on the basis of 85 per cent of their schedule of fees, are making more money than they ever made in their lives before. In fact, in the first year of operation of the plan, the average income of doctors in Saskatchewan went up by more than $2,000 a year. As a matter of fact, doctors in Saskatchewan are now the highest paid doctors in the entire country; they are higher paid even than the doctors in Ontario. This is on the basis of 85 per cent of the Saskatchewan schedule of fees, which is lower than the Ontario schedule of fees, for which we are proposing that 100 per cent should be paid.

The melon the doctors get is greatly understated as being merely $20 million. I would not hazard a guess, but I can tell you that it will be a lot more than $20 million which will be simply handed to them on a platter for doing exactly the same work as they are now doing. How the government can justify that sort of a proposition is beyond my comprehension. I believe that we should provide that, when this bill comes into effect, the payment should be on the basis of 85 per cent of the OMA schedule of fees now in force. Let us avoid the ridiculous pitfall which is now in the bill, under which the OMA can jack up its fees before the bill comes into force and we will be stuck with them—both in the subsidized portion of the plan and in the part that comes under private insurance plans of any kind.

This, of course, brings us to the other side of the question, Mr. Chairman, and that is the unrestricted power given to the doctors to determine their own incomes. Now somebody was weeping bitter tears about the poor doctors, and about the proposal that they should have to do some negotiating about their incomes; that there should be some restraint on their powers to simply gouge the public for whatever they want. I am suggesting to whatever hon. member it was that doctors are perhaps among the few remaining groups in the community who can determine their own pay without reference to anybody whatsoever.

I can assure the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) that he would not have any trouble at all, with respect to the Toronto Hydro employees, if it were possible for them simply to write a ticket saying that their wages and working conditions would be so and so. If they could do that without let or hindrance, without having to persuade anybody else of the justice of their claim or without having to negotiate with anybody, there would never have been any difficulty in labour negotiations at all.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): What has that got to do with the bill?

Mr. Bryden: There would not be any difficulty with labour negotiations anywhere if the employees could simply write their own ticket. This is what we are proposing here. The hon. Minister made a great noise, in his introductory speech, about difficulties in Britain, Belgium and Italy between the medical profession and the public as represented by the government. Certainly there have been difficulties. The difficulties, incidentally, have been pretty well straightened out, except perhaps in Belgium, and I am afraid in Belgium there are many bases of difficulties. The country is going through quite a critical situation generally and there are difficulties of many kinds. But in Britain, the problem—

Mr. Chairman: Stick to the clause in the bill.

Mr. Bryden: That is exactly what I am talking about, Mr. Chairman, if you would care to follow me. I can assure you that I am right within the framework of the section.

Mr. Chairman, there would not be any difficulty in Britain either if the government there was as irresponsible as this one and said to the doctors that they can simply write their own ticket, and can declare what their income will be, with the government simply acquiescing without any consideration at all. It is a situation that simply cannot be tolerated. No other country in the world gives that sort of unrestricted authority to one group of people.

I can tell the hon. Minister that he might as well forget about even this bill, because they will wreck it in pretty short order by their inordinate demands. As a matter of fact, many hon. members have said that they do not think doctors are overpaid. I think they are, right now. I think that the last increase in their schedule of fees was nothing but a gouge of the public, yet they got away with it. Nobody says boo to them.

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): I knew we would get this out of you sooner or later.

Mr. Bryden: Nobody says boo to them. The last increase put them about $3,000 a year, on average, ahead of the next highest professional group, namely, the lawyers. The doctors were already the highest-paid group but they were not satisfied. They gouged the public for another 20 per cent and the hon. Minister is now suggesting that they should have a free hand to gouge the public still further.

He has got to face up to the fact that if he is going to get involved in medical care insurance at all—and he has got involved in this bill at least to the extent of covering the cost for certain subsidized groups—he is going to have to start negotiating with the doctors. The doctors have got to face up to the fact that in this day and age they must negotiate with public authorities. They can squawk all they like about it, but they are going to have to do it. We can no longer tolerate a group which recognizes no accountability to anybody except itself—a small, entrenched group that can simply impose its will on the public, and the public can do nothing about it. That day must come to an end, Mr. Chairman.

We saw what happened in Saskatchewan, where this small, entrenched group put a knife to the throat of the public, in an effort to overthrow what the duly constituted authorities of the province, the properly constituted government, had enacted. This was not a strike; it was a mutiny, it was a challenge to constituted authority, such as I do not remember having seen before in this country. That is the type of group we are dealing with. They will be difficult to deal with, we might as well face it. They have always been difficult to deal with. They do not believe that anybody counts except themselves. Under those circumstances, we must face the fact we are going to have to deal with them as best we can. But we will not deal with them by simply running away from them, letting them write their own ticket.

Under this bill as it stands, before it comes into effect, they can make their own requisition on the public Treasury. Then for two years they will be restrained but after that they will be able to write annual requisitions on the public Treasury—just write out a note saying that they will requisition such and such an amount of money from the public Treasury. There is no provision whereby anybody can suggest that what they might do is unreasonable, or that they should sit down and talk it over. They can just go ahead and do whatever they like.

Mr. Chairman, this section alone is enough to condemn the entire bill. It gives an arbitrary power to an irresponsible group. I use the word "irresponsible" in the sense that they are not accountable to anybody, they are not responsible to anybody. It gives an arbitrary power to that group, and no law should give such power to any group.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he ought to accept the amendment proposed jointly by the hon. leader of the Opposition and my own leader. He should accept that as the very least that could be regarded as reasonable. I would like to see it written out in this bill that there will be a procedure for negotiating changes in fees that will be paid to the medical profession. I think we should set that out. Let us face it, the medical profession should be like other people. They should have to negotiate with the parties that have to pay the bill, as to just how much is reasonable.

Mr. Chairman: The member is being repetitious on the matter. There is only one amendment permitted; that amendment is what we are dealing with.

Mr. Bryden: That is exactly what I have been dealing with, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that you have been over it several times.

Mr. Bryden: If you would desist from interruptions that really have no relevancy to the matter at all—there has been no repetition here, Mr. Chairman. We are dealing with what is unquestionably a matter of—

Mr. Chairman: Speak to the clause, and the amendment.

Mr. Bryden: —the most extreme import to the people of Ontario, a section under which they can be gouged in a most irresponsible way—

Mr. Chairman: Now that is repetition. You mentioned—

Mr. Bryden: —and the hon.—

Mr. Chairman: Order, Order! You have mentioned the word "gouge" ten times already and I am simply pointing out that it is repetition. You have permission to mention it, but this is continual repetition, using the same language.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I have also used the word "and" and the word "the" and the word "but," even more than that and I—

Mr. Chairman: If you continue on the clause, you can proceed, otherwise I will have to rule you out of order.

Mr. Bryden: That is what I have been talking about all along, but it is a little difficult, Mr. Chairman, to retain my train of thought, when I am constantly interrupted. I assure you that I was on the verge—

Mr. Chairman: I can assure you you have used up a great deal of patience or you would have been interrupted previously. Proceed, if you have any further argument on the clause.

Mr. Bryden: I have never been talking about anything but the clause, or the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): What are you talking about now?

Mr. Bryden: I am suggesting to you and to the House that the clause and the amendment are of the greatest significance to the people of Ontario. They are worthy of extended discussion. The principle we have before us now is one that ought to be discussed at substantial length.

Mr. Chairman: You have already said that several times.

Mr. Bryden: I suggest that you should retain your patience, Mr. Chairman. I appeal to the hon. Minister of Health to reconsider the section as he has it, in the light of the amendment that has been presented to him. I am sure that if he would reconsider it with a view to its full import, he would be prepared to accept the principle embodied in the amendment.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in support of the amendment proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition. It would require the Ontario medical association to negotiate with a board set up under The Department of Health before any increases in payments would be made, as provided by this bill.

We know that there have been many objections in the past on behalf of those in the medical profession to any scheme whereby there would be government involvement in a prepaid medical insurance scheme. These objections have been based on an interference with doctor-patient relationships, the fact that no one is going without proper medical care and so on. Yet the government must surely be aware that one of the strongest objections on behalf of the doctors has been associated with their fear that a government body would be empowered to interfere with their professional affairs.

The government has been very careful to see to it that there would be no professional involvement in the affairs of medicine. As a matter of fact, it has bent over backwards, I would say, to see to it that the doctors are going to run their own business in this regard, at least their professional business. Nevertheless, it is up to the government, which is the representative of the people, to safeguard the public interest when it comes to the large amount of public moneys, and other moneys as well, that will be paid to the medical profession.

I am sure the hon. Minister of Health will remember about a year ago when the increase in premiums required by PSI was under some discussion, particularly since the programme to draw more people into this form of insurance had been so broadly advertised just a few weeks before. The government then, in its wisdom, decided that this in fact was a private affair and that they should let the persons, the individual citizens concerned, withdraw from the insurance if they saw fit, otherwise to continue.

Perhaps they were right in this and yet, as the months go by, the government is becoming more and more involved, not only with a statute such as this, but with the protection of the affairs of the individual citizens. Under this particular clause we find that the doctors are enabled through their professional association to adjust their fees without reference to any negotiation whatsoever.

My hon. leader used the proper word in connection with this. He said it is irresponsible, and I believe it to be irresponsible as well. It is not unwarranted interference with the medical profession.

The hon. member for Bruce a few moments ago asked the hon. Minister specifically what involvement the doctors' professional organization have had in certain requests along monetary lines. I wonder if their support of the bill was contingent upon this particular clause. I would not believe that it would be, because it seems to be almost an unfair requirement. I would say that the request of the government in this particular aspect is irresponsible, and I would beseech the hon. Minister and the government to make suitable amendments along the lines proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Forest Hill, during the course of the debate on the principle of this bill, had occasion to quote from the speech of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall at some length in making the point that this government was in the process of moving forward gradually toward the adoption of something in the nature of a health charter recommended by the Hall commission, and that we here in the Opposition were placing an undue emphasis on the payment of medical fees.

I happen to have the same speech available today that Mr. Justice Emmett Hall made in Winnipeg and from which the hon. member for Forest Hill quoted, and I would like to quote for the record—

Mr. Dunlop: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I quoted from the speech that he made in Scarborough.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe he repeats himself.

Mr. Dunlop: He may repeat himself, I do not know.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough): Winnipeg is more reputable than Scarborough.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I may say that I compared the quotation of the hon. member for Forest Hill with this particular reprint of this speech and it was identical, and I assume that the remarks which were made in the speech to which he referred were also the ones which I am now going to place on the record as being the opinion of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall on this question which is before this Legislature.

The emphasis on the freedom to practise should not obscure the fact that the physician is not only a professional person, but also a citizen. He has moral and social obligations as well as self-interest to do well in his profession.

The notion held by some that the physician has an absolute right to fix his fees as he sees fit unrelated to the mores of our time is incorrect. This 19th century laissez-faire concept has no validity in the 20th century in its application to medicine, dentistry, law or to any other profession; or in fact, to any other organized group. Organized medicine is a statutory creation of Legislatures and of Parliaments. When the state grants a monopoly to an exclusive group to render an indispensable service, it automatically becomes involved in whether those services are available and on what terms and conditions.

I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that quotation focuses the very point that we on this side of the House are trying to get across to the hon. Minister, that there must be some way in which this government is going to have some involvement in the fees which are being charged by the medical profession.

I would like to make it absolutely clear so there will be no misunderstanding in the minds of anyone in this Legislature or elsewhere in the province of Ontario, that the power under this bill which enables the government to set maximum subscription rates has nothing whatsoever to do with any limitation on the fees which the doctors choose to make for themselves in their schedule under the Ontario medical association.

The Act specifically, categorically, unequivocally states that the benefits under a standard contract shall be the Ontario medical association's schedule of fees. It cannot be anything else; it is not even possible for the doctors to voluntarily suggest that they are going to contribute some portion of their services as a social and community obligation. It is not now open to anyone to alter the provisions of this section.

The definition of benefits under the Act simply refers to the payments to be made for a covered person for the services to which he is entitled under a standard contract. So that regardless of what the government may do about maximum subscription rates, it is essential that the full fee of the doctors be paid through the standard medical insurance contract by the carrier with whom any person in this province is insured.

I think that the government must recognize that in this century it is not possible for a single body which is created by this Legislature to have the final and sole and only say in the fees which they will charge. While there is not necessarily a complete parallel between the medical profession and the legal profession, and while the legal profession is still in the course of discussing the report of the joint committee on legal aid, at least there is some appropriate reference to the fees which lawyers may choose to charge if this plan is adopted by the government for legal aid.

The committee is satisfied—that is the committee which made the report on legal aid:

The committee is satisfied that the lawyers of Ontario would be willing to participate in any extended legal aid programme for reduced fees. During the whole of our inquiry, this willingness has been emphasized and reiterated. The Bar of Ontario still appears to regard the provision of legal aid, in both civil and criminal matters, as primarily a responsibility resting on them as a profession. It is regarded, in short, as part of the professional obligation of a lawyer.

And the committee's recommendation simply follows along that line:

Thus in the committee's views, accounts for civil legal aid proceedings should be taxed on the ordinary solicitor and client scale by taxing officers of the relevant courts and compensation awarded on the basis of 75 per cent of the result.

In making their recommendations with respect to compensation for criminal law work, the basis for settlement should be fair compensation for work reasonably and properly done, subject to a reduction equivalent to the reduction in civil matters, that is, 25 per cent.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he at least remove the obligatory nature of this section from the bill, because what it in fact does is to shift the balance as between the medical profession and everyone else in the province of Ontario in favour of the medical profession. It gives them the final, ultimate and sole say as to what their fees will be. I do not know how we can get this across to the hon. Minister, that it bears no relationship whatsoever to the provision in the province of Ontario of an adequate medical care scheme in the 20th century.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, before the question is put: This is rather a serious matter and some rather strange arguments have been put forth. I am not here to argue what doctors' fees should be, sir, and I would like to make it eminently clear that no hon. member of this House can accuse me of any conflict of interest.

When I came into a government portfolio I gave up the practice of medicine and I have not practised medicine since—nor will I as long as I hold this or any other government portfolio.

Mr. Chairman, it has been totally lost sight of that there was a time when there was no schedule of medical fees and a practitioner could charge what he liked. The schedule of fees is a guide; it is not a regulation imposed upon the doctors, and not a schedule that they must charge or must not charge if they are to practise medicine. They have a right to charge what they will and do just as all other professions do. All this talk about doctors being the only group that negotiates with no one and is answerable to no one for the fees it charges, is ridiculous in the extreme, sir.

I submit to you that every self-employed person, whether he or she be a professional person or in the "designated" trades—as I believe it is called—whether in business or commerce or any of the service areas, has a right to set whatever rate he likes upon his own services. Such people are answerable to no one but they acquiesce with the public in setting the rate.

I do not think that we can get away from this. My hon. friend from Forest Hill asked the question, and so far as I know, there is no statute on the statute books of Ontario which designates or controls the rates charged for services by any profession in the province of Ontario, except those who are employed by and working for the public service.

There has been a good deal said about what the government has been doing. There is talk about the legal profession. My hon. friend from Riverdale rather boastfully quoted the wonderful things lawyers have done. For 30 years, Mr. Chairman, the doctors of Ontario have been looking after those on welfare, and the very small amount provided does not begin to meet 75 per cent of the cost, because the amount paid is only to cover two kinds of service—office and telephone calls. If the patients have to go to hospital, then either he has to find the money to pay for his own costs, or the doctor, as so often happens, has to work for nothing. We have been proud to do that, and I would be so bold as to predict that this will still be done by many, many doctors throughout the province. But I do not have to defend them, their record speaks for itself.

You talk about the incomes that they have. How many other professions work 60 or 80 or more hours a week—and I leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, politicians are the only other people stupid enough to work those hours and we have no union to cover us.

I want to put this very plainly before you, Mr. Chairman, that the OMA schedule of fees is not a rule or a law imposed upon the profession that it must obey. The doctors have a right to charge whatever fee they will. The insertion of this is in keeping with a principle laid down by the Opposition itself in the resolution that is before this House and now on our order paper—that payment shall be on a fee-for-schedule basis. It is the only recognized and published fee-for-service basis that we have. I repeat for emphasis that it is normally not essential that the doctors abide by it, but, under this Act, they must abide by it because that is all that will be paid.

Has the OMA requested 100 per cent of the fees? I would say, unequivocally, no. They never asked for it at all. What I would point out to my hon. friend from Bruce is that only PSI, so far as I know, among the carriers in Ontario today, has an agreement with a group of doctors, known as participating doctors, who have agreed to accept 90 per cent of the schedule of fees. We did this deliberately to get the thing rolling.

Mr. Whicher: And the premiums are higher.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, the premiums are higher than those paid by groups, of which he has ample knowledge, who pay 100 per cent now of the schedule of fees. Indeed, the great majority of carriers today pay 100 per cent of the schedule of fees.

Mr. Whicher: They are lower.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, they are lower, but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, quite in contradiction of what the hon. member for Riverdale has said—and I am not going to get into a legal argument with him because, of course, I bow to his superior knowledge in that realm—we do believe that we have indirect control, at least, over the fees paid by having some control over the maximum premium. The maximum premium cannot be altered without the approval of this government and, if fees get out of line, we will take every step to control them, indirectly at least, by control of the maximum premium.

The hon. member for Sudbury seems to imply that this section means that the fees in effect, from time to time, automatically will go up. This, to me, does not follow at all. I guess it is because I have not got a legal mind, but I do not read that into the section at all.

My hon. friend from Woodbine spoke about charity cases. Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons for this bill is to remove this stigma, this selection of a group that is labelled as a charity group. This is why we made sure that the same services would be available to all of them on exactly the same basis as they are available to all the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: Politicians!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I want to repeat in answer to a question raised, I believe, by the hon. member for Brant, that support of the medical profession was not in any way related to the fee schedule. Indeed, it was not discussed with the doctors.

Mr. Nixon: It was in relation to the question that the hon. member for Bruce—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You hope that support of the bill by the doctors was not related to this clause. I can assure you it was not.

We believe that this is a recognized schedule and it is in the hands of every practising physician in Ontario. This is recognized by the organized profession as a reasonable schedule of fees for its services and it was for this reason that we adopted it and said that nothing more than this schedule of fees can ever be paid under this plan.

I submit, therefore, sir, that the amendment is not necessary.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister has suggested that he hopes to be able to have some sort of influence, if not control, over the fees. The method by which he proposes that that should be done is like saying that he hopes to control the speed of a car by having the front half go more slowly than the back half. If he wants to have control over the premiums paid, he has to have control over what goes into the premiums. It is idle of him to say that he can have control over the premiums when he does not have control over the schedule of fees.

What is he going to do if he says that the premiums cannot be increased and yet the schedule of fees is increased, so that the carriers, and also himself, are put in an impossible position? If he really means business in saying he is going to have control over premiums, then he has to have control over the schedule of fees as well.

I would like to point out that he did not deal at all with any of the points raised over here, but I am particularly interested in the point I raised with regard to the charity cases. I pointed out to him, and he has not denied it, that the schedule of fees is now set high enough to allow for charity cases. Now we are going to pay that excessively high schedule of fees right across the board for the charity cases along with the others. That is my point.

I agree with the hon. Minister that it is desirable to remove distinction between one type of case and another, but the point is that we should not remove those distinctions on the basis of a fee schedule which was set on the assumption that fees would be lower for some people.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, just before this amendment is put, I would like to say in regard to the ability of the government to control the maximum—and I stress the word maximum, because it is maximum premiums that will be set through the government agency—that I think we have a very complete control over the ultimate level that doctors' fees may reach and adjustments that may be made by the Ontario medical association. I think also we have control over what may be done by the carriers. We say, on the one hand, "You must provide a certain absolute minimum of service," and on the other hand, "You can only charge a maximum price." The minimum cannot be altered and the maximum premium cannot be altered without the consent of an agency of the government.

Of course, you say, what would we do? If these amounts get completely out of balance, of course the whole plan itself would fall to the ground. It would cease—

Mr. Bryden: Or you would jack up the rates.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It would cease to function. Of course, the decision, which would then rest with the government, would be whether the government would exercise its power either to lower the benefits or raise the rates, or whether it would say that this plan in its present form simply is getting to the point where it is not viable, if that is the term, it is not a workable plan. Frankly, I see in this control, the ultimate control of the whole overall plan that is operating, involved in which is the complete function of the carrier and the complete function of the medical profession. There would have to be, if such a situation arose, a great deal of consultation. I must say that, in this debate this afternoon, I have listened to the insurance companies and the doctors being vilified; I think that is the only word I can use.

One would be led to believe from the debate here this afternoon that there were no men of honour, or integrity, or with any social sense whatsoever, operating in the industry or in the medical profession. They are painted here as people who have one idea in mind, and one only, and that is to gouge the public. Now, I do not believe this to be true. I believe that, if this scheme is to function, it is going to require a high degree of co-operation between the carriers and between those men who operate the insurance industry; between them, the medical profession and the government.

I think that degree of co-operation can be achieved. I am quite certain it can, and I think there have been a few straw men set up here this afternoon in order that they might be knocked down. But in the process, I must say that I am a little distressed at the impression that might be left as to who are the men who make up the insurance industry in this province, and who are the men who make up the medical profession.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify this right away, and let me speak just for myself. I have a brother who is a doctor and relatives who are doctors. I am not saying because he is my brother that he is a man of high dedication. But on our side, of course, we recognize that there are many men within the medical profession who went in for it with the deepest sense of purpose for the good of the community; and who have dedicated their lives to helping people. I would not like the impression left, which the hon. Prime Minister has suggested, that every remark of the Opposition is to, in some way, criticize and suggest that the medical profession or the insurance companies themselves are all bad men.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well that is it, whether you intended it or not.

Mr. Thompson: The point that the hon. Prime Minister made was that we need co-operation and consultation. The point in my amendment is that we want to set up the machinery for such consultation and co-operation, because at the moment there is none. Away out on a limb is the medical profession setting fees, without proper machinery set up so that there can be consultation and supervision. We are asking that machinery be set up for this. In view of the hon. Prime Minister suggesting this, if the hon. Minister of Health will look at my amendment again he will realize I am asking only that proper machinery be set up.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the Opposition has lost sight of the fact that the machinery is now set up.

Mr. Thompson: Where?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In the council. This is the machinery for consultation and discussion the exchange of ideas and the hearing of complaints.

Mr. Bryden: It has nothing to do with their schedule of fees.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it stands to reason that the whole business of the programme comes before the council. If the council is rightly represented by two doctors—I remember quite a number of you took very great umbrage at this yesterday, I believe—and that if the complaints come to them that the schedule of fees is too high, it stands to reason they are bound to take notice of it. They are bound to get the feeling of the public, and are surely going to be sensitive to it.

Now I am rather glad that the hon. Prime Minister did stand up and say some of the things that I felt I ought to say. Because I had already been under suspicion of having a conflict of interest. I felt that I did not need—I know I do not need—to defend my colleagues. I repeat, their actions speak for themselves. A great deal has been said, in vilifying terms and scurrilous terms, concerning my profession, and I do not like it the least little bit.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I said a few words about this section, and I certainly do not want my name connected with the possibility that the doctors of this province have been gouging the public. I want you to know—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Whicher: You can shout all you want over there. If some of you fellows in the back would get up and say where you stand on this, and not leave it all on the shoulders of the hon. Minister of Health, you would be doing your party a favour.

Mr. Chairman, it is certainly not the doctors who have been gouging the public. As a matter of fact, for many, many years—since the time Canada was started—they have done a wonderful job in this country. But the people who are going to gouge the public in this particular instance is the government, in allowing doctors to charge 100 cents on the dollar when they have only been getting 90 cents up to date—and without that profession even asking for it. That is what you call gouging the public.

It is absolutely inconceivable to me, as a small businessman. I ask all the hon. members who are either professional men or businessmen in some line, in what other line of business do you go and give a profession 100 cents on the dollar when, up to this moment, they have only asked for 90 cents? This is what you call gouging the public, because it is going to cost the taxpayers of this province—the premium payers of this province, on last year's figures—$5 million. Mr. Prime Minister, when you are talking about gouging the public, think of what your government is doing. Because that is exactly what you are going to do in setting up this section; charging our premium holders an extra $5 million.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think it should be noted that during the course of his remarks, the hon. Prime Minister—for all practical purposes—admitted what we have been contending over here all along. Ultimately, in this matter, the medical profession will be in the driver's seat. The hon. Prime Minister indicated that the government will set maximum premiums. We have discussed the ineffectiveness of the power relating to maximum premiums, and we will not go back to that. We will accept the point that the government will set maximum premiums, and I pose the question to him, what happens if the medical association raises the schedule of fees so that the maximum premiums are no longer practical? What happens then? The hon. Prime Minister said: "Well, in that case, one of two things will happen, the whole thing will collapse or the maximum premiums will have to be raised." That is a fair summary of what he said and that is another way of saying that the medical profession will be in the driver's seat; which is just what we have been saying. They will be able to push the maximum premiums up by raising their fees.

Now then, the hon. Minister of Health said it is envisaged that there will be consultation through the council set up by this bill, with the medical profession and others, if that sort of tension should arise. He said that is what the council is for. Well, that is the first we have heard of this. It does not say that in the bill. I suggest to the hon. Minister, if that is what he has in mind, it is essentially what the hon. leader of the Opposition had in mind in his amendment. Why do we not write it into the bill?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is in the bill now.

Mr. Bryden: Where?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In the duties of the council.

Mr. Bryden: The council's powers are set forth—it is said that they have—well, let us just see what it says:

The council shall act as advisors to the Minister in the administration of this Act and shall make recommendations to him upon:

(a) the initial and subsequent maximum subscription rates recommended by the corporation;

(b) the designation of open enrolment periods recommended by the corporation;

(c) the general form and content of standard contracts, and

(d) any other matter related to this Act.

Now where does it say anything about the schedule—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: "Any other matter relating to this Act."

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would submit to the hon. Minister that if he means that "any other matter related to this Act" includes the schedule of fees of the OMA he should say so. That type of clause is usually interpreted as being within the same general type as the clauses that precede it. All the clauses that precede it relate to subscription rates and the content of standard contracts, they do not say a thing about the fee schedule of the medical association.

If it is actually his intention, as he has claimed, that there will be discussion as proposed, then I submit to him that it ought to be spelled out clearly and specifically in the bill, just as it is spelled out clearly and specifically that the council will make recommendations on subscription rates. There is no reason at all for evading this issue except, I suggest, the reason that the council is not going to have anything to do, or anything much to do, with the schedule of fees of the OMA other than to recommend that the subscription rates be increased every time the OMA jacks up its fees. That is what is going to happen under this bill.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak to this. We have been hearing a lot of talk on this whole debate about licensed carriers. I think this is the pay dirt of our whole opposition: Why are the insurance companies in on the Act in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: This is completely out of order. This was one of the principles settled on second reading. We have settled this a long time ago.

Mr. Sargent: I reserve the right to talk on this Medicare bill. I submit, briefly—and I know time is of the essence in this House—but I feel it is within our power in this province to set up a programme that is actuarially sound without paying our political debts to insurance companies. This, in essence, is what our debate boils down to. Take the insurance companies out and—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is completely out of order, as already pointed out by the hon. Prime Minister. This was debated on the principle of the bill and was carried.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to say I listened carefully to the hon. Prime Minister. I find him on most occasions a very reasonable man.

An hon. member: We do not fall for that any more.

Mr. Thompson: It is not a case of falling for anything, I am saying this quite sincerely to the hon. Minister, that I think the point he was making was that there should be close consultation and co-operation between the medical profession and the kind of fees they set up, and between the council and between the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: And the carriers.

Mr. Thompson: Then, sir, I think that there would be no objection to this amendment. I hope that the Chairman will read the amendment, and I think there would then be complete agreement with it.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment of the leader of the Opposition says:

No increase in fees of any kind will be enforced until approved by the medical services insurance council.

All those in favour of the amendment, please say "aye."

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, there is more to that amendment. Also incorporated in it is a proposal that only 90 per cent of the schedule of fees will be paid.

Mr. Chairman: May I add then, "fees payable at 90 per cent of the schedule."

All those in favour of this amendment, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

I declare the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of the amendment, please rise.

All those opposed to the amendment, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 27; the "nays," 49.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Section 20 agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, in this section, if a licensed carrier, for reasons that are beyond its control, goes out of business, and I suppose those reasons would be largely financial or perhaps they might have something to do with the feeling of the licensed carrier that they are not making sufficient profit, that ugly word, out of carrying medical insurance contracts, if such case might happen, Mr. Chairman—either of Mr. Chairmen, both Mr. Chairmen—if such an event may occur I do not see in justice and equity why the policy owner should be put to the inconvenience and delay of applying to another licensed carrier for his insurance.

Why should the corporation not carry out that task for him? The corporation is staffed by men who are entirely familiar with the insurance industry and they know the identity of those operating in the field. Accordingly if upon 60 days' notice they realize that a licensed carrier is going out of business, then surely they are the best people to place that insurance with other carriers operating in the field. If it were a profit-making carrier, then they could place that business with another company of the same type; if it were a co-operative, they could place the business with another co-operative; and if indeed it were doctor-sponsored plan, then they could place the business with that type of plan.

On the other hand, one can visualize a great deal of dislocation if the responsibility is left to the individual policyholder. There may be several hundreds or several thousands of policyholders who have contracts issued by the company going out of business under subsection 1.

I do not feel that my point needs any more elaboration than that. From the point of view of efficiency and justice I am prepared to move an amendment to the section which would read as follows:

That subsection 4 of section 21 be deleted, and the following be substituted therefor:

4. If any licensed carrier cancels its medical services insurance contracts under subsection 1, the corporation shall place such applications for the persons insured by such licensed carrier with other licensed carriers, as it may deem fit, and there shall be no change of benefit to or obligations on the policyholders in respect of such change of the insurer.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha moves:

That subsection 4 of section 21 be deleted, and the following be substituted therefor:

4. If any licensed carrier cancels its medical services insurance contracts under subsection 1, the corporation shall place applications for the persons insured by such licensed carrier with other licensed carriers, as it may deem fit, and there shall be no change of benefit to or obligations on the policyholders in respect of such change of the insurer.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment, I might say that this section shows that because of the basic principle that we passed on second reading this has become an administrative monstrosity. Here we have probably 200 carriers of insurance in the province of Ontario and you might assume that a certain number of them will go out of business. Perhaps some will start out and others go out, and there may be many comings and goings. Under this present section, the responsibility is on the individual to see that he is properly covered by insurance. The individual may go to all the trouble of signing up with a particular company; that company goes out of business and once again that individual has the responsibility thrown on him to apply all over again.

If an insurance company is going to go into this business, it seems that the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Sudbury is quite reasonable in that the responsibility should lie with the company and not with the person so insured.

Again, Mr. Chairman, it seems obvious how much more economical it would be and how much easier it would be to administer a medical insurance plan in the province of Ontario if we had one basic carrier and one standard contract.

This, again, leads to tremendous confusion and there is also obviously extra expense. It means more paper work every time somebody must sign up once again with another insurance firm. Bearing this in mind, I would ask hon. members of this House to support the amendment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, this section, I think, brings to the fore a point that is not sufficiently stressed with regard to this bill. I think the impression is abroad—and I am not suggesting that the hon. Minister has done anything to create that impression—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think this section brings to attention a point that has not been fully realized by the public with respect to this bill and that is: In normal circumstances their insurance contracts are still subject to cancellation, with or without notice, by the insurance carrier, unless they are the standard contracts that are found in this bill or unless the contracts provide within their own framework that they are non-cancellable.

A lot of people have the idea that when this legislation comes into effect the insurance that they buy will be non-cancellable, that is, the insurance they buy from private carriers. As I understand it, if a private carrier makes the slightest deviation from a standard contract as defined here, then he can cancel without notice, and I am afraid a lot of people are going to be badly deluded when they discover that can happen to them.

It should also be noted, Mr. Chairman, that this section, which is designed to protect the policyholders in the event of a company going out of business, only protects those policyholders who have standard contracts or have contracts that are within their own terms non-cancellable. Anybody else's contract just goes down the drain.

Again, it may be a contract that has only a very slight deviation from the standard contract, but sufficiently different that it could be held not to be a standard contract.

I hope the public will not get the idea that they are now protected from arbitrary cancellation because this legislation is coming into effect or that they are protected against the company going out of business. I hope that the public will realize that they are protected only if they have a standard contract, or one that provides in itself that it is non-cancellable. I hope they will be very careful to make sure that what they get are actually standard contracts and not some mishmash that the insurance company draws up that is not a standard contract. It may look like one, but the consumer should be hep to insist on getting a genuine standard contract.

Let us bear in mind that insurance policies baffle most people; they just do not comprehend them at all, they take whatever the agent says. Some agents disclose the whole truth to them and some do not. I think it is going to be pretty important that consumers should be able to identify a standard contract as being genuinely a standard contract not subject to cancellation, and not merely one that they were told was just as good or even better.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, I think it should be pointed out here in connection with this matter of going out of business—you might gather from the Opposition that insurance companies are going broke and going out of business, but that is not the case. I think the public should know that if an insurance company decides to withdraw from this medical insurance business because it is unprofitable, that is all there is to it. The insurance companies cannot go out of business as such because, by law, they have to put up deposits in Ottawa and payment of claims is guaranteed by the government, so there is no problem there.

The hon. member mentioned insurance salesmen selling mishmash to people—mishmash, whatever that is I do not know.

Now, if this hon. member—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cowling: A little louder!

Mr. Sopha: Where does it say that payment of claims is guaranteed by the government? Will you refer me to that statute?

Mr. Cowling: Yes, later on. Just sit down for the moment.

Getting back to the mishmash—and we have had an awful lot of it the last few days—mostly mishmash.

If the hon. member had ever tried to sell insurance to some of the discerning members of the public of Ontario, he would definitely find out, and would get a rude awakening, that they do not buy mishmash. Our people are too smart and too clever. They buy what they think they need and what is going to get them the best value for their dollar. So, my friend, do not ever think that it is a mishmash of insurance that they are buying.

If you will notice under section 3—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Cowling: What are you mumbling about over there?

Mr. Sopha: It is a violation of The Legislative Assembly Act.

Mr. Cowling: Just sit down!

Mr. Sopha: You are liable to a fine of $200 a day.

Mr. Cowling: Yes, you are right. Just keep quiet there.

Section 5 of this Act, in talking to the amendment, says in the last part:

And the licensed carrier shall refund on a pro rata basis any unearned subscription.

So that the individual who has a policy terminated is not going to lose any money and has an opportunity of applying to another company in the business of selling this medical contract.

The cancellation feature—we sometimes feel that it is a one-way street, but it is not. In other words, the company can cancel an insurance policy, but remember, Mr. Chairman, that the individual can cancel his policy, too, any time he wishes. It works both ways.

I cannot support the amendment, because all the sections of this section 21, and the subsections really, cover the whole situation. The public will be well protected because, as has been pointed out here, in the Canadian health insurance association there are some 200 members and I can assure you that if some member of that group should decide that they do not want to continue in the medical business, I am sure that any one of the other 199 would be glad to pick up that business, because in the long run they are interested in making a profit. That is why they are in the insurance business. They are going to guarantee that people have the protection. So I—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Cowling: A little louder!

Mr. MacDonald: If you have anything to say, go ahead and say it.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The member for High Park has the floor.

Mr. Cowling: I am just putting you on the track insofar as this section is concerned. I have been telling you why you should not support the amendment, because it does not add anything to the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have clarification from the hon. Minister regarding the point that my hon. colleague from Woodbine raised, that only the standard policies are non-cancellable. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: By this Act, this kind of policy is non-cancellable. But I am advised that a great many health insurance contracts, a greater number, are steadily becoming non-cancellable. But by this Act, only the standard contract is non-cancellable. We have no authority under this Act to—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have a minor complaint to make that within the secrecy of our own caucus I was not even informed of this, and secondly, this is another astounding feature. I am convinced that the people of the province of Ontario believe that when this bill goes through, any insurance policy that they buy with regard to health is not going to be cancellable.

The hon. Minister, with his great and generous gesture, says the government is going to protect the people. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that only a percentage of the people will be on standard policy. I now have made a discovery with equal shock to the discovery yesterday with regard to the sick and the aged being at the maximum premium. Now we discover this further revelation, that this government has certainly so staged the thing that it has misled the public.

Mr. Chairman, I have said up until now that one of the few advantages I saw in this bill was that it removed this abuse that insurance companies have indulged in for years, namely, when it suited their purpose, they cancelled policies. Now let the people of the province of Ontario recognize the fact that even that is going to continue as an abuse.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not under this Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Except for those who are standard policies. So apparently even the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions is not aware of the real sleepers to be found all throughout this bill.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Sleepers?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, sleepers. You were not aware of that either?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Many, many people were not aware. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions still thinks it is in the bill, because he has been arguing with me over here, which just shows you how confused is the issue right within the Tory ranks, right within the Cabinet. This just confirms in my mind, what a useless, misleading kind of legislation we have got before us at the present time, and if I ever had any qualms about the amount of time that the Opposition has put into fighting this bill clause by clause, they have completely disappeared. What we are doing, is just getting the truth across to the people of the province of Ontario, before they get hoodwinked.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When it is all over, read the explanation.

Mr. Sopha: Our qualms have hardly disappeared, because we are finding out so much about the details of the administration and the nature of the contracts. I should like to ask the hon. Minister, after he finishes getting advice from the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Never deal with an arrogant Opposition.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I am deeply indebted to you for those few kind words. I want to ask the hon. Minister a question. I should like to ask what happens to the health and accident policies that have a life insurance feature? Will the standard contract have a life insurance feature attached to it, or will the ones that now have a life insurance feature disappear, when the standard contract comes into effect?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to discuss this bill seriously. I am almost certain the hon. member must be facetious. Of course this will not have a life insurance factor. This is medical services insurance and this will not interfere with any sickness and accident policy that has a life insurance factor. It will not interfere with any of these things.

Mr. Chairman, let it be clearly understood that the intent of this bill was never to interfere with existing insurance, but, in the event that one's existing policy is cancelled, then the same carrier who cancelled, if remaining in the business, must provide a standard contract. We chose the standard contract, because, if you will read the schedule, as I stated in the outset, it provides the medical, surgical and obstetrical care, in home, office and hospital, usually required by the average family in a normal lifetime.

This is the principle underlying all of the government involvement in this, at least the provincial government's. The standard ward is provided under the hospital care insurance plan. This standard contract is a comparable thing, and the public of Ontario understood this far better than my hon. friend from York South, who has left his seat now. Mr. Chairman, he must have been the sleeper, because it is plainly and clearly defined in the definition section of this bill, what a standard contract is, and all through the piece we have talked about a standard contract.

I stated in my remarks in answer to the hon. member for Parkdale—when he criticized the bill on second reading and when he said that if the government did not get into the field there would be no choice—that the great, broad, wide and varied choice of policies now available will continue. Every one of you hon. members, involved in labour union contracts and various other contracts, knows perfectly well the great choice of contracts made available to you and we have no intention of interfering with this. But if, for reasons beyond the control of any one of you or your members, the present contract is cancelled, then the carrier must, at your request, sell you a standard contract. If not, he is subject to losing his licence.

Mr. Sopha: That is exactly what I am afraid of. Nowhere in the whole of the piece has any spokesman of the insurance industry come forward and said to the public—and you could not think of a more opportune time than right now, when this bill is being debated in this Legislature—what will happen to the types of policies they now sell, and I am very concerned about it.

It may be that the life insurance carriers will feel that they can make sufficient profit out of selling standard contracts so that they will dispense with the sale of the other types. I speak on behalf of all those who buy this type of insurance, because they can get the life insurance feature in it. There are a good many people in the province who cannot purchase life insurance and they waken up to that fact long after the need is there for them to have it. They buy this type of policy in order to get the group coverage of life insurance without a medical examination.

I have a real fear, in the absence of a very definite statement by the insurance industry, that the companies, after this Act comes into force on June 1, 1966, will dispense with the sale of these policies, where there are many added fringe benefits in which they give benefits that are away and above the ones stipulated in schedule A to the standard contract.

In the absence of an assurance from the hon. Minister, I would hope that somebody, on behalf of the insurance companies, will let the public know what their attitude is going to be toward insurance coverage after this Act comes into force.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member can put his fears at rest, and I am quite certain he knows himself that his fears are completely groundless. We stated that nothing can be added to the body of the standard contract, but they can sell as much additional as they like so long as it is attached to the contract as a rider, because the standard contract will be clearly and definitely identifiable.

There will be no doubt. We believe it will be identified by the use of a certain type of paper which can only be used for that purpose, probably of a special colour, although the printers tell me that this is difficult. We can assure you that the standard contract will be printed on a type of paper that cannot be used for anything else, and will be clearly identifiable as a standard contract approved by government as such.

If the corporations, or the non-profit bodies, or anybody in the field want to sell you life insurance or any other kind of insurance, they are still at liberty to do that. They can have all the benefits they like but they must not tamper with the provisions of the standard contract. They can attach them as riders but they cannot write them or type them into the body of the contract as is sometimes done in ordinary contracts now. I do not think there is any question about this; there certainly is no question in my mind, and I am not speaking for the insurance companies because I never asked them about this.

Again I repeat, they are grown up, they are mature, they will look after their own business. But they are in business. Indeed it is rather odd, Mr. Chairman, to hear the hon. member for Sudbury say, "I expect they might think they will make so much money selling the standard contracts." A little while ago they were telling me all the dreadful things about selling this and how they would not bother selling it and all the rest of it.

Mr. Sopha: Who was telling the hon. Minister that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, there have been so many things said by so many people it is impossible to identify them until I read it in Hansard.

Mr. Sopha: You know, some of it ought to get through to the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The original amendment which the hon. member for Sudbury made, and I did not get the full words, was to the effect that the corporation should place the insurance elsewhere in the event of a company cancelling its business. I think his closing words were "as it may deem fit." This, Mr. Chairman, is the very reason for this section of the Act. We believe that each subscriber should have the right to elect where he shall have his coverage.

There is no doubt in my mind that there will be plenty of opportunity. There are so many people in the insurance business, and it is a highly competitive field. I am quite certain that there will be plenty after the person who has cancelled. If a company cancels its business, I have no doubt at all that other companies will be hot on the trail of all the subscribers to see that they get the opportunity to be signed up. Really, I think to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. member would be a hardship—not necessarily a hardship, but a disadvantage—to the subscriber. I think he should have the right to choose for himself, if he is paying for his own, from whom he shall buy.

It is stipulated that he must get 60 days' notice; and it is also stipulated that, if within that time he is reinsured, it will not be necessary to repeat the waiting period which has already been observed. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment adds anything; in fact I think it detracts from the terms of this section.

Mr. Sopha: I would leave it to the individual policyholder if he had any choice, but he has no choice. He gets the same contract from whichever licensed carrier that he chooses to subscribe with. It is like buying beets from two greengrocers at the market. Beets are the same whether you buy them from one or the other, they are pretty standard.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: If he wants to buy the standard contract.

Mr. Sopha: If there was a choice, I could see that it ought to be left to his own discretion, but there is no choice. It is a standard form of contract and I am just afraid that, in the dislocation created by a company going out of business, many people will not bother to reinsure themselves. The letter will come and the letter will become lost or mislaid, and they will end up not being insured. If the responsibility was left with the corporation to place the insurance, then without any dislocation whatsoever the insurance would move from carrier A—which is going out of business—to carriers B, C, D or E. There would be no inconvenience, no risk and no anxiety caused to the policyholder at all. That is why I put forward this amendment.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I submit, Mr. Chairman, has the hon. member thought of the possibility that carrier C might offer the same standard contract at less than carrier A or B? This is quite possible.

Mr. Sopha: No, they are all going to charge the maximum as far as I can see. Then they are going to ask once a year for an increase.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, just on this point, there is an article in the Globe and Mail—goodness knows, we have had hundreds of them in the last few days and another one will not make any difference—that is right on this particular point. It might be of some interest to the Opposition, who seem to be concerned about the situation. It is a statement by the Canadian health insurance group and the officials say:

Insurers, while remaining free to offer existing plans, must now make available the government's standard medical services insurance contract to anyone who applies, regardless of their age, state of health or place of residence in the province.

Now that is the answer to the hon. member for Sudbury. It continues:

Although the government will be paying premiums for those unable to afford their own coverage, the insurance companies themselves will now be providing services for many high-risk applicants who could not qualify for previous plans. By no means will all the high-risk applicants be in the subsidized group. Insurers, generally, will therefore be providing coverage for many applicants outside the subsidized group.

The statement went on to say:

That while maximum premiums will be set, past experience indicates that the vast majority of Ontario citizens can and will purchase coverage at less than the maximum.

The two-year-old Alberta plan, operated under similar principles, has less than 15 per cent of subscribers paying the established maximums. The health insurance industry has a record of achievement in Ontario with 82 per cent of the population already insured under voluntary schemes.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister with regard to contracts that are not standard contracts and are not non-cancellable within their own terms.

Now, if one of those contracts was cancelled, is there any way—and let us say it is a private contract, not a group contract—whereby the individual can get a standard contract except by waiting for an enrolment period or else going through a three-month waiting period?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Bryden: Where is it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I just answered it. If the contract is cancelled and that carrier sells standard contracts, as he would if he is licensed under this Act, he must provide or sell the standard contract to the subscriber whom he has cancelled.

Mr. Bryden: Where is that provided?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Where the waiting period has already been gone through, that is, if such a thing existed in the cancelled contract, there would be no further waiting period. I do not think it is spelled out in those words, but the principle is involved here that you may move from one carrier to another.

Mr. Bryden: I can see it if you are in a group contract, but I am wondering about the case where a person just has an individual contract.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The same thing would apply which applies in 15 (1).

Mr. Bryden: Wherein is it stated that it applies?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is transfer from group to a standard contract, but the same terms would apply.

Mr. Bryden: Well, where does it say that they would apply? That is all I am asking.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it is inherent in the principle of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, I get sick of that. After a law goes through, one has to deal on the basis of the law and nothing else, not on the basis of what the hon. Minister says he thought it meant. This is the answer he has been giving us day after day with regard to this bill when we point out the obvious gaping loopholes in it. He says he means something different. Well, I suggest to him that if this—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the hon. member, it is in subsection 4 of this paragraph.

Mr. Bryden: Where?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Rights to other insurance.

Mr. Bryden: Of which paragraph?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of section 21, the paragraph we are dealing with now. I knew it was here some place, but I did not think it was spelled out so distinctly.

Mr. Bryden: Well, this section relates only—

Mr. Cowling: Read it; read it out loud.

Mr. Bryden: Section 21 relates only to cancellation in the case where a carrier is going out of business.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does not matter. It does not say anything of the kind, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bryden: That is exactly what it says.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I will read it, since the hon. member seems rather coy about it.

Any licensed carrier that cancels its medical services insurance contracts under subsection 1 shall, in the notice of cancellation thereunder, state that the covered person may, within a period of 60 days from date of the notice, make application to any other licensed carrier for a standard contract. And such other licensed carrier, unless exempt under clause (b) of subsection 2 of section 2 shall, upon receipt of the application subscription therefor, issue a standard contract and the waiting period and limitation of benefits with respect thereto shall be calculated from the effective date of coverage of the covered person under the prior medical services insurance fund.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, let us take a look at this. Subsection 4, as I read it, says—and I will quote just one-and-a-half lines of it:

Any licensed carrier that cancels its medical services insurance contract under subsection 1—

And what does subsection 1 say? I will not read the subsection—I will read the marginal notes:

Cancellation of contract for carrier going out of business.

Now, why do we get loud howls from over there when we try, with great difficulty, to get the hon. Minister to understand what his own bill provides? We are constantly faced with loud howls of protest. Subsection 4 covers the situation, I will agree with the hon. Minister, in relation to cases where contracts are cancelled because a carrier is withdrawing from the field or going out of business altogether. But I want to know—I am just asking a question—where does it provide in the bill that where an individual contract is cancelled by the insurance company, the person who holds the contract will be able to get a standard contract other than by going through the waiting period or waiting for an enrolment period?

If it is there, I would like to see it, because I think it should be there. The reason I am asking is because I have been searching for it and cannot find it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury's amendment.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister, I think, is trying to obtain the information for which I asked.

Mr. Cowling: I think, Mr. Chairman, that if you refer to the explanatory note at the first part of the bill, in the fourth paragraph, you will find the answer. It says:

The bill also establishes a corporation composed of the Medical Services Insurance Company. The function of this corporation will be to regulate the technical and administrative operations of the companies concerned.

That is very simple, Mr. Chairman. Why does the hon. member not read that? Why does he not read those things?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am quite satisfied that this section does apply and that the hon. member is splitting hairs in defining it as narrowly as he does.

Mr. Bryden: I submit to the hon. Minister that it is not a matter of interpreting it narrowly at all. It is a matter of interpreting what the words say. The words say "cancelled under subsection 1."

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury's amendment.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister is obviously in consultation with his advisers on this thing. The bill does not state it, regardless of what the hon. Minister would like it to say. I would ask him that he withhold this for a moment and examine it. I think his intention is that if any individual's policy is cancelled for reasons other than the company going bankrupt or out of business, he should be able to renew it without having to go through the waiting period. If that is his intention, let us have the specific indication in the Act. At the moment, I do not think it is there.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would like to hold this—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister is getting an answer, because if it is not here—it should be here. This is the point.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 10, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 10, 1965

A certain dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees, bill respecting, Mr. Robarts, second reading, third reading	4007
Royal assent to Bill No. 167, His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor	4040
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4040

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Clerk of the House: The fifty-fifth order.
Second reading of Bill No. 167.

TORONTO ELECTRIC COMMISSIONERS AND LOCAL NO. 1, CANADIAN UNION OF PUBLIC EMPLOYEES

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves second reading of Bill No. 167, An Act respecting a certain dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of this bill, I propose initially to outline to the hon. members of the House, the history of negotiations as they have taken place to date between Toronto Hydro and Local 1, Canadian union of public employees.

At the outset, I would like to point out that there has been a history of long and successful collective bargaining between these two parties and I understand that this is the first time in the history of their relationship that they have reached a complete deadlock.

In this present series of negotiations they began bargaining for a new agreement in December, 1964, and held five meetings before the union applied to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) for conciliation services on January 25, 1965.

The conciliation officer met with the parties on two occasions in an effort to assist them in reaching an agreement. On February 26, 1965, he reported to the hon. Minister that he had been unable to effect an agreement and that the parties were apart on 51 issues. He recommended the appointment of a board of conciliation and it was subsequently established on March 24, 1965. The board consisted of Mr. W. H. Dickie, chairman; Mr. Michael O'Brien, the employer nominee; and Mr. Thomas Paton, the union nominee.

This board met with the parties on eight separate occasions and in their majority report Mr. Dickie and Mr. O'Brien had this to say, and I quote from the report:

The board reviewed each of the issues in dispute. While 51 matters are referred to this board, this number represents more than 100 items at issue along with 101 job descriptions. In order that we might begin some effective mediation of this dispute, the board made every effort to persuade the parties to reduce significantly the large number of outstanding issues, particularly in non-monetary areas.

We suggested several approaches that would serve as a key to proceeding with discussions on major issues. We regret we were unable to establish procedure and climate favourable to working out a settlement.

In view of the excessive number of issues still outstanding and the incomplete discussion on most of the important matters, this board is not in any position to make recommendations.

That is the end of my quote from that report:

The board's report was released to the parties on May 17, 1965. Under the provisions of The Labour Relations Act, the union was free to strike and the employer to lock-out seven days after the receipt of this report.

On Friday, May 21, 1965, Mr. J. B. Metzler, the deputy Minister of Labour, and Mr. A. C. Dennis, director of the conciliation branch of The Department of Labour, convened a meeting of the parties in The Department of Labour quarters. After an appraisal of the situation an attempt was made to bring together, as a "package," those items in dispute which were considered vital to a settlement. These issues were discussed and weighed as to their relative importance in the dispute.

On the same day, the officials of the department met separately with representatives of Toronto Hydro and asked them to prepare an offer of settlement. They agreed to consider this request and the meeting was adjourned until Tuesday, May 25.

Upon resumption, the employer representatives made an offer in writing to the union in the presence of the departmental officials. The offer was subject to acceptance on or before May 31, 1965, and while some items in the offer were acceptable to the union others were not.

The meeting was adjourned until Wednesday, May 26, and the parties were urged to reconsider their respective positions.

On May 26, after both parties indicated that their positions had not altered, the labour department officials requested that the commission's offer be presented to the union's membership meeting scheduled for Thursday, May 27. The offer was rejected by the union membership at this meeting, and at the same time June 2 was set by the union for the taking of a strike vote. The vote on June 2 was overwhelmingly in favour of strike action and June 11 was set for the walkout.

As part of the continuing effort to resolve this dispute, the hon. Minister of Labour met separately with each of the parties on June 3. In order to establish a new basis for negotiation both the union and the commission agreed to send—and by the commission I mean the Toronto Hydro commission—agreed to send two representatives to meet with the labour officials in an attempt to delineate the issues leading to a settlement. As a result, negotiations were resumed that afternoon. At this meeting 33 issues were discussed and clarified. The progress that was made indicated a further meeting should be held and it was set for Sunday, June 6, at 1 o'clock.

Prior to this Sunday meeting, one of the spokesmen for the union advised Mr. A. C. Dennis that he was not in a position to continue in his capacity. He withdrew all of his statements of position made at the previous meeting and left The Department of Labour building. The other union representative presented a list of the items in dispute indicating his view of their relative importance to the union and stated that he was unable to attend the meeting alone.

Considering that the strike deadline was approaching and in view of the breakdown of the meetings of the last weekend, on Tuesday morning of this week the hon. Minister of Labour requested the union committee to meet with him to discuss the next move in the situation. After some discussion, the union committee agreed to meet immediately with representatives of Toronto Hydro, and the hon. Minister directed the deputy Minister to bring the parties together.

Negotiations began at 11 a.m. the same day and continued through until 1.30 on Wednesday morning. The whole situation was reviewed in detail. This exercise led to bargaining and the eventual settlement of a number of the lesser issues. As well, a list of the remaining issues which separated the parties was developed.

Yesterday morning the parties resumed their meeting and an effort was made to tackle some of the key items which divided them. At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon it became obvious that a complete deadlock on the unsettled issues existed and the meeting was terminated.

In a final effort to avoid the necessity of applying compulsory arbitration by legislation, the hon. Minister of Labour, in his last meeting with each party, appealed to them to submit the dispute, voluntarily, to binding arbitration. The Toronto Hydro accepted this proposal but the union committee rejected it.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): What was the date of that?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That was yesterday.

After receiving a full report on the situation, as I mentioned when I introduced this bill last evening, it was clear to me that all approaches to settling this dispute by negotiation prior to the union's strike deadline had been exhausted. The conclusion was inescapable that no hope existed for a peaceful settlement of this dispute before the strike deadline of midnight tonight short of compulsory arbitration and legislation to effect compulsory arbitration was the only course of action which appeared to be available.

Let me deal for a moment with the staggering implications inherent in a strike involving an electric utility which provides for the needs of three-quarters of a million people. All of us must—and I am sure do—realize that hydro-electric power is vital for the continuing supply of other essential services including water, natural gas, transportation, hospital facilities and communications. The everyday operation of a home, an office or a factory depend on electricity.

To nourish and care for the daily needs of the people of Toronto, millions of dollars worth of food, drugs and other essential commodities must be kept on hand under proper cold storage conditions. It is clear that a discontinuance or interruption in the supply of electric power would seriously threaten the health, welfare and economic well-being of over 10 per cent of Ontario's population. Even if a power interruption is restricted to a limited area of the city, the individual resident would be without means to maintain his normal life. All industry and business in that area would grind to a halt and would be forced to lay off their employees.

In the face of these implications, any offer of the union to provide repair crews on an emergency basis, raises the difficult question of how the term "emergency" is to be defined. If the union members are to maintain an effective strike, obviously they would limit their emergency service to correcting only the most serious and dangerous breakdowns. Such a definition of "emergency" could lead to disaster, while a broader definition could render the union's strike action ineffective.

Let us look at the position of Toronto Hydro in the event of a strike. Since the 55 non-working foremen in Toronto Hydro are members of the union and form part of the total bargaining unit of 550, they would not be available to the commission for the emergency maintenance of power. In addition, as retail distributors of electric power, not as producers as in the case of Ontario Hydro, this commission does not have a sufficient number of engineers and other technical personnel who would be able to assure that emergency requirements are met.

Considering that the disruption of electric power can emanate from a variety of everyday occurrences, such as an electric storm, an underground explosion, a construction mishap, a fallen tree or even an automobile crash, the demands for basic maintenance of power are constant.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to examine for a moment the problems surrounding the application of compulsion in resolving collective bargaining disputes.

In an ordinary industrial dispute, public interest is limited and the parties are free, once they have complied with all the provisions of the labour legislation of the province, to resort to economic action as a means of achieving their ends. This principle is inherent in the concept of free collective bargaining. The risks involved in attempting to gain an agreement through the application of economic pressure fall mainly on the parties themselves.

However, in this particular dispute, the risks inherent in the application of economic action are not limited to the parties. They impinge upon the whole of our society. Why should the people vitally dependent upon this public utility become the victims of the disputing parties? Since the parties themselves have failed, the people affected have only one means at their disposal to resolve this dispute and that is to turn to this Legislature. Can we fail here to accept the responsibility? I think we can not.

Yesterday, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Thompson), in his remarks, suggested that we emulate Sweden as a model jurisdiction in the labour relations field. I am sure that he would not want to leave a false impression with respect to Sweden's attitude toward compulsory arbitration. I should like to refer him to the recent report of the Bennett commission on hospital disputes. Page 38 of that report says as follows:

Sweden has had compulsory arbitration legislation for 20 years, though it has never been invoked. A threatened strike of nurses and another by officers of the merchant marine fleet have been the only two circumstances in which the government has contemplated compulsory arbitration during the 20 years of the law's existence.

Mediation is really the key to the Swedish labour scene. However, compulsory arbitral machinery exists. The law stipulates that an official arbitration court, whose decision cannot be appealed, may be appointed in cases of complex labour conflicts deemed detrimental to the nation. Such a court of arbitration can be appointed only after the decision to do so has been made by the Swedish Parliament.

In general, both employers' and employees' organizations have opposed compulsory arbitration laws. The threat of the appointment of an arbitration court by Parliament has been enough to make the parties come to a settlement themselves. The Swedish law providing for compulsory arbitration is extremely restrictive, so much so that a situation such as the 1959 steel conflict in the U.S. probably would not be cause for using arbitration legislation.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that Sweden has recognized the need to have this type of legislation available to settle public interest disputes. The fact that the parties have been able to resolve their differences without the need to invoke the legislation, reflects on their maturity.

I would like to emphasize once again that this bill is limited in its application to this one dispute. Both a strike and a lockout are banned. A three-man board of arbitration will settle the issues between the parties. Under the legislation, each party will have the opportunity to nominate a member to the board. These members, in turn, will be required to agree on a chairman, but if they are unable to agree, the hon. Minister of Labour will appoint. The present members of the board of conciliation are not eligible for appointment to the board of arbitration.

Under section 3, subsection 13, the board is required to give the parties to the dispute full opportunity to present their evidence and make their submissions.

The Act comes into force on Royal Assent and is repealed on the day on which a collective agreement becomes effective.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions of this bill provide the best available machinery to assure a full and thorough investigation, weighing and ultimate decision, fairly, objectively and impartially arrived at. Through this legislation, the interests of the employer, the interest of the workers and the interests of the people of this city will be justly served.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister in regard to this bill. The hon. Prime Minister indicated this afternoon that he was not too enthused about our suggesting that he was a fair man; he was not impressed with that sort of statement. I am going to suggest right now, sir, that the remarks that he made in support of this bill were a bunch of noises signifying absolutely nothing.

He took off after my hon. leader and the remarks that he addressed to this House last evening, and suggested that the comparison with Sweden was hardly a proper one, because Sweden had on its statute books a compulsory arbitration bill which was there even though it is rarely, if ever, used. I suggest, sir, that at least in Sweden there is a public declaration of policy that the government had the courage to put on its statute books.

I suggest, sir, that this is a government that is weak-kneed and lacking in courage because it does not have the authority, the guts, to put on the statute books what it really means in labour relations. In the time that we have sat in this Legislature, my hon. colleagues and I who came in in 1959, we have seen this government move from crisis to crisis.

We have had the Ontario Hydro strike where the government weeps and wails and bemoans its fate and says, "What can we do? What can we do? We are going to have a one-shot effort at compulsory arbitration for Ontario Hydro. We do not believe in it, but we are going to do it. We are forced to. Those terrible people in the union are pressing our hands, they have a knife in our back and we are going to have to have a one-shot effort at compulsory arbitration."

Then we had the Trenton hospital situation. The government set up the Bennett commission. His Honour Judge Bennett, a very competent man, sat and studied and brought in a report, and the government, again beating its breast in self-righteousness, said, "We do not like it; we do not really believe it; but—one-shot effort again—we are going to have compulsory arbitration in this very dangerous hospital dispute."

For some peculiar reason, they let the mantle slip a bit from this cloak of self-righteousness. Just a few days ago, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) brought in a measure, tucked away in his Police Act, that compels the cleaning women and the gardeners and the typists attached to police forces to arbitrate compulsorily. The government said: "We do not believe in it. We are not really treading upon the right to bargain. We really believe in the right of labour to bargain. But there is a danger that the whole process of the administration of justice might grind to a halt if those civil servants are given a free right to bargain, and all that it implies." My friend, the hon. Attorney General, a very clever man, and a man for whom I have the greatest respect, quibbles with words and says, "We are not taking away any bargaining rights."

Mr. Speaker, if we have to quibble with words, let us find out what the labour movement in this province thinks about when it talks about bargaining rights and when it talks about collective bargaining. Surely it must mean, and it must imply, the right of labour to withhold its work. No amount of equivocation, no amount of pedantics and no amount of splitting hairs is going to deviate from that principle one iota.

Mr. Speaker, I say that the time has long since passed in this province of Ontario when we should have a clear, public and unequivocal declaration from the government as to what it means in relation to collective bargaining. We have not got it tonight and we have not had it for 22 years from this government.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Tell us what you would do.

Mr. Singer: I will tell you what I would do. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this whole government stands condemned tonight, as it has stood condemned for the last half dozen years; dozen years; and 22 years, because it has never once been able to set its labour house in order. It has had a series of Ministers of Labour who have not the faintest idea, sir, of how to progress in relation to management-labour relations. They go around beating their breasts and complaining: "Oh, we believe in labour; we believe in collective bargaining; we believe in your right to withdraw your labour; we believe in all these things."

But look, Mr. Speaker, at 8.30 of the clock on Thursday, June 10, just 3½ hours away from the strike deadline, we have Bill 167 presented to us for second reading. The hon. Prime Minister outlined to us the tortured series of negotiations. We tried, he said, we tried desperately. We had all these meetings. The hon. Minister of Labour himself sat down yesterday and tried to say: "Please accept compulsory arbitration."

But not once during these negotiations, Mr. Speaker, not even once was the Opposition called in. Was my hon. leader called in? Was the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) called in? Was the situation explained to them? No, sir, not until yesterday afternoon was the meeting hastily convened and the hon. Prime Minister announced to my hon. leader and to the hon. member for York South: "We have a terrible situation on our hands and with great reluctance—we do not want to do it—we are going to have to bring in a bill for compulsory arbitration."

Was there any explanation, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): What did Mr. St. Laurent do in 1950 when the railway—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I must admit I am duly unimpressed by the irrelevant rantings of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests. His performance as Attorney General left something substantially to be desired, and if he wants to get into labour disputes let him get up and explain the record of this government in labour negotiations. It is a poor one. He knows it, I know it, and the people of Ontario know it. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me get on with the debate.

Not until late yesterday afternoon did the hon. Prime Minister of this province venture to bring into his confidence the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. leader of the NDP. Not until yesterday afternoon was an attempt made by the leader of this province to inform the Opposition—a most integral part of the government—of what was going on.

To my knowledge, sir, even at this eleventh—the eleventh and a half—hour no real explanation has been given to the public. I listened carefully to the hon. Prime Minister as to the sort of damage that could well be anticipated; is in fact likely to occur. I have read very carefully today's newspapers. One of the journalists suggested that the normal services could carry on, but if there was a break in the service there was no ability to repair it. I do not know, sir, even tonight, if a strike takes place at midnight this evening if the people in hospitals would suffer; if our young citizens would suffer; if our older citizens who need electrical facilities would suffer. I do not know any of these things and I suggest, sir, that none of us in this House know—from any words that come from government sources—what the likely results would be from such a strike.

I say, sir, that the government stands seriously condemned tonight as a result of its own action and its own inaction. I say, sir, that no one really knows—no one in the province of Ontario has the faintest idea—what the government means when it says: "We believe in collective bargaining; we believe in the rights of labour to bargain and if they cannot bargain successfully, to withhold their services." I suggest that the government has dug itself into a hole this evening by reason of its inability either to make up its mind as to which direction we can go in or it is because of its additional inability to advise all of the citizens of this province—including particularly the hon. members of the Opposition in this House—as to what, in fact, has been going on.

I suggest, sir, that it lies within our power here this evening—starting at 30 minutes past 8 of the clock this evening—to conduct a similar sort of debate such as has been going on in connection with the bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond).

I suggest, sir, that it lies completely within our power. Perhaps it might even be our democratic duty to discuss as fully and as carefully on second reading, clause by clause of this bill; as well as all the possible ramifications that lie within this. With the deadline staring us in the face, we would be less than responsible if we said: "We do not really care about what is going to happen to our people in hospitals; about what is going to happen to the little babies who need warm milk that has to be heated by electricity; and about all the possible ramifications of this strike." We have never really been told—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Crocodile tears.

Mr. Singer: It is not "crocodile tears." Mr. Speaker, I am not too amazed, really, at the tenor of the remarks that come from the government front benches. They are in a spot and they know it. They are in a spot of their own choosing; they are in a spot produced by their own absolute neglect. They have neglected to take a stand in labour-management relations; they have neglected to lay out a policy; and above all, administratively, they have neglected to set up within the machinery of this department proper conciliation officers and proper bargaining procedure that has the confidence of labour and management.

There is nobody to blame, for the situation that faces us in this province tonight, other than those in the front benches of this government. These are the people that did it. These are the people that at 23 minutes to nine—a few hours away from the deadline—come to us, weeping and wailing and beating their breasts, saying: “Help us out of the situation; we failed miserably. We never took you into our confidence. We never had any policy, but help us out of the situation. We caused it, we created it, now, for goodness sake, get us out.”

Mr. Speaker, we have not been told, and I listened carefully to the words of the hon. Prime Minister, that there is an emergency, really. He talks about a possible emergency. Surely the least we could have expected from a responsible Prime Minister was a clear delineation of what would happen if a strike would commence at midnight tonight. There has been no outlining of that situation at all. Can the Hydro go on? Will the electricity function? Will all these difficult and emergency situations be looked after, or not? We do not know.

I would hope, the hon. Prime Minister has spoken and according to the rules of the House we can only speak once in this debate, that one of his colleagues, perhaps the hon. Minister of Labour—we have not heard a word from him yet—would get up and say, clearly and unequivocally, what the exact situation is. We have not had an opportunity to talk with the labour leaders. We do not know what provisions the union can make. We do not know any of these things. I suggest, sir, that it is a real insult to the intelligence of the people of the province of Ontario that we are placed in this position because of lack of government planning and lack of government leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that at this point I can say much more in connection with this second reading. Many of my hon. colleagues are going to join in this debate, but for the moment, sir, on behalf of my colleagues and myself, we are going to wait and see what facts this debate reveals. I hurl the challenge at the government to stand up boldly and say what this situation is, why has it come about, why were they so negligent that an emergency exists tonight?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Downsview said of the hon. Prime Minister that he had listened to a lot of sound and fury that signified nothing. I have just listened to a hurricane of sound and a cyclone of fury, which adds up to nothing. Where does the Liberal Party stand on this issue?

Mr. Singer: The hon. member will hear before the night is out.

Mr. MacDonald: I will tell the House where we stand before I am finished. But the Liberal Party, once again is sitting on the fence like a mugwump, with its mug on one side and its wump on the other, and we do not know where it stands.

The Liberal Party referred to the government as gutless. I will get around to proving that they are right that the government is gutless, but if there is anybody more gutless than the government it is the Liberals, and they have proven it once again. As far as they are concerned there are no principles involved in this situation at all. They are just playing politics throughout.

Mr. Singer: Having delivered himself of all that, what is the hon. member going to do?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: I just wanted to unmask the sound and fury, but there will be a little more substance in my case and before I sit down I will present a positive alternative, which could have gotten us out of the mess we are in at the present time. This is what we could have expected from a responsible Opposition facing a so-called irresponsible government—using your terms. But the hon. member has matched their irresponsibility with his own.

Mr. Speaker, let us get down to the substance of this issue. It is a very serious issue, an extremely serious issue. I trust that the flippancy of the interjections that were made here yesterday, and we have had already a bit here tonight, are not going to lower the tone of a debate which is dealing with the fundamental rights of a free society.

My first point, Mr. Speaker, is one which, in the flexibility that you granted yesterday on first reading, I made at that time, but I want to reiterate it.

Some time soon, Mr. Speaker, we have got to start practising what we preach. This government consistently says: We are opposed to compulsory arbitration; labour is opposed to compulsory arbitration, management is opposed to compulsory arbitration. Yet with repeated frequency, this government comes in and imposes compulsory arbitration.

Mr. Speaker, that kind of inconsistency begins to border on hypocrisy, because we have had another example of it in a bill that has been brought before this House. Let me take this House back to a debate that a good third of the House will not have had an opportunity to have heard. It was the debate the last time we had to face this kind of an issue, in precisely this kind of circumstance, on the eve of a strike in which the arbitrary exercise of legislative power was going to strike at the basic rights of human beings, rights to which the government pays lip service.

I am referring to the debate that took place in this House on black Thursday, April 5, 1962. I want to quote just two brief passages from my own comments at that time. It is to be found on page 1952 of Hansard:

Since there is a growing body of opinion, including some sections of the trade union movement, which is at least open-minded in considering that there are certain areas of our economy where arbitration of disputes might be entertained, then there is an obligation on the government to give leadership through consultations with labour and management in seeking to define clearly what those areas are, and the conditions under which arbitration would be acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, there is a vital difference between the use of arbitration on a shotgun basis, such as this government proposes to do in this bill, and deliberations among all concerned to seek prior and voluntary extension of the principle of arbitration in areas beyond those where it is now accepted. This kind of action would represent a constructive approach to this problem, it would open up the possibility that we are not going to be faced with a series of ad hoc bills such as this one, each representing an arbitrary exercise of legislative power to destroy the normal rights of free collective bargaining.

That is the end of my quotation. But, Mr. Speaker, just to show you how seized people of all political complexions were with the seriousness of the government action in 1962, let me quote briefly from an editorial of the Toronto Telegram the day after the government introduced its bill in 1962 so that it was available for me to use it in the debate. I quote one paragraph from the Telegram editorial:

In any case, compulsory arbitration is not a principle that should be adopted in the conditions of haste and conflict that exists in the 11th hour of dispute. If the Ontario Legislature in its wisdom decides that the right of Hydro workers to go on strike should be restricted then the Legislature should have reached the decision with due deliberation. It should have brought in legislation when there was no duress and when the issue could be debated in principle without a critical dispute hanging over it. An issue that involves curtailing the rights of any section of the population of Ontario should not be decided by hurriedly passing legislation at the last minute.

That is the end of the quotation from the editorial of the Toronto Telegram in 1962.

Mr. Speaker, that was the government's action then. They have not only the pleading of us in the House, but they have the pleading of the press, and I could have quoted from the Toronto Daily Star. They have the pleading from such regular supporters of the Tory party as the good old Tory Telegram saying that you do not trample on these principles under such circumstances. You do not do this again. You sit down and you consider the circumstances under which it might be legitimate to use compulsory arbitration, but you do it in the quiet of rational consideration, not in the 11th hour, on the eve of a strike.

What has this government done, Mr. Speaker? What has this government done in the last three years?

The answer to that is one word—nothing.

Well, perhaps I am unfair. Perhaps they have done something.

Let us recall another little episode, because if the hon. Minister of Labour wants to know something of the background of the problem he has had to cope with in this, he has to harken back to a situation in which he was very intimately involved. This government has done something.

We had a situation in the Trenton hospital, a roughly comparable situation in that it was a public service in which the public welfare was going to be threatened, so it was said, if the workers went on strike. There was a deadline at the end of September, 1962, I think was the year, or maybe it was 1963. This hon. Minister of Labour called in the union and said to this union, "If you will agree to postpone your strike, then I give you a guarantee that at the next session of the Legislature we will bring in a bill to arbitrate this single dispute."

Here was a union that was willing, Mr. Speaker, to accept voluntary arbitration. It said so. The hon. Minister of Labour, over the signatures of two respected civil servants in this province, Louis Fine, for years a chief conciliation officer, and Tom Eberlee, the assistant deputy Minister of Labour, gave the union a guarantee, the word of the hon. Minister, that if they were to postpone strike deadline and if they pursued negotiations and did not get a settlement, this government would bring in a bill for arbitration of the dispute.

You know what happened, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps hon. members have forgotten. The Cabinet doublecrossed the hon. Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We've heard this story before.

Mr. MacDonald: I invite the hon. Prime Minister to get up and tell me exactly what happened, then.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have heard this speech from the hon. member six times.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly, and the hon. Prime Minister is going to hear it once more right now.

The fact of the matter is that the hon. Minister of Labour gave his word of honour and the government, the Cabinet, the hon. Prime Minister—who, I do not know, but collectively they have the responsibility—refused to back up the hon. Minister of Labour and his word was not worth a snap of the fingers. I said to the hon. Minister of Labour at that time, that any time he tries to suggest to a labour group in this province that his word should be accepted at some of the delicate stages in settling a labour-management dispute, he should not be surprised if labour says, "Why should we accept your word?" Once bitten, twice shy.

And then what did this government do, Mr. Speaker? This is very interesting and I wish the hon. member for Downsview had not gone out.

Mr. Singer: I am listening.

Mr. MacDonald: Very good. I wish the hon. member for Downsview would listen rather carefully then.

Mr. Singer: Just mention my name and I will even come back and sit down and let the hon. member know—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this government had a way to solve the situation in Trenton. If there ever was a clear-cut case of management refusing to bargain in good faith, it was that case. There has never been a more clear-cut case. Everybody was opposed to management because of its intransigent stand—the hospital association, the government, the union, the public, everybody. Yet there is a clause in The Labour Relations Act that says you must bargain in good faith. Did this government have—and I borrow the good proletarian phrase—the guts to enforce its own labour relations Act? The answer is no. What did it do as an alternative, Mr. Speaker? It brought in a bill which imposed compulsory arbitration, not only on Trenton but on all of the hospitals across the province of Ontario.

In other words, because it did not have the courage to enforce its own labour relations Act, this government, which professes to be opposed to compulsory arbitration, brought in a bill which imposed compulsory arbitration from this day forward across the board in the hospitals. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when it brought in that bill, just to show how much was sound and fury tonight and how much was substance, the Liberals supported it, two to three months ago in this session.

We are back once again to the proposition of how the government acts and how it conflicts with your preaching. I will say to the hon. Minister that he has had a tough situation in this dispute. I would say to the hon. Minister that there has been a degree of intransigence on both sides. When the hon. Minister finds himself in the middle under circumstances like that, the situation is not easy. But what the hon. Minister has to do is to resolve every conceivable alternative before he resorts to something that he professes to abhor—compulsory arbitration. And did he? Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you that he did not.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this is an incredible proposition. Here is a union that has been in negotiation for quite some time with the Toronto Hydro commission. Mr. Speaker, do you realize that at no stage, even now, the eleventh hour, three hours before a strike deadline, has the negotiating committee of the union had an opportunity to sit down with the commission? Here you have a group of public servants in this city.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Would the hon. member just repeat that, I missed part of it.

Mr. MacDonald: I said at no time has the union's negotiating committee had an opportunity to sit down with the commission itself. The commission is not big business, it is not Stelco; the commission is a public body, it is made up of men who are paid out of the public purse, it is a body about which, tragically, the city council in Toronto did not see fit to continue the historic right of labour to have one representative on it, and bolstered that commission with a good old, solid, reactionary, Tory base—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Let us not impute that to me, if the hon. member is talking about me; that is not my Act.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the commission.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is not my commission.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying to the hon. Minister is, this is a commission of people who are public servants, who are being paid out of the public purse, who are driving around in Cadillacs at the cost of the public, and not once during all of these negotiations did the workers have an opportunity to sit down with these public servants. Yet did the government do anything to insist that they would have an opportunity to sit down? No, it did not. I come to the conclusion therefore that the government did not exhaust all of the possibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add one more thing, and it is something that the House is not aware of. To my mind it is a significant confirmation of the fact that this government did not do everything that was possible to solve this strike without compulsory arbitration.

When this bill was introduced here yesterday, I was just as unhappy as the government professed to be unhappy; indeed, I would suggest, more so. Last night I went home and I got in touch with a number of people, as a result of which this morning, Mr. Speaker, the organizing committee of the union sat down with David Lewis, QC, who is universally recognized as one of the top labour lawyers in this country, and as a result of that session this morning, at noon of today the union met with the hon. Prime Minister of this province and presented a proposal to him. I want to read to the House what that proposal is, because I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is an eminently fair proposition which would have avoided the use of compulsory arbitration under the circumstances with which we are now faced. This was a proposal that was made to the government by the union at noon of today:

That the present bill to be—

Mr. Speaker, let me stop right here, because there is a very important factor I forgot about.

The union gave the government its assurance that it would postpone the strike deadline as of midnight tonight if the government would adopt this proposal. Just let me pause and emphasize this, Mr. Speaker, for hon. members of the Legislature to grasp. The union involved, as of noon today, agreed to postpone the strike deadline, so that in fact we would not be faced with a strike at 12 o'clock tonight.

Some hon. members: On what terms?

Mr. MacDonald: On what terms? Fine. I shall read them:

The present bill to be withdrawn and a new bill to be introduced to provide as follows:

(a) The old collective agreement between the parties to be reinstated until a new collective agreement is executed.

(b) The government to appoint a mediator with the duty of seeking to reach a settlement between the parties on all outstanding issues.

(c) The mediator to have 60 days within which to seek such settlement.

(d) If, at the end of 60 days, there remain any issues still unresolved, then those issues to be submitted to final and binding arbitration without delay.

(e) The submission to be to a board of arbitration of which the mediator shall be chairman and to which each of the parties shall appoint a nominee within seven days after the end of the 60-day period. If either of the parties fails to make such an appointment the Minister of Labour to appoint someone who shall have the same position as if he had been appointed by the parties concerned.

(f) The government to pay the fee and expenses of the mediator and chairman of the board and each party to pay the fee and expenses of its own nominee to the board.

Mr. Speaker, could I just go back a bit to the interjection of the hon. Prime Minister, in comment on an observation of the hon. leader of the Opposition yesterday that in Sweden they have compulsory arbitration? "But," said he, "there is a heavy element of mediation in it." Quite true, and there is a heavy element of mediation in this. Indeed, it is mediation. Now, what happened? I am authorized by Mr. David Lewis to say that, when he talked with the hon. Minister of Labour this afternoon, the hon. Minister said that this was acceptable in principle to the government if it was acceptable to the Hydro commission. The proposition was put to the Hydro commission, which refused to accept it, and demanded its pound of flesh in terms of—

An hon. member: They wanted voluntary arbitration.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes—to be accurate, the commission said it would accept voluntary arbitration. Whether or not this is voluntary arbitration, at this stage, is a very nice point.

So there we have, Mr. Speaker, a very fair proposition put to this government as an alternative. A proposition in which the union said that it would postpone the strike deadline, accept the government-appointed mediator and would, within 60 days, sit down with that mediator and sort out all these unresolved points in the labour-management dispute. What remained at the end of 60 days would be referred to an arbitration board, which would be chaired by the mediator, and to which each of the parties would appoint somebody. If either of them began to play a dog-in-the-manger role, the government would have the right to make an appointment on its behalf. The majority decision that the board came up with would be final and binding. This was accepted by the union and refused by the Hydro commission.

I would suggest to this government that it should not be like the Liberals and just sit on the fence in an issue; that it should exercise some of the power that goes with its office.

Now, if you have as eminently fair a proposal as this—a proposal in which the union has agreed to negotiate with the assistance of an arbitrator to sort out as many of these as is possible so that, in the final arbitration, there will be as few points as possible left—this is surely retaining as much of the free collective bargaining process as is possible; instead of handing the whole thing over to an arbitrator who is just going to go off and come back with a decision which is final and binding, and nobody has had an opportunity—neither party—to have a say in the process.

This, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is wrong. There are three members of this board—one appointed by each side.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is in keeping with the kind of thing that the hon. Prime Minister, perhaps unwittingly, extolled in the instance of Sweden. What saddens me, Mr. Speaker, is that this provided an opportunity for the government to avoid the shocking aspects of using compulsory arbitration in a bill in the fashion that they are going to do now. But, I suggest, it also offered the key to a long-term solution to this kind of problem; the kind of thing that the Toronto Telegram asked for three years ago—to sit down quietly when there is no specific crisis with labour and management and work out a kind of formula; presumably the kind of thing the Liberals were pleading for when they said that the government should work out their policy so that the public would know where they stand.

Mr. Speaker, I have presented an alternative—not only an alternative that is acceptable in this instance in terms of protecting the public interest and resolving this dispute—but I suggested an alternative which this government and this Legislature should study for future use in comparable situations so that we will not have ad hoc bills coming in every time this kind of situation arises.

Because the government has not seen fit to use its power under these circumstances, to make certain that this alternative was put into effect, we cannot support this bill. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word “that,” and substituting the following:

In the opinion of this House the proposal submitted to the government today by Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees, represented a fair and reasonable method of settling the dispute without a stoppage of work, which would have safeguarded adequately both the public interest and the interests of the parties, and thus represented an alternative preferable to the harsh, restrictive and undemocratic provisions of Bill 167.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. MacDonald, seconded by Mr. Freeman, that the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word “that” and substituting the following:

In the opinion of this House, the proposal submitted to the government today by Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees, represented a fair and reasonable method of settling the dispute without a stoppage of work, which would have safeguarded adequately both the public interest and the interests of the parties, and thus represented an alternative preferable to the harsh, restrictive and undemocratic provisions of Bill 167.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here and listened to one of the most deplorable examples of public dis-service and of irresponsible politics that I have heard in all my days in the Legislature. I refer to a man who has played politics with the essential services of the people of this province and who has wanted to be like a vaudeville act, hiding within his pocket some special little knowledge that he has until the last moment. It cheapened, to me, the whole emergency situation that we have. He stood up and talked about a hurricane and other things to us. I have seen him over the years, in his desperation, try to gain power and try to woo people. This is—not in the man himself, but in what he said—one of the most despicable demonstrations of irresponsibility that I have ever witnessed.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Who presented this? He said that he did, with David Lewis. The two of them get into cahoots together—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I did not say that I presented this, and I did not present this. I said, Mr. Speaker, that this was worked out by the union committee this morning and was presented to the government; and I suggested it as an alternative.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. member has been hiding things quietly to himself, having certain facts and getting up with the bluster for which he is so notorious. He starts condemning us because, at this point, we did not know any of these facts—not having been in cahoots with David Lewis. I challenge him to say that he has not seen David Lewis and talked to him. Having talked to him, he then suddenly produces this as a great champion. I say again, and Hansard will show it, that he said: "I present this." The unions presented this, not you.

Mr. MacDonald: And I offered—

Mr. Thompson: I suggest now, sir, that here in this House, when we have to make a very fundamental decision, let me read how all of the hon. members of this House have viewed this decision. I refer to the select committee on labour relations of the Ontario Legislature and its report, signed by the leader of the New Democratic Party. Let me say, section 25, essential services:

It is the recommendation of the committee that a model clause should be included in the Act to be made part of all collective agreements which would provide that there shall be no stoppage of work by any employees who are responsible for the maintenance of essential services to the community at large, as distinguished from the employer.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, and I am still pleading for the model clause—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Now who is inconsistent?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not inconsistent about it at all.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say this, that we have viewed this situation with alarm and concern, because our understanding was that there was a deadlock and that there was no solution to this. We had that explained yesterday and I appreciate that the hon. Prime Minister had called both of us in. But there was no sort of solution when the hon. Prime Minister talked to myself and to the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. MacDonald: That was yesterday.

Mr. Thompson: He scurried out since yesterday.

Mr. MacDonald: Right.

Mr. Thompson: He held back through the tense moments, and now, at 9 o'clock, three hours before this situation would become a crisis for the whole of Ontario and particularly for the people of Metropolitan Toronto, smugly and with satisfaction he pulls this out, after castigating us and condemning us, because he says the government does not know where it is standing and is wishy-washy.

If this presentation represents the situation, and I presume it does, may I now turn to the government? Its members stood before us, told us there was a deadlock, and that there was no solution. Just at this point, we were suddenly getting certain facts. My hon. colleague from Downsview explained the pattern in the past, the history of the government in connection with moving in with compulsory arbitration, the very dangerous tendency which we saw from the hon. Attorney General, affecting cleaning women and others to be covered in all-embracing compulsory arbitration.

Of course we hate the thought of compulsory arbitration. We had assumed that this had come to a deadlock; we had assumed that there was no solution to it and that men, women and children were going to suffer in hospitals. They were going to suffer, as my hon. friend said, although he got catcalls or something from some of the government hon. members. He talked of children and the need for milk. Certainly this would mean a close-down of all those things. As I said last night, the welfare of the community, and the lives of children and of the people of this community override and are paramount in a situation of labour relations.

But we qualified what we were saying, because we had no facts. We qualified what we were saying, asking was this such a drastic emergency? We wanted to be sure of it. The other thing we wanted to be sure of was the fact that this was seriously a deadlock, from which there was no solution. As my hon. colleague from Downsview said, we are being left completely in the dark. We do not know what the deliberations were. We do not know what the 54 points were on which there is deadlock. All we know about the situation is, because of the indulgence of the hon. Prime Minister, to call us out yesterday at 4.30 and to explain to us that there is an emergency situation.

Let me be fair, Mr. Speaker, in this. The hon. Minister of Labour did talk to me two weeks ago. I assumed it was in confidence and I can say at this point that he told me that if there was a shutdown of Hydro, and he hoped there would not be, then this would involve many of the lifesaving services for the people of this province. He was working in order that this could be stopped, in order that a solution could be arrived at.

But we had not known of this solution. To me, it is a perfectly reasonable solution and if we had known it, of course, this would have taken on a different complexion.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Call you up to tell you next time.

Mr. Thompson: This is just the point I want to make—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I would remind the members that we are on second reading of the bill and that the member speaking to the motion has the floor. It is contrary to the rules to speak directly back and forth to other members in the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order once again, before the hon. leader of the Opposition persists in misrepresenting it.

This proposal was presented by the union at noon today. It was being considered by the government all during the afternoon and

I had a call from the hon. Prime Minister at five minutes to eight, before the House went in, indicating that the commission could not accept it and therefore the government had decided to proceed with its bill.

Mr. Singer: You had a call?

Mr. MacDonald: Right.

Mr. Singer: It is fine for the NDP and the government to carry on secret negotiations—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, all this sound and fury—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Settle a strike by the NDP and the government secretly negotiating—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I just cannot help picking up a remark by one of the NDP backbenchers—the fact that, as I thought I heard it, it was, “We had the facts,” or something like this.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, I did not catch what you said.

Mr. Speaker: No conversations directly with another member of the House, please!

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry; I am getting these interruptions. What I really want to say is that it is a heinous crime, I suggest it is betrayal of trust, when there are such facts as these, and they are known either by the hon. Prime Minister of this province or by the leader of the New Democratic Party, and we are being asked to deliberate on this most serious situation without them.

Mr. Singer: It is a shame and a disgrace.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I mean this most sincerely, Mr. Speaker, because this is a situation in which I say the welfare of the community is above politics. There are times when, as a group of legislators we come together with our overriding concern being the welfare of the people of a city or a province, and we rise above trying to take political advantage of a situation. May I say if I had had facts such as these, I can assure the hon. members that I would have wanted to present them to the House, and not wait quietly as he did, until one speaker got up and then another speaker, and have this display of utter partisanship, with him castigating the hon. member for Downsview who was asking for more facts, and smugly like a cat with a mouse hidden underneath its belly or something—a perfectly good English term used in Shakespeare—hide these facts from the rest of us so that he could produce them and become the great protagonist for some people.

I say I do not want to be the protagonist for any section. We are the Liberal Party; we are concerned with the welfare of the whole community. In this, we are not trying to garner some votes from a situation that can imperil the whole of this city. But I would say this, sir, that because we did not know of this representation that was made by the union through the government, this has changed the whole complexion with regard to our attitude. We no longer see this situation as the extreme emergency which at first we had understood it would be. I, sir, intend to read this and I would say that our inclination, in fact our purpose now, is that there is not this emergency which the government is portraying. We will wait to hear the hon. Minister of Labour justify to us that there is an emergency before we make the decision on which way we will vote.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in the discussion about this bill, and being quite aware of the significance of the contents and the principles of the bill, I think maybe it is timely that I do so. However, I am not interested in getting into any altercation with either of the Opposition parties. I am sure they can look after their own respective situations.

In the light of the previous debate; maybe I should start in reverse, and so I will start with today. I was down here in the building at about 20 minutes to nine this morning. I have been within 100 feet of this Legislature for the entire day up to and including this evening, and there have been a number of events taking place which have required analysis and careful consideration.

From the remarks made by some of the hon. members here tonight it is obvious that they have no idea about the operation of government, nor the discharge of the responsibilities which a Minister has to bear if he regards his portfolio with any degree of seriousness. I tell you that quite frankly.

This morning at about 11.30 a telephone call was received in the office of the hon. Prime Minister from Mr. David Lewis, and Mr. Lewis said he had a matter that he wanted to discuss. We then tried to make arrangements so that he could be seen as quickly as possible. Mr. Lewis explained in his initial telephone call that he had of his own volition volunteered his services and injected himself into this dispute. He also indicated that he was in a ticklish position because he did not know anything about the relationship with the previous lawyer, Mr. Levinson. Of course, these were the situations that he was discussing and it was finally made clear that he said he was acting without fee in the matter and that he was a voluntary consultant, if I could put it this way.

An appointment was made and we said that we could see him and the bargaining committee at about a quarter after one, when they arrived. We spent until about a quarter to two discussing the proposal which Mr. Lewis was advocating. The proposal we were told had the union's full support. The question of the direct approach—and the timing of the approach, of course, on the one hand is of concern and on the other hand is of no concern. As far as this government is concerned, in a matter of this nature the door is always open right up to the 11th hour and 59th minute pertaining to any representation that someone wishes to make. This proposal was treated on that basis, and whatever Mr. Lewis and the committee cared to advance was given very careful consideration.

There were various discussions with Mr. Lewis, who spoke on behalf of the committee and in their presence, and reference was made to the question of the various alternatives. We dealt with such matters as were directly concerned with this proposed amendment, this new proposal of procedure, and indeed went back to another point involving the question of voluntary arbitration. Then at about a quarter to two we left so that we could have a conversation, my deputy and an official from the hon. Prime Minister's office and one from my own office.

Having met these gentlemen, at a quarter to two we adjourned so that we could catch the hon. Prime Minister before he went into the House, which we did about three minutes later. We discussed the matter and I looked into certain other aspects of it and I reviewed it privately myself.

I then talked, at exactly a quarter to three, to Mr. Lewis at his office. I informed him that as the Minister I was prepared to recommend this proposal, but in the light of the circumstances of the time and of the intransigent position of both parties up to this moment I felt an amendment by consent or an alternative of this sort, would come best from both parties.

We discussed whether I should call the commission or its representatives, or whether Mr. Lewis should. My view, frankly, was that Mr. Lewis should and I told him so. Mr. Lewis then proceeded to make his contact with the commission and in these circumstances there would have been a proposal bearing the consent of the parties, which I regarded as a very meaningful step forward. Possibly the step forward that we had been looking for in this whole matter.

Now, subsequently, there was some delay. While Mr. Lewis was endeavouring to reach the representatives of the commission, he called me back again. We had a further conversation, cordial as usual, and it covered a range of subjects, since Mr. Lewis had 20 minutes to wait before he could make the contact he wished to achieve. During that conversation Mr. Lewis advanced various matters with relation to this dispute and I discussed them with him in the hope that some knowledge or information bearing on the subject matter would come forward. It is out of such discussions as these that solutions come. There is no exact scientific approach to the solution of labour relations problems. The solutions come from the most unusual places and at the most unexpected times. People in this business have to be alert and aware, ready to latch on, if I may put it this way, to whatever solutions may develop or appear available so that they may advance toward a resolution of the overall issues.

Now, at about—it was some time after 5 o'clock—another message came from the parties. It was partly from Mr. Lewis and it was partly from the representative of the commission and it was the commission's answer. Apparently contact had been made. This is the only way I know that they had contact.

The message that was given to me, and I think I shall read it if I have it—I had it somewhere—in any event, the version of it was a telephone call saying that the commission would try to meet the request, I think it was, of the union and would consent. Now, at this point the message, from this secretary in this office downtown, I thought had something missing. But we could not contact the author of the message to get clarification.

I tell hon. members, quite frankly, we spent some considerable time trying to decipher it, because there is a closeness in the meaning and relationship of the words and to suggest exactly what the answer from the commission was, because it had to do with either a counter offer, which meant that they would turn down the injection of the 60-day request. This is what the union position is—apart from the wording in that memo—the position of Mr. Lewis is that there is a 60-day period injected into the present proposal and that the binding arbitration is deferred 60 days. That is the meat of it.

We finally got back to Mr. Lewis about 5.20 or 5.30 and said, "Look, is this the message you received that was relayed to us?" And he said, "Yes." And we said, "We think there should be some clarification and something more specific in it." Mr. Lewis said, "I get the point, it means a counter offer." They turned down the formula which Mr. Lewis and the union had advanced and had come back with a counter offer to accept voluntary, binding arbitration. At that point, in effect, the issue was eliminated, because that was out. I was not speaking to Mr. Lewis in that last conversation, but it terminated, in effect, shall we say the attempt, to secure the commission's agreement on this point.

Now, the subsequent message I received—a further part of the message—had been a telephone call from the hon. member for York South to the hon. Prime Minister. I was not there, but I believe that they saw each other this morning and the hon. member for York South said—and this is hearsay from the hon. Prime Minister to me—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will explain that.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes. In any event, this is a proper approach and of course the visit had to do with Mr. Lewis's proposal and that of the union.

When the last conversation took place this afternoon with my office and Mr. Lewis, he made reference to his earlier conversation with me in which he said he had proposed and had urged on the union to try to settle this matter quietly. Whatever progress was possible through us, as I told Mr. Lewis, we could do best quietly, rather than in the press. I said that to him and he reported back that he had honoured that commitment or understanding with me. Then he added that he had honoured that and had reported the information to the hon. member for York South, and that is exactly the sequence of events as they took place today.

My own position? I have been asked 50 times today by various people and the press, and I did not say anything. I then came into the House at 8 o'clock and we are now here.

Let me now revert to this proposition.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister left out one part.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I did?

Mr. Sopha: Yes. Is it correct that the telephone call took place at five to eight between the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. member for York South?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have no knowledge of that.

Mr. Thompson: On the proposal that Mr. Lewis made in his conversation with the hon. Minister, they both had an agreement that this would be kept out of the press and confidential—am I correct on that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think the last word was used. I think there was a suggestion that the union might want to make a statement at an appropriate time. My view was that until the answer had been obtained from the Hydro commission that it would be helpful in all the circumstances, if it were not done.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask, sir, did the hon. Minister know that the hon. member for York South was going to break this proposal to the House?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I did not.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to this proposition, and this is really what the point is. It hinges around why I wanted both parties to take this formula and approve it and get the commission's consent. In those circumstances I would have recommended to the government that the formula be acted upon.

Throughout this entire dispute it has been obvious that feelings have been running very high between the parties. I have watched this dispute during the past month as I watch, to the best of my ability, all other matters which are current of this nature in the province, and I may tell the House that there is nothing new tonight, nor was there anything new last night to the people of this city or of this province about the existence of a possible strike at Toronto Hydro. This is a matter of public knowledge, known to those sitting hon. members of the Opposition of both parties, and certainly known to the members of the public.

I will go back to the first of this week. Let me go back to the day when the crisis really was brought to a head, when the union held a meeting and said "We are going to have a strike at midnight, at one minute past midnight, in the early hours of June 11." It was at that point that decisive action had been taken which brought the whole issue into focus.

There was not anything new that was being brought to anyone's attention, but the opportunity and the timing factors then became definite. I told Mr. Baker and his committee that I thought their decision had served a useful purpose. It had brought the thing into focus and in the labour relations business, these definitive steps put the thing into perspective so it can be viewed and considered by all those who may be concerned with the dispute.

I told Mr. Baker—and he is up in the gallery here—I told him about the date and that I must be cognizant of it and that in my own view I thought it served a very useful purpose. I was glad to see the matter being brought up tight, as we say, being brought up short, as it were, so that everybody knew where they stood, thus taking the mystery out of it.

These are the considerations that go on with any dispute of this kind. Many of the hon. members of the Opposition must be fully aware of the nature of the factors I am stating here tonight.

However, following the day of the strike vote, I then made certain inquiries. It was timely to move in certain directions and I arranged for the union to come in and see me, with Mr. Baker, early on the following morning.

Mr. Sopha: Who is Baker?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Baker? He is the head of Local 1 of CUPE—the Canadian union of public employees—and has the bargaining rights of Toronto Hydro.

Mr. Sopha: I hope that he is not offended that I did not recognize the name.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): He does not know the hon. member either.

Mr. Sopha: How does the hon. Minister know that he does not know me?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I see no point in going into all of the gruesome details, but there are some pertinent matters that I would like to report to the House.

We had a pretty good meeting with the union in my office upstairs here that day. It was a week ago this morning. Mr. Baker had with him Messrs. O'Keefe, MacKay, Houle, Rosen—I think I have covered them, there were five all told. We had a pretty good meeting and we agreed time was a factor and we did not want to wreck it, we wanted to get at the present situation as they saw it. I will be very frank and tell the House that it became obvious very quickly, in that meeting, that a stone wall existed between Toronto Hydro and this union and that there was a clash of personalities. Now this is well known in the business and it is well known in this city.

Naturally, the union felt that certain people at Hydro were at fault, and there it is. Now as the Minister, it is not for me to determine on the merits whether that is right or wrong. The very fact that the union felt that an impasse was being created, by their explanation I must accept that; and I do, quite frankly.

Later that day, when I met the Hydro commission, they had the same view, that there was a stone wall, no progress was being made. They in turn laid it off against the union. So here we have the key point, that a stone wall existed, leading to the futile and abortive discussions that were held from time to time, to the futility and the non-productivity of the efforts of the department, of the conciliation board under Mr. Dickie, and indeed of all of the efforts. They had not even got to the point of sorting out the issues.

Now this is from both sides. They both say the same thing. Each say, we cannot get on with the other at all. So we tell them that, of course, you had better settle down and get down to business.

Mr. Sopha: Who are these two people?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, it would not advance anything; I do not think it would. They are two senior officials, one on the union side and one on the commission side. Disposition of intransigents has continued until this day. Now, the first step then is to keep thinking in terms of where do we go from here; where is this thing going; where is it going to end? This, frankly, is always in our minds.

I then approached the parties and told them I do not want to interfere with the atmosphere of bringing talk of any compulsory arbitration or legislation before them, but at this point—meaning Tuesday of this week, I think it was Tuesday morning—I said: “I must put this question to you; I cannot wait any longer. Will you recognize the desirability of a peaceful settlement?” And, of course, both sides say yes to that. We want a peaceful settlement.

The Hydro commission said it would accept and be bound by voluntary binding arbitration. The union said it would have no part of it. I tell you that. A businesslike decision.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Well you are the Hydro commission.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, the Toronto Hydro has nothing to do with me or this government.

Mr. Sargent: Indirectly it has.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not at all. Any more than the Owen Sound warehouse has anything to do with us.

Mr. Sargent: Indirectly it has.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: So here we at—

Mr. Sargent: Get to the point.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Have you anything you would like to offer in this debate? I cannot get joint agreement on voluntary binding arbitration and that is all there is to it. I cannot get it. However, we went back to the bargaining table. When the negotiations finally broke up at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the deputy Minister who was chairing the meeting put the question again. The union again said it would not consent to binding arbitration. Frankly, a voluntary arbitration is something that is done every day of the week in the labour relations business. There is nothing new about it.

So time was running out, and finally the bill was introduced last night. We did not want the bill introduced a week ago, as had been indicated by some hon. members of the Opposition. I tell you that frankly; this was the word I got. I did not want to put the shadow or the curse of a strong arm over either party. That is why it was not introduced, or mentioned by me, until Tuesday of this week.

Now, the position of a Minister of Labour is that he is damned if he does and he is damned if he does not. So he cannot possibly win in a situation like this. If we had not brought the bill in, having in mind the public interest of the people of this city, we would have been accused by the Opposition over there that we let the thing get out of hand; you did not know what was going on; and all of these things.

On the other hand, when we do bring in a bill, which is a protective device, it is secondly for the employers and the employees. This bill is primarily directed for the benefit of the people of this city, because interests of the people of this city—three quarters of a million in number—transcend beyond any shadow of a doubt the private interest area of an employer of 550 people, or the 550 people themselves.

The desirable thing in any labour dispute is for the parties to settle the thing together at the bargaining table. But we cannot when both parties are intransigent—and as they both admit, a stone wall exists—and all of this is confirmed in this way; that right up to 5.30 this afternoon—even on a procedural matter as to whether an extra 60 days should be inserted into this proceedings—the parties themselves cannot agree upon it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Before we leave the point you were making a moment ago, who in the Opposition requested an introduction of the bill a week ago?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, no, I did not say that.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought you said somebody in the Opposition favoured the introduction of a bill a week ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I said information reached me, as it floats around the corridors of this building—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: —that oddly enough, some of the hon. members in the Opposition felt the bill should have been introduced a week or ten days ago.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): You should have been more specific.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I know, I try to protect everybody. But there was the fact, and I do not lay any more importance on it; I just give it to you.

Mr. MacDonald: I can assure you it was nobody from our group when you said it was the Opposition who was saying it should have been introduced a week ago.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, I hear a lot that goes on.

Mr. Thompson: Well, Mr. Minister, I just want to clarify this. In these rumours that sweep around, I can assure you it was not any of the members of my party.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Your own supporters want to get home so anxiously that they wanted it introduced—the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are coming down to the deadline, to the final wire, and as recently as 5.30 today, the parties themselves cannot even agree on the procedure. A proposal was put forth. The other side turn it down and come back with a counter-proposal, which is turned down by the union. I make no criticism whatsoever. This is their privilege. I am not talking about the merits; my prime concern is about the procedure that will lead to a settlement of this dispute.

Now here is the situation we find ourselves in, and I ask the hon. members of this House to consider this very carefully. In the development of management-labour relations in this province there has developed a characteristic with respect to conciliation boards. A conciliation board invariably endeavours to mediate a dispute as a preliminary to simply achieving a report. This practice in this province is a very desirable thing. Some of our important settlements are reached in the mediation stage and, quite frankly, Trenton hospital was mediated in the course of that Royal commission hearing; you will remember that.

I do not want to be too formal about this, but I am trying to recall the exact words I used earlier this week in defining trends in labour-management relations. But the fact is that on this continent and in this country there is a growing trend to the reference of items in dispute after they have been isolated. It has been agreed that there is a pocket of items here and a pocket there, that if private decision cannot be arrived at with respect to those items, that they by consent be referred to experienced, trained—

Mr. MacDonald: The basic validity of the union's proposal—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is right, this is part of my proposal. But these are my ideas, I delivered this speech early this week.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The point of it being that arbitration by consent is there and available to anybody at any time of the day or night, whether an arbitrator or an arbitration board is sitting or not. By the same token, during an arbitration, the parties by consent can ask for a deferment. There is a deferment provision in the bill that allows up to an extra 90 days. That is designed to provide for private decision-making or mediation or whatever process the parties agree they want to adopt, and the arbitrator will step aside. This is normal practice. By the way, I gathered that the 60-day provision was Mr. Lewis's view; Mr. Baker thought 30 days would have been right.

I would just like to add to the report the fact that that is available to them right now in this bill. Indeed, why do the parties not just agree to voluntary binding arbitration and get on with the business and let The Department of Labour get on with our other problems that we have? I put it to the hon. members that way. Voluntary arbitration offers everything that meets the needs of the parties and the needs of the people in the city of Toronto. I tell that to hon. members of the House, quite frankly, but there is disagreement on it.

What are we after? We are after stability and security for the 750,000 people who live in this city. Security is an important word. In the light of the intransigent position which exists between these parties, and the absolute failure of the parties under any pretext to be able to make any headway—and I say this quite frankly, not critically of either, it is their business—this is an impasse. I say that in these circumstances, 750,000 people under a democratic process have first claim to protection. It is of them that I was thinking in terms of this bill when I entered the debate on the bill and when it emanated from my department.

No doubt a caucus is going on across the hall, too. I take it that because the hon. leader of the Opposition is not here, he is not interested in what we are talking about—

Mr. Singer: Oh, nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, where is he?

Mr. Singer: Where was the hon. Minister when the bill was introduced? Was he not interested?

Mr. Sopha: Why did the hon. Minister of Labour not introduce the bill?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Because I had another assignment. It was perfectly proper. Once again, you are damned if you do and damned if you do not. That has been the position of the Opposition.

Mr. Singer: Stop imputing motives and there will not be that kind of talk.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have listened to a lot of imputations from the other side in a lot of debates during this current session and

I would think that the hon. member who has just spoken would be the last one in the House who is entitled to take that position. I say that in a friendly way.

Mr. Singer: Just as much as the hon. Minister at any time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: However, to get on with the matter, my concern frankly is not with some of the inept remarks I have had to listen to tonight. It is with the 750,000 people and the citizens of this province.

Some emphasis has been placed on the emergency that arises and exists.

Mr. Sargent: We will get the hon. Minister a medal.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The question of drugs looms very large. There are several million dollars worth of antibiotics in cold storage, for distribution not only in the Toronto area but in the province of Ontario. There is some $30 million worth of fresh meat, at any given moment, either in processing or in cold storage in Toronto. I could go on and enunciate the economic and not indirect factors which are pertinent.

But the fact is that you have to look at the operation of the Toronto Hydro to see how an emergency can or may arise. This happens in this way, that whereas Ontario Hydro is a producer and is the source of power, it is then delivered and sold in a wholesale way over high transmission lines. Toronto Hydro is a retail distributing operation where the power is distributed through poles and cables, all of which are in the city of Toronto and in Leaside, for which Toronto has a contract to supply power.

This entire retail distribution is subject to the dangers which the hon. Prime Minister enumerated in his earlier remarks, such as automobile accidents that take out hydro poles. A switching operation with respect to hydro and the source and the direction of the hydro supply is then required. The Toronto waterworks is subject to electrical supply in its entire operation. I do not think I need mention to this House any more important item than supply of water, to which each citizen of this province and this city is entitled and not just for the reason that without water man cannot survive. As informed hon. members of this Legislature would understand, there is the question of the hospitals and other situations which would be endangered if there was no one on the job to take care of the breakdown.

This entire bargaining unit includes the foreman, and I will not comment other than to state that the bargaining unit includes the foreman. Therefore 69 or 79 power divisions are involved and generally, apart from office staff, I would say the whole operation of Toronto Hydro, apart from the routine extension of the service, is a maintenance operation requiring the type of service which the members of this union have to offer.

If this is not a serious situation and if I should not have attempted and recommended this bill to the government, then hon. members should say so. On the other hand, I think it was proper, and a proper discharge of my responsibilities, to endeavour to the very best of my ability—and I give my word to this House that I have endeavoured in that fashion—to try every method known. The parties themselves have been unable to suggest procedures. We came up with new procedures, new meetings. They were held and even they were abortive. In all of these circumstances, I have no hesitation in saying that the duty of the hon. members of this Legislature is to accept their responsibility. There has been far more done than I am able to report tonight. I am sure that those who have talked about the Minister of Labour were joking; I assume they were, because if they were not joking, they simply do not know what they are talking about.

On that assumption, I put this to hon. members, that here is a proper discharge of our responsibility. It is my own view, and I think in this debate I should express it and I will. I think that in the minds in which both parties are, the 60 days would simply be an abortive two months of talks. Even at 5.30 tonight, the parties could not agree upon procedures that would let us get on with the job, get the matter settled and let the men settle down. Most of all, why this must be settled is that if it is not settled in the immediate few weeks ahead, I fear greatly for any future relationships between the employees and the Toronto Hydro, wherever the fault may be, and this should be avoided at all costs.

I have volunteered my services to the union and I have discussed this with Mr. Baker. I have said, "As the head of an important union, operating in this area of employment, it is of the greatest importance, Mr. Baker, that you be on a working basis with the Toronto Hydro commission, and whatever is between you, if there is anything, must be resolved, and I will assist you by endeavouring to arrange the appropriate meetings to that end. Quite frankly, I have a very sincere position in this matter."

It is obvious that legislation or contracts are not going to settle it, it goes beyond it. It goes towards the attitudes of people toward each other, all being human beings. My own view is that I would like to see this improved. But in all the circumstances, I think we should get on with the job, get everything levelled out and settled, and endeavour then to apply ourselves to an improvement of the relationship between this union representing some 500-plus men, and the commissioners of the system.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could just take a moment or two to straighten out my position in the chronology of the events of today so that hon. members may understand how they came about.

If hon. members recall, it was my intention to deal with this bill at 2 o'clock this afternoon so that we would have a reasonable time for debate in the House. The events of this morning took place as the hon. Minister of Labour has described.

They came to my attention. The hon. leader of the New Democratic Party—and I cannot really recall the precise time, but in any event it was some time in the neighbourhood of 12 o'clock, I would say—came to my office and told me that he was aware that there was some activity on behalf of the union. I said in that event I would be quite happy to ask The Department of Labour to meet and see if, even at that stage, it might be possible to find some way out of this position which we were in which might render the introduction of this bill not necessary. Although it did seem to me that at that stage with a strike deadline such a short time ahead, it would be difficult to get assurances that would be meaningful, looking at the possible consequences, if what we did decide in this short period of time really was not firm and did not work out properly. Bear in mind we are pressing against midnight tonight.

However, when the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party came to see me and I gave him that assurance, he said he knew some moves were being made. I said all right, I will ask The Department of Labour to see if we cannot find a solution and at least investigate any possibilities there may be.

Now that is the reason, and I believe that I put this in a note to the hon. leader of the Opposition saying that we would go back into committee of the whole House. I forget how I worded the note, but I did send him a note concerning the affairs of the afternoon.

Mr. Sopha: At noon.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: At noon, in any event, as soon as I knew. I came back from my office, where I had found out that there was some possibility of renegotiations. I made the arrangements for this to be done, I came back in the House and said we would not deal with this bill at 2 o'clock and would go into committee of the whole and continue with Bill No. 136.

My original intention was, of course, to proceed with second reading of this bill at 2 o'clock this afternoon. I believe I said that when the House rose last night. However, in the light of these events, that is what happened.

It was after the House rose this afternoon, because I was reasonably fully occupied in here during the afternoon and these various events were taking place during the afternoon, that I found out that as far as the government was concerned—without going through it, the hon. Minister of Labour has explained what in fact happened and the steps in it—these negotiations had failed. The parties could not agree, and as far as I was concerned we were back precisely where I had been at 12 o'clock.

I might say that I had been told that the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party had been informed of this. However, in view of the fact that he came to see me at noon, I phoned him and simply said the parties are at a complete impasse, the negotiations have failed and we will proceed with second reading of the bill at 8 o'clock. I believe he said, very well; in any event he said very little more than that.

So that puts the matter into perspective. I would point out that I did not discuss, nor did the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party discuss with me, the motion that he made tonight or any procedure that he might follow. We left it simply that at 8 o'clock the House would resume. As I say, as far as the government was concerned, at 6.30 tonight we were exactly where we were at 6.30 last night. While there had been action and activity during the day, it had been fruitless and it had achieved nothing. The point really is, as the hon. Minister of Labour has said, if we had introduced the bill a week ago, of course it would have meant that the bargaining that went on, the negotiations between the parties during that week, would have had the possibility of this bill hanging over it. On the other hand this afternoon, or at noon today, when there was any possibility whatsoever, however remote, that a solution could be reached, we went after it. We tried to find it, we explored it. We went through it with the parties and it proved impossible. So here we are tonight, dealing with the bill.

I just give this explanation. I believe I told the hon. leader of the Opposition at 6 o'clock, when the House rose, that we would be going on with this at 8 o'clock. So that is, sir, the chronology of events of this day.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister of Labour permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the member that we are really on second reading of the bill, and although I intend to use considerable flexibility in discussing this bill because of its great importance, I do not want to allow the debate to get into a question-and-answer period. However, if the Minister will answer a question, I shall allow you to ask it.

Mr. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Will the hon. Minister tell the House whether there was any communication from any member of the Toronto Hydro commission with the hon. Minister or any other hon. member of the government from the period 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon until the House reassembled tonight?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In answer to the hon. member's question I would have to say that from 3 o'clock on, yesterday afternoon, there has not been direct communication with me and I do not believe with the government. But there have been many communications with the members of the commission, there have been various meetings held throughout these entire proceedings. I would think that they have been informed—I know that they are informed—on practically a minute-to-minute basis, just as the union is informed in their own way, of matters.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the hon. leader of the Opposition became so upset a little while ago in respect to this matter. I think he felt that somehow or other we had left him out of things—I do not know by whom—and that somebody was trying to take political advantage of him. I do not know and I do not suppose there is any point inquiring into the basis of his outburst. All I would say is that I hope that he is now no longer upset so that he will look carefully and calmly at the alternatives that are now before the House.

There is, on the one hand, a bill from the government, and on the other hand, an amendment—what is now our proposal. It is essentially a proposal that Local 1 of the Canadian union of public employees made earlier today to the government—and I take it, from what the hon. Minister says, to the commission.

There was an implication—and it amazed me—in the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition that my hon. leader had been engaged in something disreputable, some sort of conspiracy, when he was trying to find a way out of the impasse in which we all found ourselves.

I will say, and I think I should be frank about it, that we were unhappy, as I believe everybody in this House was, when Bill 167 was introduced last night. We had a caucus immediately following its introduction—since the House had been adjourned in any case and there is no doubt that other parties did the same—and we came to the conclusion that though we were quite opposed to Bill 167, we were not going to get ourselves into the position where we would merely berate the government. We felt that if we had any responsibilities as elected representatives of the people at all and if we were conscious of those responsibilities, we should attempt to do anything we could to try to get the matter settled in a way that would be as satisfactory as possible to everybody under the very difficult circumstances which then existed.

We were well aware that the circumstances were difficult and I will say that from what we heard, we felt that the hon. Minister of Labour had been doing a tremendous job in trying to avoid this impasse. We felt satisfied of that but we did not feel that up to that time everything possible had been done. However, we just could not see any point in blasting the government from stem to gudgeon.

I do not know how we were then going to vote on the bill; we had not even made a final decision on that. We were more concerned about what we thought were more immediate issues. As a result of our deliberations, our hon. leader took the action that we suggested.

I will say, Mr. Speaker, that whether rightly or wrongly, we prided ourselves on thinking that there were some people involved in this dispute with whom our hon. leader might have some influence. There were many with whom he was hardly acquainted at all, but there were others whom he knew well—whom we all knew well—and with whom some of us were on friendly relations. We considered it possible that our hon. leader might have some influence in the situation as it then existed. We could not see that anything he would do could do any harm and there was just a possibility that it would do some good.

I think it did a lot of good. Unfortunately, it does not seem to have produced the results that I thought might be possible, but he got in touch, among others, with Mr. David Lewis, whom we all know and who has some influence with various people in this dispute. We thought it might help. As the hon. Minister of Labour said, Mr. Lewis was not the counsel for the union in this matter; he was acting simply as a citizen and doing what he thought was best to try to find a way out of the impasse. As a result of these efforts a proposition was put before the government at approximately noon today.

We thought it was a good proposal and we still think it is a good proposal. We thought, and we think, that it is a way out of the impasse. I do not know what the hon. leader of the Opposition thought we were going to do at this point. I can tell the hon. members that we were most careful to caution each other not to say a thing about this to anybody. Most of us have been involved in ticklish negotiations of this kind before and I would say that rule number 1 is that when a critical stage is reached where there might be a break, it is imperative to keep one's mouth shut, to refrain from talking to anybody—to stay out of it.

Our hon. leader went to see the hon. Prime Minister to tell him what he knew and then we stayed out of the picture. The last thing we wanted to do was to upset any possibility of a settlement by premature talking. If the hon. leader of the Opposition feels that we neglected him in that situation, I regret that we could not help it; we did not talk to anybody.

I will say, however, that late this afternoon a comment made to me by a gentleman of the press led me to the conclusion that he had heard about this proposal. I do not where the press heard about it, but the gentlemen of the press are pretty sharp in finding out things, we know that. Certainly some of the comments they made led me to believe that they knew about this proposition. Frankly, by then, I thought the Liberals probably knew about it, too.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I did not know about it until noon when I received the call from Mr. Lewis. I am informed that there was a news item on the early morning radio that the news was on the street at that time.

Mr. Bryden: Perhaps it was a matter of public information by then. We did not know that; we were not listening to the radio; there were other things going on.

At any rate, I am talking about 5 or 6 o'clock this afternoon, at the time the House adjourned. I got the impression that the press knew about this proposal but, of course, as far as we were concerned we were not talking about it. I did not think, and none of the people in our group thought that we were at any liberty to talk about it at all. For all we knew, this might have been the basis of settlement. We thought it possible—indeed, we hoped that we would come into this House and hear the announcement, not from our hon. leader, but from the hon. Prime Minister. We hoped that he would say that the bill introduced yesterday was not going to go ahead; it was going to be revised along the lines of this proposal. That certainly would have been a happy solution to us.

We would have accepted it immediately and would have been perfectly glad to let anybody take the credit who wanted to take it. It was not until we heard the hon. Prime Minister's speech in its entirety that we were absolutely sure what the situation was. I believe that a few minutes before, my hon. leader got a pretty good idea, but it was not up to us to start making announcements. The hon. Prime Minister is the head of the government and it was up to him to state what the government's policy was at that stage. The government's policy at that stage was as it was yesterday.

At this point, we felt that it was now proper to announce the proposal—since the hon. Prime Minister himself had not done it—that had been put forth at approximately noon today, and in my opinion it would have been highly improper for us to have done so one minute earlier than that. At the first opportunity when it was proper to do so, my hon. leader arose in this House and stated that this proposal had been made, stated further that we thought it was the best alternative, and formalized that expression of opinion by moving the amendment to that effect.

That brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the proposal itself. I will not go into the details; I think it has been well outlined on both sides, by the hon. Minister of Labour and by my hon. leader. But I regret that the government has not seen fit to accept it as its own policy.

The hon. Minister of Labour gave us quite a frank and full description of the events of this afternoon. I do not in any sense wish to criticize him—in situations like this one has to make snap decisions and it is awfully easy to be right after the event—but as I listened to his recital I felt a twinge of regret that it had been decided by him and

Mr. Lewis, I believe, that this proposition be put to the commission by the union representatives rather than by the hon. Minister. I have a feeling—it is just a feeling, how can you ever prove it?—that if it had had the prestige of the hon. Minister behind it, it might have found acceptance more readily than when it was merely presented by a party whose position vis-à-vis the commission had become one of total deadlock. I think it might have been accepted.

At any rate, the point that now divides the commission from the union, according to the hon. Minister's description, is simply the 60-day period. The commission, in the little time that was available—and they did not have much time to think about the matter or consult about it, we have to admit that—they, I take it, wanted to go ahead with arbitration immediately. The union felt that it would be advisable to put in a period of 60 days of mediation. Well, this is a policy decision on the part of the government. At this point the parties had not agreed to anything and the government had to decide on the best policy.

I submit to the hon. Minister and the government that the best policy is to put in a period of mediation, whether or not it is 60 days is not the point; but a certain period of mediation before the matter comes right down to arbitration. I think, in view of everything that has happened up until now, that if a period of mediation was inserted there would be very little—if anything—left to arbitrate after that period was over. It is true that the parties were in a position of total deadlock and had been there for some time.

But situations are always fluid; the parties had gone through that period of bitterness and I think this was the time when we could have opened up a period of co-operation. This was the time to move in with mediation again, after they had got everything off their chests and therefore might be ready to get back together again and talk things over. The hon. Minister said that the most important thing in this situation—and I think he is right—is the future relationship between these parties. Well, unfortunately, I think that the bill which the government is putting before the House, and which it has apparently decided to pursue, is not going to contribute anything to good relations in the future.

I think a proposal along the lines that was read out by my hon. leader would do much more in that regard. I have not talked—well, I said "hello" to a couple of members of the union negotiating team when I was walking across the park here, but apart from that I have not talked to any of them. But from what I know of trade union members—and I know a lot of them—my feeling is that if Bill 167 goes through in its present form those members will feel a deep sense of bitterness. They will feel that they have been treated vengefully and vindictively; that the other side has won; that it has made its will prevail upon them. I am certain that is how they will feel.

I think, if I were in that position, that is how I would feel. They are now in a position where it is being laid right down to them; "you arbitrate" and that is it. The alternative proposal, I think, would have created a basis for genuine understanding. I think it would probably have created a situation where arbitration would not even be necessary. Certainly it would have been reduced to one or two issues.

I do not know how many issues are now outstanding, but I believe it is a very large number, and arbitration is extremely difficult with a large number of issues. The whole proceeding is so complicated that it gets to the point where most of the people do not understand what it is all about. When you get an arbitration settlement that affects 40, 50 or 60 issues, the parties are almost certain to feel they got a raw deal.

The only time arbitration works well is when there are one or two pretty clear-cut issues that can be argued one way or the other. However, the government seems to have made up its mind. I regret that it has done so. I regret it has not accepted what I think is a really constructive alternative.

When the hon. Prime Minister moved second reading of this bill tonight, he made a speech that was essentially the same as the speech he made yesterday on first reading. He repeated all his description—and it was quite a terrifying description—of the disastrous consequences of a strike in this industry. Under the situation that now exists, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that there was no necessity for that recital; no necessity to repeat all those harrowing details. The only conceivable effect of what he said would be to create an atmosphere of panic when it is no longer necessary to operate in an atmosphere of panic. At approximately noon today, the strike deadline was off. I think the hon. Prime Minister should have advised the House of that before he made the statement. It should not have been left to my own hon. leader to let the world know that.

I think that the reaction of many people might have been different if they had known that the strike deadline no longer faced us. It was not necessary to talk about the millions of dollars worth of antibiotics that were going to be destroyed; the children who were going to suffer; and the hospitals that were going to be shut down. We did not have to talk about those things at all. That sense of panic did not have to hang over our deliberations at all. I regret that the hon. Prime Minister put this matter forward in that context again, when it is now a matter that could be, in my opinion, considered much more calmly; in an atmosphere of reflection; where we could have taken the two alternatives and decided for ourselves which one we think is the best.

As far as we are concerned, we think there is no question about it for reasons I have already given. The alternative put forward today at approximately noon by Local No. 1 is the better alternative. It is far better than Bill 167 which we say is undemocratic, which involves an arbitrary invasion of democratic rights when it is not necessary to invade those rights. If it had been absolutely necessary—if there had been no other alternative—it is conceivable that we might have gone along; but when it is not necessary now to take this extreme action, we say that it should not be taken.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we will vote in favour of the amendment. I do not know what procedure we are following on this type of amendment now, but if subsequent to that we have to vote on the bill, we will vote against the bill; not because we think there should be a strike, but because the threat of a strike has now been lifted and there is a proper alternative that makes the bill unnecessary. That is the position we take. We think it is a fair and responsible position and, notwithstanding the comments made by the hon. leader of the Opposition when he became so upset, I submit that the conduct of our party and of our hon. leader throughout was a fully responsible one; and one that, I think, offered constructive alternatives in the total situation.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, one notes, of course, that the problem involved in this bill is a Toronto problem and affects the lives, convenience and safety of the citizens of Toronto. Up to this point, all of the hon. members who have spoken in the debate represent Toronto constituencies. Indeed, the hon. Minister of Labour himself, by coincidence, represents a Toronto constituency. The only person who has spoken at this time who is not representative of Toronto is the hon. Prime Minister himself. But then again, in virtue of his office, he is representative—more than any of the rest of us—of all constituencies of the province.

Therefore some may wonder why—as the third speaker in the debate—I, from the backwater of Ontario; north of the French River—the wilderness to come, am so presumptuous as to engage in a discussion of the important problems in this bill.

Let me say, sir—I would say it humorously if the problem involved was not so serious and did not have such serious repercussions for the whole of Ontario; indeed, the whole of the labour movement—that I would be almost moved to invite Nathan Cohen to come up and do a criticism of the comedy in nine acts that has been performed here tonight. Indeed, as revealed in some of the nine acts that took place this morning and this afternoon.

Now my excuse for attempting to make a contribution consistent with my meagre abilities is that I represent a community which is very labour oriented. The problems inherent in mediation—the arbitration of this dispute, the methods adopted by the government and the suggestions that are forthcoming from other parts of the House—are of very serious import to the thousands of workers in my community, who in one way or another, will be affected by whatever decision this Legislature pleases to take. When the hon. Minister of Labour, feeling just a little bit of unease about his position—and I can tell, I have developed a very practised eye now, I can tell when a Minister of the Crown is getting near the point. In fact, he is almost like a drug addict when he gets near the point of needing a fix; but the Minister of the Crown gets near the point where he needs some support from the most champion desk thumpers in North America.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): In the world!

Mr. Sopha: In the world, as my friend says—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: I wish you would not interrupt me.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the member would get back to the amendment or to the bill itself and not proceed with his remarks about the Minister. I do not think it has any bearing really upon the bill. The hour is getting late and I think we would be better advised to stick to the contents of the amendment to the bill before the House.

Mr. Sopha: May I say to you, with the greatest respect, that I wish you would not interrupt me.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. If I wish to interrupt the member I shall interrupt him and if the member does not wish to obey the rules of the House, I will have no alternative perhaps than to name him. Please proceed!

Mr. Sopha: I will comply with your wishes, of course.

The hon. Minister of Labour got to the point where he said he was acting on behalf of all of the people of Ontario, or of this community, all of the people in this community in urging this legislation upon the House, and the faithful thump their desks. But I say to the hon. Minister of Labour that he also affects all of the people of this community if he takes away the rights of even one member of the community.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What about the rights of 750,000 people?

Mr. Sopha: All right! But the rights of a minority must be weighed against the rights of 750,000 people. There must be a balance achieved between them, for I say that if the hon. Minister of Labour, and the government at his urging, takes away the rights of 545 people, then he takes away the rights of all. He takes away the rights of all in like position. He takes a step towards the whittling away of the rights of those who bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing.

Really, it is trite to say but I say it for the benefit of those who are not engaged in labour relations, it is trite to say that the only weapon that labour has is the hard-fought-for and the hard-won right to take away its labour. That is the final weapon that it has. It has no other. Labour unions do not have the resources of capital behind them. They do not even have the discipline that management has in control over those who are in the management group. They do not have the resources of publicizing their position. They do not have the public relations personnel that management has.

Finally, when all is said and done, the working man in striving for justice in the economic world, has but one weapon. That weapon is to take away his labour, to discontinue his service. If the hon. Minister of Labour and the government he represents continues to whittle away at that right, then soon will come the day when he will be in this House with a bill in relation to some other industry than an essential service.

As a possible alternative and in line with the report of the select committee on labour relations, of which, indeed, the hon. Minister of Labour was a member under the chairmanship of the late James Anthony Maloney. Ernie Jackson, a leading figure in the political life of this province; Robert Macaulay, Donald C. MacDonald, Ellis Morningstar, Raymond Myers, Arthur Reaume, Leslie Rowntree, George Wardrope, the late Albert Wren, great spokesman for the working people of this province; John Yaremko—interesting to note the advancement of the people that sat on this committee in the ranks of the government.

A member of that committee recommended that a model clause be introduced into The Labour Relations Act to deal with the discontinuance of essential service through the withdrawal of labour. How many years now? That committee sat in 1958. Here we are in 1965, seven years later, and we are still waiting for the introduction of that model clause.

Perhaps the model clause would have appended to it, as an appendix to The Labour Relations Act, a list of the industries that are considered to be essential services so that there would be no doubt whatsoever in the minds of the people and in the minds of those engaged in those industries that their right to discontinue their labour was prohibited by law. Instead, we have the patchwork approach, which in the words of my hon. leader is very adequately and admirably summed up as being progression from one crisis to another.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Did the hon. member ever look at the thousands of disputes that are settled in this province?

Mr. Sopha: I am very grateful for having had the opportunity to assist in the settlement of some of them.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The record in this province in relation to the amount of industry is pretty good.

Mr. Sopha: Well, it is all right. The hon. Minister can make his own speech. He can give us the statistics about that. It is not incumbent upon me.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, but I thought the hon. member would not want to forget it.

Mr. Sopha: To review the events that have taken place up to now, before my hon. colleague from Downsview got up to speak, because we could not give up our right to speak first in the debate, we have that right, being the largest Opposition party. We will not surrender it. My hon. friend from Downsview was selected to be the first to take the floor and to exercise that right.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, for this occasion alone, we would have been content in this party to sit silent and let the New Democratic Party have the first right to speak. But we could not do it because we would not want to establish the precedent of doing it. We told the hon. member for Downsview before he got up that he was going to be abused. He was going to be roundly abused for what he said, because we had to adopt that tactic in this comedy of the hon. member for Downsview being noncommittal so that we could hear what this proposal was that had been put to the government.

We knew there had been a proposal, we knew there was some form of proposal.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member's hon. leader said he did not know.

Mr. Sopha: Our hon. leader did not know it, but at 10 minutes to 8, when my hon. friend from Downsview and my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Nixon) and the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) came back with me to the House, we were informed that there was some form of proposal that had been made by the New Democratic Party to the government. Accordingly it was eminent good sense that we not commit ourselves until we heard what that proposal was.

Then we hear and it is revealed to us, I think pretty clearly, that both the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party and the government are playing politics with this issue.

Who are the personalities involved? I have the greatest respect for David Lewis—David Lewis is a very public spirited man and he is a man who very sincerely, and very deeply feels the cause of the working man. I have the pride and honour to be associated with David Lewis in the context that both he and I share responsibility for advising Local 6500 of the united steel workers of America in my community. I am proud to be associated with such a man and the eminent counsel that he is. But having said that, I am not denegating at all from his part in this piece, I inform you, Mr. Speaker, that we are perfectly well aware in this party that David Lewis, QC, is also a politician.

Indeed he is! He is a politician and it has been my experience that, unfortunately, sometimes when the stewards of the rank-and-file membership of unions become directly involved in politics, when they become directly involved in political action, sometimes the striving for political advantage overtakes the responsibility of stewards of the rank and file. Sometimes it does, so I think it is pretty clear that today, through the whole of the comedy, David Lewis was acting more as a politician than he was acting as a representative of the trade union movement.

One observes that David Lewis was approached by the leader of the New Democratic Party, or the leader of the New Democratic Party approached David Lewis. Then one observes further that throughout the relationship with the executive, the leaders of the Canadian union of public employees, the contact of that group, their interactions, were only with one political party in the House.

Now, let me say unequivocally to this party: this House has nothing to do with great and monstrous affairs of state. We do not engage in international relations. We do not deal with matters that affect the body politic of the whole country. We deal with relatively minor matters. But if I ever knew of an area where there might be a bi-party policy, where the government would take the main Opposition party into its confidence and reveal to it all the facts, as well as the minor Opposition party, then I cannot think of a more apt area, a more fitting area than that of labour relations and especially where a serious strike is threatened in an industry that will affect the welfare of so many thousands of people.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, we were put in an invidious position in this party and I would like the rank and file of the Canadian union of public employees to know it. I hope they get to know, somehow, that I said these words on behalf of the Liberal Party tonight—that we were put in a terribly invidious position by the fact that the executive of the Canadian union of public employees did not see fit to come to the hon. leader of the Opposition and make him aware that this proposal had been made to the government for delay of the strike that was threatened at midnight tonight—an hour and 20 minutes away.

Mr. MacDonald: Give them another lecture.

Mr. Sopha: On the contrary, it is not a lecture, it is just revealing some facts. But one also observes and I hesitate to go on with criticism. They have their own reasons for doing these things, but we also have our own feelings. We also have our own consciences to wrestle with. We also have our responsibility to the many hundreds of thousands of people who voted for the Liberal Party in the last election in this province.

They have their own reasons but I think the rank and file should know that today David Lewis of the executive of CUPE Local 1 played footsy with the leader of the New Democratic Party. Somebody aptly said this: "We know these people, we know these people; we could contact them." Of course they know them. CUPE, I believe, is one of the unions that is committed to the principle of political support of one party, and I observed at a recent regional meeting of CUPE in northern Ontario that two or three of the delegates at the regional meeting, as was reported in the press, all of whom I knew, proposed at the meeting that that union disassociate itself from supporting one political party. Two or three of them suggested it, but that is a step in the right direction.

I am one of those who believes, and I have said it time and time again, and to union people—I have said it to the steel workers that Local 6500, with 18,000 members has not yet joined in support of that party—"If you are going to be union leaders you should dedicate yourselves full time to winning at the collective bargaining table better fruits for the labour of your people and stay out of the political arena. Leave the political area to the politicians; stay out of it. Do one thing or the other."

They have their own reasons that they did not come knocking at our door. Nobody knows; maybe we will never know what those reasons were. But they put us in a very invidious position that we had to use our strategy and we had to use our place in the Legislature from a tactical point of view. We had to put my hon. friend from Downsview up to be abused, and when the hon. member for Downsview, who can speak for himself and can always defend himself, came to the end of his remarks, I looked over at my hon. friend in the New Democratic Party, he was smiling like a cat that had just swallowed a canary. He was sitting on the edge of his chair; he could hardly wait to get up to start the stream of vitriol against my hon. friend from Downsview. And so he did, and he is a master at it such as no other person in this House will ever equal.

An hon. member: The poor, persecuted, little man.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, no. I am not persecuted. We wanted to have the opportunity to share decisions. That is all we want—the opportunity to share decision, if the facts are put before us, if we are taken into the government's confidence, and if the government comes and tells us. We can expect that our hon. friends to the left will not come and tell us because they would be afraid that we would get some political advantage.

But I say on behalf of this party, and my hon. leader authorizes me to say it, that the government will find, if it takes us into its confidence and shows us the peril to the public and shows us the efforts that have been made to avoid the peril, that this party will ever act responsibly. It will. If the day—

An hon. member: For how long?

Mr. Sopha: —comes that it does not act responsibly in the face of public emergency, then I will be the first to walk around the corner and out the doorway from it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member has now.

Mr. Sopha: That is the undertaking that I give the hon. Minister of Labour.

Reference ought to be made to this remarkable statement by the hon. Minister of Labour that the people of Toronto have, to some extent, been put in the position in which they are endangered by the fact that there is a clash of personalities between somebody on the Hydro commission and somebody in the union. The thought immediately struck me that if there is a clash of personalities that inhibits the making of a reasonable collective agreement, then the thing to do by someone in authority—I have not heard who is in authority but I went over to ask if the mayor of the city of Toronto was on the Hydro commission, and I am told that he is ex-officio—is to do as a referee in a hockey game does when he is facing off the puck between two obstreperous players. If he cannot get them to attend to their business, according to the rules of the game, he waves them out of the circle. Give us two more—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, that very thing was done in this dispute. Two men were removed by me so that the heat would be taken right out of it.

Mr. Sopha: That may be so. I guess the hon. Minister of Labour was speaking about, as one of the personalities, the new chairman of the Hydro commission, no less a personage in the life of this province than Frederick Gardiner.

An hon. member: The hon. member is wrong, he is not the chairman.

Mr. Sopha: I want to say a word about him. I noted, and perhaps the hon. Minister of Labour will tell us whether this was an inhibiting feature toward a resolution of this—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It was not; it was another man.

Mr. Sopha: Just a moment. The hon. Minister should wait until he hears what I have to say. I note that it was a week or ten days ago that Frederick Gardiner himself urged, as was reported in the public press, compulsory arbitration. With a week or ten days to go before the deadline, Frederick Gardiner, the new chairman, was reported as saying, "We should get on with compulsory arbitration." This was long before the deadline. Is such a statement by the head person on management side responsible—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, Mr. Gardiner is not the chairman of Toronto Hydro; he is a commissioner of Toronto Hydro.

Mr. Sopha: All right, sorry. I accept the correction. I do not think that I have sinned very greatly in regard to my description of him, but I say that a week or ten days ago, to reiterate, he suggested that we get on with compulsory arbitration.

I know that is not consistent with good bargaining relations with the other side; in fact, that is dismissing the possibility of any reasonable, peaceful solution to the dispute, because one side is saying to the other, "We cannot possibly settle this with you. Let us get on with government intervention and the imposition of compulsion."

I ask, Mr. Speaker, where was the government during all this time? Where was the government and what was it doing? We have never had any satisfactory explanation from anybody on behalf of the government about the efforts made by government to get these parties together. On that score—the issue of compulsion, which my hon. friends in the old historic party profess to abhor with such vigour—on that issue, I myself, as a citizen of this province, would much prefer in disputes of this nature a tough attitude by the hon. Minister of Labour and his deputy and his other senior agents to the imposition of this type of legislation. I would not mind if the hon. Minister threw his weight around a bit with both sides.

I have been involved in the conciliation process with some of the judges that are employed consistently by this department and I have seen them throw their weight around.

I have heard them use pretty strong language in attempting to effect a settlement, because those judges, those conciliators know what the consequences of loss are to people if the dispute is not resolved and a strike ensues. They adopt a pretty tough policy.

I would like to see the hon. Minister of Labour adopt such a policy. I would rather that he was tough—a little undemocratic—with the parties, the principal to this dispute. He gets tough through using the devices of government and the power of this Legislature to impose a statutory prohibition of a strike against a right that has been won only with blood and sweat and tears.

One cannot go into the history of the winning of the right to strike, and so I reiterate the suggestion to my hon. friend from Woodbine that the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party was acting irresponsibly today. Indeed, he was. If the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party really wanted to get the resolution of this, if he was really interested in acting for the good of the people of Ontario, one of the very first people he would have sought out would have been the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Why should the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party and David Lewis sneak around at meetings with the hon. Prime Minister in the absence of the hon. leader of the Opposition? That gives the impression that in labour matters the only people who count in this House are the New Democratic Party. I would hope that union leaders in this province would soon discover that they are perfectly free and welcome to rap at the doors of the offices of this party and get the utmost sympathy from the hon. members of this party and every endeavour for assistance in trying to solve social problems of the magnitude that this one is that now confronts the people of Ontario, as well as this government and this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you—I am authorized to tell you—I tell you on behalf of the party, and I tell all hon. members of the House through you, sir, that we are going to vote for this amendment.

I abhor the verbiage employed—the verbiage is terrible and I will point out to hon. members why it is terrible.

It could have been put—this amendment, to achieve this purpose—it could have been put in quieter, softer and more reasonable terms. The same message could have been put across by employing much more reasonable verbiage than this amendment employs. I say to you, sir, that one of the regrets we have in voting for this amendment is that it is abusive.

We are not allowed to amend it, the screwy rules of this House do not permit us to amend this. One notes that in the House of Commons at Ottawa the free use of amendments is employed. If one Opposition party does not like the language employed by another party, why should they be bound to that language? We in this party, if we had the right to amend it, would soften the tones of the amendment.

Let me read it:

In the opinion of this House, the proposal submitted to the government today by Local No. 1, of the Canadian union of public employees represented a fair and reasonable method of settling the dispute without a stoppage of work.

I would have rewritten that. I would have rewritten that by making it in terms of urging on the government: "The government is urged to adopt the proposal submitted by the Canadian union of public employees"; rather than arguing the case as the first part of that does. It argues the case in saying that it is a fair and reasonable method of settling the dispute. It goes on to say:

Which would have safeguarded adequately both the public interest and the interests of the parties, and that represents an alternative preferable to the harsh, restrictive and undemocratic provisions of Bill No. 167.

I say to you, sir, that those last words are abusive: "the harsh restrictive and undemocratic provisions."

When I go into court and argue a case before the judge I do not get up on behalf of my client and tell the judge that he is a stupid old nut before I start to argue the case. If the New Democratic Party wanted the hon. Prime Minister to accept their amendment, to yield a bit, then the New Democratic Party could never hope to get the hon. Prime Minister to accept the amendment by calling a bill he introduced himself. Hon. members will notice that the chief citizen, the first citizen himself, unlike the Medicare bill, introduced this one. This is a matter of high government policy and the hon. Prime Minister himself introduced it. We cannot get the hon. Prime Minister—he is a human being, too—to accept an amendment when we tell him that a statute that he in his responsibility as Prime Minister walked into the House and introduced is harsh, restrictive and undemocratic.

So therefore I say to you, sir, in respect of this amendment: Very reluctantly, because we cannot amend it, we are going to support this amendment. But we only wish, again in a bi-partisan spirit—that is the message I am trying to get across—in a bi-partisan spirit dealing with a matter of such emergent public importance—

Mr. MacDonald: They were left out and that is why they are so unhappy.

Mr. Sopha: This is hurting him; do hon. members notice? This is hurting him.

Mr. Bryden: It is painful.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: If it was not hurting, but when you pinch the dog, he yelps.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member has certainly been yelping.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: It is all right.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I often tell my clients, if you pay a dog to bark, let him bark; do not take up the case.

Taking a very reasoned position—I am going to re-emphasize that—if we ever meet the problem again where we have to deal with a matter of important public interest like this, I hope there will be an attitude of co-operation on the part of all parties of the House. Let us see if we cannot get together and demonstrate to the public of Ontario that we can, through the exercise of good common sense, mutual understanding and a yearning to understand the other fellow's point of view, come up with some mutual policy—in a bi-partisan spirit—that in times of emergency this Legislature can act with a high degree of responsibility; that it does not go skulking around the corridors with union leaders from outside, who have come in the capacity of volunteers; and that there is no necessity for these private telephone conversations between the hon. Prime Minister of the province and the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party.

The second important man in the House, in terms of parliamentary democracy as inherited from Westminster, is the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Bryden: Does he not have a telephone?

Mr. Sopha: —who sits opposite the hon. Prime Minister. He is second in importance in this House.

Mr. Bryden: He could have telephoned the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am not a person that bruises easily, like you. But I am just putting the facts. I am taking enough time to state the facts of what went on here, and I make no apologies for that.

Then I tell you, sir, that we in this party have come to a parting of the ways with the government on this matter of compulsory arbitration. We voted with it in the Hydro dispute. We voted with it in compulsory arbitration in hospitals. We have come to the point where we stop.

Mr. MacDonald: They have changed their mind again?

Mr. Sopha: We have stopped voting with the government, and we are going to vote against it on this bill. If that rule is interpreted tonight—one never knows how that rule is interpreted—there is going to be a vote on the principle of the bill. The main motion is going to be put—

Mr. Bryden: That is the principle for which the hon. member always argued.

Mr. Sopha: —if the amendment is lost.

Mr. Speaker: Order. So the member will not anticipate how the Speaker is going to interpret the rules tonight, I will tell him now that I shall interpret them the same as I have done in the past. We will have the amendment that is before the House and we will stick to the variation, which has been a precedent established over the last three or four years by then putting the main motion, which will be voted on forthwith, because we have not varied from this rule by speaking on the main motion. We have not done that.

In the very near future I shall bring in a ruling on this matter.

Mr. Sopha: Very well, sir, then when the time comes to be counted, we will stand in our places and we will vote against the principle of the bill, because we have come to the end of the road. One of the chief reasons—let it be clear—that we have come to the end of the road is the failure of the government, in an important matter such as this, to take us into its confidence.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, rot!

Mr. MacDonald: There is pique if I ever saw it.

Mr. Sopha: One of the chief reasons, because I feel that had the hon. leader of the Opposition had the confidence of the hon. Prime Minister; had he been aware—

Mr. MacDonald: They have the public welfare at heart.

Mr. Sopha: Look, will the hon. member stop yelping so I can get finished? This bill has got to go through in an hour.

Had we been aware of the proposal made by this union and David Lewis—acting very responsibly, today, I shall say that—then maybe we would have had some friends that we could have contacted too, in order to try to bring reason between these two parties.

We are told—nonwithstanding that the union came forward with this proposal; that I take it by inference from what the hon. Minister of Labour said—that the Hydro commission rejected it peremptorily, out of hand. The Hydro commission took—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It was not done like that and I did not infer it.

Mr. Sopha: All right, that was the inference I drew. Maybe it was not done so peremptorily, but it was certainly rejected out of hand. The commission took the position that it would submit to either of two types of arbitration, either voluntary or compulsory, but would not submit to mediation.

Now, as one who has been engaged in the labour milieu, I cannot possibly conceive what responsible Hydro commissioners would have against the employment of a mediator. In fact, if I understand this proposal—and subject to correction—this is the Taft-Hartley formula. This is a formula from the Taft-Hartley Act. It was not invented.

This is a tried and true formula that has been employed for a long time in the United States of America in those industries that come under federal jurisdiction. It is no great creation that somebody picked out of the air by the exercise of the grey matter in the cranial spaces. It is an eminently sound proposal. It is a cooling-off period. I think that is what it is called in the American jargon, a cooling-off period, with the assistance of a mediator, to attempt to come to some form of solution.

Indeed, the government itself has employed this type. The government used it by the employment of Goldenberg in the mediation of the Royal York strike. So if it fits one bad labour situation, why is it not suitable for another one? Why is it not suitable for this one?

In any event, the Hydro commission—and I hearken back to the statement of Commissioner Gardiner—which rejected this proposal is the same Hydro commission that said: "Let us get on with compulsory arbitration."

Now I think the people of Toronto should be made aware; they should consider that very long. They should consider all the implications of the fact that they have a commissioner who apparently is unwilling to negotiate, to talk or to bargain collectively with the representatives of the workers. Instead he wants to drop the guillotine; he wants to get on with compulsory arbitration. It must be said, of course, from the point of view that the management—in this case—has the most to gain from arbitration. That has been my experience, too, in the field of labour relations. It has been my experience that whenever a matter goes to arbitration, I say regretfully, somehow or other the union comes out with the short end of the stick.

That was the reason why the hon. Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, set aside the meagre sum of $5,000 this year—the pitiful sum of $5,000, a drop in the bucket—and gave it to Queen's University to study some of the effects of arbitration; for somebody down there to do some research into the problem of arbitration. This because the hon. Minister of Labour went to Sudbury with the Cabinet, in that celebrated meeting of October, 1964, and one of the vice-presidents of the steelworkers at a public meeting said to the hon. Minister of Labour: "You know, whenever we go to arbitration, or we arbitrate grievances under the collective bargaining agreement, we only win 22 per cent of the cases. We lose 78 per cent. Management wins 78 per cent."

The hon. Minister of Labour gave him a little argument, and that labour leader—that vice-president—came away a bit insulted by the attitude of the hon. Minister of Labour. Then, later on, the hon. Minister of Labour—and he is usually a very yielding man, a very considerate man, a very reasonable man—reconsidered his position and set aside $5,000 as a grant to Queen's University to study this problem of arbitration.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: All right, he kept his word.

Mr. Sopha: The best way to get me to stand here until five to 12 is for you to keep exercising your larynx.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have no doubt that you are in love with your larynx.

Mr. Sopha: You keep exercising your larynx. I would feel that if I sat down in the face of your interruption that I was giving up some of my rights to you.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: You would please the whole House if you sat down.

Mr. Sopha: You just want to reserve yourself until you present your estimates here, then you will hear me; I will be in full throat at that time—asking a few questions of you.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Therefore, sir, we are not satisfied—as a result of the two speeches we have listened to from the government side—that there is an emergent situation that cannot be taken care of. We have been told nothing at all, from the union's point of view, of what it intends to do to provide emergency crews to keep electricity flowing to essential industry. The hon. Minister of Labour talks about $1 million in antibiotics and he talks about $30 million in meat that is liable to be spoiled.

My understanding is that this union, a responsible union, has said that it will take such steps to provide crews to see that these things do not happen that the hon. Minister of Labour is talking about. One only gleans that from keeping a close watch on the development of this dispute. One becomes aware of that because, as I say, unfortunately, we did not become aware of that from the lips of the union leaders themselves. It is rather bland for the hon. Minister of Labour to get up in the House and start to cry havoc about the possible repercussions of the strike, but he really does not give credit to the union leadership for their readiness to act responsibly in this situation.

For all of those reasons, sir, I say to you that we have come to the end of the road in this matter of compulsory arbitration—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For how long?

Mr. Sopha: —and coming from the community that I come from, my heart is filled with joy that I can stand in this Legislature tonight in the face of an alternative proposal that would avert this strike.

This proposal that the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party put before the House is an honourable alternative where nobody loses face. The union does not lose face, and the Hydro commission does not lose face; it merely puts the repercussions off for a period of 60 days and reasonableness might return within that period. So it was unnecessary for us, in the face of this proposal, to sacrifice our friend from Downsview to hear what the proposal was, to be made aware of it. Now that we have heard it, I can say, and I do say, with an absolutely clear conscience, that I will have no difficulty in getting to sleep tonight, since in the face of this alternative, when I stand to vote against this bill I will be standing for every member of the collective bargaining unit in Sudbury, each and every one of them.

How do we know, how do my people in Sudbury know, how do the members of this union know that this government, having infringed the principle of the right to strike once, it will not go marching on and impose it in other industries? How do I know that if INCO was threatened to be closed down, the government would not come in there and say that in the light of the conditions of the free world and the struggle with the East, the production of nickel is an absolutely essential service and we must continue it, and therefore the employees of Local 6500 cannot strike International Nickel and are submitted to compulsory arbitration?

Tonight we get back on the right road. We vote in defiance of this autocratic government, and in the face of the yappings of my hon. friend to the left for the rights of the working man.

Mr. MacDonald: Voting two ways in the same session.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Russell.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Russell): Mr. Speaker, my remarks are going to be extremely brief this evening, but they were brought to the top of my mind by the remarks as to guts and gutlessness that were tossed between the two Opposition parties, and spattered slightly over on to this side of the House.

As I recall earlier, the attack as to gutlessness that was being thrown about related to the suggestion that the government had no policy. As I understand it, the policy of a government, in the field that we are talking about this evening, would mean that the government would have some general legislation or some general code applying to a group of circumstances, as distinct from dealing with this kind of problem on a case-by-case, or on an ad hoc basis.

Mr. MacDonald: As they have in Sweden.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: That would require a code and it would require a legislative code. But that brought to my mind a remark made earlier in this session by the hon. member for Wentworth East, which I was able to find on page 1500 of the debates, when we were discussing the Act relating to labour disputes in hospitals. If I may briefly quote from him, speaking for his own party formally on the second reading of that bill, he said, referring to organized labour and the hospital arbitration bill:

But they will not support it because this has not been done. They feel if we have a situation such as we had in Trenton and that if a dispute goes to the point of a strike deadline, it will have stirred up some public opinion. If the deadline is set and it is obvious there is going to be a strike in the opinion of people interested, such as the trade union movement and the government, that would be the time for us to act. I would be the first one to vote in favour of a specific piece of legislation to avoid a strike in a hospital when it came to the point that nothing else could be done.

The hon. member for Wentworth East has told us that he would vote for a specific piece of legislation, speaking for his party, and I would judge from that not a general piece of legislation.

In other words, that speech suggests to me, Mr. Speaker, that they are talking out of two sides of their mouth. From one side they attack us for not having general legislation, that is, policy, and from the other they are stating that they would deal with each of these problems, as is happening tonight, on an ad hoc basis.

As a result, sir, it will be very interesting to see if the hon. member for Wentworth East is consistent with his earlier remarks. I think we can expect the New Democratic Party at least to vote for this bill if its amendment is lost.

Mr. Bryden: We gave the government a reasonable alternative; that is what we will vote for.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief but I think there are a few observations I would like to make in regard to the reference of the hon. member for Russell. Certainly I made those remarks; we always vote on specific legislation. If he will check the speech I made he will note that I made no reference at that point as to how we would vote. Of course the hon. member knows very well my position and the position of our party in regard to compulsory arbitration; we do not have to rehash that tonight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: The principle is solid and I will stand on it as long as I believe that I am a trade unionist.

But, Mr. Speaker, the observations I want to make are brief. The hon. member for Sudbury referred to the proposals made by the union to the commission for a possible delay of this strike deadline as not being something new, and that they might have been lifted out of The Taft-Hartley Act. I agree with him. In my experience I have seen the same kind of document many times. I have been at the point of the eleventh hour about as many times as a trade unionist as I have been years in this House, which is ten years. I understand something about the problem that this committee has had in the past few weeks. I am not going to say anything about what happened prior to yesterday because, again of experience, one cannot explain to people what takes place in negotiations.

What I would say about this document is that I can understand how hard it must have been for that union's committee to draft and to agree on this proposal. I think it should have the highest commendation from this House and from the citizens of Toronto for the compromise it was willing to make. Certainly the tragedy of what is happening today is that the Hydro commission has not seen fit to accept this proposal. I would think that any time management made a proposal to a responsible union to entertain either compulsory or voluntary binding arbitration, it is done deliberately and it is provocative. Management knows full well the position of the trade union movement, and specifically it should know the position of the Canadian union of public employees, the stands it has taken publicly and the job it has done in the community.

Certainly the Canadian union of public employees is the second largest union in Canada at the present time; it may be the first for all I know, I have not looked at the membership figures. It has done a terrific job in organizing the unorganized, particularly those in the building services and hospitals which really need organizing. For any management to make a proposal to a union of that stature to entertain compulsory or voluntary binding arbitration, would be considered by most trade unionists as nothing more than a provocative attempt, a deliberate attempt, to set up a block in front of real collective bargaining.

I say that the union has taken a really responsible approach; it has shown the integrity of responsible leadership in making such a proposal, and I am really disappointed that by this hour we have not heard from the commission to say that it is ready to entertain such a proposal. Why it would take a stand-off position and say, "Nothing will suit us but voluntary binding arbitration; we will not go along with a 60-day mediation period, that is it," I just cannot understand. It seems to me that it feels it has the union over the so-called barrel and intends to keep it there.

Another thing that disappointed me, is that the hon. Minister of Labour of this province did not have enough friendly influence with the commission or enough political prestige and respect from that commission to be able to get it to adopt this proposal. I think it is just about as reasonable a compromise as has ever been made in a situation of this nature. I certainly think that the union should be commended for their position in trying to resolve this strike at this point.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion as moved by Mr. MacDonald, please say "aye."

All those opposed, will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members.

As many as are in favour of the motion, will please rise.

As many as are opposed to the motion, please rise.

YEAS

Bryden	Bales
Bukator	Beckett
Davison	Boyer
Farquhar	Brown
Freeman	Brunelle
Gisborn	Butler
Lewis	Carruthers
(Scarborough West)	Carton
MacDonald	Cecile
Newman	Connell
Nixon	Cowling
Oliver	Demers
Racine	Downer
Renwick	Dunlop
Sargent	Dymond
Singer	Edwards
Sopha	Evans
Spence	Ewen
Thompson	Gomme
Trotter	Grossman
Worton	Guindon
Young-21	Harris
	Henderson
	Hodgson
	(Victoria)
	Johnston
	(Carleton)
	Knox
	Lawrence
	(Russell)

NAYS

NAYS
Lawrence
(St. George)
Lewis
(Humber)
Mackenzie
MacNaughton
McKeough
McNeil
Noden
Olde
Peck
Pittcock
Price
Randall
Reilly
Reuter
Robarts
Roberts
Rollins
Root
Rowe
Rowntree
Simonett
Spooner
Stewart
Villeneuve
Wardrope
Wells
Whitney
Wishart
Yaremko-56

Mr. Sopha: Could we have it on record that the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker) was not here to vote?

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 21, the "nays" 56.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Those in favour of the main motion as proposed by the Prime Minister will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, it is the same vote in reverse.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask will it be necessary to put this bill through committee? If there are no amendments to be offered, I would move third reading.

Mr. Thompson: As far as we are concerned, I would say it will not be necessary.

Mr. MacDonald: We have made our point.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves third reading of Bill No. 167.

Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor entered the Chamber and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province hath at its present sitting thereof passed a certain bill to which in the name and on behalf of the said legislative assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

Assistant Clerk: The following is the title of the bill to which Your Honour's assent is prayed:

An Act respecting a certain dispute between the Toronto electric commissioners and Local No. 1, Canadian union of public employees.

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to this bill.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we will resume our discussions in the committee of the whole on Bill No. 136.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.35 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, June 11, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Friday, June 11, 1965

Medical services insurance, bill respecting, in committee, continued	4044
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Rowntree, agreed to	4070

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as guests in the west gallery, students from Tecumseh public school, Port Credit.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the members of the select committee on youth be excused from attendance in the Legislature next week, to enable the committee to conduct hearings in Hamilton, Niagara Falls and Welland.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a word in explanation of this motion. The problem is that the chairman of the committee made some rather complicated arrangements for these hearings some considerable time ago. Ordinarily, under normal circumstances, these select committees do not sit other than in conducting their affairs in this building while the House is in session.

Now, the question really was whether the committee could make alternative arrangements with the various groups of people who wished to attend these hearings, and in view of the length of the session, I think when the arrangements were originally made, there was no thought that this House would still be sitting at this time.

That is the background of it and I realize this will be an inconvenience to some hon. members who will want to be here to take part in the proceedings. On the other hand, there are a great many members of the public who made various arrangements to attend these meetings in the Niagara peninsula, and on balance I would ask for your support to this motion.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, it happens that my hon. leader (Mr. Mac-Donald) is engaged at the moment in his office and will be a little late getting into the House. Well, he just got into the House and has not had a chance to familiarize himself with what is before us. In addition, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), who is our representative on the committee, has been a little delayed this morning.

Under the circumstances explained by the hon. Prime Minister, I think there is no alternative but to accept the motion. We, too, are familiar with the problem of making arrangements for the second half of June, with the idea that one would be completely free and available. I guess nobody anticipated that we would still be engaged in this House.

There is just one matter I would like to explain, Mr. Speaker. This puts the hon. member for Scarborough West, with whom I have not had a chance to discuss the matter, in a somewhat difficult position. He is our spokesman on Health and Welfare, and both of these matters will be before the House next week. I assume that there will be a stenographic account taken of the committee's hearings, and that will probably enable him at least to familiarize himself with what happens.

But I think it should be understood that he is in a difficult position in that he has direct responsibilities in the House at the same time. I know he will regret having to miss the committee hearings because it is a committee in which he is most interested.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree).

Does the hon. Minister have any knowledge about strike breakers being imported in connection with the legal strike of employees of IBA stores, affiliated with the M. Loeb Limited Company in the cities of Ottawa and Eastview?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the department has no knowledge of strike breakers being imported in this situation. This strike has been under way for, I believe, some two weeks now, and the conciliation branch of The Department of Labour is keeping a careful eye on the situation in order to determine what assistance and at what time any assistance should be given to bringing the parties together for further discussion.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) has not had a chance to prepare an answer to my question, but I think I will ask it. In connection with the story in this morning's Globe and Mail—and I realize he cannot have a full answer to it—but why did the Savoy family of 11 children have to be placed in a dilapidated house pending demolition, according to this four-column story with pictures? And how many low-rental houses has the Ontario housing corporation now made available? Is it not time that this government set up a ministry of housing?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question that is not a question, that is a speech. I would like to suggest that I received notice of his question about ten minutes before the House opened, and I want to assure him that I will have a full answer for him on Monday, because I read the same story in the Globe and Mail before coming to work this morning, and I asked my housing director to investigate this for me so I would have the information.

In the meantime, if there is anything we could do over the weekend to assist this family, I asked him to go ahead and do it. So if the hon. member will give me the time, I will have the answer for him on Monday.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) asked the following question: "Will the Minister please advise why province of Ontario graduate fellowship cheques are being held up until June 30, 1965?"

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the cheques are not being held up until June 30, 1965. There have been 1,927 awards processed for the 1965-66 academic year beginning in September, 1965. Last year some 1,225 awards were processed, and the previous year some 850 awards. There have, therefore, been 4,000 awards, the great majority of them for $1,500 each since the inception of the programme, a total value of some $5,500,000. It will be seen that the increase in the number of awards this year is 57 per cent.

There are some 722 awards to students who were holders of fellowships in 1964-65 and who are continuing their studies this summer. The processing of these awards has been completed, and as soon as the cheques can be written they will be forwarded to the students.

Additional lists for students who are holders of awards for the next academic year, and who are beginning their graduate work this summer, are to be submitted by the universities by June 15. It is not possible for the universities to provide these lists earlier because they must await the results of the final year examinations. The cheques for these students will be available just as soon as they can be processed after receipt of the lists from the universities.

The hon. members of the Legislature will be interested to know that the graduate fellowship programme has increased greatly the number of students doing graduate work, to the point where at least some of our universities will next year enroll the number of graduate students that they had originally anticipated would register as long as three or four years later. The programme, therefore, will make a substantial contribution to the supply of teaching staff at the university level.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The forty-seventh order, committee of the whole House; Mr. A. W. Downer in the chair.

MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE (continued)

On section 21:

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose yesterday, we were discussing section 21, and there were some fears expressed that certain possibilities for exclusion existed, and thereby loss of benefits. I checked again and again on this matter, and the superintendent of insurance insisted that this section be put in because of his fears that certain ones now covered under existing contracts could be excluded. He was of the opinion that this covers all possibilities.

However, after further discussion and consideration, I would propose to you, sir, the following amendment:

I move that subsection 4 of section 21 be amended by inserting after the words "subsection 1" in the second line, "or cancels for any reason other than those specified in section 17" so that the section will now read:

Any licensed carrier that cancels its medical services insurance contract under subsection 1, or cancels for any reason other than those specified in section 17 shall in the notice of cancellation given thereunder, etc.

Mr. Chairman: We have an amendment by Mr. Sopha. Is it agreeable that this be delayed until we deal with the Minister's?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Yes, I so accede, with pleasure.

Mr. Chairman: You have heard the amendment of the Minister of Health—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I will not debate it at length, I am glad the hon. Minister saw fit to bring this in. I feel that the point was not covered. At any rate it certainly does no harm to make abundantly clear that it is covered. I think this will be an improvement in the bill.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of the amendment of the Minister of Health?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha moves that subsection 4 of section 21 be deleted, and that the following be substituted therefor:

If any licensed carrier cancels its medical services insurance contracts under subsection 1 the corporation shall place applications with other licensed carriers as it may deem fit and there shall be no change of benefits as to the policyholders in respect of such change of insurer.

All in favour of the amendment by Mr. Sopha, say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

The amendment is lost and the section is carried, as amended by the Minister.

Section 21 agreed to.

On section 22:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, under section 22, I would like to ask for some clarification from the hon. Minister, through you if I could.

I raise one question, and I do not think it fits in here completely but I crave your indulgence that I could bring it in under this section. It is a question which was raised in the Globe and Mail: What is to be done about the low-income worker who would be entitled to government subsidy but is already a member of a group plan to which his employer contributes? Will he be required to forfeit assistance either from the government or his employer?

Then I raise another question, sir: There could be situations where there is some employer-employee coverage of just certain benefits, but on other benefits you get under the standard plan. The employee will probably want to stay with his employer-employee coverage. Under this section, with the standard plan, if there are already existing plans which cover the insured, then they will cover the benefits concerned rather than come under the standard plan.

Does the hon. Minister, therefore, suggest that there might be a reduction in the premium of the standard plan in such circumstances?

I do not think I have expressed myself too clearly on this. What I am saying is that you already have some coverage through an existing plan—not all coverage but just some, a couple of points covered—therefore you will not be getting all the benefits under the standard plan. Do you have to pay the same premium as if you were getting all the benefits under the standard plan?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I could not foresee that. We have definitely specified there can be no interference with the provisions of the standard plan. The premium cannot be lessened, and actually cannot be increased, as a standard plan. Additional benefits can be secured with the standard plan, but at no time, and under no circumstances, can they be written in, typed in, or printed in the body of the contract itself. They can be attached as a rider, but they cannot be put into the body of the plan because our bill will not permit any interference with the standard contract.

Did I understand the hon. leader of the Opposition rightly to say: Suppose the present group coverage gives him, say, half of the benefits that could accrue to him under the standard plan, could he then take half of the standard plan? No, that could not be done because this would get away from the principle of the standard plan. However, if his group plan is such that it is not bound up with several other fringe benefits—and a great many group medical services insurance contracts in industry and commerce are part of a package and it is usually to the overall benefit of the employee that he retain that package—but if it is simply medical services insurance and the group coverage does not provide him with as much, then he has the right to withdraw from it, if this be possible under the group, or the group can disintegrate and all members can come under the standard plan as individuals if they so choose.

But again, the principle inherent in this bill is that these are individual contracts and do not apply to groups per se.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister see a situation where there could be an injustice to a man who is tied in, through his employment, with a medical insurance plan which is giving him some coverage? He has been paying into this and the group wants to stay with this. Yet on the other hand he feels that for his family coverage he should get into a standard plan to give him more comprehensive coverage. He is then paying the whole shot on the standard plan, while he is covered to some extent under the employer-employee plan. He is really paying double, not double but he is having to pay extra. Can the hon. Minister see a situation like that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can see the situation that I think the hon. leader of the Opposition is proposing, but I cannot see a way of getting out of it here without the insured dropping his inadequate coverage. I can only say that, from our studies and our knowledge of the insurance field, there are relatively few group plans which do not provide, or rather that provide, much less than the standard plan. The tendency has been, more and more, to broaden the scope of those; naturally so, because this is the evolutionary development of this whole field. Indeed, there is a very marked and steady decrease every year in the number of partial coverage plans—for example the Brown plan, and the plans that go under the various headings as provided by various carriers. The medical-surgical plan—the surgical-obstetrical plan—has been quite common and is still relatively common among the younger age groups, the young adult age groups. But these are steadily decreasing. In fact, the decrease has been very rapid until now. As I stated during second reading, the number of people in Ontario holding such contracts is less than 500,000.

This has come down quite rapidly over the past five or six years. It would be my opinion that there are relatively few contracts that do not provide benefits at least equal to what we propose in the standard contract.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I raise this other question then, and I really crave your indulgence and that of the hon. Minister in raising it, because I do not think it completely fits in here. What does the government propose to do about persons—this is one of the questions asked by the Globe and Mail and I am quoting from the newspaper—they say there could be many who do not pay for coverage and then suffer illness or injury for which they have no money to buy medical attention.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I presume the same will obtain in the future as has obtained for a long time.

Again, I want to point out that we will make as widely known as is possible, with all the resources at our disposal, what is available to the people. We know from the outset there will be those who for a variety of reasons will not obtain coverage, no matter whether they can afford it or not. Even in the case of those for whom it will be provided free, we recognize that there will be some who will not, again for a variety of reasons, seek to avail themselves of this service.

I do not know what one does with human nature in a case of that kind. When people become ill, we would hope that they would be induced to ensure during that first illness that the same problem does not recur. I suppose the members of the medical profession—and I hope they will—will assume it their public responsibility to look after them. If they do not have the money, you cannot get blood out of a stone. I would hope and expect that they would be looked after at least as well in the future as they have been in the past.

Mr. Thompson: Some of them have not been looked after too well in the past.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite see how this discussion is in order under this section, but if I may just make one comment on it since it has been raised—I think the hon. Minister's answer once again points up the gross inadequacy of this bill.

He has said in effect that for the people to whom reference was made the situation will be as it always was. In other words, they will not be able to afford insurance. If they fall ill they will have bills they cannot pay; they may be in debt for years, they will have debts hanging over their heads. How that is going to contribute to their recovery I do not know.

The alternative is, of course, that all their assets will be used up and they will be reduced to welfare. That can happen too. But there is a large group in the community that is not in any way covered by this bill that faces that risk day by day. It is regrettable that nothing is being done to meet their needs.

Mr. Thompson: If I could point out, I understand that in Alberta 15 per cent are in that category. I hope this will not be the situation in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did give the opinion, and I think this is a very solidly based opinion, that the reason they have missed these is that they, I understand, are in the low income group—the group which, under our bill, will be totally subsidized.

Mr. Bryden: No, the group just above that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Even then our support is extended beyond that offered in Alberta and in more generous terms. I would therefore believe that we, by this means alone, will catch the very large majority of those 15 per cent. But human nature will always be human nature and there will always be those, for whatever variety of reasons, I repeat will not—

Mr. Bryden: Not under a proper plan.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I wonder if the hon. member for Woodbine would have us do here in Ontario what is done in Saskatchewan? There it is compulsory, and if you do not pay your premium—if you do not pay, Mr. Chairman, no matter how little you have—you go to jail.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: We have let this go far enough.

Mr. Bryden: I suggest you keep the hon. Minister in order, if he is going to make that sort of inflammatory statement.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it is a fact.

Mr. Bryden: I did not raise this matter, but the hon. Minister has made one of his typical irresponsible inflammatory statements. If he wants to know if I would like to see the kind of plan there is in Saskatchewan, the answer is an emphatic "Yes." And a further answer is that the Conservative Party in Saskatchewan is in favour of it, the Liberal Party in Saskatchewan is in favour of it, and the New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan is in favour of it.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: And, after experience with it, the people of Saskatchewan are in favour of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, we were getting along so beautifully at the outset. I have a question that is foursquare within this section. This section speaks of contracts other than the standard medical plan. The hon. Minister told us yesterday there will be no interference with those contracts.

My question is: Supposing an employer pays the premium for his employees under a plan other than the standard plan; supposing one of the employees qualifies for total or partial subsidy under section 6: can the employer, instead of paying the premiums for this other plan, say to that employee, "You go to the government and make application for partial or total subsidy," and thus relieve the employer, unlike the big-hearted hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), from paying the premium? Does the hon. Minister follow me?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I think so. I suppose it would be conceivable but I can hardly think of a group being disintegrated in this fashion. I think there are certain rules and regulations which govern group insurance contracts; and one of them is, as I understand it, that a percentage, if not 100 per cent, of those in the group must have the coverage. But if, however, that employee did cover himself under a standard contract, our bill provides that if there is any charge against it, the amount that is available to him under his first contract would be applied, and the standard contract would pay only the difference. One fee only will be paid.

Mr. Sopha: Could I ask this supplementary question? In the regulations you make under section 6 regarding total and partial subsidies, where the Minister has a discretion, is the hon. Minister and the department under his direction going to have a pretty searching questionnaire directed to the person applying for partial subsidy? Are they going to look into his background? Are they going to determine, in fact, what his assets are?

A lot of people will be asking me these questions, because a lot of people have already commented that they regret very much the situation arising where their tax money is going to subsidize persons who really do not deserve to be subsidized—the persons with $50,000 in bonds under the mattress; the people who make a good wage seasonally. For instance, Ron Haggart's description of the people in the parimutuels at Woodbine racetrack. These people query this; after all, they are going to pick up the tab for it. They want to know that only the deserving will be able to come to the public Treasury and make use of public moneys to provide them with health care.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think this would negate one of the basic principles of the bill. We have stated that there will not be a means test, and I can only see, inherent in the hon. member's question, the institution of the imposition of a means test. We recognize that there will be some people—and this has concerned a great many of the hon. members from at least two parties in the House as much as it concerned us. But, you see, we have tried to build this on the same reasoning as obtained in, say, the universal old-age assistance plan, where there used to be a means test, and the family allowance plan.

All the economists have told me that the cost of administering it in this fashion, that is, determining eligibility on the basis of deserving rather than on income, would cost us more than we would lose. I have to listen to these arguments because, after all, these people are experts in the field and they know about these matters. But I am quite frank to admit, sir, that the hon. member is perfectly right, and his hon. colleague who sits on his right has brought this up several times to me privately. It is of concern to us.

We have had proposals that we might write in something about disposable assets and all these things; but then, I think, we would get into the rather iniquitous means test and we are certainly trying to avoid an income test. Unfortunately, some will slip through, and I really do not know at this stage, in spite of all our consideration of it, what else we can do to close out this group. I can only hope that the basic morality of our people—although maybe I am a little naïve—will cause them to refrain from asking for something which they know perfectly well they do not really have the right to claim.

Mr. Chairman: Let us go back to section 22. This has all been dealt with on a previous vote.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Yes, they make a reference to standard contracts, and I have a question for the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, as to how we are going to get around a problem like this. Suppose an individual is on a group plan; he works for a firm that has a group plan. This individual receives a salary which is so low he would either be normally receiving all his medical services free under the new plan or at least in part be subsidized; yet that individual belongs to a group plan, and where he works he must belong. There you have a situation where an individual is forced to pay into a group plan, yet he would normally receive help from the government. What do you do in a situation of that kind?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I submit that I have just answered that question for the hon. leader; but I will repeat, as far as I can, what I said. He has two choices. If it is possible he can withdraw from his group and apply to us for coverage, if he is eligible for assistance, or he can remain under group coverage.

Mr. Trotter: My point is that the employee does not always have the choice. Suppose, where he works, he has to belong to the group plan. He may not have a choice.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The principle of the bill, sir, again I repeat, does not interfere with the existing plans.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 22 stand as part of the bill?

Sections 22 to 24, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 25:

Mr. Sopha: Under this one: No licensed carrier, it says, shall under a standard contract interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his own physician or impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person. All right, then. What happens if the carrier knows that the doctor is one of this minority of doctors we have talked much about, who abuse these plans, who get money out of these plans in an unjustified way—I think somebody used the phrase: they milked the plan—then what recourse, if any, does section 25 give to the carrier to move against that doctor, to prevent him from milking the plan? Because the section says in the clearest possible terms that they cannot interfere with the right of the covered person to choose his own physician, and they know that the physician is acting fraudulently and they cannot tell the covered person, the insured: "You cannot go to Dr. X." How do you stop this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the responsibility of the carrier, as a citizen of the province, of course, is to lay a formal complaint with the college of physicians and surgeons, or, if that is too troublesome, to the council. The council exists to hear complaints from any party—the consumer, the provider of the services, or the third party who pays for the services, or from any other quarter. I would certainly think, and from past experience I feel quite sure, that if there is any hint or evidence of over-service, or over-use, by the profession, that the carrier has a very sound moral obligation to bring that to the attention of the council or, better still, to the college.

I can assure you that if it comes to the council, there is no doubt in my mind but that it will go to the college. We have made it very clear to the college that it is their responsibility to police the profession. But I still do not believe that we should remove this section. I do not think that anybody should interfere with the patient's right to choose.

Now, there is, as you will recall, a provision, in certain cases where a programme is now in existence, a closed panel programme for instance which has already by common consent agreed that a certain group of doctors will treat a specified group of patients, not to interfere with that, because this is an arrangement arrived at by people agreeing in good faith to these provisions. There will be no interference, as provided in the Act, but I would be very loath to think of any carrier having the right to dictate to which doctor you shall go.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. Minister is really addressing himself to the point that I want to raise now. What is the significance of the inclusion in this section of the term "under standard contract"? It reads:

No licensed carrier shall, under standard contract, interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his own physician.

Can one conclude from this that a carrier has the right to interfere if it is not under a standard contract?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It might very well be if that is already in the existing contract. Again I have to say, this bill, of course, addresses itself specifically to standard contracts. We have stated that we are making it, by law, mandatory that a standard contract be offered and, therefore, we are dealing with standard contracts. If the superintendent of insurance believes that this right is being violated, then I think it will be necessary for him to have his Act or Acts changed.

But this bill only strays into the field of other contracts where they might have a bearing upon the standard contract, and we have not interfered in matters that are really none of our immediate concern as a Department of Health. I do believe that there are certain contracts in existence where certain doctors are specified, particularly those of fraternal organizations, for instance. These are becoming steadily fewer, but I believe most fraternal organizations have their own doctor. Certain branches of railway employees used to have their own doctor. I remember for a time I was a railway doctor, and all railway people in my community had to come to me.

This again is an agreement reached by common consent, with the carrier and the employee, or the employee's representatives. But it is spelled out in the contract that the services of these specific doctors must be used. I do not believe there are many of these existing now, but it is possible.

Mr. MacDonald: I concede to the hon. Minister that there are some contracts in fraternal organization or in—I suspect—union contracts, or in industries, where there is a direction to a certain doctor. I am not talking about that. I am not talking for the moment about those under a standard contract. I am talking about all of the individuals who will be going on the myriad of contracts that will be offered to individuals, apart from standard contracts.

Now, we are back to the old difficulty and I am not going to belabour it. But the government has intervened to a degree and then they draw the line, but the line is not a straight line, it is very ragged in its edges. One of the ragged edges is at this point here.

You pay lip service—everybody has been paying lip service, I think almost excessively—to this right to choose your own doctor up until now. It seems to me that if you are going to protect people in the whole field of medical insurance, then it is a legitimate proposition that you should protect the individual who is not covered in a contract, standard or otherwise, from being victimized, if you will, by his carrier, and directing him to a specific doctor he does not want to go to.

The hon. Minister says presumably he can appeal to the council, or to the superintendent of insurance, and if the superintendent of insurance finds that this unwritten law to which everybody pays lip service is being violated, he may take action with the carrier. If the carrier is rather flagrant in his abuse of it, he might even withdraw the licence.

But this is a very long procedure. This is the kind of procedure that an individual is likely to be unaware of and, indeed, if he is aware of it, he is not likely to pursue it.

If this is the way that the individual has redress, I submit that even within the confines of your rather vague degree to which you move into the field and regulate, that he should be informed. It should be stated in the Act than any individual who is victimized by a carrier has recourse to either the superintendent of insurance, or to the council. But it does not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to say that the subscriber should have to make representations to the superintendent of insurance. I can see where this could be ponderous, and certainly would be honoured more in the breach than in the observance. What I did propose, or what I meant to convey, was that I thought that The Insurance Act, or The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act, should be amended. But I have not the authority or the right, within the substance of this Act, to change them.

I agree with the hon. member that the best way to ensure that the patient shall have free choice of doctor is to make it certain by the Act under which the insurance carrier operates, but I have not that authority under this Act to do anything except with respect to the standard contract.

Mr. MacDonald: The government has, and you are a member of the government.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, the Cabinet has.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): The hon. member—

Mr. Chairman: Order. The leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to get this clarification, through you to the hon. Minister of Health. Does the physician have the right to refuse to treat a patient, simply on these grounds alone, that the patient is covered by the standard contract?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This, Mr. Chairman, opens up a very difficult question. I know of no law that says a doctor must treat the patient, any more than I know of any law that says the shoemaker must fix your shoes. Again, we think we can depend on the integrity, morality and the sense of responsibility that the doctors will exercise. I have known doctors to refuse to take patients for very good cause, because in their judgment they could not give them the treatment required, or that the patient should have. But I have never known one, from my own personal experience, who, placed in such circumstances, did not make certain that a patient was referred to a doctor who in the first doctor's opinion would render the treatment.

I believe that there is a free choice, both for the patient and the doctor—for the patient to choose his doctor and for the doctor to choose his patient. I would be very loath, indeed I would not even consider the suggestion that any government should say to either an individual or a doctor: "You shall go to a certain doctor," or, "You shall treat the patient."

Mr. Thompson: I know, but that is not my point, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister is nervous about certain situations, but he is not loath to tell insurance companies: "You have to carry a standard contract." However, surely the situation is that you can have this standard contract. But supposing the doctor and I raise this hypothetically—were to say: "Look, we disregard this standard contract because the Prime Minister suggested that the government do have control indirectly over fee schedules, etc." There may be a situation where the fee schedules go up to a point and the hon. Minister of Health says: "These standard contracts are going to be held at fixed amounts." So the doctors start saying: "Anyone with a standard contract will be ignored."

The law says that insurance companies must provide standard contracts. If a person comes—and I say solely on the basis of being refused by the doctor on the standard contract—would you say this would be permissible?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No. If that is the only reason, I certainly would not say it is permissible. And I am quite sure I speak for my profession when I say they would not tolerate such a situation. I think that would be a very valid reason for complaint on the part of the subscriber. It would be, in my opinion, a complaint to be treated with the greatest consideration and most urgent consideration. I cannot anticipate such a thing happening, but I can assure you it would not be tolerated.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Health has now said that it would not be permissible, which to me anyway means that it would be compulsory.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Cowling: I seem to get the impression from the hon. member for York South that insurance companies direct policyholders to special doctors, which, in my knowledge of the industry, is not the case. In some fraternal organizations they might, but insurance companies are not interested in which doctor you go to. Is this what the hon. member thought? Did he say the insurance companies direct people to certain doctors?

Mr. MacDonald: It states in here that it is a possibility.

Mr. Cowling: It might be a possibility but it certainly is not in the practice of the business. The insurance carriers could not care less which doctor you see; they have no control over which doctor—

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Cowling: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member: If this is so wildly remote that it could never happen, why would this government put in a section which was careful enough to cover this point, section 25? They apparently thought it should be considered.

Mr. Cowling: I will tell the hon. member why they probably thought it. I do not know for sure but, as the hon. Minister said, we are dealing with the standard contract which is the one that all companies must qualify—

Mr. MacDonald: But if it never happened, they would not have to deal with it.

Mr. Cowling: So they simply specify that they must carry on according to the standard contract; but there are thousands of other contracts in the province which people have, and they visit the doctor of their choice. I cannot see that there is any problem with that particular section. You go to the doctor of your choice.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member's sentence was a little long; he cannot see, "period."

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, on this question which has been raised, quite obviously the hon. member for High Park does not understand the point which is being made. This is a limitation which this statute purports to imply: that, in some way, a licensed carrier can interfere with the right of a covered person under contracts other than standard contracts. The hon. member for High Park says that that cannot happen, therefore we say let us delete the words "under a standard contract"—

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I do not profess to know nearly as much about insurance as the hon. member. I mean, he has all the answers. I am just trying. But I did not say what he said that I did say about the standard contract. You have the doctor of your choice, under the standard contract or any other contract.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the point I want to make. The hon. member for High Park said you have the doctor of your choice, under a standard contract or under any other kind of a contract. We are in complete agreement. We just want to make sure that that is so by deleting the words "under a standard contract" so that the section, or that part of it—and I have another comment to make—will read: "No licensed carrier shall interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his own physician." And I think that should be acceptable to the hon. member for High Park and certainly would be acceptable to us.

On the second point, I cannot understand why or how the hon. Minister of Health can equate the freedom of the doctor to choose his patient with the freedom of the public to choose the doctor. They are not terms which can be equated. The doctors have a professional obligation which is quite distinct from their freedom to say which patients they will or will not serve. You cannot equate, on the one hand, the number of doctors in the province of Ontario who, under a statutory authority from this Legislature, exercise the obligations of their profession with the freedoms of the individuals within this province.

There is no need in this section to equate those two concepts because there is, in fact, a professional obligation on a doctor to treat people in the province of Ontario. The extent of that obligation is a matter which, by authority of this Legislature, is vested in the council of the society to which the hon. Minister of Health belongs; but to say that there is no obligation, or to even make the least implication in this section that there is not an obligation, on the part of the physician to provide the services, and that he is completely free to choose which persons he will treat and which he will not, is something which we here cannot accept. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that section 25 be amended by striking out the words "under a standard contract" and also the words "or impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person," so that the section will read:

No licensed carrier shall interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his own physician.

Mr. Chairman: Moved by Mr. Renwick that section 25 be amended by striking out the words "under a standard contract," and also the words "or impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person."

Mr. Sopha: We most heartily support that, and I see that amendment is perfectly consistent with the amendment proffered by the hon. Minister of Health this morning in regard to 21(4), which we were delighted to endorse. We endorse it because we do not want any difference of treatment between standard contracts and other contracts of insurance; they should be treated as equally as possible so far as the benefits to the policyholder are concerned and, indeed, I hastily say, so far as the rights of the insurer under those contracts are given.

I also say that I agree with the hon. member for High Park most heartily that he does not know as much about insurance as the hon. member for Riverdale. The hon. member for Riverdale was a director of an insurance company.

Mr. Chairman: Let us come back to section 25.

Mr. Cowling: That does not make him an expert.

Mr. Sopha: He was fired because he was not a Tory, apparently. They do not believe in compulsion but they believe in conformity, so they fired him.

The hon. member for High Park gets up in high dudgeon and says that insurance companies will not send patients to specific doctors.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I do not know. I have no information, but insurance companies certainly have no inhibitions about sending insured people to certain lawyers; they do it all the time. So why would they not do it with doctors? Why would they carry on that practice?

Under section 24, the insurance company is given the right to direct the insured to a specific lawyer because of the right of subrogation; and not only in the exercise of the right of subrogation do they send them to specific lawyers, they send them to specific lawyers to pursue the insured's own claim.

I just cannot see in my mind that they would compartmentalize the two professions and say, "We will exercise our right and, indeed, will give gratuitous advice to send them to certain lawyers, and we will not send them to certain doctors." I just do not believe it. Of course, there will be a group of doctors which will be a favourite of the insurance companies; there will be a particular clinic that they would send them to—I do not see much wrong with it. The workmen's compensation board does it all the time. They send claimants to specific doctors within a city, and those doctors are not employees of the workmen's compensation board; they just happen to do that kind of work, when claimants are directed to them.

However, that right, or that exercise of discretion on their part, should certainly be proscribed by the statute in the clearest possible terms and that is why we support this amendment. It should be brought home in a campaign of advertising by this government in respect of this bill which, I suspect, is going to pass this House and receive third reading. And, in the campaign of advertising, one of the things to be brought home to the public of this province is that they have an inalienable right, under the bill, to choose their own doctor in respect of every policy of insurance that is issued in the province for health care of any nature or kind.

I would say to the hon. Minister of Health, to whom I bow in profound ignorance about medical matters—I know nothing about medical matters, but I suspect this: The freedom of choice of a doctor and the building up of an attitude of reliance and trust upon a specific member of the medical profession by the patient with an illness has some psychosomatic effects upon his recovery. His great faith in his doctor and his infinite reliance and trust in that medical person, assists him along the road to recovery. I remember the case of my own mother in that regard, the implicit faith that she had in a certain doctor; we want to encourage that. The person who has such trust in a doctor is a person who is inclined to follow his advice in medical matters to the letter.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, on the amendment I am afraid the hon. member should really stick to the legal problems which he knows something about, because there are some phases of the insurance business that he does not know much about.

I have been selling these medical policies ever since they were introduced in Ontario and I never heard of a company yet which directed a policyholder to a specific doctor.

That is one of the great advantages of the whole situation, that once you have paid the premium and are covered by the policy then you can go to any licensed physician in the province. I think that holds good for most of the 200 companies that are members of the Canadian health association and other non-profit organizations.

So I really do not think that there is a problem here at all. I have never heard of a case in which an individual was directed—that is other than for a life insurance examination or something of that kind; or people employed by the railroad, for instance, going to special doctors—but medical companies really are not interested as long as you go to the doctor of your choice.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of comments I would like to make.

I repeat what I said a moment ago, with reference to the comments made by the hon. member for High Park. Apparently, for some reason or other, there has been some idea in the minds of the drafters of this bill that they should protect themselves on this point. The hon. member for High Park feels there is absolutely no need, but apparently somebody on the government side felt that this should be clarified.

However, when you get down to the amendment that has been made by my colleague, the hon. member for Riverdale, the second portion of his amendment dealing with striking out the latter portion of the section reading:

or impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person.

I think the case he has made is obviously a valid one. One does not want to appear to be violating what is laid down in another statute of this government, namely, the obligation of a doctor to meet the needs of the ill, and there is at least an appearance that you are moving in the direction of doing this. I think this is an unnecessary addition in the section.

I come back to the point I raised earlier, and with which I think my colleague has now dealt. When I queried the hon. Minister as to whether the significance of the inclusion of the term "under a standard contract" meant that if the person was not under a standard contract the carrier would have the right to discriminate, he said that this was not necessary in a case that did not fall under this Act. He agreed it was a matter that should be clarified, but it should be clarified under the other statutes with general reference to medical insurance carriers.

I think the hon. Minister was unnecessarily bowing out of the picture in saying that this should be dealt with elsewhere. I think it can be dealt with here; indeed, it could be most appropriately dealt with here in an Act to which the average person is going to turn if he wants to find out what this government is doing on medical coverage, an Act which is entitled, An Act respecting medical services insurance.

So the hon. Minister does have the power to meet this problem, which he acknowledges is something that could be clarified. I suggest to him that he can meet it by accepting the amendment of the hon. member for Riverdale, which just strikes out the term, "under a standard contract," so that it becomes very clear to everybody concerned that no licensed carrier shall interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his physician; no matter where he holds his contract, under a standard contract or as an individual under one of the many other contracts offered by carriers.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Riverdale who moved the amendment has put the case very clearly, inasmuch as he expressed that one of the fundamentals in the professional oath of the medical profession is that they treat the sick and wounded wherever and whoever they are. I also think that to leave this last sentence in this section will provide an argument for the medical profession in regard to some of the problems they are facing today, that is an overload of patients.

I had several cases in the last two months where people have called for an appointment and have been told by the doctor that he is taking no more patients. In one particular instance, the patient was an elderly chap who injured his side and had pain for a few days, and finally I recommended that he call the doctor. He did so and was told that the doctor was taking no more patients and that he should go to the hospital.

The chap went to the hospital and received treatment. First, there was an x-ray and he had to pay $10 for this because he was beyond the 24-hour emergency treatment provision. If the doctor had accepted him or referred him to a doctor who would have treated him, he would have had no cost attached to his injury, because he was covered by a medical insurance programme.

There have been cases in the last couple of years where, because of the new medical programmes coming into force—industrial contracts—doctors are segregating their patients based on what kind of coverage they have.

It is developing a problem in some of the municipalities inasmuch as the built-up areas have their ration of doctors and new people coming into the community cannot establish what we might call a family doctor within a reasonable distance of their home. Particularly in the city of Hamilton, there are people, living down in what we call below the mountain section, who have to establish their relationship with a doctor several miles away on what we call the mountain section of the city. Certainly it is an inconvenience for travel and accessibility.

I think this is another area that has to be looked at very shortly, the shortage of doctors in our communities, but I do not think this sentence should be left in this section because it will in some sense, I think, give the medical profession what might be considered a legal right to either defer a patient or refuse him attention.

Mr. Chairman: You have heard the amendment. All in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment, say "aye."

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think before you put the question I want to speak against the amendment. This bill, first of all, I repeat, has to do with standard contracts and there is little sense, at least in my thinking, for us to trespass in a field that is already covered by other specific Acts. While I subscribe to the principles underlying the argument I do not believe it applies. Here again is evidence of the gulf that exists between us, and I have just as much right and just as much validity to my argument as my hon. friends in the splinter group have.

Mr. MacDonald: You have as much right to your opinion as we have.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course you say it is not right, my hon. friend, but I say it is right. I say you are wrong and I say I am right. You say I am wrong and you are right. So who is to judge? The public has judged time and time again, and they will continue to judge and I know what judgment they will make.

But I want to point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that this bill applies to standard contracts and I think we should stick to standard contracts and build in all the safeguards necessary in respect of them, because they are the contracts which the government says to the insurance carriers, "You must provide for our people."

Then, too, I think we have lost sight of certain facts, or at least we have strayed quite far afield. This section of the Act says nothing about the doctor's obligation to treat his patients; and there is nothing like that in it. There is no attempt to equate these things. This section says that no licensed carrier shall interfere with the patient's right to choose his own doctor, nor shall any licensed carrier impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person.

My hon. friend from Riverdale is really talking foolishly, sir, because he knows perfectly well that there is no legal obligation, no obligation established by any statute of this Legislature, which forces him to accept a client, or forces the client to go to him; and I think this would be the most dangerous principle to introduce in any piece of legislation.

My hon. friend from Wentworth East pointed this out when he said that the doctor refused to take a patient because he had more than enough to do now. Is the hon. member suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that by law we should say to that doctor, "You have got to take the patient"?

Mr. Bryden: The amendment would not do that; you know that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Bryden: On that point, it leaves the law unchanged.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member like to take the floor, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: I would certainly do a lot better with it than you are doing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I am quite sure you would.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The Minister of Health has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is surprising to me, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member does not dislocate his shoulder patting himself on the back.

I want to point out to you, sir, that here we are trying to protect the rights of the subscribers by stating that the carrier shall, under no circumstances, interfere with a subscriber's right to choose his own doctor, nor impose upon the subscriber a physician of the carrier's choice. Suppose the patient does not want to go to that physician. Does the carrier say, or the law say, "You have got to go there," or "The law does not say that I cannot send you there"? We are making certain that the law says he cannot impose that obligation, either on the physician or on the patient.

Therefore, sir, I say that the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask that you read the amendment? I do not know if there has been another amendment that the hon. Minister is talking about.

Mr. Chairman: There is only one.

Section 25 be amended by striking out the words "under a standard contract," and the words "or impose an obligation upon a physician to treat any covered person."

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, may I speak again? As the hon. Minister, when he last spoke, directed his comments to me, I would just like, for a moment, to reply to him.

On the first point, he states that this Act deals only with the standard medical insurance contracts; yet, in the very definition sections of the Act, it does otherwise. If you will notice the amendment which we have proposed, it refers to:

No licensed carrier shall interfere with the right of a covered person to choose his own physician.

And then, if you will look simply at the definition of "covered person," in section 1 of the bill, you will find that "covered person" means a person who is covered by medical services insurance. And if you will look then at the definition of "medical services insurance" on page 2 of the bill, in section 1, you will find that medical services insurance is drawn in the broadest ambit possible, by stating that it means a contract, agreement, scheme, fund or arrangement, whereby a resident is covered for medical, surgical or obstetrical care or services, or the cost or a portion thereof, when rendered to such resident and to his dependants by, or under, the direction of a physician.

I will not read the obvious exclusion that comes at the end of it. I would simply say to the House that the comment of the hon. Minister that this bill does not deal with medical insurance contracts in its broad context is just not correct, because the bill itself so provides.

So far as the second point is concerned, what I was stating—and if I could try to state this clearly, I think that every hon. member of this House will agree—is that we are not speaking about statutory obligations as to what his profession or what my profession, or any member of it, must do. What we are saying is that there is a professional obligation on anyone who is in the privileged position in our society of being either a doctor, a lawyer, or other qualified professional person; and, in the privileged position, it imposes a professional obligation on him to do certain things. We have not got, so far, in our society, to where it is possible by statute to specifically define what that professional obligation is.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale is out of order. This has nothing to do with this section. This has to do with a licensed carrier and not the profession.

Mr. Renwick: I will complete very quickly, Mr. Chairman. All I wish to say is that the law of the province of Ontario is broader than the statute law of this province and covers many more fields. I am content to leave the extent of the professional obligation, of any professional person in the province, to be determined by our courts, but I just simply do not wish to have, and we here do not wish to have, the implication in here that in some way a professional person is completely free of a professional obligation.

Mr. Chairman: You have heard the amendment. All in favour say "aye."

All opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members.

Those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment, please rise.

Those opposed to Mr. Renwick's amendment, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "yeas" are 21, the "nays" 48.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost, and section 25 forms part of the bill.

On section 26:

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, this I suppose is what could be called the draftsman's saving clause. I can appreciate the feelings of a draftsman after he has drafted a complicated bill. He undoubtedly always has a gnawing feeling that he may have overlooked something. Somewhere in the statute law of the province there may be something that is in conflict with what is in that bill he has just drafted, and this may, at some future date become a matter for litigation. So a clause of this kind goes in, stating that, in the event of a conflict of any provisions of this Act with any provisions of any other Act, the provisions of this Act will prevail.

This is fine, Mr. Chairman, but what happens when we have two Acts in conflict, both of which have this clause in them? My impression is, without having made a study of the matter, that most of the statutes of the province have this clause in them, with the result that the whole thing is totally meaningless.

Mr. MacDonald: A good point, you will have to agree, a very good point.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): How crazy can you get?

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: I believe that the normal rule is that, if there is a conflict between two statutes enacted by the same legislative body, the statute enacted most recently is the one that prevails, on the theory that it represents the present thinking, or the most recent thinking, of the Legislature concerned. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think that is the way we should leave it. I think we should give up putting in these asinine clauses which really do not mean anything.

If, inadvertently, a conflict arises, let the matter be interpreted by the court as to precisely what the legislative situation is. If it is different than the government and the Legislature intended, then there is always the remedy of coming back to the Legislature to straighten the matter out. I think that is the best way of handling it. I am not inclined to make a major issue over section 26 since it is largely meaningless, but I would suggest that in future we might consider dropping that type of section from the statutes.

Section 26 agreed to.

On section 27:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder, sir, if the hon. Minister will be kind enough to tell us, in view of the fact that we are in the fiscal year of 1965-66, and that all of us through our taxes are compelled to pay to the consolidated revenue fund, that all of us therefore are contributing to this Act. I want to re-emphasize that no matter how he wants to dodge around it, that we are compelled to contribute to the Act. I would like to know how much we are going to be compelled to spend and whether the hon. Minister will tell us how much money he intends to spend this year before anyone is actually offered coverage under this Act.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, no one will be offered coverage under the Act during this fiscal year. As has already been stated, the programme will come into effect on June 1, 1966, but there will be moneys required in connection with the organization and preparation for the coming into operation of the programme.

I cannot at this time give you a definite budget—this, again, is dependent upon the passage of this bill. It would be rather presumptuous of me to anticipate the will of the Legislature and have everything ready and the budget all prepared in the hope and expectation that the bill would pass. I awaited, as I think is proper behaviour, the will of the Legislature. But now that I know it is going to be passed unanimously we will proceed very vigorously to the preparation of the budget for this year.

Mr. Thompson: Well, Mr. Chairman, on this question, I presume because of his usual quiet and rather shy manner, and never wanting to be presumptuous, the hon. Minister cannot tell us the costs of premiums and answer a number of other questions, like the aged and what they will have to pay. Now he is suggesting that he could not tell us how much funds he will want allocated. I wish, in this particular area, that perhaps he could have been a little bit more presumptuous because it would seem to me that he is presenting an Act to this Legislature and to the people of Ontario, and some of them are very interested in knowing just how much it is going to take out of their pockets, how much they are going to be compelled to pay. We would have hoped that he would have had more facts, in view of the six years' intensive study that he says he has given to this Act.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that the answer given by the hon. Minister to the question of the hon. leader of the Opposition carried the same note of irresponsibility that has characterized many of his answers to this House, a note almost of flippancy.

This section is a supply section, this is a request for grant of supply. When the hon. Minister puts the section before us, he is requesting a grant of supply. If we approve the section, and ultimately go on to approve the bill, then that means that supply has been granted.

Mr. Chairman: May I interrupt here—the resolution was carried the other day—

Mr. Bryden: We choose to deal with it here, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman. But when we had the resolution, it was carried.

Mr. Bryden: I still say it is quite in order. This section has not yet been carried, Mr. Chairman, it is quite in order to ask questions about it.

Mr. Chairman: I did not say you are not in order, I just gave you a little information.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am well aware of the resolution, but we thought a better time to deal with the matter would be here. It might have been better to have dealt with it at the other place, but I think the option is open to us.

When a government asks for supply, it is customary and desirable that it should state how much money it anticipates it will spend for the purpose, and detail how it arrived at that figure. That is what happens when we have the estimates before us. This is an item obviously that could not be included in the estimates, but here I think we should get the kind of answer that we would expect to get on estimates.

Now, I judge from what the hon. Minister said that he has an idea—surely he must by now have an idea—of how much money is going to be spent and what it is going to be spent for. However, he is not going to bother to tell us, he is going to return to the old days before the responsibility of King to Parliament was established and the executive simply levied money without explaining to the people's representatives what it was for and how much was involved. I suspect the hon. Minister must know but he has refused to give the answer on what I can only say is a purely flippant reason, namely, that we have not yet passed the bill and he does not want to presume to anticipate what the House will do.

Well, I suggest to him that when he comes before us with a request for supply, he should not presume to refuse to tell us how much supply he wants and precisely how he expects to spend it. I think we are entitled to an estimate of the total amount of money involved here, and a breakdown of that figure.

Mr. Chairman: Section 27—

Mr. Bryden: No! I think we should have an answer from the hon. Minister.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister does not care to answer.

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. Minister will not answer, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to this House that it should not grant the supply that he is requesting. We should not grant money without knowing how much is involved and what it is for. I suggest to the House that it should vote against the adoption of the section.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 27 stand as part of the bill?

All those in favour, say "aye."

All those opposed, say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of having section 27 stand as part of the bill, please rise.

All those opposed to section 27 standing as part of the bill, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 46, the "nays" are 22.

Section 27 agreed to.

On section 28:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to one subsection of section 28—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Sopha: We have had a rare degree of unanimity between our two parties in Opposition to this bill—

Mr. Bryden: Even the Globe and Mail is on our side.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, and in very good company. Only the Tory party—

Mr. Singer: Even the Toronto Telegram—

Mr. Sopha: I move that section 28 be amended by striking out clause (b), and by adding the following clause: Prescribing the form and content of financial and other statements of all licensed carriers to be furnished to the council by the corporation, when the corporation recommends to the council any changes in benefits or maximum subscription rates, and that section 28 be further amended by deleting subsection (k).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sopha moves:

That section 28 be amended by striking out clause (b) and by adding the following clause: Prescribing the form and content of financial and other statements of all licensed carriers to be furnished to the council by the corporation, when the corporation recommends to the council any changes in benefits or maximum subscription rates, and that section (k) of section 28 be deleted.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that perhaps the matter could be simplified if this composite motion were framed to read that the section be amended by striking out clauses (b) and (k), and by adding the proposed words. It comes to the same thing with less expenditure of words.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, can there be two joint movers and—

Mr. Bryden: No, there are not; the hon. member for Sudbury moved—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But they are both speaking—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, since this group proposed the ideas contained in a significant part of that amendment, I would like to explain our reasoning with regard to them. I may say, before I go on to deal with clause (b) and the proposed new clause (m), that we agree entirely with the proposition of the hon. member for Sudbury, that clause (b) should be knocked out.

Indeed, we have the same mixed feelings with regard to this entire regulation section as we have expressed on numerous occasions. When you get right down to it, Mr. Chairman, everything that matters with regard to this bill is concealed in section 28 which gives the real power to the Lieutenant-Governor to legislate without any accountability to this House at all.

This is essentially what has happened here, and it happens in all too many statutes. I will say that the Opposition in this House, during committee consideration of this bill, has done what I would call an outstanding job.

I see that even unsympathetic newspapers agree that it has been an outstanding job in bringing to light the nest of jokers which were concealed in the namby-pamby, mealy-mouthed words of the bill, and which are to come to light only when the regulations are passed. We have smoked out a lot, but we have not smoked everything out, I feel certain, because it is difficult—especially when there is a Minister like this one, who evades questions rather than answering them and who goes into long tirades unrelated to the questions asked in order to divert attention from those questions; this makes the job particularly difficult. I can understand his position; he does not want to answer the questions because he does not think the answers would stand up under analysis.

However, included under this regulation section are the really important things that are to be provided.

For example, clause (c) says that the Lieutenant-Governor has power by regulation to designate the classes of persons mentioned in section 6. Now section 6 relates to the people who are to be subsidized. We have certain assurances from the hon. Minister as to what people he has in mind; I would give him credit on this point, he has given us more definite information on it than he usually gives us. But the designation of the classes of persons mentioned in section 6 is one of the most critical and important features of the whole legislation.

Then we have the power to prescribe the exceptions referred to in subsection 3 of section 14. As I pointed out when that subsection was under consideration, what the Lieutenant-Governor in Council does under that power could change the character of the bill quite substantially. The hon. Minister refused to say what the government has in mind under this subsection; in fact he willfully misunderstood the meaning of the subsection and we never could get an answer from him.

Then we come down to clause (h) whereby maximum subscription rates are to be dealt with by regulation. We have not been able to get any real information from the government regarding the maximum subscription rates except that it appears quite obvious that these maximum rates will be excessively high, so high that they will not be maximums at all, they will be totally meaningless. But again, we are not in a position to make any real comments.

Then we come to clause (k), which the hon. member for Sudbury proposes should be struck out and which, again, permits the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to prescribe limitations on benefits. I think that section relates to schedule "A".

If one takes the bill all together, Mr. Chairman, the regulations are really going to be the significant element. The regulations will prescribe who will get subsidies, what the maximum charges will be for those who do not get subsidies and what coverage they will get under standard contracts. What else is there? In the whole plan those are the three critical points. We have been given only limited information about most of them; there is nothing about them in the bill. All we can say is that what we have been told leads us to believe that the regulations will be most undesirable.

However, we will never have an opportunity to deal with them in this House. It is a sad commentary on parliamentary government that governments persistently ask the elected representatives of the people to abdicate their function of making laws and to hand it over to somebody else who then never has to report back to the elected representatives on what they have done; this is the sort of thing the government proposes to us.

We have a particular objection to clause (b). There are some others which I have mentioned that I do not like, but there is no alternative to them at this moment. Since there is nothing in the bill about the maximum rates and the subsidized groups there has to be some way of providing for them, and so we are left with no alternative but to agree to such clauses as (c) and (e).

But let us take a look at clause (b), Mr. Chairman. Under clause (b) the Lieutenant-Governor in Council will have the power to enlarge the functions of the council that is to be set up under this bill. Without repeating what has been said before, I would just remind the House that this council as provided for under section 3 of the bill is called the medical services insurance council. It is a council that will have very great influence on the administration of the bill, too much in our opinion, and what is particularly undesirable, as we have tried to indicate previously during the consideration of this bill, it is a council that is heavily loaded in favour of the medical profession and the insurance industry. The whole bill is loaded that way, but we think it is most undesirable that a council with significant influence in the administration of the bill should be so loaded.

We cannot now reopen the question of the powers the council already have; but we object to this type of weighted council, biased in favour of specific interest groups, having any additional functions given to it. We simply are not willing, as far as this group is concerned, to let the Lieutenant-Governor in Council expand the already excessive functions of that council. If the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, in experience, thinks there are ways in which the functions of the council should be revised or expanded, then let him come back to this House and get the law changed. But as far as we are concerned we are not prepared to agree to any expansion of the functions of the council without knowing what is involved.

Let me put it once again, as we have put it so many times Mr. Chairman, we are not prepared to buy a pig in a poke. If the Lieutenant-Governor in Council wants these functions expanded, then let him come before this House and explain how and why they are to be expanded.

As for the proposed new clause (m) that we suggested be inserted in the bill, it will be noted, Mr. Chairman, that nowhere in this bill is there any provision for insurance carriers to provide financial statements and other documentary information that ought to be provided, if they want to increase their rates. We believe that, in a bill of this kind, which puts them in quite a preferred position, the public or at any rate representatives of the public should have access to their financial statements. They may come along and make a great song and dance about how they are starving to death, and that they want an increase in fees, and so on. If they are going to do that, then I say that they should be prepared to back up their contention by putting the facts on the table, by permitting their financial statements to be analyzed so that a determination can be made as to whether or not they actually need the increase.

As I understand it, if this sort of power is not specifically provided, there is no way the information can be obtained. You cannot force them, barring a specific authority, to produce their financial statements and other relevant documents. Are we going to be in the position, in the future administration of this bill, that we may be expected to permit an increase in rates merely on the say-so of the insurance companies, without a full analysis of what is involved? Whatever the hon. Minister may see fit to do with the rest of the amendments proposed by us, I think he should be happy to accept the proposed clause (m), either as it stands or perhaps in some redrafted form. There is obviously a bad oversight in the bill. This amendment will help to correct the oversight. It will give an opportunity for such documents—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I was not in the House, a moment ago, when the amendment about which the hon. member is speaking was moved, so I do not know the wording of it, but I take it from his remarks that it is a question of requiring the filing of financial statements by insurance companies as legislation in this Act. I just would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, that, under The Insurance Act, all insurance companies doing business must file financial statements with the superintendent of insurance, that is The Department of Insurance; and all other types of carriers, such as PSI, must file their financial statements under The Hospital Insurance Act. So there is no gap, there is no opening, through which an insurance company can escape, or can evade the filing of its financial returns; that information is available, either under The Insurance Act or The Hospital Insurance Act. If there is an amendment requiring a further filing under this Act, I think it might be regarded as somewhat superfluous or unnecessary.

Mr. Bryden: I would point out to the hon. Attorney General that the proposed amendment requires such filing only in relation to a recommendation for an increase in fees by the corporation, so called, which is the consortium of insurance companies. It does not provide for a general filing of returns. I am obviously not going to get into any dispute over the law with the hon. Attorney General, but I would put this point to him.

It is true that, under The Insurance Act, insurance companies must file certain information, but I do not think that information is available to all and sundry. That is for the information of—I have just forgotten the title—the chief insurance officer at any rate, the director of insurance, the superintendent of insurance so that he can make sure that they are complying with The Insurance Act. I would be surprised if that information, some of which I would think is of a highly confidential nature, could be transferred to some other government agency, or any other party at all, without a specific authority.

Certainly, income tax returns are not available to anybody except The Department of National Revenue. No other department of government at Ottawa can get access to them, except by special authority. That being so, the provision to which the hon. Attorney General refers, really does not meet our point.

Our point is that if the corporation—that is the insurance companies—is to apply for an increase in premiums under the law, then the government should be in a position to require the corporation to get from its members such financial information as is required, including confidential information, so that it will be possible to judge whether or not the application for an increase in rates is actually merited. Without such a provision, I would suggest that the government is going to be operating in the dark to a considerable degree in determining what the maximum premiums will be under this Act. It may be that the government does not mind operating in the dark, because, as we all know, the maximums are not really going to mean anything. But some day an attempt may be made to make them mean something, in which case the government will need much more information than it can get under the Act as it now stands.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few remarks in regard to this section, because this particular section 28, and the amendment as suggested, really sums up the entire debate—whether it be on principle, or section by section. The real operating power of this Act is in section 28; and, quite frankly, it shows in this section that this scheme for medical insurance, or for the health of the people, is a sick plan, because the real power and the real importance of the plan is not spelled out. We get, in subsection 8, such things as the wording: The Lieutenant-Governor in Council will have power to prescribe the maximum subscription rates. Here, after all these hours of debate, we still do not know what those subscription rates are. I say that those rates should be spelled out in this section here.

Even in the course of debate, we stumble virtually on the fact, from an utterance of the hon. Minister, that there are to be certain extra premiums, it would seem, for those who are sick and those who are aged. If the problem of the rates were spelled out, we would know where the people of this province actually stood. But here, after all these hours of debate, the government keeps hidden, will not tell us, what the rates are. As we said before, I think the reason is that they are much higher than we even suspected. We even suggested the maximum will be $180, we now rather suspect it is going to be higher than that. I am quite certain, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister and the government is ashamed to tell us what the rates really are going to be.

Again, under this section, they have the power to prescribe the limitation on benefits under the standard contracts. This, under the amendment, we want struck out, because in essence this section gives the Lieutenant-Governor in Council the power to chop away at the plan. We think now that the people of the province are going to get so much in the way of coverage—not enough coverage; but we have some idea what it is proposed that they get. Yet, under this very section, it could be quite possible that they are first of all going to chop away under what the people are going to receive. We know, from reading other sections of the Act, that there the Ontario medical association can keep boosting their rates so that we can find that, in this particular section, where there is literally power to cut the benefits, and in other sections where the OMA has the power to boost the rates, that this particular Act can insofar as providing even the minimum coverage for the people of the province of Ontario, is what the hon. leader of this party called at the very beginning when this Act was introduced, a monstrous fraud. And that is exactly what it is. The whole tenor of this debate—and this section sums up the debate—is a monstrous fraud, because we learn as time goes on that the people of this province are going to receive less and less from this particular Act.

So I would ask the hon. members of this House and I admit I cannot expect much from the Tory government, they have given so little on this—but I would ask their support in striking out subsection (k) of section 28, and supporting also the other amendment as suggested. What we really need to do is give the council more power, as suggested in the amendment in section (b).

I do not like the set-up of the council as it is, but because the principle has been recited we have to accept it insofar as the debate on section 28 is concerned. But at least if the council was given more power, as suggested, there would be some hope of controlling the premiums, there would be some hope of giving more protection to the aged and to the so-called poor risks, than this Act is giving.

In essence, we do not give the proper protection to the people who need it most. We ignore the important principle that we should spread the risk, that there should be a standard premium, a standard plan, so that no matter how old you are or how sick you are, you pay a certain minimum rate. We ignore this completely in this bill, and whatever protection we could give in giving the people minimum rates, we could do it under this section, which we do not.

So again I say that this is a sick plan and it is going to cost the people who can afford it least the largest amount of money. In trying to protect the so-called poor risk and the older and the aged, I would ask this House to support the amendment as moved by the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: In regard to this power to make regulations, it strikes me, after an exhaustive study of the subject matters in the subheads up to (1), that just about every important principle covered in this Act may be changed by the Minister of Health and his advisers upon recommendation to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. In other words, we, this Legislature, the supreme law-making body in the province, having passed a statute, albeit not with our support, the statute having been passed, is handed over to the faceless and nameless bureaucracy—and I do not use that term of bureaucracy as a term of opprobrium, but as a term of art. And they may, in their own discretion and without our presence, make regulations which in effect may change the intent of the Legislature itself.

Now, the hon. Attorney General is in the House and he has joined in the debate this morning. He will recall that shortly after the last world war, Lord Ewart of Bury, Lord Chancellor of England, wrote a book called The New Despotism in which that estimable law lord charged that democracy had been replaced, had in fact been destroyed by the power to make regulations, and that the legislative power—the hon. member for Forest Hill will have read that book also—of the Legislature had been replaced—

Mr. E. A. Dunlop (Forest Hill): The New Despotism.

Mr. Sopha: The New Despotism, thank you very much. Perhaps I may be forgiven by saying that it is some 13 or 14 years since I read that book, but it is The New Despotism by Lord Ewart of Bury.

He said that the power to make regulations exercised by the bureaucracy had, in effect, replaced the supreme power of the Legislature to legislate. We complain quite strongly about the wide compass of subjects that has been provided in these regulations over which the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may provide the flesh to this statute. Strangely enough, I might say that a statute which is proclaimed by some in this House as a great and major social advance, has not as many sections in it as one would think that it would deserve in implementing what is called a step forward in the realm of social legislation. I should like to address myself to some comments on the individual paragraphs of this section.

In regard to (a) we are told there are some 200 carriers in the province that provide contracts of the nature contemplated by this Act. I have not the faintest suspicion of what the grounds may be whereby the Minister of Health would recommend to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that any one of the 200 might be exempted from the obligation to provide coverage under this Act. I presume that it refers to companies already in the field. One would not think that it would be directed at insurance carriers who are not already operating in this field.

In regard to that large number of 200

companies, I recall in my submission to the select committee dealing with compensation for persons injured on our highways, I said to that committee—and I was not shot for having said it—that there are too many insurance companies operating in Ontario. I would say that 200 companies in the health care field has implicit in it, almost without further need for proof, the concept that that multiplicity must be inefficient. When you duplicate administrative staffs and all the capital overhead that is required to run an insurance company, it strikes me that merely to state that there are 200 serving the needs of 6,750,000 is far too many.

I said at the time to that committee—and I wish to repeat it here—in regard to the number of companies that were offering public liability and property damage insurance in the auto insurance field, that what the industry needs is an E. P. Taylor. He, or a man of that type, would be just the man to weed out some of the inefficient companies that have a very small amount of premium income, and necessarily a small amount of risk, and consolidate them into larger and more efficient companies if the health care—as seems likely—of our people is going to be administered by private interest groups.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I have very great respect for my hon. friend, but I think we are going back to discussing, not only the clauses of the bill, but the principles of the bill. All of these clauses have already been passed, and all we are seeking is the right to make regulations under those clauses. The clauses themselves have been passed.

Mr. Sopha: All right. I have said everything I wanted to say about that anyway, so I will move on.

In respect of the amendment proffered, the deletion of paragraph (h) and the amendment moved by my hon. friend adding to paragraph (m), which we deal with next, we agree with him wholeheartedly that it is in the public interest, and I do not really see why it is necessary to argue this. That idea should commend itself to all corners of the House, that before an increase in the maximum subscription rates ought to be permitted to any company, or to any group of companies, surely they should show the government that their financial condition is such that they deserve an increase?

You will note, in the earlier section of the bill, that a degree of restraint is imposed upon them. I have said, and I will repeat it, that this statute seems to anticipate that they are going to be at the door of the council very frequently, asking for an increase in the maximum subscription rates.

The Globe and Mail, a long-time supporter of this government, besides advocating that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) should take his hon. Minister of Health in hand, also makes an allegation that the premiums for the high-risk cases are going to be from $230 to $250 a year. And, try as we might, neither this party, my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party, the Globe and Mail, nor the Toronto Telegram, which has a critical editorial today in the afternoon edition, can find out from the hon. Minister what the maximum subscription rates are going to be. He has not denied the accuracy of the allegation of the Globe and Mail, that people who cannot afford it are going to be required to cough up $250 a year—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. It is completely wrong for the hon. member to befuddle and fool the people of Ontario by saying that they are going to have to cough up $250. No such figure has been stated, and I have given complete and total reasons why we have not said anything about a maximum premium; we have not got the right to set a maximum premium. That is provided under this law.

Mr. Bryden: You mean the insurance companies are going to determine it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did not say any such thing.

Mr. Bryden: That is what you mean.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You are a very smart fellow, being able to read my mind.

Mr. Sopha: The Globe and Mail, in an editorial in today's issue, has this to say referring to Premier Robarts.

He can be expected to second-guess his Minister and restore the confidence in the government's motives that was reflected after the Medicare legislation was announced.

They are referring directly to this statement:

Yet their costs are to be covered by a premium of $180. For high-risk cases in the unsubsidized group, the premiums may climb to $230 or $250 a year.

So speaks the Globe and Mail, and to this government that is almost like saying, "Thus saith the Lord."

Will the hon. Minister, through our friends in the press gallery, assure the people of Ontario that the Globe and Mail figure, of from $230 to $250 a year, is totally inaccurate, that it will not approach that figure? May we have that assurance?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I assure you, sir, and the hon. members of the House, that the Globe and Mail figures are just as irresponsible as those that have been shouted abroad by the hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I have not mentioned any at all.

There goes the Globe and Mail. Since 1937 it has supported this government and now it is coming back.

That does not detract from the emphasis in this statute; and there are two sections, which refer to an increase in maximum subscription rates, which are tied in with this amendment proffered by myself and, in all fairness, drafted by my hon. friend from Woodbine. We think, and we hope, we will find the same degree of agreement in the press tomorrow as we got in regard to our assertions of yesterday. We say that it is a matter of the carrying out of the responsibility of this government to require these companies, before they come forward and ask the maximum, to show that they are entitled to it, based upon their financial experience in the field of health care.

This statute is based on private carriers. Therefore, an eager and quick eye of watchfulness over private carriers should be a prime consideration of this government. Now I leave that; we hope that we will hear from the hon. Minister on the gist of this amendment which has been put forward. But the longer we argue this thing the more reluctant he seems to be to give us the answers we seek; and I might say that the hon. Minister also demonstrates a high degree of arrogance as we reach the end of the debate.

In regard to paragraph (i). This paragraph refers to the prescription of the manner in which the notice, referred to in subsection 2 of section 19, will be given. Section 19 refers to an adjustment of its subscription rates under subsection 1, which deals with an adjustment not more than once in any 12-month period in respect of standard contracts in accordance with normal business practice, and that the carrier is required to notify his holders of such adjustments. I wonder: What is the necessity—and I ask the hon. Minister to tell us—what is so complex about that, that it is a matter that need be left to the regulation? Surely notification by the insurer of the insured is a fairly simple matter. What is the necessity of making it all the more complicated by giving to the Lieutenant-Governor the power to make regulations surrounding the form of that notice?

Then again, as in other parts of the Act, why is not the figure of three months' notice adopted? We find the figure of three months' notice appearing in respect of other notices. Indeed, when a company is going out of business under section 21, it is stipulated that 60 days' notice be given of the cancellation of its business. But I am really at a loss to understand why the content of the notice, and its form and the length of time that the notice must encompass, is left as a matter to be prescribed by the regulations.

In regard to (j), the hon. Minister told us, with some emphasis—and he got into high dudgeon about this—he puffed himself up and said that the government is not going to tell the medical profession how to practise medicine. I suppose that is all right. In fact, we all know that is a bit of window-dressing, because as soon as the bureaucracy starts to operate in this deal, they will be telling the medical profession a good deal that the medical profession had not thought they would be telling them. But, having said that, where does the government, to be consistent, become an expert on what is a "certified specialist" and what is the meaning of the word "referral"? Surely those are medical terms, and only the medical people are qualified to determine what the term "certified specialist" is going to mean.

Of course, the reply of the hon. Minister, who is now in a phase of inconsistency with his earlier statement, is going to be—if I may anticipate it, he will say, "We will ask the doctors to advise us on the meaning of those terms."

Paragraph (k) we are unalterably opposed to. We do not even agree, in this party, that the limitations which are set out in schedule A ought to be included—annual health examinations, well-baby care, and psychotherapy. We would not refer to those at all in the standard medical services insurance contract, but would treat those as purely services on a physician-patient basis. I do not need to elaborate why that is so, because it becomes apparent to all hon. members that annual health examinations are a matter that is consistent with the care of one's health. I need only protest that I have said, time and time again, that the one thing this country needs is healthy babies.

I am one who believes that we have not fulfilled the destiny of this country, in the words of Laurier, that the 20th century belongs to Canada, because we only have some 20 million people inhabiting the three million square miles of this country, in this, the seventh, decade of this century. Psychotherapy, we have said, is one that is an ordinary—when mental illness strikes at us so deeply as it does, psychotherapy is one that ought to be included in any intelligent contract for medical care.

But most of all we do not wish to give the Lieutenant-Governor in Council any further power to deal with limitations and that is the purpose of this amendment. We do not want the exercise of that power to go to the extent of putting more exceptions in, or circumscribing the already limited area of care that the patient can now get under these contracts from his physician. Remember that I say that, sir, in the context that we in this party have stood from the very beginning for a comprehensive programme of medical care.

So, sir, having said that, we come to the end of the fight and it has been a good fight. This bill has had a very studied attitude demonstrated to it by this House. I do not pretend to take all the credit for the Opposition, other hon. members from other parts of the House have made their comment. However, it is the Opposition that has got the notice in the press for its attitude towards this bill. Let me just say in closing, and I expect this may be near the last word that I will say on the thing, that our attitude is in no way changed.

This is going to pass. The hon. Minister talks in terms of the woolly and ethereal that he would not presume that the Legislature is going to pass it. He knew when he came in here that this bill was going to pass. At the start he demonstrated an absolutely inflexible attitude, that he would not change a comma, he would not change a semi-colon, in the bill. But his position grew more and more untenable, and finally he had to give in to some amendment; and he is in further trouble, bearing in mind the attitude of the popular press toward him. But it is the best we can do if the government, through its majority, intends to adopt for our people this form of health care plan. I merely say on behalf of this party that we shall continue the struggle for a government operated, therefore cheaper, more efficient health care plan; a universal and comprehensive system of health care for the people of Ontario. Thank you, sir.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health something with respect to the statement which the hon. Attorney General made a few minutes ago. The hon. member for Woodbine raised the question as to whether or not there would be an examination of financial statements of the carriers prior to granting of increases and if there would be some regular scrutiny of these statements. The hon. Attorney General indicated that such financial statements must be filed, and so they are in The Department of the Attorney General or the appropriate section of that department.

The question I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health: Are those statements available to the Minister of Health or to his department for this kind of scrutiny?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid I would have to ask the hon. Attorney General that. I do not know. I do not know what is permissible in his department. I do not know if these statements are public property or not. I really cannot say.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, this would almost make a mockery of what the hon. Attorney General has said. If these are not available, then it does not do the job which the hon. Attorney General inferred it was going to do. If the hon. Minister of Health has not these statements available for scrutiny, he cannot relate them to the prices that are going to be charged for the standard contracts.

I think this is a vital question that ought to be established here today. More and more I am getting the impression that this debate is being run on the old principles, Mr. Chairman, of the game we used to play when we were smaller, blind man's bluff. What the hon. Minister is asking the Opposition to do is to debate blindfold; to examine this bill and to pass it and to make it law with blindfolds over our eyes.

We do not know even this fundamental thing. We do not know what the rates are going to be. We do not know what this plan is going to cost the people of Ontario. We do not know what many of the conditions are going to be; they are going to be laid down in regulations. We do not even know at the present time what a standard contract really is going to cost the people; evidently even there the regulations provide for certain limitations and all the rest of it.

Mr. Chairman, this is not democracy. We should be able to examine the cost of this to the province, the cost of this plan to the people.

In addition to asking us to examine it and vote blindfold, evidently the plan is going to run blind; because unless this scrutiny is available there is no standard by which the government itself can judge whether or not the rates are adequate, whether they are proper, whether the insurance companies are in fact gouging the public; or whether they are making only a legitimate profit out of the rates that are being charged.

So I do not think this House should be asked, in the first place to vote blindfolded; and in the second place to put our stamp of approval on a plan which is going to run blind after it is established.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, because I know the hero worship that the hon. Minister of Health had for Mr. Bennett, although it is not the same Mr. Bennett I am sure he will be interested in knowing the approach that was taken by the Premier of British Columbia. May I say, sir, that his plan is going to come in on September 1, and yet he introduced in a very democratic way for the consideration of the people of British Columbia and for the Legislature, a very clear definite statement about the premiums.

Mr. MacDonald: If you think that "wacky" Bennett is democratic, then watch out, for he can be just about as undemocratic as possible, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thompson: I would agree very much with that. There have been situations when we have felt that we have been blessed in this House with perhaps a more democratic approach on the part of the government, but here is the situation where B.C. has let the sun shine on and the light into what they are going to propose. They have suggested that the premiums under the scheme which they are proposing will range from $30 a year for a single person with no taxable income, to a maximum of $150 for families with taxable incomes of more than $1,000.

I know that the hon. Minister will be interested in hearing the coverage which they are proposing in B.C. Coverage under the plan includes medical, surgical, osteopathic, X-ray, anaesthetic—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is this not out of order?

Mr. Thompson: Not at all, I am talking under (k), laboratory, therapeutic, maternity, psychiatric services, special nursing psychotherapeutic, orthopaedic—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Ask Dr. Sopha, he can pronounce those words.

Mr. Thompson: I agree, because they are of Latin derivation and I have not taken Latin for a while. Naturopaths and chiropractic services—let me emphasize that—are included up to limits of between $25 and $100 a year.

Now, sir, the hon. Minister has stood up when the Globe and Mail editorial was mentioned indicating it could amount to a certain amount and he said this was irresponsible. Could I ask the hon. Minister: Am I being irresponsible when I say that the premiums at the maximum might be $300, is that an irresponsible statement?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course it is, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thompson: Fine!

Let me say therefore I am assuming when the hon. Minister says it is irresponsible that it would not be as high as that. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this, as I say, has absolutely nothing to do with the clause under discussion.

Mr. Thompson: It most certainly has.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have stated to you, sir, and through you to the House, that I have not the authority under this Act, until it is passed, to set a maximum premium. The maximum premium will be decided on the recommendation of the medical services insurance council and until this Act becomes law, we cannot even set up that council. But I can assure you that $300 is a ridiculous maximum premium.

Mr. Thompson: Fine! At least we have an assurance that the people will not be gouged to the extent of $300.

Now, let us have another try in the bingo game. What about $200?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am—

Mr. Thompson: I assure the hon. Minister that this is the very point that people are most interested in.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is not a question-and-answer period. It is based completely on conjecture.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it is based on conjecture, but it is the responsibility of the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, would you please rule that I have already stated to you, sir, the facts as they apply to this bill. I have stated the premium structure on which will be based the government-operated proposal. I might point out to the hon. member that, in Ontario under our plan, those in need of assistance will do better than Mr. Bennett's plan, because one in receipt of a taxable income of up to $1,060 will only be called upon to pay $150.

Mr. Bryden: We are not talking about this.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say, sir, if the hon. Minister will not tell us what the premiums are, or suggest it is less than $200 or will be $200 or $250, perhaps I am going to be included among the people who need assistance to pay your premium if we have no idea what the maximum is going to be. I would suggest to you—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): This whole thing is completely out of order.

Mr. Thompson: The whole crux of the thing is a pig in a poke. We have no idea what we are passing on. The thing that concerns the people of Ontario is their pocketbook. To make this available to them—with all respect that is the term, this would be available to the people of Ontario, that is the purpose of the Act. Yet we do not know if it will be available because the hon. Minister refuses to tell us what the premium will be.

Mr. Chairman: I am not ruling you out of order because under section 8 you are perfectly in order.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on a number of occasions the term "financial irresponsibility" has been applied to the hon. Minister and the government in this Act. Now that we get some clarification, and I emphasize only "some" clarification as to the hon. Minister's limited capacity under this bill—even worse, his limited interest in finding out what the financial position might be with regard to the insurance companies—I would say that the financial irresponsibility of this government becomes even more underlined. We have a bill in which the hon. Minister has said emphatically that he is going to have no exercise or control over the schedule of fees.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member had waited for me to answer his previous questions, I have the information.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just let me go ahead and then I will be glad to listen. Certainly pulling teeth would be very easy in comparison to getting some information from this hon. Minister. On the one hand, he has no control at all over fees that are going to be charged. Indeed, as of two years after the bill has come into effect, the OMA is going to have carte blanche to raise their fees as they please, when they please, to any level they please.

Mr. Reilly: No, they are not.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, they will. And the hon. Minister then says that since he has certain maximums and the pot in effect will become empty, that through the two members of the medical profession on the OMA he will put adequate pressure on them. Like fun he will put pressure on them. He should have control in a real sense.

But even worse, the hon. Minister has not control over the charges that are going to be made, there is going to be no opportunity to bargain.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to remind the speaker that I have permitted a great deal of latitude.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, we will come right back. I was just trying to bring the two points together which I think document the financial irresponsibility of the government. We now have a new subsection (m) put in here, in this amendment, which is going to give somebody, and presumably this hon. Minister, because he does not know whether he can get it from the director of insurance—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I do.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, he does know now?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is just what I was going to tell you if given a chance.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if he can get it from the director of insurance, I hope he does more with it in terms of controlling it than the director of insurance has, because, quite frankly, the important thing is that you had access to the information. The director of insurance has had access to the information for years, but he does nothing about it, he just rubber stamps any increase in fees. And I presume if this government is going to continue to act that way, once again it is just going to rubber stamp, whether it is getting the information from the superintendent of insurance, or whether it is coming directly to the hon. Minister himself.

But we certainly should have it, with power to act. Otherwise you have no control at the carrier level, you have no control at the schedule of fee level fixed by the OMA—so you have no control at all.

Mr. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): May I say one thing that I do not think should be let slip by in regard to the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition? He read a press clipping which purported to show that the Premier of British Columbia announced the fees to the British Columbia Legislature, which I believe, in effect, was made this week, whereas the British Columbia medical health insurance bill was passed through their Legislature a good six weeks ago. At that time there was no mention in that Legislature what the fee schedule would be. And the same questions and answers were given as were given by our hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I now have the information that the superintendent of insurance assures us that the records referred to as being required by him of the insurance carriers will be available to us, so that we will know their financial status, we will know their rates, we will know their profit levels, we will know all about them in a financial way.

Now, very briefly, all through this discussion and in the amendment, is inherent the belief of the Opposition, which actually has become, over the past several days, a pathological obsession, that everything they can see in this legislation is evil and sinister. Mr. Chairman, the record of this government, the record of all governments of this province, all down through our history, shows differently than that. There are some times when certain governments have not acted solely in the interest of the public or as some of you may have thought they should. But, by and large, government in this province has been good. These regulations are not to give us the power to downgrade or to cut down the benefits. Have my hon. friends realized that we need those regulations just as much to expand the benefits, to give the people more if we possibly can? This is the tendency of government.

Mr. Bryden: Regulations under clause (a) could not possibly be made in order to expand benefits.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, will you kindly tell that empty barrel to keep quiet for a few moments?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the hon. Minister withdraw that statement.

An hon. member: How do you know he is referring to you?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Well, what is your ruling, sir?

Mr. Chairman: How do we know he was referring to you?

Mr. Bryden: Sir, it is quite obvious. Personally I do not care about it, knowing the source from which it has come, but in the interest of the dignity of the House the hon. Minister should withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am assured that the hon. member is not an empty barrel, so I withdraw that.

Mr. Bryden: No, sir, that is a conditional withdrawal. He has no respect for the House rules. He should make the withdrawal unconditionally, and I ask that you so rule.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister withdrew the remarks.

Mr. Bryden: He prefaced his withdrawal by repeating the accusation. I suggest he is required under the rules to withdraw unconditionally with no other comments.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the statement that the hon. member is an empty barrel.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat again that it is very obvious that those in opposition to this bill can only see as evil and sinister the request of the government. This is not unusual legislation. I can go through many, many of our statutes and find authority and power vested in the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to provide regulations, and I am in agreement with, and have some sympathy for, my hon. friend from Sudbury, that Lord Ewart's book has a good deal of validity. Many of us do not care for government by regulation, but it does seem to be a trend of our times, and I think it is involved in, and bound up in, the complexity of government with our increasingly expanding society and our changing society.

But again, I repeat, that these regulations are just as essential to us who will administer the Act in the interests of the people. For instance, the amendment to delete subsection (b) of this section. Under section 5 (d), we have already been given the power to put before the council any other matters relating to this Act. This regulation can be a safeguard.

Any other matters are very wide sweeping things and we can spell these matters out in regulation. This is what we would hope to do. Then, prescribing limitations in (k), we have set down and put before the House that there are certain limitations, and now we want to prescribe them to see at least that the limitations we have in mind will be observed and again, if possible, that they may be deleted, as time and experience might dictate—as I have said time and time again in this bill.

I suggest to you, sir, that the proposed new subparagraph (m) is no longer necessary because it is already embodied both in The Insurance Act and The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act. The filing of this information, spoken of by my hon. friends opposite, is already made mandatory by law; and the information is available and will be made available to us through The Department of Insurance.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I notice that it is now nine minutes past one, and I understand that we were sitting on Fridays under a motion by the hon. Prime Minister that we sit from 10.30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: The motion is that we sit at 10.30; it does not say anything about one o'clock.

Mr. Gisborn: On that basis, I stand corrected; but I am sure that the reason for this morning session on Friday was originated to provide for hon. members to get away on Friday. That being the rule, others have made arrangements for home business in the afternoon and I suggest that the chair should recognize that.

Mr. Chairman: I was thinking: We are almost through this section. When we come back on Monday we may have forgotten what has been said, and the whole thing would have to be gone over again. I think we should finish off this section.

Mr. Sopha: It has been a long week.

Mr. Chairman: All we have to do is put it to a vote right away.

Interjections from hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Sopha's amendment—

Mr. Sopha: No, no, no! It is not going to be carried yet.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, speaking on the amendment, and the additional clause that was suggested, clause (m)—respecting the provision of prescribing the form and content of the financial statements and other documents which would be made available by the corporation for each licensed carrier to the medical council when recommendations were made by the corporation as to the benefits under the contracts and as to the maximum subscription rates—the hon. Minister missed, again, the whole of the point. It is not some subtle legal point that requires a decision by the hon. Attorney General or by the superintendent of insurance at all, sir. The question is not answered, and it is not provided anywhere, as to whether or not the council—and the council is the mechanism by which the public will have some say, small as it may be—says how this scheme will operate and how it will function. It is not simply for the hon. Minister to have available to him the statements of the insurance carriers—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member did not recognize my meaning. I stated, I believe, that the financial statements and accounts will be available to the council. I have been assured of this.

Mr. Renwick: Then, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest again, as we have suggested on other occasions: Let us say so in the statute so that there will be no question whatsoever that the body, on which there is going to be public representation, will have the power and the authority and the ability to make some reasonably intelligent assessment of whether or not there should be changes in the benefits or changes in the subscription rates. The only way that this can be done is if there is a power in the bill which will, during the course of the experience of the medical council in determining these questions, permit them to establish some method of uniform reporting so that adequate comparisons can be made of the figures which are supplied to the council.

Anyone who has any knowledge of financial statements knows, very well, that if you have one phase of a business—and for the licence carriers this is going to be one phase of their business—unless there are special rules and special requirements, there is no way in which you can separate out the financial status of that particular phase of their business in order that it may be compared with similar business being carried on by the other types of carriers.

By providing financial statements, and making this provision for the provision of financial information and other statements that the council may require, the council, over a period of time, would be able to build up publicly, and make available to the public, the kind of comparative information which could determine whether or not the profit features inherent in the scheme, so far as certain of the licensed carriers are concerned, are causing an undue maximum price to be charged for the medical care to be provided under this Act.

It seems eminently sensible that the corporation, when it provides recommendations, should, at the same time, provide the kind of supporting information with which a representative body—and the only representative body in the whole of this mechanism—can make an informed, intelligent, public decision.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The power is already in the Act in section 4, subsection 14.

The corporation shall furnish the Medical Carriers Incorporated—the representatives of all the insurance carriers:

—shall furnish copies of the minutes of the meetings of its members, of its board of directors, to the council and, in addition, such reports and information as the council may require from time to time.

Mr. Bryden: Which council is referred to there?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The medical services insurance council, the council to which my hon. friend from Riverdale referred.

Mr. Bryden: Where is that?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On page 6, section 4, subsection 14.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. Sopha's amendment—

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask your clarification? If this section is voted on, we have a number of questions under schedule A, and we would like to feel that—

Mr. Chairman: I can tell the leader of the Opposition that the schedule must be called separately before the bill can be reported.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I have one final comment in response to the hon. Minister's little speech about the trend of the times.

This government has been in power for 22 years and it has never taken any steps yet to civilize the administrative process; by that I mean to do something about the implementation of an administrative procedure code. In regard to regulations—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Where have you been? Where have you been?

When we pass a statute of this government, the statute normally goes to the committee of the House where members of the public have an opportunity to come and make representations about the statute. Not so with the regulations. The regulations are passed in secrecy and there is no opportunity for interested people to come forward and have their views made known, to those responsible, of what they feel should be in the regulations. They are a fait accompli, and you cannot get a regulation altered because it is passed, and the seal of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor is put on it, and that is it.

I went, as a private member of this Legislature—and I know of no other who went as a private member—before the McRuer commission, and I advocated to him that we should require publication of the regulations first, before they are enacted, in the Ontario Gazette—yes and have a committee to deal with them—to allow people to come forward and have their views made known of how they feel the regulations should be drawn.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Most improper.

Mr. Chairman: Order! You have made your point.

Mr. Sopha: What is most improper? To do what?

Mr. A. F. Lawrence: It is most improper for a member to go before a Royal commission. You should make your speeches in this House.

Mr. Sopha: For goodness sake, it does not deserve an answer.

An hon. member: Are you going to give one?

Mr. Sopha: I will not give one. I always thought my alumnus from St. George had some sense.

The hon. Minister plans, he says—and he says we should recognize all the problems inherent in government by regulation, but it appears to be the trend of the times—though it is bad, to continue the inequities of the evils that exist. Well, that is a fair commentary on the facts.

Mr. Chairman: Order! You are out of order.

Mr. Sopha: Are we out of order, you and I? I have made my point.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the Globe and Mail stated editorially and I quote:

The response of one government supporter to one of the Opposition protests indicated the critics were cutting close to the bone.

I would suggest that the statement made by the hon. Minister a few minutes ago indicated the same thing about him.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. Sopha's amendment, please say "aye."

Those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

All in favour of Mr. Sopha's amendment, please rise.

All opposed to Mr. Sopha's amendment, please rise.

Clerk of the House. Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 21, the "nays," 42.

Mr. Chairman: The amendment is lost and the section is included in the bill.

Section 28 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 29 be—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I thought there was an understanding—

Mr. Chairman: All right! We just wondered if you wanted to go on and finish those or not, because I will tell you we could not go on.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is nothing to sections 29 or 30, as I understand it.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us wait and see.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of the whole House rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Monday there will be a night session, as previously announced, and we will proceed with this bill. There will be estimates also. The hon. members should be prepared for estimates of The Department of Health and The Department of Mines.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.25 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, June 14, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Monday, June 14, 1965

Presenting report, Mr. Yaremko	4073
Statement re new programme dealing with water resources, Mr. Simonett	4073
Medical services insurance, bill respecting, in committee, concluded	4077
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	4106
Recess, 6 o'clock	4109

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1965

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests, in the Speaker's gallery, young farmers' club delegates from Northern Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England and a junior farmer delegate from New South Wales, Australia.

We also welcome students from the following schools: In the east gallery, Robinson school junior Hy-Y, Toledo, Ohio; in the west gallery, St. Peter's separate school, Peterborough, Ontario.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. A. Crossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I am pleased to announce the appointment of Miss Aileen Nicholson as administrator of adult female institutions in The Department of Reform Institutions.

This appointment, which became effective on June 11, 1965, is a result of the department's previously reported plans to effect certain further administrative reorganization.

Miss Nicholson is a young woman of exceptional capabilities and qualifications. She is an associate of the association of psychiatric social workers (AAPSW), a designation originating in the United Kingdom and universally respected by members of her profession. Her academic achievements include a diploma in social science from Trinity college, Dublin, and a certificate in mental health from the London school of economics.

Since 1957, when Miss Nicholson came to this country from England, she has been engaged at both the Toronto psychiatric hospital and then at the hospital for sick children as a psychiatric social worker and has provided psychotherapeutic services to parents and children.

She has had several years of experience with the forensic clinic of Toronto psychiatric hospital, where her services were directed to persons referred to her by the courts and to whom she provided both group and individual psychotherapy. Miss Nicholson is also a field work instructor to second-year students at the University of Toronto's school of social work.

This appointment carries with it the responsibility for planning and administering the department's programme in the adult female field, and in co-operation with the department's other administrators the overall co-ordination of policy, procedures and programmes within the department. This will be especially valuable in correlating treatment methods and facilities relating to the particular needs of the juvenile and the adult female offender.

We are most pleased to have secured the services of so highly qualified a person as Miss Nicholson and I am confident that her professional skill and administrative abilities will reflect in substantial benefits not only to female offenders in this province, but to the field of penology in general.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the annual report for 1963 of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to announce a new programme dealing with the management of Ontario water resources which I feel will be of widespread interest throughout the province.

The new programme deals specifically with the maintenance of water control dams. At the present time the provincial government pays 75 per cent of the capital cost of construction of small water supply reservoirs, while in the case of larger reservoirs the federal government shares this portion of the cost equally with the province.

Up to the present time the local authority has been required to assume the full cost of maintenance of these dams. The government recognizes the very important work in water resource development being carried on by the conservation authorities and other local bodies. It is also recognized that proper maintenance and staffing are required to ensure reliable operation of water control dams at all times.

Therefore, effective immediately, the government will make a grant of 75 per cent of the annual cost of operating and of major repair items, together with the contribution of $1,000 per dam towards operators' salaries. There are 53 dams in the province which will be eligible for grants, including the three dams constructed on the Grand River and its tributaries by the Grand River commission.

It is estimated that this programme will cost the province approximately $85,000 in the remaining portion of 1965, and that the annual expenditure will increase to $200,000 over the next ten years as new reservoirs and flood control works are constructed.

As a further aid to local authorities, department engineers will carry out annual inspections of water control constructions.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have two questions I wish to address to the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) of which notice has been given.

The first one is this: Would the hon. Attorney General concur with the statement made by Chief Constable Robert McCarron of Guelph, who appealed on Thursday last for enlightened information on emergency measures co-ordination while speaking to members of the provincial emergency measures branch, at a meeting of the Ontario association of chiefs of police?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, if the chief says, as he has been reported as saying, that he does not know what to do about emergency measures—

Mr. Singer: He had some stronger words than that.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am hardly in a position to disagree with him, and tell him what he does know, but I can say this, Mr. Speaker, to the House: the city of Guelph and the county of Wellington emergency measures committee issued an approved planning guide to the city of Guelph police department over two years ago, describing the areas of planning required in this city, and the county and the city of Guelph has developed traffic plans for emergency, complete with dispersal route maps for control. It appears, from my study of the situation, that a good deal of work has been done in that particular locality. However, I am prepared to have an official of my department visit Chief McCarron and ascertain in which areas we can help him.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of the bill which is on the order paper, The Emergency Measures Act, was designed for a further activity of The Department of the Attorney General in the whole emergency measures situation. There are some areas which, I must frankly admit, have been hazy and quite unclear; and the purpose of the bill, as the hon. members who have read it will know, is to disseminate information, to co-ordinate services with municipalities and with government departments, and to make The Emergency Measures Act really effective. I think it is fair to say there have been some areas where municipal chiefs have had some difficulty knowing from whom they took direction. But the bill, I believe, will go a long step toward clearing that situation.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. Attorney General's faith is well placed, because when the chief can say neither he nor a single man on his force knows what to do, something has to be done.

Mr. Speaker, my second question is this: Would the hon. Minister inform the House if lack of police personnel is seriously impairing the quality of law enforcement in northern Ontario communities and, if so, what is being done about it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I think this question stems, Mr. Speaker, from a statement made perhaps by the adviser to the police commission, former Chief Robertson. The very reason he made the statement is because he was directed by the police commission to make a study of the northern Ontario area with a view to seeing what conditions existed there, and what might be done to improve them.

I think it is fair to admit, and I think it is generally known, that in some of the smaller municipalities in northern Ontario, being so far away, and being not perhaps so happily situated with respect to assessment and the amount of taxes that can be collected, the police forces, along with other services, have suffered to some extent. They find it difficult, and some municipalities are not inclined, perhaps, to spend as much money as we would like to see on police services. It is very difficult for police officers to get away for the training schools; and the hon. member for Downsview, in the course of my estimates, suggested that, before we take any new ones on, we should train them completely at the police college.

These things are not just quite possible yet. We asked former Chief Robertson to make this survey, and I think he is quite right in saying that there is area for improvement. We are seeking to assist; through the Ontario provincial police force, we hope to assist these municipalities in bettering their police services by various means; but the whole purpose of the survey was to see what the conditions were and what might be done. It is not yet complete, but it is being studied.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, there was another thing emanating out of that conference of police chiefs relating to the remarks of Magistrate Klein. I wonder if the hon. Attorney General would care to comment on that? The closeness of police chiefs and magistrates?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not see the article, I am afraid. If I did, I am sure I did not see the one to which you refer. I saw some remarks of the chief magistrate. If you would care to submit a question—

Mr. Singer: I will have one tomorrow.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner).

Does the hon. Minister intend to amend further section 28, of Bill 146, in addition to those amendments reported by the standing committee on labour, legal and municipal bills?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is "No."

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to direct two related questions to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree).

First, will any charges be laid as a result of a coroner's jury's finding regarding the death of a workman of the C. A. Pitts Construction Company?

Second, what action is to be taken in regard to the coroner's jury's recommendation for stricter enforcement of The Construction Safety Act?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the question relates to an accident involving a Mr. Frank Wolfinger and his subsequent death.

The responsibility, Mr. Speaker, for laying charges in connection with this matter, rests with the city of Toronto. At the time of the accident, after investigation of the circumstances, the construction safety inspectors of the city of Toronto did not think that grounds for the laying of charges existed. After reviewing the evidence at the inquest, held on May 19 and June 10 of this year, they have reaffirmed this view.

In addition, I would point out that the accident occurred nearly two years ago, on June 19, 1963; under The Summary Convictions Act it would not be possible now to lay charges under The Construction Safety Act, even if they had been deemed necessary.

With respect to stricter enforcement of The Construction Safety Act, the record of the past two years shows a steady improvement in the standard of inspection and enforcement, not only in Toronto but throughout the province. Naturally, the officers of the construction safety branch of the department will continue their efforts to improve still further this standard of inspection and enforcement.

The recently passed amendments to The Construction Safety Act, and the doubling of our inspectional capacity, will, we hope, contribute to this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I might add that I am aware of the circumstances involving the matter which is the subject of this question and I would simply say this: It is a terrible situation, and a tragic situation, which exists and has existed, for the past two years; and I would say that I think it is the most tragic accident ever to come to by attention.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development had undertaken to answer two questions today.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, out of courtesy for the gentleman who asked me—who, I believe is asking for another hon. member who is absent—I was going to wait until his return, but if the hon. member would like me to answer the questions, I would be very happy to do so.

Mr. Thompson: He would appreciate it; he is absent on constituency matters.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The questions were asked by the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Sargent) for the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Taylor), and as they are both absent, I shall answer them for the hon. leader of the Opposition. The questions are these:

Why did the Savoy family with eleven children have to be placed in a dilapidated house pending demolition? How many low rental houses has the Ontario housing corporation now made available?

Before replying to the hon. member's questions, I would like to comment on the role of the Ontario housing corporation insofar as the provision of emergency housing accommodation is concerned.

As hon. members know, the Ontario government, through the Ontario housing corporation, has accepted responsibility for providing rental accommodation for low income families on a province-wide basis. To provide an emergency housing service, the corporation would have to maintain vacant units for the express purpose of providing instant accommodation for families who lose their homes unexpectedly through unforeseen circumstances. This service is presently provided by municipalities through officials who can be contacted at any hour of the day or night, and who maintain a list of sources of emergency accommodation, either dwellings or residential hotels.

When an emergency occurs in Metropolitan Toronto, for example, these officials contact the central housing registry of Metropolitan Toronto which knows whether Ontario housing corporation or the city of Toronto housing authority have suitable accommodation available. Failing this, they contact private rental agencies and landlords who have listed available accommodation.

It would not be practicable for the Ontario housing corporation to provide alternative emergency housing facilities which would simply be a duplication of the services already provided by the municipality.

In the case of the Savoy family, I am advised that the city of Toronto emergency housing officer received a telephone call from Mr. Savoy during the evening of June 10, to the effect that he had received notice to vacate and would be requiring alternative accommodation. The following day Mr. Savoy informed the housing officer that he had moved his furniture onto an adjacent parking lot and required accommodation immediately. He stated that the family had been moved out because the house had been sold.

In view of the urgent need to provide the family with accommodation, the emergency housing officer arranged for the city of Toronto housing authority to allocate them a large house in the St. James Town area which had not been rented because it is scheduled for demolition at the end of this year. I am advised that the house in question is structurally sound and has not been condemned by the city of Toronto building department, but was boarded up by the owner to discourage vandalism and unauthorized use.

The press account of the Savoy family's housing problem was the first indication the Ontario housing corporation had of this matter. The family, which came to Toronto from New Brunswick in September, 1964, had not made application for rental accommodation with either the Metropolitan Toronto central housing registry or directly to the Ontario housing corporation.

Ontario housing corporation officials have since been in touch with the owner and the agent of the property vacated by the Savoy family, and were advised that the family was not, in fact, evicted by court order, but had been given notice to vacate, which they did.

The second question dealt with the number of rental houses Ontario housing corporation has made available.

Since the corporation came into being in August of last year it has completed or purchased a total of 356 dwelling units.

In Metropolitan Toronto, the corporation is currently in the process of purchasing 1,200 existing dwellings which were offered in response to its advertisement of February 27, 1965. The first of these dwellings will become available later this month, with the remaining purchases scheduled for completion over the ensuing two months.

In addition to existing units, the corporation received builders' proposals for approximately 1,700 new dwellings to be constructed by proponents on their own land. Of these, approximately 900 were acceptable in terms of price, standards and size. Construction of these is scheduled to commence this year.

Apart from builders' proposals for existing housing and new construction, the Ontario housing corporation has an extensive direct construction programme for the Metropolitan Toronto area. Projects at Thistletown, O'Connor Drive, Alexandra Park and Stableford Farm will all be under construction this year, which will provide a further 1,400 dwellings in 1966.

The corporation's programme, which was planned in conjunction with officials of Metropolitan Toronto and was embodied in the metropolitan corporation's request of February 9, 1965, is going according to schedule. By the end of this year it is expected that a total of 3,000 units will have been purchased, or will be under construction.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have clarification from the hon. Minister of my question. At this point, the Ontario housing corporation does not have one low rental house available. Will it have one available in the future, did the hon. Minister say?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not say that. I said that the family had not made application to us, or to the registry agents in Toronto. If they had made application to us, or to the agencies we have here, we could have found them accommodation.

Mr. Thompson: The second part of the question was:

How many low rental houses has the Ontario housing corporation now made available?

If I am correct, with reference to the hon. Minister's statement, there are none.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. We have 1,200 that we are purchasing now, and we have 1,700 under construction.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, and in the absence of my friend, the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Racine), I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) the following question: Would the hon. Minister inform the House if his department's regulations requiring a registered nurse, or a nursing assistant, to be on duty at all times in nursing homes, is being enforced in the province?

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I would say "yes," to put it briefly, except I should like to explain that at this time the municipalities which were under the old bylaws are now in the process of preparing the new bylaws. They must follow the regulations if they want to be eligible for the new subsidies. However, as long as they are conforming gradually to the new bylaws, we maintain them under the old regulations.

Mr. Oliver: I would ask the hon. Minister who enforces this, if there are no bylaws? Does the provincial government do this?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: If there are no bylaws, and the regulations are not followed, naturally there is no subsidy.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister. How does he say that there are nurses and nursing aides on duty at all times in the nursing homes across the province, when most of the hon. members of this House received a letter from the medical officer of health of Kenty county, indicating that within his county that was, in fact, not true around the clock. And a letter from the associated nursing homes indicating that this was not true in the majority of nursing homes across the province.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that the member will have to put his question in the form of writing tomorrow, and then the hon. Minister can answer it.

Mr. S. Lewis: I shall do so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The forty-seventh order. The committee of the whole House. On Bill No. 136; Mr. N. Whitney in the chair.

MEDICAL SERVICES INSURANCE

(continued)

Section 29 agreed to.

On section 30:

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I move that section 30 of Bill 136 be amended by deleting the words "Services Insurance" and substituting therefor the words "Carriers Benefit," so that section 30 shall read:

This Act may be cited as the Medical Carriers Benefit Act, 1965.

Mr. Chairman, my reason for moving the amendment is that the title of the bill should, in our opinion, bear some relation to the other provisions in the bill.

Mr. Chairman: I wish to advise the member that this amendment will not be permitted, as being frivolous. It certainly does not carry out the intent of the bill. I do not think there is any justification for the name. The bill had its original name and therefore I declare the amendment to be frivolous and out of order.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, would you please give us your authority for this ruling? We suggest the amendment is not frivolous, but apart altogether from that matter of opinion, what is the basis for ruling it out? The only rule governing amendments is, as I understand it, that they may add words to or delete words from or substitute. This amendment substituted certain words and I submit to you, sir, it is quite in order. I would like to know what your authority is for your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest to you, sir, that my ruling is not debatable. If you looked in Lewis under definitions of frivolous amendments, this would qualify under that definition.

Mr. Bryden: I would like a rule of citation.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, under no circumstances will I accept the ruling that my amendment was frivolous, it was not frivolous in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Chairman: You can demand a vote on it, it is your privilege.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I speak to the point of order? Surely, Mr. Chairman, the House may call a bill by any name that it wishes, it may be that my hon. friend's amendment will so commend itself to the House, in all honesty, that it will be adopted unanimously.

Mr. Chairman: I have already ruled that the member knows his course of appeal; that is my ruling.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would still ask that you give your citation.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Where is the citation?

Mr. Bryden: Surely if you are going to make a ruling on the basis of the rules, you should be prepared to cite the rules.

Mr. Chairman: It is stated clearly in Lewis that I am not required to do so at this time. If there is a wish to appeal the ruling—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, are you not required to cite a rule at this time when you are basing your ruling—

Mr. Chairman: It is not debatable, the ruling is not debatable.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not debating it, I am just asking why are you not required to cite the rule upon which you based your ruling?

Mr. Chairman: I am not setting the rule, it is contained in Lewis. If you wish to look it up, fine. If it is required at a later date, it can be provided.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, we cannot find the ruling within Lewis. The House deserves to know the ruling to which you refer before we are denied the right to—

Mr. Chairman: I will ask the Clerk to find it.

Mr. S. Lewis: All right, we will wait for the Clerk.

Mr. Bryden: We do not believe it is there.

Mr. S. Lewis: We are prepared to wait for the Clerk to give us the ruling.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, is your ruling being appealed?

Mr. Chairman: I am not sure, but I believe the member indicated that he was appealing my ruling. If so, we will have the vote on the appeal.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, it would help the hon. member to decide whether or not to appeal if you could give the citation on which you are apparently relying.

Mr. Chairman: Question! All in favour of my ruling in this regard—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I believe that since I moved this amendment I am entitled to know under what rule of this House you have made your ruling that it is frivolous, so that I can—

Mr. Chairman: It will be shown to you in due course. I have made my ruling and I would point out that my ruling is not debatable.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that your ruling is frivolous if you have no rule upon which to base it. If it is in the book, may we have it indicated where in the book?

Mr. Chairman: As soon as there is time to look it up it can be located. In the meantime—

Mr. S. Lewis: Are you chairing this House or is the Clerk chairing this House?

Mr. Chairman: I have made the ruling.

Clerk of the House: And I personally resent that remark.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I hear the words of the Clerk coming over the public address and then, quite frankly, echoed by the Chairman.

I should like, as a member of this House, to know the rule on which the ruling was made. That is not a challenge of your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that I have read the regulations of the House, I would suggest furthermore that was some two years ago, I would suggest that at the minute I am not prepared to give the exact clause of the ruling but I am satisfied that the ruling is there. I am satisfied that if this House wants to debate my ruling, they can bring the motion to question my ruling. That is the privilege that you have. If you wish to question my ruling proceed to do so and the vote will be taken. That is my ruling.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am not questioning your ruling. I am asking the basis on which that ruling has been made before this section is put to the House. I would ask then that this amendment and this section stand over until the ruling is given to us.

Mr. Chairman: If you wish to put your motion to the House in questioning my ruling, you are at liberty to do so.

All those in favour of the Chairman's decision will please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

Those in favour of the Chairman's ruling will please rise.

Those opposed to the Chairman's ruling will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 34, the "nays" 17.

Section 30 agreed to.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I assume that in due course I will be furnished with the rule under which that decision of the Chair was made.

Mr. Chairman: You will indeed.

Mr. Renwick: Thank you.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Chairman, I assume that has been carried?

Speaking on a point of privilege which affects all hon. members of this House, I think the remark of the hon. member for Scarborough West should not go by unnoticed. Indeed, I would ask him to withdraw the remark which he addressed to the person of the Clerk of this legislative assembly.

It is unfortunate that in dealing with the rules of this House in the last two or three years those who propose to be the greatest exponents of the maintenance of those rules, that is the hon. members of the Opposition, from time to time are in flagrant abuse of the rules.

The Clerk of the Legislature is unable to speak for himself. I have the responsibility of speaking on his behalf in respect of the estimates and perhaps can make this point. Lewis, the bible of the Legislature, states on page 98:

The Clerk of the House is appointed by Royal warrant of the Crown and is the principal servant—and I underline this, Mr. Chairman:

—of the legislative assembly. He is directly responsible to the Speaker and acts as the Speaker's deputy in carrying out the routine work of the Legislature. He is usually appointed—in this case, the word "usually" is superfluous because of his knowledge of the rules of the House and his acquaintance with parliamentary procedures generally. Then I conclude, and these are the important words:

The Clerk acts as an adviser to the Speaker in connection with the interpretation of the rules, decisions on points of order and similar matters and his advice is always at the service of the members on questions of procedure.

I suggest to the hon. member for Scarborough West that he rise and retract that remark which I think showed a sign of disrespect to the clerk of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, the hon. Provincial Secretary has always shown himself to have a capacity of not knowing when to let well enough alone. If he wants to have this issue out, we are glad to have this issue out, Mr. Chairman.

Last week, every man in the Opposition here, when the Opposition chose to challenge a vote, heard an outburst of obvious displeasure from the Clerk with regard to our action.

I submit to you that the Clerk is a servant of this Legislature and he is not a person who should be expressing his feelings so that they are audible throughout the whole Opposition. That is what happened last week. We have seen many instances of it.

The hon. Provincial Secretary saw fit to raise this. If he wants to have the issue disputed in all its full ramifications let him proceed, but there is a difference between the Clerk being an expert on the rules of the House and interjecting himself into the direction of the House and we in the Opposition have had a growing feeling that the latter is the case.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, without wishing to prolong it, because in honest fact my respect for the Clerk of this Legislature in his capacity is not exceeded by that of the hon. Provincial Secretary, but I asked, and it was by way of question and not an assertion—and Hansard will bear me out—whether the Chair is chairing this House or whether the Clerk is chairing this House. What I heard, Mr. Chairman, was a precise coincidence of words, a synonymy of phrase, each time, again and again, for six or seven separate phrases. While I accept the fact that it is the Clerk's right to advise, I question the propriety of precise direction and that is all that I question; if the Chair wishes to answer me, so be it, but I do not withdraw the question.

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that quite frequently, in all honesty, it is quite easy to assume the same words. I believe that the other day I called a member for the same expression several times, so that it only goes to show that anyone can be guilty of the same offence. Now, if you will accept the remarks—

Mr. Bryden: Why do you not just try—

Mr. Chairman: Section 30 having been carried, we will now ask: Shall schedule "A" stand as part of the bill?

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, on schedule "A", I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) this first question. I notice where it says, in the first paragraph:

Standard contract will pay for necessary personal professional services of the physician.

Now my question is this, sir: Does this leave the gap between physicians' services and hospital services covered under hospital insurance? Will a person be fully protected if he has standard contract, plus Ontario hospitalization, or will he find himself stuck with bills for obscure services which are not included in standard contract and not included under the hospital insurance? I am thinking of additional bills for some particular additional services and, not being a medical man myself, I cannot give examples. I am sure the hon. Minister of Health can; do I get my point across to him?

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, I cannot foresee any possibility of the patient being charged for services which are inclusive under this bill, whether he gets them at home, the office, or in the hospital. This is the basis of the standard contract—the personal services of a physician for medical, surgical and obstetrical needs, in the home, the office and the hospital—and I think that it would be all covered. The hospital insurance plan, of course, does not pay for any physician's services, except in certain cases such as pathology and radiology, where these professional people are salaried people. As a rule, in certain hospitals where they are not salaried, where they are on a fee-for-service basis, they are also covered under the hospital insurance plan; but the hospital insurance plan essentially does not cover the personal services of a physician. They would be carried under the standard contract.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate getting that remark, and I am sure this will give a renewed feeling of well-being to people, when they know that people will not start adding services because you had cream with your cereal or something, and saying that this happens to belong in the hospital services. I cannot think of a medical example, but that is the kind of thing I was thinking of.

One thing I am curious about, and I would appreciate an explanation from the hon. Minister, is that I had noticed that both the insurance companies and the doctors—certainly my doctor and, I am sure, every doctor—emphasize that there should be an annual check-up. It seems to me that in a health plan—rather than in a sick plan, where you take people when they actually get sick—if this is an approach taken on the basis of trying to keep people healthy, then you would want an annual check-up. Thus I ask, sir, through you to the hon. Minister, why this extraordinary limitation in connection with annual health examinations?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this actually is not any extraordinary limitation. Indeed, it is an unusual finding in an ordinary medical services coverage—an annual health examination. It is limited in that we want the contract to be in force for one continuous year before the subscriber is eligible for such an examination. If this were not so, there could conceivably be a rush on the plan, which could have devastating effects on it, quite apart from the fact that one would question whether there are—judging by the remarks of some hon. members opposite—enough doctors to do the job, if there are a flood of these requests at the beginning of the plan. May I point out that many contracts do not provide this at all. Many contracts have this provision, that a period of time elapses during which the contract must be in force, before this and such like preventative services are provided.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to follow up on that and say that, as the hon. Minister will know with respect to the schedule, we in the Opposition are not at all happy with some of the limitations and exceptions it imposes. In fact, sir, we are not persuaded by the suggestion that because you will flood a plan with annual health examinations, for instance, that that is a feature much to be abhorred. I suggest that of course we will not, in fact, flood; that these exceptions are, in their own way, picayune and frivolous; and that they are not to be highly regarded by the Opposition.

And that applies to all the limitations imposed under schedule "A." It certainly applies to well-baby care; and I think it a great affront to this House, and to society in general, that in relationship to psychotherapy, any limitations should be placed. If, in fact, psychotherapy is required and desirable, then within this bill it should be granted without limitation. You do not cut people off in mid-psychotherapy, if I may be allowed to put it that way.

The items which might perhaps incline themselves to limitation, are those items number five and number six—"expenses for travelling time, or mileage" and "advice by telephone." I think it wrong that they should be designated as an exception, but perhaps there would be some method, by regulation, of working out a limitation; that we would consider justified.

But let it be said, Mr. Chairman, that, under the exceptions within this schedule, we deem number four and number nine, inherently wrong. In fact, the cosmetic surgery—or however else one wishes to categorize it—is frequently most important to the health and psychological security of human beings and should not be designated as an exception under this bill. And it is our feeling that refraction and eye examination, generally, is a foolish area of exception. That list of impressions having been recorded, Mr. Chairman, I should therefore like to move that schedule "A" of Bill No. 136 be amended:

(a) by striking out items one, two and three, under the heading "limitations" as prescribed by the regulations and substituting the following:

- (1) expenses for travelling or mileage;
- (2) advice by telephone.

(b) by striking out items 4, 5, 6 and 9 under the heading "exceptions" and by renumbering other items under the heading accordingly.

Mr. Chairman, that does not save this schedule by any stretch of the imagination, but I think that it has improved it immeasurably.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I must say, in support of the amendment that is offered, that I cannot, though I strive mightily, understand the use of the phrase in 2 (b), "dental care for dental purposes." Dental care for dental purposes, it would seem to me, is a supreme example of a redundancy. Dental care, I would take it, almost always is for dental purposes. But may I ask the hon. Minister whether the intention there is to permit dental care to be given which relates to the effect of bad teeth upon the system? I expressed that very badly I know, but I am not a doctor. We hear of people who suffer physical malaise because of the condition of their teeth. May I ask him, in all sincerity, does that definition or expression permit dental care where a doctor certifies that the dental care is for the purpose of removing some other condition in the organism of the body?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this could be; and cases of this kind would be treated on their merit. But one can think, for instance, of a neoplasm in association with the teeth, where it would be necessary to do a good deal of dental work in order to remove the neoplasm. One can think of the removal of part of the jaw, for instance, for a malignancy which would call for dental work; and no doubt matters of that kind would certainly be included under the plan.

Mr. Sopha: Of course the courts cannot look at the debates of the Legislature to see what the intent of the Legislature is in regard to the interpretation of a statute, but it is very useful that at least the insurance carriers may look at the remarks of the hon. Minister of Health and get some guidance as to what is intended by way of explanation of the use of the term. Now, may I ask whether in respect to treatment of the eyes, is it the intention that from the words used—the eyes are referred to twice, you will notice in 2 (h) one of the exceptions is eye-glasses, and in heading 9 of the exceptions, and that is encompassed in the amendment—that only diseased or traumatized eyes are to be treated under this policy.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is right, Mr. Chairman. Examination of the eyes by refraction, in spite of all that has been said and written about it, is a well understood term. Indeed, Dorland's dictionary, which is an authority on medical definitions, defines refraction quite clearly, and I quote: "The act or process of refracting is specifically the determination of the refractive errors of the eyes and their correction by glasses."

It is well known by every doctor, every optometrist and everyone who is dealing with the eyes, and to argue, as has been argued, that this is not an item in the Ontario medical association schedule of fees has absolutely no bearing on this Act whatsoever.

None of these exceptions or limitations were drawn up with any special reference, or indeed any of the bill, with special reference to items included under the OMA tariff of fees or any other tariffs.

Mr. Sopha: Well, that is interesting! The hon. Minister divines that what I have in my hand is a brief prepared by the optometrists, and they make this comment that nowhere in the OMA schedule of fees does the word "refraction" appear, nor is there any such procedure as examination of the eyes by refraction. The Optometry Act does not include the word "refraction," nor does optometry recognize any such isolated procedure as "examination of the eyes by refraction." They go on to say:

The procedure of the OMA schedule, which is the medical ophthalmological equivalent of what is generally understood by "examination of the eyes by refraction," is "major, ocular examination," including all procedures necessary to diagnose or eliminate pathology and to fully assess other ocular functions.

Now, let me complete what they say:

The ophthalmic optometrical terminology for a procedure similar in detail and in purpose would be "examination of the eye for the relief or correction of any visual or muscular defect or error, including necessary procedures to determine whether or not pathology is present in the eye."

Now, only the hon. Minister of Health in this House will understand what all that means. I must confess that it does not come through to me with any degree of clarity. What I should like to ask, and it may sound like a stupid, silly question, but forgive me if it is, is the only thing accepted under this schedule, treatment or examination of the eyes that leads to eye-glasses?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That sums it up fairly well—examination of the eyes to see if the vision can be improved or corrected by prescribing glasses. Despite the fact—pardon me for rising again—and despite what is in the brief, the optometrists know full well that neither in their Act, nor in the medical Act, nor the schedule of fees or the medical schedule of fees, is refraction mentioned. But Dorland is a recognized authority, and I believe the same or almost a similar definition can be found in Stedman's medical dictionary, two of the most widely accepted medical dictionaries that I know of.

Mr. Thompson: I am assuming that when this amendment is voted on, this section (a) will be then carried if it happens that the amendment is lost. I do not want to raise that until we come to it, but on my assumption, I have a number of questions, if I could ask the indulgence of the hon. Minister. I will just run down a number I have under (a).

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest you proceed with your questions, and when the amendment is put that will settle the matter.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to reiterate this question of well-baby care. To me this also seems an extraordinary thing. The hon. Minister in his reply about annual health examinations, said that we might get a flood of people coming in. It would seem to me this would be the one thing you would want to encourage, that the whole of our population would get an annual checkup and that you would not be apprehensive and fearful of this and give this as a reason for limitation.

Similarly, with well-baby care, I think the hon. Minister would agree with me—certainly the insurance companies do—that this is a very high-risk group. It was pointed out in the House last week.

Surely the idea of well-baby care—to keep the baby well and watch out for any disease or situation which could develop into a major sickness crisis—is good. I find the implication behind this limitation on annual health services and well-baby care almost infers that this is not important to the health of the people. Otherwise, I would think the hon. Minister would have done everything to see that those limitations were excluded.

Then when we come to No. 3, to psychotherapy—the hon. Minister I know is concerned about this situation, that there are over 110,000 supposedly emotionally disturbed children—here is a chance for group therapy and a number of other things to be done. Yet in what I look upon as a completely callous approach, the needs of emotionally disturbed children, of mentally ill people, are excluded from this.

I would like to have a definition on what the hon. Minister means by psychotherapy. That seems to me a very broad term, and it may exclude a large number of areas.

Under 1—exceptions, one of the things I would appreciate from the hon. Minister is clarification. He says “limitations as prescribed by the regulations,” and after that he says “exceptions.” I am not a lawyer, as the hon. Minister well knows, but is that exceptions to the limitations, or are these further exceptions?

However, under point one (a), I think that this raises the point of double coverage. We went into that before, but this clause means that people will be paying double. They will pay their standard contract premium, but will not collect under that contract; they will be taken care of under workmen's compensation.

Would the hon. Minister tell us if any actuarial work is being done on this, and if the standard contract premium will be reduced for persons with such double coverage? Or does the bill just use the workmen's compensation fund, in effect, to provide extra profits for the insurance industry?

Going down to 1(c), services for which no charge would be made in the absence of insurance, I would like to ask the hon. Minister what services are these? Is it clear from the Ontario medical association what services doctors provide that they do not bill for in the absence of insurance?

Under 2(a), the second clause raises again the question of essential services provided as a source of treatment which are not covered under Ontario hospitalization, nor covered under the Act. It also, in effect, leaves the definition of services to be covered, not in the text of the standard contract, but in the mind of the physician. In other words, it appears to me that under section 2(a) that doctors say what is covered, and what is not, not the contracts.

Section 2(b) has been discussed by the hon. member for Sudbury and also by my hon. friend from the New Democratic Party.

Under section 4, services with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person, who is to decide what conditions are not detrimental to the health of the covered person? How can this clause be administered? If a child has a cleft palate, for example, and this is operated on, is this cosmetic surgery?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is not a good example.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry, sir. I could see that for the mental health of some children, I do not want to take an extreme case, but say a hip dislocation or—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, these are pathological conditions.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest that there are people who suffer great psychological discomfort that is detrimental to their whole personality structure because of something that another person would be able to accept as just an affliction. We would like to get clarification on this, and include some other ones, such as a club foot or defective hearing or word blindness—I think of that particularly because of some personal knowledge I have of this. Are these detrimental to the health of a person?

I think that the way this clause is written, with due respect, there is an enormous loophole for the insurance companies to refuse claims of this kind and to get away with that refusal.

I would have liked to have made an amendment to that section with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes: “Unless in the opinion of the attending physician such treatment is essential for the mental health of the patient”; but it was struck out and so my amendment is really redundant.

Considering number 5—I realize that some of these points have already been made but I want to underline them—under 5, expenses for travelling time or mileage: Whose expenses for travelling time? With the disastrously unfair distribution of health personnel and facilities in Ontario, surely some arrangement should be made to make it possible for people from some rural areas to get treatment without facing a $100 travelling bill? It is worth noting that the enormous percentage of patients in the sick children's hospital, for example, come from outside Toronto.

I know that this has also been discussed; but on advice by phone, if doctors have a bill for advice by phone surely this could be covered. You have previously suggested that you are not going to include annual health examinations because of the flood to doctors' offices. If you were to permit advice by phone would this not mean that you would not get this enormous cluttering up that you are so concerned about in people coming to doctors' offices with the resulting higher cost and more strain on the doctor and less efficient use of health resources?

On 7—again I just want to underline annual examinations—I strongly suspect; in fact, I will put this to the hon. Minister: I would ask him if in his own practice he would want to see his patients once a year and would urge them to do this in order that he can keep tabs on their health and save them unnecessary costs by being able to spot symptoms as quickly as he can if some disease is beginning to build. I think of cancer, and in fact I think of your whole preventive approach toward health. You are spending thousands of dollars encouraging people to take TB tests. May I even use this term: I suggest you make TB tests compulsory for children in schools because you want to stop something before it develops into a crisis.

For all those reasons, as a doctor I think you will agree that this is a sick plan and not a health plan.

As for schedule "B," Mr. Chairman, I think we will vote on that at a later time so I will reserve my remarks until then.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, my hon. leader made some interesting and some very incisive points. One is in respect of medical advice by telephone, because one hears more and more complaints from people one speaks to about how difficult it is to get doctors on the telephone. I had a personal experience myself, of attempting to telephone. I know all the doctors in Sudbury, all 70 or 80 of them, and I attempted to telephone five in a row on a Saturday afternoon, and each time I got the answering service and the same girl on the answering service answered each one of the numbers.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Do they know you?

Mr. Sopha: They know me and I get along fine with them. I spoke to a convention of them on Saturday. The hon. Minister spoke last year to the same convention. They tell me that he did not get a standing ovation as I did yesterday. To a man they were for government operation of the medical care scheme.

However, I spoke to the answering service five times in a row and I got so frustrated in speaking to the same girl that I got hold of my boys and I took them over to the emergency department of the general hospital and just waited for the first doctor to come through who was qualified to give an opinion on that part of the anatomy. The first one, who was a psychiatrist said that it was the wrong end of the body for him; the second was an orthopaedist and the third a surgeon. Finally a pediatrician came through. It is very cheap that way, I recommend it.

Perhaps it would be possible for people to get doctors on the telephone if they were paid for it. Really, in justice, I do not see, if a doctor is called at three o'clock in the morning and he tells a woman to put a bread poultice on the boil and bring the boy in in the afternoon to his office, I do not see why he should not be paid. Certainly, as my friend, the hon. member for St. George knows, we lawyers are paid for advice given on the telephone. We usually send out a bill and keep a diary of telephone calls to and from the clients. We charge them for them, as properly we should. So what is the difference in paying doctors for advice which they give which contributes to the health of the person?

I want to say a word in connection with this ambiguous word "health" in 4 that has been referred to by my hon. leader. I am just wondering out loud whether that word "health" will be interpreted by the insurance carriers to include mental health, because I know that in the year 1965 mental health is not respectable in this province, not yet respectable.

It is not respectable with the workmen's compensation board which deprives a man of benefits because of what they call "an emotional overlay," whatever that term means. That is part of the medical jargon, that a man who has suffered an injury and is disturbed in his employment often has sequelae that are addressed to his mental equilibrium, and the workmen's compensation board tell us when we act as ombudsmen on behalf of these claimants that the emotional overlay is compensable. They will not alter the rate with which they are paying the workmen.

Now, we do not want in this statute, to allow terms to be used where unscrupulous insurance companies—and there are such, whether we like it or not, in this province. Pierre Berton had an interesting article in Maclean's magazine about a couple that are operating in a similar field to this. There are such. We do not want to employ verbiage that will allow them to get out of their financial responsibilities in respect of this Act. The language should be simple and plain and precise. I do not know really what that term means, as a lawyer, looking at it: "Services with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the person." I simply do not know what that means, but you will note it goes on in the heading—"Or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only." Someone might interpret that to mean that it is that type of thing where only the vanity of the person is at stake.

Certainly treatment for cosmetic purposes goes far beyond that. The person who suffers severe lacerations to the face which cannot be repaired by plastic surgery may suffer what we call in the law—if we do not call it in medicine—may suffer “personality change” which to that individual is just as traumatic as is the partial loss of the use of a member. People go through very dramatic emotional upheavals as a result of trauma, so I would invite the hon. Minister, in line with what we have said over here, to consider some amendment to make heading 4 much more clear from the point of view of interpretation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to draw attention to one or two features of this amendment which I hope will commend themselves to the House. I am not going to speak to the substance of the first part of the amendment, which suggests that the existing items 1, 2 and 3, under “limitations as prescribed by the regulations,” should be eliminated. I think the case has been made by a number of hon. members already, pretty solidly, that the need for annual health examinations, for well-baby care, and for psychotherapy, without the kind of limitations that are apparently being contemplated, should be an integral part of any standard policy that this government is going to be spelling out in the Act.

Therefore, we think that these should be removed from limitations to be prescribed by regulations. However, what in effect this amendment does is to take two of the exceptions from lower down in schedule “A” and bring them up within the category of limitations to be prescribed by regulations. These two exceptions are with regard to expenses for travelling time, for mileage, and advice by telephone.

Let me be very frank about this. I am puzzled as to why the hon. Minister, a medical doctor, coming from an area that is part of a rural community, would not recognize the value and the integral part of advice by telephone. There is, indeed, not only in rural areas, but also in city areas, for reasons that the hon. member for Sudbury has just spelled out—a difficulty in getting a doctor because there are too few of them. They are busy, and you cannot even get them on the telephone. But if they knew they were going to be paid, they perhaps would be a bit more available on the telephone.

Out in rural areas, I think this has been a part of a doctor-patient relationship, traditionally. I can recall growing up in the country, and the proposition of somebody being sick and calling the doctor and, in many instances, getting advice from the doctor which the parent proceeded to put into effect in the home, was as much a part of medical services provided by doctors as going to his office. Indeed, I would suspect there would be more occasions, in actual number of seeking advice by telephone than actually going to the doctor's office.

However, we concede that this is an area in which abuses could creep in, and that is the reason why we put it up in limitations as prescribed by the regulations. We recognize that there will have to be careful scrutiny here; and, indeed, there may have to be scrutiny between sessions of the Legislature, when it might best be handled more quickly and by regulation. The same, I think, is true of the whole question of expenses for travelling time or mileage. Here again you have an area in which you could have abuse, but which I think is an integral part of the whole provision of health services on the part of the doctor, again out in rural areas. Therefore we think it should be up there, but subject to limitation by regulations because of the possibility of abuse.

With regard to the other two items, in the existing exceptions in schedule “A,” namely, item numbers 4 and 9, it is our view, for reasons that I will not take a great deal of time to spell out once again, that they simply should not be exceptions. Certainly I am not going to be persuaded, until I get something more from the hon. Minister than we have had up until now, as to what in heaven's name is the exact meaning of this phrase to which hon. members have already referred: “Services with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person.” I can see it being an area of unbelievable abuse on the part of insurance companies, or with respect to the treatment for cosmetic purposes only.

Then finally, with regard to number 9, examination of eyes for refraction. It seems to me that surely we have reached the stage where the provision of glasses, and the right kind of glasses, for people in our society—when you can have many other consequences flowing from a lack of such provision—is something that should be part and parcel of a healthy insurance coverage, and certainly part and parcel of a standard medical services insurance. For those reasons, I would hope that the House would look with favour on the amendment.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, it is hard to understand, in this day and age, why we would have annual health examinations restricted by regulations.

It seems to me that this would mean that it is possible for regulations to say that you can have a physical examination every two years—maybe it would be every three years, or maybe it would be restricted to every five years. Certainly there is an oft-repeated term—that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure—and it has been proven wherever there has been established, particularly in the United States, group health clinics, established originally by the trade union movement in that country.

It extended to one particular area here, the Sault Ste. Marie health clinic association, where they have found that to provide annual or regular periodic health examinations has paid off tremendously. Certainly it has reduced the cost of health care in every area where they have health clinics and where they have regular health examinations and to restrict it to anything over a year would be detrimental to the new approach to medicine—to prevent people from getting sick—and therefore to reduce the cost in the early stage.

As far as restricting the examination of the eyes for refraction is concerned, I also do not know exactly what that terminology is, but I think it means to go and have your eyes examined for glasses so that you can read properly. One of the changes in the carriers' programme and coverage, in the last year or two, has been to include optometrists' coverage. Our last contract with Stelco now allows treatment by the optometrists for eye examination, and I can see no reason why any medical insurance programme should not provide this necessary and healthful innovation in any kind of a contract.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. leader of the Opposition was speaking about some of the sections under "exceptions," I noticed the hon. Minister's response to section 4, "Services with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person, or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only." I think that that is a singularly inappropriate exception, and I want to remind this House of an event that took place earlier in this session.

On April 1, 1965, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman) rose in his place before the orders of the day, I believe it was—no, it was under the estimates of The Department of Reform Institutions—and inserted the following paragraph into his remarks, and I shall read it in its entirety:

I stated earlier that rehabilitation is not a surgical process. You cannot cut the wrongdoing out of man. But there is one area in which surgery can play its part, and that is in plastic surgery. It is quite likely that with some of our youngsters, physical deformities play some part in forming their attitudes and behaviour patterns. In consequence, we were gratified when, in 1964, Dr. Harold L. Silver, a distinguished plastic surgeon in Toronto, at my invitation very generously offered to perform plastic surgery without fee on any child or inmate in any of our institutions, providing there was evidence that such work would help rehabilitate that person. I should like at this time to express our very warm appreciation to Dr. Silver, and pay public tribute to him for this very generous, humane and helpful use of his skill as a plastic surgeon. It is our intention to formulate a research study around the work that Dr. Silver has been doing, which will enable us to establish its value in the rehabilitation process on those cases where plastic surgery has been utilized.

Mr. Chairman, that is precisely the point. The question of the need for so-called "cosmetic" surgery is frequently in the psychological recesses of the mind of the person who feels the need. It cannot be objectively designated in the bill and since the hon. Minister has already agreed to psychotherapy and the importance of mental health, however limited, then he should be consistent in following through and not remove one area entirely from the field of mental health.

It says specifically in section 4, "Services with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person." There may be many services which are not detrimental to health in the strict medical definition of the word but are of immense benefit in the broader, psychological meaning of the word.

The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions already recognized that during this session of the Legislature. It seems therefore invidious and unworthy that a bill should be put before the House containing a schedule with this kind of exception. I appeal to the hon. Minister that it is not a section which is likely to be abused. The drive, the zest for such surgery is not one in this society that is overused, and since it could have very real effects on the rehabilitation of people in their psychological readjustment, particularly in the areas of youth and adolescence, I strongly urge him to think of the deletion of that exception.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to cover the matters that have been discussed and I think I should start at the top.

First of all, may I point out to you, sir, that we are not saying by inserting this schedule that we are opposed to any of these things. We have said from the start that this is not the total plan yet, this is the beginning and this is a further step in a progression of steps toward ultimate total quality health care.

The annual health examination, I think, is evidence that we are concerned about preventive medicine. I think that if my hon. friend from Wentworth East—who is not in his seat at the present time—would look back at previous contracts he will recall that for at least the first five or ten years there was no annual health examination included in their contract which was said then to be a comprehensive contract. The addition of an annual health examination has only become popular in relatively recent times. In all instances of which I have any knowledge whatsoever, it comes after a contract has been in force one year. We are emphasizing preventive medicine by stating that the contract will provide for one annual health examination of each covered person after the contract has been continuously in operation for one year.

Well-baby care, number 2: When we wrote the bill at first, at my own insistence, we had included, and quite in opposition to the Hagey commission report, that there should be ten visits to the doctor for well-baby care within the first three years. In discussing this with paediatric authorities at the university level and in practice, we were told that this is not modern practice. I said some days ago, sir, in this House, that I was out of touch with modern practice for some time. It was on their recommendation that we inserted ten visits in the first five years. The paediatrics people told us that this is good preventive medicine for babies and this is a good degree of well-baby care.

Now, this does not mean to say that the medical services to the baby or to a child will only be covered to the extent of ten visits in one year or ten consultations in five years. If the child becomes sick—and we hope that it will not—it will be covered. These ten visits are preventive medicine.

In the matter of psychotherapy: It is a broad term, because who is going to say what is psychotherapy except psychiatrists? They are the people who are skilled and knowledgeable in these things. They will determine what is psychotherapy. While we have put a limitation on it to begin with, we are persuaded that this is a reasonably generous provision and we would be imprudent if we did not pay very careful attention to the experiences of many programmes which have been put in very serious trouble over the past few years because of unlimited psychotherapy services. We want time and a little experience to find how this is going.

It is not because we do not believe in these things, nor is it because we can say, by the stroke of a pen or by a word and a natural limitation and a schedule, that this is all that is necessary. We know that there are those who will need more, we know that there are those who will not need it at all. We have been forced to the decision, on the basis of advice and on the basis of study, that 25 hours per year for the individual and up to 50 hours per year for the family, is a reasonably generous coverage, at least for a start.

In the case of exceptions: These exceptions are part of the standard contract which all carriers provide. Look at your non-profit carriers; look at your medical form; look at your PSI! None of them pay for services provided under the workmen's compensation board or in accidents or other similar legislation, services that a covered person receives under any Act of this Legislature. I direct your attention, for instance, to The Venereal Disease Act. That is one that comes to mind; and The Sanitaria for Tuberculosis Act; at present our hospitals for the mentally ill, under The Mental Hospitals Act. These are things that come to mind immediately.

The laboratory and other diagnostic procedures: Here the only thing that is excepted is laboratory services that are not ordered by or provided by or supervised by a physician. We would be careless indeed if we had not inserted this, particularly in view of the growing body of concern, not only in our own country but all over the continent, about laboratories, some of which call themselves medical laboratories and hold themselves out as being skilled and capable of providing clinical, medical laboratory services.

Those of you who may have read the recent very revealing article in one of our international magazines must have been forced to wonder if there were any laboratories of this kind operating in our own country. We are concerned about them and are studying this whole matter very carefully, because it may well be that we shall have to step in and exercise a little control.

There is nothing in this section which refuses laboratory services ordered by the attending physician, so long as they are provided in a recognized laboratory under the supervision of a physician who is skilled in providing this service.

Dental care for dental purposes: I think I covered that by pointing out that if the health of the individual is at stake, then of course this will be considered. As in many cases, each case would have to be considered on its own merits.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister for clarification on this? I assume that it is the doctor who decides whether dental care is essential.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In 2 (a), the services are to be determined by the doctor and they must be ordered by the doctor, that is with laboratory services.

Then we come down to 4: "Services with respect to conditions which are not detrimental to the health of the covered person or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only." It will not be the carrier who determines whether these services are covered, it will be the doctor. The doctor in charge or the doctor or doctors whom he may call in consultation. The carrier will have nothing to do with determining whether the service is covered under the contract, this will rest with the physician in charge.

Mr. Bryden: May I ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, where that is provided: That the decision in the matter will be made by the doctor?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is a medical services insurance contract, the doctor is the deciding factor all through the piece.

Mr. Bryden: But it is also a legal document and I believe that determinations in cases of legal dispute are made in the courts. If clause 4 said "services with respect to conditions that are determined by the doctor as not being detrimental to the health of the covered person, and so on," then I think we could take it as acceptable.

But it does not say that at all, Mr. Chairman. It merely refers to services that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person or are with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only. The insurance carrier is certainly in a position to refuse a claim on the ground that it relates to this section. The patient may challenge him, but in such a case I think all he can do is go to court. The patient is then involved in considerable litigation, to get the thing determined.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, there is always an appeal to the council. I may be on bad legal ground, I may be straying on territory as foreign to me as medical ground is to my friend, the hon. member for Sudbury, but I understand this quite clearly. And even if I were not standing here, but a practising physician, I would understand this quite clearly, that it would be my decision with respect to my patient whether the service should be covered or not, or whether this service was detrimental to the health of my patient or not.

I do not think that the insurance carrier is either equipped, or experienced, or anything else, to determine what is good for, or detrimental to, my patient's health. This is fully understood, Mr. Chairman.

The examples the hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned, these are to me very obvious matters on which there would be no question in anybody's mind. He mentioned cleft palate; a dislocated hip—congenital dislocation I presume he meant—club foot; deficient hearing if it could be corrected by medical means, by all means; aphasia. The word blindness I believe he said. All of these things, of course. If anything can be done for them by way of medical treatment or surgical treatment, of course these things would be covered.

I think one of my hon. friends used the word "vanity," and I believe that that sums it up very well, although it is not a matter one wants to belabour or talk to at any great length. Suppose somebody wanted a face-lift. This is purely and simply a costly surgical procedure. If somebody wanted a huge roll of fat removed from their abdominal wall, because it does not look well or they cannot wear the proper type of foundation garment or something of that kind. Well, we contend that that is really most likely pandering to one's vanity.

On the other hand, one can foresee the possibility that if a person has a very pendulous abdomen that the doctor might decide it would be a very good thing to remove some of it by surgical means in the interest of the patient himself. And here again would be a case that is in a gray area.

You cannot draw a fine line of demarcation, saying this is on that side and that is on the other. There are many of these cases that will have to be determined upon their own merits, and there may be occasions when appeal to the council will have to be had. But this, I think, is the saving feature, that there is always appeal to the council in all of these things.

Mr. Bryden: Where is it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sopha: Where is that section?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Section 3, I believe it is; that one of the council's functions shall be to deal with complaints relative to this Act, and all matters referred to it by the Minister or by the corporation. Every person has access to the council.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman—again I am thinking of an insurance company—I could see where a doctor has been working with a sensitive child who had acne, and the doctor decided it would give a reassurance to the child and more confidence if he were able to give some treatment. I can see an insurance company saying, "Look, this is purely cosmetic."

What I would like to hear is that very definitely it is the doctor's decision if he feels for psychosomatic reasons, or some other reasons, treatment needs to be done which in definition might be cosmetic, just as the hon. member mentioned here that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions has been suggesting that the facial operations might be very important in changing personalities. My legal friend, the hon. member for Sudbury, called it personality disorders that develop.

I would just like to get from the hon. Minister again, is it to be the doctor who decides? This may appear very trivial and a matter of vanity to an insurance company, but the doctor who knows the patient personally would recognize that this cosmetic thing was of significance and great importance to the mental health of the person. Would his decision be final?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is very difficult for me to say the decision would be final. There would probably be discussion about it. Here again, there is the doctor's decision. But you speak of the case of acne. If the doctor decided that some surgical procedure—and there are certain surgical procedures—would be advantageous to the general health and well-being of the patient, and the carrier made a noise about it, I think it is the doctor's responsibility to carry that to its logical conclusion, and in this case his appeal would be to the council. Every doctor will not do that because he may not want to become involved in these matters, but there is the appeal to the council.

These things are not new, Mr. Chairman. These are things that are coming up constantly, and are being argued constantly, and decisions are being made about them, insofar as this schedule is concerned, whether it be the physical health or the mental health of the individual that is at stake. I know that some may argue that in the case of the aging dowager, she may say a face-lift would do a great deal to bolster up her faltering psyche. There is a point where reason becomes greatly strained. But a great deal can be done before we reach that point.

Mr. Sopha: Well then, would the hon. Minister consider in relation to this appeal business that he referred to, that there is no appeal directly to the council by the insured?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. Sopha: Only through the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, not necessarily.

Mr. Sopha: Well, section 3 says the council shall deal with complaints relative to this Act, and with all matters referred to it by the Minister or by the corporation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, but it does not say, Mr. Chairman, from whom the complaint shall come. We are going to have to start in arguing the bill all over again, but it does not say in the section of the Act from whom, or through whom, the complaint shall come. It just says, "shall deal with complaints relative to this Act" and it does not go on to say that those complaints must come from the Minister. This is the basis of this Act, this is one of the reasons why the council was set, up so that every subscriber shall have access to the council.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister will look at the actual words—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if I could finish my remarks. I am getting completely led astray with all this. Now, the matter of 5, on travelling time. I practised medicine for quite a long time, and I have never yet known any insurance carrier who paid a doctor for his travelling time. Indeed, if we were to go back to the schedule of fees and argue that things have been dealt with on the basis of their appearance there or not, then at no time can I recall where travelling time was considered as an insured service.

Doctors in the country do charge travelling time, but this is not part of an insurance function and I think this would leave very grave openings for abuse. I would strongly urge that you reconsider that.

Advice by telephone is another thing. Legal men may advise their clients by telephone and this can be very useful in the case of legal advice, but encouraging medical practice by telephone is not conducive to high quality medical care. This, too, should not be encouraged under any circumstance. I grant the hon. member for York South is quite correct, a good deal of advice by telephone is given in rural areas and in other areas, but I would question very much if it is charged for.

However, I do not know. I know what my own proceeding was, but never should any physician be encouraged in any way to advise or treat a patient by telephone, because that will only lead to a spread of the practice which is not in the interests of good health care for our people. Indeed, this is condemned by the profession itself, this business of trying to practise medicine over the phone.

Now, coming back to seven, what I said in the case of limitations applies again, every good doctor and everyone who is trying to practise quality medical care, will advocate periodic health examinations, and this I repeat, we are trying to do under this bill.

Examination of the eyes by refraction, I have pointed out, and again I must emphasize, is not because we believe this is not necessary. It is not because we believe this is not a good thing. It is not, by any stretch of the imagination, to be taken to mean that we do not think that the optometrists of Ontario are not doing a good job. They are doing a good job, but they, too, are steadily trying to improve the standards of their service. But we suggest that until we have a little experience with this and know where we are going and know what it is going to cost us, this is one service that we will exclude for the time being.

Again I would repeat, this has been the experience and the practice of other jurisdictions that have tried to bring in any type of medical services insurance. I know you will tell me that Great Britain has this in their plan, but let me assure you, Mr. Chairman, Great Britain did not have it in the original plan of 1911, and that was their first step. It took them 36 or 37 years to come to the point where they had a total health care plan, and I would make bold to predict at this stage of the game, that it will not take Ontario that length of time, until we too have a complete health programme to provide quality health care for all of our people.

The same applies to the annual health examination. I would remind my hon. friends that in the much-quoted programme in Saskatchewan, I do not believe that is included even yet. In the Alberta plan, they do provide an annual health examination after the contract has been in force for one year, and I think the same can be said about the psychiatric service. I do not believe that either of those have made as generous provision for psychotherapy services as we have done under our plan. I repeat sir, for emphasis, that all we are asking at the present time is: Let us start on this basis. We believe that this is a sound and reasonable basis on which to start and, as we gain experience, and as we see where we are going, and how the costs are standing up, then we will be in a position to extend the services as we move farther forward.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of matters which arise with regard to the observations the hon. Minister has just made in reply to comments from this side of the House.

We have laboured all through the committee consideration of this bill under two important difficulties. One is that on some occasions the hon. Minister professes to be unable to give us any idea of what will be in regulations that are germane to the Act; then, on the other hand, he will occasionally reveal, almost it would seem by inadvertence, what I take it are to be in regulations, because the matters discussed are not in the Act. He has told us that the limitations with regard to the three items listed under limitations, are to be as follows:

One—annual health examination. Of course that is not in the bill, but I take it, from what he says, that is to be in the regulations.

Ten consultations respecting well-baby care, and 25 hours for an individual or 50 hours for a family with respect to psychotherapy; I take it that these are all matters that he plans to put in regulations. Certainly they are not in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest, on a point of order, that I already outlined this in my remarks on second reading? I think I specifically stated these two things. The reason I have told you these things, sir, is in an attempt to show that I am presenting this bill in the greatest of good faith. I am taking the House into my confidence—I do not want to put it that way—I am telling the House everything I know at the present time, what we believe, and what we plan to do from knowledge, now; and the things I stated with respect to the limitations, I repeat, I stated in my remarks during second reading.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister assures us that the limitations prescribed in the regulations will be no more restrictive, at any rate, than what he has outlined, I am sure we will accept that as to his intention; I am sure he will carry it out.

We will still stick by the amendment at present before the committee, Mr. Chairman, to eliminate these three items altogether from the subject matter of limitations. The hon. Minister has frequently spoken of the need to maintain good health as of even greater importance than curing illness. We think that since these are the matters most directly related to good health, there should be no limitations on them.

As to the exceptions, obviously some have to be made. We here certainly do not suggest that a person who is covered by The Workmen's Compensation Act should also be covered by a standard contract under this Act—he will do better under The Workmen's Compensation Act—so, therefore, that is where he should be covered. We do not object to that type of exception.

I must say, however, that we do not accept as satisfactory the hon. Minister's explanation of exception number 4—that is the one which excludes services for conditions not detrimental to the health of the covered person, or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only. The hon. Minister says, when a contract is issued under schedule "A", that the medical practitioner will make the decision as to whether or not a specific service is for a condition that is not detrimental to the health of the covered person, or is for cosmetic purposes only. I suggest to him that it does not say any such thing here.

A second difficulty we have had all through the bill is that the hon. Minister keeps insisting that his interpretation is what is going to prevail. When this bill becomes law, as it may unfortunately do, what the hon. Minister has said here and what he thinks will be of no significance whatever. What we will have to go on, and what those interpreting it will have to go on, will be exclusively what the words in the bill say, nothing more. The hon. Minister says that if there is any dispute about it there will be an appeal to the medical services insurance council; and he cites, as the authority for that, subsection 6 of section 3, which provides that the council shall "deal with complaints relative to this Act."

I submit to the hon. Minister that that is a very doubtful proposition. That authority is highly imprecise. I do not think—I would be most doubtful if it would give the council authority to deal with and adjudicate upon disputes over the interpretation of exception number 4. I would suggest to him that if he believes that the council is to be, and should be, the final authority in adjudicating such disputes, then he should clearly provide that in the bill. It is not a matter, as he suggested, of reopening the whole Act again; it is a matter of dealing with the words in front of us.

As we see it, exception number 4 could become a very wide exception indeed. An insurance company which did not want to settle a claim—and, after all, a great many of these standard contracts will be written by private insurance companies, some of whom in the past have shown a great disinclination to pay up on claims presented to them—if a company decided it did not want to settle a claim, it could very readily seize on this exception and say that the services provided did not relate to a condition detrimental to the health of the covered person, or that it was for cosmetic purposes only.

What about an ugly, disfiguring scar on a person's face? Is treatment for that for cosmetic purposes only? Many people who would say that although it may not affect the physiological health of the person concerned, it would have a great deal of bearing on his general sense of well-being, and therefore on his emotional and mental health. But again it does not provide here, as the hon. Minister suggests is the case, that the medical practitioner will make the decision. It does not provide here that, in case of dispute, the council will determine the matter. It merely says that this is a basis on which payment could be refused under a standard contract.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that if an insurance company refused to make a payment relying on this exception, the only remedy of the covered person would be to take that insurance company to court to force it to pay, to get a court order to make it pay. This would mean the whole thing could be tied up in court, and that the patient could be involved in legal expenses greater than the benefits he may hope to recover. As the hon. member for Sudbury pointed out earlier in this committee discussion, insurance companies often litigate over fairly small sums of money. They are prepared to go to court if they think they can establish a principle which will relieve them of payments in the future.

I should think, if the hon. Minister intends this to mean what he says—namely, (a) that the doctor will make the first determination, and (b) that if there is dispute, the council will make the final determination—then he should say so clearly and specifically in the bill.

Turning to the matter of refractions, Mr.

Chairman, the hon. Minister has said on this, and on some of the other matters on which limitations are to be imposed or which are to be excepted, that we are at the first stage here, that we have to move slowly and see what happens. I do not object to that principle in general terms, but I would suggest to the hon. Minister that even though we are, shall we say, in the first phases of the implementation of this legislation, we do not have to start at the point where even private insurance companies were five and ten years ago. Private insurance companies under group contracts are now providing or covering refractions.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Some of them are.

Mr. Bryden: Some of them are, yes; and there are some that are not covering anything very much, they are just selling policies. But those who are subject to good stiff negotiations, such as the ones that provide group contracts for large employment units like Westinghouse or the Steel Company of Canada, about which my hon. colleagues here could tell you a great deal more than I can, are doing that sort of thing. They have to do it because they would not be able to sell their contracts if they did not.

The point is they have found it is practical to do it. Now, why can we not benefit by their experience? As the hon. Minister said, the first health legislation passed in Britain in 1911 did not cover refractions, but do we have to go back to where Britain was in 1911? Can we not benefit by their subsequent experience? Can we not now conclude that it is feasible—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Saskatchewan does not do it!

Mr. Bryden: If we are going to debate Saskatchewan, let us debate Saskatchewan in terms of its total contract, which is to provide far wider coverage than you are thinking of.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, not at all!

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister is going to cover—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member should really be fair.

Mr. Bryden: As far as any public plan is concerned or public responsibility is concerned, the hon. Minister is going to cover a maximum of 1,800,000 people. The rest, if they are covered at all, will be covered by private insurance contracts.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is the contract I am talking about, Mr. Chairman. I am comparing our standard contract with the standard contract in Saskatchewan, regardless of the number it covers. The benefits provided under our contract are equally as broad, and in some instances more broad, than those offered by Saskatchewan.

Mr. Bryden: I am suggesting to the hon. Minister that when one talks about coverage one cannot talk merely on the benefits in the contract, one also has to talk about the number of people covered or the percentage of population covered. In Saskatchewan it is the whole population and here, as far as any public responsibility is concerned, it is a very small percentage of the population. In Saskatchewan it is the whole population other than people who are covered elsewhere such as the RCMP.

I am suggesting that there has, in this province and in other jurisdictions, been sufficient experience of coverage of refractions that we can safely go ahead and undertake to cover it in the case of that percentage of the population for which we are providing coverage and that we can require private companies to cover it in their standard contracts.

I may say that the refractions covered in some of the group contracts now cover not only refractions by physicians and by ophthalmologists, but also refractions by optometrists. I do not really see why, if private contracts are now doing that, we can cannot make our standard contract as good as the best private contract now in existence. I would say the same with respect to annual examinations, well-baby care and psychotherapy. The private companies have had and continue to have limitations in these areas, but in the more advanced of these contracts these limitations are being quickly reduced. I think our standard contract should be the best now available. As it stands at the present time under schedule "A" it will be somewhat less than the best available.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to what the hon. Minister said. I was interested when he mentioned the exemption on advice by telephone. He suggested that the reason he has this in—or one of the reasons—is that it is bad medicine to be practising by telephone and that he was going to discourage this. If that is the principle that the hon. Minister is espousing, that what you put here as an exception will discourage people from following that particular practice, I just want to underline the fallacy in his argument. To emphasize what my hon. colleague to my left has suggested on these exemptions—I admit that I am stretching this to some extent—in his first remark on advice by telephone, he said that we put this in because we do not want to practise that way; I suggest then the same implication is attached to the fact that they do not want to cover people for annual health examinations, well-baby care—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): That is stretching it!

Mr. Thompson: No, it is not stretching it. It is very clear to me that you have these limitations because you do not think they are vital to the people—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I rise on a point of order?

That is a complete misapprehension, I did not suggest or infer this and nothing I have said can be the basis to draw that conclusion.

Mr. Thompson: I would say the only inference that can be drawn from it is simply that the hon. Minister has drafted an Act and he says these are the limitations. I assume that to him the most paramount thing is the health of the people and this is meant to be a health bill, not a sickness bill. The hon. Minister's job, I would hope, and his whole emphasis, is to provide the best of health for the people. I would think as a doctor, apart from being the Minister of Health, that he would recognize that one of the ways in which health should be provided for the people is to have annual health check-ups. What about symptoms in connection with heart attacks and so on?

Let me come to another point on this in connection with dental care. From the Hall report—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I know my hon. friends laugh about this, they are indifferent about health services. They have this bill and they have said nothing in connection with it. They just sat there, a silent party, condoning it except to shout and gibe at us. That has never bothered me; the illiteracy of their remarks is only a reflection on themselves.

According to the Hall report by the age of 13, according to the dental health survey—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order sir, we have already debated very fully the principles of this bill and dental care is definitely not included in the principles of the bill. I am fully aware of what the Hall commission report says about it. I am fully sensitive of the need for dental health care, but unfortunately it is not included in this bill. It is a medical services insurance bill and on that basis we have debated it very thoroughly now.

Mr. Thompson: I do not think we have debated the fact that dental care is surely related to medical care. I am just raising the point, not for the hon. Minister's information but for the information of the public and of this Legislature. I am aware he has read the whole report. I only wish he had implemented it. I think I am quite entitled to bring out some of the statistics mentioned.

By the age of 13, according to the dental health survey, 98 per cent of Canadian children have one or more teeth decayed and 40 per cent of them have lost one or more permanent teeth.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

I would like to suggest that the degree of treatment required or suggested in the report that you are quoting does not pertain directly to this bill. I think that the bill, in reading it, applies to dental purposes for the purpose of health only. It does not specify in any way the number of cavities that constitute serious illness, therefore I must uphold the Minister on his objection that this was, on a point of order, not a part of the bill and should not be discussed. The question of what is needed for dental treatment and that it is desirable to avoid cavities and things of that kind do not come under the bill.

Mr. Thompson: I will leave out the cavities then. I will say that only 13 per cent of children between seven and 13 years of age have no untreated dental defects. That comes under the purposes of dental care. I realize that you are intelligent and have seen that.

Mr. Chairman: Not necessarily!

Mr. Thompson: Each child has an average backlog of three teeth needing restoration; and yet when I looked at this dental care for dental purposes, at first I thought here was a broad approach being taken, even for children up to the age of 18. But, as I understand it now, this is something which is defined by the doctors and not by the dentists, and it has nothing to do with teeth.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a complete misapprehension. A doctor has nothing to do with defining the need for dental care. If the person is suffering from something where dental care is necessary for the preservation of their general health, then of course the doctor will come into it, but this bill does not provide dental care. This is one of the principles of the bill, sir; and dental care is not included, per se, as part of the bill.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir I am just—

Mr. Chairman: On the basis of that argument, I must tell the leader of the Opposition that he is definitely out of order. I am referring to dental requirements, in connection with this bill.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate it and I will not mention cavities in this context again.

Mr. Chairman: I would point out that it would appear that under this bill, if a medical doctor considers that dental requirements are the cause of another illness, then, as I have followed the Minister's arguments, it might possibly be considered.

Mr. Bryden: That is not what the bill says.

Mr. Chairman: I think that is what the bill does state; in clause "B" under section 2, in schedule "A", dental care for dental purposes is not included. I think it specifies it very well, for dental purposes.

Mr. Bryden: It does not say anything about a medical doctor.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask the hon. Minister if the Chairman's interpretation is his interpretation? I think it is important we should know this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have already answered this question for the hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: There seems to me to be conflict, sir, between the Chairman's interpretation and the hon. Minister's, and I wonder if the hon. Minister could clarify this for us?

May I say again that when we come to such a thing as defining dental care for dental purposes—and I hear a squawk. Stop stalling, it irritates me; it is like a mosquito bite, it does not bother me that much.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: We have had two different interpretations.

Mr. Sopha: I have one final question to ask. This exception of the use of operating plaster or fracture rooms; I wonder if the hon. Minister would tell us what that means?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes. If you have a broken limb, you need the application of a plaster cast; this is already covered under The Hospital Insurance Services Act.

Mr. Sopha: I see.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, before you put the question, may I ask your ruling on a matter in the event that the amendment does not carry? I am somewhat concerned about some of the things my hon. friends are concerned with in section 4, and I would like to propose an amendment, but I must be guided by your ruling, sir. I recognize that when an amendment has been put to you before, and it was lost, the whole section carried. If that be your ruling, I would like to know now, sir.

Mr. Chairman: Quite frankly, sir, I want to know what I can do legally.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, as the mover of the amendment, I would be pleased to see it held until the hon. Minister makes whatever modifications he wishes.

Mr. Sopha: He does not even—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would move, Mr. Chairman, that paragraph 4 under "exceptions" be amended by adding, after "conditions," the words: "that in the opinion of a physician," so that the section will now read:

Services with respect to conditions that in the opinion of a physician are not detrimental to the health of the covered person or with respect of treatment for cosmetic purposes only.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I just raise one technical point on this. I think I got the hon. Minister's words down well enough, and as the clause has been now worded, the opinion of the physician would be the governing matter only in regard to matters that are considered not detrimental to the health. It would not govern the question of treatment for cosmetic purposes only, because there are two "with respect to" clauses. If he would just find, or if his advisers could find, some way of making it clear that that is his intention, that the opinion of the physician would be the determining matter in both of these cases, then I think we, in this group, would be entirely happy with the clause.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is the intention, sir; and if the language is not clear, I am quite prepared to make it so that it is clear. I checked it with the legal people and they assured me it is clear.

Mr. Bryden: I wonder if they would just take another look at it, because it says:

Services with respect to conditions that in the opinion of the physician are not detrimental to the health of the covered person.

And then it starts all over again:

—or with respect to treatment, etc.

I submit it should say again “that, in the opinion of the physician, are for cosmetic purposes only.” That is a rather clumsy way of putting it, but at least it would be clear.

Mr. Chairman: After the first word “services” in the amendment as proposed by—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am sorry, I did not hear.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): After the first word “services,” put in the amendment, as proposed by the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member mind repeating it, please?

Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, if the wording of the amendment was placed after the word “services,” would that meet the hon. member’s objection or condition, and would it make sense?

Mr. Bryden: There would then be a syntactical problem, but that would be a good place to put it; then it would clearly govern both of the subordinate clauses.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think I understand what my hon. friend from Halton means: Services that, in the opinion of a physician, with respect to conditions, are not detrimental to the health of a covered person or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only. It sounds a little clumsy, but if the sense is right I have no objections.

Mr. Sopha: Services which.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, services which, in the opinion—

Mr. Renwick: If I might just comment, services which, in the opinion of the physician, are with respect to conditions which are not detrimental.

Clerk of the House: It would then read:

Clause 4. Services which, in the opinion of a physician, are with respect to conditions that are not detrimental to the health of the covered person or with respect to treatment for cosmetic purposes only.

Mr. Bryden: Before the question is put, Mr. Chairman, may I ask if it is possible, assuming we adopt this, that the legislative counsel could look it over and polish it up, in relation to the intention, because I think it is rather clumsy.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would appreciate that very much.

Mr. Chairman: All in favour of Mr. Dymond’s amendment, will please say “aye.”

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I will now put the amendment by the member for Scarborough West.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the amendment then is amended itself accordingly by no longer wishing to strike out item 4, so that B part of the amendment is like striking out items 5, 6 and 9 under the heading “exceptions,” and by renumbering the other items under the heading accordingly.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment of the member for Scarborough West will please say “aye.”

All those opposed, will please say “nay.”

In my opinion the “nays” have it.

Call in the members.

As many as are in favour of the amendment, will please rise.

As many as are opposed to the amendment, will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the “ayes” are 21; the “nays” 37.

Mr. Chairman: Schedule “A”, as amended, stands as part of the bill.

On schedule B:

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, in the matter of schedule “B,” this is one of the most obnoxious parts of this bill and it has to do with co-insurance. We must admit that, because of the passing at second reading, we are stuck with the principle of co-insurance, much as we may regret it, but at least it should not be bad as this schedule makes it seem.

Under this schedule, the insurance companies are only liable for 80 per cent of the cost of medical insurance, after the deductible of $25 per person and $50 per family has been made. In my view, and in the view of this side of the House, the insurance company, even after the deductible has been allowed, should pay 100 per cent of the medical bill.

This type of insurance has been put into practice in Alberta; we can learn from their experience as it has been most unsuccessful. Alberta has found that six times as many people prefer the type of insurance that covers the cost of medical service 100 per cent—six times, Mr. Chairman—and yet we in this province, despite the experience learned in other jurisdictions are insisting on pushing this co-insurance on the people of the province of Ontario.

Why would the government do it? To me, it comes back to the very same answer as has been in so many sections of this bill. The people who want schedule B, the way it is worded at the present time, are the insurance companies, and nobody else.

Many doctors with whom I have talked—

Mr. McKeough: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that the hon. member is debating the principle which is set out in section 5, and not the principle which is in the schedule at all.

Mr. Trotter: No, Mr. Chairman, I am not moving to strike this out, I merely move to say that after the deductible has been allowed—I admit that I am stuck with the principle of a deduction, $25 per person and $50 per family, and I admit that I do not like that principle—that 100 per cent of the balance of the medical costs should be covered, and not just 80 per cent. What happens in this case is that if a doctor's bill is $100 for one person, $25 is deducted, and then under the policy only 80 per cent of the $75 is payable.

I say that 100 per cent of that $75 should be payable. Twenty-five dollars is enough to have taken off a policy.

Take the average man who is perhaps making $75 a week. To him $50 is a lot of money, and if he has a family, $50 is even more so. This, again, is a type of policy that puts a hardship on the individual, and more particularly on the individual family. It is also a type of policy from which the insurance companies have made the greatest profits.

They are the ones who want this type of policy for two reasons, one of which is that a lot of the heavy costs of administration of these policies is in servicing small claims. Well, let us face it, to the low income earner, no claim is a small claim, and he is the one who would suffer most under such a set-up.

So that I plead with hon. members of this House to bear in mind that if people want co-insurance—if they want the deductible—certainly, after the deduction has been taken off, $100 should be more than sufficient.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would like to move that schedule B of this Act be amended so that 80 per cent is deleted, and in its place, 100 per cent is placed, and that schedule B should read as follows:

That the benefits provided by this standard co-insurance, medical services insurance contract to a covered person, shall be the payment of 100 per cent of the benefits provided in schedule A, or the excess over $25 deductible per covered person, or $50 deductible per family, in any calendar year for the necessary additional professional services of a physician, wherever rendered, or the performance of such services, as the case may be, unless limited or accepted under this Act or under schedule A.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter moves that schedule B be amended as follows:

That the benefits provided by this standard co-insurance, medical services insurance contract to a covered person, shall be the payment of 100 per cent of the benefits provided in schedule A, or the excess over $25 deductible per covered person, or $50 deductible per family, in any calendar year for the necessary additional professional services of a physician, wherever rendered, or the performance of such services, as the case may be, unless limited or excepted under this Act or under schedule A.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, in speaking in favour of this amendment, I would speak more strongly than the hon. member for Parkdale. The idea of co-insurance has a superficial explanation, namely, that persons will be able to obtain insurance at a lower price by payment of a lower premium, or by payment of a lower subscription rate if they are prepared to assume some initial cost of the insurance and at some point to share a participation in any additional claims which are made under the insurance.

The reason why this has superficial appeal is that the differential in price is going to be such that it will of necessity attract a large number of people in that class of persons over the 1,800,000 figure and up to the next million who are not going to be in a position when they balance off all the other claims on their rather meagre income, to do other than to accept a co-insurance standard contract. And by accepting a standard co-insurance contract, they are going to hope that they will not have to pay any portion of the deductible, except in very unusual or extreme situations that it will make it worthwhile for them to have that kind of coverage.

The great bulk of the coverage might very well mean that they will, in fact, have to pay individually for the first part of the insurance because that will perhaps cover most of the claims which they will be called upon to make. The differential in premium between a standard contract and a standard co-insurance contract will, I am certain, be so rated that it will have a considerable attraction, for the reasons which I gave.

But, Mr. Chairman, in addition to that and without reverting—because that section has been passed—but in subsection 2 of section 6 you will find that in addition the Minister is able to designate classes of persons who might very well, under that section, appear to be required to take standard co-insurance medical services contracts rather than standard contracts.

Certainly if the hon. Minister intends that some portion of the group of people who are going to be partially subsidized are by designation of the Minister going to be required to have only a co-insurance contract, then I think he should so state to the House. It would then emphasize and illustrate the very point which I am making, that some people are going to be required to pay the first portion of the contract whether or not they like it. Indeed they may wish to have a standard contract coverage and be partially subsidized, and it may be that the Minister is going to force them to take a co-insurance contract for certain classes of the people within the community.

The other argument which is put forward for co-insurance is that in some way there is going to be a misuse by the people of the province of Ontario of the available medical services. If one reads the Hagey report, this is certainly the line that report took and in great detail it indicated that co-insurance was a very necessary means for keeping the people of Ontario honest so far as their demands on the health services within the community are concerned.

Fortunately, the government did not go so far as to accept the reasoning of the Hagey commission, but even so they have introduced this co-insurance feature on the ground that it is going to be available for people. But as I have stated, under subsection 2 of section 6 it appears that the Minister is going to designate certain classes of people who are going to be required to take co-insurance medical services coverage.

Now, certainly the experience in Saskatchewan, to the extent that their experience has been correlated, has indicated that there has been no rise in the use made of the facilities within the community unless it has been by reason of the decision of the doctors themselves in recommending care and treatment which they would not otherwise have recommended unless there had been public health insurance coverage for everyone in Saskatchewan.

I would think that while we would support this amendment, we think that the principle of co-insurance in public health plans is not an acceptable one and is one which the hon. Minister should seriously consider deleting. As I said at the commencement of my remarks, the other reasons against co-insurance have much more merit than the specious reason for implementing it which appeals to so many people, namely, a lower premium rate.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, when the committee was debating section 5 it set out that co-insurance features shall be made available. I wondered at that time if there was some kind of gimmick being displayed in this Act.

It seems to me, if I remember correctly my experience with negotiating coverage, that in the last two or three years carriers were dropping their co-insurance features. The only place where co-insurance features still existed were in the major medical parts of their plans, that is, anything above the standard plan. When we get into major catastrophic coverage they then had the co-insurance features, inasmuch as they had deductibles and they would pay 80 per cent of the excess. In the last couple of contracts we have had we have been able to change them by decreasing the deductible on the family basis and having the major medical coverage on a 100 per cent basis.

The carriers were dropping co-insurance in their standard contracts and I think they were dropping them because of public opinion against co-insurance features which were an easy contract to sell and could be sold without giving the true impression of what the contract covered to many people. In this section 5, and then carried on in the schedule, it says that the carriers "shall," that means they must, include in their contracts co-insurance features. I think we should delete the whole schedule B and not allow perpetuation of co-insurance in any way at all.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, it has been emphasized over and over again that the major problem in regard to medical care is not the cost of it but to make available to people adequate standards of health care, co-extensive with the vast store of our medical knowledge and the skills which medical science has developed.

I just fear that in respect of this co-insurance feature that carriers will emphasize the cheaper price. I could very well visualize them mounting a campaign of advertising which would point out to the would-be subscriber the savings that he might allegedly win by subscribing to the co-insurance type of policy rather than the standard medical policy. We know very well that insurance carriers like co-insurance, they prefer co-insurance to a type of policy that gives the first dollar coverage. I see something sinister in the inclusion of this feature in this bill. I would commend to the hon. Minister a consideration of accepting this amendment, going as it does but part of the way.

But what I really stood up to say to the hon. Minister was that we have come to the end of the battle in a clause-by-clause study and I want him to know that as we approach the end of the battle we treat it only as a battle, the war goes on. We intend to carry on the war until we achieve the day that we emasculate this statute of the principle of caring for the health needs of our people through private insurance carriers.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few very brief comments on this.

The hon. member for Parkdale stated in his usual graphic way that we are shoving something on the public. This is not so, Mr. Chairman. We are simply making the standard medical services contract available on a co-insurance deductible basis. I am quite prepared to accept, as I did during the debates on the principle of the bill, that this is losing popularity, but there are still sizeable numbers of people who like it. I had it myself before I came under the legislative group contract. A great many people use deductible insurance and it is here for them if they want it.

I want to assure the hon. member for Sudbury that there is nothing sinister in it. There is no intention nor attempt—the hon. member for Riverdale suggested that we were going to designate classes that must take the co-insurance—there is nothing in this bill that would lead one to imagine this.

I cannot see where the hon. member for Parkdale can see the hardship in this. There is nothing compulsory or mandatory about it.

If a subscriber does not want to buy it, he does not have to. The standard contract, first $1 coverage, is available for him and the belief that this has a deterrent effect, I do not believe is very valid. I have never been impressed with the idea that co-insurance or deductible features were any deterrent on service, or demands for service, or over-servicing, and I have not developed any greater liking for it today than ever I had. In fact, the records that are available to us across the country show that in those provinces where there are deterrent features built into the hospital insurance plan, the utilization is just as high as anywhere else in Canada. I think this is fairly positive proof that the so-called deterrents are a fallacy and do not work.

I can assure you that I am very pleased, sir, to hear from my hon. friend from Sudbury, that the war is still going on, because we are fighting the same war. We are, as I said at the outset of our discussions, aiming for the same goal, but we have taken different roads toward it.

It is very nice for my hon. friend from York South to say that this is specious and it is very nice for him to stand up with his cohorts and tell us that nothing short of the maximum is satisfactory, knowing full well, sir, if I am any judge at all, that he will never be called upon to assume the responsibility of providing this sort of thing for the people of Ontario.

We are charged with that responsibility and I say to you that this schedule B is an added service made available to the people. If they do not want to use it, there is no compulsion on them to use it.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sopha: You are charged with the responsibility, but could I, through you, Mr. Chairman, give you a piece of friendly advice? You have made a dreadful mistake in this business of the higher premiums for the aged and the infirm.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the end of the so-called battle, the fact of the matter is that some very serious flaws have been revealed in this bill. So much so that people who started out strongly in support of this government's plan have now climbed off the band wagon, and I venture the prediction that this bill will never go into effect until the government has faced up to some of its weaknesses in the next session. It is not just that we in the Opposition have fought and fought to get these amendments in —this government has been imposing its will on something like 30 of its own hon. members who started out being in favour of full medical coverage. You are not just ploughing us under, you are ploughing under 30 of your own members and most of the people of the province who want full coverage.

Mr. Sopha: You do not like the truth? The truth shall set you free.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I have a few final remarks concerning schedule B. One of the many weaknesses is that when you have a co-insurance type of policy, it opens up, among the insurance companies, so-called "competition." All this means is extra spending for advertising and it is the person promoting the policy and the insurance companies themselves that are going to get the benefit from co-insurance. It is amazing to hear the hon. Minister of Health admit that he did not think that deterrents did any good, because this is the specious argument that the insurance companies use—that it does do something good.

Obviously, the hon. Minister does not believe the insurance companies himself, and yet he is giving them a great big assist in trying to foist on the public a policy that is definitely not in the public interest. And even though some person might be persuaded, by high pressure tactics that some of the companies use in selling this type of policy, in the long run the average person who buys a co-insurance policy is taken in. He is a sucker, and in the long run, in the vast majority of these policies, they are definitely bad for the public. I see more—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member suggesting that the people of Ontario are stupid?

Mr. Trotter: I say that there is a sucker born every minute and you are helping the insurance companies hook their suckers when you allow these co-insurance policies to go out. They are just filled with small print that removes any possible value to the buyer from the policy. They are definitely weighted in favour of the insurance companies and it is most unfortunate that we have not only recognized this type of policy in principle, but even under this schedule B, that we allow such an item as the 80 per cent to remain in the schedule. It is certainly a disservice to the public of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Trotter's amendment—

Mr. Renwick: I have one question of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman. Will he give us the assurance that no portion of the group of people who are going to be partially subsidized will be required to take a standard co-insurance contract in lieu of a standard contract?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, before I answer that, may I repeat the question as I heard it:

Will the Minister give the House assurance that no one who will be subsidized in whole or in part by the government will be required to take a co-insurance contract?

I can give the hon. member that assurance, sir, absolutely.

Mr. Sopha: Could I ask one further question of the hon. Minister?

Since this is not to come into effect until June 1, 1966, we are told, would the hon. Minister assure us that in the interstice, all of the debates concerning this will be studied from the point of view of possible improvement?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the debates are already under study.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Trotter's amendment, will please say "aye."

All those opposed, will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Clerk of the House: While we are waiting, Mr. Chairman, I now have the redraft of clause 4 of schedule A, prepared by the solicitor as follows:

Services with respect to conditions that, in the opinion of a physician are not detrimental to the health of a covered person, including services for cosmetic purposes only.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Trotter's amendment, please rise.

All those opposed to the amendment, please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 21, the "nays" 38.

Mr. Chairman: I declare that schedule B stands as part of the bill.

Shall the bill, as amended, be reported?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, the question now before the committee is whether or not the bill shall be reported. I would like to submit to the committee that it should not be reported. I am not now discussing the principle of the bill, and I do not intend to do that, for that matter, unfortunately has already been determined and is no longer open to discussion.

I merely wish to take the principle as given and to submit to this House that even within the terms of what we regard as a very inadequate principle, the detailed execution in the provisions of this bill are so inadequate as to leave us in the position where the only humane thing we can do is to let the bill die on the order paper right now, and give it a decent burial.

During the course of this committee discussion, which has extended over several days, many most disturbing facts have come to light as to the inadequacies within the bill, within its own framework. So much so that even the Globe and Mail was moved to protest that, as it said in an editorial of June 11, that we—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order or a point of information, I just wonder how far, Mr. Chairman, you are going to permit this debate to go on this motion.

Mr. MacDonald: This is in order. There is a motion before the House.

Mr. Bryden: I assume, Mr. Chairman, that you will permit it for as long as it is in order. Certainly what I have been saying up until now—

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Chairman, I was asking for your ruling on it, not the hon. member's.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would suggest that, as long as the argument pertains to the actual reporting of the bill, it is in order, but I am questioning how an argument can be carried very long without going into other subjects. I am sure that any remarks you make must deal specifically with a question of reporting this bill.

Mr. Bryden: I fully appreciate what you have said, sir. I agree with you that we are now discussing the question as to whether or not the bill shall be reported. I am suggesting that it should not, and I am trying to give reasons why it should not be reported. I was merely indicating that it is not only we in this House, but people throughout the province, who have been appalled to discover exactly what is involved in this bill, even within its own limited principles, to the point where even the Globe and Mail, which though generally independent in its outlook tends to support the government, was moved to say, "It now turns out that we and the people of Ontario, have been naive." It said that "we," that is the Globe and Mail, and the people of Ontario, were naive in accepting the bill at its face value. The detailed examination of the bill brought to light many facts which had not been appreciated by most people in Ontario. Now that the people of Ontario appreciate those facts fully I am satisfied that they are overwhelmingly against this bill, and for that reason I think it should not be reported.

Mr. Chairman, in order to summarize as briefly as possible my position in this matter, I have drawn up what I am calling a bill of indictment against the detailed provisions of Bill No. 136. This bill of indictment includes 11 points, succinctly stated, outlining the inadequacies of the detailed provisions of the bill. I think it would be useful to the House at this stage.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, surely this has gone beyond the area defined by you a few moments ago? This has now entered the realm of partisan politics.

Mr. MacDonald: What are you up for?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It has nothing to do with completing technical procedures. All the debate is finished. The reporting of the bill is a procedural matter and it does not lend itself, as you indicated, to any debate beyond—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not think a frivolous objection of that kind is worthy of consideration. I do not know what we are engaged in in this House from day to day, and at all stages, if it is not partisan politics. Naturally, we are each trying to put forward our point of view to the public. If the gentlemen on the other side will restrain themselves for a couple of minutes, I think I can summarize quite succinctly my reasons why this bill has been revealed to be so inadequate in its detailed provisions that it ought not to be reported.

As I indicated, I have summarized the points that are inadequate in what I have called a bill of indictment, including 11 points. This, I may say, is illustrative rather than exhaustive. I am sure that other hon. members could add other points to it, but I will be satisfied with these points. Taken together, I think they are fatal to the bill.

1. No provision at all is made for the large number of people who will not qualify for government subsidy and yet will not be able to afford the high cost coverage available from private carriers.

Mr. McKeough: This is the principle of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: 2. The provision that a private carrier must make a standard contract available to anyone applying for it is unenforceable. Thus there is no guarantee that people not in the subsidized groups—

Mr. Chairman: Order! I believe that all these matters have been discussed throughout the various clauses of the bill. As long as their reference was to the reporting of the bill, something outside of this House, something apart from the discussion, you could be talking about the advisability of not reporting the bill. As soon as you deal with the details, the deficiencies of, or what is contained or not contained in the bill, you are definitely out of order.

All in favour of the reporting of the bill—

Mr. Bryden: No, just a minute, Mr. Chairman. I will accept your ruling. I think it is extremely narrow, I think it should be in order to summarize our basic objections, but I agree that this is a very difficult matter on which to rule and if it is your ruling that what I have been saying is not in order, I will accept your ruling.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): But you will rearrange the words?

Mr. Bryden: No, I am not going to rearrange the words; I am merely going to say that I have drawn up these 11 points in which I think that—

Mr. Chairman: Order! The 11 points are out of order.

Mr. Bryden: There is nothing out of order about them. They constitute my reasons for opposing the reporting of the bill. I think it would have been useful if I could have refreshed the memory of the House by enumerating these gross inadequacies of the bill. If that is out of order, I will not attempt to do so. I will merely issue them outside of the House, since I cannot do it inside the House.

However, I would emphasize once again, Mr. Chairman, that the objections to the bill in its detailed provisions, apart altogether from its principle, are so serious that the bill should not be reported.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the bill be reported?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine. I realize the limitations which are on me, that I am not able to outline in detail many of the points which have shown the inadequacy of this bill. I may say, sir, for my part and for the part of my party, that there has been a steady stream of letters coming in, not only to my office but, I know, to many of the hon. members' offices—letters from people who had hoped that they were getting health coverage, and letters expressing shock at the type of bill on which you are now asking us to vote. Many of these letters have said that they understood that we had Medicare, and that the government was proposing something of a broad coverage, and people suggesting that they feel that this bill is so leaky, so full of holes, that it does not wear. I will be very glad to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I most certainly did not get to—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would it be 200?

Mr. Thompson: I have not added them but I will say it would take me some time to add them, and I will get a great many more. I may need some kind of computer system to add them, but let me tell you that this bill, and the discussion, is naturally of concern to all the people across this province. They have followed it with a great deal of interest.

Before I sit down I am going to say one word, through you, sir, to the hon. Minister of Health: Knowing his fiery Scottish temper, and realizing the indefensible position he was in in connection with pushing this kind of tattered bill through the House, I want to compliment him on the fact that I do not think he lost his temper once. He showed patience. But I sympathize with him being put in this position, because always in the back of my mind has been the thought that he was a reformist, and I think this was a most uncomfortable position—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am a reformist.

Mr. Thompson: —for a man such as this to have had to stand up here and defend what is indefensible.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of reporting the bill, please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of the bill being reported will please rise.

All those opposed will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "yeas" are 38, the "nays" 21.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion carried.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee rise and report Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance, with certain amendments, and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance and certain amendments, and asks for leave to sit again.

Mr. Speaker: The committee of the whole House begs to report Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance, with certain amendments, and asks for leave to sit again. Shall the motion carry?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): No, Mr. Speaker, I move that the report of the committee of the whole House be amended by adding thereto the following words:

That the Bill No. 136 be referred back to the committee with instructions that it has the power to consider and make recommendations to further amend the bill to provide:

(1) That government support according to an appropriate sliding scale be made available to provide standard contracts to those whose taxable income does not exceed $3,000 per year, and;

(2) that all residents of the province be entitled to receive standard contracts from the Minister of Health upon voluntary payment by them of appropriate contributions as determined by the Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make two brief comments with regard to this. I am not going to discuss the amendments we have dealt with or the principle of the bill which has been adopted by the House, but I think there is one serious inadequacy of this bill within the framework as it is now establish. Since the government has agreed to pay subsidies only up to $1,000 taxable income, this simply means that a great number of people in the upper ranges of that

$1,000 and just beyond it simply are not going to be able to buy insurance.

You will have the kind of experience you had in Alberta where 15 per cent of those who needed it most, were not able to buy it. The Hall commission report said a person should have something in excess of $5,000 to be able to buy his own insurance.

An hon. member: Do you believe that?

Mr. MacDonald: Right, and they, I think, had some authoritative studies on it. What you are going to do is to force everybody beyond $3,700 to buy his own.

So we suggest that we should raise that sliding scale up to $3,000 taxable income, and this will meet the point that was authoritatively documented in the Hall commission.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to you that this government has violated one of its basic principles—that this plan is voluntary. Therefore, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that anybody who wants to pay to the government, through the division that The Department of Health is establishing under the Ontario hospital services commission, the amount designated for the standard policy, should be able to get that standard policy encroachment in exactly the same way as this government is going to give it, wholly subsidized or partially subsidized.

In other words, if you really believe your voluntary principle, let anybody who makes that payment to that division of The Department of Health, be entitled to get the coverage in the same way as those who are going to be partially or wholly subsidized.

These are two points within the framework of the principle of this bill, and our suggestion is that it should go back to the committee of the whole House to consider these two points, to consider amendments which would implement them, so that the bill, inadequate as it is, will be somewhat less inadequate before it goes into law.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, before this is called to a vote, I would just like to say on behalf of this party we support the motion moved by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party. We have gone, admittedly, over and over the various points of this bill, and I can well understand that the hon. member has made the motion he has merely to underline the fact that the people that we need to help the most, once we have covered this 1.8 million people, are being ignored. That, in essence, there are thousands of people in the province of Ontario who are not going to be helped one little bit by this Bill 136. It has been a bill that, in essence, has put up a big front, but behind it there is little substance.

Many of the people who now appear on the surface likely to get some help are already covered by welfare. It is the people as a whole, spread across the board who need a decent minimum protection at as small a premium as possible. That is what is needed, and if this bill is referred back these problems can once more be gone into because, as we have discussed the bill, we have seen good amendments time after time go down to defeat. It only means that the people of this province are not being served as they should be.

And if, as the hon. member for York South has said, this bill is reconsidered, we can once again go into this problem of those people who are the aged, the people who are ill, who are obviously going to have to pay a much higher premium than even we at first thought. We thought maybe the maximum, which was shocking enough at $180, would be the top. We now find that it is obviously going to be much higher than that for many people who can least afford to pay.

An hon. member: Who says so?

Mr. Trotter: Well, because the hon. Minister is afraid to tell us how much the premium is going to be, it is quite obvious to say it could be $250. I agree on all-fours with this. So again in summation I ask the House to support the motion of the hon. member for York South in order that we can do as best we can in clearing up this bill which I think has been a shady deal for the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: I have grave doubts really that this amendment, which is more of notice of instruction, is in order—that is, for this particular stage of the bill, although I do have the notice of motion on the votes and proceedings as submitted by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) regarding these two provisions as mentioned in this amendment for the required 48 hours. Perhaps this hybrid amendment should also require this much notice.

However, I am not going to be technical at this time, and will proceed with putting the motion as moved by Mr. MacDonald.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if it is properly before the House then is it not properly debatable?

Mr. Speaker: I thought perhaps it should have 48 hours' notice.

Mr. Bryden: Well, it is just an amendment to a motion. It is an amendment to a motion to adopt the report of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: But I understand that this is an instruction that Bill No. 136 be referred back to the committee with instructions; so I thought it was sort of an instruction, a notice of instruction, as well as being partly an amendment.

Mr. Bryden: But we have previously moved, without notice, amendments to committee reports. I do not mean to report from the committee of the whole House, but from standing committees—to refer back with instructions to do certain things—and it was always considered to be in order then, sir.

Mr. Speaker: I considered this a further stage because I had already received notice of instruction before; I thought that this was a further stage of that notice as it was washed out by not having the 48 hours' notice.

Mr. Bryden: We understood that we could not move that motion in that context; but I believe, sir, that it is in order to move it here as an amendment to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I am accepting it.

Mr. Bryden: I would like, if you will permit, sir, to make a couple of comments in regard to this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Proceed.

Mr. Bryden: I am happy to hear that the hon. gentlemen opposite look forward to my comments with such enthusiasm.

Mr. Speaker: I think an extremely strong case can be made with regard to both the specific amendments which, we are suggesting here, the committee of the whole House should be asked to make. With regard to the first one, proposing that subsidization in part should be available up to a limit of $3,000 taxable income rather than $1,000, it covers a point which, I think, has concerned a great many people both inside this House and outside.

We are concerned, as I believe many are, with the substantial group of people who, shall we say, fall between two stools. Their incomes are not low enough to qualify for subsidization under the bill as it now stands, and yet they will undoubtedly not be able to afford the full cost of standard contracts as provided by the insurance industry.

Take, for example, a family of husband and wife and two children with an income of $3,900 per year. That would give them a taxable income on standard exemptions of $1,200. It would just exclude them from subsidization; they would have to pay at least $180 a year for a standard contract, possibly even more. We submit that such a family cannot afford that amount. Even a family with the same number of children making, shall we say, $3,500 a year, under the present plan of the hon. Minister would probably have to pay about $160 for a standard contract. The degree of subsidization the government would provide would be only $20, roughly; I do not have the exact figures.

I submit that a family of four earning only $3,500 a year cannot afford $160 for a standard medical insurance contract. If the government would see fit to consent to the instruction posed here to the committee, then I think we could eliminate that problem to a considerable degree. It would mean that the sliding scale would be levelled out, spread over not $1,200 of taxable income, but $3,000. Thus, taking the example I gave before, a family of four could earn up to $5,700 a year before it would be disqualified from subsidization. It could earn up to, shall we say, about $4,400 a year and still get 50 per cent subsidization. That is realistic; that is related to some degree to the capacity of these people to pay.

As the bill stands now, there is a substantial group of people in the middle low income bracket who are going to be left out in the cold. In fact, they will be worse off than merely being left out in the cold because they will be required, through their taxes, to contribute to the subsidization of standard contracts for other people and yet will not be able to afford them for themselves. I think that the hon. Minister—I know that the government has pretty well closed its mind to any further suggestions, but I think that this is a suggestion it should consider. It has been the first opportunity we have had to put it before the House. This would, I think, eliminate what I would call a serious inequity and one which I think the hon. gentlemen opposite should be prepared to regard, themselves, as a serious inequity.

As to the second point in the amendment, it would empower the committee to make a detailed amendment which would implement in part what the hon. Minister himself said is the intention of the bill. He said the intention is to make this similar to The Hospital Services Insurance Act. Under The Hospital Services Insurance Act, anybody can go to the government agency, the OHSC, and buy hospital insurance coverage. A great many people do not have to go to that agency but they may go to it. We are suggesting that the same should be true here.

A branch of The Department of Health which will be in charge of the administration of standard contracts for subsidized groups. We are suggesting here that the powers of that division should be expanded so that it could sell standard contracts also to other people who apply for them voluntarily. There would be no compulsion about it. But if they applied, it could make such contracts available to them. Thus those people could, in the exercise of their freedom of choice, to which the hon. gentlemen opposite claim to attach such importance, buy from the government agency or from a private carrier, whichever they wished.

I would suggest that this amendment would have two beneficial effects, as far as the bill as a whole is concerned. First of all, it would broaden the group covered by the medical services division of The Department of Health. We on this side have objected that, as things now stand, the medical services division is being asked to provide standard contracts to a group that consists almost entirely of bad risks. If this amendment were adopted, it would make it possible for that division to bring in also some good risks so that it may be able to reduce the rate below the $180 the hon. Minister has talked about. I think it provides the division with a method of diversifying its risks just as, to a certain degree, a similar provision in The Hospital Services Insurance Act has permitted diversification under that Act.

Second, there is the whole question of the regulation of premiums charged by private insurance companies. We have suggested that the detailed provision of the bill on that point is ineffective and I am convinced that is true. It is going to be difficult to apply an effective maximum; but there is another way of handling this problem, Mr. Chairman, which has been tried in other contexts in other countries, and that is to set up a public carrier in competition with private carriers. It then becomes a sort of a balance wheel which regulates rates through the force of competition, thus making less necessary the exercise of compulsory powers. And in view of the difficulty of setting maxima, it seems to me that there is a lot to be said for the idea of having a public agency which will be in the market along with the private carriers, offering standard contracts—I would suggest that it would not offer anything else—in competition with the private carriers. Then we will have a pretty good way of finding out whether the rates established by the private carriers are too high. If they are, perhaps legislative action may be necessary, but indeed it may be unnecessary because the mere existence of the public carrier undercutting the rates of private carriers will have a strong influence in bringing those rates down.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I submit that these two amendments, which we suggest the committee should have the power to make, would greatly improve this bill without altering its basic principle. The government is wedded to the principle; the House by majority vote has decided on that principle. All we are trying to do here is to improve the implementation of that principle. I think that both these proposals are constructive in that direction. I would hope that the government would seriously consider them, rather than merely dismiss them out of hand and use its majority to vote them down.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I would think, Mr. Speaker, that it should be made abundantly clear that, in supporting this amendment along with my hon. friends to the left, we are not in any way abandoning the recommendation of the Hall report—

Mr. Bryden: Nor are we.

Mr. Sopha: —that the fund for health care ought to be subsidized rather than the individual. I take it the amendment is drawn in the fashion that it is, because it must be consistent with the principle of the bill which this House has adopted and I think the record should be clear that we are not departing from—

Mr. MacDonald: Our earlier amendment at second reading contained these points—if it had been accepted.

Mr. Sopha: I feel, Mr. Speaker, without elaboration, that to subsidize the individual gives rise to too many bureaucratic nightmares and makes the whole thing administratively impossible. I have the greatest assurance that a year from now—well, not quite a year, about ten months from now—the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), after he has considered this over a long period of time, is going to be back here with substantial amendments to this Act before it goes into force because the intelligent bureaucracy with which this province is blessed will soon see that this Act is impossible to administer in its present form.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment proposed by Mr. MacDonald that Bill No. 136 be referred back to the committee of the whole House, please say “aye.”

All those opposed, please say “nay.”

In my opinion, the “nays” have it.

Call in the members.

As many as are in favour of the amendment will please rise.

As many as are opposed to the amendment please rise.

YEAS	NAYS
Bryden	Carruthers
Bukator	Cecile
Davison	Connell
Farquhar	Cowling
Freeman	Dunlop
Gisborn	Dymond
Gordon	Gomme
Lewis	Grossman
(Scarborough West)	Guindon
MacDonald	Harris
Nixon	Henderson
Oliver	Hodgson
Paterson	(Victoria)
Reaume	Johnston
Renwick	(Carleton)
Singer	Kerr
Sopha	Knox
Taylor	Lawrence
Thompson	(Russell)
Trotter	McKeough
Troy	Noden
Worton—21.	Olde
	Pittock
	Price
	Randall
	Reilly
	Reuter
	Roberts
	Rollins
	Root
	Rowe
	Rowntree
	Simonett
	Spooner
	Stewart
	Walker
	Wardrope
	Welch
	Wells
	White
	Whitney
	Wishart
	Yaremko—40.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 21, the "nays" are 40.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Next order of business.

Clerk of the House: The 55th order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 701:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I think we were talking, sir, about medical research when the estimates closed previously. I would like to add a few more statements in connection with medical research if I could and I am just going to quote from the Royal Bank of Canada weekly letter of February 1965, and I quote:

Research should not be allowed to lag. Canada's expenditure on medical research through the medical research council in 1964-65 is $6.9 million. On the basis of gross national product compared relatively with the United States it would be $90 million and on the basis of relative population, it would be $126 million.

If I could quote from the Hall commission report, on page 106:

Total expenditures on health research in Canada in 1962, was $16.5 million. Of this the province of Ontario contributed $400,000.

From Medical Education in Canada, by J. A. MacFarlane, and I quote:

A practice which is carried out in the United States and has found some support in Canada is to permit the medical undergraduate at the end of his first or second year to suspend his medical course for one year and to work instead as a research assistant. He may take some collateral course work. This year entitles him to receive a bachelor's degree in science and this practice should be encouraged for it promises to lead its participants into an academic life and to increase the number of teacher-scientists who will come from our medical schools.

Just following on with this article that was published:

The support of medical research by government is more liberal in the United States than in any other country and this is reflected in the award of the Nobel prize in medicine given 38 times, and Canada has won it only once.

I would like to make another comparison. In Sweden, in 1959, with a population of 7,000,000, they made $16.5 million available in government funds for medical research. In Sweden investigators have obtained the Nobel prize in medicine eight times compared with only once in Canada.

In Britain £8,000,000 or more was made available for medical research, and significantly this exceeds greatly the federal support in Canada; and the Nobel prize in medicine has been awarded to British scientists 26 times.

When I sat down previously after discussing these estimates, I had been suggesting, sir, that we should be trying in every way that we could to get recognition through medical scientists. It will be my hope, and I offer it to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), that in some way we should strike a medal which should be presented for significant scientific research in Ontario. I would like to go back again to Dr. MacFarlane's suggestion, and that is young students studying medicine may have a year in which they would work in laboratories in order that they might be attracted into scientific studies.

Taking another, from Dr. McReary, dean of the faculty of medicine at the University of British Columbia, who says that:

In Canada we felt the additional impact of subsidization of students in the physical sciences but not in the health sciences. As a result of this subsidization of one branch of science, we in Canada have felt the drain of able students away from medicine more keenly than most countries.

I have figures on this. For example, from the DBS figures, federal government expenditures on scientific activities for the fiscal year 1962-63 show $132,726,000 in physical sciences, and when you look at the medical sciences it was $10,911,000. In the 1964-65 estimates, $179,120,000 in physical sciences and in medical sciences $13,112,000.

I have a feeling that you may feel that I am suggesting that the province should take over the whole of research. I am not doing this in any way. I listened very carefully to the point that the hon. Minister of Health made about an Ontario research council being set up similar to the Quebec medical research council. I think that the argument he raised against this has validity in that he was suggesting that this is just another step and is not providing broad coverage. I have not seen the Hansard, but I understood that you had suggested, as well, that the reason Quebec set up a research council is that Quebec does not take research funds from Ottawa.

If you did say that, I would suggest that is inaccurate. In 1963-64, approximately $1.5 million was granted by the medical research council to Quebec universities, including Laval, the University of Montreal and McGill. So that particular argument I do not think is valid.

I can see the point you were making about Ontario having its own research council while this is just another step, another layer.

On the other hand, when I raised this it seemed to me that there are regions in Ontario, not only geographical regions but regions of activity in which we could be doing research studies which we would be able to see more readily than they would in Ottawa. For that reason I still throw that suggestion out to you, to have a look at the idea of an Ontario research council.

From my own point of view, we see the outflow of medical students going to the United States. I think that you mentioned to me and I am sure with the medical insurance bill being debated—and I do not have the Hansard—I got the impression that you said there was a flow of graduate students coming back into Ontario again.

I therefore got the figures on the number of Canadians who are working and studying in the United States. According to a publication of the federal Department of Labour, in 1964-65 there were approximately 223 Canadians doing graduate work in the health sciences in the United States. I would like to re-emphasize that point: 223 Canadians are doing graduate work in the United States. In addition there were about 80 Canadian undergraduates in the health sciences in the United States. From these federal Department of Labour statistics, it is assumed that about one-third of the total number were from Ontario.

I would suggest, sir, that in view of the remarks that I have made that we have got to be doing far more in Ontario to encourage medical science and to encourage research. I suggest that this is particularly pertinent now with the fact that the grants which we were getting from the Ford foundation and other charitable organizations are now going to go to underdeveloped countries. I am convinced there is a gap in that area in itself, and I am also convinced that in medicine we are not giving enough recognition to young people to go into scientific research. We are not exciting them with the drama of the test tube warfare and I would hope, as I said before, that the hon. Minister would encourage them, through awards as well as through further grants—and that also, when he goes to Ottawa to the coming conference, he will be putting forward a further firm approach to try to get more research grants for Ontario.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, we did stop at the question of research when we rose the other day, and I had very complete figures at the time.

The total figure that we spend here in the province on research is actually $5,316,250—made up of $3,365,250 in provincial funds and $1,951,000 in federal funds. This includes research in almost the total spectrum of health services: alcoholism, drug addiction, the cancer foundation and institute, mental health research, maternal and child health, medical rehabilitation of crippled children, tuberculosis research and then, in general, public health.

This does not, Mr. Chairman, take any account of the capital funds we provide for research building, and I do not believe that I am in a position to tell you what they would be. They are not always as high as you might expect, but they are likely to be higher because, in keeping with the opinions of the late director of the Canada medical research council, we agreed that the provincial responsibility should be the provision of buildings and facilities. Nonetheless, there is a continuing programme of clinical research and this is quite active in respect of mental health research, Mr. Chairman. The programme is now co-ordinated by a prototype—if you will—of the proposal made by the hon. leader of the Opposition that we have an Ontario medical research council—the medical advisory council to the Ontario mental health research foundation, as of course has each of the other two foundations, namely, alcoholism and other addictions, and the cancer research foundation, has its own medical research council. There might be some validity to the argument that all these three should be brought together but each seems to feel that its area of interest lies in a particular sphere, and that it is well served by having its own medical advisory group.

The hon. member has mentioned something that certainly does concern us a very great deal. Over the past year, particularly, we have done fairly considerable research into the matter of figures, namely, these people, graduates of our medical schools particularly, leaving out province, leaving our nation—the so-called “brain drain.” It was rather surprising to find that only 64 per cent of the students registered at Canadian medical schools are Canadian students; 36 per cent are, in the first instance, from other places. Of course, they are likely to go back to their homeland. Eleven per cent, for instance, are from the UK, and Commonwealth countries; 24 per cent are from the United States. I do not know whether this is a compliment to Ontario and Canada or not, or whether it points up the fact that we are better situated to provide places in medical schools, or our medical school courses are more attractive to students from other nations than are their own. One per cent comes from other countries. So this, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

I understand it is very hard for a student to get into a medical school; there is a far greater demand than there are actual facilities to teach doctors. Does that mean to say that 24 per cent of the medical students in Ontario are from the United States? Surely not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, this is not in Ontario, but I presume Ontario would likely be comparable to the other provinces; 24 per cent of the medical students in Canadian medical schools are from the United States. This is 1964-65.

Mr. Trotter: Surely it cannot be that bad. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, we have a responsibility, I think, as a country to educate people, especially from the underdeveloped areas, but I think it is ridiculous if our schools are allowing 24 per cent to be Americans who have their own funds, their own schools. I do not care if those students are the sons of doctors who were from Canada originally or not, but surely that cannot be right. If it is, we should step in and stop it. It is a disgrace if that is the case.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: These figures come from federal sources, so I would have really little reason to question them. But the fact does remain that we always have educated a fairly substantial number.

Mr. Trotter: But not in the case of the United States. If it was from Africa, that is another thing.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, has the hon. member anything to back up his statement? You just cannot stand up and say—

Mr. Trotter: No, no, the hon. Minister is telling me this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There are many Canadian students who by choice go to universities outside of Canada. Every Canadian student studying medicine, or any of the other professions, does not automatically study in Canada. He may go to the United States, he may go abroad, he may go to any one of a number of countries. There are no geographic boundaries to education. If some of ours go to other countries to be educated, it is only reasonable to expect some of them here.

Why I pointed this up, Mr. Chairman, was simply to show that the whole picture of this so-called brain drain needs to be looked at totally before we decide that a great many of our Canadian graduates are going to the United States.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the hon. Minister's remark about this high percentage from the United States studying in Canadian or Ontario medical schools, I am thinking of the shortage of doctors. The Canadian medical association had set as its goal the training of 1,500 physicians a year. From 1945 to 1962, Ontario produced about 37 per cent of all the doctors in Canada, and this means that Ontario should take as its goal the graduation of 555 doctors every year. This is absolutely necessary to meet the minimum standards required for adequate health care for everybody.

Now, if you look at the records—from 1960 to 1961, there were 297 doctors graduating from the four Ontario medical schools; in 1961-62 this number increased to 312 and in 1962-63 it dropped back to 303. This is approximately 250 doctors a year less than we need in Ontario. And what is being done about this? I raise this because the hon. Minister is saying that he is permitting this large number of students coming from the United States, who, he says, in all probability will go back there.

Last year, for example, there were 880 applications for the first professional year of medicine at the four Ontario medical schools. Of the 880, only 171 or 19.4 per cent were accepted. Is it possible that over 80 per cent of the applicants were unqualified? Well, Mr. Chairman, I think not. I think that frankly this government is being remiss in its responsibilities to provide the best health possible to the people of Ontario.

With my colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale, I am rather shocked at this fact, where we have this shortage of medical schools, to know that such a high percentage are being used for the training of doctors who you know will be returning to the United States.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister—he mentioned the fact that there are young people who leave Ontario and go and study in the States and then come back to Canada to practise—could he tell us what proportion last year of the number of doctors who started practice here had their training in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, I cannot. This is an area where The Department of Health up until the present time, has not yet had any responsibility, apart from an overriding responsibility to be concerned about the provision of adequate numbers and adequate quality of trained staff. But we are doing studies in this area now, and I would say we are following these matters up quite steadily.

I would, however, point out that—again quoting from the federal government figures—from the year 1961 to 1965 the physicians in active practice have steadily increased. It was 8,040 in 1961 and in 1965 the number is 8,702. In a population-per-physician ratio, in 1961 it was one doctor to 776 population, and in 1965 practically the same, one doctor to 773 population.

I think that the hon. leader of the Opposition must understand, of course, as I know he does, that you cannot start developing or producing doctors overnight.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) announced what the province of Ontario had decided to do, and this planning is going forward. Four of the universities—the four existing medical schools—have already signified their intention to increase their enrolment of first-year students, and active planning is going forward for the development of an entirely new medical school, something that has not taken place in Ontario since 1951.

Not only is that going forward, but I understand that within The Department of University Affairs, and coming within the purview of the departmental committee concerned with these things, there is discussion already, before the one that is at least approved in principle has begun to build, about where the next medical school will be. So there is not any question but that this matter is very much before us actively. I repeat, while we have no legislative or delegated authority, we are taking this interest to ensure that there will be adequate numbers of doctors, dentists and other necessary health workers.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, June 14, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Monday, June 14, 1965

Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	4113
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Rowntree, agreed to	4139

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 701:

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, when we rose at the dinner hour, I believe that I may very well have led the hon. members astray with an answer I gave. I believe I may have left the impression that 36 per cent of our students in Canadian medical schools were of foreign extraction. This is not right. It is 36 per cent of the applicants for the first year. The number of students originating from outside of Canada and graduating from our medical schools in Ontario is just about five per cent, but the number applying for first-year placement in our schools is 36 per cent.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the hon. Minister could tell us how many of those in our schools, actually attending, are from the United States? You told us 24 per cent and surely that must be wrong; I hope it is.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I just explained. That is wrong, Mr. Chairman, and my deputy pointed out that this was the impression I left. There are not 24 per cent attending. Thirty-six per cent of all those applying for entrance as freshmen to our medical schools are of foreign origin, but the number who are admitted and finally graduate from our medical schools amount to five per cent. This is not further broken down in our records, relative to medical manpower. We do not know the country of their origin, whether they go back to the country of their origin and how many remain practising in Canada—but this is a very marked difference, between five per cent and 24 per cent.

Mr. Trotter: I am glad to hear that, Mr. Chairman, because I think two points are important on this. I realize as a country or as a province, whichever way you want to look at it, in comparison with the rest of the world, we have a great deal of responsibility to help people who are from the so-called have-not nations. I for one do not object that our taxpayers would subsidize them, for let us face it, anybody who goes to university, whether taking a medical course or any other course, is being subsidized by the taxpayers. I do not object to someone from the have-not nations being treated in this way, because I realize this education, particularly for doctors, must be transported across our borders.

But I think our government should watch, and particularly the province of Ontario should watch and encourage the registrars in universities to watch, the registration of students from the United States. It is not that I am anti-American, but I realize that the Americans have a great many of their own colleges which are outstanding and their taxpayers are in a position to subsidize their own students. We are not in a position to subsidize American students, unless they are some individuals who are particularly outstanding and who are going to offer a great deal to medicine as a whole. But usually when they are that young we do not know.

There is the danger that many of our own Canadian boys and girls will not be able to get into medical school simply because we do not have the space for them. Therefore it would be of deep concern, if we were going to have a number of Americans whose fathers were originally Canadians. We all know that if a doctor has gone to a certain medical school here in Canada, his children often get preference. If he can say his father is a graduate of Queen's or the U of T, or something like that, the student gets the preference, even though the father lives across the border.

I think that we, as Canadians, should be most particular on who attends our colleges, because we have a responsibility, not only to medicine as a whole, but we have a responsibility to the Canadian taxpayer in a hard-boiled economic sense, and we have a responsibility simply in the patriotic sense. I think that too long have we been easy-going in this matter and I would hope that the hon. Minister would check into this question, as to how many Americans are actually attending our universities, often on the grounds that their fathers attended our medical schools.

If there was all kinds of space there would be no question, but the important thing is that if a Canadian boy or girl wants to attend our schools, we should go out of our way to see to it he has the opportunity. We cannot control where he would go afterwards. I am not suggesting we do, except that by our example, by trying to stir up interest and enthusiasm, both in a medical sense and in a patriotic sense, we keep them in Canada, and more particularly from our own point of view, we keep them in the province of Ontario. But it would be ridiculous—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Non-sense!

Mr. Trotter: Someone is saying “nonsense.” But I again repeat—

Mr. McKeough: Let us keep them in Canada.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): That is not someone, that is the hon member for Kent West.

Mr. Trotter: But again I repeat, we want to keep them in Canada, and preferably in the province of Ontario. Certainly if the taxpayers are paying for them, we want to build up our own province. It only stands to reason.

Mr. McKeough: We want to build up Canada.

Mr. Trotter: And I, as a person in the province of Ontario, would be glad to see them spread throughout Canada. Again as I have said on a number of occasions, it is important that we have, if possible, a lend-lease system where we send them throughout the world. This is part of our social responsibility. But we, in the Ontario Legislature, have a first duty to the province of Ontario and it is a sad thing either when we see the brain drain caused by their leaving the province, or again when we are educating individuals, particularly from the United States, who we know are going to return there.

After all, many of the Canadian-born doctors who are now practising in the United States have more or less heard the siren call to the Yankee dollar, and to them we do not have any responsibility. The taxpayer has subsidized their education. Our responsibility is to the people here in Ontario. I think we should go out of our way to see to it that the registrars of our universities bear in mind, and our hon. Minister of Health bears in mind, that Ontario scholars have first choice. I would appreciate it if the hon. Minister of Health would analyze his figures and give us, probably at some future date, to what extent the breakdown is of the non-Canadian students attending our medical schools.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I think the main office estimate is the appropriate estimate on which to deal with topics that relate to a number of bills that fall within the jurisdiction of The Department of Health. I would like to make a few comments and ask a few questions with regard to The Embalmers and Funeral Directors Act.

Mr. Chairman: What item would this be?

Mr. MacDonald: I just explained that I thought the main office would be the appropriate place to deal with issues relating to legislation that comes under The Department of Health.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it actually is not listed under any vote because you do not support it, but it does come within the purview of the division of environmental sanitation, which is vote 711, if the hon. member would not mind.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine. Thank you.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, on vote 701, I wonder if the hon. Minister could give a full report to the House at this time of the total number of individuals placed under The Homes for Special Care Act to the middle of 1965, and then a precise breakdown by Ontario hospitals through the province? The hon. Minister did say in reply to a question earlier this session that he would do so at the time of his estimates, and I for one should be very much interested to know where we stand.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The total number, Mr. Chairman, in nursing homes is 914 patients—these are bedridden patients. Sixteen are from Goderich, 26 from Brockville, 234 from London, eight from Owen Sound, 36 from North Bay, 40 from Hamilton, 107 from Toronto, 187 from New Toronto, 19 from Orillia, 63 from Kingston, 73 from St. Thomas, 69 from Whitby, and 36 from Penetang. In addition to that, the total number of patients on probation, that is in approved boarding homes, is an additional 713. Unfortunately, I cannot give the hon.

member the breakdown of whence they came by hospital. The resident ambulatory patients who have been discharged from the hospital and put in residential accommodation under homes for special care is 774. These persons are decertified. Again, I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member the hospital of origin of these 1,487 people. The total is 2,223.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, if I am to understand properly, Mr. Chairman, those patients whom the hon. Minister has referred to as in boarding home care—have never been in the overall figures given in various reports. They have never been considered part of the patient complement within the hospital itself. You always made this distinction on other occasions as I recall.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have, Mr. Chairman, but in the report they have always been included in the patient load.

Mr. S. Lewis: I have just one other question to ask the hon. Minister. What is the rated bed capacity of Kingston Ontario hospital?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I wonder if the hon. member would mind taking that up under vote 713.

Mr. S. Lewis: All right, I shall not pursue it. I would like to make a couple of points, in view of the hon. Minister's response, Mr. Chairman, which I think are reasonably important. It is very difficult to establish the precise number or percentage of patients who are presently in Ontario mental hospitals, and who should be, according to the analysis made, in nursing homes or in alternative type accommodation in order to increase the continuing treatment capacity of the Ontario hospitals themselves.

However, an effort has been made in that regard. An effort made in the Metropolitan Toronto mental care report in which the patient population was broken into five separate categories, the first two relating to active and continuing treatment, and the last three were as follows—continuing medical and nursing care, nursing care, and domiciliary care. Now, applying the last three to the total numbers in the three hospitals at Toronto, Whitby and New Toronto, we had an overall average of 47 per cent—almost half—that this study felt should not be there. They should, in fact, be in nursing homes under The Homes for Special Care Act, or in alternative accommodation.

Now, let us take a look at what that percentage translates itself into in some of the major hospitals in the province of Ontario, and compare that with the numbers that have actually been moved according to the figures which the hon. Minister just gave the House. St. Thomas, rated at 1,850 beds: there should be roughly 900 patients who should be out of St. Thomas. So far the hon. Minister has moved 73—73 out of 900. Whitby, 1,500 total patient-load, 700 should not be there, the hon. Minister has moved 69. Hamilton, total patient-load 1,700, 800 should not be there, the hon. Minister has moved 40. Kingston, total rated capacity must be well over 1,000 and I suspect it is closer to 1,500, the total number moved so far, 73.

In other words, in some of the biggest Ontario hospitals, something between five and nine per cent of the actual number who should be moved out, have been moved out, and I remind the hon. Minister that The Homes for Special Care Act was enacted in 1964 and that he has had considerable time since to institute it. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the fact emerges transparently clear from all of this that it is not going to be possible to relieve the patient population at Ontario hospitals by way of The Homes for Special Care Act. Although it is within itself in a limited way, a worthy pursuit, it is not in fact an answer. I suspect that experience will have shown the hon. Minister that it is not, in fact, an answer. And why in one sense is it not an answer? Let us take one, or two of these hospitals. Kingston Ontario hospital where so far we have been able to remove only 70—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This whole matter comes under the mental health vote, 713. I grant you that homes for special care item is under vote 701. All of the remarks of the hon. member are being directed toward the specific hospitals, and this comes under vote 713.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I am dealing directly with The Homes for Special Care Act.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member listen to a suggestion that, because most of what he has to say has to do with the hospitals, I would be quite prepared to carry this matter of the homes for special care over to vote 713 for full discussion? Would that meet with the approval of the hon. member?

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I have not got my information here for—

Mr. S. Lewis: You have your information, I take it, on the mental health branch?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I have.

Mr. McKeough: Be reasonable!

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. member for Kent West in his appealing and seductive voice urges me to be reasonable. I shall, under the circumstances, be reasonable. There is probably only one other person in the world, Mr. Chairman, who agrees with me that his voice is seductive. I shall withhold to vote 713 and make certain comments at that time.

Before I give up the floor on this particular issue, I wanted to discuss some of the reasons why homes under the homes for special care are difficult to find. Now, shall we postpone the entire discussion until a later vote, or do you want to—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Do you mind? We will take the whole thing at one time.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, then homes for special care shall be under mental health.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Vote 713.

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering if the hon. Minister could tell us why, when under the public accounts for the year ending March 31, 1964, we had voted $60,000 for bursaries for medical and dental undergraduates, and during the year we spent only $29,000, leaving $31,000 unexpended. What is the problem that we cannot use it up, seeing that we are so short of people in this field?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer is very simple, sir, there were not applicants for the bursaries.

Mr. Trotter: Has the hon. Minister made any inquiries why there were not people applying, because we know that a great number of students apply, but cannot even get into our schools, either for medicine or for dentists? Is it that all those who managed to get in, or the vast majority, have their own funds, or—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the answer is that there are funds available to students who want funds, without the return of service which we have written in, as a condition of our bursary.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, in previous years we have voted for the Ontario heart foundation $150,000 and for Illalce lodge in Cobourg, $4,800. They are no longer in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member should recall that we voted that in supplementary estimates earlier in this session.

Mr. Trotter: Was it the same amount?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Exactly the same amount.

Mr. Trotter: I do not have the staff, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister has, and it is sometimes hard to keep track.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): If I might ask a question, Mr. Chairman. May I ask about bursaries for nurses who want to take a course for Bachelor of Nursing Science? Are there bursaries for such students?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Bursaries for which, sir?

Mr. Troy: Bursaries for those who want to take a course to become a Bachelor of Nursing Science. Are there bursaries for them?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I announced that in the remarks I made when I presented my estimates to the House.

Mr. Troy: I am sorry, sir, but for circumstances beyond my control, I was not here.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Troy: From whom do I get the information? From which branch?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: From The Department of Health. You can discuss that under the hospital services commission.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, on February 12 of this year, approximately four months ago, the registered nurses association of Ontario presented the hon. Minister with a request for what they described as a nurses' collective bargaining Act. This was legislation designed to provide for collective bargaining in their profession. I believe the actual bill was prepared by their counsel, who is both a QC and an MD. I should think that is a combination of qualifications that would suit him peculiarly to the particular task he undertook.

I will confess that I am not necessarily up to date on all the latest developments, although I try to keep myself posted. At the time, I understood that the hon. Minister said that he would consider this request for the legislation concerned. I have not heard any recent comments from him as to what he plans to do. We are coming close, I assume, to the end of this session. I see no notice on the order paper for such legislation. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what his intentions are.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this has no place in my estimates, since there is item dealing with registered nurses or diploma schools of nursing. But I will say to you, sir, that I stated to the nurses, as I stated to the House, that on receipt of the brief and proposed legislation, I would put it before the government. This I did; it is still before the government.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, there may not be any precise branch for this, but if the nurses of the province of Ontario do not fall within the aegis of the hon. Minister of Health, then he will be hard put to explain where they should be raised.

This legislation, or the proposed legislation, came in considerable haste, Mr. Chairman. In fact, in an article in the Globe and Mail of March 11, 1965, written by Barrie Zwicker entitled "Nurses Controversy—"

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry. The Minister advised you that this did not come within the scope of his estimates at this time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if nurses and the problems of the nursing profession do not fall with The Department of Health, would the hon. Minister please tell me where they fall?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the education of nurses is the responsibility of the Ontario college of nurses, and the Act comes under the supervision of The Department of Health, but the authority is delegated to the Ontario college of nurses. I have given the explanation as to what happened to the bill as a courtesy to my friend the hon. member who asked the question. I really have nothing more to add to it at the present time.

Mr. S. Lewis: I can appreciate that the hon. Minister may not wish to add to it at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it is not a case of not wishing. I stated, I think quite clearly, that I have nothing more to add to it at the present time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Then I am just going to ask him a question. If the hon. Minister does not wish to respond, these are his estimates; he is at liberty, of course, to refuse to respond.

I point out, Mr. Chairman, that we are not discussing nurses' education. I am discussing collective bargaining in the nursing profession.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Would you give me the item that you are speaking on in this vote, 701?

Mr. Bryden: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We are discussing proposed legislation relating to The Department of Health. This is a clear responsibility of the hon. Minister of Health. He has had a request before him. We have asked a question, and we wish to ask further questions about it.

Mr. Sopha: I want to put in my protest on a point of order. Nurses work in hospitals, and hospitals come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Health of this province and I—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): If you have no nurses, you have no hospitals.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed. My friend the hon. member for Grey South is very wise in these subjects; he says if we have no nurses, we have no hospitals. Now I submit to you that whether there is a specific item or not in these estimates, anything dealing in a general way with health in this province comes under the aegis of the hon. Minister of Health, and he ought to answer in the presentation of his estimates.

Mr. Trotter: He knows it, too.

Mr. Sopha: Yes. It is an effort by him, you see, to avoid a very unpleasant and very embarrassing subject.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Under vote 701 there are some 37 items and these are the items we are discussing.

Mr. Sopha: My goodness, 1,000 nurses came and demonstrated outside. Perhaps the hon. Prime Minister should get up and inform us.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I think the point really is, as always, that the hon. member is trying to broaden out the estimates to deal with things that simply do not come under them. There are places in the procedures of this House where these matters can be discussed, but the Chairman has ruled, as explained by the hon. Minister, that in his estimates this matter simply does not arise.

We either have rules in the House or we do not have rules in the House; do not try to put it on the basis that we do not want to talk about the nurses. This matter has been discussed here before, but I am not talking about nurses tonight. I am talking about procedure; I am talking about the inevitable process of trying to broaden out the estimates. They are now much broader and discussion is much broader than has ever been permitted in my time in the House. The hon. member is simply out of order.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order to what the hon. Prime Minister has said. Last year in this House, roughly at this time, but earlier in the session—under this first main vote, the hon. member for Parkdale focused a great deal of his opening speech—indeed, if my memory serves me, his entire opening speech on the problems of the nursing profession. The hon. member for Scarborough West followed suit to some degree and we subsequently raised and argued under this vote, Mr. Chairman, all of these questions Why was it not out of order then?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Do you not pay any attention to the Chairman of the House?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would come under item 16. May I suggest to you that it comes under item 16 first? Then I submit to you that it might very well come under 714.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

I would ask the Minister; does it come under item 16?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, it does not come under item 16, Mr. Chairman. That is a grant to the registered nurses association of Ontario to assist them in a campaign of recruitment for students into nursing.

Mr. Sopha: How about 714?

Mr. Chairman: I must rule that it does not come under item 16.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think it would be the more logical place to discuss all matters pertaining to hospitals under the hospital services commission vote.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister says 714, we can wait.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there is another matter I would like to raise in regard to vote 701, and that is item number 11—an item of $4,000, designated as “unforeseen and unprovided, as may be directed by the Minister.” I have raised this matter in connection with certain other estimates. I am happy to say that most departments seem to have abandoned the practice of including in their estimates an item for matters that are “unforeseen and unprovided.” I am not going to make a major issue out of this, but I would suggest that the hon. Minister should abandon this particular item in his estimates. Under The Financial Administration Act it is quite unnecessary, and I believe that there is no need for it to continue. I suggest that in the interest of sound economy this type of item should be dropped from all estimates, including the estimates of The Department of Health.

Vote 701 agreed to.

On vote 702:

Mr. S. Lewis: Some time ago—I believe it was in 1961—a very interesting study of home care needs in Wellington county was carried out, demonstrating conclusively—I have the report in front of me, and the hon. Minister doubtless has seen it—that the use of public health personnel greatly facilitated the after-care hopes for a large number of patients. This study was made of all the county residents discharged over a one-week period from general hospitals in Wellington county and the city of Guelph.

I would be interested to know, Mr. Chairman, whether this study in itself has been followed up; whether the hon. Minister feels that similar projects can be extended to other counties in the province? What is the policy of the public health branch in the after-care programmes from general hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This study has been followed up, Mr. Chairman. The programme has just moved under way and we hope to make it a pilot project for health units in a semi-urban, semi-rural population. If it attains the objectives which the board and the director and the nurses of that unit and we ourselves believe, then we will expand it as rapidly as possible across the province.

We agree in the department, together with Dr. Dale and his staff, that this kind of a project which he has recommended on the basis of this study has much promise, but this one is just under way.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask again, in relation to the public health administration branch, Mr. Chairman, what contact there is between the public health facilities in the province and the mental health facilities?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: More and more, Mr. Chairman, the public health units are getting into the mental health field. They are assuming their normal or natural function in respect of mental health, as they have done in respect of other health matters. They have, traditionally, taken responsibility for the preventive side of health care and the follow-up, which is part of prevention again, and more and more the public health units are getting into this field. They have been sending nurses for special courses in psychiatric nursing and mental health care to equip them to assume this new role that is growing in importance.

Now every health unit—I do not want to leave any wrong impression—has not taken it up yet because it is difficult to change the views of long standing, but more and more of them are taking it up, and more and more of them are making provision in that sort of programme for this sort of thing. They are going through a period, at the present time, of revision of their role. Some of the programmes which have loomed large in their activities over the past years are assuming less and less importance. They are looking for new areas and they are getting into programmes such as mental health prevention and mental health follow-up and more and more are becoming involved in this matter.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, can the hon. Minister give us any specific example of any public health unit across the province which is intimately involved in some way, and some outline of the extent to which that involvement commits them—the number of public health nurses, and other members of the staff?

I have not been able to find a unit which is, in fact, intimately involved and I am curious to know of one.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can think of four at the present time, but I do not have the specific details concerning each one. But the St. Thomas unit is for Elgin county; Windsor-Essex county unit is involved; Welland has been carrying on some very exciting experiments in this area, and last week, I think it was, I opened a new building for Brampton and Brant county health unit and was delighted to see that they had expanded their activities in this mental health area, too. Those are four that come to mind immediately.

Mr. S. Lewis: In view, Mr. Chairman, of the obvious decreasing area of traditional medical preventive features, does the hon. Minister foresee, or does he have in mind the day when the public health and mental health units in his department will be amalgamated as one, with the emphasis on public health shifted accordingly? I imagine that over the past half dozen decades we have overcome most of the original public health needs and public health efforts.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am rather disappointed to hear this type of thinking. Unfortunately, this is the type of thinking that is widespread. We may have controlled the needs for public health, but we certainly have not overcome them by any means. Just let us let down our bars one little bit and I shudder to think of what could happen with respect to the spread of epidemic diseases.

Then there are other programmes which are in keeping with our times, with the changing modes of life and with the changing mores of our society.

It is rather an exciting thought that the hon. member proposed, Mr. Chairman, and it is one that is being talked about increasingly in these days. I would hesitate to say that I could foresee the time when there will be one. It will come; I believe that, but I am not quite so sure that I am prepared to say that I can foresee the time when it will come. More and more it will mould in by a process of sometimes slow, but steady evolution, and certainly it will not come about by revolution. But it is moving in that direction, but it could take a long time yet.

Vote 702 agreed to.

Vote 703 agreed to.

On vote 704:

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the mother and child health branch, I believe there was an experiment carried on in Ontario, trying to assess the number of still births and live births, etcetera, in the province of Ontario. It took place in 1963. There were slightly over 155,000 infants born alive in Ontario in that year; in the same year there were 2,294 stillbirths, and over 3,500 infants died before they came to their first birthday. I have two questions for the hon. Minister in regard to this problem. As a result of this survey, has his department come to any conclusions or developed any plans for the future? The second question concerns the great disparity of live births and the number that die in various areas. For example, in a three-year period 1960-62, the annual death rates under one year of age for 1,000 live births was 16 to 25 per 1,000 in Middlesex county; 26 to 35 per 1,000 in Prescott and Russell, and 36 to 45 per 1,000 in Glengarry, which is extremely high.

Could the hon. Minister give us any reason why the death rate for children is so high in certain areas, such as Glengarry?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the study is still under way. While it has been going on since 1960, it is still going on and it is not completed. It is not likely to be for some time yet.

The data collected refers to 80,000 deliveries, and this information was gleaned from more than 500 practising physicians and their patients. The disparity between the rates in various parts of the province are difficult at times to understand, but then when we take them on the basis of rates it is not a very good statistic, yet it is the one we always use. For instance, there were nine infant deaths in Glengarry but, of course, in 1963 the rate is 21.5.

Mr. Trotter: My figures in Glengarry show 36 to 45. What percentage does the hon. Minister have per 1,000?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Glengarry, 21.5. In 1963, there were nine infant deaths for a rate of 21.5. Muskoka, for instance, had eight infant deaths for a rate of 14.8. Manitoulin had a total of four infant deaths for a rate of 14.9. The rate, unfortunately, is not a very good figure, but it is the figure that is always used. It would be foolish for me, Mr. Chairman, to say at the present time we have plans to deal with this other than to continue through our public health units. Glengarry is an area that is well supported by a good public health programme. Indeed, it has the distinction of being the first public health unit as such in our province and is, therefore, the oldest one. It is very progressive in its outlook and they carry on good local programmes, but other than continuing education in the value of adequate and sterile pre-natal care, and educating the mothers in the manner in which to deal with new babies, at the present time we have no new knowledge to pass on.

We are concerned in the department about both our maternal mortality rate and our infant mortality rate. There is no denying the fact that in both cases they are the best rates in Canada, but this does not satisfy us because they are still, in my opinion, too high. Northern Ireland has us beaten for maternal mortality and the Netherlands, for instance, have us beaten quite roundly for infant mortality. We continue to seek ways and means of reducing our mortality rate and bringing it more into line with these other states. At the present time, we have no new knowledge other than to continue our efforts through pre-natal care and follow-up care for the infant, to see if this will be successful.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I think we vote $75,000 per year for the cost and expense of maternal and child health. I think it is also used for educational purposes; we spend about $50,000 of that amount on education, is that not correct? I was wondering why we have the other $25,000 that is voted. I was wondering if the hon. Minister could print some of his pamphlets in French; they are all in English, at present. I notice in some of these areas where the infant mortality rate is high—not necessarily Middlesex but certainly Glengarry and the Prescott area—there would be a large French-speaking population. Does the hon. Minister not think that we might use some of the $25,000 not expended to translate our material into the French language?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are going into French-language pamphlets for health matters now.

Mr. Trotter: When is this going to be done?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Starting with this year's estimates.

Mr. Trotter: I am glad to hear that, Mr. Chairman, because it has been urged on this side of the House during the estimates on a number of occasions. I believe it was a year or two ago that the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) brought up this matter and we got a very negative answer from the hon. Minister, but I am glad to hear that he is slowly moving in this direction. I admit that the overall average of infant mortality in Ontario is not as bad as across Canada. As a nation, we rank very low with the other so-called advanced countries; we are away down as to the matter of infant mortality. Certain parts of Ontario rank almost as low as the lowest parts of Canada. I do think it is the language difficulty in some cases, so I am glad to hear that something is being done.

In regard to the pamphlets, when in other than the English language, are they going to be only in French or in any other language?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Only French, as far as we know at the present time.

Mr. Trotter: I might suggest to the hon. Minister that in certain large urban areas such as Toronto or Sault Ste. Marie, there is a very heavy Italian population, and the cost would be relatively small if you circulated your pamphlets not only in the French language but in the Italian language. I think it would be a very good idea to look into it. I think about one-eighth of the population of Toronto is Italian, and there are also large segments of populations in urban areas that are Italian. Using this type of pamphlet for child care and for the care of the mother would be a very great assistance to the population.

Seeing that the hon. Minister is now going to use the pamphlets in the French language, I hope he will give some thought to putting these same pamphlets out in the Italian language. I know that in the case of labour regulations it is found quite feasible to put out pamphlets in a number of languages having to do with workmen's compensation, unemployment insurance and safety regulations. In the case of mother care and child care, I think the same thing should be done.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to advise the hon. member that the city health department has its own responsibility; we do not subscribe to that in any way. I understand that it does provide pamphlets in at least eight languages.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, on vote 704, I wonder if the hon. Minister would be good enough to give us some information with regard to the oral smear test used by dentists in the detection of throat cancer.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I cannot give the hon. member any information about it except to say that it has been instigated by the dental profession itself and that is encouraging the use of this. I have no report on the findings so far. I believe that it shows great promise, as a good deal of the new psychological tests do.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Chairman, through you to the hon. Minister, this, I think, would offer the hon. Minister some information. It is an extract from one of the papers, dated Toronto:

Only one in seven Ontario dentists is using a new smear test to detect oral cancer, even though the detection kit is supplied to them free, the dentistry faculty at the University of Toronto said today. The test is so useful that the dentists who did use it found cancer or pre-cancerous tissue in about one in every 15 patients, said a letter from faculty staff mailed during the weekend to every Ontario dentist attending the annual convention of the Ontario dental association.

Dr. D. L. Anderson said Monday, many of the province's dentists are neglecting their responsibility to detect oral cancer in its curable stages. Dr. Anderson said of the province's 2,464 dentists, only 377, one in seven, have made use of the tests started a year ago. Despite the lack of response, the test was responsible for the discovery of 61 malignancies, all in early stages of development.

The smear tests are provided by the faculty in co-operation with the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation. Mucus samples taken by local dentists are sent to the university for analysis.

It goes on to say:

Dr. Cecil L. Strachen, a former member of the federal Royal commission on health services, told the association that Canadian children are not receiving adequate dental care. He said that the dental profession has not shown it intends to render such care to any except those who can pay its fees. He said that while more children's dentistry is being done, new techniques have added to its costs and made it even more prohibitive to more people.

I would think this matter of smear tests for oral cancer deserves the attention of The Department of Health of this province. When these figures are quoted, sir, it would seem to me that it should become a matter of real concern to The Department of Health and to the profession of dentistry and I would hope that something can be done for the people in the province.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this matter is of concern to us. The responsibility for the cancer control programme is delegated to the Ontario cancer treatment and research foundation. This project to which the hon. member refers is a federal project on oral psychology, supported by the federal government, and initiated, I believe, by the faculty of dentistry at the University of Toronto. I think it is quite understandable that dentists do not willy-nilly take a sample from every mouth.

I read that same article which the hon. member read into the record tonight, sir, and I talked to some of my dental friends about it and they certainly were not in agreement with the views of the author. Indeed, they questioned his figures very seriously. We have no way of checking to see which dentist is using this smear and which is not. This cancer is not as common as many other kinds. Nonetheless, if there is any evidence of it or fear for it, the patient should get the benefit of any tests. But the cancer foundation is the agency which acts on behalf of the government in the cancer control programme and I can assure you that it has shown a very great deal of activity in this new field of diagnostic psychology.

Vote 704 agreed to.

On vote 705:

Mr. Trotter: Under vote 705, I just have a few remarks here and some questions, Mr. Chairman.

The grants to the school for dental services. We voted for the year ending March, 1964, $50,000. We spent $31,000 and we have unexpended $18,000. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, how they arrive at these grants, because when you check the accounts you see some sums vary. For example, the Chatsworth school, I think, got $1,587; Simcoe $817; Ottawa $2,000. I would like to know how these grants are arrived at and why there is nearly $19,000 unexpended in a matter that obviously is a great need.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the schools may enter into an agreement with the department to assist in the financing of a programme. The maximum grant available to any school is $2,000, but to feel that because our estimate of this is coming down is evidence that the programme is being neglected, is not quite accurate. As health units, particularly the larger health units, come into operation, more and more of them are taking over the school dental programme and the need for this programme is steadily fading out of existence. I think that answers the hon. member.

Mr. Trotter: I remember, reading in the Hansard of March 5, 1963, you were asked how the grants were arrived at, and the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, used some terms as—for townships and municipalities of less than 5,000 population, the grants are 30 per cent; with a population over 5,000, the grant is 20 per cent, and I was not sure if it was 20 per cent of what.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The hon. member is confusing this with the grants paid toward health units. In the case of a total rural municipality, by and large the health unit grant—and this is getting onto another vote altogether, a vote which has already been passed—paid by the government is 50 per cent of the budget. Above a certain population, it is reduced to 33½ per cent and then reduced on a scale to 15 per cent of the budget in the case of a unit, based on Windsor, for instance, as the Windsor Essex county unit is.

This dental health programme is an entirely different thing. The grants are paid to municipal governments under section 91 of The Public Health Act and are provided either by a contract system where the dentist supplies the equipment, materials and his time and is paid on an hourly rate, or larger centres may furnish a clinic and the dentist there receives a regular salary to which the grants may be applied. But again, I repeat, because of the budgetary decrease, the programme is not disappearing. It is rather being taken over and included in a more complete public health programme.

Under 5,000, 30 per cent up to a maximum of $2,000. This is the population and these are the figures I presume my hon. friend mentioned. If the population is under 5,000, the grant is 30 per cent of the cost, up to a maximum of $2,000. Where it is over 5,000, 20 per cent of the costs, up to a maximum of $2,000.

Mr. Trotter: Well then, Mr. Chairman, would it be correct to say that the grants for dental services have nothing to do with overcoming the shortage of dental services here in the province? For example, we were questioning you, I think, back in 1963 about the shortage of dentists, and you were of the opinion that we had to increase about 60 dentists per year in our schools in order to overcome the shortage.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In our dental schools.

Mr. Trotter: Yes. And instead of the students increasing in number at dental colleges, for the most part, they are falling. For example, in 1962-63 we had 126. That was a peak year. In the following year it dropped to 119 and now, I think, it is back somewhere in the neighborhood of 123.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this has nothing to do with dental schools at all. These are—

Mr. Trotter: This would come under the first vote, would it not?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I have nothing to do with dental schools. This is a dental programme in elementary schools.

Mr. Trotter: Well then, your argument is that the dental schools would come under The Department of Education?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, on vote 705, each year when the estimates of the hon. Minister are before the House, I have spoken on travelling clinics. For some years now the travelling clinics on the railways, the CNR and the CPR, have been up in northwestern Ontario, and the hon. Minister said they very likely would be there for many years on account of the great need for dental care in these areas. But there are a number of mobile clinics that, I understand, move about the province. I am having very great difficulty in getting one of these mobile clinics up in my area in northeastern Ontario. The problem—or at least part of the problem—has been, I understand, accentuated by the fact that it is so difficult to get the dentists to service these mobile clinics. Can you give me any information about the possibility of when we may be able to get one of these travelling clinics up in Nipissing? There are certain areas of that riding that need help.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, through the department we operate two dental cars and they are both operating just now. CPR from November 1, 1963, to October 31, 1964, visited three places, treating 634 children. The one on the CNR visited eight places, treating 1,315 children. Does the hon. member want to know the places it stopped?

Mr. Troy: In northwestern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, from the Quebec border to Lowbush River. Norembea, Brower, Frederickhouse, Hunta, Driftwood, Fauquier, Moonbeam, Harty, Opasatika—and I am afraid my pronunciations may be somewhat unintelligible, Mr. Chairman. Mattice, Pagwa River, Nakina, Auden, Armstrong, Savant Lake, Hudson, Amesden, Quibell, Redditt, Wade, Minaki, Malachi. From Capreol to Long Lac, Westree, Gogama, Foleyet, Elsas, Peterbell, Oba, Hornepayne, Stevens, Caramat, Hillsport.

From Cartier to Ingolf on the Manitoba border. Biscotasing, Ramsay, Woman River, Sultan, Dalton, Missanabie, Franz, Amyot, White River, Rossport, Nipigon, Dorion Ouimet, Pearl, Loon, Ruith, Upsala, English River, Ignace, Dymont, Wabigoon, Oxdriff, Eagle River, Vermilion Bay and Hawk Lake.

These are the places visited during last year. And the mobile dental clinic I am advised, has buses owned and operated by the Red Cross, and we believe there are three of those in operation.

Mr. Troy: But the names that you mentioned that are serviced by the railway cars are almost all in northwestern Ontario, Vermilion Bay, Mattice, Savant Bay, and Eagle River. None of them are in the eastern part of the province.

Vote 705 agreed to.

On vote 706:

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Chairman, on vote 706, I have a question on the order paper, No. 108. It has been on for several weeks and I wonder if the hon. Minister has answered this somewhere along in his opening remarks and perhaps I have missed it. Or possibly he could answer it tonight.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I answered it, Mr. Chairman, in my opening remarks, and if I can recall from memory—I cannot remember the number—the ultimate from each school is anticipated to be 100 students per year. I would have to look up Hansard, but I did answer it in my opening remarks.

Mr. Paterson: I will check that Hansard, sir, and possibly it could be removed from the order paper.

Vote 706 agreed to.

On vote 707:

Mr. Trotter: On vote 707, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on the important health problem we have here in Canada, and particularly in the province of Ontario, because venereal disease control seems to have been getting out of hand in Ontario more quickly than it has in the rest of Canada. I would like to put a few figures before the hon. Minister, and also quote to him some of the reports of his own department to see what can be done. It is well known to the hon. Minister that syphilis is increasing in Ontario faster than in the rest of Canada. I will just give you some idea. In 1944 Canada had 16,475 reported cases, while Ontario had 5,365 or about 32 per cent of the total in all of Canada. So that our rate in Canada was about 138.1 for 100,000. Ontario is slightly worse and the national average was 135.4 per 100,000. In the year 1950, the effects of the wonder drugs reduced a great deal of this problem and it seemed to be solved. This decline in the incidence of the disease continued until 1957—the year, incidentally, that the present Minister of Health assumed that portfolio. I know we cannot blame the hon. Minister for the increase. In that year Ontario had only 410 reported cases of syphilis, or the rate of eight per 100,000, well below the national average.

But in 1963—the last year for which full statistics are as yet available—they show a tremendous increase in this syphilis rate. While the number of reported cases across Canada has climbed steadily to over 2,700, or 14.7 per 100,000, the rate in Ontario has been even more astounding. In that year Ontario reported 984 cases, or 35.3 per cent. In other words, Mr. Chairman, we are higher than we were back in 1944. In ratio terms, Ontario is again ahead of the national average with 15.3 cases per 100,000, as compared with the Canadian average of 14.7.

Ontario has not had a comparable total since 1950. Now in dealing with this same type of disease, gonorrhoea statistics do not show such a damning indictment of our control of this problem. There has been a steady increase in gonorrhoea over the same period, but Ontario is doing slightly better than the rest of Canada. Obviously, there must be some inadequate measures for control here in the province of Ontario. To prove that I have to point to the annual report of The Department of Health here in the province of Ontario, and it is worth putting on the record. It says effective control of this disease—that is, speaking of syphilis—depends upon the degree of success achieved in locating, examining and treating, where indicated, as many of the contacts as possible in the shortest possible space of time. The method of control cannot be said to be operating efficiently when less than one contact per patient is reported, and when only 56 per cent of the contacts reported are located. It is evident that there is room for considerable improvement in both the quantity and quality of contact information provided with each reported case. And, in addition, for considerably increased activity in the level for reporting venereal disease, both the public and the medical profession will have to be educated with respect to the need for these objectives to be achieved if any genuine and permanent improvement in venereal disease control is to be achieved. This is from the report of our own department, and I would like the hon. Minister, if he could, to give us—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Could the hon. member tell me where he is reading that from?

Mr. Trotter: The annual report of The Department of Health.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: What date?

Mr. Trotter: Sorry, the 1962 annual report; I took this from 1962, but the rate has increased since then—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh no, it has not. I put the 1964 on your desk some weeks ago.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, I know, but the figures I made were quite recent and I was quoting from the 1962 report. Sir, you cannot deny that this is an increase.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I certainly am denying them, Mr. Chairman, most assuredly, and I have the facts here to prove it.

Mr. Trotter: Well then, let us hear the facts.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have the DBS figures, the annual report on venereal disease in Canada in 1963, issued by the epidemiology division of The Department of National Health and Welfare from 1931 to 1962. Right down the line Ontario's record is better than Canada's. In 1931, first figures Canada, second Ontario in each case: 4.4, 4; 4.9, 3.9; 3.7, 2.9; 4.3, 3.3; 5.2, 4.1. There is no need to read all of them, Mr. Chairman, because the same thread runs through the whole fabric. 1956: 1.3, 1.2; 1957: 1.1, .8. Ontario and Canada were on a par in 1958. In 1959, Canada one, Ontario .8. In 1960, Canada one, Ontario .9. There are cases for 100,000 population. In 1961, Canada .9, Ontario .6; in 1962, Canada .7, Ontario .6. I think it is worth pointing out to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that the very fact that we are unearthing cases is not evidence that control has been lost, but I think it is evidence of the excellence of our control that we are digging out cases, bringing them to light and bringing them under treatment.

Mr. Trotter: No, just a minute, Mr. Chairman. Even your 1964 report, in two or three places, states this is going up, and has been going up for some years. I might even repeat, sir—page 27, the 1964 report, the 1964 rate, table three—showed a slight increase to 16.4 per 100,000 population from the previous year's rate of 15. This is on page 28 of your own report. Then they go on. There is still the same problem, as I said in 1962, that only 50 per cent of your contacts are being reported. This is again on page 28:

The average case of syphilis has usually had four to five relevant contacts. Effective control of the spread of this disease depends upon the degree of success achieved in locating, examining and treating, where indicated, as many of these contacts as possible in the shortest space of time. This method of control cannot be said to be operating efficiently where less than one contact per patient is reported and when only 50 per cent of the contacts reported are located. It is evident that there is room for considerable improvement in both the quantity and quality of contact information provided with each reported case and, in addition, for considerably increased activity in the level of reporting venereal diseases.

Both the public and the medical profession will have to be educated in respect of the need for these objectives to be achieved if any genuine and permanent improvement in venereal disease control is to be realized.

This is your own report. I know, from what I have heard from your own clinics, that this is becoming a problem with the doctors. This is spreading. It may be that the so-called wonder drugs, as in tuberculosis, develop a reaction in the human body. We do not know, but the wonder drugs may not work as well as they did. But the fact remains that in all of Canada venereal disease is increasing and in Ontario there are a great number of cases, and they are increasing, and it may be because we have so many large urban areas.

It is obvious that in an area like Toronto, perhaps because it is a sea port, this disease is going to be more difficult to control. Your own report bears out that we have a long way to go. I do not know what figures you have or from what you are quoting, but I am quoting from your own report.

Then at the top of page 28, the bulk of the reported increase—the reported increase, do not forget—in syphilis for this year was in the latent stage.

This increase is, undoubtedly, in part the result of better reporting by physicians. It is equally true that better reporting, by itself, does not provide an adequate explanation for the continued high rate for infectious syphilis.

Even though the doctors are doing a better job of reporting, that is of private individuals, the rate is getting worse. Inevitably, the responsibility is thrown on The Department of Health. The figures that you reported to me surprise me, and I do not know where you are getting them. I am reading from your book, and this goes back certainly to 1962 and 1963, and obviously the hon. Minister of Health is not aware of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Health is very much aware of the problem. He has tried to carry on a programme of venereal disease control and prevention. I wonder if the hon. member for Parkdale ever tried to investigate contacts in cases of venereal disease. I think he has to recognize that—

Mr. Trotter: What course would I take?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does not take a very long imagination, Mr. Chairman, to recognize the very grave difficulties the clinic staffs are up against. In fact, I am quite surprised that we dig out as many contacts as we do. If you read the rest of the report, you will see that five or six contacts is average for one case. Then you must try to have the infected person reveal the source of his or her infection. I have no apology to make for the fact that we do not get all of the cases, but that does not mean to say that we are at all complacent. This is an area where continual education is necessary and is carried on, but we would be dishonest if we tried to tell you that it is a sure-fire way of dealing with this problem. Of course there is not.

In the army and the other services, we had almost complete control. You could get almost any kind of information out of the men and women in the services and even then you could not find all of their contacts, by any means. How can we expect to do it in civilian life? I think that Ontario, when we put our records up against the records of any other jurisdiction, stands out very well and, again, I repeat that the fact that the cases are being brought to light is not evidence of its getting out of control but rather it is evidence of the increasing effectiveness of our control, in that we are digging out more cases.

Mr. Trotter: It is obvious that education needs not only the co-operation of doctors, which is improving, but this again would mean co-operation with the hon. Minister of Health and it would be a health control measure. Would the hon. Minister be in favour of instruction on this type of disease in our high schools, because the rate is increasing mostly among teenagers?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I believe that instruction in this is given in nearly all of our high schools, if not all of them, and special pamphlets have been produced for teenagers. This is one area of health education where we have had very wonderful co-operation from the teaching profession.

Mr. Trotter: There is certainly no course. I think it depends on the principal in charge. This education certainly is not very widespread. Would the hon. Minister be in favour of encouraging this in our schools?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do encourage it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Trotter: What means do you take to encourage it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In discussion, with the health programme. The health programmes promoted and carried on through The Department of Education or by the direction and encouragement of the Department of Education all come within the ambit of the interdepartmental committee and my department advises The Department of Education on health matters. This is one of the matters that is dealt with, and with a reasonable degree of effectiveness.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to speak on that subject for a moment. I have a daughter who is a teacher in physical health and education and I can assure the hon. member for Parkdale that while it might not be mandatory in the curricula of all secondary schools, it is in many.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, there has been a tremendous increase in German measles here in the province of Ontario. Probably for most children it is a mild thing and not as important as some other diseases and not nearly as dangerous, I am quite willing to admit, but German measles rose in 1964, I think, to a total of more than 11,000 cases, which is more than double the number of cases in 1963. The great danger in German measles is with women who are expecting children—I think within the first three weeks of their being pregnant. Has this department done anything to inquire into the cause of and the increase in German measles?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The department has not, as a department, but a great deal of research is going on in this area. Efforts are at present under way, I understand, seeking the development of a vaccine. The department has for some time made available gamma globulin for use by pregnant women where there is a possibility that the unborn infant may be damaged.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Chairman, I understood the hon. member to say that venereal disease was pretty rampant in the high schools—

Mr. Trotter: I did not say it was rampant; the disease seems to be more prevalent among teenagers than among—

Mr. Cowling: I seemed to get the idea that you were trying to give the impression that the high schools were in pretty bad shape.

Mr. Trotter: I did not say that at all.

Mr. Cowling: That is usually what you say. That is exactly what you said; that is what you say about most things. Now I am offended at that because I do not think it applies—

Mr. Trotter: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Cowling: Just a minute—

Mr. Trotter: On a point of order, I did not say it was rampant and I did not talk about high schools. I said that the rate was increasing more among teenagers than among other groups. It is certainly increasing, and this is why education is important.

Mr. Cowling: I do not think that is much of a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if there is any truth in what the hon. member is trying to insinuate. Is it a fact, or not? I do not think it is and I would like to have the hon. Minister comment on that.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Is it rampant in the homes for the aged?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think we have dealt quite adequately with this. My hon. friend behind me wonders if it is rampant in the homes for the aged.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, it is rather tragic in this day and age that we have this new morality in youngsters from four years old. I notice that there is a boy of four years old who has a case of gonorrhoea. Did you find out the contact of that one?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: A case of that kind is one that is most easily found, Mr. Chairman. There is only one contact possible.

I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we will gain anything by discussing these matters during my estimates. Of course I know the contact of the four-year-old child.

Mr. Troy: We may not gain anything, but I say it is a tragic—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, it is a tragedy—

Mr. Troy: More than half of those reported cases of gonorrhoea in 1964 are from the age group of 10 to 24 years old, and it is certainly a fine example of the new morality in this society.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to look realistically at this. There is not a doubt in anyone's mind that gonorrhoea is far less present among us today than it was a relatively few years ago. While we are very much concerned about the increase, it is not rampant by any means and I do not think—

Mr. Troy: I did not say it was.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I know, but one is steadily gaining the belief that some of us seem to think it is rampant; it is not. We recognize that there are too many cases and we recognize that these are tragic things, but I can assure you that health authorities all over the country are equally worried about it, more worried perhaps than any others, and doing everything possible to bring it within control.

Mr. Troy: Are those who are treated by private physicians instead of clinics reported?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The physician must report the cases.

Vote 707 agreed to.

Vote 708 agreed to.

On vote 709:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, in relation to the medical rehabilitation branch, I would be interested in knowing the number of members of the staff of medical rehabilitation who have social workers' degrees at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Three, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. S. Lewis: Three? What is the total staff complement of the medical rehabilitation branch?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Thirty-three, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. S. Lewis: What is the average educational attainment of the staff complement of 33?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Would the hon. member give me all his questions pertinent to the staff so that I can get them all—

Mr. S. Lewis: That is the last I have to ask.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 708 was previously carried in any case, we are on vote 709 at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would like to answer this, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. Minister is going to answer questions on vote 708.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Fifty per cent have university education and 50 per cent have grade 13, with a course of inservice training following that.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer a reflection or two on the medical rehabilitation branch. First, it seems to me that it is a very small branch for the work which it is undertaking. I read in the annual report of The Department of Health that 71 per cent of its cases are now cases of referral from Ontario hospitals. I think this is a highly desirable fact, but it seems to me that a branch of 33 workers is hardly sufficient.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, a branch of 33 workers, with only three of them qualified social workers, is very seriously lacking in the work it can do properly. It compares most unfavourably with the rehabilitation branch in The Department of Public Welfare which, if I understand correctly, will have ten Masters of social work in September or October of this year—a much larger percentage of university people. In fact, grade 12 or grade 13 education, with the very sensitive and difficult cases involved, is not sufficient.

But since we have two parallel government departments—one Public Welfare and one in Health—questions about recruitment must, therefore, be asked regarding The Department of Health and its medical rehabilitation branch. If it is possible to develop—I will not say a quality of staff because I have never believed myself that someone with a lesser educational attainment is necessarily inferior in the work that can be done—but I would think that three out of 33, with proper social work training, is a rather low figure. It is very low compared with the parallel branch in The Department of Public Welfare.

I think that medical rehabilitation has a major role to play, particularly in the area of Ontario hospitals. One of the problems relating to the after-care dilemma and the readmission rate, relates to the lack of a proper and viable rehabilitation programme. I think that health rehabilitation either needs expansion, or it has to be absorbed into the mental health part of the branch or, indeed, has to give up the ghost and let The Department of Public Welfare, which seems to be doing a much more energetic and vigorous job, take it over.

There is something profoundly disconcerting about a branch which has only 33 workers, of whom the largest part are untrained, dealing now in 71 per cent of its cases with the most sensitive problems of rehabilitation given in this society, the rehabilitation for the most part of the acutely mentally ill. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that since these comparisons suffer when considered against public welfare, that great emphasis must be given either to recruitment, or to the redefinition of the branch. I am very perplexed as I read the generalities of the report that it can be considered no more than a sort of façade, although I have no doubt that within that façade the workers work to the best of their ability.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member should realize that the work the rehabilitation branch of The Department of Health does is largely with—in fact, almost exclusively with—those from our mental hospitals and tuberculosis hospitals, who present peculiar problems in rehabilitation. Most of our officers do not need to be social workers. I say this advisedly and with very deep conviction, because their main job is getting the cases back into vocational activity. The officers are largely involved in vocational rehabilitation.

The social service staff of the hospitals, and the social workers in the welfare department look after the social rehabilitation of these persons. But those with whom we are most actively involved are assessing the abilities of those who are discharged from hospital—and increasing numbers are being discharged from the hospitals for the mentally ill now—and arranging training for them or retraining. Then we also have a job-placement activity within our department, and herein we differ very greatly from all other rehabilitation activities I know. This is an area of rehabilitation which, in my thinking, is a very essential one, particularly for the type of people we are dealing with.

I think it is quite wrong to say that our workers are untrained. Many of the people we have on our branch have been in rehabilitation work for a very long time. Those who have knowledge of this speak very highly of their ability, and I am glad to note that the hon. member did emphasize the fact that though one has a degree it does not always signify that that person is the best one for the job.

I think, when the total results of the activities of our department and the effectiveness of the activities of this branch are looked at, it will be seen that this is a worthwhile activity. I think it would be a very grave error to meld this with The Department of Public Welfare, because it works in a different area altogether. Our people need a very great deal of post-placement support.

I happened to be visiting one of our branches on one occasion, and while in the office the rehabilitation officer was called by one of his clients and he told me that this was the seventh time, I think, within ten days, that the person was about to quit the job. But each time on talking with the rehabilitation officer, he was encouraged and prepared to go back and face the problem all over again. This, in my mind, sets the mentally ill patient quite separate and distinct from the patient who has been sick, or has become handicapped as a result of an industrial or other type of accident.

Our people need emotional support in far greater measure than the average person who needs rehabilitation. I am quite certain, sir, that as the records of the branch are seen it will be noted that they have done, and are continuing to do, a very effective job. I can assure you, sir, I will fight very vigorously for the maintenance and the steady expansion of this branch.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister put it rather more effectively than I could put it when he said that the supportive services in the area of emotional security are perhaps the fundamental qualification in this field. While I admit to him that the vocational rehabilitation of this branch is perhaps pre-eminent, there is, even in his own report, a considerable position given to what is called social rehabilitation, precisely the area I alluded to originally.

I should like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there are certain levels of education required to develop the sensitivity and the understanding necessary to give that emotional supportive of service. Those levels of education, I suggest—while not making this categorical—do require something beyond high school; when we are dealing with the rehabilitation of the mentally ill and their placement in jobs, as the hon. Minister himself has pointed out, the mere job-placement is the smallest factor. It is the emotional security that is felt attendant upon that job; it is the emotional security that may be felt in the problems of adjusting to the community, which is of consequence. It is by no means a matter of arranging an interview, slating a person and then dropping the case. With a mere 33 workers in a medical rehabilitation branch, of whom 50 per cent are high school graduates at maximum—and I dare say, Mr. Chairman, that some are probably not beyond grade 12—I suggest that the emotional resilience required would simply be lacking in some areas. And I am not overwhelmed by the availability of in-service training.

I can agree with the hon. Minister that this is an indispensable branch in prospect, that it has tremendous importance. If that is true, Mr. Chairman, I would say, double the personnel of this branch, or triple this branch and set up an in-service training programme of six months to a year. Then let them go to town and do a job. Within the last six months, if memory serves me correctly, the rehabilitation branch of The Department of Public Welfare has been expanded out of all proportion to its previous number, and as a result the case loads have been reduced. It has done a very, very effective job. The rehabilitation branch of Public Welfare stands as an example throughout the province, and I say it without hesitation and with some enthusiasm.

That is not so with the rehabilitation branch of Health. It is partly not so because its level of qualification is not as high, because its numbers are not as high, because its jobs are not as well defined, although just as difficult, and because, by and large, I do not think it has received sufficient support from this government. I in no sense denigrate the efforts, hopes and objectives of the people involved. But I would think that if the hon. Minister is as serious as he says he is about this branch, he should give it a real fillip; give it a shot in the arm of great morale by providing it with greater funds and a greater sense of purpose and, indeed, greater numbers.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, when I was going home last weekend, I had the pleasure of going up with a specialist in the field which is covered by this vote. He was down in Toronto at the meeting of the Canadian tubercular association last week. During one of the discussions, doctors present said there was a difficulty in getting medical practitioners to do these BCG tests. I do not know if it referred to Ontario or other parts of Canada. It happened that there was a doctor there from Denmark, I believe, who pointed out that in the underprivileged countries, and in India, they do not use doctors for this particular test at all; they use technicians. Is it a problem in Ontario? Do you have this problem, that you cannot get doctors to do the BCG tests, or would it be necessary to train technicians to do this?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we certainly would not want technicians to do it. BCG has not become widely accepted in Ontario yet. It is coming into vogue. That seems rather a strange way to put it, because it is not a new thing by any means. There has been a very great deal of reticence to instituting a BCG programme. The director who is the present incumbent of that office in my department believes in this very much, and has been promoting this programme. I think it is finding more favour because more and more the value of our former case-finding methods is being called in question.

For instance, we have to do a great many tests or chest x-rays to find one case of tuberculosis now. Many of us are questioning the wisdom of carrying on the up-to-the-present accepted type of case finding. I would say that BCG will again, by a process of education, probably become more acceptable. BCG in Quebec has been quite popular for a long time, and certainly in European countries it has been accepted for a very long time. But it has never been, so far, widely accepted in Canada.

I may not be completely accurate in this, but my feeling about this conference which just ended in Toronto gave evidence of a growing interest and a growing liking for BCG, so I would anticipate that it will become steadily more popular although, once again, not suddenly or radically so.

Vote 709 agreed to.

On vote 710:

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to protest once again the lack of a policy for the pollution control of our air. I think four more municipalities in the province of Ontario passed bylaws covering this problem; now, I think, there are about 22 different towns and cities in the province that do have some type of bylaw that tries to control the poison in our air.

The truth of the matter is that this problem will never be solved within the province unless there is a law that covers the province from border to border. I realize that you get into problems on the border of Quebec and Manitoba and with the various states of the U.S., but certainly a lot can be done within the province of Ontario to pass a law that has some teeth in it. For no matter how conscientious one city might be in trying to enforce a bylaw, what good is it if a neighbouring city, not too far away, lets any factor do as it pleases? This, to some extent, happens. So if you are going to have any pollution control, you have to have a provincial law with teeth in it.

Even in the city of Toronto, where, being a large city, they have a real problem, they have made some improvements. But the fines under a local bylaw are often so low that it is a license to poison the air. We have had instances where some large firms have been letting the smoke loose, brought before the court, found guilty and they are fined $50. They go back and do the same thing all over again.

So we are not going to have proper control of this problem until the province sees fit to put in a strong law with fines sufficiently big enough that the large firms will take heed. If you fine a large firm $50 a day instead of $50 for the overall offence, it might not be so bad, but the municipalities simply are not doing it. Even the 22 that have passed by-laws and are laying charges against certain firms are doing it in a rather namby-pamby manner.

There have been improvements, but the situation got so bad in Toronto that there had to be improvements. If you come in by airplane toward the city of Toronto, you can see the smog on certain occasions sitting over the town like a heavy pall. And in Hamilton it is worse. This means that we have a very serious health hazard here in the province of Ontario. I am not going into all the statistics of how it effects bronchitis, the threat of cancer and all the various problems that it brings, but there is certainly an abundance of medical proof that living in an urban area, where you have a great deal of traffic, whether it is the fumes from a car or wherever you have these factories, increases the health hazard. The only way you are going to have any semblance of real control is a strong provincial law and, over and above that, where we make arrangements with neighbouring provinces and states.

But whether or not we have any arrangements with Quebec, Manitoba or New York, we certainly can do a great deal within our province. But it can only come from Queen's Park, because a local municipality, no matter how much it may want to control its own air, simply cannot do it. It is just a matter of common sense, and despite the committee report—we had a select committee on this problem in 1957—the recommendations of that committee, in large part, have been ignored.

I would like to ask the hon. Minister if he has given any further thought to putting some teeth into air pollution control in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, I gather, has forgotten that last year we pointed out that the province was responsible for the control of chemical pollution and the only control that was left in the hands of the municipalities was the pollution caused by products of combustion—black smoke, it was usually known as. The province has been very active in the area of trying to control other pollutants, first by the programme of approving all plans for installations which might be the cause of pollution, or for installations that are to be renovated or replaced and now, as announced in the remarks I made in the opening of our estimates, we plan to extend the regulations to cover existing sources of pollution. I am not sure that I understand exactly what the hon. member means by asking if we have put teeth into the Act. I do not believe that by punishing—if this is the thinking—we can attain the objective we seek. Somebody said some time ago that politics is an inexact science; air pollution control is also an inexact science, and I am still faced with these complaints that the control equipment or the control methods or agents available are not satisfactory yet. Until that time comes, and until we find satisfactory methods of control, I think it would be very unwise to start putting teeth into an Act if the means of enforcing it were not within our reach.

I know that a great deal is said about what is being done here, there and all over, but actually when one looks at air pollution control, the most success has been in the area of control of products of combustion, or black smoke. Often one hears of Pittsburgh and the wonderful things they did there. Of course they cleaned up their black smoke, because that is relatively easy to do.

Why do we leave this in the hands of the municipalities? Because this is something that happens from day to day and from hour to hour, and it will be totally impossible for the province to have an adequate staff of inspectors to keep this under control. The emissions which are more dangerous and of far greater importance, of course, are the emissions which come within our sphere of influence—the chemical and other types of emission apart from the products of combustion, and this is the area where we have to be active.

I see that 27 sources of air pollution were examined during the last several months since our regulations came into effect, five approvals were issued and one was refused, and preliminary planning discussions have been held with 17 companies which are planning construction during 1965. Surveys were conducted by my department at 57 plants in the province, and 21 complaints came to our attention regarding industrial sources and they were handled.

The department was involved in a joint study with The Department of National Health and Welfare, and the meteorological service of Canada, air pollution control division. This had to do with the air pollution in the Metropolitan Windsor area and it was decided that this was being caused by sources in the vicinity of Michigan.

We are just about to participate in a conference in Toronto of authorities concerned with air pollution and air pollution control from all of Canada and all of the U.S.—it is a North American project. This is the first such conference held here, out of which we will collect not only benefits from the experiences of others who probably have been longer in this field than we, but we are rather interested to note that some of them are paying a good deal of attention to what we are doing and are interested in the programmes that we have under way.

The question of the effect on one's health is very much before us and is of very great concern to The Department of Health. This was why we asked the House last year to permit us to include support of these programmes in our public health programmes, and, as you will recall, we are supporting this in the same way as any public health programme. Not very many—only three—communities have taken advantage of this and three more are in the process of being given a programme. But this is not because they not interested; it is because they do not have staff to do the job and we set up courses of instruction for the staff. We also offer this service to the municipalities and train the staff at no cost to them. This, too, will take time but it is beginning to bear fruit and I feel quite certain that we can look forward to some better things.

It would be dishonest if I led the House to believe, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that we should take over the total air pollution control. I have already mentioned the almost-impossible task it would be to try to control pollution caused by products of combustion.

I explained during my preliminary remarks our most recent views concerning automobile exhausts. Here again, the mechanism or equipment is not satisfactory. The state of California—the only state on the continent which has done a good deal of work on this and has an Act of legislation on the question—is finding itself face to face with very grave difficulties in enforcing the statute. Now we learn that some of the automobile manufacturers have developed or are in the process of developing, a more effective control, something that is built into or becomes a part of the engine. My air pollution control branch is in discussion with them, in the hope that this will provide surcease from that very irritating source of pollution.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, the reason why I suggested overall pollution control is this: I realize that enforcing the law has to be done at the local level, in the same way as the criminal code is a federal matter but is enforced by local police on the job, but this government began suggesting about 1957, or shortly after the report came in from the committee, that municipalities pass bylaws. Slowly, in the course of seven or eight years, 22 municipalities have passed bylaws and when you think of the 900-odd municipalities in Ontario, you realize that the vast majority just do not bother. About 22 out of 900-plus have complied, so that again it seems obvious that one municipality cannot control its neighbours. But these municipalities are the creatures of the province and the province can lay the ground rules.

Second, the 22 bylaws, even though you recommend one, vary from place to place. The minimum fines set out are silly. Here is an example in Toronto: A firm offending the bylaw a number of times, seriously, each time is fined only $50. It is a licence to poison; $50 is not going to stop any large firm, and the defence of the firm was that its plant had been there years before the bylaw was passed. If you are going to go by that, it means that they are going to go on poisoning the air until the plant falls down.

This is what I mean by saying that the province should have an enforcement agency with real teeth in the law and see to it that the municipalities, as the province's agents, enforce the law in the same way that the Toronto police enforce the criminal law that is passed in Ottawa. This is going to become a more serious problem as our province becomes more and more urbanized. There are more plants and more factories being scattered throughout Ontario, not just in the great Metro area of Toronto, but throughout the province. Unless you make strict ground rules for all the municipalities to follow, you are going to find that this problem is not going to be solved, it is going to be far more serious.

The hon. Minister has mentioned what Pittsburgh has done, and again you might turn to California. The problem is still, in many cases, just smoke, just what they have controlled in Pittsburgh. I know that there are many things that have not been controlled, that some forms of air pollution are harder to control than others, but the main offender to date has been this black smoke that comes shooting out of the chimneys of our large factories. This can, in large measure, be controlled and I think that the provincial government has been extremely lax in allowing this to continue throughout the province of Ontario.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I am very curious about the effect of the department's industrial hygiene inspection in the large industrial plants in this province and I will pick two plants particularly. I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell me how many inspections were made by the department in the last two years into the Steel Company of Canada, the Hilton branch at Hamilton, and the Dominion Foundries and Steel in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member put that as a question and I will undertake to get the answer for him but I could not possibly give it tonight.

Mr. Gisborn: It comes under this vote, industrial hygiene branch.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I grant the hon. member that, but I do not have the specific places that they visit on their inspections.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, I would then conclude my questioning and expect the hon. Minister will give me an answer to all my questions at the same time. I would like to know the number of inspections made by the field branch, and the nature of the reports that are compiled with the department. Also, parts of The Mining Act apply to both these plants, inasmuch as they have cinderling plants, and I wonder if the industrial hygiene branch of The Department of Health makes sure that the inspections are carried out by the mining inspection branch to assure that The Silicosis Act is being enforced in both these plants as to periodic examinations.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I cannot answer the first part of the hon. member's question specifically, but I do know that there is very close co-operation in inspections between The Department of Health and The Department of Mines. Frequently the two departments go together on an inspection, and the complaint we most commonly hear with respect to silicosis inspections is that we are too rigid and that men who, in our opinion, or in the opinion of our clinicians, should not be exposed in high-pressure areas, find difficulty in getting certificates from us.

The Silicosis Act, of course, is quite separate. We only act as consultants in that regard, but, I repeat, many of the employees whom we will refuse to certify feel that we are too rigid in our interpretation and make it difficult for them to get jobs. That is not our concern. Our concern is to advise the individual that in our opinion he should not be in that high-exposure job and, therefore, should not be certified.

On the number of inspections or the places which they go, I cannot give the hon. member at the present time, but I will find them. The hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) advises me that he will be able to discuss the whole silicosis problem when his estimates are before the House.

In the type of work they did, they made 55 field investigations during the year 1964, but again they are not spelled out here. They examined 8,087 blood smears for possible absorption, they examined 113 blood specimens from workmen exposed to organic phosphorous, insecticides, and these were checked for cholinesterase activity. Lung sections from 32 workmen were examined for silicon content; in 19 plants, a total of 1,665 noise level determinations were made, and 35 plants were visited. A total of 287 air samples were taken, later were analyzed for the presence of toxic materials. Samples submitted for analysis by government departments and recognized agencies amounted to 381, involving 919 analyses; 3,129 urine specimens and water samples were made to assess the degree of metal inclusion, lead arsenic and such; analyses of 276 samples were suspected of mislabelling under the stuffed articles regulations were investigated.

That is a brief rundown on the field activities performed by the branch during the calendar year 1964. But I will have to get the specific factories that they visited and how often.

Mr. Gisborn: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am interested in two plants and the inspections and nature of the reports, and I will expect them at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Did the hon. member mention the Steel Company of Canada—was it just the one plant?

Mr. Gisborn: The Steel Company of Canada—the Hamilton works—and the Dominion Foundries and Steel.

Vote 710 agreed to.

On vote 711:

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I think we are back to something that deals with sanitation. Last year when we were discussing a number of Acts which come under this department, the hon. Minister indicated that he was reviewing the regulations of these various Acts dealing with business and professional groups. We had a little difficulty in pinning him down as to exactly when there might be any conclusion to this review. Indeed, his comment with regard to the specific Act on which I wanted to raise a few points, namely, The Embalmers and Funeral Directors Act, was, "I cannot promise they will be able to recommend changes next year because there are a great many difficulties and involved problems in them."

Now, during the course of the year, I understand that the directors of the board which is responsible for carrying out the regulations, had a study themselves, familiarly known as the Ingram study, named after the chairman of the committee. And in the minds of many people, this report was rather disturbing. For example, if I may just take two points, it suggested that the undertakers rather than the provincial government should decide who will serve on the board which administers the Act. Secondly, it suggested a $200 fine for anyone who conducts a funeral without a permit from the board. Right now, as the hon. Minister will certainly know—and perhaps some of the hon. members—only a death certificate from a doctor and a burial certificate from a police station are required, and for cremation a coroner's certificate is also required.

So I have one overall question that I would like to ask the hon. Minister—whether or not the report of the Ingram committee has been received by his department, whether it is being considered and what is likely to emerge from his consideration?

Before I sit down, there are two other points that I want to comment on. One is that under the present Act, three of the five members of the board are licensed funeral directors. At present all five are undertakers; in other words, it is a complete monopoly made up of just those people and no other groups who may be interested in the conduct of funerals. The suggestion has been made, for example, that if three of the five were funeral directors, then the remaining two should be representative of, for example, a council of churches, and perhaps the memorial societies which are taking a more and more vocal place in this whole picture.

Mr. Sopha: And Ron Haggart!

Mr. MacDonald: Well, perhaps. I think he is rather tied up with other things. Whether he would want to assume a position on this board, I rather doubt.

Also, there is another point that I raised a year or so ago, and the hon. Minister I do not think made any definitive statement. That is in regard to advertising, regulation 28, subsection 2 under The Embalmers and Funeral Directors Act. It reads now that no funeral director shall in his advertising include any reference to prices or conditions of sale. Now, in my view, Mr. Chairman, that particular regulation is precisely the opposite of what we should have. There is a growing body of people, particularly in what is known as the memorial societies, who feel that if you are going to rescue people from some of the excessively high cost of dying, it is going to be by making it a little easier for the family to shop at this rather trying time, and not come in with no idea at all as to what the costs might be.

In this connection, I was rather interested just this past week, in seeing a story in the Toronto Telegram, under the date of June 9, 1965, in which in his annual report to the Toronto memorial society, Mr. F. Malcolm Croggon reported that there are now eight Toronto funeral directors who are prepared to provide funerals for $150 for those who want them, and apparently because of the regulations, people who are interested in finding out who these eight funeral directors are, can do so by getting in touch with the memorial society. There is, I think, across the whole of the North American continent, considerable soul-searching—if that is the appropriate term to use in this context—with regard to the high cost of dying and some of the near barbaric practices that seem to have crept into our funeral practices.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment first on the Ingram committee and what his department has done; and second, whether or not there is any consideration being given to a change in the regulations and particularly to the one with reference to advertising?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the Ingram study was never submitted to me. The board did not ask for any change in the regulations this year, nor did the association suggest that we should take the study under advisement.

There is no consideration being given at all at present for changing regulations. It is quite true that all five members of the board of examiners are funeral directors, but according to my understanding, the board is composed of five members; the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor delegates the chairman, the vice-chairman, and members of the board elect the secretary-treasurer. But the board of examiners is authorized to prescribe the qualifications for registration and the discipline of its members. It is also empowered to collect certain fees from the candidates for registration and registrants for practice, such as examination fees, registration fees and annual fees. Out of these fees the board pays expenses, including the travelling and other expenses, of its members.

I have to repeat what I have said, I think, on each of the previous occasions when I have stood here trying to speak to this. This is an area of very great difficulty to the department, because our business, as The Department of Health, is concerned with the health overtones or the health aspects of these problems. I must say that I am still hard put to it to know where health is concerned in death, because now we bury our dead rather quickly; there are not the same health problems inherent in this that there used to be, or that were one time considered to be. I think that it is not the business of The Department of Health to get into the determination of business matters. It is true that under their Act, they have the power to control certain advertising; they believe themselves to be a profession and, as such, have the right to dictate, as all professions do, the type of advertising used.

I was led to believe that this was a good thing, and was in the interests of all concerned. Perhaps I was too gullible, I do not know. I do not think so. But it was never intended, in my thinking, that the power to control their advertising would militate against the public. I do know there has been a great deal of talk about this, and I also know that there are those in the industry who believe that the dead should not bury their own dead. But the fact does remain that the hon. member has pointed out very clearly, and I think this fact is not widely enough known, that one does not have to be embalmed and that one does not have to engage a funeral director to bury the dead. But I still believe we will continue to use them, because I do not think that very many of us want to do that last sad office for our own.

In summary, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would say that the Ingram study was not referred to us, no change in regulations was asked and we did not undertake any change in regulations ourselves because we had knowledge that this and one or two other studies were going on, reports from none of which have come to us as yet.

Mr. Sopha: There is no question that the embalmers and funeral directors come under the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Health, I think.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right.

Mr. Sopha: Well, has the hon. Minister read, for example, and I do not want to sound pedantic, the book recently published The American Way of Death, by Jessica Mitford?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: And perchance you have read The Loved One, by Evelyn Waugh?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: Then we can talk on common ground. Does the hon. Minister not agree that some funerals in our modern society, to put it in as low a case as I can, are revoltingly elaborate? I think there is no question that some people are prevailed upon to overspend in paying proper respects, in their own view, to the departed person of their family. Therefore, is the hon. Minister not concerned that some of the abuses may exist in Ontario that Jessica Mitford pointed out in her excellent treatise? She took many years to prepare it, and it was particularly relevant to the state of California, but her treatise was nation-wide. She searched for information and statistics all over the United States. In these cultural configurations, it is usually true that when there is an example of extremism in any parts of our culture or folkways in the United States, there is, to some extent, a reflection of it in Canada, because after all, we are strung out along the southern border here and we have not much defence in depth to cultural manifestations in the United States.

Therefore I ask, is the hon. Minister not concerned? That is what my hon. friend from York South was getting at; he said very plainly that perhaps if you allow these people to advertise their rates, the prices will become more competitive. I am struck by some of the illustrations Miss Mitford used. She gives examples of the person who is not connected by blood to the deceased. He is not a close relative. He goes and tries to bargain with the funeral directors—morticians as they like to be called. My hon. friend used the word undertakers, but they are horrified at the use of that word; funeral directors or morticians, they like to be called. I detected the nuance in the hon. Minister's words when he said they like to think of themselves as a profession. I know exactly what he meant when he said that, and I want him to know that his slight essay of humour did not go undetected by all in the House.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member misunderstood me. There was no essay at humour whatsoever. I simply stated what I believe to be a fact.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I know. I am still with you. I am still receiving you.

Mr. Bryden: He thought it was humorous.

Mr. Sopha: When I was referring to the individual, Miss Mitford tells about his travails in going to some of these people and trying to pin them down to a price—trying to get them down to the lowest possible price, and all the double talk and falderal that such a person has to go through. One of the duties of people in politics is that we go to many of these funerals of leading citizens who depart this life and go to their great reward. I must say, speaking as one, that I see in many cases where the money would be more usefully spent and maybe might be spent in the form of a more lasting tribute to the deceased and his contribution to the community, than in paying for the elaborate last rites and the preparations for sending him off to the happy hunting grounds that is usually his just reward.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, one brief final comment here. I thought I detected in the hon. Minister's observation a growing feeling that it is not really relevant to his department; that he has no desire to meddle in the business arrangements involved in these various professions. But it was in his department in the first instance, because it related to health. Today, burying takes place rather rapidly and there are few remaining health problems. I suspect that the hon. Minister has a point. If he is not interested in pursuing a study of the regulations related to this and other Acts that come under his department, it might more appropriately—and I am not saying this facetiously or critically—come under the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). It would seem to me that he—

Mr. Bryden: Or the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko).

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Provincial Secretary, my hon. colleague says. I choked on that just for a moment.

It seems to me that the regulations, particularly of this Act, and notably in view of the second thoughts in the proposed rules that are merging within the organization itself—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): How about The Department of Mines?

Mr. MacDonald: The Department of Mines?

An hon. member: Or The Department of Lands and Forests?

Mr. MacDonald: My point, Mr. Chairman, is simply this, and I shall make it again in summation and sit down. The hon. Minister clearly indicated that he was not particularly interested in this, and he may well have a point. But I think that somebody on the government side should be interested in a careful review of all these regulations. If you are going to have some guidance from the Ingram committee, you had better bolster yourself, because I think that it will take you in the wrong direction.

Mr. Sopha: It might be a good idea if you are looking for things to appoint select committees to.

It might be an idea that the government should consider appointing a select committee to look into the cost of burial of our dead in the province.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did not intend to leave the hon. members to feel that we were not interested. I thought it would be rather silly to carry out a review of the regulations when I knew that certain committees were working under the direction of the board of examiners on certain studies which they believe will have a bearing on the regulations. It would appear obvious that we are not going to get those reports now, and we will proceed with a review of the regulations, to what end, I am not in a position to tell, but I think it is quite safe now to assume that the Ingram report is not going to come to me.

Mr. MacDonald: That, in essence, is what you said last year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, but the report had not been started then.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, on this vote, would the hon. Minister let us know to what extent the government, or his department, is engaged in monitoring radioactive fallout in the province, either on its own responsibility or in co-operation with the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That was in the last vote—industrial hygiene. However, I will say to the hon. member that my department works very closely with the federal atomic energy board of Canada, and in addition to that, there is an interdepartmental committee at Deputy Minister level which has been carrying out very extensive studies in this matter over the past several months in Ontario alone. We do all of the testing that is done in Ontario, with the exception of some work that is done in one or two of the universities. We have a radioactive fallout laboratory in Toronto and we do a great deal of background testing for other departments of government and for municipalities and agencies that request it from us.

Mr. Renwick: Would the hon. Minister let us know to what extent experiments are being carried out and whether there is publication of any reports about the experiments and the extent of the work that is being done? I assume that this is the proper vote because it covers the environmental sanitation branch.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No research work is being carried on by the provincial Department of Health; this is the responsibility of the federal government.

In the field of service for radiation protection, we conduct the carrying out of specific exposures to radioactive material for hospitals, mines, dial painting, and so on, examining and making recommendations regarding plans for medical x-ray suites; assisting in the atomic energy control board and enforcing regulations respecting the use of radioactive materials in Ontario; acting as liaison in the joint off-site reactor programme set up between Ontario and The Department of National Health and Welfare; carrying out laboratory and field research—this is field research, not basic research—on the amount of exposure to personnel operating medical and commercial x-ray equipment; handling emergencies where radioactive materials are involved; arranging monitoring programmes for mining and power reactor operations; acting in an advisory capacity to The Department of Mines and to The Department of Labour in matters pertaining to radioactivity and x-rays.

During this calendar year, 1964, our field workers investigated 215 radioactive hazards throughout the province. These were made in connection with radioactive problems in industry, mines, hospitals and other medical establishments, and at nuclear reactors and other locations. They examined plans for 33 medical x-ray suites; 26 industrial radiation installations were examined and recommendations made.

The Douglas Point nuclear power station has fallen behind schedule and is not expected to be critical until late 1965, but the hazards revealed by the federal reactor safety advisory committee continued during 1964. The station is still incomplete.

The hydro-electric power commission property at Fairport beach received conditional approval by the reactor safety advisory committee as the type for a two-unit nuclear power station rated at 500 electrical megawatts. This has already been discussed in the House, I believe.

Radioactive pollution of public waters in uranium mining areas near Elliot Lake and Bancroft, upon which we have been keeping a watch since 1958, became a prime object of interest in 1964 and it was for this reason that the committee was set up at Deputy Minister level, charged with the task of developing remedies.

In conjunction with The Ontario Department of Mines, requirements have been laid on those uranium mines which closed down and are selling off their milling equipment to ensure that no such equipment is transferred to food or other sensitive industries. Such equipment transferred elsewhere is first decontaminated to a specified level, determined by the branch.

These are the things that the branch was connected with and a summary of the work that it performed during 1964.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister intend that any reports of the Deputy Ministers committee will be published or any information made available to the public in this general field?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to give that decision; this committee was set up by the government and not by my department alone. My department is involved in it only—

Mr. Renwick: Is the Deputy Minister of Health a member of this committee?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There are four Deputy Ministers concerned, of which the Deputy Minister of Health is one.

Mr. Renwick: Was there a decision made to publish any of the results of the investigations or studies or work that is being done under the aegis of that committee?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I think we will leave that question for the hon. Prime Minister to answer.

Mr. Sopha: I will say this to you: I watch all this fencing going on between the two of you with a good deal of depression.

The select committee on mining came away from Elliot Lake very much concerned about the problem there and it was put to us as simply as this, in terms that even the most uninformed layman could understand.

Years ago they used to throw out the uranium and extract the radium. Now our technology has developed to the point that they extract uranium and throw out radium. The radium goes on the rockpiles there, such as I remember from my boyhood in Cobalt. It has a half-life, if I am correct, of 1,576 years, and when rain or precipitation comes down on it, it finds its way into the watershed.

I and my hon. friend from York North (Mr. Mackenzie), who is not here tonight, my friend, the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. R. G. Hodgson), who is in the House, and the hon. member for York Mills (Mr. Bales) were on that committee. We were told that the radium sits in the rockpiles with that long half-life and it is draining into the watershed. It is finding its way down those watersheds into the Great Lakes watersheds. I had the impression when I left Elliot Lake that something must be done to contain that precipitation from getting into the watersheds or else there is a real danger of the pollution of the Great Lakes system with radioactivity.

I have seen learned reports about the "minimal amount," so-called, of radioactivity that goes in, but I have the fear, as a layman, that it will not always be a minimal amount, that it will build up into something serious, with serious effects to future generations of Canadians.

I have waited for the opportunity to say this, that I thought when this problem was revealed by one of the Metro newspapers, that the appointment of a committee of four Deputy Ministers, only one of them qualified in the field of public health, offered protection that was much of a panacea. I did not see, with all respect to those estimable gentlemen and their many years of service to this province, that they were very qualified to deal with the problem.

I wish the hon. Minister, for the sake of the people at Elliot Lake, who are concerned about this problem, and for the sake of other people in Ontario, would stop trying to shift the responsibility to the federal government. If anything has been done about this, if there is no reason for alarm, then let the government, this vague, general, amorphous body the hon. Ministers refers to—the government, whoever that is—say so, let some spokesman get up and tell it once and for all. If it is a serious problem, as we believed it was in the select committee on mining, let us hear what steps are being taken to contain the problem so that future generations of Canadians as yet unborn will not be affected by this radioactivity.

Vote 711 agreed to.

On vote 712:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, is the hon. Minister going to reply to the hon. member for Sudbury?

Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to quote at any great length, but in an article in the Toronto Daily Star on January 23 of this year, The Department of National Health and Welfare disclosed that levels of cesium 137, one of the more lethal of radioactive byproducts, are increasing in large areas of the north and are approaching the danger point for human beings. Further on down it says:

Canada has to face the fact, therefore, that it has a continuing health problem.

I would have assumed, particularly after the intervention of the hon. member for Sudbury, that the Minister of Health of this government would have had something to say that could have been of some assistance to the people of the province of Ontario in finding out the extent of this danger; the extent to which this government is interested in it; what publications are going to be made of the findings of their committee and what future plans they have to cope with this problem.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member himself touched on the matter. It is a national problem. Atomic energy control lies within the purview of the federal government. We have been doing all we can to co-operate with them. So far I have nothing to report because I have not received any report yet. Until I have a report it would be rather futile of me to stand here and try to give any kind of an intelligent reply to the questions asked. I have noted them. The department and the government of Ontario are equally concerned about the people of Ontario, but I cannot say anything more about it because I do not know yet. Again, I repeat that basically this is a federal matter and we are co-operating and willing to continue to co-operate to the fullest possible extent with the federal authorities.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, are there any meetings taking place from time to time, and if so, how many meetings, and what are the subjects which are being discussed? Is there any likelihood that there will be a report in the near future, or will there be an interim report? Will there be any work done on this subject, or do we have to wait until next year to ask the same question again?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can only tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the Deputy Minister of Energy and Resources Management is the chairman of this committee. I am not in a position to tell you when they will be prepared to submit a report because my deputy is not the chairman of it. They meet at intervals when they are called to meet, to consider the matters that are put before them.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I hope they just will not treat the report as the first report was treated. That one was tucked under the rug until somebody was very alert and discovered it and revealed its contents and made us acquainted with the problem.

However, on another subject, I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether the laboratory outlined here does any testing of drugs or medications?

Mr. Chairman: Could I ask the member, is he on 712?

Mr. Sopha: Vote 712, sir.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, before we leave 711, my last comment on this question of the radioactive material fallout in the atmosphere is to ask would the government seriously consider taking the public into their confidence about what is being done? I do not think that the people of the province of Ontario need to be treated like a bunch of school children. I think they should be taken into confidence by regular reports. And if there is nothing to report, say so. If there is something to report, let us have a series of periodic reports so that the people of the province of Ontario will not suddenly be faced with another scarifying situation such as developed a few months ago.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I thought the hon. member was talking about the radiation hazard at Elliot Lake and in the vicinity of other uranium mines. These reports which he mentions now are published periodically, and they are the responsibility of the federal government. The Department of National Health and Welfare publishes a report.

Now, there was a time when the fallout was at rather high levels when we were publishing reports every day, but this, I think, is now down to being published once a month. They are evident in the newspapers if one watches for them. But they are the responsibility of The Department of National Health and Welfare, of the atomic energy control board.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Chairman, just a little further on this debate—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that this was under vote 710. I answered the question out of courtesy because the hon. member had missed it.

Mr. Chairman: I will permit just a short comment, if you wish.

Mr. Farquhar: Well, it will certainly be short, Mr. Chairman. I have a resolution on the order paper to do with this very thing, and I hesitate to make a prolonged set of pronouncements in connection with the radioactivity in Elliot Lake. But I would like to point out, since the hon. Minister is saying that the federal government has all the responsibility in this connection, or has made a reference to this effect, he will agree, I think, that the only laboratory that can carry out determinations in this particular field is in his own department. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no! We only established our laboratory to augment the services that were being provided by Ottawa.

Mr. Farquhar: However, the laboratories doing what testing is being done in connection with radioactivity are under this department's control?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, the main laboratory work is being done by Ottawa. We augment the service that they provide, and we will make tests for other government departments, agencies or persons in the province who ask us to do them. We do some independent testing on our own background values.

For instance, we did work at Douglas Point. We did some background testing there before the plant was put in so that we would have controls to go by after the plant was put in. We do this in the interests of protecting our own people. We are doing the same thing now at Frenchmen's Bay, in preparation for the reactor plant that will go in there. We test grains, cereals. The bulk of our testing is done for experimental purposes.

Mr. Farquhar: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman, your organization is actually doing the testing of water, I understand, in the various lakes in the area?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: For the Ontario water resources commission as requested.

Mr. Farquhar: That is what I understand. And because of these tests, I feel that there has been an extreme lack of the reports that have been referred to here. I certainly go along with the hon. member for Riverdale to the effect that the people of Ontario are not children, and we should have access to the kind of reports that are presumably being made available from time to time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Who is the federal member there?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we are in the position of consultants. If somebody asks us to do a job for them, we do the job and we send them the report. I feel it is their responsibility then to make the report public, or do with it what they will. But it is not my responsibility, nor do I have the authority to make public a report on a piece of work that is sent us to be done by some other agency. It would seem to me that the proper body to ask for these reports would be the Ontario water resources commission, but we can hardly make public reports on tests that we do at their request for them.

Mr. Sopha: Do these laboratories test drugs and medications in order to determine whether they have all the characteristics and qualities proclaimed for them?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, a branch of the Attorney General's crime laboratory does that for us. These laboratories are for public health, testing water samples and sewage samples, and clinical testing of blood specimens, bacteriology, biochemistry, pathology, virology, things of that kind. If you have got a bug and your doctor takes a swab and sends it in to us, we grow the bugs and tell you what they are and how to kill them.

Mr. Sopha: Do you have this place that tests medications?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General does it for us.

Mr. Sopha: They do it, or is it a federal government responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, yes. The food and drug administration, Mr. Chairman, does it for everybody. A drug cannot be put on the market until they have passed it. But you will recall shortly after I became Minister, we set up a system of assaying drugs which we bought for our own use. You will probably recall what we advised, the difference in price between generic drugs and trade name drugs. We set up a system of having samples of all our drugs purchased as assays, and the Attorney General's crime laboratory was equipped to do that sort of thing with a little expansion and they do that as a service for our department.

Mr. Sopha: I have been looking for some place in the estimates to ask about the medication Sistosan, which was invented by a physician in my community in Sudbury and is said to have haemostatic qualities widely recognized as such. I wondered if the department was familiar with it.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I am afraid I am not, Mr. Chairman. Unless we use it, we would not be assaying it. If it is on the market, that testing has to be done by the food and drug administration first. We have nothing to do with that. The name rings a bell, and yet I am not familiar with it, and I do not know if we use it in our hospitals or not.

Mr. Sopha: Well, could I ask you this as a medical man? Is the problem of haemorrhage completely conquered? Can medical science always stop internal haemorrhage?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Oh, no, Mr. Chairman. Internal haemorrhage can be attributed to many causes, and without knowing what the cause is, of course, one does not know very much about what to do with it. Sometimes an internal haemorrhage can be easily stopped. Some can be stopped by transfusion, some will stop spontaneously, some can be stopped by medical methods. But to say they can all be controlled would be quite wrong.

Vote 712 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume these estimates, and then after this, The Department of Mines and the final department will be The Department of Public Welfare. I would like to set aside an hour between five and six tomorrow afternoon to go back at the other bills and orders on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.35 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, June 15, 1965
Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 15, 1965

Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	4143
Recess, 12.40 o'clock	4161

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We welcome as guests to the Legislature today in the west gallery, students from Lynden public school, Lynden.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), but he is not in his seat, before the orders of the day. Notice was given.

Mr. Speaker: I will see that he answers it tomorrow.

Mr. Singer: Perhaps we could revert back to these orders when the hon. Attorney General takes his seat.

Mr. Speaker: It all depends if we are through routine proceedings. If we are through routine proceedings, it is more difficult to revert.

Orders of the day.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I might say we can revert later on if necessary. I believe there are two questions this morning. We can revert and have these questions ordered.

Clerk of the House: The fifty-sixth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 713:

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, before we get into the body of this vote, I undertook at the outset of my discussion of the estimates to make some comments on the matters that had been dealt with by the hon. members for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), since their remarks were largely directed toward this vote, 713.

I will try to deal first with what the hon. member for Scarborough West said. He led directly into the subject, and much of what the hon. member for Parkdale said was along the same line.

First of all, it was an interesting experience indeed to listen to what they said, and I could not help but smile as I recalled where I stood at the time I was about the same age as the hon. member for Scarborough West. I took a canter in theology at that time, sir, and I had all the answers to all of the social ills of the world. I knew exactly how to deal with them, I knew exactly how they should be handled and I knew exactly that they could be cured and I could cure them. I was not very long in theology before I realized how stupid and how wrong I was, and then I went into medicine with exactly the same idea.

I knew all the answers to all of the questions and all of the problems that had plagued medicine over the years and the centuries; I could solve and answer all the questions and deal with all of the problems. The only thing I learned above all else, sir, in the time that I have remained in the practice of medicine is, how wrong I was with my first impressions, how little I actually did know, how little I actually do know. In spite of the tremendous body of experience and information and knowledge that we have built up in the practice of medicine in all of its various fields, one thing stands out crystal clear above all else—how little we do know and what great gaps there are in our knowledge.

It is quite true that the hon. member can produce a great many documents. To borrow a phrase which is a favourite one of this group, they can document the case, chapter and verse. So could I, Mr. Chairman, when I was the same age as the hon. member for Scarborough West. I could get scientific papers and I could get the opinions and the decisions of outstanding people in the various fields, men who shared my ideas—as I thought again, foolishly. But they were not my ideas,

Mr. Chairman. Actually, my ideas were those that were being put forth by those people and I had particularly either wittingly or otherwise, sought out in the literature and in all of the writings and in all of the books, I had sought for and found, papers that spelled out the opinions in which I could believe, in which I had faith, and the ideas that were pleasing to me. But I had not taken the time, nor did I then have the experience, knowledge or the perception to subject them to the cold, critical analysis which must be, perforce, completely unprejudiced and dispassionate, but which is absolutely essential.

However, the salutary influence of time and experience, I hope, has done something for me.

The outstanding thing in the comments made by both the hon. members, sir, and one cannot escape this, is that they made a great to-do of the failures. There is not a physician practising medicine, there is not a person practising in any line of endeavour or human society, who recognizes, whether he chooses to or not, that there must be failures in all things.

He does not mention, for instance, that The Department of Health, through its mental health branch, has, until very recently, done practically all of the psychiatric treatment that was done in the province of Ontario, and that even today, with the much wider spread of private practice, with the establishment of psychiatric units in general hospitals, initiated and encouraged by the department, with all of this expansion, we are still responsible for at least two-thirds of all of the admissions and for all of the long-term care. With the exception of one or two relatively small private institutions, the province of Ontario, through its mental health branch and The Department of Health, is responsible for all of the long-term psychiatric treatment for the patients.

Nor did either one of the hon. members mention that 999 Queen West—the oldest hospital, it is true, and I will come back to touch upon this matter of age—is an important and integral part of the teaching programme of the University of Toronto. Mr. Chairman, can you or any hon. member in this House, or any thinking person in the province of Ontario, contemplate a snake pit—the name applied to it by the hon. member for Parkdale—being recognized as part of the teaching programme of the largest medical school in Canada, and one of the most modern on the continent? It is rather hard to tell.

In this recital of all of the failures—and, Mr.

Chairman, there are relatively few—they gloss over the thousands of successful cases who pass through this hospital, who have passed through it, and will continue. These successful cases, sir, can be numbered in the thousands, vis-à-vis the relatively few failures. We do not make light of our failures, sir. No physician with any conscience or with any deep and abiding interest in his profession makes light of the failures. Of course, we have patients commit suicide; we have had several patients commit suicide. Indeed, on one of the days on which this inquest was being held, a dance was being held for the patients. Apparently because one patient was rebuffed by the young lady whom he asked to dance, he walked out of the hall and drowned himself in Georgian Bay, on which our hospital is situated. This in spite of the fact that two of our attendants gave chase immediately, jumped into the water after him and risked their own lives in an attempt to save him.

These things will happen, sir. They happen with ill people and they happen with people who are apparently normal—we have suicides and murders and capital crimes of all kinds. This is not to excuse them or to make light of them, but to point up that the failures with which we meet are bound to come in the nature of things; the more freedom we give our patients and the more we widen our concept of the care and treatment of the mentally ill, the more calculated risks will have to be taken. Then great headlines come out that a patient died, found tied to his chair. Mr. Chairman, that patient was tied to his chair in exactly the same way as you would be if you were unfortunate enough to meet with an automobile accident and were found tied to the seat of your car. It is a safety precaution, a safety belt, a thing that many hon. members of the Opposition and many hon. members all through this House have been advocating that we make compulsory. This is what was meant by being tied. The only difference is that we used a strip of old sheet, rather than a webbing belt. But it serves exactly the same purpose, and any person who has anything to do with nursing the sick recognizes it. But there are, and will continue to be, times when even those who are not mentally ill, will have to be restrained in bed for their own safety and for their own good.

The hon. member for Scarborough West spoke about bold new experiments in many other places, but in doing so, sir, he left the impression—and I think he wanted to leave the impression—that we here in Ontario are not attempting any bold new experiments. He mentioned, for instance, the experiment in Selkirk, with boarding-out homes, but he did not mention that this was not a government-sponsored thing; he did not mention that this was sponsored by the voluntary groups and the communities; he did not mention that for 35 years, Ontario has been in this field and has been carrying on with it quite successfully, and it has come to be accepted so much a pattern of our proceedings that it is scarcely noted now.

Again, he quoted—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I do not believe that the Hansard is yet before us, but, as I recall, I made it quite clear that that was a project in conjunction with the Canadian mental health association and the Selkirk hospital, and I indicated that quite explicitly when outlining the project.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I regret that I did not notice that the hon. member said that, and I accept his explanation. He did mention a good deal about after-care and how it was non-existent in Ontario, and I shall come to that in a little while. Perhaps now is probably the best time.

Apparently the hon. member does read the journals with an eye to what goes on in other jurisdictions, but ignores, as I have said, all references to Ontario. The family care, for instance, that he mentioned—in the American psychiatric association Journal of 1963 and the author was Dr. Walter Barton of Boston, gives the following figures for patients from mental hospitals and family care:

In the United States and Canada:

New York State 2,880; Veterans' administration for the entire nation of the United States of America 2,697; California 2,412; Illinois 1,573; Ontario 1,300.

I will not go down all of the others—practically all of them are American. But I might point out that British Columbia had two, Quebec had 43 and Saskatchewan had 98.

Now, on the basis of relative population, if we work on the same basis as British Columbia, we would have ten patients; if we were doing the same as Quebec, we would have 60 patients; if we were doing the same as Saskatchewan, we would have 686. But there are 1,300 patients in after-care, and this has been documented by my own staff and printed in journals which are accepted by scientific people all over the world.

Now, the hon. member spoke about Gheel in Belgium. I wonder if the hon. member has ever been there? I was, and I hope that we never adopt something like Gheel here in Ontario. It is not something to be proud of, and I could look at it with the eyes of one who has some knowledge of the profession and some knowledge of the needs of mentally ill patients.

The shortage of psychiatrists was again brought up, and if there is no doubt in any of our minds that this is so, only the other day I read an article on medical manpower in the United States and Canada, a part of which reads:

Even with the increasing interest in psychiatry, in 1970, we fully anticipate that we will be about 285 psychiatrists short here in Ontario to meet the desired ratio of 1 psychiatrist to 10,000 population.

I would say very seriously, Mr. Chairman, and point out to you, sir, that I know of no specialty in medicine that is more generously supported out of public funds than is the specialty of psychiatry. Psychiatrists join our staff—and that is where most of them are trained—at a much better income than is provided others by bursary or by way of honorarium or emolument, and this goes on all through their training. But in spite of that, only limited numbers are being attracted, albeit the past five or six years show one or two exceptions. There is a tendency to an increasing number.

The hon. member pointed out that the government was at fault for the staff morale, and I have to say again, sir, very seriously, that I refute this absolutely. Indeed, during a bitter and rather lengthy controversy in institute cases a little while ago, two of our good superintendents had occasion to write me their views concerning this. I quoted extracts from one of the letters here in the House. The other letter was published in one of the daily papers here in Toronto, and was there for everybody to read. I am very much concerned, sir, because of the apparent downgrading. This may not be intentional, but there is an apparent downgrading of the professional integrity and ability of our staff.

For instance, when we have hon. members standing up in this House and suggesting that because a psychiatrist is in the employ of the government, his evidence in a court of law is governed by the position he holds. I say to you, sir, that the legal history of Ontario—and my legal friends will know this better than I—will show that when a difficult case comes before the courts and psychiatric opinion is needed, the place to which the courts turn for that opinion, is The Department of Health. Departmental psychiatrists are called in practically all the important legal cases when expert testimony is needed.

I would submit to you, sir, that because these psychiatrists are employed by the department and the government, this is evidence, in my thinking, that they are more likely to give a dispassionate and an unprejudiced view. They are on salary; their fees are not dependent on the outcome of the case, or anything else; but that is quite apart. It is my judgment that the majority of professional men and women—the majority of men and women—let us broaden it out completely—want to give as good evidence as they can, regardless of what their status in life may be. I think that this tendency to question professional judgment is probably more detrimental to staff morale than anything that we might be doing, or failing to do.

My hon. friend from Sudbury (Mr. Sopha)—and I was rather surprised at him, because he, too, is a professional man—referred to our staff so often, not particularly The Department of Health staff, but all public services, as bureaucrats. There is something disgraceful about that word, “bureaucrats.” Here are men and women trying to do a good job for the people of Ontario—as indeed they are doing—and I would like to—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Is it a term of opprobrium?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: In my thinking, yes, and in the manner in which you use it. Perhaps I am judging too much the inflection with which you use it, or the inflection of voice that you apply when you do use it.

Mr. Sopha: I think you are a bit irritated at the Globe and Mail this morning, let us face it!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Not one little bit! Not one little bit!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): No party uses the term “bureaucrat” in reference to civil servants more than the Tory party.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I do not care who uses it. Mr. Chairman, it is a word that I do not think should be applied to our civil servants. They are public-spirited men and women doing a job to the very best of their ability, and we have in our service—and strangely enough we still manage to attract—outstanding persons in every field of endeavour.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The hon. Minister protests too much.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The Minister is not protesting too much, Mr. Chairman. The Minister is trying to join those of his colleagues in saying a word on behalf of those who have no right—and we had an instance of this in this House yesterday afternoon—or opportunity to stand up and say it for themselves. I say without hesitation that I take a very dim view of the remarks sometimes directed toward my staff. I will take all the nasty remarks you would like to give me. There is an old saying that I was taught as a child: “Sticks and stones will break my bones, but names will never hurt me.” You can call me what you like, but leave my staff alone unless you are in a position to judge them, and judge their ability, and judge the quality of their work.

The hon. member said a good deal about the costs, and the hon. member for Scarborough West went into this rather extensively. But, Mr. Chairman, the costs in our hospitals are not computed on the same basis as the costs in the general hospitals to which he referred. For instance, there are no capital costs included in our costs and on the basis, without going into lengthy detail, of this year's budget the per diem costs estimated to provide 8,476,000 on 30-day patient care will be $8.65 per day. Now this is not a proper costing, because more than 40 per cent of the persons under our care—and I want to make that distinction, they are not patients, they are persons under our care—more than 40 per cent of them are living with us. All that is shown as far as this costing is concerned is their food costs and in many cases some clothing costs. They are not hard on their clothing and do not use a great deal of it. Therefore, the costing in our hospitals is quite different and on an entirely different—

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask the hon. Minister a question? I want to get the figures correct. Did the hon. Minister quote into the record just now a figure of $8.65?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On the basis of this year's budget.

Mr. S. Lewis: On the basis of this year's budget. Is that a figure which is comparable to the $6.96 which I read into the record?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, $8.19 would be comparable to this figure.

Mr. S. Lewis: In other words, the hon. Minister is reading in a gross cost and I was reading in a net cost?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: I would point out to the hon. Minister that I specifically eliminated the gross cost when I read in the general hospital costs, so that the comparison would be valid. I removed from the OHSC figures the non-allowable income and the capital factor so that the costs would be exactly parallel and so that I would not mislead this House. I was careful to do so, so I think if he is going to make comparisons he should similarly make them on the same parallel level.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Then, Mr. Chairman, again I have to admit that I did not get the exact quotes of the hon. member, but in that case the comparable figure is $8.19 per day. It compares with the cost in chronic institutions of the kind. I reviewed our experience with tuberculosis sanatoria when I became Minister of Health. There were fairly large numbers under care in these sanatoria-hospitals which can be compared with the type of hospital that we operate—and if their costs had increased on the same ratio as ours have done, provided they still had the same number of patients, the costs today would be very comparable. This may sound a little bit involved because they have not the same number of patients.

As I said in my remarks on the estimates, there are fewer than 900 tubercular patients throughout all of the hospitals and their costs are somewhere between $13 and $19 per day now. But compared with other similar hospitals—and I am quite certain my superintendents know this quite clearly and quite thoroughly because they are knowledgeable of these figures—our costs are on a par, indeed our costs in our hospital schools exceed those of the state of New York, which is supposed to be one of the wealthiest jurisdictions on the North American continent. But this is quite apart. If our costs were established relative to the type of care that was being carried out—the active, convalescent, chronic, and domiciliary treatment—there would be a far different picture than there is at the present time.

It is also very interesting to note that in our discussions, which have been going on with the federal authorities for a long time in our attempts to work out a basis for the inclusion of mental patients under The Hospital Insurance Diagnostic Services Act, the figure that they estimate for all of Canada for only those who would be eligible for hospital support is $10.50 per day. This removes all of the last two categories. We have our patients divided into three categories; the last is purely custodial, and the second last is those in need of some medical but largely nursing care. We separate them out completely because they would not be eligible under the present Hospital Insurance Diagnostic Services Act agreement, and the per diem cost estimated by the federal people for all of Canada is $10.50 per day. This specious comparison of costs is quite out of order and quite out of keeping with reality.

There is not any doubt that the hon. member for Scarborough West has gone into this matter very thoroughly and he deserves a great deal of credit for the study that he has obviously put into it. He has built up, which is inevitable, some real knowledge on the basis of personal experience, but I wonder if he has not yet to master the art, may I call it art, of applying sound judgment to the things that he sees and hears and reads.

After all, Mr. Chairman, it is an inexorable law of life that the real artist learns that the canvas of life is not achieved by making broad sweeping strokes as with a paint ruler, but rather by using many brushes of all and sundry sizes, large and small, and with slow and sometimes halting moves, that steady and evolutionary progress comes about. It is not by revolution that we have reached the place where we are in this life and in this our society, but rather by the slow and sometimes, I repeat, halting and quite often discouraging process of evolution, with many successes, sometimes many failures, always some failures, but by trial and error this is the only way that our final success can come about. It is only in this way that we can ever make a worthwhile contribution to life and society.

So it is with our work; we have our failures and we have our successes, we have our progressive people and we have those who are less so, and we have our institutions that are carrying on bold and daring experiments, and sometimes they fail and sometimes they succeed. In balance, some good comes out of all of them. All of us have our hares and our tortoises, but who at this juncture will say that one is making any better or any more lasting contribution than any other? I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that each one is carefully adding his piece to the entire mosaic, so that only posterity will be able to judge the total effect.

Both hon. members have pointed out the fact—and my friend the hon. member for Sudbury drew attention to it—that the Globe and Mail supports one of them at least in saying that nothing has been done or little has been done since 1959. Mr. Chairman, I have to—

Mr. Sopha: Both wrong!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, I have to agree that all three of you are wrong. Indeed, after I came to the office this morning, having read this most—

Mr. Sopha: I was trying to be kind to you.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am not trying to be unkind to anyone, Mr. Chairman. I put before you the facts as they actually are, and when I arrived in my office, just from memory I jotted down things to recount once again in the House, because I think they are worthy of repeating. Since 1959, the following capital progress alone has been made:

Brockville—we carried on an extensive renovation; Kingston—we built an entirely new hospital; Whitby—we built a large expansion and a school for nursing; Toronto—we built a new hospital; Orillia—we built a large replacement; Gravenhurst—we bought the existing sanatorium; Hamilton—we built a new hospital; Woodstock—very extensive renovations following hard on the heels of a new hospital, opened I think in 1958; Goderich—a new hospital; Owen Sound—a new hospital; Palmerston—a new hospital school about to be opened; London—we are in the process of rebuilding; Port Arthur—a large expansion; Cedar Springs—a new hospital school.

In addition, Beck sanatorium was purchased from the London health association; Edgar radar station was purchased from one of the departments of the federal government; community psychiatric hospitals have been supported almost totally from a financial standpoint in Ottawa, Sudbury and Windsor, and all three of them are operating; planning for the Windsor hospital is almost complete; at South Porcupine a new hospital building is under construction; at Penetang, an extensive replacement has just been called, I think, for contract; and psychiatric units in general hospitals have provided 500 beds, all since 1959.

This alone, Mr. Chairman, without any of the things upon which it is difficult to put a dollar and cents price tag, have come about in that short space of time.

It is not a question of staffing or the medical orientation of psychiatric service. I think the hon. member for Parkdale was concerned about this, and I believe also the hon. member for Scarborough West mentioned it, particularly in his Throne debate speech, but they believe that our orientation was wrong. I think the hon. members lose sight of the fact that at one time, when psychiatry burst upon the medical scene, there were those daring and young souls who thought that psychiatry was the answer to all the medical problems. They too have learned the lesson that I have learned and that thousands before me have learned, the lesson which I predict my young hon. friends across will learn, when they have as many more years over their heads as I have over theirs. They too will learn that psychiatry is not the answer to everything. Every problem of life is not a health problem.

The psychiatry we are practising is medically oriented and we make no apology for this. To say that they are being medically oriented to the exclusion of other disciplines, is not due to a change in policy with respect to the participation of other disciplines, but a misinterpretation of the administrative goals of The Department of Health. The goals are based on the assumption that mental health activities are exclusively the responsibility of the mental health branch. Herein lies the first and gravest error, Mr. Chairman.

In the past, a limited number of personnel have attempted to cover the entire field of behaviour disorders and, consequently, have been able to do it inadequately. In an attempt to do one thing well, that is to treat psychiatric illness, an administrative decision has been made to concentrate departmental resources on treatment services, which are, by definition, under psychiatric direction, but which will always require the participation of a number of other disciplines.

Appropriate treatment can be provided only when both inpatient and outpatient services are available and related.

There are two other tasks to which psychiatric and other mental health personnel can make a contribution, but in which they do not necessarily play the major role. Firstly, prevention of psychiatric illness, mental retardation, and behaviour disorders in the broad sense; and secondly, the control and management of disordered behaviours.

These are the tasks which involve families, the schools, the courts, social agencies, churches, general medical services, labour, management, communications and entertainment media, and almost any social institution or group that plays an important part in the life of the particular individual under consideration.

Our primary function at the present time is to provide treatment in provincial facilities and to encourage and assist the development of local treatment services. We have also encouraged our staff to contribute to the solution of these more general problems, both as consultants and as citizens, participating in community efforts. I know it is a matter of serious concern to my staff to find means by which the potential resources of community agencies can be mobilized and developed to meet these needs, and to dispel the idea that activity in the field of mental health is a government monopoly. I think this is one of the greatest problems in education that we have to face at the present time.

On the matter of staff, Mr. Chairman, the hon. members would attempt to point out to you, sir, that the ratio of our staff to patients is much less than other areas and other jurisdictions. First of all, there was a question about why only certain hospitals were used for the training of psychiatrists. This is not of our doing. We have nothing to do with this at all, except to co-operate with the university. Graduate training in psychiatry is the responsibility of the universities; they have chosen the hospitals which they will use. These schools are at the University of Toronto, the University of Western Ontario, which uses London and St. Thomas, and Queen's University, which uses our hospital at Kingston.

We are in constant conversation with the dean and the faculties of the various medical schools in an attempt to encourage them to use more of our hospitals so that both of us would profit in some measure.

There is no prescribed ratio of psychologists or many other of the disciplines recommended by either the psychologists, in the case of psychology, or the other disciplines as the case may be. All of these may change with the type of programme that is in progress in the particular hospital. There have been no statements of staff-patient ratio issued by official agencies or professional associations in the past seven or eight years. This, I think, is a good thing, because, here again, you cannot have a stereotyped programme. Whatever the programme is, you must have the staff and gear the staff to the programme that is underway. By this refusal, or lack of making statements on standards, it is recognized that the changing philosophies of treatment and patient management invalidate, to some degree, the staff-patient ratios which were established previously, and that no organization today will very vigorously support.

I know that comparisons are sometimes odious, yet one must have comparisons, because how does one measure the efforts that one is expending unless they have some other yardstick by which to measure them? I already pointed out that in talking about our staff and about many things relative to our hospitals the hon. members had both neglected that only 56 per cent of our people under our care are under psychiatric treatment, and those requiring nursing or domiciliary care—I was not able to give the exact figures—account for 44 per cent. I have the figures here now.

From a publication, Mr. Chairman, "Mental Hospitals, Manpower Needs, Psychiatrists," published in the United States of America, it is estimated that at least 10,000 more psychiatrists are needed now. I mention this sir, only to point up to you, as I have said many times before; that psychiatrists are in short supply all over the world. There seems to be no solution to the problem, although every jurisdiction concerned in this matter of treating the mentally ill are very much concerned and are bending all efforts. The American government, I think it is well known, has for a long time been providing substantial support to the training of psychiatrists and those other disciplines involved in the psychiatric programme, as has our own government here in Ontario.

In the same book, it is worthy of noting that most of the people in need are children, the aged, or patients with low incomes. We have tried to do something about the latter, but the scarcity of psychiatrists for children's care is very clear at the present time.

By way of comparison, I have tried to pick out some of the progressive jurisdictions which neighbour on us. In Ontario, inpatient only, we have one psychiatrist to 135 patients. Michigan has one to 152. New Jersey has one to 153. Ohio has one to 274. Massachusetts has one to 95 and California has one to 76. For some reason, California seems to attract more psychiatrists than any other jurisdiction in the North American continent.

But even by these various yardsticks—and all of these are wealthy jurisdictions, Mr. Chairman; at least as wealthy as Ontario, in some cases considered to have a higher standard of living—we rank very well with them.

The growth in staff—and this, I think, is another piece of evidence that will refute in some measure the statements that nothing has been done over the last six years—has been rather marked. This is over a ten-year period from 1955 to 1965. Ward staff has risen from 3,980 to 6,489. I thought I had the comparable figures for patient load, but I find I have not got them with me at the present time. But it is rather interesting to note that the rate of patients in hospitals per 100,000 population today is the lowest it has been since 1936. This, of course, includes those in residential units and this includes all of the bodies in hospitals.

Our professional staff in the same ten-year period has risen from 252 to 460. That is excluding nurses. Our clerical staff has risen from 292 to 780, domestic from 549 to 2,125. The maintenance staff has risen from 348 to 750; the farm and gardening staff from 135 to 265; nurses from 553 to 930; hospital aids from 1,468 to 2,836; hospital attendants from 1,914 to 2,833; altogether 3,980 to 6,489. The total staff in our institutions has increased from 6,003 to 11,420.

Mr. Chairman, that excludes Thistletown and the Toronto psychiatric hospital, which are quite frequently left out of these because other very large programmes are going on, making it difficult to compare them on a reasonable basis with the other hospitals.

The hon. member for Scarborough West touched upon the homes for special care and was about to state something. I will make only a few remarks, because I believe I asked him to withhold his remarks on this until later on. I gave a wrong figure yesterday, Mr. Chairman. I said 2,223 were removed from our hospitals. The number should have been 2,410 and I will withhold further comments on this programme until I have heard what the hon. members say.

I did touch on after-care. We have never pretended that after-care was an outgrowth of the hospitals. Again, we have encouraged our staffs in the field to make themselves available in a consultative capacity and, as good citizens, to participate in things in which their knowledge and training can assist. They can offer assistance to the communities in which they live. But we have not assumed that this is an outgrowth of the hospital, yet it is rather interesting that in October, 1964—and this was a figure picked at random—we had 6,977 patients in after-care through our outpatient departments.

Mr. Chairman, to say that we are doing nothing in after-care, of course, is certainly refuted by this, and this is the statistic taken directly from the records of our department.

There is one matter, sir, which I had hoped when I came into these estimates I would not have to touch upon at all, but it was brought up. I think it is time to put in clear and unmistakable perspective, this matter of bringing to the floor of the House cases—unless by desire of the patient, or his family, and this is the right of every patient and family—that have been dealt with and have attained some publicity and notoriety or whatever one may have. I refer in this case to the Fawcett case. I had hoped that this would have been allowed to lie, because, after all, there is no denying the fact that this case was very thoroughly considered, rightly or wrongly is not for me to judge. I hope I shall never reach that stage in life where I think that I know better than the courts of our land, and whether the decisions made by the courts of our land are right or wrong is not for me to say.

I can only say that this patient was adjudged by many psychiatrists to be ill. This judgment was sustained in the courts. On two occasions, at least, application was made on behalf of this patient for a writ of habeas corpus and in neither case was it granted. I feel that to put the department in the position of saying to the courts, "You don't know what you are talking about," after all of the evidence had been called for and I would hope adduced, this would be—I cannot find any word in the extensive vocabulary of our English language to describe our actions in a case of that kind. This is not our function. This patient was adjudged to be mentally ill, and I am quite prepared to accept the judgment of the psychiatrists employed by the department.

I am very concerned about this. I am very concerned about the apparent inconsistency in some of our thinking. For instance, in the Globe and Mail on January 20, there was a very sensible, I thought, and a very sound editorial written as the lead editorial, "The public has a right to know it is protected." This was a case where a young lad had gotten into difficulties, indeed was tried for murder, was committed because he was mentally ill, and apparently at the time of his trial it was said by the judge, or it is quoted here, the judge said, "If you find the boy not guilty because of insanity, he will probably spend the rest of his life in a mental hospital."

First of all, I have to say with very great respect, that no judge should make a statement of that kind, because none of us is in a position to know. Just because the boy was ill at the time he committed the crime, or charged with committing the crime, does not mean to say that he is going to stay ill for all of his life. And because he committed murder while he was insane is not to say that he may not get better.

However, I did not quote this to comment on the editorial, or to comment on what the judge said, but to show that the editor obviously felt that there was a very grave responsibility resting upon the doctors in charge of patients of this kind to make sure. I believe our responsibility is that the patient's interests are looked after and everything possible is done to restore the patient to the fullest possible mental health. At the same time, our superintendents and our staffs have a very grave and great responsibility to the public, although it is not as well spelled out as for doctors or members of the other disciplines. They believe their duty is to the patient, their first duty is to the patient, but they are good citizens and they are aware of their responsibility to the public. It is with this in mind that their judgment is, at least, partly arrived at.

I think if one were to read the very complete account of the Fawcett case, which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of May 12—a double-page spread was devoted to this—I think it will give one a better appreciation, a more complete appreciation of the total case if we, as laymen, are going to sit in judgment upon the judgments of the courts. This case went to the highest courts in the land. I do not know anybody other than the Legislature that has the right to overrule them. And I am quite certain the Legislature would think carefully before they would step into a matter of this kind. Indeed, sir, the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party, I believe, certainly put words in my mind, and I believe he quoted them. I have not had an opportunity to check Hansard, but I say this in all kindness and with very great respect, he stated on May 25, 1965, as I caught his words; "Anyone else who would meddle in a medical decision should have his head read." With that, sir, I rest my case.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, on this matter of Fred Fawcett, I want to emphasize one point. When I was speaking on this—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, since I did not raise it in my earlier remarks, I shall not make reference to Fred Fawcett at this point, except to say that in one sense, like the hon. Minister, I wish the case would rest. The man is on his farm and in free society and so be it. Let us not harass him or his case further in this Legislature. I think that there are certain aspects within the mental health branch which need to be discussed, but I hope that they can be discussed free from that particularly notorious illustration.

Mr. Chairman: I want to make some remarks in response to the hon. Minister. He dealt with certain of the features I raised. I am going to raise some of them again because I do not feel that satisfactory answers were forthcoming.

Let me begin by saying that I hope the hon. Minister is not excessively self-conscious as to his age. I always thought him a reasonably buoyant personality, a man who is obviously not of excessive years, and he need not show any self-consciousness by imputing to me being under-age. I appreciate that that may be a factor, but he need not be concerned.

Let me also say to him, Mr. Chairman, that theology and medicine never claimed for themselves infallibility, and it is interesting that the hon. Minister should have taken that approach upon entrance. I did not claim at the outset of my remarks any stretch of infallibility. I made it quite clear that my remarks were derived from some reading in the field, and from extensive visits with superintendents in his own department. And on that basis, I would offer some reflections.

The hon. Minister cited silly old tired aphorisms, the old Disraeli aphorisms—that if you are not a socialist when you are 21, you have no heart, and if you are not a Tory when you are 50, you have no head.

Admittedly, the hon. Minister did not use that particular tired cliché. But that is the substance of his reply. It just does not meet rational argument. It does not meet an effort to document an illustrate a case. It is a neat side-stepping procedure, but it will not do.

I thought the hon. Minister made one rather good analogy, Mr. Chairman, when he talked about his mental health pattern as a canvas on which one painted. I would be the first to say in this House, that the hon. Minister of Health is by no mean stretch of the imagination any kind of Rembrandt. In fact, his work is not even worthy, if I may put it that way, of the Dorothy Cameron gallery. It is one thing to make spacious sweeps of the brush. It is another to indulge in pop art, to splatter paint on the canvas in an irregular, unco-ordinated and undefined manner, and that is what has happened to this department. It is in fact the hon. Minister's responsibility, and no one in the Opposition ever suggested that it was the responsibility, or the integrity, of his own staff that was concerned.

We are dealing with departmental policy, and it is departmental policy which is now under discussion. The hon. Minister says that it is necessary to be dispassionate. Of course it is necessary to be dispassionate; but opinion is also critical, and it is the responsibility of Opposition to level criticism, hopefully constructive criticism, and that was the effort. You do not denude that criticism by a cold, calculated and dispassionate reserve which robs the very sensitive and important field of any substance.

Now let us deal with some of the individual things which the hon. Minister raised. He raised 999 Queen Street, in, if I may say, a character of phrase and intonation that bespoke sadness not to say petulance. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that all the remarks about 999 Queen Street, the Toronto Ontario hospital, that have been made by this member, have come from the report of the superintendent of that hospital. They have not come from hearsay; they have come from the man who governs the operation of that hospital. Therefore, if the hon. Minister takes out after it, he is not taking out after the Opposition; he is taking out after that report.

I do not intend to read all of this report into the record again. I would just remind the hon. Minister that in the superintendent's words the buildings are worthy of the 19th century; that efforts to get new quarters have been consistently abortive; that the per diem per capita is "scandalously hypocritical"; that the standard of care at $8 a day could not be beyond a "medieval standard;" that the staff complement is not sufficiently large; that there is no definition of the future of the hospital; that the readmission rates are soaring because of the pressure on beds. All in the superintendent's report. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I have never read this portion of the report, but I might as well read it into the record now.

When the hon. Minister talks in that earnest and somewhat, if I may suggest, facile manner about integrity of staff and morale, and how we, on the Opposition side, are undermining morale, let me read this paragraph from the annual report of Dr. Paul Christie:

Meanwhile, the day-to-day life of the patient is to a great extent in the hands of auxiliary staff of both sexes who receive their training as hospital aides and attendants within our own organization. The skill and loyalty of these employees remains the indispensable foundation of the hospital. Here too, however, we find ourselves in great difficulties. Of about 120 female hospital aides, 26, or more than one-fifth, were newly appointed during the year to replace those leaving the hospital almost entirely by resignation. For male ward staff, the situation was even more distressing. Out of a total staff of 160, 69, or 43 per cent, were new appointments during the year. This compares most unfavourably with the turnover in the same group during 1962.

Now, sir, I drive this next sentence home:

In the opinion of hospital management, it reflects the serious decline in morale of staff of this and related categories resulting from service-wide developments beyond the control of this hospital.

Now that is the superintendent of the hospital concerned: the serious decline in morale of staff. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I have never read that paragraph into the record before, because I thought the point was sufficiently documented. But if we are to continue to be subjected to this specious reasoning that Opposition criticism of the Ontario hospital structure is what undermines morale, then it has to be put on the record.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, let it be said, that it is characteristic of institutional groups that when outside attacks are unwarranted, they retrench; they solidify, their morale becomes greater in the face of those attacks. Let me assure the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that the situation at 999 remains grave; it remains across the board in the Ontario hospital system, and it has been documented by all the men involved. So much for the Toronto Ontario hospital, except that we still wait to hear in this House for the first announcement about when the buildings will be started, and when the first sod will turn.

Next, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Health sought to refute statements made about the attrition of staff, and the shortage. He talked about psychiatrists and the lack of a psychiatric ratio. Let me say several things in this regard, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, I quoted a ratio of the American psychiatric association of one to 100. If the hon. Minister refutes that such a ratio exists, then he refutes something which is accepted by everyone in the field.

Second, it is, in fact, possible to establish a ratio for social workers and psychologists. The concept of the clinic team of one psychiatrist, two social workers and a psychologist, while not infallible of itself, is a generally accepted concept applied to all kinds of mental health programmes. It is not invalid to apply it to the Ontario hospital system.

Third, the drop in psychiatric staff is very, very serious. It is critical beyond description. It is not enough to say that we are trying, or that we offer certain inducements, or that there is a shortage across the board. The drop in staff is not merely related to the Ontario hospitals; it is related to the entire system across the province.

I have in my hand an edition of Canada's

Mental Health for May-June, 1965. On page 51 are advertisements for staff. To let the hon. members of the Legislature see how serious the problem is across the province, let me read some of them into the record.

Certified psychiatrists wanted at the Royal Victoria hospital in Barrie to open a new wing.

Psychiatrist needed in Sudbury to open the wing.

Psychiatrist needed in Peterborough to work in the Peterborough civic hospital.

Psychiatrist needed for the York county hospital in Newmarket.

Certified specialist in psychiatry needed for Brantford.

Certified and experienced psychiatrist for Belleville.

Belleville has been advertising for two years to get a psychiatrist to open up a wing in the general hospital; they have still not been able to do so.

Mr. Chairman, within the department, in the field of social workers, you have this range.

The province of Ontario to participate in co-ordinated programme of patient care in community and hospital setting. Appointments available in—and this is within the province's own system:

—Brockville, Cedar Springs, East York, Hamilton, Kingston, Kitchener, London, New Toronto, North Bay, Orillia, Port Arthur, Penetanguishene, St. Thomas, Smiths Falls, Thistletown, Toronto, Whitby, Windsor and Woodstock.

With the first salary range starting at $4,600 per year, with a bachelor of social work degree.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that not only is the staff shortage critical, but it need not be—it simply need not be. In the field of psychiatry, the salaries are so out of line with the practice of private and community psychiatry that there are no comparisons to be made. Indeed, the inducements that are given, to my understanding, are even less than in the province of Quebec and the province of Saskatchewan. But you cannot expect psychiatrists to remain in the Ontario hospital system at the salaries that they are presently paid. If the hon. Minister thinks that a change in salary will not make a difference, I challenge him to raise his salaries to substantial levels commensurate with the community and to watch the response in his Ontario hospital institutions.

As far as social workers and psychologists go, Mr. Chairman, the shortage in the Ontario hospital system of those ancillary personnel in the clinic team is more dramatic and more pronounced than any other similar parallel in other fields, whether it be in community psychiatry, children's agencies, family agencies, or even in some of the educational guidance areas.

The social workers and psychologists simply will not come in to the Ontario hospital system, partly because of the sense of futility and geographic isolation of many of the hospitals, and partly because of the preposterously low salary range at which they begin.

It is all very well, Mr. Chairman—reverting for a moment to psychiatrists again; the House will forgive me if I move in a less than fully-organized fashion—for the hon. Minister to stand in this House and say that a decision of the college of physicians and surgeons is not his decision—it is a decision arrived at in conjunction with the university medical teaching provisions—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I did not even mention the college of—

Mr. S. Lewis: I know you did not, but I am assuming that it is the college of physicians and surgeons which sets certification requirements.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, no. It is the Royal college.

Mr. S. Lewis: The Royal college, well—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am not being facetious, Mr. Chairman. It is a different body.

Mr. S. Lewis: The Royal college. Yes, I follow you. I should have said that it is the Royal college which sets certification requirements in conjunction with the universities. It may be that the hon. Minister has not set them; but it is not enough, Mr. Chairman, for him to wipe his hands of the subject in so superficial a fashion. If the results of that decision will be a continuing attrition of staff in one hospital after another; if the results of that decision will be to undermine the psychiatric complement in more than half of our Ontario hospitals, then the hon. Minister of Health for Ontario has to come to account in this Legislature.

He does not operate in a vacuum; the Royal college is subject to Acts of this Legislature. We are the law-making body in the land; you do not wipe your hands of it by saying that they made the decision and that you did not. It smacks of the sticks-and-stones jingle, which is equally inappropriate to the subject under discussion.

In a very recent article—I think it was in the Toronto Daily Star of Saturday, June 12—it was pointed out that whereas some 49 psychiatrists had left within the last 12 months, only 17 had come to take their place. Mr. Chairman, even though the hon. Minister may quote ratios that sound good on the surface, of psychiatrists to patients, a great many of those psychiatrists are part-time and a large number of those psychiatrists are in training. They are not certified psychiatrists—they are not even at the diplomate level—and the understanding is that those psychiatrists should be doing more training than serving; but in fact, of course, they are considered part of the complement because in our desperation we have to use every human being to the full.

I can appreciate the immense problems in the field of psychiatry, social work and psychologists' education and training. I simply say this, Mr. Chairman, that never in this Legislature has the hon. Minister put forward a manpower plan—not once. Nor has his colleague, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile).

We have never had an analysis of manpower needs; we have never had an analysis of the various career levels; we have never had an analysis of a five-year or a ten-year plan, and until we get a manpower document worthy of the name, it is not sufficient to sit back and say that there is a shortage everywhere. We want to know where that shortage manifests itself, why, and what provisions are being made.

In the great $114 million grant made in October, 1964, I believe it was, the relationship of that money to the field of psychiatry was not defined in this House, except in the broad general terms that it was for medical schools and medical education. I say to the hon. Minister that his responsibility does not end with psychiatry; it relates to all the adjacent fields and we have nothing, absolutely nothing.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, let me make a point that may not be known to hon. members of this Legislature. Between the years 1951 and 1954, the federal Department of Health and Welfare conducted a manpower study in these fields across Canada. The only province that did not participate was the province of Ontario. The national Department of Health and Welfare is again contemplating a nationwide study of manpower needs in these areas, and the province that still has not announced its intention to participate is the province of Ontario.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the reason the province of Ontario did not participate in the early 1950s and has not given evidence of participating in the mid-1960s is because of what it would reveal about our manpower allocations and resources. It would cast this province in a frame of shame from which there would be no retreat.

So much, Mr. Chairman, for the staff situation, for the moment. I would point out to the House, as a parting shot, that one of the other things that gives the hon. Minister's figures a little more substance than otherwise they might have, is the change that is about to take place on July 1, 1965. The situation now is rosy in comparison to that date when training terms are up and when hospitals such as Hamilton and London reach a crisis situation.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister talks about the per diem rate and he tries to defend it. I must say that I was somewhat nonplussed. I did not think that any Minister could conceivably defend those per diems—per diems that I read into the record of $6.96 a day. He talked with some favour, no less—some enthusiasm, no less—about the per diem rates at the hospital schools in Ontario. Let me remind hon. members that the per diem rates at the hospital school in Orillia and Smiths Falls for the year 1963-64 were $5.82 a day.

That may compare favourably with some other jurisdictions, but such comparisons are thoroughly odious in themselves. They have no relevance in this Legislature.

The figure of $5.82 a day is a disgraceful figure; $6.96 a day is a criminal figure, and the comparisons with general hospitals, with chronic hospitals, with convalescent hospitals, with training schools, with reform institutions and with industrial farms, are all essentially valid, Mr. Chairman. They are social services provided in an institutional framework and the hon. Minister has no argument whatsoever until he does something about his per capita per diem.

I pointed out to him in my earlier remarks, Mr. Chairman, that the per capita per diem that he was now paying in his mental hospitals was barely above that being paid under The Homes for Special Care Act, and The Homes for Special Care Act is designed purely and simply for nursing and domiciliary care. It makes no pretensions at treatment whatsoever. Obviously, the per diem rates are an unqualified scandal. They do demonstrate the pennies-for-the-mind mentality on the government benches. I do not know what the hon. Minister has to do to persuade his Treasury board comrades, but he had better do something, and do it quickly, before we have one unhappy explosion after another.

Then the hon. Minister went on to the field of after-care and he rebuked me for making reference to Gheel in Belgium. Let me say to him, Mr. Chairman, that all I said about Gheel was that about 300 years ago, after-care began in Gheel. I hold no brief for its present operation; I admit quite willingly to the House that I do not know about its present operation.

Let me make one or two observations about the hon. Minister's reply in regard to after-care. Our criticism of after-care, Mr. Chairman, is again related to the remarks and the facts and the opinions adduced from members of his own staff. The documentation is from his own material. I read into the record of this House a quotation from Dr. Pratton of Kingston Ontario hospital wherein he felt that we were now doing a disservice to the patients in mental hospitals by sending them home within a three-month period, because there were no after-care services in the community sufficient to provide for them. To suggest that there were 1,300 cases on after-care in a discharge situation of thousands in the province of Ontario, I suggest, is also specious.

After-care, Mr. Chairman, consists of more than prescribing drugs for the patient who has left. Yet in one Ontario hospital after another that is all that after-care consists of. After-care in its most fundamental sense involves following the patient back to his vocational readjustment and to his emotional, community and family readjustment. The hon. Minister himself admitted in this Legislature yesterday that in his medical rehabilitation branch he had 33 workers. Now he tries to make a viable case in this Legislature for a functioning after-care programme with 33 workers in the medical rehabilitation branch. The Opposition should collapse in smiles were it not such an unhappy tragedy.

Every one of the superintendents I talked to—and I say this without qualification, and I do not intend to compromise their integrity or stature because I think I report them faithfully—and all the material I read, suggested that the soaring readmission rates in the Ontario hospitals related primarily to the absence of a vigorous after-care programme. In Toronto Ontario hospital the rate relates even more inexcusably to the pressure on beds. But in Hamilton and in Whitby, for instance, two of the biggest hospitals, and in St. Thomas, with the biggest inpatient complement, after-care is the absent factor in the readmission rates. The two indeed can be strongly equated.

I make one final observation, Mr. Chairman, on this point. I suppose the hon. Minister has advisors far more esteemed and knowledgeable in this field than I will ever hope to be. But I think we are in error in accepting the proposition that there should be in excess of 6,000 patients in after-care, so-called through outpatient departments. Are our mental hospitals treatment hospitals or are they revolving doors? Do our patients simply come out of the mental hospital and then go back to the outpatient department and then ultimately re-enter again? Outpatient departments should not be dominated, I suggest, by after-care patients. That is not a wise use of outpatient departments. Outpatient departments are our link in the chain between the hospital and the community; outpatient departments are the referral channels for our whole spectrum of community agencies. They should not be harassed and choked by after-care patients on the verge of readmission. And there are, in this province, some superintendents who agree with that proposition, Mr. Chairman.

At the Toronto Ontario hospital—and I was interested to note this—only ten per cent of the outpatient department can be described as after-care. Fully 90 per cent come from the community channels of referral. Now that is a community programme worthy of the name, and it is an intelligent distribution of after-care responsibility. After-care, as we understand it, as most jurisdictions understand it, involves the use of social workers, public health nurses, general practitioners, and VONs, following the patient into the community, into their homes, and doing social service work in that environment. It does not involve the patient clogging an outpatient department. That is not after-care, that is just a fill-in, that is a desperate gasp to close a system in disrepair and, let it be said, in disrepute.

So much for some of the initial arguments in these areas that the hon. Minister made. But the one argument that he made merely in passing, and that I want to make some further remarks about—not lengthy the hon. Minister will be pleased to know, but strong—is this question of the medical versus the community factor. I spent a large part of my initial presentation on this aspect, so I shall not belabour the point now. I realize it is not as exciting as talking about per diem payments, and attrition of staff, and re-admission rates, and after-care. But it is, Mr. Chairman, I suggest, fundamental. Either in the year 1965 we are setting out on a proper pattern of mental health services, or we are establishing a pattern of services which we will hereafter forever regret. I am profoundly worried that it will be the latter pattern.

Let me remind the House what Dr. Nicholas Hobbs said in the 1964 edition of the Journal of Orthopsychiatry:

There is a chance that the new mental health centres will be nothing more than a product of the general urbanization of America, a movement from country to city. Twenty years from now, people may moan not over bricks and mortar, but over glass and steel. There is a real danger that we shall succeed in changing only the location and the architecture of the state hospital. If the new centres turn inward toward the hospital, they too will be monuments to failure.

That is part of the essential thesis I am making, Mr. Chairman. I agree with the hon. Minister: psychiatry is not infallible, and psychiatry does not have all the answers. Yet, Mr. Chairman, let me say to him that psychiatry is dictating all the answers. The book, More for the Mind, written as it was by eight psychiatrists—unlike the British and American patterns—sets down a pattern of psychiatric wings and medical models which I suggest to you is inconsistent with the community pattern.

It is very difficult for me to define in words in this Legislature precisely what one means by a community pattern. But essentially it is this: First, that mental health services should not always be affixed to hospitals, be they general hospitals or Ontario hospitals; secondly, that some mental health services should be consciously located in the community, rather like the Toronto mental health clinic is at present, or the London mental health clinic has been for some time; third, that community channels in the best sense be exploited.

I showed the hon. Minister in my opening remarks—or tried to show him—what was happening in the province of Ontario. In the eighth annual statistical summary on community health services in Ontario, it showed that 60 per cent of all the new cases at our clinics are coming from general practitioners or other health services. So not only do we have the medical model in the sense that it is situated directly within a hospital umbrella, but we even have a medical model in the sense that all the referring agencies, or a great majority of them, come from general practitioners and health sources.

What happened to the other areas, Mr. Chairman? Let me refresh the memory of the House. Family agencies 1.6 per cent, children's agencies 3.9 per cent, educational agencies 8.8 per cent, self or parent 11.1 per cent, friends or relatives 2.1 per cent. In other words, all of those things which we consider to be properly and profoundly representative of the community are not presently reflected in our community mental health centres.

The excuse which the hon. Minister offered this morning, I frankly found distasteful. It is not a fact that the mental health branch of the province of Ontario is only one of several groups responsible for developing these community features. The mental health branch in this province, the policies enunciated by the hon. Minister, are primarily responsible for striking the community pattern.

In every jurisdiction in North America where a good community pattern operates, it stems from the mental health, public health, preventive mechanism, and that mechanism now resides in The Department of Health first and foremost. It may be very well to bring in all your other community agencies, and it is important that they be involved. But the original point, the impetus, the motivation, must come from this department, and more specifically from this branch.

It is fallacious, I suggest, to argue otherwise. And I profoundly hope that we are not sacrificing a community orientation, one of the most exciting and dramatic developments in the whole field of mental health, to this obsession with the medical model, like some relentless broken record which refuses to take in community concern.

I do not know what the hon. Minister's intentions are. Perhaps he will broaden out into the community. Perhaps he will educate the police, and educate the clergy, and establish contact with the schools and the general practitioners, and do all these things that community mental health centres should do. But as yet, Mr. Chairman, there is very little evidence, a minimum of evidence, and I found this report on the referral channels, frankly, heartbreaking.

The only saving features of this report were the few institutions I quoted which had established community channels. The one thing which characterized them and distinguished them from all others, was their location in the community as distinct from the hospital. I think that the argument is, therefore, a fairly strong one.

I had not intended to do this at the moment, but obviously it is akin to what the hon. Minister has said, so I shall go on.

In a state of great distress and concern in 1964, the Conservative government in the province of Ontario, Mr. Chairman, suddenly realized that 44 per cent of its people in Ontario hospitals—I use the hon. Minister's figure—were wrongly there. They required primarily domiciliary or nursing care, and nothing beyond that. In other words, close to 50 per cent of the patients in our mental hospitals should not, in fact, be there. Although last night I did not have the hon. Minister's figure, I had come to the conclusion it was 47 per cent, on the basis of this mental care in the Metropolitan Toronto report. So I am quite happy to accept the 44 per cent figure.

In a move which was a decision both of panic and resourcefulness, we established The Homes for Special Care Act in the province of Ontario, and that was to take the burden off. Then, last night, we had, after at least a year of operation, some of the results of that Homes for Special Care Act. I want to remind the hon. members what the hon. Minister said. In St. Thomas Ontario hospital, out of some 850 to 900 patients who should not be there, we have moved 73. In Whitby, out of some 700 who should not be there, we have moved 69. In Hamilton, out of some 800 who should not be there, we have moved 40. In Kingston, out of over 700 who should not be there, we have moved 73. In Toronto, out of 550, we have moved 107.

And so it goes, Mr. Chairman. In other words, The Homes for Special Care Act has very serious limitations. Indeed, it may, in the future emerge as something which filled an initial gap; but the whole principle, Mr. Chairman, of moving mental patients, holus bolus, into nursing homes, and even further isolating them from the community, is a principle under question. I am not sure that that entire rationale is justified. I must admit to the hon. Minister that it is an area that perplexes me and one to which I should like to give more thought. But I am not at all sure that that itself is justified. In fact, I noted to the House in the discussion of after care last week that the psychiatric home care programme in Saskatoon, run by the university hospital, was placing people between the ages of 57 and 90 in foster home programmes in the community; that they have not resorted to a nursing home programme; and where they did have nursing home programmes, they had found them unsatisfactory. So we may, two or three years from now, regret the entire pattern.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if we do not regret it, it has become obvious that The Homes for Special Care Act cannot of itself do the job; it is, as yet, another diversion from reality. What are some of the obvious reasons why it cannot do the job? They are very simple, Mr. Chairman. Take Kingston Ontario hospital.

Kingston Ontario hospital is located in Frontenac county. The hon. members of this House may be interested to know that in all Frontenac county there is not a single nursing home. Not one in the entire county, the county of origin of Kingston Ontario hospital.

Hamilton Ontario hospital. Any of the nursing homes on which it might have call are located out in the Niagara peninsula. It would, once again, cut off the necessary and established tie between family and patients. And, of course, at precisely the point where The Homes for Special Care Act came in, the worst scandals relating to nursing homes derived from Hamilton itself, so the superintendent of that Ontario hospital obviously had to work slowly. Thus we have 40 out of 800 moved—something in the vicinity of five per cent of those required.

I suggest strongly, Mr. Chairman, that we are just not going to find The Homes for Special Care Act sufficient. We are not going to be able to license enough new nursing homes, because they are not there. The pressures on them are already great, and the alternatives that are required relate to foster home placement, such as the Winnipeg plan—and there is no parallel to it in the province of Ontario—where a group of volunteers act as the intermediary in looking through newspaper advertisements, finding room and board, checking them out, and then the hospital matches the patients.

It is one of the most effective uses of the volunteer I have ever witnessed, and we are sorely lacking in the use of volunteers. We occupy the time of our top professional staff, of the few social workers we have, in finding homes, frequently, for recently discharged mentally-ill patients. That is absurd. It is a most inefficient use of manpower and we must develop a volunteer programme related first to foster homes, second to halfway houses, third to ex-patient clubs, fourth perhaps to government nursing homes, run and operated by government to take the heat off and bring the staff requirements up. But something—anything—which will allow us to turn to continued and active treatment in the Ontario hospitals, so that we do not necessarily undermine the treatment resources of that hospital when 50 per cent of the patients are not, in fact, there for legitimate psychiatric purposes.

I want to make it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that I respect the sense of urgency from which The Homes for Special Care Act flowed. I respect the incredibly difficult circumstances under which the director of the tuberculosis division works. I have a feeling—the hon. Minister can prove me wrong—that this one man worked alone for a large part of the time in setting up homes for special care. Homes which should involve some 12,000 to 13,000 placements were handled by this one earnest, indefatigable, forlorn figure, who, for several months, tried to establish it on his own. If you want to have a viable Homes for Special Care Act, then establish it as a separate branch in this department; do not tuck it in under the main estimates but bring it under the mental health branch. Give it an exclusive place of its own and do a job. I trust that we will see something of that.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to leave this branch at the moment, having reiterated some of the themes, but I am going, before I take my seat, to make two observations because they will lead to other areas of this branch which I hope will be discussed this afternoon.

First, in almost every Ontario hospital I visited, Mr. Chairman, close to 50 per cent of the patients at the outpatient clinic were under the age of 16. In fact, I think I have the statistics in the community mental health branch in front of me. I shall take a moment to read them into the record. The total patients treated in 1963-64, 17 and over, 11,500; 16 and under, 7,100. But I notice that as of December 1963 the active cases had a considerable majority of "under-16s." In other words, our outpatient clinics of Ontario hospitals are now being asked to provide child and adolescent care.

Even more frightening, Mr. Chairman, in a place like Ontario hospital, Hamilton, 15 to 20 young adolescents, young teenagers, roam the wards of that adult mental hospital for lack of any community services for disturbed children and adolescents.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the area of disturbed children and the lack of facilities is something which we can come to later today when we pass through the general mental health pattern. But it is a very critical area, and it was demonstrated again by merely analyzing the trend which prevails.

The second thing I want to say before I sit down is that I want to hear what the hon. Minister says in response to suggestions that the mathematics in this mental care in Metropolitan Toronto report are wrong. I am prepared to accept that I might have been wrong, but I would like to know where. I suggested in this House that this report shows, if you compute proper calculations, that we will be 1,000 psychiatric treatment beds short in Metropolitan Toronto in 1970-1971.

I want to know what the answer is to that. I dwelt on it at some length; I want to know how we begin to justify these specious reports that have come out ever since they dropped the hon. Minister into hot water last year.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I for one continue to be disappointed in this department. I offered to the hon. Minister, on the basis of considerable thought, without suggesting that it contains the wisdom of Confucius, an analysis of the mental health pattern and some of the more aggravated features of that pattern. We received this morning a very dubious confrontation of some of the points made. It is such a desperately critical area that I do not think that the hon. Minister can be allowed off lightly. We must continue to press for some of the more specific answers and some of the more specific questions. As this debate on this branch evolves, that is what we in this party shall do, because the state of mental health in the province of Ontario is critical, unco-ordinated, uneconomic and profoundly disorganized. Above all, Mr. Chairman, I suggest it is heading in the wrong direction—away from the community, into the hospital; away from prevention, into illness. I cannot repeat that often enough and the hon. Minister must surely give us some basis for his judgment and his feeling.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, there is one particular matter to which we did not receive an answer from the hon. Minister. I know it is a matter which he said he did not want to have brought up. That is the matter of Fred Fawcett. It is not a question so much of the individual in this case, but it is the circumstances around the man himself.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that when I was making my remarks I said that I did not doubt the ability of the psychiatrists who have been working for the government, but it most certainly puts the psychiatrist who is in the employ of the government in a most unenviable situation when he must make a decision which certainly would be questioned by the general public.

I think what we need in this province, and I regret very much that the hon. Minister did not tell us in his answers to some of the remarks made on this side of the House, is to provide for a system whereby an individual who is incarcerated in one of our mental institutions, or that individual's family or his lawyer, has some privilege as of right to appeal to a board that is not closely associated with the government.

I have said in this House that the government has a first responsibility to the public to protect us from such individuals who may be a threat to the general public, but we also, as a government, have a responsibility to the inmates in the mental institutions, to be certain that they are not kept there against their wish and also that the public knows that no individual is being kept against his wish.

The hon. Minister has said, "Who is to question the courts?" He obviously questions the courts because despite the fact that the ruling was made that he was insane, he was eventually released on the say-so of Dr. Boyd. It puts Dr. Boyd in a rather odd position that despite the fact of what the court has said, despite the fact that the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) would not move in this situation, and despite the fact that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) set up a committee to examine this whole situation, Dr. Boyd, on his own, released Mr. Fawcett.

I do not think that the glossing over of this problem by the hon. Minister is at all satisfactory. I think he has a responsibility to this House to tell (a) how it is that Fred Fawcett was eventually released, despite all the contrary opinions of our courts, and (b) what steps the hon. Minister will take to see to it that this situation does not happen again, or even gives the appearance that an individual is being wrongly held.

Again, I suggest to the hon. Minister that what we need in this province is a committee of, let us say, a psychiatrist, a lawyer and a layman, who are not in the employ of the government, so that it takes the problem and the responsibility and the unenviable situation away from the psychiatrist who is in the employ of the Ontario government. Certainly our psychiatrists are overwhelmed with work as it is, without putting on them this responsibility which is certainly open to public scrutiny at all times. I hope before we are finished with the discussions on mental health estimates that the hon. Minister will give us some answer and not gloss over the situation.

Again I say, we do not want to embarrass Fred Fawcett any more, for heaven only knows the man has had all kinds of publicity and if his unfortunate circumstances have done anything, they have focused the public attention on the great danger there is of an individual being improperly held. I do not think at all that our doctors in our institutions try to hold people improperly; I think they can make mistakes and I think that the pressure of work makes it almost impossible for them to cover these situations as they should be covered. But the case of Fred Fawcett leaves an awful lot of unanswered questions and the hon. Minister has a responsibility to this House and to the public of Ontario to see that they are answered.

One other thing that has been emphasized in this House time and time again—it was brought up in this particular debate, as well—and to which the hon. Minister still does not give an answer is the question of staff. He gave us a quotation this morning that the morale was fine among the people in our hospitals here.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did not.

Mr. Trotter: You said earlier that the morale—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I told you what I believe is the reason for poor morale, but I did not say the morale was fine.

Mr. Trotter: I am glad, then, that you realize that the morale is not fine, because you did not give us any answers as to what you are going to do. On many occasions members of this House are accused of undermining morale, and yet we even have quotes from Dr. Christie in the newspapers, showing the morale of the people is hurt by the very fact that the welfare rates are boosted. We find that the attendants who have less than two years' experience are making less than what a family man on welfare would receive. Surely the hon. Minister should have some answer to this problem.

I do not want to go into all the figures again—that a married man on welfare with a family receives $3,600 and the attendants start at $3,120, and so on down the scale. But certainly the hon. Minister has a responsibility to see to it that the men and women who work in his hospitals here are receiving a proper pay. You are not going to get properly trained people, unless you give them a decent wage. Isn't getting properly trained people a good way to take so much of the pressure off the psychiatrists in our Ontario hospitals?

Let us face the fact that a lot of the patients in our Ontario mental hospitals are there more for chronic care than they are for getting psychiatric treatment. Some of them have been there for so long, because of the policies and the attitudes in the past, that their mental condition has so far deteriorated, it is going to be extremely difficult to bring a good many of our patients in our hospitals back into normal life. But they require decent care and it is asking the psychiatrists to do too much simply to look after these people when they know there will be very little response. That is why I think that of the 1,247 patients at 999 Queen, only slightly more than half are receiving active treatment. But what about the other half? Certainly, with properly trained help, our psychiatrists could receive a great deal of help.

We have had no suggestions from the hon. Minister about what efforts are being made to improve the manpower situation in our hospitals, what efforts are being made for recruiting for training, and what efforts are being made for raising the salaries to bring them up to a decent standard, so that you will have people who will take an interest in this. Some of the doctors in our mental hospitals have spoken on this matter regarding pay. For example, Dr. J. C. Bryce, who is at the London Hospital had written an article in the London Free Press entitled: "Mental Patients Treated as Second-Class Sick." How often we have used that expression on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, in regard to those who are mentally ill, being treated as second-class people. Dr. Bryce said this regarding pay:

Money alone is not the answer. Dedication is needed, but there are so very few who can be dedicated on $3,000 per year when they can be equally dedicated to something else on $6,000 a year.

These men see this problem day to day. The present Minister, Mr. Chairman, has had ample opportunity, over the years he has been Minister of Health—since 1959—to bring about a considerable change in the wage scale of the attendants in our hospitals. He can talk all he likes about the civil service rates of pay, but it is incumbent upon him to bring this problem to the hon. Treasurer of this province (Mr. Allan) and to the Treasury board to see to it that the pay scale in our mental hospitals has to be raised.

Dr. Bryce has said the crying need is for staff, and this because mental illness represents a retreat from reality into a world of fantasy. The patient runs away from his world of fear and only people can coax them out of their well-defended island of retreat, sometimes on a one-to-one basis only. I might suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this House, that the present hon. Minister of Health is retreating on an island with regard to this whole problem; and he has more or less retreated in the realm of fantasy instead of coming to grips with the tremendous problem we are faced with. The turnover in staff at Queen Street is 42 per cent to 50 per cent. And it is similar in most of our large Ontario hospitals. Obviously, we are not taking proper care of our patients when we have an attendant looking after 120 patients by himself on the night shift, 30 of them being bed patients. It is obviously an impossible task for a man to change the necessary beds, to see that these people get the care they need. It is a miracle, Mr. Chairman, that there have not been more people lose their lives from fire and otherwise in our large institutions because of the poor staffing that we have.

The hon. Minister said in his remarks this morning that there is bound to be suicide and various accidents take place in these large hospitals. I do not doubt that for a moment. But the trouble is that these personal disasters could in many respects be avoided if we had the proper administration, and if we had the proper care. It seems, time and time again, that the only time these problems of the crowding of our hospitals for the mentally ill and for retarded children are brought to public attention is when some child has died, or some patient in our mental hospital has died through an accident that could be avoided, or through suicide.

Again, it has been pointed out by the head of the Canadian mental health association that we, in a large area like Toronto, do not have a 24-hour service as they do in some areas in Europe or in Vancouver, where people who are mentally ill, who are threatening suicide, can go. The vast majority of our clinics seem to close down around 5 o'clock. What we need in this city, and in other cities throughout the province of Ontario, and in other municipalities, be they the size of a city or not, are more of these centres, where someone can go who is threatening suicide.

Now we know that this works, because even over the telephone—the Salvation Army has established a telephone clinic, it might be called—where if one knows of them, they can call and talk to the member of the Salvation Army, who in many cases, manages to talk the sick person out of committing suicide. But the rates of suicide, especially in large urban areas, have been increasing. In fact, I quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of May 3, 1965:

Suicides are killing more people in Toronto, for instance, than die in traffic accidents, Dr. Griffin said.

Dr. Griffin, as most of us know, is head of the Canadian mental health association.

In Vancouver there was a 24-hour a day psychiatric service available, he said. I am still heartily ashamed of Toronto and other Ontario centres with their lack of psychiatric services. People in urgent need cannot be taken immediately to a general hospital and get psychiatric care, as they do injuries and accidents.

Well, the hon. Minister has told us that this is going to improve, and he accused the hon. member for Scarborough West of being too young, that once he gets a little older, he may perhaps have a better judgment on these things. But after you have sat over here for a while and watched how slowly the government moves, one can understand a person of any age, being frustrated in the government's mincing steps that it takes to solve these problems. When we point out the importance of having these clinics that are needed, the hon. Minister can immediately cite some particular clinic that is now in existence. But it is evidence, at the same time, that we are not nearly coming to grips with the problem as that problem requires.

For example, they had a very successful clinic in Cobourg. It was one of the out-patient services developed in this province that was of great service. I think that the clinic that was set up in Cobourg helped over 2,000 people, and yet once the doctor in charge of that clinic, Dr. Cornack, left, the clinic closed down. And despite pleas to the hon. Minister and the various excuses that have been given, nothing has been done.

This was a tragic situation in a place the size of Cobourg. And it comes essentially from the lack of organization in Queen's Park, a lack of drive and a lack of initiative. So the hon. Minister can complain all he likes about some of the hon. members being too young and not seeing the problem as a whole.

Probably they have brought a fresh approach to this problem, and can see the tragic situation that is developing here in the province of Ontario because we do not take the action that has been required, be it in retaining psychiatrists, whether through bursaries; through education; and even in the area of getting assistance through staff. That could be solved if the hon. Minister had the will and had the effort to do something.

Now, I want to emphasize a bit more on this vote the need for community mental health centres. I quoted earlier what the superintendents of the Kingston Ontario hospital had said about our lack of after-care services, the fact that instead of having a re-admission rate of 15 per cent of those patients who are discharged, we are having an increasing readmission rate now moving from 35 to nearly 50 per cent. In other words, about 50 per cent of our people who are discharged are returned. It is strictly the result of a lack of our social services, through our health department, through our lack of after-care and because of our poor community mental health centres.

We know, as the hon. Minister admits, and as the hon. member for Scarborough West has gone into in some detail, that our community mental health centres should be part of the community. It should be an integrated unit where the patient can go at any time—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): May I interrupt? We will resume this, Mr. Chairman, after lunch.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

It being 12.40 of the clock, the House took recess.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, June 15, 1965
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 15, 1965

On 750th anniversary of Magna Carta, Mr. Robarts, Mr. Thompson, Mr. MacDonald	4165
Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, continued	4167
Municipal Act, bill to amend, Mr. Renwick, on second reading, continued	4196
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. White, agreed to	4198
Remembrance Day Act, 1965, bill intituled, Mr. Reaume, on second reading	4198
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. White, agreed to	4201
Minors' Protection Act, bill to amend, Mr. Reaume, on second reading	4201
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Nixon, agreed to	4203
Recess, 6 o'clock	4203

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if we may revert to orders of the day, I would like to make a very brief statement which perhaps will not be considered contentious. It occurs to me that in the 98 years of this Legislature, there are probably many more occasions when contentious matters have been discussed than when we have been in agreement or common accord, but I think there are some very fundamental principles of this Legislature on which we do agree.

Today, June 15, is the day on which we might think back and remember Magna Carta because it was 750 years ago today that the final arrangements were made to complete what might be termed one of the more memorable encounters during the history of man. Seven hundred and fifty years ago there took place something that has had very great effect through the subsequent years. If we look back at the history of that time, it was on May 24, 1215, that the barons entered the gates of London. They were joined there by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Stephen Langton by name, and members of the clergy, the mayor of London, other people in public life, and community leaders, for the avowed purpose of obtaining a charter from the king—a king who was considered by his people to be a lawless king, and a king who considered himself really to be above the law.

It was in this confrontation that he found that he had to grant a charter against his will, confirming the laws and liberties of the people. It is 750 years ago today that King John affixed the great seal of England to Magna Carta, and in so doing he bowed himself to the rule of law, making the rule of law binding on himself no less than it was binding on his subjects.

When we think about it and examine the history, Magna Carta did not, in fact, produce any new principle, any new concept of liberty, but what it did was to crystallize, to bring into one piece of paper and back to life, and to confirm some very ancient liberties that had been eroded away over a period of time. It was a practical means to redress grievances arising from encroachments upon these very ancient liberties.

Through the years, Magna Carta as a document has become a shield or a buckler, if you want to put it that way, behind which constitutional liberty has been able to take cover. Magna Carta established a principle which has been elaborated upon by many succeeding generations and, of course, the principle is simply that in a free society men are ruled by law and are not ruled by other men.

If we look at two of the 63 clauses in the charter, there are two that appear to me, at any rate, to be most important, and I might just make comment on these. The 39th clause reads:

No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, exiled or in any way destroyed except by lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

And the 40th clause is:

To none will we sell, to none will we deny or defer right or justice.

Sir, the historians who dealt with the development of Magna Carta since those days, claim that these clauses very clearly contain the right of habeus corpus and the right of trial by jury, that these two great principles are set out in the two clauses that I have read. Habeas corpus and trial by jury are considered to be the most effectual security against oppression which has yet been devised by the wisdom of man. There is a famous British historian by the name of Sir James MacKintosh and he had this to say about Magna Carta and its development:

To have produced the Magna Carta, to have preserved it, to have matured it, constitute the immortal claim of England upon the esteem of mankind. Her Bacons and Shakespeares, her Miltons and Newtons, with all the truth which they revealed and all the generous virtue which they inspired, are of inferior value when compared with the subjection of men and their rulers to the principles of law and justice . . . These mighty spirits could not have been formed except under equal laws, nor roused to full activity without the influence of the spirit which the Magna Carta breathed over their forefathers.

Mr. Speaker, we are well aware that everything was not settled, of course, at Runnymede on that June 15, 750 years ago. I think from our experiences in this chamber we know that nothing really is ever finally and completely settled. But the principles of this charter and act were subsequently challenged by the man who signed it, by the king himself, by his successors, and perhaps we will have other occasions. Sir Winston Churchill once said that whenever the state, swollen with its own authority, has run roughshod over the rights and liberties of the people, it is to the doctrine of the Magna Carta that appeal has again and again been made, and never, as yet, without success.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite significant that on this 750th anniversary of the charter, through the action of this Legislature, one of the most eminent jurists that we have in this province, and indeed in Canada, is in the midst of an exhaustive inquiry, and it might be fitting if I were just to read his terms of reference so that we may recall what he is doing. One of them is, of course, the relationship between the state and the power of encroachment which may be contained in existing legislation and which may be sought in future legislation, and second, the means necessary to maintain and strengthen the guarantees of civil liberties which are inherent in our citizenship and in the great tradition from which it has evolved. Basic to this tradition is Magna Carta.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, none of us knows, when Mr. Justice McRuer will complete his inquiry, but I think we are all at one with him in his desire—and I have discussed it with him—to do a full and comprehensive task so that when his report does come here it will, I would hope, constitute a very important milestone, not so much in the development perhaps of these rights, but as Magna Carta did, in a preservation of the rights that at present exist. That is why I am happy to mark this 750th birthday in this House today.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Prime Minister stood up to speak and suggested to us that he wanted to speak about a subject which he felt would not be as contentious as other subjects which we have had in the House, one of my hon. colleagues turned to me and said, "Better watch this and decide whether we are for or against it." He then went on to clarify that he was speaking of the Magna Carta and, of course, sir, all free men recognize the fundamental principles which this charter has enunciated.

But we also recognize that it was not an easily won battle. It was among the barons and the people and the king. There were men with an inspiration in their hearts that they wanted to see a clearly stated law, and they were determined that there would be an equality for men. It was a hard, tough struggle as we all recognize to get this platform from which they could move on to other developments of political and economic freedom.

I think, sir, as we recognize this day and look back on this charter which took place 750 years ago, we must also recognize that we can never rest on our oars, that we always have to be examining the freedoms which were won for us, and seeing that there is not a corrosion of these freedoms. Really, on this day, when the hon. Prime Minister has given emphasis to Magna Carta as crystallizing the ancient freedoms of our society, I think we also should be thinking of the fact that it is only by eternal vigilance on all our parts that these freedoms will be maintained, and it is only by a constant examination of modern civilization and modern government, and of the encroachments that can so easily take place on the life of the individual—if we have the same inspiration to be constantly alert to defend the rights of all free men—that then indeed the work that was laid 750 years ago will have the result which those men had wanted.

I feel that in this House, in giving recognition to this day, and to the crystallizing of our ancient rights, this is giving us a new energy and a new aspiration to move ahead in the constant guarding of these ancient rights.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, an occasion like this almost invites one to reflect for an hour, or to speak but briefly. I assure you I will do the latter. But I think it is interesting, while acknowledging that Magna Carta is one of the cornerstones upon which our freedoms and liberties have been built, to tear aside many of the myths that have been built about what happened on that green at Runnymede 750 years ago.

If I may pick up, for example, on a couple of comments that the hon. leader of the Opposition has made, about men who came with a great spirit of liberty in their hearts seeking it for others, and that we today are fulfilling what they were attempting to do at Runnymede, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that simply was not the case at all. What happened at Runnymede was that you had a group of barons who, in the modern phraseology, which Mark Harrison captured in a Toronto Daily Star story yesterday, were after a union shop. What happened at Rummymede was that a group of barons had found themselves victimized by a lawless king. They were not really thinking of the liberties of the little peasants scattered around England; they were thinking of protecting their own self-interests.

But in seeking and establishing their own self-interests, they did it on the basis of principles. In the phraseology of the poet; freedom has broadened "slowly down from precedent to precedent." We have taken those principles and we have fought for their broader realization down through the years. Indeed, the hon. Prime Minister is correct. It may very well be that Mr. Justice McRuer today is really examining, once again, a broader application of those principles in terms of the problems that the individual faces today in relationship to his society.

But let us not get too idealistic and romantic about the freedom-inspired barons who gathered at Rummymede. In Mark Harrison's terms, they were seeking to build a union shop. Well, all union shops are built on principles, and if you can broaden those principles so that the same protection of rights is extended to everybody, then we have the genuine freedom that we seek. I am sure that all of us in this Legislature want to do just that.

Clerk of the House: The 56th order. House in committee of supply. Mr. N. Whitney in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH

(continued)

On vote 713:

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, before we adjourned for lunch, I was making a few remarks on community mental health centres. This is something that has been sadly neglected by the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario; something which we have failed to learn from has been done in other jurisdictions such as Denver, Colorado, and Fort Logan down in the United States, and even beginning in Saskatchewan, in Yorkton. That is the importance of developing the community centre, not only in that it saves us money, but that in the long run it helps the patient.

For example, in Denver, Colorado, they have a 400-bed centre. By a centre I mean it is a community centre which is virtually working 24-hours a day. The patient does not have to live in. The patient can go voluntarily. They are well supplied with personnel and the emphasis is not on bed space, but on personnel. It is something that we here could very easily follow.

They have in Denver this 400-bed space and it cares for as many people, through their system of day care, as would take a 4,000-bed hospital under the system that we have used here in the province of Ontario. It is staffed with the number of people required to take care of a 4,000-bed hospital, but the emphasis is on the individual patient, not on the bed space. Admittedly, it costs there approximately what would be in bed space, $28. We have got to face the fact that if we are going to treat this problem of mental health with any vigour and energy, it is going to cost us more than the $8 that we are spending today.

But when we look at it even from an economic point of view, Mr. Chairman, when we know that we could reduce our readmissions to 15 per cent, and instead we are hovering around the 50 per cent readmission mark, we can see that in the long run we are going to save money. In the systems that have been developed in some of the states of the United States, they find that a maximum time for a patient is often 90 days but in order to be able to effect any semblance of a cure in that time they have to catch the mental disturbance or the nervous disturbance at an early age, therefore their system of detection in making their community centres open to the public is most important. We have a long way to go.

I would like to make a few suggestions, in summing up, Mr. Chairman.

First of all, the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), in giving some answers to the remarks, did not deal with that eyesore, 999 Queen Street. We keep coming back to that because it is a symbol in this area of all the things that should not be done. True, personnel is the most important thing. It is the attitude that the people have, but it is virtually impossible to get personnel or to develop an attitude in a building that is so outmoded. Whether it was crowded or not, it is still archaic and outdated. But when we are faced with the fact that even on a relatively conservative estimate it has 400 patients more than it should have, it is obvious that we have a very serious situation. That situation at 999 Queen will only be met in a number of ways: by improving the system where you can discharge your patients and have a better after-care system; having chronic hospitals for those who are really more or less physically ill or beyond a cure; the halfway houses needed for those that still need supervision, but who possibly could get out and work during the day; and again, as part of the after-care system, the community mental health centres.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he have some programme that could start in the immediate future and I hope at the next sitting of this House, that they make arrangements that some place like 999 Queen Street is demolished. Because it is in a central area, you could build in its stead, probably using the front wing that was built there, a community centre. It is in an area which is easy to reach here in a large urban area and could serve a first-class cause, that of doing something about mental illness.

As long as you leave a building such as that standing you are always going to be faced with the eyesore which I say is a disgrace to the province of Ontario. That is one thing I would suggest as an immediate programme. Then in order to place the other patients who obviously are going to have to be moved to different types of hospitals, you are going to have to build more mental hospitals in this area and in other large urban centres.

If we would take an analysis, Mr. Chairman, of how the rural areas are served in this province, we will realize that they are sadly lacking in mental health care.

I agree, Mr. Chairman, that the psychiatric wings in the general hospitals are a good thing, but as I emphasized earlier, the general hospitals take only the short-care patients. Any patient going to require care over any length of time—and there will be many of that type of patient—is going to require the large Ontario hospital. When I say large, I hope that the new hospitals that are built will take care of no more than 300 patients.

In many ways, this is old theory to the hon. Minister of Health. But the shame of it is that very little or nothing along this line has been done. I know that the hon. Minister earlier today cited the various hospitals that had been built, but it has been very slow and tedious. They scarcely take care of the backlog and they most certainly do not take care of the growing population that we have. We would not have the London hospital so crowded, or Woodstock, or 999 Queen, or Whitby, if we had a proper system of outpatient care, after-care or Ontario hospitals that are of a decent size. If the hon. Minister would plan to do away with, as he has begun in London, a hospital such as 999 Queen, it would be a long step forward.

The hon. Minister hardly touched on 999 Queen, and anything that he did try to answer was nothing but a lame excuse for a scandalous situation that is existing here in this area.

Another matter affecting a large urban area like Toronto, when we try to press the theory that patients should be close to the community and close to their families, we find that many of the patients in Whitby are from this area, which is certainly not part of their home area. And if you checked where some of the patients in Whitby or 999 Queen come from, they come from all over the province of Ontario, which is completely contrary to the modern psychiatric theory that a patient should be close to his home.

The very dates of our hospitals, going back to 1846 and to 1890, show that our Victorian thinking symbolizes a defeat for our society, and this is the second thing that I would like to emphasize. Still within the government of the province of Ontario we have the old Victorian idea of the lunatic asylum, and London and Woodstock and 999 Queen are all symbols of the type of thinking that still exists here in the province of Ontario, despite the fact that the hon. Minister attempts to list a few of the hospitals that have been constructed by this very wealthy province over a period that has been far too long.

Third, I think the use of drugs, Mr. Chairman, has shown that by this type of therapy we can keep a patient active in society. I know that there are many types of illness that cannot be cured by drugs, but they have gone a long way in getting the patient back into society. But the effect and the use of drugs are not nearly as helpful as they could be, if we do not have the proper after-care services. And we just do not have them in the province of Ontario.

Some of these hospitals that have been developed in the United States have literally taken the locks off the doors. I realize, Mr. Chairman—and this is the fourth item—we have to use commonsense in taking the locks off doors. Those who are criminally insane certainly must be incarcerated, but in the vast majority of cases, it has been shown that the open door policy does succeed. But still in the province of Ontario, at least 50 per cent of our patients in our mental hospitals are still governed by the so-called locked door policy, despite all the psychiatric and medical knowledge that is available. We are very slow to move in this direction, and I think that because a patient has, in many cases, been kept continuously under a locked door, when he is eventually set free he sooner or later, ends up in the hospital. We started to move from the closed-door policy to the open-door policy, but what we have, in essence, is a revolving-door policy in the province of Ontario.

The fifth item in summing up—and I will not go into the figures again on this, Mr. Chairman—is the complete disorganization in amassing the personnel here in our Ontario mental hospital system. It is not just a question of getting psychiatrists, it is a question of getting trained people. Not necessarily professionally trained people, but trained to an extent that they can be of assistance in looking after patients. The system in Fort Logan in the United States has shown that you do not have to have as many psychiatrists as is sometimes claimed. If you have an understanding staff with some knowledge, they can take a tremendous load off the psychiatrists.

Sixth, Mr. Chairman, we lack in our hospitals—just wander through some of the larger mental hospitals in Ontario—we lack segregation. Now I know there is some attempt to segregate the patients, and I do not blame the superintendents in charge because I know that they make an effort. But because they are crammed to the doors, and because they do not have the facilities, it is most difficult to segregate those who need real psychiatric help and those who are going to be more or less chronic care patients. It is the lack of proper building and lack of proper material. You cannot expect a psychiatrist who, in many cases, has so many patients, to carry out custodial work instead of psychiatric work.

Again, I urge on the hon. Minister that we segregate our patients, and this is my seventh point. I here keep emphasizing again and again that the readmission rate here in the province of Ontario instead of 15 per cent, is a shocking 50 per cent. We have a long way to go, and I think it is because we still have an asylum approach, the old Victorian asylum approach, and we have not reached out for that new frontier which is the breaking down of the apathy of the public and worst of all, the apathy of government.

I would be the first to admit, Mr. Chairman, that the public has been apathetic to the problem of the mentally sick. Despite the fact that it is by far our greatest social problem and greatest health problem in Canada and in Ontario, the people are just not interested. It is something they still hide. The hon. Minister at one time put out a very good film on retarded children, "One on Every Street" and it would be of help to this cause of doing something for mental illness if more such movies could be shown. I, for one, would be glad to see this House vote funds for that sort of thing. I believe the movie, "One on Every Street" came out about four years ago, and I still hear people say how good it was.

It is only by the government taking some leadership in this field that they can overcome the public apathy. The trouble is that the government itself in its own policies, has been so mincing in its steps. As we return to what former Prime Minister Frost used to say, "We do a little here, we do a little there, and wait till next year." This is not only typical of the government, but it is particularly typical of this problem of mental health.

So again, you have a long way to go in this literally new frontier in the thinking of social well-being for those who are mentally ill. We need an overall approach, Mr. Chairman, that not only takes care of the community clinics, the day care and the night care and the use of volunteers and this, I think, has increased tremendously because of the interest of the superintendents of the various hospitals. Without exception, they have done a great deal in this field.

But one other item in this overall approach that we have sadly neglected is reaching the disturbed children. We know how little facilities there are in the way of treating children who are emotionally disturbed. And I would recommend to the hon. Minister the brief of the association for emotionally disturbed children, when they urge that there be guidance clinics set up in the schools, because a child may go to a clinic within the school walls before he would want to go to a clinic in a mental hospital or even to a clinic in a general hospital here in the city. We know that of the people who have gone to the clinics for mentally ill, about 40 per cent of them have been children who are 16 and under. It is far wiser to check any mental disturbance at a young age than wait until the disease has advanced. We are then bearing the heavy cost of trying to cure someone seriously ill or keeping them as a hopeless mental patient over the years.

Now, we have, of course, our emotionally disturbed children in the extreme cases who are retarded. I realize there is a large difference between one who is retarded and one who is emotionally disturbed, but let us bear in mind that those who are emotionally disturbed can in many ways be completely cured. But even for the retarded children, our whole set-up under our present government shows—and we have gone into this time and time again—that our hospitals are crammed like sardines in a can. Time and time again you hear people who have been in these hospitals and are greatly disturbed because their children are there. I cannot understand why the hon. Minister seems to completely avoid even in his remarks the problem of retarded children; this is a large and neglected field.

It was interesting to read, Mr. Chairman, in the Record News, a paper in Smiths Falls, reporting when the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) called on the hospital at Smiths Falls, the Ontario hospital school for retarded children. It said this:

Premier John P. Robarts paid an unscheduled 45-minute visit to the Ontario hospital school on Saturday afternoon, his first to the institution which has come under considerable criticism lately due to the reports of overcrowding and short staffing. He met with superintendent Dr. H. F. Franks and did not see any of the wards nor any of the patients.

I do not know if that report is correct or not, but I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that he not just talk to the superintendents who are, without exception, dedicated men. But if they went through the wards they would see the problems they have to deal with. This is one of the major troubles of this administration—it is too distant, they are not taking the interest they should. I remember when I was through the Orillia hospital, I was told that Dr. Dymond was the first Minister in 20 years to go through the hospital, so I give the hon. Minister credit for that. But you can see the neglect that there has been, and the lack of interest. Even a few weeks ago, the hon. Prime Minister of the province that close to the hospital, right inside the doors, did not bother to go into the wards. This is where the problem is, and this is what is disturbing to those people interested in this problem and why it is disturbing to the parents.

When we are on a committee like the committee on the aged, and we visit some of these mental hospitals, a lot of the hon. members do not want to go through some of the wards. They say that if you have seen it once you have seen them all; it is too upsetting and it is too disturbing. I am afraid this is the attitude the government has had over the years, and the attitude the public has had. We have to face up to this, that it is too disturbing, it is more or a less a matter of out of sight, out of mind.

But it is the duty of the government to give leadership in this very sad, very urgent situation, and I am saddened to hear the hon. Minister give what I thought were very weak answers to the various problems that were brought to his attention. On the matter of emotionally disturbed children, we—both parties in this House—have mentioned on various occasions the problem of Jamie. Again, it is a name and we are not trying to publicize individuals, but they symbolize the sad lack of proper facilities in this province. And again, the hon. Minister has no answer. It is like talking to a stone wall, it seems, year in and year out when these same matters are brought up. And we see that little or nothing in relationship to the extent of the problem is being done by the government. The lame excuses that the hon. Minister has given in his answering remarks, Mr. Chairman, is overwhelming evidence that in essence this government has no intention whatsoever of coming to grips with this problem of mental health, which is very serious here in the province of Ontario.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister does not want to reply in toto, maybe we can put some quite specific questions to him; that would make his lot easier.

If that is the case, let me begin with the one which continues to perplex me, and about which I am most exercised. On my mathematical calculations, I think that the report on mental care in Metropolitan Toronto underestimates the need for psychiatric beds by 1,042. Between 1970 and 1975, I suspect we will be over 1,000 beds short and I think that the logic and rationale behind the computation in this report was specious in the extreme. I think it is a very important medical issue that we are, in fact, to be 1,000 beds short.

Perhaps I can just take a moment to review for the House what is involved.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): For the fourth time!

Mr. S. Lewis: Not in this instance, my hon. friend. It is not by any means the fourth time, unless the hon. Minister wishes to reply before I set it out.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): I am not going to get up, Mr. Chairman, while somebody else has the floor.

Mr. S. Lewis: The hon. Minister is quite welcome. I will subside.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have no cause to argue with the report, and I find it very difficult to understand why, if a report does not agree with what our preconceived notions are or may be, it is wrong. The report is well based on the experience and statistics arrived at through long and hard experience, and statistics that are used by other jurisdictions, as well as statistics based on our own experience here in Ontario.

The need of active treatment beds has been estimated by federal authorities as 1.2 per 1,000. The present population of our in-patient service in the Ontario hospitals is about 2.4 per 1,000 and it is agreed that 56 per cent of 2.4, or 56 per cent of those who are in our care now, actually need hospital attention. This would give us a figure of 1.3, and this is the figure that the formula of the Agnew committee used. I repeat, sir, I find it very difficult to understand why this particular report should be of so much lesser quality than all the other volumes of this extremely broad and searching report that have been submitted and have been quoted frequently in this House. My staff has discussed this with me, and we are of the opinion that the projections used as a basis for these conclusions are quite realistic. If our experience continues to be as it has been over the past few years, it might well be that there will be a surplus of beds at the end of the period, rather than any shortage whatsoever, as Agnew suggests in his report.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I will certainly take up that challenge, and deal with this a little more precisely. Let me inform the hon. members of this House that the federal figure is not anywhere in the report, the figure to which the hon. Minister refers.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I did not infer that it was in the report, nor did I say that what I stated came from the report, but I have access to other information, just as the hon. member has, and I think I am at liberty to use it when it is necessary.

Mr. S. Lewis: By all means let the hon. Minister use what information he may, but I am using the information contained in this report, on which the projection is based. Now, this report makes three initial facts clear.

First, that in the international hospital federation meeting in Europe in 1962, the ratio per thousand for mental illness is two to 4.5 beds per 1,000.

Second, in an American study, similarly recent, the ratio for beds per 1,000 is 3.8.

Third, in the British survey, the most authoritative in the world at the moment, based as it was on a five-year analysis, the minimum ratio of beds per 1,000 population was set at 1.8.

This report itself accepts a ratio of 1.26 on the very questionable basis that our bed needs are presently accurate, and that there is not likely to be a change between now and the year 1970-71.

First, Mr. Chairman, our bed needs are presently not sufficiently adequate. Secondly, what about what is happening in the field of mental health at the present time? The introduction of drug psychotherapy has opened up new horizons which will doubtless be exploited by ever-increasing numbers of people. The development of psychiatric wings is going to increase the incidence in the process of identification, so that more and more cases will be known and referred.

The stimulus provided by bringing Ontario hospitals more into the community will improve the channels. Everywhere, in every jurisdiction in the world, it is recognized that the 1.8 figure is an absolutely minimum figure. But this report, for reasons of its own, chooses 1.26 per 1,000, and makes the quite incredible argument that because the waiting lists are only 30 to 50 at certain hospitals now, therefore we will not have any waiting lists in the future, and we can accept this 1.26 which presently prevails.

Now what I have said, Mr. Chairman, is based on the evidence of this report. Why did they cite the international hospital association and the American study and the British study, if they were irrelevant? On the basis of their report, the minimum figure which is valid is 1.8 beds per 1,000. If you apply 1.8 beds per 1,000 to the projected population in 1970, of 1,930,000 in Metro Toronto, you come out with a need for 3,474 beds, which is 1,042 beds in excess of what the report presently recommends.

This report is so complicated in its calculations that it is very difficult to comprehend; but I have discussed it with some people and I have tried to work it through, and I think that what I put before this House is valid. And I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we may be making a very serious miscalculation. The hon. Minister should not simply wave it away. That is not sufficient.

I suggest to the hon. Minister that he re-examine the report. As to my questioning of the report as a whole, Mr. Chairman, let me tell the House frankly and honestly what I feel. I think that when the original report came out on the hospital bed crisis in Metro Toronto, and predicted a 2,360 bed shortage, the furor which followed so embarrassed the government that each subsequent report was necessarily tempered in its contents. I think that is true of this one, because the observations it makes are so obviously trite. I think it is also true of the report on private hospitals, in some of the observations it makes. Let me say that we will allude further to this report and its subsequent content as this estimate goes forward, because we are by no means near the end of it.

I respect the work that went into this, but I question the calculation, and I question the degree of confidence with which judgments are asserted. Even if the hon. Minister and I have to come to an honest disagreement on the figures, I urge him to take into account the mathematical contradictions of this report, or he will find himself 1,000 beds short in 1970.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think I can only add that I will be guided by the hon. member's suggestion that we take the report into further consideration. We are, at the present time, persuaded that these figures are sound. I would refute them. I think again my opinion is equally valid as the hon. member's, and perhaps has a little more solid foundation in fact, that all jurisdictions in the world do not accept the 1.8 figure. Indeed, all jurisdictions at the present time involved in the care and treatment of the mentally ill, are very much concerned about this idea that great numbers of beds still need to be maintained and built.

You ask what is happening in psychiatry today? I make bold to predict, sir, that what is happening in psychiatry today is exactly the thing that was happening in tuberculosis ten years ago. When I came into this department six years ago, there were requests for additions to tuberculosis hospitals, and that then they were crowded to the doors and had long waiting lists. Almost overnight the picture changed. And this matter of treating the mentally disturbed, the psychiatric patients, is in such a state of fluidity today, that I can foresee the time when the present ratio of beds will be quite in excess of our needs.

It is with this caution in mind, sir, that we are trying to plan our future, and I resist very strongly, and again I repeat, I think my opinion has some possibility of being based on something more solid than reading newspapers and so on, and magazines and the opinions of lay reporters. I believe that we are on the right track, and that the provision for beds for the mentally ill is right.

More and more people are being brought out with psychiatric illness. More and more are coming forward early. More and more of them are being treated successfully in the doctor's office, in the outpatient department of hospitals and clinics, and in the clinics after they have been hospitalized. I disagree most vigorously and actively with the hon. member when he says that the outpatient department is not a place for after-care. Of course it is. When you discharge the patient from the hospital, where do you tell him to come back? Their own doctor's office or to the outpatient department? If he knows anything about the practice of medicine, he will know that is acceptable and is accepted. It is done, and more and more—

Mr. S. Lewis: Is it done in the Toronto Ontario hospital, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. Unless there is a point of order.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, we will follow.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: More and more this will be used, and more and more, the length of time—and this is being probed—spent in hospital will become shorter and shorter and the same number of beds we have now will be capable of serving our greater population. We have found this in the space of five or six years that it might be cut by three-quarters to what it was at one time. I forget exactly the figure.

This is what we found in tuberculosis, and this is what we will find, I am quite sure, in mental illness. Those who are coming forward early and being admitted to hospital early, particularly to short-term active or intensive treatment units, their average per patient stay is something in the order of 23 days.

In our Ontario hospitals where the patients come to us when the illness is more solidly established, even the average per patient stay is under three months, whereas only a short time ago it was years or for a lifetime. This, of course, is causing a greater turnover in beds.

Yes, of course, there are readmissions, but I think that some of us, and I think that some of my colleagues, are overly preoccupied with this matter of readmission. A cardiologist does not care how often a patient with heart failure is readmitted to hospital. Of course, if he needs hospital, that is the place for him to go.

The total length of time in hospital can easily be reduced, even with frequent readmission, so long as the eventual outcome of the illness is satisfactory.

On page 36 of the report, the hon. member will notice that:

By 1970, alternative facilities are provided for those approximately 709 to 925 residents previously mentioned before in the two Ontario hospitals in Metro who do not require active psychiatric care. The need for active treatment psychiatric beds in Metro by 1970 would be reduced by that number.

And that brings me to the comments he made about the homes for special care. He says it will not work. Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is jumping to a conclusion. I submit to you, sir, with greater validity and with far more foundation in fact, that it will work, that it is working. The Act was passed last session; the regulations were not prepared until late summer and then we found difficulty in getting homes of the standard which we believed was essential. But a great many people in the province were willing to bring their homes up to the standard and the plan actually began operating on December 1.

In that time, nursing home cases alone amounted to 914 and by the end of this month there will be more than 1,000 cases out. In a matter of five or six months, sir, I maintain that this is a fairly solid achievement. I am quite certain that this will work and that this will relieve the pressure of the space in the hospitals, which can be used for active treatment psychiatric care.

Of course, some jurisdictions did not like the nursing home business and some have had bad experiences with them, but that does not mean to say that we should not try it; that does not mean to say that we cannot learn by their experiences and avoid the pitfalls into which they fell.

The programme of boarding homes or halfway houses, or whatever you want to call them, for ambulatory patients is just in the process of developing, because we put emphasis on the removal at the first stage of those who are bedridden and need nursing care and who are demanding a good deal of nursing care in the hospitals.

Now the other phase of the programme will come into operation and I am quite certain that it will work just as successfully. I may advise you, sir, and through you, the House, that we are encouraging the support and active interest of the mental health associations and other community groups and organizations who have been interested in this.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member said that I said little about retarded children. I did announce the programme that we had proposed, arising out of the deliberations of the interdepartmental committee which had proposed to government a co-ordinated plan. Here is the kind of comment I got from one of the people who is one of the most active leaders in this whole field:

Congratulations! What a blueprint you have nailed to the wall. I have seen the copy of your speech yesterday and rushed it home to read it aloud to—

His wife.

When I had finished we could only just sit there, bedazzled with delight.

Mr. Chairman, here is a couple who have been in this area, who have a retarded child and who know from personal experience all that is involved in this, and this is their reaction to the government's programme. This, to me, sir, is of far greater import than anything my hon. friend from Scarborough West can say about it.

In the matter of emotionally disturbed children, again I have not said anything about that because I want to deal with it in its proper place. He has used figures and I think the very fact that his figures were so sweeping and so broad is the most eloquent testimony of the grave difficulties in this area. He suggests that the incidence of childhood schizophrenia is 2,000 to 3,000 in Ontario—I believe these were the figures that he used—and on the basis of our population would be 300 to 500 per million, if my mathematics are correct. It is strange that our figures should be so out of tune with the British figures—for instance, 76 per million, and the county of London with 81 per million. This estimates a total number of schizophrenic children in the United Kingdom of 5,000. Yet here is a nation with ten times the population of Ontario. I think this is completely wrong, Mr. Chairman, and would lead the world to believe that we are a province of schizophrenics, which is certainly not the case.

I grant you, Mr. Chairman, when I look around me, I see a great deal of evidence of emotional disturbance that I would like to have an opportunity to diagnose and prescribe for.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): So do we!

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, but I can judge perhaps with a little more validity than you can.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, my hon. friend, I will have you caught for practising medicine without a licence.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, may I have the floor, please?

Mr. MacDonald: You had it until you began to give it away.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I will not give it away.

The hon. member for Scarborough West suggested a need of 15 to 20 beds per 100,000 population, or 150 to 250 per million for the emotionally disturbed. Here again, sir, all his emphasis is placed upon beds and we say that this is wrong, that the emphasis must not be placed upon beds, but upon the proper care. Yet the British figures for the beds existing—I am using them because he quoted them so frequently—show their existing beds are eight per million population.

Mr. S. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I will get back to some of these individual points; but just so that we do not run headlong into error, as some of us are prone to do, I did not quote British figures on bed ratios; I quoted figures which were submitted by the Canadian mental health association and the Canadian psychiatric association to the Hall commission meetings. The figures that I quoted were on the basis of clinics per ratio of 25,000 children and numbers of beds per ratio of 100,000 children. If those sources are wrong, let the hon. Minister say so. I did not use the British sources.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the figures quoted by the Canadian psychiatric association were 20 for 250,000 population or 80 for 1,000,000, in special units, plus a small number in pediatric hospitals and hospital schools for the retarded—a possible total, including everything, of 100 beds per million of population.

This brings me to the hon. member's proposal that emotionally disturbed children should be taken out of the Ontario hospital schools. This is not the British opinion either, Mr. Chairman, and this is not the opinion held by those knowledgeable in the field. Let me quote from the 1962-63 United Kingdom report of the chief medical officer of The Department of Education and Science. The report is entitled "The Health of the School Child," and I quote:

While psychotherapy may offer some help to a few psychotic children, it would be quite unrealistic to suppose that there are a sufficient number of psychotherapists with sufficient time to treat the majority. Beyond this, and nursing care in an institution—which many psychotic children do not need—if sufficient support was given by parents there is little that strictly medical care can, at present, offer in the way of therapy.

However, Mr. Chairman—and one can go on quoting ad infinitum—I do not think that any of us is agreed on what should be included in the total number of emotionally disturbed children and what percentage of that total number needs active treatment and what percentage will gradually grow out of it themselves with the ordinary guidance and support that they receive in the home and the community.

Recognizing that this is an area where there is need and in which many departments of government are concerned, we are setting up now an interdepartmental committee to approach this in the same way that we did with mental retardation. It will be representative of The Departments of Health, Education, Public Welfare, and Reform Institutions, and of The Attorney General's Department. Out of its studies of the whole matter in the collating and collecting of all of the information and a new review of all of the briefs that have been submitted, we will propose to government and then to this Legislature a co-ordinated programme, after the same fashion as we have proposed to this House at this time the programme for dealing with mentally retarded.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, earlier this session, this party, in good faith, suggested to the hon. Minister that what he required was an interdepartmental committee of precisely those departments. If, in fact, this committee has now been constituted and will meet and will come up with something valuable, then we will be glad to hear it, even though the hon. Minister disputes the justification for its establishment.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I must ask the hon. member to correct that. I did not dispute, in fact I have just finished saying that the government recognizes that this is an area of need in which many departments of government are involved, and on this basis and for this reason it has decided to approach it in this manner.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well then, let us not quibble over the precise figures that have been quoted. Newspaper editorials, learned articles, professionals in the field, politicians, everyone, has quoted a variety of figures; but all of them have agreed on the need. This is the first expression—dramatic in its import—I suggest, from the hon. Minister, that he is prepared to invest it with the same sense of urgency. I must say to him that the scheme which was outlined for retarded children in his lead-off in the estimates was a hopeful one; if he can come back for emotionally disturbed children in the very near future with a similar scheme, then I think the work in the Legislature, and in the public, will not have been in vain.

Let me say to him, Mr. Chairman, that I, too, brought his lead-off speech home and read it to my wife. I guess some of us do that. Her reaction was also a silent one, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps for different reasons, because some people are literally paralyzed by the effrontery of some of its contentions. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there are still aspects of the hon. Minister's lead-off and his subsequent remarks which require serious debate.

Let me take some of the points he has just recently made, one by one, and let us go at them. I am not going to analyze them mathematically—as I said earlier, I am not a mathematician—whether the 1.2 versus the 1.8 figure is a proper one when estimating the required number of beds. But I will say to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that I do not know where he gets any figures lower than 1.8. The British figure of 1.8 is a contraction of the present figure of 3.3, and it is a contraction based on the fact that they are developing tremendous areas of community-centred psychiatric treatment; treatment at home, treatment in foster homes, and there is no such parallel programme in the province of Ontario. We in this province and in this party are not suggesting an inordinate number of beds; we are suggesting a minimum number of beds coincident with the need and along with that a programme for community centre care. That has not been forthcoming; it is pretentious to suggest it has.

The hon. Minister talks about the average patient's stay prior to after-care. Everyone knows that the average patient's stay, particularly in the psychiatric wings is diminishing in time. That will be an historical trend in the psychiatric field; but I question his parallel between tuberculosis and mental illness. It reminds me of an original and earlier parallel he made in this House between the common cold and emotional disturbance. It strikes me that it is just roughly on a par of revelance. He further says that in The Homes for Special Care Act we have managed in one year roughly to place 1,000 people—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I said in six months. On a point of order.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, since September, 1964.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: December.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine, six months the Act has been in operation, and we have had a large number of nursing homes licensed. The hon. Minister can correct me; we have had over 50. I think that we broke through this area. I granted him that earlier.

I point out to him that on his figure there are 10,000 to 12,000 people requiring placement and what I simply said was that The Homes for Special Care Act of itself would not do the job. All the alternative facilities would be required. I then went further and suggested that we may be completely off in the wrong direction—that nursing homes as such are not the place for discharged mentally ill patients, that experience in other jurisdictions has shown the degree of isolation, the lack of contact with family, the questionable standards that prevail from time to time. This House has been embroiled and will be embroiled in problems of nursing homes before this session ends. They are not inviolable, they are not perfection and yet we want to shift 10,000 or 12,000 people to them under this one Act in a short period of time. I suggested to him, Mr. Chairman, and I reassert it, that there are other alternative procedures which may have to be pursued.

Since the hon. Minister raised it, because I had intended to hold it for a moment, let me come back to this question of emotionally disturbed children perhaps for the last time now that this interdepartmental committee has been set up.

What has this Minister done in the field of disturbed children and adolescents? Virtually nothing, Mr. Chairman. We have Thistletown hospital with 64 beds; as much for research as for treatment. Thistletown, which, unless the hon. Minister comes to its defence, is rapidly becoming the white elephant for emotionally disturbed children.

In six years of Thistletown we have not had a single solitary report tabled in this Legislature. Not one. And no one knows what is happening at Thistletown by way of research. I have heard it said—many have heard it said—that great things are being done at Thistletown, that great strides are being made. But where is the evidence of these strides? Why cannot the hon. Minister come before this House and give some demonstration of what the research has found? He is on record in newspaper articles—if necessary, I shall dig them out—as saying that he and his researchers at Thistletown do not know what to do about emotionally disturbed children. Year after year we heard that “we did not know what to do about the treatment of alcoholics” until finally the hon. Minister came in with a programme of treatment and abandoned this preoccupation with research. It is time we stopped researching emotionally disturbed children, not in the absolute sense, but in the sense that research is relegated to its proper level in the scale of values; and that we give a new emphasis to treatment and that that new emphasis should come quickly from this inter-departmental committee.

Think a little more about the hon. Minister's department. He has a unit at Smiths Falls hospital school, a unit of between 90 and 96 mentally ill children in that school. These are psychotic children; these are schizophrenic autistic children—prognosis of nil. What Dr. Franks told me when I visited Smiths Falls hospital school—and the hon. Minister can deny this if he will—is, and I give him the exact words of the superintendent: “For this entire ward of mentally ill children at Smiths Falls, we have one-half of a psychiatrist and one-third of a psychologist.”

Now, let me remind the House of something, Mr. Chairman. In other areas in this society, in other treatment centres like Warrendale, like Ottawa Protestant children's village, like Sunnyside children's centre as a third example, in other areas of this society, severely disturbed children require one-to-one treatment at a minimum, and if it is not one-to-one—it is at least one-to-two or one-to-three. And for over 90 children—at least, that is what there were when the federal Department of Health and Welfare made its survey in 1963—in the unit at Smiths Falls we have one-half of a psychiatrist and one-third of a psychologist. It is the most shocking condemnation of governmental policy I have ever witnessed. If the hon. Minister wishes to say that these children should not be out of Ontario hospital schools, one might grant him that because there is no alternative route. But at least, Mr. Chairman, let him provide those needs in those schools. These are not retarded children; these are mentally ill children, and they have been successfully rehabilitated in experiments all over North America, but not in experiments under the aegis of The Department of Health.

There are some very mystifying things about this department where emotionally disturbed children are concerned, indeed, as I said, where the whole pattern of mental illness is concerned. Our waiting lists for children's services are inconceivable. I had a mother in my own riding who phoned to make an appointment for her child at the sick children's diagnostic clinic, and was told she would have to wait a year before they could even put her on some kind of a list. The hospital survey of children's needs in Metropolitan Toronto dramatically itemized the incredible problems of overcrowding.

As I said, in all the Ontario hospitals visited, at the outpatient clinics, close to 50 per cent of the people coming to the clinics are adolescents under the age of 16. In eastern Ontario, there just are not any children's services, Mr. Chairman, with the exception of a little clinic in Ottawa. There are none. Indeed, the hon. Minister, I know, is thinking about a special adolescent and children's unit at Kingston Ontario hospital. One would feel rather more reassured if he would announce it, but there just are not any diagnostic facilities for disturbed children in the eastern part of the province.

Mr. Chairman, the situation becomes ever more severe as you analyze it. This department, Mr. Chairman, in its unreserved wisdom, sees fit to deny subsidies to some of the best treatment centres on the continent. It will not even grant places like Warrendale medical approval. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that what we have here, what bedevils a lot of this, is the incredible rivalry, the internecine warfare within the profession. You would think we were fighting over the most lavish array of services, instead of the most restricted modicums provided for the children of Ontario. I remember that the Globe and Mail said editorially April 27, 1965, and I quote, speaking of proven and tested methods:

All these methods work, and most of the practitioners of one method are at war with the practitioners of all others like a lot of religious denominations, each convinced that it has the only line to heaven. With their internal feuding they cannot bring the single strong pressure to bear on the government to force treatment for the children to whom they are all dedicated, and they provide innumerable excuses for the politicians to do nothing at all.

Well, they certainly provide innumerable excuses for the government politicians to do nothing at all. It is up to the government to take a stand if the feuding professionals cannot take a stand. The hon. Minister cannot simply rise in his seat and defend Thistle town in that plaintive voice, that we are still researching, or the assertive and truculent voice, that we are researching in the absence of any treatment design. It is not enough.

Whatever the number of children, literally thousands are being damaged by the absence of programmes in this department. All the hon. Minister can do is offer a departmental committee. Let me remind him. In this session, The Department of Reform Institutions has announced an increased treatment ratio for young children at its Hagersville training school, and has discussed with the Ottawa youth bureau the concept that no children under 12 should go to training school at all—that is the concept of detached workers. So in its modest way, the reform institutions branch has moved ahead.

Under The Department of Public Welfare, we have had increased subsidies in The Children's Institutions Act, which should facilitate some treatment, and we have had some excellent changes in The Child Welfare Act. So The Department of Public Welfare has moved ahead.

Under The Department of Education, we have had announced a willingness to consider legislation for special classes. We have had an establishment of teachers' courses over the summer for developing sensitivity in teachers, developing their ability to identify emotionally disturbed children. So we have some modest gains in The Department of Education.

Even in The Department of the Attorney General, as a result of "Jamie," we have had some little progress. I am thinking about properly staffing our detention homes.

Only in this department, Mr. Chairman, and no other, has the Minister been totally and irrevocably and belligerently delinquent, because all you have and continue to have is Thistle town and Smiths Falls and words. Not even a nod in the opening speech on these estimates in the direction of emotionally disturbed children. I want to tell the hon. Minister opposite, and I say it to him vigorously but in good faith, that in this field as in no other he has abdicated responsibility as a Minister of the Crown and uneasy lies the lead.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that he is losing the confidence—if he has not already lost it—of the Opposition in its entirety, in this particular field. You cannot forever be the monarch over a mental health pattern which is confused and unco-ordinated, inadequate in the extreme and, in its final and most tragic extremity, damaging thousands of young children simply because The Department of Health will not move. If the hon. Minister wants to pursue that topic any further, and to analyze it in greater detail, let him know that there are many of us here who would be happy to do so.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I have read the hon. Minister's opening address in these estimates and I notice he says there is a blueprint for future action. Recently, during the winter months, the Sudbury Star in one of its news stories criticized the northern members for losing their aggressiveness in pressing for a hospital school for retarded children in northern Ontario. As the hon. Minister very well knows, all the retarded children now in our institutions are long distances away from their homes.

I remember that each year I have asked about a hospital school for retarded children in northern Ontario. It was said we were going to have one at North Bay. There is no mention of it in the hon. Minister's speech at all. I know there is a hospital being built in Timmins. I believe it is for mentally ill, probably a 300-bed hospital. There was some intimation by the hon. Minister during the meetings in committee that there would likely be a hospital school built in North Bay, when these other smaller hospitals are built.

I believe there is one being built now in Timmins, and another one probably in another section of northeastern Ontario, probably in Sault Ste. Marie. Why they would build any institution for the mentally ill in Sault Ste. Marie—with all respect to the hon. Minister who represents that riding (Mr. Wishart), because it is away off on a tangent—is beyond me. If it is going to be built at all, it should be in a more central area.

I would like to ask, what is the position now in regard to a hospital school for retarded children in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, what I said last year still stands. The hospital at South Porcupine is under construction and when it is opened and can take its quota of mentally ill patients from the existing hospital at North Bay, a unit for retarded children will be opened at North Bay.

In addition, we are already in discussion with interested groups in Sudbury, under the Acts of the Legislature which already have been passed, who are interested in establishing a centre for retarded children there. I think, according to their beliefs, the plan will first be on the basis of establishing a small residential unit. I might advise the hon. member for Scarborough West that the changes in the various programmes with the exception of that one—The Department of Reform Institutions—all came out of the deliberations and the opinions and recommendations of the interdepartmental committee and they are all part of the co-ordinated programme, which will be operated under the direction of this department.

Because of the greatly increased government support to The Retarded Children's Homes Act and The Children's Institutions Act, it will be possible for local groups to establish and operate their own facilities. This is the plan at the present time in the minds of the people interested at Sudbury, and I think when this comes about, the northern part of Ontario will be very well served.

Mr. Troy: I would like to raise a couple of other points. I notice in looking at the presentation of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) to the House that he is still requesting the clinical services building in the Ontario hospital at North Bay. I believe that ever since I have come here this has been requested. Is it still intended to put up that clinical services building?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, it is still going under this name. Have you something else to ask?

Mr. Troy: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Is that the end of your question?

Mr. Troy: No. About that thing, it still goes on the books—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I will explain it to you in a moment.

Mr. Troy: Thank you.

Finally, if the hon. Minister will recall, I wrote him some time ago, at the request of a federal member, about a young man who is 35 years old. He is a mental defective, I believe, at Aurora. The mother lives at Sturgeon Falls, which is 25 miles or so from the Ontario hospital in North Bay, and she asks if the young man can be moved to North Bay. I understand that in other hospitals mental defectives are permitted to be admitted. It seems to me that, in all humanity, you could move this man. I believe that he has been at Aurora for 18 years; he is now 35 years old and I think it would be an act of humanity toward the mother if she could have an opportunity to see him once in a while. As you say, there must be some communication between the parents and the children, regardless of the age.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I do not know why the hon. member brought this up in the House. He wrote me about it and I wrote him in return and I gave him, not my reasons, but the reasons of the doctors who are in charge of the young man, as to why he could not be transferred to North Bay. There is no inhumanity to the mother; I think the doctors based their decision on what was best for the patient. I will have to look it up because I only have a very sketchy recollection of it, but I did outline it to the hon. member in my reply to his letter.

As to the matter of the clinical services building being carried on The Department of Public Works record, it is still carried under that name. But it will not be a clinical services building per se, it will be a smaller clinical services building; but the rest of the facility will be school facilities for the retarded children.

When the clinical services building was first conceived, it was to complete the hospital. Then it was decided that the hospital would change its character, and the hon. member understands now that this has Treasury board approval and is in the planning stage.

Mr. Troy: I must confess that I did not mean to embarrass the hon. Minister with the question about this young man—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: You did not embarrass me, but I cannot understand—

Mr. Troy: —but I understood from others that some mental defectives were in other mental hospitals. It did seem to me that it would be okay to move this lad; that is the only reason I mention it now.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I have waited some time to get to this vote and I am hoping that I do not, in any way, make this a personal issue. I have a couple of items I want to take up with the hon. Minister and I would like to preface my remarks with a question. I understood quite some time ago that Cedar Springs was not completely filled with patients because you lack administration, or nurses, to take care of the patients. If the hon. Minister would answer that, Mr. Chairman, I could go on.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That is right. When the hospital was built no administration building was provided, but we still believe that, even as it is now being used, it is big enough and certainly bigger than we would build now.

Mr. Bukator: The decision of the department, then, is that the unit is much too cumbersome to handle?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I would not say that.

Mr. Bukator: In any event, I shall go on with one of the items previously referred to. There is a lady in my riding from whom I received a letter dated April 16, 1965, and I shall read extracts from it. She wrote:

I have a daughter soon to be 16 years of age, who is totally handicapped physically. She must be dressed, fed and carried about. She is unable to walk, talk or sit up. She is a darling child and I love her dearly.

Brooke has been on the waiting list at Cedar Springs since July, 1963.

When I received this letter, I took it upon myself to send it on to the hon. Minister of Health, who was good enough to reply to me. Perhaps I should read a portion of the hon. Minister's letter to keep things in sequence. He said:

I am advised by my mental health officials that this girl's name is on the waiting list for admission to the Ontario hospital at Cedar Springs. However, we have been in touch with the Welland county health unit and the public health nurse there will keep in touch with this family and is trying to arrange for a home help or VON nurse to see the mother over the period of hospitalization. You can be assured we will endeavour to assist the family in every way possible in the care of this girl.

The mother has had to contend with this unfortunate child for 16 years, unaided. She cannot go out to work, because she must take care of her. She says in her letter:

I cannot find anyone that can lift Brooke or will assume the responsibility of feeding her.

The mother is in the position where she can do absolutely nothing but look after her daughter. I replied to this lady's letter and forwarded a copy to the hon. Minister.

The only solution to this particular problem, as I see it, Mr. Chairman, is that this youngster should be admitted immediately. The mother has carried this burden for many years and has been put in the position where she can do absolutely nothing to help herself. So much for that.

I would like to go on with another item, and I do want to get these things into the record because, for many years, I have felt that the mental institutions of our province are not only overcrowded, but do not have enough staff to take proper care of the patients. This only confirms what I have to say on the next item.

This is a letter written to me by another lady from Niagara Falls, and I think I should read the whole letter to you:

I am enclosing a copy of the letter that my husband and I have sent to the Minister of Health, Dr. Dymond.

Naturally we are concerned about the welfare of our daughter, but we are also concerned about the overcrowding of our hospital schools which, we feel, is the direct cause of incidents such as we are experiencing now. Certainly smaller residential centres in each community, which would permit more frequent visits of parents and child, with local volunteers participating in the hospital programme, is, I feel, the final answer to this problem.

We would greatly appreciate any assistance you can give us to find a solution to this present situation.

In reading the letter alone—I have never talked to these people—I find, as I analyze it, that the parents are exceptionally fair people. They have made a suggestion that the government look at the possibility of smaller residential units. I think the government has been thinking in that direction, from what I have gathered from the committee meetings I have attended.

But let me show you what these poor people have to contend with in Gravenhurst—their daughter is in Orillia. Let me read from a letter they sent to the hon. Minister of Health:

We are writing to you in regard to our daughter, who is a patient at the Muskoka unit of the Orillia hospital school at Gravenhurst.

Susan, who is 17 years old, has been a patient at the Orillia hospital since January 1960, and is a severely retarded child.

During the past year we have been concerned about the type of medical care she is receiving at Gravenhurst.

Early in July 1963, when we visited Susan, her right wrist was swollen and she was having difficulty moving her arm. We reported this to the floor nurse and to the acting supervisor, asking that they have the staff doctor examine it.

We visited again on August 10 or 11, to find her wrist very swollen. On checking with the supervisor we found that it had never been reported to the doctor. Again we requested medical treatment.

We telephoned the hospital on Tuesday, August 13, and were advised that her wrist was broken, and that the doctor planned to set it the next Friday.

We telephoned again on Saturday, August 17, to be advised that the doctor had decided not to set her arm and that a letter was on its way explaining the reasons—a copy of this letter is attached.

To date Susan has very little function in her wrist or hand and to us it is quite deformed. We do not believe that she has had any follow-up treatment on this injury.

On April 5, 1964, when we visited Susan, she was having difficulty walking. We reported this to the floor nurse and were advised that she had not been walking for from four to six weeks. On inquiring as to whether the doctor had checked her, the answer was negative.

We wrote to Dr. Honze on April 6, and requested medical attention—Attached is a copy of the letter we received in reply.

We feel that slow degeneration of the muscles of her legs, which is probably due to lack of use, further points up the lack of care and attention Susan is receiving at Gravenhurst.

While we feel that an incident of neglected treatment could be due to the incompetence of one attendant, we also feel that continued lack of care could be due to the overwork of a too limited staff.

We would specifically like to bring to your attention that it was only at our insistence in both incidents that Susan received medical attention.

We are charter members of our local association for retarded children and also of the Ontario association for retarded children. During the past ten years we have become very interested in the welfare of the retarded, both at home and in our hospital schools.

We do not feel that we can sit back at this time and allow our daughter to become a bed patient without making every possible effort to prevent it.

We would request that Susan be transferred to the children's psychiatric clinic at London for assessment, and then to the hospital school that would provide the best possible care for a child of her type.

Now, this could be a crank letter from a parent if it was not accompanied by two letters from the Ontario hospital school.

Your daughter Susan was examined today and there is no clinical—and this was written to the lady who received the letter, naturally, and who had the daughter in the institution:

—evidence of any abnormal disability. She spends the bulk of her time sitting quietly and although she is still able to walk and her balance seems normal, there appears to be some slow degeneration of the muscles of her legs, which is probably due to lack of use.

Assessing the physical capabilities of these patients is very difficult, but I find no gross evidence of any inability to walk, or evidence of any injury. If there is any further change it will be investigated.

And this is signed by the doctor.

But the letter I was very much impressed with, after the mother had said that the daughter's wrist was swollen. As the days went on she finally got a reply to that letter. It said:

An x-ray taken on Tuesday last has revealed a fracture of Susan's wrist, which would appear to be of several weeks' duration, and is now largely healed.

Left as is, she will have a slight bump on her wrist but otherwise should have normal function. I do not think we are justified in breaking down the healing process to adjust for the amount of residual deformity that will be present.

She apparently is suffering no discomfort from this, and the end result will be good.

Can you imagine a person who has all his faculties about him, Mr. Chairman, having an arm set without any assistance whatever? Then consider a retarded youngster with the same condition who knows absolutely nothing about taking care of herself, having to contend with this pain, even after it was brought to the attention of the authorities. I attribute this to one thing and one thing alone, and that is the overcrowding of the hon. Minister's institutions and the lack of staff which the hon. Minister admits, I believe—that is, a lack of the proper type of staff.

If this condition exists in one case where the young lady has had this particular problem to contend with and the parents have had the anxiety to contend with, I am wondering if there are other instances similar to that one. Is there a possibility that the day will come, Mr. Chairman, when the government will decide on community residential hospitals for the patients who can be taken care of, perhaps, better by the local people and their parents than they could in large institutions such as Cedar Springs where they are just another number and do not get adequate care. Apparently, from what I gather here, one youngster has waited two years to get into an institution and has not made it yet. Another has been admitted and has been getting the type of care that these people are concerned about.

I find no malice in my heart towards the hon. Minister or his department, but I think this is a problem which should be looked into and immediately remedied. I think it is possible through smaller units in the municipalities. I mentioned this in committee and I mention it here again.

The Hydro project in our area in the peninsula left a hospital abandoned—I do not know whether it was a 40- or 50-bed hospital—which seemed to do the job. It is not old, and it could take up some of the slack. I made reference to a dormitory with 130 rooms, which could also take care of some of the problems with which we have to contend.

I would like to say to the hon. Minister that they tell me, Mr. Chairman, that there are times when the parents go to see these mentally disturbed youngsters and that they really set the children back rather than help them. If that is the case, too, I would like an answer to that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to appear to defend what happened in respect to this child. I cannot remember the details of this after the hon. member drew it to my attention, but I do recall asking for a complete investigation.

I can say to you, Mr. Chairman, and I can say this very frankly and without equivocation, that overcrowding did not cause this. Overcrowding is not the cause of neglect of treatment, if there is neglect. The central office does not lay down any professional policy. The doctors in charge of the cases are completely free to treat cases as they will. They had the right to pick up the phone and ask to have this child admitted, for instance, to the general hospital at Orillia if they were short of staff and could not give the child the attention that she ought to have had.

If this child fell at a time when she was not noticed and if the accident was not reported, it was not because of overcrowding. I can only come to the conclusion that there must have been some oversight or some neglect in treatment. That child should have gone to the general hospital and had her wrist examined.

We certainly have a neurologist visiting the Orillia hospital periodically; I think it is once a week, but at least he is on call—a highly skilled specialist in neurology who ought to have been asked to examine the child if her leg muscles were wasting. I am not defending anything of that kind, sir, and I will not defend sloppy medical practice by anyone.

The matter of the small residential units: We have made provision for that now by legislation that is almost completely passed by this House. This is the kind of thing that we are encouraging, this is the kind of thing that has been talked about among the parents' groups and the associations and ourselves for quite a long time. As I have just stated a few moments ago, this is one of the decisions arising out of a recommendation made to us by our own interdepartmental committee. But we do not expect nor do we agree that these should be small community hospital schools. We believe they should be residential, and I do not think we should encourage the establishment of a great many hospital schools. After all, with the increased number of community schools for the retarded, the existing residences will fill about the last remaining gap. Those who still have to go to an institution will probably be so severely retarded and so sorely handicapped physically as well, that little more than care and nursing will be needed for them. But the popularity of small residences should be very great indeed and the grants now being provided, both for capital construction and for the acquisition of existing buildings and their renovation, and then for the maintenance of those buildings, should stimulate that expansion very greatly.

Mr. Bukator: I was pleased to hear—and I knew the hon. Minister felt this way—that he would not tolerate sloppily operated institutions, and that this youngster should have been sent to the hospital. The fact remains that attention was drawn to the proper authority immediately the parents noticed this, and nothing was done. This thing had to heal on its own and finally the doctor said that it was healing and that there was no sense in breaking it.

The point that I tried to make was that I had asked another question of the hon. Minister. I am sure that he just cannot grasp all of the questions that have been fired at him over the last week or so; he has been quite a target for us. But I asked if the parents, on occasion, when they visit the children in these institutions, set them back in their progress so far as education is concerned. I understood someone here to say that this happens on occasion.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does, Mr. Chairman, but I do not really believe that it is a serious matter. Sometimes we have difficulty with parents who find, on visiting the children, that the child rejects the parent. The child has built up a child-parent relationship with the staff at the hospital, and often we have as much difficulty with the parents—because they feel rejected—as we have with children who, after a trip home, or after a long visit from their parents, have difficulty readjusting to the hospital. But I do not really think these are serious matters. They are only transitory.

Mr. Bukator: Another point I would like to make here. It was brought up in the House a few weeks ago by one of the government members, who said something about it—I could look it up in Hansard, but I do not think it that important, except that the meat of the question was that we, as politicians, have a tendency to call the hon. Minister to have someone admitted because we are pulling strings, so to speak. I must admit that I am guilty of that offence, if it is an offence, but I have done it only through this process: I have first contacted the parents, and have found that the two medical men, who have to have the youngster admitted, have written the necessary letters or have filled out the necessary forms; then we find that the youngster does not get admitted, because the doctors felt that that patient, a youngster, should go to an institution. We find that nothing has happened, so they come to us and we contact the only authority of which we know—and I was told here last week again, by some hon. member of the government, that this is our duty to our constituents. On some other occasion, in talking about some other department, it was said that if we had this ombudsman they speak of, then we would have no chores to do for our constituents. That would be putting us on very solid ground, with big pay, and doing nothing for our people.

So I understood, from what was said to us at that time, that we have a job to do. I have never asked any department head to do anything contrary to the rules and regulations but I say this, to you Mr. Chairman, and to the assembly: I have asked the hon. Minister on occasion. I think that young lady has been waiting for two years, for the proper authority, for the doctor filling the forms, and for the man from the Health department or the Public Welfare department, Mr. Stock, to say that this lady has no means to maintain them. She claims in her letters that she can hardly feed them, or keep her home together, because of the limit of her income.

Now then, I say to you publicly: Please take this young lady in. That is the answer to that particular problem.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that is the answer to the particular problem. I did not examine this child, but the doctors who knew where she should stand, or what her real need for institutionalization was. What the parent needs, in the meantime, is support. Has this community got any arrangement, through The Department of Public Welfare, for homemakers services or home nursing services? The government supports these services if the municipality is involved, they are available to anyone who needs them, and this may very well, Mr. Chairman, be the support the parent needs.

It would seem to me that if she had been an urgent, or an emergent admission, her record would have been noted as such by the doctors who examined her in the first instance, by our staff who examined her. I know that the family doctor, or the doctor who sees the patient outside, believes they should be admitted immediately. They believe that, oftentimes, a simple mongoloid should be admitted the day it is born. We know these things and this is why we are putting all these cases through an assessment and diagnostic clinic. But there is support available for the parent if the community is involved in the homemaker and home nursing services, supported through The Department of Public Welfare.

Mr. Bukator: We have come, now, Mr. Chairman, to the parting of the ways. The hon. Minister stood up and said he did not know really whether this youngster was to be admitted to an institution. Her doctor would know better.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I did not say, "her doctor," but that "our doctor" who examined the child should know the degree of priority that should be attached to this case.

Mr. Bukator: I hope you can get your doctor on the job. I hate to bore the House with the contents of the letter here, but I would like you all to read it. It is more than urgent as I see it, Mr. Chairman and it is about time. If they have a doctor who does this sort of thing, I will send that letter back to the hon. Minister and I would expect results immediately.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister, the salaries paid to the staff of the Ontario mental retarded children's hospital at Cedar Springs. We do appreciate, Mr. Minister, that so many of our citizens in southwestern Ontario get a position on the staff at this mental retarded hospital. But I have been approached, time and again, Mr. Minister, and told that the salaries are not sufficient for them. They are low.

I would like to know if the salaries in every mental institution, or Ontario mental retarded children's institution, in the province are on the same schedule. I know these men and women are sincere when they tell me this. I would like to see you, Mr. Minister, bring those salaries in line with the other segments of our economy, so that these men and women can earn a decent livelihood. Is it true that the salaries are very low? There seems to be quite a bitterness among those who have been on the staff, Mr. Minister, and I would like to see you bring them in line with other segments of our economy.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the salaries paid to the hospital staffs, as in all public salaries, are the same all across the province. I have to repeat, sir, that The Department of Health, in keeping with all other departments, does not set salaries. The Department of Civil Service does that. They have all the machinery for investigating, studying, researching and so on. We, in the department, have made our submissions to them, given them our opinions, reclassifications, specifications, and salary levels, and we have to abide by their decision.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, has the hon. Minister asked for a higher rate of pay for his staff? I take it, if you have asked for more, that it has been obviously turned down; but what do you ask for?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We do not ask for anything, Mr. Chairman. We put our views before the civil service commission researchers and we do not ask for anything.

Mr. Trotter: Well, what are your views on the subject?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this matter a little further.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this matter of salaries was all dealt with when the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) was dealing with the estimates of The Department of Civil Service. It is quite outside my jurisdiction as a departmental Minister, and I am afraid I cannot give any satisfactory answers to the matter because I am not knowledgeable about it—again, I repeat, because it is not within the scope of my responsibility.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is entirely true to say that this matter was fully canvassed under the estimates of The Department of the Civil Service. At that time, we were concerned primarily with salary policy and personnel policies generally, with regard to the whole of the public service. We now come to a specific section of the public service—specifically the numerous hospitals covered by vote 713. There has been considerable discussion until now of broad policies in the treatment of mental illness, the availability of professional and sub-professional staff, and that sort of matter.

Equally important, I would suggest to the House, is the question of the adequacy of the salaries paid to the non-professional staff. They perform a less skilled service, but a service which we can all recognize is equally essential. If they are not paid adequate salaries, then obviously the whole programme for the treatment of mental illness in our hospitals is going to suffer.

I want to put a question directly to the hon. Minister, a question of fact. I am not going to ask him about what submissions he has made internally to the civil service commission, but I would like to find out certain facts about this particular area of his administration. I would like to ask, first of all—taking all of the hospitals covered by vote 713 as a group—what percentage of the employees in that group of hospitals receive less than $3,000 per year. Second, what percentage receive less than $3,600 per year.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer the hon. member's question; I would have to get that information. I did not come with any material vis-à-vis salaries because, as I stated, I have nothing to do with this. I will get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Certainly I would like to have the information, Mr. Chairman. I hope that the hon. Minister will be able to get it for us while these estimates are still before this House. We were amazed to discover, with respect to the civil service generally, that 17 per cent receive less than $3,000 a year, and 35 per cent less than $3,600 per year. What I am concerned about is that these large percentages may be even larger in respect to the mental hospitals. As far as I can determine, people who are classified as attendants in those hospitals are at an extremely low rate of wages, at a rate where one can hardly expect them to give their best efforts in their work because they are bound to be preoccupied with personal, financial worries.

For example, some time ago, a number of us witnessed a group of attendants, from the Oak Ridge hospital at Penetanguishene, demonstrating in front of this building with regard to their salaries. We were told at the time, when we inquired about it, that they had been given an increase in pay effective at the end of last year, and that a further reclassification, or shall we say a premium, was being paid to these people because they were considered to be in a somewhat different position to attendants in other hospitals.

I have since discovered, if information given to me is correct, that the increase they got in the reclassification effective November 1, 1964, amounted to $20 a year. They had been on a rate—I am now talking of starting rate—they had been on a starting rate of $3,000 per year, but a bonus of $100 a year was being paid to them, making a total of $3,100. They were then given an adjustment, bringing their starting rate up to $3,120, but the bonus was dropped, so the net increase was $20. Now, this is just playing with men.

Mr. Chairman: I wish to inform the member that the salary scale schedule should be discussed under the civil service commission. Any discussion, I would suggest, should be on a general plane, and dealt with in that way. You are dealing with the percentages and therefore I would say it is out of order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to you that the question of salaries, an item in this vote of $250,000, affects the efficient operation of the hospitals referred to in the vote. I recognize your point, that the technical determination of these salaries comes under the civil service commission, but I think it is in order to comment on the salaries being paid as part of the total problem of efficient operation.

I just wanted to make one further comment with regard to the Oak Ridge attendants, whom I was taking as an example only. They are a group, I understand, who are paid a somewhat higher wage than attendants generally, but the wage is obviously ridiculously low. A point that really concerns me is that we were advised earlier in this session that these people, whose basic starting rate was set at $3,120 on November 1, 1964, are now supposed to be getting an additional premium of $300 per year. I am told by the people concerned that they are not getting it, or, as of two or three weeks ago, they were not getting it. Now, can I get to the bottom of this? Are they getting it or are they not? What is the score on the matter?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I regret that I cannot give the hon. member the answer, but I will undertake to get it. I understood that they were getting it, but I will certainly find out and let the hon. member know.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Chairman, the Minister, a moment ago, stated that he did not know what his staffs should be paid. I would say, with the greatest respect—because I do have a lot of respect for the Minister, and the job he is doing, and the immensity of his job; it is the most important job we have in our whole House—I say, with respect, that no other business in the world could operate this way. If the head of a business concern saw that his operation was not ticking properly, he would have to change his salary schedule to employ the people to do the job. I suggest to you, Mr. Minister, that it is not working properly for many reasons.

My hon. colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale, threw some very pointed questions to you. What are you doing about recruiting, about working conditions, about salaries of these key people? In my own contact with people in the mental field, I know, Mr. Minister, that we have, in the New Toronto hospital, graduate nurses with a degree in psychiatry, who take home less than $60 a week. This is a shocking situation, that you, as head of this department, can say that you do not know what they should be paid. I would suggest to you that your job would be made a lot easier if you were aware of these very pointed facts. This has been flogged across the House for many hours now, but I think that, in essence, this is the key factor in this whole business, paying them wages competitive to other layers of our society.

I would ask the Minister before I sit down, what is he doing about the answer to my colleague from Parkdale, what is he doing about recruiting, about paying these people? Are you going to take the decision of the civil service for all these things? I say again, no other business in the world could operate this way. Why do we let health and mental health operate this way? I would like an answer, please.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, by and large, we do not have a great deal of trouble recruiting. We advertise in the newspapers like anybody else. But, again I have to say that salary scales are the responsibility of

The Department of Civil Service. The hon. members opposite know this perfectly well, sir. It was all cleared during the estimates of the hon. Provincial Treasurer, who is responsible for that department. I cannot check salaries in flagrant disagreement with The Department of Civil Service because this is their responsibility. As far as the registered nurse who has a degree in psychiatry is concerned, I find it very difficult to understand what the hon. member means. The only person who can have a degree in psychiatry, to my knowledge, is a physician.

However, if a nurse studied medicine and then took her degree in psychiatry, this is quite possible, but I am quite certain that she is taking home a lot more than $50 a week. The starting salary for a registered nurse is $4,000 a year. What she takes home, I don't know, but I have looked into quite a number of these complaints about take-home pay, and I have found in many instances that there was a large debt being paid off, or something of that kind, or deductions were being made at the source on the request of the employee. We cannot help that any more than the hon. member can. If one of your employees asks you to deduct certain things, he cannot hold you responsible for his net take-home pay. I say to you unequivocally, sir, that there is no graduate nurse in our hospitals that is earning a wage of $50 a week.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I will give you the names. I said under $60 a week, and I will give you their names, but I get back to the point that I do not think it is right and proper that civil servants should tie your hands in what you should pay your people to get the right personnel to do the job. I think that you should explain to this House why you let the civil service run your department in that way.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, just following up on the hon. member for Grey North, I would like to put a proposition to the hon. Minister.

As he says, the responsibility for determining pay and other working conditions in all classes of employment in the public service rests with The Department of the Civil Service and the civil service commission. The difficulty, however, arises—and it is a difficulty of which I would think the hon. Minister of Health would be acutely aware—in the fact that the normal procedure of the civil service commission is to give great weight to comparative wage rates in the community for similar classes of employment, in arriving at what it considers to be fair and reasonable wages in the public service.

When we come to the custodial, attendant, and other similar type of employee in mental hospitals, we face a sort of vicious circle. Anywhere in the community, that type of employee, in my opinion, is grossly underpaid. If one makes a comparison between hospitals operated by the government and other hospitals, it may be that the comparison is not unfavourable as far as the government is concerned. The point is that the whole class of employment is underpaid. How are we ever going to get out of the vicious circle that this entire group of employees is underpaid throughout the community? They are a group of employees that perform a vital service. It seems to me that it is in our interests as citizens who may, at some stage or other in our lives find ourselves in hospitals of one class or another, or may find our friends there, that the people who will attend the patients in hospitals in a non-professional status are sufficiently well paid that they can regard themselves as free and honourable citizens, not overwhelmed with debt. This is not the case.

I do not for the life of me see how we can expect a person with a family to support to live in any sort of decency and in any sort of freedom from worry when he is paid $3,120 a year, or $3,500 a year, or something like that. I think the hon. Minister has to take up the cudgels with the civil service commission on behalf of these people and try to get it across to the commission that, in this case at any rate, the approach of comparative wage rates is totally useless. The wage rates for the entire category throughout the community has to be lifted.

This is in the interests of the hon. Minister of Health and the administration of his hospitals. It is in the interests of the people of Ontario who pay for the upkeep of these hospitals and who use their services when they are required. Let the government be a leader for a change. Let it set the pace with regard to this class of employment, one of the most important types of employment in the province.

It is tragic to think that people who attend to patients in mental hospitals in this province receive substantially less than common labourers in any of the major plants in the major employment centres in the province. I do not think that the common labourers in any of the plants are paid too much. In fact, I think the wages they get are probably just about enough to give them a decent living, but I certainly think that the wages we are paying to attendants, custodial staff, and so on, in our hospitals is a public disgrace. Really, the government ought to take the bull by the horns.

This is the time to do it. Their wage review is under consideration right now. This is their turn in the cyclical review policy. Let us get it straightened out. I do not think the government can think in terms of an increase of $100 or $200 a year. They have got to think in terms of an increase of $1,000 a year for these people. That is the only way they can possibly be brought up to what any of us could consider as even approaching an adequate level.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to re-emphasize, from our side, our party's view on this.

I have listened to the replies of the hon. Minister. It has been a long and a detailed debate. I felt at times that he perhaps tried to slur over some criticisms which were made.

We talked about the morale of staff. The hon. Minister suggested that we were at fault in this; if there was low morale it was because of the Opposition and the criticisms they made about conditions. I would like to get it completely clear in his mind: I met with the delegation of people who came here from Ontario hospitals and I talked to them. They told me about the working conditions and emphasized very clearly that one of the reasons for the sense of frustration and futility and low morale was the fact of their salaries. They asked: Would you stand up for us and raise in the House the fact that the utterly inadequate salaries give an indication that the government does not place importance on the matter of dealing with human beings who have got mental disabilities?

I would suggest, sir, that in our society the measure of the importance that we place on people, on the whole, is through their salary bracket. It would seem to me that it is an indication of the worst kind of misgovernment that compared to these human beings who have these difficulties, talking of mental illness, I suggest you probably pay the men who clean and look after the cars that you drive around in more than the human beings who look after those who, because of mental afflictions, are confined in mental institutions.

I realize that the hon. Minister is saying this is the civil service commission. I think it is a Cabinet decision. I suspect, frankly, that the hon. Minister himself has probably fought hard. It has been a solitary fight and I suspect that people have said we want to give more importance to some of the material things we are doing.

We have got to give more emphasis in this area and I think the reallocation of money is the form it should take. Frankly, this government stands condemned because of the inadequacy of staff, and one of the real reasons for not getting staff is because of the inadequacy of salaries.

Let me go further than that. I am not just thinking of the custodial staff or the attendants. I suggest that the lack of trained personnel is again because of a lack of foresight on the part of the government. I am not going to go through a lot of statistics on this. I think the debate from the Opposition has been thoroughly documented, but we could look at such yardsticks as the number of doctors that graduate in this province, 303 doctors in 1962-63, and so on.

The hon. Minister says it is a costly expense to have doctors graduate and you cannot do it overnight. That is the very point we have been making steadily to you, but instead you now face another crisis and you are announcing that because of the Hall commission and the sudden realization that you have not got enough people you are now opening up new medical schools. It is an indictment of the government not to have foreseen the need for more doctors; and if you do not have doctors, you do not get psychiatrists, because as I understand it, the first platform of medical education, before moving into psychiatry, is to have a medical degree.

You have not had the facilities to train doctors and you have been turning hundreds of young people, who wanted to move into this area, away because you have not provided the facilities. We are going to wait for about another seven years in this area.

I am talking of staff, Mr. Chairman, connected with these mental institutions. Dentists—I almost dread to ask the question—what kind of dental care is given to patients within these mental institutions? Because, if it is anything like the other areas, and knowing the lack of dentists that we have in this province, I suggest there is an area of great neglect in the mental institutions. We just do not have the dentists.

I raise that to the hon. Minister, if he would be good enough to make notes on the points I am making. How many routine checks are made of the teeth of patients within mental institutions? I suggest, sir, that in this whole area of staff the government has been lacking and has neither shown foresight in developing the institutions for training people in medicine and dentistry and psychiatry and nursing, nor encouraged them by offering adequate salaries.

It would seem to me that this could probably be the most exciting challenge for this wealthy government—the mental institutions. I would think, when we hear of a peace corps attracting young people to move into a drama and a challenge to it, that this could have been the area that we were going to clean out—our mental institutions.

My colleague, the hon. member for Parkdale, has outlined a series of points which he felt the hon. Minister should be emphasizing. I would like to stress again that to me when one day this hon. Minister stands up and tells us that he has torn down institutions which have more than 400 beds and has smaller accommodation, segregated accommodation, and so on, for various types of patients, then I think he will deserve a medal. I think this will be a high occasion in the life of this province, because it will be showing a new approach in this.

I would like to feel, sir, that in this whole community approach—and I know some of the work that the government has been doing in the outpatient clinics and hospitals and the other areas, but it has been slow; I do not know why it has been slow. The hon. Minister has suggested to us in reply to the hon. member for Scarborough West, that when you get older you have more wisdom and you have a broader view on this. I can remember when I first stood in this House and was challenging the hon. Minister in several areas, in which he had made the same approach. I imagine that when he was defending his position on fluoridation he made the same kind of approach. I say that this does not become the hon. Minister.

The hon. member for Scarborough West came through with facts, figures and statistics. And similarly with the hon. member for Parkdale. They both showed knowledge and idealism. If there is one thing that this department needs in the mental health area it is a new vigour, a new imagination, some daring, some idealism. For the hon. Minister to have deplored this and say that he is getting older and finds therefore that some of these things really do not work—I would hope that he would get back again and rejuvenate himself with some kind of vitamin pills or something—

An hon. member: Take Geritol.

Mr. Thompson: Geritol, yes.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Scotch whisky.

Mr. Thompson: If Scotch whisky is the approach that the hon. Minister needs to give him that new vitality and vigour and dynamism, I will give him a case of it.

All I am saying is this: This, sir, is what is lacking as far as I am concerned. The hon. Minister has stood up before us again in an indefensible position, defending an indefensible cause. They have talked of Fort Logan, they have talked of a variety of ways of taking the locks away from the doors. I think that, as you go around to these mental institutions, the questions that you should be asking is, how many locks were taken off the doors in the past year, and you should give a medallion to the institutions where these locks have been taken off. A whole variety of approaches has been suggested to the hon. Minister, and it disappoints me, sir, that this Minister of Health, instead of seizing on these suggestions and rallying to his cause—a cause of being a crusader to open new frontiers and opportunities for people who have the affliction of mental health—instead of that, he is standing back with his feet dug in, standing behind a ditch of reaction and suggesting to us, “Look, these things really do not work” or “wait until you get more seasoned.”

This, sir, is really why I deplore the hon. Minister's whole approach towards this. There have been tremendous challenges and we realize them and realize the complexities of such problems as emotionally disturbed children and realize the problems of the retarded children; we realize that the institutions are crowded but what we are doing is trying to suggest approaches in order that Ontario can be known as a province of humanity, a province that does not still lock people up as though they were family skeletons and must be hidden away in the closet. Let us get a breath of fresh air into this whole approach. I think that dynamic ideas have been presented to the hon. Minister; and they have been documented as having been shown to work in other municipalities and I ask the hon. Minister—knowing that underneath the position of Minister of Health in a reactionary government, he still has a small spark now and again of a crusader—I ask him, in view of this discussion, to get that spark lit into a flame and tackle this as a first priority as it should be in this province of affluence.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, there are one or two questions I would like to put to the hon. Minister.

The hon. Minister will remember that a few weeks ago the employees from the Ontario hospitals made a protest demonstration in front of the Parliament buildings. I spoke to several of them. One of them complained about the inadequate wages he was receiving; I asked him what kind of a job he had, his occupation, and he told me he was a ward attendant No. 2. I asked him what this entailed and he said that he was on shifts and was in charge of his ward, ward attendant on his shift, in charge of the administration of medication. I asked him if this included drugs and he said, yes. I would ask the hon. Minister if this is correct. I knew this particular individual; he has not been in the employ of the government very long. Prior to his employment with the Ontario hospital he was a service station operator and a factory worker.

I would also ask the hon. Minister, following the demonstration—and, of course, the criticism of the Opposition in regard to the salaries paid to the hospital workers, when we dealt with the estimates of the civil service commission—if there has been any discussion between the hon. Minister's department and the civil service commission or the government in regard to this problem that was raised so strongly by the employees.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is quite aware that the hon. Provincial Treasurer, who heads the civil service commission, met the group and I met them with him. Further discussions were not necessary. The question the hon. member poses concerning the attendant administering drugs. Yes, I can understand an attendant administering drugs, simply carrying a pill or capsule or what-have-you to the patient, in the same manner as you would carry it to your child and see that your child takes it. This is administering drugs, but this is not the matter of prescribing or concocting or dispensing the drugs, this is simply handing it to the patient when it is handed to the attendant to do this. Now, sir, this is not to be confused in any way with dispensing drugs.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would think it quite a responsibility for one making something like $60 a week. I forgot to add that his responsibilities also entailed compiling a report for the doctor in charge and I would suggest that this kind of responsibility to an inexperienced and unqualified person, is beyond what one would expect. One, the administration of medication for—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I might make it plain that an attendant is not an unqualified person. An attendant two has passed his examinations, a fully qualified attendant.

Mr. Gisborn: I wish the hon. Minister would elaborate on his qualifications, as the reason I raised this question is because I know this particular chap has not had any more than a high school education, if he has had that. As I say, I knew he was a service station attendant and a factory worker prior to going into the employ of the Ontario hospital. What kind of qualification would he need to be in charge of the administration of medication and drugs, and compiling a report for the doctor in an institution of that kind?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is trying to make a great deal out of whole cloth. The preliminary education required for an attendant is grade 10. Anyone with grade 10 is qualified to undertake training as a ward attendant; he undergoes a course of in-service training and writes two examinations and on successfully passing those, he qualifies for confirmation as first, an attendant grade one, and then attendant grade two.

Again, I want to emphasize that this matter of administering drugs is simply taking a pill or a medication that is given to him by somebody qualified to do so and handing it to the patient, or seeing that the patient takes it, in exactly the same way as a parent or a member of the family would give a dose of medicine to another member of the family. Let us not make a great deal out of this administration of medicine, because you leave the impression in the minds of those who do not understand, that we are calling upon those attendants to dispense medications. This is an entirely different matter.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this debate has not been entirely subdued at all times, and perhaps it will end on that note. I wish to ask the hon. Minister a series of questions about this branch, not all of them related, but some of which, I think, deserve a reply.

First, Mr. Chairman, it is generally considered that the rationale for developing psychiatric wings in general hospitals is to allow to emerge in the public mind, and in the practice of medicine, an equation of physical illness and mental illness—the one is not to be given priority over the other. If that is true, then surely the corollary is also true where the mental hospitals are concerned.

Why would it not be possible, or is it not advisable, to build general hospital wing units of 100 or 150 beds, in the Ontario hospital structure, so that the community again would be treated for physical illness as well as mental illness, within the same structure. Unhappy comparisons would not then be made. I gather that, at London Ontario hospital, the superintendent was very much in favour of this procedure. It was supported, as I said before, by the London academy of medicine, by the editorial board of the local newspaper, by the mental health branch; but, for a variety of reasons connected with a teaching hospital at the university, the general hospital wing was not included in the new plans for the Ontario hospital. I think that is rather unfortunate. I think that some kind of regional planning could have been instituted where the university hospital would not have dominated all the available bed space.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, to make it even more specific, I gather that plans are underway for a revamping of Toronto Ontario hospital. Is it the intention of this government to enact what the superintendent wishes, namely, a general hospital wing facility as a part of that? And what is the hon. Minister's general feeling about the overall position of general wings within Ontario hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We agree with the thinking in this, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, at Whitby, Ontario, the community is building a general hospital on land being made available to them as part of the Ontario hospital complex; some will have to begin with a 100-bed general hospital, in association with the psychiatric hospital.

On 999 Queen West, this is one of the reasons why there has been some delay in our planning; we were trying to iron this out. We accepted the belief that it would be a good idea to include a general hospital with this; but because of the fact that there are so many general hospital beds in this area of the city of Toronto, we cannot get approval. I do believe that we should force the issue, because I suppose hon. members may well think: "Well, the government is doing this; they can put the hospital where they please." It would be rather foolish for the government to go in complete opposition to what they themselves believe; that general hospitals should be planned. We are quite prepared to accept the authority of the Ontario hospital services commission in this regard; that there are already too many general hospital beds collected together in too small a space.

We are looking at the possibility of placing a general hospital in connection with our New Toronto hospital, a place where we believe it can be accepted. We have not yet posed this to the Ontario hospital services commission, whose approval, of course, we must have. It is quite true that a general hospital was advocated for association with the London psychiatric hospital at London, and it is quite true also that this plan was left in abeyance so that the university hospital would be given priority over it.

In keeping with modern concepts, the health sciences centre, a hospital physically in contact with the university health sciences schools, in an essential part of the complex. This does not mean to say that the matter is abandoned. We believe that, when the time comes that further hospital beds are essential in London, the proper and acceptable place for it will be in association with the psychiatric hospital that is now under reconstruction.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering: Is there any expectation that the old part of 999 Queen Street, which is the main part, will be torn down; surely, as a building built in 1846 it has obviously outworn any proper use?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The answer, Mr. Chairman, is "Yes." It is to be torn down and the planning is going forward.

Mr. Trotter: When?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There is a budgetary item in the 1966 estimates which will be in the next fiscal year estimates for this.

Mr. Trotter: But sometimes these items—pardon me for being rather suspicious—just allow for the plans, and then the plans go on for a number of years. Can we have any idea from the hon. Minister when this building will actually be demolished? Second, what will be in its place?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I did have the timing on this. I cannot lay my hands on it just now.

I believe 1968 is the target date for its completion, and there is a budgetary item projected for each of the years till that time.

Mr. Trotter: By 1968 the present old wing should be torn down?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I would anticipate, Mr. Chairman, that the new hospital will be built around the old wing, and then the old building will be torn out.

Mr. Trotter: Will the new wing remain, like the front? You have a new front wing now which covers up the old wing, at the present time. The new one will stay, is that the case?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is right, Mr. Chairman. This is why the new one was put in the position it is now.

Mr. Trotter: When you build the new hospital that is planned, the new wing that is going to go up at 999 Queen Street, what type of hospital is it going to be? A community centre, or just a mental hospital? And how many beds?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid I cannot tell the hon. member that at the present time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, first I remind the hon. Minister that on February 8 in this House, that is several months ago, the hon. Minister first announced that this building would get underway in the year 1966. It is my understanding that all the architectural drawings have been made and, indeed, approved by Public Works. All we have to do is start turning the sod; so surely the hon. Minister would be able to inform this House as to what those architectural drawings include? How many beds do they include? What kind of treatment is envisaged?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, general psychiatric treatment, active treatment, outpatient, day care, night care centre, and a long-term unit as well. There will be no custodial care envisioned in the new hospital.

Mr. S. Lewis: I take it that the bed objective listed in this mental hospital's report, the bed objective of—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Total bed complement envisioned is 600 beds.

Mr. S. Lewis: Six hundred?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Four units of 150 beds each.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I say, Mr. Chairman, just by way of a smiling aside to myself—I probably share this little joke with myself and no one else—but, in your mental care for Metropolitan Toronto reports, your projected number of beds is 676, so we can deduct another 76 from that mythical total which was projected.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is losing sight of the fact that we have 100 in the new building, the most recently built addition.

Mr. S. Lewis: We have what?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: There are 100 beds in the new front of the hospital.

Mr. S. Lewis: I appreciate that, but we are talking about continuing treatment and acute-treatment beds. I still think, again, that there are peculiar discrepancies between bed projections and bed realities. Another fact, just to ask him while we are on this branch and while the hon. member for Humber (Mr. W. B. Lewis) is here—if the hon. member for Humber can lower the eminent newspaper which he is reading—I believe in this Legislature he said, not so long ago, that there would be, in the Scarborough Centenary hospital, an addition of 100 beds for a psychiatric unit. I want to tell the House that that is also considerably in excess of the number of beds which the OHSC says will be constructed as a psychiatric unit. Now again, somewhere there is a breakdown in figures in the report, and what the hon. Minister said, what the hon. member for Humber said—some of us studied his figures fairly carefully—and what is available from OHSC. That too, we will probe further as this debate goes on, but I am concerned about all these bed estimates.

My second question was going to be, Mr. Chairman, when will Toronto Ontario hospital be constructed? I take it that the hon. Minister has answered that aspect of it to his own satisfaction, if not to mine.

Well, then, Mr. Chairman, let me ask another question. What happens to the staff situation at St. Thomas Ontario hospital, Hamilton Ontario hospital, and London Ontario hospital, in view of the very marked decrease in numbers to be expected on July 1, 1965? Unless I am not interpreting them accurately, the superintendent in Hamilton said that on July 1, 1965, he would have nine psychiatrists in a hospital that should require 19 or 20. London would have seven full time in a hospital that would require a minimum of 15 to 17, and St. Thomas is in a similar state of attrition. Now, particularly in the case of St. Thomas and Hamilton, the ruling of the Royal college will rather adversely affect these hospitals, because they will not be able to be used for training facilities. What are the hon. Minister's immediate plans to overcome this gap? Obviously, psychiatrists are human beings, not supernatural objects, and they cannot possibly take the case load that this implies.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer the last question specifically. It is the first I have heard that the superintendent anticipated this drop in staff. The ruling of the Royal college will have no effect on St. Thomas whatsoever because this is not part of the teaching programme. I am advised that the ruling of the Royal college will have no effect upon it at all. There are occasions during the changeover at the end of the academic year, or the training year, when we have a drop in the number of our psychiatrists, and we anticipate it sometimes. But we also take the opportunity to recruit and we are constantly seeking to recruit new staff members. Whether we will get them or not, I am not in a position to say yet because I do not know, but every effort will be made to recruit the staff when we need it, if and when staff signify their intention to withdraw from our service.

Mr. S. Lewis: I may say that the figures I put are not new. They are—alas, I admit to repeating myself—a repeat of the figures I gave to this House last week. They were not challenged then, they have not been challenged subsequently, they come directly from the superintendents of the hospitals involved. I just do not know how a hospital that needs 20 psychiatrists and two administrative officers can possibly function with nine. I do not know how it is humanly possible, and I suggest to you that unfortunate things are imminent at Hamilton Ontario hospital unless the hon. Minister does something pretty vigorous about the personnel situation.

That leads me to my next point, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps these answers will not be forthcoming but I would like to hear at least what the hon. Minister says. We are at present, in the province of Ontario, graduating a maximum of three child psychiatrists a year. Three for the entire provincial needs. Is the hon. Minister aware of any effort in that direction, that specialty within the psychiatric profession?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that the course is open, bursaries are available, and if men and women do not wish to enter child psychiatry, I have still not devised any formula whereby they can be either enticed or induced or forced into this area.

Mr. Bryden: Do you ever think of salaries?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is apparently not an attractive area because these men are not going even into private practice. The salaries do not stop them, to answer my hon. friend who interjected, because they are at liberty to go into general practice.

I have to repeat, sir, that psychiatry is a post-graduate specialty supported better out of the public purse than any other branch of medicine, and if we cannot entice more people to go into it there must be some reason that is quite beyond a financial or a material one. The Queen's University in Kingston is now in co-operation with the department working on a programme of training for child psychiatrists, or specialists in child psychiatry. We hope that with the addition of this course to the one now in operation in Toronto, more may be attracted, but I have no reason to base that opinion on anything more solid than a hope.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to answer the member for Scarborough West, and may I ask him a question? Which hospital in Scarborough was he referring to?

Mr. S. Lewis: I believe it is the Centenary hospital.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: The Centenary? The original approval for this new hospital was 200 beds; present plans now show an approved capacity of 480 after-treatment beds, plus 44 psychiatric beds. It is planned to provide space for 152 active and fill 44 additional psychiatric beds in a shell as part of new construction. This hospital is in an advanced planning stage, tenders should be called early in 1965 with completion of the hospital for mid-1967.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine. I shall have to go back and check the Hansard and we will be debating this area after dinner tonight. I recall the difference between the 44 and the 100 and I will corroborate it in the House. At the moment my material is not with me.

Mr. Chairman, to pursue this for a moment, I would like now to ask the Minister about research in the field of mental health. He has spoken with great vigour about the need and relevance of research. He has made a submission on behalf of his department to the Hall commission which stressed in graphic terms the relationship of research to mental illness and mental deficiency. Yet, according to the recent submission by the Canadian psychiatric association, their report on research, it was noted that in the province of Ontario only 1.2 per cent of federal moneys granted for mental health were being used for research purposes—1.2 per cent.

Let me hasten to say, Mr. Chairman, that that exceeds the amount paid by many other provinces in Canada, whose efforts are even more deplorable. It is exceeded in its percentage only by the province of Saskatchewan, and in the past two or three years, the province of Quebec has been upping its amounts considerably. But I strongly suggest,

Mr. Chairman, that the Minister's words are necessarily a little suspect when the animated urgency about research is reflected in a 1.2 per cent contribution. I think we all agree on the importance of this. I was never more impressed myself than when I read some of the material. Can he reveal to this House any of his plans in regard to the field of mental health?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the figures the hon. member quoted are wrong. I do not know where he got them, but I state unequivocally that they are wrong. We have been using 10 per cent of grants for mental health research and this has dropped of late, my advisers tell me, to 7 per cent. But the 1.2 figure is completely wrong and I do not know whence it came.

Mr. S. Lewis: The figure is contained in the Canadian Psychiatric Journal in 1964, the report of the Canadian psychiatric association on the amount of money spent on research as part of the federal grant. Their words are very strong for a group of psychiatrists—exceedingly strong. I will get the report and send it to the hon. Minister or table it in the House. I probably have it in the mass of material with me. It says 1.2 per cent; I shall find the precise figure.

Mr. Chairman, another factor that I want to raise as we come to the end of this vote, is the question of economic and social class in relationship to mental health facilities. The hon. Minister has been wont to say on occasion that psychiatric illness can strike in a rather—how shall I say—in a rather egalitarian fashion; it can strike people of all economic and social structures; it does not discriminate between wealth and poverty.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, mental illness does so discriminate. A variety of surveys show that mental illness is far more prevalent in the lower income levels and that these are precisely the levels which are not served by the community facilities, sadly enough. I want to remind the hon. Minister of the book by Hollingshead and Redlich called Social Class in Mental Illness. I want to read a short piece of that book to the House because I think it might be of some interest to the hon. member.

Social Class in Mental Illness is often quoted, but not for its main point, a point so startling and so revealing of the character of much of our current mental health effort that one suspects its neglect can only be due to professional embarrassment and consequent repression of the disturbing facts.

Hollingshead and Redlich studied all persons receiving psychiatric treatment in New Haven, Connecticut, during a specific period, to find out what determined the kind of treatment they received.

One would normally make the simple-minded assumption that diagnosis would determine treatment; that what was done for a patient would be based on what was the matter with them. The investigators found no relationship between diagnosis and treatment. They studied other variables, such as age and sex, and found these unrelated to treatment.

The one variable related to type of treatment received was the socio-economic status of the patient. If he were from the lower socio-economic group, he received some kind of mechanical, inexpensive, and quick therapy, such as electric shock. If he were from a high socio-economic group, he received extended, expensive, talking-type psychotherapy. If the patient were not only affluent, but also a member of an old prestigious family, so situated in life that he bestowed honour on his helper, he received extended, talking-type psychotherapy, but at a discount.

The relationship between socio-economic status and type of treatment received was not manifested in private practice alone, but also evident in the treatment provided by clinics and other public supported agencies. Thus all the mental health professions are involved.

This is a rather interesting fact, Mr. Chairman. I do not pretend that it will galvanize the Legislature; but the fact is that the relationship between diagnosis and treatment related more to the socio-economic status of the patients involved, rather than to the psychiatric need, or to age, or to sex, or to any of the other obvious factors.

In the very recent past, Dr. Ryan, a noted eminence of the Massachusetts psychiatric centre—the institute for youth and children—came to Toronto and delivered a lecture discussing the relationship of social and economic class to mental health facilities. He came to the interesting conclusion, based on two studies in the state of Massachusetts, that the medical model such as prevails there and prevails here, does not lend itself to service of the lower income group. In fact, the lower income groups most in need of psychiatric assistance are discriminated against by the nature of the medical model. So there are a variety of studies available, I suggest, which imply that, again, the kind of model we are evolving is not of itself sufficient. It cannot demonstrate the community emphasis which is so important. It cannot weld those channels which are of particular consequence in relationship to socio-economic status.

I simply say, Mr. Chairman, that this should raise rather important and startling facts. I raise it now at this point in the Legislature, because I think it is worthy of analysis, some research and experimentation.

What, in fact, or how in fact, are mental health facilities now effectively coping with lower economic and social groupings, and are they effectively coping with such groupings? If they are not, how do you redefine the mental health model? I have seen no Ontario evidence of such studies and such efforts, and since it is becoming more and more marked that there is a breakdown between diagnosis and treatment, a breakdown which relates to economic status—I commend the thought and the analysis to the hon. Minister.

Will the hon. Minister reply?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, we are familiar with this work and we believe, and we have some evidence to believe, that the opinions of the authors have been questioned and quite widely questioned. However, this does not mean to say that they are wrong or invalid, or that they have any basis for it; but we have no such work that will either support or deny their opinions as far as Canada or Ontario are concerned, and I do not know of any work under way, or planned to be put under way, to support or deny their opinions. However, it is a very interesting thing and it offends one's professional sense that the treatment given to the patient is geared to the patient's material possessions. This might well be, but all I can say is that we are aware of the work and would be interested to know if it is going on here; and we will watch very carefully when any research is undertaken to try to prove, or otherwise, the validity of the statements here.

May I take this opportunity to reply to a question from the hon. member for Woodbine—two questions, rather—one started with the hon. member for Scarborough West. We believe now, from our calculations, that the 1.2 per cent quoted is not 1.2 per cent of the mental health grants, but 1.2 per cent of the total national health grants. This includes moneys for all health matters. The hon. member for Woodbine asked about the increase that was promised those at Oak Ridges; this was in their May 24 pay cheque.

Mr. Bryden: The information I had was prior to that date. You are still getting information on the other thing?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are still trying to get that.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, on this problem of doing some mental research—and I want to mention the research done by the national institute of labour education. This was done in the United States, it was not done in Canada; but many of the same problems still apply in Canada and one of them is the problem of the fact that the people in the lower economic groups in our society are not being reached in the matter of mental care.

It was found in the United States that those people who were in the upper income groups got much better treatment than those in the lower income groups; also the people who were earning more money were reached much sooner than those in the lower income groups. There is a greater fear—according to this survey made—among people who are in the so-called “poorer” groups, in the blue collar groups—of going to a mental health clinic.

There is less understanding of people who are harder-up financially in seeking treatment. In this survey that was made—and again I repeat, it is by the national institute of labour education—they say that up to the present time nine out of every ten psychotic individuals in lower income groups have been institutionalized and given protective or custodial care instead of active treatment. I do not intend to go into detail on their survey but it has been found that it is simply because of a lack of understanding among those who have a poor education. And it goes hand in hand that those who make less money also have poor education.

I would draw two things from this to the hon. Minister's attention, Mr. Chairman: Once again the need for outpatient services; and, even if we do have the outpatient services, there is a greater problem—the people in the lower income groups have a tendency not to use the outpatient facilities even if they are there, unless they are educated.

The people you need to assist in this programme are organized labour. They point this out on page 22—incidentally, this was not written by organized labour but by medical people who were financed, to some extent, by the labour movement. They say this:

Labour organizations have the machinery for reaching their membership on many questions and they have, in addition, thousands of union counsellors and others who have been trained over the years to function as liaison representatives between the shop and various kinds of union and community services. They are thus a key untapped resource for mental health education.

I would like to emphasize this point to the House, and to the hon. Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, because organized labour is a facility that we have not used. I have often complained before that I felt that our campaigns to raise funds, especially our boards that run our hospitals, are far too conservative. We have not used the facilities of organized labour as much as we should have, and I often feel that is so because—now this may come up in the next vote—our Ontario hospital services commission is as conservative as it is because we do not have any representatives of organized labour on it.

Here again in the question of mental research and the improvement of the lot of those people who are in the lower income groups, you are going to need organized labour, because the researchers point out that nine out of ten people who are in the lower income groups and suffer from some psychotic disorder end up in our institutions, which means a heavy burden on our taxpayers. The research—this particular one—also points out that people end up being institutionalized because they fear to go to any type of clinic that would give help. A lot of education is needed in this respect.

I would also respectfully submit to the hon. Minister that the facilities of organized labour be used more than they have in the past. The fact they would go to this expense, as they have in the United States, and show this interest is evidence that the labour movement knows there is a great problem here and they are willing to do something. Certainly here in the province of Ontario they are well organized and I would suggest that the labour movement in Ontario is open to provide any assistance that the hon. Minister asks of them.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have one short final question which the hon. Minister can answer quickly, probably before we go to public bills.

As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there is a committee presently involved in examining and rewriting all the legislation relating to mental health, rewriting much of The Mental Hospitals Act, rewriting much of the parallel and similar legislation. I have noted the name of a Mr. Barry Swadron from time to time in the newspapers. I know that much of their work relates to this matter of reviewing cases presently under some question in mental hospitals; I am wondering when might this Legislature expect some specific draft legislation on the basis of the work that is being done?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is correct. This was set up as a research project expected to last for two years. I expect the final report will be submitted to us about a year hence, about June, 1966. The study has been under way for a year now and it is believed that it will take two years of study. So I would expect the report one year hence.

Mr. S. Lewis: Will the hon. Minister be waiting until the final report before he introduces any legislation relevant to it or might we expect legislation next session?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is a question that I find difficult to answer, Mr. Chairman. We gave very serious consideration to bringing in one or two amendments, important amendments, this session, but we decided, in balance and on the recommendation of Mr. Swadron, we decided against it. I could only say to the hon. members that the same thinking will guide our actions for the next session. If his studies have progressed far enough that worthwhile amendments can be made or if he would advise us to wait until his study is completed—I think we will have to be guided by that rather than continue a patchwork of legislation. It might well be better in balance to wait for a completely new Act. I believe the Act will be completely rewritten.

Mr. Thompson: I want to ask the hon. Minister if he has a blueprint for a large industry as far as the kind of mental health prevention measures they might undertake? Does he give encouragement to a large industry, say, for example the Ford plant, on what approach they should take regarding mental health and alcoholism and this type of treatment?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, Mr. Chairman, we have no specific programme in this area, but this is undertaken in a very extensive way by the medical department of many large industries. If and when they seek consultative services from us these are made available to them, but we have no programme of this kind originating with the department.

Mr. Thompson: I ask the hon. Minister then: We know of situations such as at the Bell Telephone, where they have had very advanced classes in understanding of alcoholics and perhaps mentally disturbed people, trying to help them to overcome this, to rehabilitate themselves and come back again into the industry. Does the hon. Minister approve of this kind of thing being done by a particular industry and does he encourage it?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, we do indeed, Mr. Chairman. Our own foundation, as far as the programme the hon. leader of the Opposition has mentioned is concerned, has been very much involved. But strictly, again, on invitation; when they invite us to participate as consultants then we are quite readily available to them. I think every industry knows that we are willing and prepared to encourage this sort of thing and to assist them in whatever consultative area possible.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask: In view of the hon. Minister wanting industry to do this, what kind of an example does the department itself give, from the point of view of the treatment of alcoholics within the civil service, as well as mentally ill people?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the vote has already been passed; we maintain a very extensive health service for the civil service and we are just about to engage in discussions which I hope will lead to the establishment of a programme particularly aimed at dealing with alcoholism within the service. I do not know how widespread it is, but I have been told enough to cause me some concern about it. The foundation is being invited to review this matter and consider the advisability of setting up a model service within the public service. This actually was the aegis of the establishment of the public service health service that we operate through this department. Through it we try to practise preventive medicine, not only in respect of mental health but in respect of general health.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this is not under the vote, but I think the hon. Minister would agree with me that an underlying cause of alcoholism is often mental illness or insecurity. I think it would be of great interest to know the plans you have in this area. Are you going to wait to publicize this, because I had not known of it. I certainly would be very interested and I am sure many others would be.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The programme on alcoholism?

Mr. Thompson: Within the civil service itself; you may want to publicize it—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I stated, Mr. Chairman, that we have just been advised of the matter. One of my colleagues tells me that this department, for instance, has on occasion referred cases from his own department directly to the foundation. We have accepted this, but we believe now that the matter is of great enough importance that we have asked the foundation to consider the setting up of a model service within the public service, to see if the numbers involved are such that this is justified. If there are only scattered cases, such a programme may not be of any real value and the present pattern of each department referring them to the foundation may serve the purpose quite adequately.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the hon. Minister could tell us if the day-care centre, which was formerly open in Cobourg until Dr. Cormack left, is going to be opened. I understand some of the people in Cobourg have been in contact with your department and have not had very much satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the people who had contacted our department have been told what I must tell you, sir: As soon as a psychiatrist is available who can do this job, the centre will be reopened.

Vote 713 agreed to.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, are we going to proceed now to the other public bills and orders?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): We were just waiting until we found an opportune time to move, and I now move that the committee rise and report a certain resolution and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report a certain resolution and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we would like to call order number 66—and I might just say it was my understanding that orders numbers 66 and 67 were being debated together, if I could put it that way, and I believe the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) had completed some remarks.

Clerk of the House: The 66th order: Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill No. 33, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT (continued)

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, there are several aspects relative to Bill No. 33 which I would like to bring to the attention of the Legislature.

Bill No. 33, of course, is An Act to amend The Municipal Act. I might say, sir, that I awaited with interest to hear the reasons that might be submitted by the hon. member for Riverdale when he introduced this bill, and when he discussed it the other day when we adjourned the debate. As I suspected, sir, the reasons were in connection with a certain incident that took place in Metropolitan Toronto, surrounding a certain parade; and it had to do, of course, with the propriety, or otherwise, of certain signs or banners and also with the matter of a permit to hold such a parade.

The purpose of the bill would appear to be to transfer the powers of regulating such parades from boards of police commissioners to the councils of cities and towns. I would be the last one, sir, to argue against any move that would strengthen our municipal councils. In fact, I think that the process of what we refer to as fragmentation has taken place to a large degree, and we should do something to strengthen our municipal councils.

However, I do not believe this bill is a transfer back to council of any powers that they did have. In fact, section 403, which is mentioned in this bill, section 403 of The Municipal Act, empowers boards of police commissioners of cities to do certain things—and those things, of course, are to regulate parades, and so on. I think that section 403 of The Municipal Act was extended to boards of police commissioners of cities for a special reason. Municipal councils of towns are not included. And, as the bylaw itself has to do in section three with the regulation of parades, processions, and so on, to determine and prescribe their routes of travel within a city, and also to give direction to police constables for so regulating such parades, I think that the reason this section was passed must have been because there was a problem existing in large cities which did not exist in smaller towns to the same extent.

Apparently the thought in mind, in the words of the hon. member for Riverdale, is that they want to transfer the power from police commissions of cities to the councils of cities and towns. The reason is given that there is an infringement, according to Hansard, on the right of people to associate and parade in carrying out and putting before people views which they believed in and which they thought deeply about.

I question very strongly, sir, whether or not the transfer of the authority from a board of police commissioners to municipal council would in any way change the situation. Section 403, of course, as I said, extends the powers to boards of police commissioners rather than councils, simply because they are cities and there is a definite traffic problem there that does not exist in smaller towns. So, in the first instance, I do not believe this power at all should be transferred to small municipalities, such as towns, particularly to the councils, because it does not in any way become a problem in these towns.

In section 403, sir, section three says that bylaws may be passed for regulating parades or processions from time to time, as the occasion may require, for prescribing the routes of travel to be observed by vehicles during public processions or public demonstrations, and for giving directions to constables for keeping order.

The purpose of the bill would be, as it says in section two:

That paragraph three of section 403 of The Municipal Act is to be repealed and that it would be transferred to section 386 of The Municipal Act.

Section 386, of course, empowers councils of cities and towns to pass bylaws for certain purposes—which would be to regulate parades, to prescribe the time and the route, and to give direction to constables for keeping order.

I hesitate to think, sir, what would happen if the power was given to the councils of all of our towns and cities to direct the police departments as to how to regulate bylaw of the municipal council. I think this is something that is thoroughly within the purview of traffic control matters, which are preferably handled by the police departments. Rather than having councils endeavouring to regulate the parades, perhaps the regulation would include the matter of determining which signs would be desirable and whether or not a permit should be given for one particular parade or another.

I do not know if this is proper or not. But there is an implication in giving this power to council that there might be some political aspect to the thing. Surely we do not want council to be influencing which permits should be granted, or what sort of banners should be carried by a parade? It is purely a matter of regulating traffic. I do not feel, sir, that this is a problem which should be handled by municipal councils in either towns or cities, to prescribe the routes of travel, to regulate the parades in any way, shape or form, or particularly, to give direction to police constables how to so regulate them.

The same comment, sir, as was mentioned previously, would apply to Bill No. 34, which is a bill to amend the metropolitan Act pertaining to the same thing; and my comments apply in a similar manner to Bill No. 34.

Further, in connection with the penalties that could be imposed by the boards of police commissions, section 482 of The Municipal Act provides a means for the board of commissioners to impose fines for contravention of any regulations they might make in connection with parades. Section 486 goes further to provide powers to restrain any such contravention. In my view there is no real reason why this power should be so transferred; in fact I feel that it will not accomplish the purpose which is proposed in this bill. I would have to oppose this bill.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, despite the great respect I have for the hon. member for Waterloo South I just could not follow his reasoning. He is taking the usual line so often taken in these matters, that because it is on the statute books, it is a good thing. I am sure that the hon. member for Waterloo South will recall the question I directed at the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), a series of questions, relating to bylaws passed by boards of commissioners of police. We had quite an incident here in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto when a columnist of one of the large metropolitan dailies wanted to find out what bylaws were in existence which affected the public. He had a very difficult job and all the press joined in and agreed that there was no reason for any secrets being kept. The tenor of the hon. Attorney General's reply to my question, sir, was that in his opinion, in the opinion of the chief law officer of the Crown, there should be no bylaws affecting public conduct passed by boards of commissioners of police or any other body, that should be kept secret.

I fail completely to understand the reasoning behind delegating authority of this type to a body whose attentions are supposed to be directed to the administration of law and order. This is not a legislating body. The only reason, the only possible excuse that they should have power to legislate is insofar as it affects the discipline and the conduct of the police forces. But they are not elected officials, sir, they cannot be called to account and when they are going to stray into a field that affects public conduct, surely there is no more important part of our tradition of responsibility of Parliament that the people who pass laws should be responsible to the voters who put them there and empowered them to pass laws.

Under police commissions, you have one elected person who is ex officio a member of the commission, but the others are appointed. Very often it is a judge or a magistrate or other people approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Those people have no responsibility to any voters, to any electorate. They can do all sorts of things, as happened, as I say, Mr. Speaker, in Metropolitan Toronto where for the longest time they said, "It is none of your business what is in our bylaws."

I think this is wrong, I think this is a direct negation of our democratic principles. We hear so often from our hon. friends on the government benches—they cry "let us preserve local autonomy." If that means anything, surely it must mean "let the local elected officials determine what is going on in the municipality." And surely it should be the responsibility of the local councils to determine the rules and permission in regard to parades. If the voters do not like it, at the next election they can get rid of it. It is as simple as that. There is nothing complicated about it.

I fail to understand the tortuous process that the hon. member for Waterloo South goes through to justify this. He mentions the traffic regulation and that maybe it should not be allowed in towns. Surely the job of police forces in cities or towns or villages or counties or wherever we have police forces, is to maintain law and order. As the hon. member for Riverdale said, when he introduced both these bills for first reading, surely the police can be expected to maintain law and order in the municipalities for which they are responsible. That is their role. Their role is not to make a type of legislative decision that is referred to in these bills. For those reasons, sir, I find myself in support, in great support of these bills introduced by the hon. member for Riverdale. The arguments put forward contrary to these bills to my mind have no grounds at all, they make no impression at all; I do not think it is logical, and for those reasons, sir, I urge the House to support both of these bills.

Mr. J. H. White (London South) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE REMEMBRANCE DAY ACT, 1965

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North) moves second reading of Bill No. 55, The Remembrance Day Act, 1965.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, this bill, I think, gives proper honour to a day of which we are all very proud, and to the men who died in World War I and also World War II. It is merely an Act which I am asking the House to pass, and I think there are four other provinces which have passed it. This bill is drafted after a bill that has been passed in the Houses of four other provinces.

About five years ago, the federal Parliament passed an Act authorizing the provinces, if they wished, to take advantage of the fact that they could make this day a special day. That is about all there really is to the Act. I would urge upon hon. members the importance of voting for it; there is nothing obnoxious about it at all. It gives proper recognition, I think, to a day to which all of us ought to pay honour and homage as well as prayer. It closes certain types of business, of course, on that day.

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the sponsor of this bill has the very best of intentions. He wants to be certain that Remembrance Day and all its meaning is perpetuated and in this I am with him 100 per cent.

He feels, I am sure, that the very least we can do is to set aside one day a year in which to pay tribute to those fine men and women who gave all they had, their lives, in the defence of our way of life. He feels, perhaps, as many do, that there is a great danger of losing altogether this fine institution known as Remembrance Day. As evidence of this fear there has been a strong movement to cease to recognize it as a school holiday on the excuse that it will be better to keep the children in school on November 11 and use that day to implant in these young minds the true meaning and history of remembrance. Now, I cannot go along with that because in passing I might say that it has been my experience that excellent Remembrance Day programmes are held in the schools now. It does appear that we adults are being very remiss in our duties on Remembrance Day. But if it were a general holiday would we do any better? A great many of those who realize their responsibilities seem to manage to be present now at functions which mark this solemn occasion. There is a great doubt in my mind that any further appreciable number would present themselves merely because the day was declared a general holiday.

You cannot legislate to create an emotion or a feeling of responsibility. This is a matter of education. In the past several years in spite of great efforts by veterans' organizations, news media and schools, a large portion of the public has displayed an apathy toward Remembrance Day. In my opinion, this is indeed a sad commentary on our way of life.

Further, if we were to enact this bill, take a look at those who would be excluded from its effects. This bill, this holiday, would not apply to farmers, hospital staffs, pharmacists, hotel and restaurant staff, policemen, firemen, furnace tenders, watchmen, janitors, domestic servants, emergency repair people, shift workers in a continuously operating plant—such as almost all industries are in our area—railway workers, or those engaged in transportation in either goods or travellers, those caring for perishable products and live animals, those who sell bread and milk, those operating a plant as defined in The Milk Industry Act, or the distribution of its products, those who operate bakeries, process workers in meat plants, those whose job it is to see that electricity, gas, light or water are continuously supplied, those whose work is the conducting of commemorative or religious services, a broker when he is acting for clients with business outside the province, and actors or performers after one o'clock in the afternoon.

This certainly excludes a large segment of the population, yet it does not exclude them entirely, for section 4 states that:

Every employer carrying on or engaged in an industry to which section 2 does not apply—and these are the ones that I have just listed:

—shall, subject to section 5, relieve the employee in the industry from duty and suspend the operation of the industry for a period of three minutes at one minute before 11 o'clock—notice the time, it is precisely stated:

—at one minute before 11 o'clock in the forenoon of Remembrance Day.

Now section 5 merely says in effect that in circumstances beyond human control the Minister of Labour may grant a permit to carry on through this period of the day. So you see if you cannot stop at one minute to 11 you go to the Minister of Labour and get a permit which authorizes you to carry on at that time.

Besides this, there are penalties attached which allow for fines, upon conviction of anyone who contravenes any provisions of this Act, of up to $100 for an employee or $300 for an employer. So the employer must indeed allow the three minutes off duty, though the bill does not say to what purpose the three minutes are to be put by the employee. So at one minute to 11 o'clock: Does the engineer stop the train? Does the baker disregard his oven? Does the policeman stop his chase, or does the chased stop also? Does the process worker turn away from his dials, or the provider of produce interrupt his long-distance calls? No, indeed!

No one can say: "You will cease work, all work, at one minute to 11 o'clock upon pain of serious penalty," and then expect people to use the three minutes in reverent contemplation of those who sacrificed themselves for our country. The will to do this must be present in the individual. If it is, he will, at some time during the day, likely as near 11 o'clock as possible, spend a minute or two or three, or much more indeed, thanking God for the sacrifices that have been made for him; but only if his heart is right, not because it says so in section 4 of this bill.

Then I find that there is a penalty attached in any case to those exempted employers because section 3, subsection 5, states that unless you are a watchman, furnace tender or a janitor—and I do not see why these should be discriminated against—if you have to work on Remembrance Day and receive only the regular rates of pay for that day you have to be given equivalent compensatory time off, with pay, within 30 days. As you can see, of course, this does penalize this employer and it lays the ground for double pay for the holiday. I cannot see, for the life of me, the connection between double pay and the proper payment of respect to our heroes.

One other phase of this bill is important. Reference has been made to the fact that there is a federal bill which says that the provinces can pass a bill of this nature, but if we were to pass this bill, we would create a provincial holiday for something that is nation-wide in its implication. I believe that this bill is introduced in the wrong jurisdiction and properly belongs to the House of Commons, and indeed I think it belongs only in the House of Commons.

To sum up, I believe this bill is out of order here, and in any case it will not do what the sponsor wishes. I stress that it is right and proper and even the duty of each one of us, in whatever way we can, to pay tribute to our fallen heroes on Remembrance Day at least. Indeed, for whatever help it might be, I appeal to the people of Ontario to make a special effort in this respect on November 11 to attend functions, to stand up and be counted among those gathered to give heartfelt thanks that Canadians are capable of dying for our way of life.

A bill of this nature passed by the federal government might help to recognize officially such an important day as Remembrance Day, but as a bill it will do nothing to the hearts of our people. With the penalties involved and the large segment of people excluded from observing this day by legislation it seems to me to make almost a farce out of the solemn and deep and poignant meaning and spirit of Remembrance Day.

Something much better, much less confused than this bill is needed to accomplish the objectives of the sponsors. Whatever it is, when it is discovered I will be 100 per cent for it, but I cannot support this bill.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering why this bill is out of order. I do not see anything out of order about it at all. Notice was given and—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): I do not think that the hon. member meant it in that way. I do not think the bill is out of order in the order of this House. I do not think that is what he really meant.

Mr. Reaume: I want to say on this bill, first of all—

Mr. J. H. White (London South): You have spoken once.

Mr. Reaume: My hon. friend asked a question and I want to follow through on that. When my hon. friend started out I really thought he was for it and then he turned everything upside down. He apparently spent a week on that speech, finding out what is wrong with the bill. I want to inform him, and the House, too, that this bill was instituted and brought here to the House because I was asked to by members and officials of the legion and other branches of the veterans, and if they do not know the importance of this day as well as my hon. friend does, then I would like to know what the whole thing is all about.

I do not think we ought to make a farce of the bill. After all, five other provinces have passed this bill. Is this not the day on which we should at least pay some respect? I know as it is now many of the legion branches have banquets and services, and many of our folks attend services at the church of their own choice. This is all very well, but I think that the very passage of a bill such as Bill No. 55 will tend to bring some importance to this day and impress on the minds, not only of adults but the boys and girls of the province, too, just exactly what this day means. It will have, I hope, some effect on making people talk about it and go out and observe it.

I do not see anything wrong with the bill at all. I do not know whether my hon. friend is talking for the people over there or not, but I would urge upon you, if you can, to vote for the bill because there really is not—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member's further remarks are completely out of order.

Mr. Reaume: I thought that Mr. Speaker was the man who handled all that.

Mr. Speaker: I might say I thought perhaps I would allow the member for Essex North, as the sponsor of the bill, to say a few words the second time. I thought it was only going to last one or two minutes, though, and we have perhaps extended the time. If there are any further speakers on this bill, would they please proceed.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill. I believe, kindly, that the hon. member for Lambton West, if this had been a government measure, would have voted for it. But I do say, in a constructive way, Mr. Speaker, that in municipalities across the province, every first week in November, the mayor has to make a proclamation to enable the banks to close for Remembrance Day, and it is always a big hassle across the province in the municipalities in this regard.

I think that we have statutory holidays in effect if this bill were passed by this House, this would make Remembrance Day a statutory holiday.

Mr. L. Troy (Niagara): It is already.

Mr. Sargent: We have such days as Labour Day. Why is that one, more than Remembrance Day or why is May 24? Americans across the country think we are crazy, having May 24 as a statutory holiday, for some fine old red who lived over half a century ago.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): I am sure most people call her Queen Victoria.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is known as Commonwealth Day.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: We are talking about ways to shorten our work week. This is always a controversial subject across the province, and every hon. member of the government knows this is good legislation—especially like the hon. Prime Minister, who is a veteran and knows this is good business. The Legions want it, but because it was not sponsored by the government it is not a good idea. I think you should support good legislation.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this bill. When the hon. member who sponsored the bill showed it to me some time ago, I took it down to the Ontario command of the Canadian Legion and had the officers there look over the bill. They were very much impressed with it. It seems to me that possibly, outside of Christmas Day and Good Friday, November 11 is probably the most important day in the history of this country. I think it should be observed as a holiday. It is on the statute books as a statutory holiday. First of all, it was known as Armistice Day and then, later on, as Remembrance Day; but it is just a statutory holiday, with no penalty at all if it is not observed. I do not know which provinces have Remembrance Day as a real holiday. I believe the province of Manitoba has. I do not know of any others.

Mr. Reaume: Nova Scotia.

Mr. Troy: Nova Scotia? Well, that is very fine, because the Maritime provinces have always been cradles of liberty; it is good that at least one of them observes this day as a real holiday.

I know, in my own area, we have certainly—almost thousands turn out for the Remembrance Day services. The school in which I was a teacher for many years, on the day before Remembrance Day, probably has the most impressive service you could find anywhere in this country.

As I say again, I certainly strongly support this bill of the hon. member for Essex North.

I can recall the days when the Ontario Northland railway had a band—and this was a statutory holiday in the country—and we could not get the bandmen off. They were not allowed to be free for that time and they lost their wages; so we had to pay for the band to play for us. The chairman of the commission was a distinguished soldier, the government supported the idea of Remembrance Day, but still they would not decree that their people could be free on that day, without somebody else having to pay the shot. I think it is certainly very definitely necessary that, in some way, this great day of November 11, which recalls that great day of November 11, 1918, should be made a real holiday—and not what it is now, just a farce across the country.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, we, in the New Democratic Party, support the principle enunciated in this bill. We feel that because it is the first of this type of legislation introduced into the Legislature, providing for a statutory holiday in a sense, it would need a lot more draftsmanship to make it workable. But certainly, if we are going to remember the devastations and tragedies of wars, we have used the day, November 11, to remember. I feel that the Legions are right in putting forward this kind of a request, because they are the ones who perpetuate the fullest remembering of the days gone by.

I do not know myself whether legislation providing for a holiday will add to the solemn ceremonies that take place. I think it would, in the case referred to by the hon. member for Nipissing, remove some of the chaos in making arrangements for the ceremonies. I was a little bit confused by the hon. member for Lambton West, who opposed the principle of the bill and then ended up saying it should be a matter for the House of Commons, that they should bring in legislation. It does not make sense to oppose something and then say that some other jurisdiction should look after it.

Nevertheless, several of the local unions in the province of Ontario have been able to negotiate Remembrance Day as an added statutory holiday. The problem we are finding is that management—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, they get a premium if they have to work, and this is the problem. I do not know just how much the Remembrance Day statutory holiday is used as one to remember the tragedies of wars, when management does not take it very seriously and insists the wheels must turn in industry. If they are willing to pay the premium the men take the money instead of the time off. I think we have to take a real look at the drafting to make it really work and make it applicable to the times. Nevertheless, we do support the principle of a day off for Remembrance Day.

Mr. White moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

THE MINORS' PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Reaume moves second reading of Bill No. 65, An Act to amend The Minors' Protection Act.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, this bill as it is now does not allow children or young folks under the age of 18 to go into billiard halls; and, of course, the billiard hall of today is much different to the old-time pool halls, as we used to call them. If you notice, in practically every area of the province, the billiard hall now is really a fancy place; it is an academy. I have had the opportunity—I am not a pool player actually myself, or of billiards—but I have visited, in Windsor, in London, in Guelph, Brantford and here in Toronto, many of these billiard halls and they are a far cry from what they were in the old days. Certainly I can see nothing wrong with a young man or woman aged 16 or over, going in with their friends. If you have visited these halls you will have noticed that there are many of these young people going in there now. Actually there is nothing obnoxious about the bill; it only reduces the age from 18 to 16. Again I would ask hon. members to kindly pass this bill—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Reaume: Well, I guess that is the idea behind it, yes.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I must say that until now I have led such a sheltered existence that I do not even know what a bagatelle room is. I do have some limited knowledge of the games of billiards and pool, however. I will readily confess that my skill in those games is exactly zero, but at the same time I do regard them genuinely as games of skill. I think they are good games. I am not skilful at them myself but I think they are good games for people to play, young or old.

Unfortunately, the nature of pool halls in the past has been such as to create certain rather unpleasant associations, and the legislators of the past in their wisdom decided that it was desirable to exclude young people from such places. That did not relate to the nature of the games being played in them, and I think the answer to the problem is not to exclude people under a certain age from these establishments but to ensure that the establishments are properly conducted so that the games played in them can become genuine recreation for people who are interested in that type of recreation. This can be done through municipal licensing policy. Municipal authorities are moving in that direction.

This, I believe, is the answer to whatever problem or residue of problem there may be with regard to billiard rooms and pool rooms. Nobody suggests that young people should be excluded from bowling alleys. I see no reason why they should be excluded from properly run billiard rooms and pool rooms. We will certainly go along with the rather modest legislative proposal that is now before the House; in fact we would be prepared to go further and say that if a proper licensing policy was adopted in municipalities with regard to these establishments, the minimum age should be eliminated altogether.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, not very often in the last month have you had three speakers from three different parties getting up and agreeing fairly well on any particular bill. I would like to say that I also have visited billiard rooms around the country. There are some of them to which I would say there would be no objection whatsoever for boys and girls even down as far as 12, 13 or 14 years of age to go and play billiards or pool or snooker or whatever game they want to play. There is no question about it, it is a game of skill, and I do not think proficiency at playing billiards is a sign of a misspent youth the way it used to be.

Many of the billiard rooms that you visit now are clean, they are well supervised, have excellent facilities, they are operated in very fine surroundings and there is no rowdiness. There is nothing at all wrong with boys and girls at the age of 16 going in to play in these billiard rooms. I understand that they are licensed by the municipality and, on inquiring if they are supervised to any extent by the municipalities, I find that some are and some are not.

Unfortunately, there are other billiard rooms that are not quite up to the standards of the ones which have recently been built and I do not think that they are the kind of place that you would like a boy or girl 16 years of age to enter.

It would seem to me that before such a bill as this is passed, there are three or four things that should be done. First of all, I think these billiard academies or rooms should have standards established. If they live up to these standards or comply with these standards, then young people should be allowed to play there when they are 16. I think in some of them, much better supervision should be maintained by the licence authorities. I think there should be some consideration given to a time limit for a 16-year-old, or if you want to lower it, a 15-year-old. He or she should leave at 11 p.m., because I think there are occasions when these billiard academies can be open much longer than that.

I feel there is not too much wrong with this legislation, but I do feel that probably a good thing would be to have the association, if there is an association, get together with government officials to try to iron out some standards which a billiard academy would have to maintain, along with time limits and anything else that would help to put all billiard rooms in the same category as some of these newer ones which are being opened at the present time. I feel that billiards is a fine game, I think it can provide a very valuable form of recreation for our young people, but I would suggest that before such a bill is passed, there should be a little more thought given to make sure that the standards and any of the regulations that can be put into the bill are such that would help to see that all billiard rooms have the same standard as some of the better ones have at the present time.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing for one in the Opposition to sit and hear a government member almost support a bill that comes from the Opposition.

I would say this: Being the sportsman that he is, the hon. member for Kingston, also working on the select committee on youth, understands the problem that youngsters 16 years of age and even younger will go to pool rooms regardless of the deplorable condition of some of them. They just have a way of getting in and I realize that they should not. I liked the comment of the hon. member for Kingston when he said that some of them should be cleaned up. We should not penalize the ones who are keeping their places well maintained by not allowing youngsters to go in there. I have no boys, but my eldest daughter has a pool table in her basement—can you imagine such a thing?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): I can. The proper place for children to learn the game.

Mr. Bukator: And the wealthy people—such as the last man who interjected there, the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management can afford to put a pool table in their cellars. He has the means, from what I gather, but these youngsters who are 16 have not got the recreation centres that you speak of, and this would be a good place to know at least where they are.

Management should be made to brush up. I know that the former Minister of Labour has often said that he spent some time in a pool room, and I tell you that the only fault that I could find with that man is that he always beat me in the game of Russian billiards. He was an expert and he said that that was one of the few games in which, when your opponent makes a good shot, you pay him. You do not see that in many games of sport that we take part in. If some of you members of the government who find yourselves at your wits' end, let us say, and almost a nervous wreck after a long session like this, just go down to the park commissioners' quarters and go up into that penthouse, you will find one of the finest pool tables that you ever played on! You see, the commissioners work so hard and they have to relax. If the weather is bad and they cannot get out on the golf course, they go up to the pool room.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bukator: The hon. Prime Minister asked me a question and I want to answer it. The only fault I found with it is that of all the commissioners that were there, I beat them all but the Minister himself, and the chairman of the parks commission. That is, I guess, because he has been chairman since 1943; he had a lot of time to practise—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: —and I was only on the commission for six consecutive years.

I might say this to you, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the rowdiness that you do see around a pool room, if management of those particular institutions would bring them up to standard and take the green curtains off and put a little more light into the place it would improve.

This is not a bad bill. I do believe, in supporting the bill today, that if it does not come into effect when we prorogue here and have Royal assent to all these bills, I am sure that the government will bring in a bill another year that will bring this into existence. We will know where the youngsters are.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Troy: Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of this bill. I am very glad to see that the hon. member for Kingston, who is chairman of the youth committee, also supports it.

Knowing something of what these academies are nowadays, I see nothing wrong in reducing the age to 16. I am certainly—

Mr. Apps: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to point out, sir, to the hon. member for Nipissing, that I said I thought this was a good bill provided there should be time given so that the proper investigation should be undertaken in order to help bring the ones that are not so good up to the standards of the ones that are good. I think that if that is done—and I would suggest that that should be done during the coming year—there would be no objections next year to bringing in a bill that would do that job, so that one would not be discriminated against when someone else has not such a good billiard room.

That was my statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Troy: Thank you for correcting me.

I think if you pass the bill, then, all these other things can come through the regulations or be established afterwards. It seems to me that parents would rather see their youngsters in the billiard academies that they have now than in the theatres where some of the adult pictures are shown. I think it would be much better for them playing this game of chance rather than a game of mischance.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to give the hon. member for Woodbine lessons, providing he brought his wallet along with him.

But to be serious for a moment, there have been billiard tables in the YMCAs in Metropolitan Toronto for the last 15 or 20 years. I believe there is a place for billiard rooms, as we know them now, the new ones. I agree with the hon. member for Kingston, but again I would say we must tread very slowly because there are many billiard rooms across this province that you would not want your children in at present.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant) moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, June 15, 1965
Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 15, 1965

Estimates, Department of Health, Mr. Dymond, concluded	4207
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4235
Appendix "A"	4236

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Clerk of the House: The 56th order. House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH (continued)

On vote 714:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, this vote, which relates to the hospital services commission of Ontario, naturally covers a very broad field. One of the subjects which falls within the scope of the vote is that of hospital accommodation and hospital construction. This is a subject that is of particular interest to me, as I imagine it is to all residents of the Metropolitan Toronto area, because of the particular problems which have arisen in this field in this area, over the past decade. I want to take a little time now, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the problem as I see it at the present time.

Part 5 of the study by the committee for survey of hospital needs in Metropolitan Toronto, published in May, 1963, revealed a serious shortage of hospital accommodation in the Metro area. One would have thought that this urgent warning would have galvanized the government into action to remedy the situation before it became desperate. Unfortunately, this has not been the case.

Instead of acting to increase the hospital construction planned in 1963, the government has resorted to its old trick of creating an illusion of activity by announcing the same projects over and over again, and by announcing projects for which there are no definite plans at all.

The term "housing by headlines" has often been applied to government housing policies. "Hospitals by headlines" can be applied with equal validity to its hospital construction policies. A programme of "hospitals by headlines" unfortunately does not produce the hospital accommodation that is urgently needed in the Metro Toronto area. It does, however, allay public alarm. Politically, no doubt, this is all the government requires. The full impact of the hospital crisis in the Metro area will not be felt until after the next provincial general election, whenever that may be. Presumably the government hopes to get over the election by its "hospitals by headlines" policy. When the public finds out the real truth, it will be too late to do anything electorally, or so the government hopes.

Indeed, the government seems to have mesmerized even the survey committee. In part 13 of its study, issued in May of this year, as compared with its original study of hospital needs in Metro Toronto of May, 1963, the committee, said, and I am quoting:

With the large amount of hospital accommodation now being planned for Metropolitan Toronto, it will soon be possible to provide enough public hospital beds to meet the legitimate needs of this area. This is in sharp contrast to the situation when part 5 of this study relating to active treatment hospitals was prepared in the early spring of 1963.

Mr. Chairman, I for one would like to see some solid evidence of this joyful conclusion. Unfortunately, the survey committee presented none. It merely made a bald statement without any supporting evidence at all. It did not undertake any sort of comparison of the disturbing facts revealed in its 1963 study with current facts. Such a comparison would, I believe, have revealed little, if anything, now being done or forecast, which was not forecast in 1963, and which the committee at that time found to be completely inadequate.

To demonstrate that this is true, I will now do what the committee failed to do; that is, I will compare the facts presented in the 1963 report with current facts. I will confine my attention to active treatment beds in general hospitals, including beds for both children and adults, but not bassinets for the newborn babies. I will not include beds for psychiatric treatment or for the treatment of alcoholics—not because I consider such beds to be unimportant, but because their inclusion complicates the analysis without changing the essential picture.

Before I get into the specific figures as they were reported in 1963, and as we now have them in the latest available published information, I might indicate, Mr. Chairman, that any sort of meaningful statistical analysis, with regard to figures published about the hospital situation in Metro Toronto, is difficult. As far as I can make out, those who announce figures from time to time are engaged in the old-fashioned game, "Button, button, who's got the button?" It is almost impossible to harmonize one set of official or quasi-official figures with any other set. They just cannot be made to fit entirely. So one has to do the best one can, with the figures available. In approaching this matter, I have worked on the principle that, wherever possible, I would give the benefit of the doubt to the government and the hospital services commission.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Oh, I am sure you will do that.

Mr. Bryden: But I would emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that considerable doubt arises. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) smiles at that comment. He is well aware that I always give the government the benefit of the doubt.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Smile when you say it.

Mr. Bryden: As a general rule, there is not much doubt that what it is doing is wrong. Here there is doubt only with regard to the specific interpretation of the statistics; and on that I have given the government the benefit of the doubt.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Kindness we can do without.

Mr. Bryden: In its 1963 report, the committee found that there was an existing deficit of 2,300 beds at that time, and that the need would increase by 1,570 beds by 1970. Thus a total of 3,930 beds would have to be constructed between 1963 and 1970 if the full need was to be met in the latter year. That was essentially the finding of the survey committee in 1963.

The committee then reviewed all the plans that were then being considered for the construction of hospital accommodation in this area. It took the most optimistic view possible—that is where I picked up the habit—of these plans and included a total of some 200 to 300 beds which have, in fact, not matured. Even on this highly optimistic view, it found that the total number of beds to be constructed between 1963 and 1970 would be only 2,759, leaving a deficit of 1,171.

The committee viewed this projected deficit with concern. It noted that the need will continue to grow during the 1970s and that if we enter this period—that is the period between 1970 and 1980—with a deficit, it will be virtually impossible to keep abreast of the increasing need.

The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) made no specific reference to hospital accommodation in the Metro Toronto area when he introduced his estimates. He made some general sort of statement about the province as a whole, but nothing specific that I can recall, or that I noted in rereading his speech, with regard to this area where we all know the problem has been most difficult.

The most recent public analysis of the situation, therefore, was that provided by the hon. member for Humber (Mr. W. B. Lewis), who is a member of the hospital services commission, in his speech in the Throne Speech debate on February 3, 1965, which appears in Hansard for this year, at pages 246 to 247.

At first sight, the hon. member's statement is most encouraging. If one adds up all the projects listed by him as completed since 1963, under way or planned, one arrives at a total of 4,441 beds—substantially more than the 3,930 the survey committee said would be needed between 1963 and 1970. That is what it sounded like as we listened to it when he presented his statement in the House, and it was not until we had a chance to analyze it that we found that the true situation was a little different.

A little analysis reveals the hollowness of the hon. member's brave statement. In actual fact, the situation is little, if any, better than it was when the survey committee studied it, and I will give my reasons for that assertion:

First, the hon. member included 221 psychiatric beds, and 50 beds for the treatment of alcoholics. These are unquestionably desperately needed, but they will not in any way help to relieve the shortage of general active treatment beds. They will be needed for psychiatric purposes and for the treatment of alcoholics; they will not relieve the shortage of general treatment beds—active treatment beds—which the survey committee said in 1963 would amount to 1,171 by 1970.

Second, the hon. member included 550 active treatment beds in Sunnybrook hospital which are being made available for public hospital purposes. I do not know if that arrangement has yet been completed; but, whether or not, it is on the way—there is no doubt about that. And that, according to the hon. member for Humber will make 550 active treatment beds in Sunnybrook available for general public purposes in Toronto. That is fine, Mr. Chairman, except that the survey committee, in its gloomy review of 1963, included in its calculations 887 beds in Sunnybrook that were in actual use, and an additional 100 beds that it thought could be put into use; thus the 550 that are to be made available to the general public are not an addition to the stock that the survey committee was already taking into account. In fact, it is a smaller number than the survey committee was taking into account. If anything, the figure indicates that the situation is worse than the survey committee contemplated, rather than better.

Mr. White: Oh, you are not giving us the benefit of the doubt now.

Mr. Bryden: I am indeed. I said "if anything, the figure indicates that the situation is worse." I did not positively assert that it is worse, I just said that it would appear that way—I was really straining to give you the benefit of the doubt at that point.

Third, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Humber included four projects totalling 1,000 beds which are hardly more than gleams in their sponsor's eye. For example, the hon. member himself said of the proposed 120-bed extension of Grace hospital that "there is no planning for this expansion at the present time." Now that 120 is part of his 4,441 total. Of the proposed Etobicoke hospital, all he could say definitely was that "a provisional board has been set up," and of the proposed Fenway hospital he said that "discussions have been held regarding development of a public hospital of up to 500 beds."

Mr. Chairman, I am tired of discussions. Until we have something more than discussions, I am not prepared to include those 500 beds in the total. I have prepared a table showing a breakdown of the survey committee's figures—that is, the figures which they introduced in the 1963 report—set beside those presented by the hon. member for Humber. I am not going to read that table now because as everyone knows it is almost impossible to follow a table when it is read, but I will table it as an appendix to Hansard (see Appendix A). Anyone who studies it will find, I think, that it shows that the true net increase in general active treatment beds, as disclosed by the hon. member for Humber, is not 4,441, but 2,841. I am now talking about the net increase in beds, going back to 1963 and carrying it forward to 1970. This figure of 2,841 compares with 2,759 new beds that the survey was counting on in 1963, when it concluded that the situation was close to desperate. You see, the hon. member for Humber was not announcing necessarily new projects; he was announcing, in revised form, the same project as the survey committee had been taking into account with some very vague additions. I admit that there are one or two true additions to compensate for some very optimistic figures that the survey committee had included, but the only real additions were based on faith and hope, rather than on anything concrete.

If you take it right down to what is actually disclosed as either having taken place or likely to take place between now and 1970, one could say that the figure of the hon. member for Humber was 2,841 as compared to 2,759 that the survey committee figured on. Thus, the anticipated 1970 deficit is to be reduced from 1,171 to 1,089. That is by about 82.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if that is what leads the survey committee to conclude in the sycophancy of its more recent report, that "it will soon be possible to provide enough public hospital beds to meet the legitimate needs of this area." I would also like to ask if that reduction of approximately 80 in the anticipated deficit is what the government regards as a realistic attack on the problem.

Last year, the government increased the provincial grants for hospital construction and also provided provincial loans. Yet, when grants from all levels of government and the provincial loans are taken into account, 20 per cent of the cost of hospital construction, or about $4,000 per bed in this area, still has to be raised from private charity. This is an outmoded concept. Experience to date indicates that it will not work.

If we are to avoid a serious shortage of hospital accommodation in Metro Toronto by 1970 and an even worse shortage by 1980, the federal, provincial and municipal governments together are going to have to cover the whole cost of constructing and equipping new hospitals and hospital extensions. Moreover, the basic initiative, at this stage, will have to come from the provincial level. The OHSC should immediately set up an agency to take overall responsibility for hospital accommodation in the Toronto area. It would be the responsibility of this agency to ensure both that the accommodation available in the area as a whole is adequate and what is equally important—although I have not had time to go into it at this stage—to ensure that that accommodation is properly distributed among the various regions in the area.

The survey committee, in part 20 of its report, recommended the establishment of a "co-ordinating council" in Metro Toronto. This is essentially what I am proposing here, but my proposal differs from the survey committee's in two respects:

1. The council should be financed by the OHSC, so that it will have a secure financial base and will not have to dissipate its energies going around with a tin cup—which is what the survey committee suggested;

2. It should not be a purely advisory body as the survey committee apparently envisaged. We have already had enough talk about the hospital problem in Metro Toronto; it is now time for action. The council should naturally consult with hospital boards, municipal authorities and other interested parties, but in the last analysis, it should, in my opinion, have clear-cut authority to act.

I have one further note on this point, Mr. Chairman. I would suggest that if, as a result of the forthcoming Goldenberg report, overlapping of municipal authority in Metro Toronto should be significantly reduced, I would propose that the council I am talking about should become an agency of the Metropolitan Toronto council. In the meantime, however, the OHSC should get the ball rolling by setting it up for the present as a provincial agency. I do not think we can wait for Goldenberg's report and then for the implementation of whatever proposals may be contained in that report. I believe that we have to move in and do a lot more than has been done up to now in meeting this crisis that the survey committee envisaged back in 1963.

It is, I suggest to the hon. Minister and to the House, a crisis that continues to exist. There has been a certain amount of progress made but such progress has, shall I say, merely compensated for the padding in the survey committee's estimates of 1963. When one takes the net figures, one finds that the reasonable anticipation of the deficit of hospital beds in 1970 is not significantly different from that which the survey committee indicated in 1963. I would, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, remind the House that the survey committee regarded that anticipated deficit as having the character of an emergency.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on vote 714. I am just pursuing the remarks made by my hon. friend about the hospital situation, but at this time I would like to talk about the hospital situation in the Ottawa area.

I would like the hon. Minister to inform this House about the plans he has, or the OHSC has, for the construction of additional facilities for hospital beds in the Ottawa area. Mr. Chairman, the Ontario hospital services commission published a report dated December 16, 1964, which made very specific recommendations in this respect. If my information is accurate nothing has been done to implement these recommendations six months after the report has been published.

I know it will take some years before these recommendations are fully implemented. I believe, however, the plan of action should be told to all interested parties. The hon. Minister is well aware of the fact that one of the big problems is the need to provide teaching facilities in connection with Ottawa University medical school.

I would like to read into the record a paragraph which specifies the roles of the hospital in Ottawa and I quote:

In addition to the national defence medical centre, two other hospitals, the Ottawa civic hospital and the Ottawa general, are university-teaching hospitals. These hospitals have special need to subserve their teaching functions and these will be assessed in the light of the recent provincial announcement regarding assistance to medical schools and teaching hospitals. The assessment is not dealt with in detail in the study.

Mr. Chairman, as several hospitals are involved, together with the Ottawa University medical school, would it be too much to expect the Ontario hospital services commission to set up a committee to study the needs of the area? I would also suggest that in view of the urgency of the problem that this be done without delay.

To prove my point about this matter, I would like to quote a news item appearing in the Ottawa Journal on March 11, 1965. This was in connection with a speech given to the Ottawa Richelieu club by Dr. J. J. Laurier and was headed in the Ottawa Journal of that date: "Needed—Hospital Help." I will not read the entire report, but I think there are parts of this report which should be read into the record. They begin this way:

Before even thinking of building new hospitals in Ottawa, the city should think of subsidizing all existing hospitals, not only the civic. Municipal grants could help in getting better utilization of existing hospital beds in this city.

This goes along with the remarks made by the previous speaker about having to obtain funds through charity to build hospitals or to increase their facilities.

So said Dr. J. J. Laurier, medical director of the Ottawa general hospital, Wednesday, before the Richelieu club.

Dr. Laurier said the cost of a children's hospital was much higher than the $20,000 to $30,000 per bed cost of construction of a general hospital. He said the public should seriously consider advantages of aiding financially all hospitals before going ahead with the advance of millions of dollars spent on new hospitals.

There are two or three paragraphs that I would like to read here:

Dr. Laurier suggested a campaign aimed at a better utilization of existing hospital beds which could drastically reduce the burden of taxes. There is no reason, he said, why the bed occupancy in Ottawa should drop on weekends from 100 per cent to 80 per cent. What we need is a seven-day-a-week hospital occupancy 365 days a year.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I have said enough about this matter. I am sure that the hon. Minister would like to give me some explanation, and give this House some explanation, about what is going on in the Ottawa area regarding construction of new hospital beds and construction of new facilities in existing hospitals.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, in attempting to answer the hon. member I shall try to deal first of all with the state of hospital construction in Metro Toronto.

I am not even going to attempt to sort out the difference between the figures given by the hon. member for Humber and the hon. member for Woodbine. I will simply outline the actual figures, which will be the net increase in the number of beds which will come about from building that is now under way, planning that is either out for contract or is approved by the commission and the dates on which these additional beds are likely to be made available for actual use within Metro Toronto.

Wellesley hospital 327 beds in 1966, this will increase the capacity of Wellesley to 586. In 1967 Toronto Western will add 80 beds to bring it to 862. Women's College hospital will add 152 beds to bring it to 411. North York General will build 518 beds, completely new. York General will build 200 beds, completely new. Scarborough General will add 240 beds to bring it to 580 beds. Scarborough Centenary will build 480 beds, new. Baycrest will build 93 beds, new.

In 1968 Sunnybrook will add 550 beds to bring the total to 1,437. Now it is understood there that on a certain number of those beds veterans will be given prior claim to their use, but that does not mean to say that the beds will be left standing vacant. I am quite sure that my hon. friend knows the procedure that is followed in the case of workmen's compensation.

Mr. Bryden: It was taken into account by the survey committee.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: But the 550 beds are completely new, they are not there now. The 887 are.

Mount Sinai will add 181 beds to bring it to 554. Northwestern General will add 100 beds to bring it to 348. Grace hospital will add 110 beds to bring it to 229. The Central hospital will add 102 beds to bring it to 175.

Fenway General hospital has just been given approval to build 300 beds, completely new. In 1969 Etobicoke will build 425 beds, completely new. Humber Memorial will add 100 beds to bring it to 413.

This, according to my rather questionable mathematics, Mr. Chairman, amounts to 3,958 additional beds. According to our—

Mr. Bryden: How many again?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That was 3,958, you had better check my addition because I added it rather hurriedly and I did not have a computer.

According to our relation of the total beds then available in Metro Toronto to the projected population, there should be a statistical surplus of 530 at least. I think that the confusion in the Sunnybrook figure was that the survey considered there were 887 available now, the additional 550 will be completely new beds.

The co-ordinating council, which the hon. member mentioned, is already in process of being established. It will be financed in the first instance by OHSC as I announced in this House on March 17. What its future will be may very well be dependent, in some measure, upon the report that comes before government relative to affairs in Metro Toronto. But we believe that this is a sound principle and we accepted this recommendation. Indeed, I believe we discussed this recommendation when we were questioned by the survey committee, as the staff of the OHSC had been advocating this regionalization for some time—and actually have regionalizing projects underway throughout the province of Ontario, in certain areas of hospital administration and service.

Mr. Chairman, relative to the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa East, I would say to him—and I am quite sure he knows the hospital situation in Ottawa has been under study: They asked the commission to make a study of the existing hospital facilities and the needs, and the report of that study, it is expected, will be submitted to the city council who asked for the report, in the very near future.

At the present time, we believe there should be, and we will be recommending that there should be, a university hospital of 400 beds as a part of the health sciences centre. I think my hon. friend will have knowledge of, and appreciate, some of the difficulties inherent in this until very recently. All of these have, of course, disappeared now.

Riverside is being built, as I am quite sure he knows. It is on schedule, within a matter of a month or so, and will provide 300 new beds. Ottawa Civic, I think he also knows, has been given the approval for 75 additional children's beds. The Ottawa General is in discussion with us, I believe, at the present time, relative to a very large programme of renovation and updating of services. There are very extensive gaps in the service areas and these are to receive a good deal of attention. I have it now on good authority that the Salvation Army's Grace hospital is likely to begin building this fall, will increase its capacity from 75 beds to 200, and will become a general hospital.

As far as the seven-day week is concerned, this is a matter that concerns a great many people in the hospital business. I have often said that people do not get sick on schedule; they cannot. But, nevertheless, we encourage the utilization of the hospital over seven days.

Now, this is the responsibility of the board; we cannot order them to do it, and they do not seem to find it possible to put in a seven-day schedule, other than for emergencies on Saturdays and Sundays. But this is the privilege and responsibility of the board and the only response it would get from us would be hearty encouragement.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister: How can he expect the hospital boards to operate seven days a week when, in actual fact, the OHSC does not allow them to use the wage shift differential for nurses? I know that the OHSC says, "We let the board decide what they want to do." But the truth of the matter is that, in its budget, the OHSC allows only so much money for the nurses' wages. If they spend it on the wage differential for an evening shift, or for a weekend shift, it means the hospital board has that much less money to spend on the nurses during the regular shift.

The wage shift differential, I believe, is used in Saskatchewan, in British Columbia, and in Quebec—and I think it is used in about 94 per cent of the public hospitals where nurses are working in the United States, and yet here we insist that the wage differential cannot be used. This is in the actual operation of the OHSC; the use is stopped. Technically, you say they can do it, but in fact they cannot, and I would like to know why the OHSC turns such a blind eye.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, it is most interesting to listen to the hon. member, but I do not believe that the refusal to use a shift differential is stopping the seven-day week. But I will say this: If my hon. friend can bring proof to me that this is so, I will guarantee to him that we will take another long look at this and probably change our ways; but he has got to be able to prove to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is the reason why the hospitals are not on a seven-day week. And I am quite certain he will find I am right and he is wrong.

Mr. Trotter: There are some hospitals in this area which want to expand. True, they cannot start anything new and do it in a mass form, but at least they should try a pilot project; and some hospitals wanted to try it. It is simply common sense. You run a hospital just like a plant. It is there seven days in the week, and the main reason they cannot operate it is the need for the nurses, and also other staff, to work on weekends. Obviously you have to do something to encourage people to work on Sundays and Saturdays, or in the evenings, when they normally do not want to do it. Certainly, there are hospital boards in this province which have been turned down flat; and one of them is right in the Toronto area.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is not so. I say this unequivocally. We are quite prepared—I will say this to you, sir, publicly and in front of the hon. members of this assembly—if any hospital board comes to us and says they want to try this on an experimental basis, to go along with it. This is the opportunity for them to rise to the offer.

Mr. Trotter: I am glad to hear you say this, because I have raised this either in committee or in the House.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We sat across the table from that board.

Mr. Trotter: This is the first time I have heard you say that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: My people sat across the table from that board and did not—

Mr. Trotter: I am glad to see you move that much, but it just shows that, in the course of time, if you keep pushing something, you might get—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We have already offered it to them.

Mr. Trotter: While I am on my feet with regard to the shortage of hospital beds, I would like to clarify this situation of the centennial grants for the building of any public project. The hon. Minister did make an announcement that he was going to encourage the use of centennial grants for the building of hospitals. As you recall, there is a type of grant where the federal government will put up a third, the province will put up a third, and the municipality a third; and the hon. Minister of Health said he would encourage hospitals owned by municipalities to build hospitals, extend hospitals, or add a wing, in celebration of Confederation.

I would like to know if, when the hon. Minister said the hospitals that were owned by the municipality, he meant any general hospital here in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I would have to ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) to lay down the ground rules. I do not make the rules relative to Centennial grants, but it is my understanding that the property must be vested in the name of the municipality. It would therefore have to be a municipally owned hospital, not one in the municipality.

However, I would again ask the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs for a ruling on this matter; but I would like to point out to the hon. member that he may not be completely wrong, but he is not exactly right either, in that the municipalities will pay one-third, and the two levels of government will each pay one-third. That is up to $1 per capita—remember that. In certain municipalities that might be a very small amount of money. For instance, in my municipality they would not get enough money to build one bed.

In the city of Toronto, for instance, if the city were disposed to give all of its available money for this centenary project to a hospital, it would amount to quite a large sum; but would they be willing to give that all to one hospital? And there are no civic hospitals in Toronto, I do not believe—

Mr. Trotter: There are only 24 in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Whether they would give it to a board of a public general hospital or not, I do not know, but we have no objection. Wherever they get their share of the financing, we will support it with the statutory grant.

Mr. Trotter: I would expect, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Health would try to encourage this, because the rules, as laid down by the federal government, really depend on what the province does. In other words, if the province said that any hospital in Ontario, and the provincial government approved of a particular hospital proceeding with the project, then it is fine with the federal government. So, really, it is up to the department of the hon. Minister. And if you look to the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld), who is supposed to be laying the ground rules, certainly you, as Minister of Health, interested in the expansion of hospitals, have every reason to encourage this type of building. It is certainly better to put up a good hospital than some monument that is not of any use. A hospital is one of the most important things we can build and I am sorry that the hon. Minister and the government as a whole have not taken more of an interest in it, because last April when I asked this question before the orders of the day, there was so much confusion as to whom to ask that I got the general impression that the government had not even heard of federal grants. The next thing I knew—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I explained last April to the hon. member that the centennial grants were the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I discussed this matter with him. It is rather strange that he did not have an application for one hospital project. He had applications for a great variety and number of other projects, but not for one hospital project throughout the whole province.

Mr. Trotter: Well, after all, you are the Minister and I think it comes from the energy and drive of the Minister of Health to see to it that things are done, because I do not think that most of the hospitals or hospital boards if they heard of this matter, that it would even be done—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course, they have heard about it!

Mr. Trotter: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you say, is the one who gives the answers. In the press you and the hon. Minister of Tourism and Information were quoted as the ones who were saying things, because I know that when I made my inquiries there was great confusion on the government bench. I was of the opinion then, as I am now, that at that time, you had not heard it.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to get back to the figures that the hon. Minister rhymed off a few minutes ago with regard to hospital construction in this area. As I mentioned earlier, one of the difficulties we are always up against is that every official or quasi-official statement made on this subject does not harmonize with the previous one, and it is a little hard to sort some of the things out. I jotted the hon. Minister's figures down as best I could when he was reading them out. I would like to take one for an example: the Salvation Army Grace hospital. As I have it, he stated that it is now definite that a 110-bed extension will be constructed on that hospital. Was I right in that?

When did this come into the category of the definite, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The report I have is dated May 6, 1965; the report from which I quoted my figures is dated May 6, 1965.

Mr. Bryden: What happened between the time of the speech of the hon. member for Humber, when he said in regard to the Grace hospital extension, there was no planning for this expansion at the present time? What brought it from simply a good idea into the realm of a practical project that is to be completed in the reasonably near future?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I cannot begin to say what happened. A possibility is that the final approval had not been passed by the commission. I do not recall when the hon. member made this speech, but actually, Mr. Chairman, what does it matter? The fact is that this is the official record extracted from the official records of the Ontario hospital services commission and it is dated May 6, 1965.

I can tell you that since that time, Etobicoke general hospital, for instance, has agreed upon—

Mr. Bryden: You have it in your figures already—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: And Fenway general hospital—

Mr. Bryden: You have them both in right now, so apparently they were anticipated when the figures you just gave were drawn up. Yours are larger than those read by the hon. member for Humber with respect to Etobicoke. The reason I am asking these questions, Mr. Chairman, relates to the problem that I have been talking about all along. We keep getting announcements, announcements, announcements. And projects that would appear quite definite, we find later are not definite at all, and sometimes we are told in advance that they are not definite. But there are so many conflicting stories that I would like to get a clear-cut answer on what the hon. Minister bases his announcements—

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. January 19 was the statement of the Salvation Army hospital, which I gave to this House and which the hon. member is quoting. The later figures which the hon. Minister of Health gave you tonight are from the report of May 6. Certainly, in three months there has been progress made. What I said was that a possibility has now become an actual reality.

Mr. Bryden: When did you say that?

Mr. W. B. Lewis: I am saying it now!

Mr. Bryden: Well, you see I do not think it is sufficient, Mr. Chairman, to have these vague statements. I am not quite sure when it was that the hon. member made his statement—

Mr. W. B. Lewis: January 19.

Mr. Bryden: January 19. Well, I want to know just what steps have been taken since, because on January 19, according to the hon. member for Humber, there was hardly even a possibility—there was a project that had been hanging fire for a long time.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: It was in the planning stage, and I said so.

Mr. Bryden: No, you did not.

Mr. W. B. Lewis: I will read it to you, if you like.

Mr. Bryden: I have already said that you said that there was no planning for this at the present time. You see, that is the problem. That is what the hon. gentlemen opposite call "being in the planning stage." There is no planning so that is what is called "the planning stage."

However, Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is no point at this stage of trying to sort out the figures. It took quite a while while to sort out the figures presented by the hon. member for Humber. Now an entirely new, substantially inconsistent set of figures has suddenly been presented to us by the hon. Minister. It is going to take a little time to sort them out and analyze them. This is probably not the place to try to do it. I can assure the hon. Minister that I will do it, nevertheless. I hope that his announcement creates the rosy situation that he claims. I will postpone judgment until I can get the opportunity to go through the thing and find out how much padding there is in it.

I do not quite understand why he thinks that 3,958 will create a statistical surplus, when essentially the same number a few years ago was going to "just meet the need." However, that is another matter I will investigate when I have an opportunity.

It is unfortunate, though, that we could not have these figures presented to us in a consistent, coherent way that is comparable with previous—

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): You have said that four times.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): He said you have said that four times.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if the hon. member has anything to say, I suggest that he say it.

Mr. Letherby: We realize now what you are hammering at, so let go.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if you realize it, I agree that the point must now be very clear.

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that in future, statistics on this matter should be presented in a consistent way from period to period. Also we should have full documentation and not merely have the hon. Minister rhyme off a lot of figures.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 714.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, there is one aspect of OHSC policy and its effect on the operation of our general hospitals, that I would like to raise. To my mind, it is the most distressing aspect of our whole hospital system in the province of Ontario.

I have raised quite a number of cases, which I am sure the hon. Minister will recall, of people who suddenly are discharged from our active treatment hospitals on the argument that they no longer require the advanced kind of treatment that an active treatment type of hospital can provide, that their needs can be met in a chronic hospital or even in a nursing home. The hon. Minister will recall one case. Quite frankly I am almost tempted to go back and spend a day or two to dig through my files, because it really represents a hair-raising tale.

A gentleman, 78 years of age, whose wife, 81, had had one or two heart attacks. She was completely incapable of looking after herself, would never be able to walk again or to feed herself again. Suddenly it was decided in a certain hospital in the Metropolitan area that she no longer required the treatment—this was a chronic hospital—and she was going to be sent home. Now, there was a great deal of negotiation between OHSC and the hospital because of a sharp disagreement between the doctors in the hospital and the family doctor. I will be fair and say the family doctor of years ago before she went in, because a family doctor ceases to become a family doctor, apparently, when a person goes into one of these hospitals; and one of the doctors in the hospital, in effect, becomes the attending physician for that person.

But what happened in this instance was that finally she was pushed out, the old gentleman had to run around this city to try to find an alternative. There was no effort at all on the part of the hospital to seek an alternative to place this person. There was a long and confused administrative tangle between OHSC and the hospital, even after OHSC had said they would meet the bill for the extended period while they were reviewing the case.

To add insult to injury, the hospital continued to bill this old gentleman, who was living on nothing but pension, for something like a year or a year and a half afterwards, up to and including lawyers' letters, when we had been told and assured each time we called that the hospital services commission had said they would cover the bill. The fact of the matter is the money had not come through to the hospital. The hospital was protecting itself. Until it got the money from the OHSC it was going to continue to fire out bills, which it did.

The amount of distress to this old gentleman, the amount of fear, unnecessary fear, when he was faced with a seven or eight hundred dollar bill which he had no means to cope with, was tragic within his little world. Trying to cope with it was nothing short of tragic.

This is only one of many cases. When I first raised some of these cases with the hon. Minister he was disturbed about them and was going to examine the policy and see if there was not some more humane way of meeting this kind of situation.

As I understand it, the government gives grants to hospitals for nurses whose job it is in part—not only nurses but social work nurses if I may use the term, I do not know what the exact term is—the responsibility of these people is to find alternative accommodation at whatever level it is deemed to be adequate when a person is going to be discharged, either from a general hospital or a chronic hospital. I want to ask the hon. Minister what the situation is. If you are giving grants, then presumably these grants place an obligation on the hospitals to do something more than suddenly announce to patients that as of such-and-such a date they are out and what they do is their own business. They cannot do anything, perhaps the only friends they have are almost as incapacitated as themselves, but they have to look after themselves.

On the second point I know the hon. Minister will reply to me that the decision rests with the medical board or doctors or whatever group it is within the hospital that makes the decision in the first instance or whatever group can review it. But I cannot chase out of my mind the feeling that the decisions that are made are completely inconsistent one with another.

I visited the particular hospital from which this 81-year-old lady was discharged. I grant you I am only a layman. I walked up and down and saw people there and listened to their stories of what their problems were, how long they had been there and so on. It struck me that some of them who were continuing to remain in the hospital were certainly no longer in need of hospital treatment; yet they were staying and this person was being put out.

I have a case, the details of which I will not go into, of a person who was in Humber Memorial hospital. This patient went out, but was going to go into a chronic hospital. In the chronic hospital they will be covered by OHSC. However, in other instances, patients will not be taken by the chronic hospital and they have to go into a nursing home. Some cases in the nursing homes can be covered, other cases cannot be covered by OHSC. They may have paid for all the time that the Ontario hospital services commission is in operation, yet in these elder years there is no place for them to go except out into a nursing home where they have to meet the full charge on the limited means that these people may have.

Now, my questions to the hon. Minister are: Some clarification as to, what is the obligation on a hospital if it is in receipt of grants for nurses, part of whose function it is to find alternatives? Further, if they are not in receipt of grants for nurses who have these responsibilities, is there any obligation on the hospital at all, or can they in a sort of a callous, strictly business fashion say: "Out you go and what happens to you is of no concern to ourselves"?

Putting it more broadly than these specific cases—has the government or has the hon. Minister, given any consideration to expanding the number of institutions, whether it be chronic hospitals or nursing homes or some new kind of institution, where you can get, not active treatment hospital care but the necessary care for people who are at advanced years, or who are recuperating from an illness and do not now require all the facilities of an active treatment hospital? Has the hon. Minister considered any alternative policy and the economic advisability of building a range of alternative facilities so that you can perhaps move out, even more quickly if you had these alternative facilities, from our overcrowded active treatment hospitals at the present time?

There are many other aspects of which the hon. Minister is as aware as I am. I will not go into any more detail, but I would certainly request his comment on the whole situation.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that the hon. member has discussed with me privately. I am not the least bit backward in saying it is an area in which we hold common concerns and some common views. This is unusual, and I hope my hon. friend will not consider it a precedent. Nonetheless, I am proud to hold common views with him on this matter.

I would say, first of all, that we do not pay grants to the hospitals for this service, but there are allowable costs. If the hospital wants to have on its staff social service nurses this is accepted as an allowable cost of the operation of the hospital. It is not by way of a grant, it is by way of a recognized cost of doing business.

All of the hospitals do not have them but it is encouraged, and again, I suppose, they are faced with the problem that all who need social service people may not be able to get them. But here is an area where I do not altogether agree that a highly skilled social service person is necessary. Finding a suitable place for the patient to go need not demand university or equivalent training.

I would feel that a hospital that does have on its staff social service nurses should feel an obligation to make certain that patients who cannot go home are well placed. I would think that this is one of the duties, this should be one of the duties, of the social service department, to make certain that adequate and suitable accommodation has been found for those people who cannot go to their own homes.

Where the hospital has not got staff of this kind I suppose one would be right in saying there is no obligation upon them. I think that the attending physician should feel some obligation to be sure that everything possible has been done to enhance his patient's chances of successful recovery, or recovery as successful as is possible.

This is, as I have explained to the hon. member, a difficult and grave area. It must be puzzling, it is puzzling to me sometimes, to see patients who are kept in the hospital vis-à-vis those who are sent out. Even I would have great difficulty in understanding the reasons, and I can understand how a lay person would have even greater difficulty. There may be clinical reasons which are not evident to the naked eye which the attending physician notes; and of course I have to repeat that the decision to discharge or admit a patient is the responsibility, and must remain the responsibility, of the physician. Yet again, I do repeat and agree with my hon. friend that it is difficult to understand.

Have we given thought of some alternative? Yes, we have, and our home care programme is in part geared to meet this need. We recognize also that there are other needs and we have submitted proposals to the federal government to discuss with us the extension of the programme to see if we can put any definition on this gray area.

For instance, we know that certain doctors discharge patients from long-stay institutions because they believe that nothing further can be done for them. I do not believe that was ever the thinking behind the plan. I believe the thinking was that when there was no longer any medical necessity for the patient to be in hospital, it was time for them to be discharged. There are many patients who should be in hospital, for whom nothing can be done, but whose medical necessity demands that they should be in a hospital. We have had very friendly, very open, and frank discussions with the staff of The Department of National Health and Welfare on this matter, and I believe it is one of the matters that is expected to be discussed at the upcoming conference. We have met them twice, I think, since the last session of our Legislature, on this matter, and have been in correspondence with them on it. I expect that this is a matter to be discussed more fully.

I can only say, at this time, that this is all I have to go on. I hope that we can find an area of agreement where this can be broadened and some more generous definition of the—

Mr. MacDonald: Just use the word "humane" and that will cover it all.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: —humane method of dealing with the people who fall in this very broad gray area.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I would like to return to one other phase of the question of the latest revised figures on hospital construction in the Toronto area. The one I want to inquire about, I think, is worth trying to get cleared up, because it is the largest figure of any which have been presented at any time; that is the so-called additional 550 beds at Sunnybrook. I think we will be on common ground if I say that those 550 beds do not represent actual new construction. They are there on the ground at the moment. Sunnybrook hospital has always been a hospital of 1,453 beds, and I do not believe it is going to become a hospital of 2,000 beds. I hope not anyway.

The situation, as I have understood it, is this: There are 1,453 beds at Sunnybrook, and the survey committee in 1963 was of the opinion that 887 of those could be released fairly readily for the general public, and that another 100 might be released, leaving about 550 for the use of veterans from this area and from outside the area.

What I want to know is: When the hon. Minister said 550 beds additional at Sunnybrook, is he talking about the 550 that the survey committee considered would have to be reserved for veterans? If so what happens to the veterans?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The federal government, in the transfer of this property, if you will recall, undertook to build a domiciliary care unit for domiciliary care veterans who are now resident in Sunnybrook hospital. This will take care of 300. This will provide 300 completely new places, so it would be akin to having 300 beds; 250 beds are to be gained by moving out additional cases and renovating the area of the hospital now occupied by them.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, a few weeks ago I had occasion to bring to the attention of the hon. member for Humber a problem concerning a hospital services commission employee. She had separated from the service because of what was termed voluntary retirement—she had become pregnant and she had to leave her job. She felt this was unfair and, on inquiry, I was able to ascertain that the civil service which works for the government is treated in quite a different way; but the employees of the hospital services commission apparently work under a separate set of rules.

It seems a little foolish to me to have two sets of employees working for government, or for government agencies, who work under different rules and regulations. I wonder what, if anything, the hon. Minister proposes to have done about this.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The only thing I can say to the hon. member is that this is the policy followed by the commission, and has been one of their employment practices since they began to operate. Since their staff is not under The Public Service Act, I presume it was considered the right of the commission to decide what personnel matters should be. This is one of them, and I have not discussed it with the commission. This is the first I have heard of it, I believe, although I believe something was mentioned to me just in passing. But I have not discussed it with them, therefore I cannot say any more about it.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I spoke to the hon. member for Humber about it. He made available to me a copy of the letter he presented to the commission. He shared the view I have just presented, and his letter made that abundantly clear, but the commission apparently did not. I would think that the government looks very foolish in helping to establish two sets of rules, one for a group which happens to work in a particular building and gets its cheques from one source, and another for a group which happens to work in another building. If it is good enough for the people who work in this building, why is it not good enough for the people who work for the hospital services commission?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister a further question relative to this matter? Does the situation that I believe used to exist continue to exist, where the confusion was even worse than that suggested by the hon. member for Downsview, namely, that some employees of the hospital services commission came under The Civil Service Act and some of them did not? It was not only that the hospital services commission was differentiated from the government as a whole, but there were some within the commission who were one way and some who were the other. Is that still the situation?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: The ones who joined the staff from The Department of Health continued the privileges and benefits they had under The Public Service Act. The rest of the staff, a very large number of them, as you know, were taken over—former employees of the then existing Blue Cross. This apparently was the practice in their organization, and the practice was continued as part of the personnel policies of the commission.

I can only undertake, Mr. Chairman, to discuss this at greater length and in more detail. It is impossible to discuss it with my staff and come to any decision as to what shall form the basis of future policy, but I will undertake to discuss it with the commission and probably have something more definite to report to the House.

Mr. Singer: Can we perhaps get the hon. Minister to the point where he might agree that it is logical that people working for government, no matter which particular label they happen to wear, should have the same sort of working conditions and fringe benefits?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think my personal views are very well known in this matter. I do not believe that anybody working for any emanation of government should be anything but under The Public Service Act.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly glad to hear that from the hon. Minister. I think that is a hopeful statement. I was a little surprised when he indicated—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is no surprise. I have made this clear for a long, long time.

Mr. Bryden: No, no, I am not surprised about that statement. I am glad to hear that. But I was a little surprised when the hon. Minister indicated that this was a matter he had not considered before. I have recollections of it being discussed in this House at least once in the past two or three years. I tried to raise it, I may say, with the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) under the estimates of the civil service commission, but the government insisted I was out of order at that time.

This is one agency, and I would suggest the hon. Minister take this up with the government as a whole. There are a number of agencies whose employees are out from under The Civil Service Act, and the Ontario hospital services commission is one of them. I agree with the statement of principle made by the hon. Minister—that they are all public servants and that they all should be treated equally. I hope that policy will be made effective, because I think that right now the differences involved are not for the benefit of the employees.

One of the factors involved is that they do not get the normal representation of the civil service association and such benefits, such as they may be, of collective bargaining, and so on—in the sort of half-baked way it is carried on here. They do not get any of that benefit. This is true not only of the Ontario hospital services commission; it is true of several other rather large agencies.

If there are problems relating to the conditions of employment in the civil service which create difficulties for the Ontario hospital services commission, then I would suggest that the matter be straightened out by removing rigidities in the civil service. We have often heard complaints that employment conditions in the civil service are too rigid; well, they should not be rigid. On the other hand, there should be consistent personnel policies. I do not believe there are consistent personnel policies actually in the Ontario hospital services commission, and certainly the policies are not consistent with those in the rest of the public service and it is time something was done about it.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, if I may intervene by saying a word on another subject which has to do with hospitals—and I approach this subject from the point of view of the efficiency of our hospitals and the maximizing of the optimum care that hospitals give our people.

The hon. Minister of Health, the hon. gentleman in charge of this department, should not get the feeling after these many protracted days of debate in which he has been so intimately concerned, that all of us over here think he is all that bad because we do not. I can tell him that the Sudbury Star, for example, which is even more arch-Tory than the Globe and Mail—if that is possible—would not have printed that editorial of this morning. The Sudbury Star, on the contrary, if they printed an editorial about the hon. Minister of Health would have congratulated him on the changing of the Sudbury-Algoma sanatorium into a mental hospital unit. A portion of it has been turned into a hospital for the care of the mentally ill and that was just about the most progressive step that has taken place in the treatment of mental illness in northern Ontario in the last two decades. I just wish the hon. Minister was listening to these fulsome praises I am heaping on him, but he is so busy he cannot hear.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sopha: I was speaking, sir, about the alteration of the Sudbury-Algoma sanatorium unit for the treatment of the mentally ill. One of the results has been—and I look at the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner) when I say this—one of the significant results is that we now have three psychiatrists in northeastern Ontario. For many years there was only one who served all the area, right from the French River through to the Hudson Bay watershed where salt water laps at the shores of Ontario. Now we have three all in the city of Sudbury, and there has been a great change in the care of people suffering from mental illness. One bears in mind that there was a report of this government as long ago as 1951, I believe. I have that report, a very compendious volume, which recommended treatment of mental illness on a clinical basis, an outpatient basis. I am sorry I cannot use the jargon of exactitudes that my friend, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) can, but I hope to get my point across. Now, 14 years later, that has come about. This clinic or hospital outpatient services in the Sudbury-Algoma sanatorium is functioning very smoothly and is a very welcome increment to the standards of medical care for our people.

But that was not what I rose to speak about. I wanted to speak about this business of collective bargaining for nurses. I had the privilege, I think it was back in January or February, of speaking to about 200 young ladies of very comely attributes, all of them nurses, who invited me to come and address them on the subject of collective bargaining. They were very charming young ladies, I must say, clean-cut and handsome of mien.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Stick to the subject.

Mr. Sopha: One felt that they were babes in the woods in this maelstrom of collective bargaining. One got the impression that they did not really know much about the ins and outs of it and how it might affect future employment in the hospitals of our province.

However, a bill was presented to the hon. gentleman some months ago—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Is this still on this vote?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, this has to do with hospitals, collective bargaining in hospitals, where most of these young ladies are employed. The bill has gone astray; the hon. Minister told us this morning that it had been put up to the government, and there he ended his sentence without any hint whatsoever of what has befallen it in the hands of the government.

I would beg leave to say that I think the nurses made two mistakes. The first was, I think, that they were utterly wrong in presenting their bill to the hon. Minister of Health. And I will say this as a categorical statement, that I do not really think that the subject of collective bargaining in hospitals is really basically any of the hon. Minister of Health's business, it is the business of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree). The hon. Minister of Labour is the person in charge of the labour relations in this province and I need only cite that it would be a ridiculous assertion to make that teachers in their collective bargaining with school boards would have to go through the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), which, of course—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: They do.

Mr. Sopha: They do not, they do not get the right to bargain collectively from the hon. Minister of Education and the point I am making—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is under their own Act.

Mr. Sopha: The point I am making is this, that I do not see any difference between any groups in our society in having the right to bargain collectively. I say that it is a fundamental right of any person in employment to bargain through representatives of his own choosing in regard to his wages, working conditions, terms of his employment and all the ancillary matters connected with his working for any specific employer. I feel that, in order to present their case to the government properly, the person to whom they should have presented their demands for collective bargaining, was the hon. Minister of Labour. It is the hon. Minister of Labour in charge of that statute, The Labour Relations Act, who has excluded nurses from the rights to bargain collectively.

I think the second mistake they made—and I say this in all respect to their executive and leaders—the second mistake was that they mentioned in their draft statute the function of the Ontario hospital services commission to revise the rates in regard to hospitals, to take care of any increases in wages that nurses might win at the collective bargaining table. I think that was wrong, because I do not think it is really the responsibility of the nurses to tell the government how the money will be raised, to tell them of any increased benefits that they might win through the process of collective bargaining.

And I suspect—and that is all we may go on, suspicion—that it was this reference to the Ontario hospital services commission that got the back of the government up or perhaps alerted the commission itself in such a way that the commission made its views known to the government, that “we will have to think about this for a period of time, we will have to think of the effect of a province-wide increase in wages or salaries, if you wish, to nurses, and what that will mean in terms of the per diem rate of people using our hospitals and the responsibility of the OHSC for its share.” That is my suspicion. But then again, these are mere matters of detail. If you believe that the person in his employment has the right to bargain through the representatives of his own choosing in regard to his work, then really all the rest becomes a mere matter of detail.

I have said before in the House, and it bears repeating, that our statute, The Labour Relations Act, the governing statute for the conduct of relations between worker and employer in the province, does not, like the Wagner Act in the United States, carry a ringing declaration by way of preamble, about the fundamental right of the worker to bargain collectively. The Wagner Act begins by—I was spending some time trying to find that reference in an earlier Hansard, so I could read that declaration, but the hon. Minister of Labour is familiar with it. It begins, I believe, by saying it is the policy of the United States of America that workers shall have the inalienable right to bargain collectively concerning their hours of work, pay, safety, terms of employment, and all ancillary matters through representatives of their own choosing.

Now, I ask rhetorically, can you discriminate against nurses? They have come to the point where they are dissatisfied with the manner of carrying out their responsibilities to the public. They are dissatisfied with the treatment apparently given to them by their employers. And really, the hon. Minister is offended, many are offended, when we say from this side as we have said before, that the real employer of nurses in the province is the Ontario hospital services commission.

The Ontario hospital services commission, it is plain for all to see, runs all the public hospitals in the province.

I would like to hear an answer. I hoped that the first citizen himself would be here tonight to tell us, because he speaks for the government. How then can you discriminate against these women in our society who wish now to forward their just and equitable claims, to be paid appropriately for the sacrifices and the work they do in the employment of the hospitals of our province?

Just one additional thing I would like to say. I was rather interested that our friends of the democratic left raised this earlier in the day. I expected, when this vote was called, that one of them was going to get up and say something about it right off. After all, they proclaim themselves to be the spokesmen of the working people of this province, of this country, if not the world. But they were strangely silent. I suspect, and I pass this on to them, that they have become a little disillusioned with forwarding the claims of the nurses; because shortly after the nurses made these moves toward the securing of the rights to bargain collectively, the Canadian labour congress—the socialist-oriented, New Democratic Party dominated Canadian labour congress—immediately set out to woo them, and that is a very apt word to use in respect of nurses. They set out to woo them. They wanted them immediately, before they had won the right to bargain collectively, they wanted them to undertake to come into the CLC.

Whether they do or not, I suppose, is none of our business. It may account, as I say, for the lack of enthusiasm among our hon. friends of the democratic left in regard to them. I just happen to have the opinion that one of the chief things wrong with the labour movement in this country—maybe it is a private opinion, however it is validly held and I do not mind stating it—is the emphasis of some of its leaders on political action.

An hon. member: It is a big mistake.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, it is a big mistake. They should be devoting their energy, time, and talents to winning gains at the collective bargaining table, rather than running for Parliament. I venture to predict that now the salary is $18,000 at Ottawa, every second union vice-president is going to run in the next election for the NDP. We shall wait and see.

Mr. MacDonald: You do not object to their political action—merely its direction.

Mr. Sopha: You should have been here during my earlier assertions. I am glad you are back.

Mr. MacDonald: I have been listening to you.

Mr. Sopha: I am glad you are back, because we want to hear from you; but then again, to redirect—

Mr. MacDonald: I am listening for the same reason I go to the circus.

Mr. Sopha: You know, you are a firm believer in the maxim that practical politics consist in ignoring the facts. Well, I have made my point.

Mr. MacDonald: You made it and you buried it.

Mr. Sopha: I would hope that, in the absence of the first citizen, perhaps the hon. Minister of Labour would enlighten us on what has befallen The Nurses' Collective Bargaining Act, 1965.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 714.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I will only speak very briefly in reply to what the hon. member has brought up at this time. It is quite true that the nurses brought their brief, and their proposed Act, which would give them the right to bargain collectively for their profession—and I would like to point out that it was their decision, their election, to submit it to the Minister of Health.

They submitted it to me for submission to the government. Since it was a matter to be submitted to the government, I submitted it to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts); and he, of course, naturally, since it was a labour matter, called in the hon. Minister of Labour for consultation, and the three of us met the executive of the registered nurses association of Ontario and discussed the matter fully.

I think the hon. Prime Minister put before them, as did also the hon. Minister of Labour, the considerations which were of greatest moment to the government in the proposals they made.

I would like, sir, to disabuse the mind of the hon. member that the reason, for what appears in his mind to be delay, had nothing to do with the clause in the Act that had reference to the Ontario hospital services commission changing the rates. As soon as this was drawn to the attention of their solicitor, just in passing, he recognized of course that no person writing a bill, other than the government, had any right to make reference to any spending of public moneys. This had nothing to do with it at all.

But The Department of Labour is very much concerned, naturally, and the hon. Minister of Labour will doubtless speak for his own department. It is very plain to see, and to understand the view, that a matter of this importance had an impact on other areas of government responsibility and is not something that could be gone into lightly. The hon. member said something about the teachers. I think I am quite right in pointing out that the teachers do have their Act under the direction of the hon. Minister of Education.

I would just say also, sir, in passing, that I hope some day the hon. members will see how wrong they are in this belief that the Ontario hospital services commission run the nurses, or hire the nurses. We hire them in exactly the same way as The Department of Education hires the teachers. We provide the money that is used to pay them, but we have nothing to say with the terms of reference, or the work they do, or the duties they perform in the hospital. This is the responsibility of the board, and the administration of the hospital in question.

But I can assure the hon. member that his sinister fears, or his fears of sinister action, or his suspicions—and I am dreadfully exercised to see how suspicious my hon. friend tells me he is becoming, I think it is a very dangerous sign and I hope he will be able, in the calm of a summer vacation, to rid himself of those fears—are all quite groundless, in respect of this matter. It is a matter of great importance, having impact on other professions, just as it would have on nursing itself. And the hon. Minister of Labour, naturally, is bound to be much concerned about it, and I think he is in a much better position to discuss it than I am.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I just—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, what my colleague, the hon. Minister of Health, has just said, is the fact. The matter was referred to me, the bill which the nurses had submitted. Since it provides for—and actually it has been advanced by the registered nurses themselves; their draft bill, of course, takes care of their own organization and their own group of registered nurses.

The minute that this matter came up, there was opened up a whole new avenue of consideration as to the entire position of all other professional groups, leading, of course, to a fairly major reconsideration of the Act itself. Then the question arose as to where you start and where you finish with professional organizations; and as recently as this afternoon, another group, an organized group, a degree-bearing group, approached me to make an appointment in the next couple of weeks or so to come and present their views insofar as they are concerned. I might say that the group which approached me this afternoon, while I have been aware of the nature of their employment and the qualifications required for that employment, quite frankly it never occurred to me that that particular group would seek to be treated as a separate group for this particular purpose.

However, that is the fact, and I think the fact that this group has taken that position corroborates the government's position in this matter—that the matter is one which requires pretty major and calm and careful consideration in order that, at an appropriate time, a full and complete report may be given to this House with respect to the matter. I do not think that the matter can be rushed; I think the matter merits, as do the individuals who belong to these various professional groups, the closest attention.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, I have one or two incidental reflections before more specific matters. I do not wish to tangle with the hon. member for Sudbury. He is, of course, a recognized delight in this House. He occasionally gives revelations to this body, and certainly one of the most notable is that the New Democratic Party dominates the labour movement. From a man who derives from Sudbury that is a strange and interesting twist on the ancient adage.

Mr. Chairman, the incidental thoughts I had were these: I owe a clarification, if not an apology, to the hon. member for Humber for references in relation to hospital beds which I raised this afternoon. I think I would like to clarify the point. He was quite right in his statement, as he gave it to the House, that 44 psychiatric beds would be added to the Centenary hospital in Scarborough. What I was confused with was the mental care report in Metropolitan Toronto which says that 100 beds will be added for psychiatric purposes. Because of that confusion, I called the OHSC no more than 10 days or so ago and on their records the proposed addition still shows 44 beds. Again, I think the figures in this report may be inflated and though I bow to the hon. member opposite from one vantage point, I suggest to the hon. Minister that we are again a further 56 beds short for psychiatric care. My original figure of 1,000, therefore, is smaller than it need have been.

The second thing I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, in relation to facts raised by my hon. colleague from Woodbine, was that this emphasis on private subscription as one of the major factors still available to underwrite hospitals is obviously an incorrect emphasis. I can be corrected in this, but I believe I am right in saying that the deadline for the sick children's hospital fund raising has passed and they have raised barely half the required money. For us to finance major parts of hospital expansion on this basis is patently unrealistic. None of the projected hospital bed programmes will come to recognizable fruition, unless the hon. Minister expands the methods of financing.

Mr. Chairman, the major point I want to raise at this stage, relates in particular to one of the things which my leader raised earlier this evening, namely, the matter of hospitals advising patients that they are to be discharged, in most instances quite validly—and having no onus on them to make alternative accommodation available. I want to raise certain questions, and I hold no brief for them. I think they are rather interesting and I think the House will be rather interested. I want to raise certain questions in relation to the case of Kirkor Horhoruni of St. Joseph's hospital—the visiting Turk in St. Joseph's hospital.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to become embroiled in the usual sub judice rulings from the government, the way in which, alas, I suggest, we manage to circumvent important areas of discussion. Let me say right at the outset that I have discussed this with some legal friends because I am a layman and do not pretend to knowledge in these areas, I wanted to make sure that I was within the bounds of legislative propriety. As I understand it, there was an appeal from a court order directing Mr. Horhoruni to leave hospital and that is all that is presently before the courts. As a matter of fact, I think it is tomorrow morning, and I just want to raise some questions in relation to what happens to this man, or to people in a similar position when they leave hospital, regardless of how his departure was effected—whether it is a hospital discharge or a court order, or whether it is of his own avail. I simply want to lay some of the facts on the table and to ask the hon. Minister to answer certain questions about it, and I think that the hon. members may find it interesting.

It highlights, Mr. Chairman, certain dilemmas which the province of Ontario faces in exercising judgment over discharged hospital patients. I have the following seven or eight points to lay before the House, and hon. members who are skilled in the languages of the far east or middle east will forgive me if I am not correctly pronouncing names.

Mr. Horhoruni came to Canada about two years ago on a medical visa lasting two years and expiring on July 23, 1965. The instance which brought him to Canada is contained in a letter under the letterhead, St. Joseph's hospital, entitled: "To Whom It May Concern" and containing the following material:

February 27, 1963

This is to certify that I have examined the x-rays of the above noted and have discussed this case with Dr. Paul Ackman and I have agreed that he requires—

"he" being Mr. Horhoruni:

—a bilateral arthroplasty of both hips and both knees, and for this reason I have agreed to his admission to St. Joseph's hospital in Toronto, Canada, to have these operative procedures carried out. His disability without operation, of course, is very serious indeed. The result of the planned operation should be satisfactory.

G. F. Pennal
Chief of Surgery
St. Joseph's Hospital.

So Mr. Horhoruni came here on perfectly valid medical grounds on a medical visa for a two-year period, expiring on July 23, 1965. That is the first point, Mr. Chairman.

The second point is that the very nature of such visas—and I find this rather interesting because I think there is no other parallel consideration—denies Mr. Horhoruni the right to any social security whatsoever, to any general welfare assistance, let us say, or to any social assistance of any kind, so that that particular avenue of recourse is totally removed from him. That is the second point.

The third point is that, despite some of the newspaper accounts and despite some of the things we have read, Mr. Horhoruni is, in fact, totally destitute. He has spent $10,500 in the province of Ontario up to this point, for the purpose of two operations on his hip, and he has no further money whatsoever.

The fourth point is that the Turkish embassy in Canada is on record as saying that this is a Canadian problem to be looked after by the government of Canada or the province of Ontario.

The fifth point is that the Turkish government will not convert Turkish currency into Canadian dollars to rescue Mr. Horhoruni for whatever financial reasons the Turkish government may have.

Sixth, Mr. Chairman, and I think very important, is that Mr. Horhoruni is a genuinely disabled person, unlike what one might have derived from a cartoon by MacPherson in the Toronto Daily Star. He is not waiting to be enticed from his bed by thinly veiled Turkish madames of the night. He is, in fact, a genuinely disabled person. I want to quote from the transcript of the original verbatim the following sections. I think they are rather interesting. The person who gives the answers is Dr. Pennal.

Q. Now would you agree that in the condition he is in now, in his physical condition, that he is unable to walk; when I say walk, walk normally?

A. Well, he will never walk normally.

Q. Never walk normally?

A. No, no matter what is done.

Q. For instance, he could never walk without crutches?

A. No.

Q. He could not now and probably never will be able to, in your opinion, is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. He would find it very difficult to walk with crutches?

A. Pardon?

Q. Find it very difficult to walk with crutches, I mean walk any distance?

A. Yes.

Q. You agree then, it is possible that he finds it very difficult and painful to move at present; there is a possibility, a strong possibility?

A. Yes. It is difficult for him to walk.

Q. He could not walk very lengthy distances?

A. No.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I would like to know from you, sir, just what this has to do with the estimates of my department. I can find no relationship between matters that appear to me to be the business of The Department of External Affairs of Canada and The Department of Health of Ontario.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I shall come directly to it. This man is at present, for whatever duration of time, in St. Joseph's hospital in Toronto and that hospital falls within the Ontario hospital services commission and within this estimate.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, not at all.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, let me go to one point further, Mr. Chairman, which I think will give basis to show that this is foursquare within these estimates.

In the intervening period of time, a very real effort was made on the part of the legal firm involved to find alternative accommodation for Mr. Horhoruni. And that, I think, brings it right back to the point my hon. leader was making earlier this evening. Very real efforts were made, and this can go far beyond the man in question. A series of letters, I shall not read the form letter into the record, was sent to a variety of homes requesting that some accommodation be provided for this man. Now let me read you the replies, and I have them photostated in front of me.

Hillcrest convalescent hospital reply sent to Day, Wilson, Campbell and Martin, in every instance the barristers and solicitors involved.

Without prejudice.

Re Mr. Kirkor Horhoruni.

Gentlemen:

We have your letter of May 25 and from the patient's history it would appear that you should make application to a hospital for the chronically ill. This hospital is equipped to look after convalescent patients or those needing short-term rehabilitation. All requests must come from a doctor. Accordingly it would appear that your application has come to the wrong hospital.

Yours very truly.

St. John's convalescent hospital:

Dear Sirs:

In reply to your letter of May 25 making inquiry regarding the possibility of the admission of Mr. Kirkor Horhoruni to this hospital, the matter has been referred to our admissions committee. The committee is of the opinion that Mr. Horhoruni is not eligible for convalescent care.

Yours very truly.

St. Bernard's convalescent hospital to one of the lawyers in the firm:

Dear Mr. Hogan:

In reply to your letter of May 25, I inform you that we regret not to be able to admit Mr. Kirkor Horhoruni as a patient here. Our hospital is for women only, and besides we have no vacancy.

I do not know what that "besides we have no vacancy" means. It may be an exotic hospital in the context of Mr. Horhoruni.

Sincerely yours, etc.

Providence hospital:

Gentlemen:

Thank you for your letter requesting if a bed would be available for Mr. Horhoruni by the 31 of May. We are sorry but we do not have any vacancies.

Yours truly.

Our Lady of Mercy hospital.

Re Mr. Kirkor Horhoruni.

Replying to your inquiry regarding the above patient we beg to inform you that our hospital is for the chronically ill not for convalescent, therefore, Mr. Horhoruni would not be eligible for this hospital.

Yours sincerely.

This is a very interesting pattern of response. Everybody says no. The chronically ill hospitals say: take him to the convalescent hospital. The convalescent hospitals say: take him to the chronically ill hospital. But no one, Mr. Chairman, is willing to provide accommodation or make provision for this destitute and seriously handicapped human being, who, under perfectly legitimate circumstances is presently resident at St. Joseph's hospital.

The important factor about this, Mr. Chairman, is that it can relate to persons far beyond Kirkor Horhoruni and his peculiar dilemma; it leads us to a re-analysis of the terms of The Public Hospitals Act and whether or not, as the hon. Minister himself thought earlier, it should be obligatory for hospitals to make some alternative accommodation available.

As it now stands it may be—and I do not pretend to be clairvoyant, I do not know what will happen—it would not surprise me if Mr. Horhoruni ended up for his day in the Don jail.

He is then placed literally on the sidelines. There is nowhere for the man to go. He is in this country legitimately until July 23. There is litigation pending which he has a right to be involved in. I suggest to the hon. Minister opposite that some kind of compassion or some kind of alternative should be found. The government should use this as a demonstration, albeit an extreme one, that very odd occurrences can happen when an attempt is made to find alternative accommodation for discharged hospital patients.

At the moment, let me say, that the man is under some harassment in one of the hospitals in our city. He received—I will show it to the hon. members—a very few days ago in the hospital something called: "Extra! Extra! Le Petit Paris Montreal. See Horhoruni the Sitting Turk Only $1." That is the kind of material that is being sent to the man in hospital. I think he has been unhappily subjected to some adverse publicity.

I believe that a Minister of the Crown, governing the hospitals in the province of Ontario, should indicate nothing that relates to The Department of External Affairs, nothing which relates to the court factors, but simply explain to us what happens to people in this situation, when this set of circumstances contrives to place them in this particular dilemma. He should do so recognizing that the case is not merely restricted to Kirkor, if I can become familiar for a moment, but also to others in a similarly difficult position on the question of alternative accommodation.

Has the hon. Minister any comment as to what will happen between say July 15 and July 23?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, the man has remained in hospital this long. I can state that I am perfectly correct in believing that this is a matter to be determined by The Department of External Affairs. This man is not a Canadian citizen. He is here on a medical visa. Frankly, I cannot understand why the doctor ever invited him to come here. Surely to goodness we have plenty of arthritics in Canada who might have benefited from the treatment and I am quite certain there are good surgeons in Europe who could have provided the same type of treatment as this gentleman was to receive here in Canada.

However, that is not my concern. I only make these statements because they do puzzle me and have puzzled me from the first time I heard about the physician. Surely to goodness we have enough arthritics in Canada that our doctors do not have to invite arthritics from all over the world to come here for treatment unless we can be sure that we have some type of treatment that is not available to them other places.

However, I find it very strange, very hard to understand, why the man's own national embassy has not taken some interest in his case. The man is a Turkish national and why the Turkish embassy has ignored him is quite beyond me. I would hate to think that if a Canadian were placed in similar circumstances in Turkey the Canadian embassy would adopt the same attitude. Perhaps this is getting into a realm where I have no right to be and perhaps I am breaching protocol, I do not know, but these are commonsense opinions that occur to me. It is quite beyond my comprehension to know why the man's own people have not taken some interest in and concern for him.

I cannot see whose responsibility it is, if it is not the responsibility of his own people, to find other people for him. I can understand the hon. member being confused and puzzled by both types of hospitals saying that he belongs to the other. The convalescent thinks he belongs to the chronic, the chronic to the convalescent, and so on.

But I do not understand why these things came about. If he only has to stay until July 23, it looks to me as if the debt will become a bad debt and will fall back on the province of Ontario to pay anyway. I do not expect that The Department of External Affairs will look after it, although I think we have some method of charging these debts back to them, for non-landed immigrants.

We have not got a precedent, they tell me. This is the first time. I thought we had an arrangement whereby we could charge the hospital care of immigrants back to The Department of External Affairs. However, it does not matter. It will apparently become a responsibility of the government to meet his bill and I suppose if we have to pay it for a further 23 days, it will not be so impossible that we cannot do it.

Mr. S. Lewis: I thoroughly agree with the hon. Minister. I have no hesitation about discussing this aspect of external affairs. We are not making treaties, we are just hypothesizing. I do not know whether it will be a charge on the province of Ontario for 23 days, because it is possible that the man will not be in St. Joseph's hospital. He may indeed become a rather sad charge, in a sense, on the public. Someone is going to have to take responsibility and I just feel that it is important that the hon. Minister be alerted to it and to the complications which arise when reputable convalescent and chronic homes send letters such as those that I read into the record. I hope that this forewarning is premature and unnecessary, but I suspect that Friday will show that it has not been.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to deal briefly with the increasing costs of trying to run a hospital. We all know that the costs are going up all the time and it is increasingly hard to get personnel. I have had an opportunity to do some reading on different ways in which to control the costs of hospitals.

Various administrators have various ideas, but there is one unique experiment going on in Akron, Ohio. Probably the hon. Minister has heard about it, as have some of the men in his department, but I would just like to briefly highlight a few of the things that are done in the children's hospital in Akron, Ohio.

It is a 260-bed hospital and in this modern day and age they have gone in for automation. Everything in industry, it would seem, is automation and now in hospitals they are going the same way. The hospital at Akron spent $100,000 in putting in equipment, or I should say they put in the equipment and it costs them $100,000 per year to run this computer system. Literally, what happens is that this computer system, which they call the hospital information system, assigns work to staff members as to what jobs they do each day—orders drugs, x-rays, lab tests, and special diets for patients. And, Mr. Chairman, it is hard to believe that today this can actually happen; instead of individuals having to do all the ordering, with a properly set up automatic system this can be done, and this hospital has found that it works. From what I read, it said it smoothly schedules appointments in the operating rooms and other departments to avoid needless waiting. It immediately provides the doctors with an up-to-the-minute record of progress of their patients.

A four-year study made in Akron, Ohio, checking into the old system which we use in our hospitals here, said that the traditional hospital work methods were scandalously inefficient and archaic. And the ablest bedside women—that is, the head nurses and the registered nurses, and the student registered nurses—expended 41 per cent of their time in doing paper work; so the idea was to try to keep these different individuals, instead of spending so much time doing paper work, at the bedside taking care of the patients. The licensed practical nurse and student practical nurse provided 14 per cent more nursing care than the RN group. You can understand why, Mr. Chairman, they would call our present system of doing things inefficient, when the practical nurse does actually more nursing than the graduate registered nurse.

Volumes have been written on the subject. I am not going into all the volumes, I am sure the Chairman will be glad to know, but in one two-week period at the Akron hospital, 375 doctors admitted 585 patients and issued 10,000 orders on their behalf, indicating that, in the course of a year, the nursing staff was required to turn out millions of indi-dual pieces of paper work. The job of staffing, which formerly occupied two nursing supervisors for 16 hours a day, is now performed by the machine in seven minutes, which is an amazing thing. In other words, the task done by two people working 16 hours a day can be done in seven minutes by a machine—and this has been proved to work.

Information about the patient's condition is relayed to the switchboards so that the telephone operators can intelligently reply to queries from friends and relatives. This system is particularly valuable in dispensing drugs, because of the built-in safety factors. It is impossible to administer the same drug twice through error, and the danger of overdosing has been largely done away with. It also eliminates the handwriting problems of doctors, and anybody who has seen the handwriting of a doctor knows that this can be a serious problem.

In a world-famous, eastern American hospital, within a seven-month period, there were 179 difficulties involving patients and the administration of drugs, most of them due to careless writing. So this type of thing can be wiped out under such a system.

Many might say, "Well, it kind of dehumanizes the whole hospital system if we bring in machines," but the truth of it is that the personnel have more time to spend with the patients, so there is more of what the nurses call "TLC"—tender loving care. In addition, the machine can supply, in a matter of seconds, complete patient profiles for new doctors including even the names of newborn children. Fascinating possibilities, I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, will grow out of this. I think it would help medical research. It will be able, I think, in the long run, to use thousands of clinical tests automatically, and they can be stored in a computer for future use.

The future possibilities are dazzling. Supposing, in 20 years, 5,000 hospitals throughout the world keep automated records. You will quickly be able to analyze as many as 500,000 clinical cases of any given disease. And also, no matter where the patient moved, reference to a single card would give the physician a complete rundown on his medical history.

Mr. Chairman, this may seem a bit far-fetched, but in this day and age it is not far-fetched at all. We know it is working successfully on this continent in Akron, Ohio. I think it is a matter that could be seriously considered, even on a pilot basis, in one of our large urban areas, preferably here in Toronto. I was wondering if the hon. Minister has heard of this, and if any consideration has been given to following in the footsteps of the experiment carried out in Akron, Ohio.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member must have forgotten that the hon. member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), when he spoke on the Throne debate, I believe it was, mentioned the Akron, Ohio experiment. He also mentioned that the hospital in his own riding, Scarborough general, is at present involved with a commission and IBM in setting up a prototype to study the feasibility of this—and the possibilities of it as well. It is very much in the experimental stage and I think we should be a little careful in saying that the Akron experiment is completely successful. There are many things to work out in it yet, but I agree with the hon. member, as we did with the hon. member for Scarborough North, that this does present some exciting possibilities. The commission is working with IBM, as I stated, to see how it can be applied in regional areas within our province.

Mr. Trotter: This experiment with the hospital in Scarborough—is there a reasonable chance of that coming to pass, or is it more or less just in the talking stage? I understood it was more at a rumour-and-talk stage than actual practice.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, there is a possibility that it will come to fruition. It is being very carefully studied and explored at the present time. If it proves itself workable and feasible, there is no doubt that it will be accepted.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, I have been rather puzzled for the last half hour. The hon. Minister made the statement that there were other organizations involved in connection with the nurses, and the hon. Minister of Labour also got up and reiterated what the hon. Minister of Health has said, so we have two Ministers. Is the government telling us that there are other organizations involved who are looking for bargaining rights also? If that is the case, how does it affect the nurses? Just exactly where does this fit in with them? Do the engineers have a right? Do the policemen have a right? Do the firemen have a right? Have the nurses not a right to be able to sit down and bargain for their rights as far as wages are concerned? You tell us of some secret groups, some meeting you had with the hon. Prime Minister himself, the hon. Minister of Labour, the hon. Minister of Health—you have met with other groups and therefore you have set this thing aside. To me it does not make sense, and I would like an explanation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I thought the hon. member for Niagara Falls was better informed about current labour trends and developments than he presently indicates. The—

Mr. Bukator: That was quite a statement.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I put it to you directly. As is common knowledge, it has been in every newspaper in this province, the first group would be professional engineers—and it goes down the line to any group which has an association of its own or bears a degree or, indeed, has any item which might be identified as a common bond. What it leads to, the big question, is: How far do we fragment, on the basis of professional grouping, the work force of this province?

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, I am awfully sorry; that does not answer my question. I can read the newspapers. I hear of two Ministers, and the hon. Prime Minister himself, who have had secret meetings—well, not secret meetings, but—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Nothing secret at all.

Mr. Bukator: They certainly were not public as far as I am concerned; and I would like the hon. Minister to get up in his place and tell us who these people are who would prevent the nurses from having an opportunity to bargain for their wages.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It would involve, as has been indicated, an amendment to The Labour Relations Act. And if we are going to amend it, we are not going to amend it until the entire impact of the proposal by the registered nurses has been thoroughly analyzed.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, here is where the hon. Minister was right in his first statement. I know it requires an amendment to The Labour Relations Act, as you put it—this even I can understand—but you still have not answered my question. Who are these influential people who have come to you and have persuaded you from giving these nurses, who are entitled to an increase in pay, the opportunity of bargaining for their rights as far as wages are concerned? This is all I ask.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No one has come to the government to prevent or interfere with the nurses, nobody. The nurses themselves requested it, but there is the registered nurses association and now there are other groups, and if the principle is established that we deal with the nurses along the lines that they request, it automatically means the other groups—

Mr. Bryden: Why does it automatically mean—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, all I said was that the whole area must be canvassed at the one time, if you want good legislation.

Mr. Bryden: Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that each of these groups was excluded from The Labour Relations Act if not at its own request, at least at the request of some representative body, or an apparently representative body, within the profession? Now my understanding is that the nurses—unless there is a new development I do not know about—have not asked for inclusion under The Labour Relations Act, they have asked for a separate Act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: A separate bill.

Mr. Bryden: Whichever way it is put, if they have now decided that they want collective bargaining legislation applicable to them I cannot for the life of me see what that has to do with the professional engineers. The professional engineers are another question and maybe we will have it actively before the House one of these days. But I do not see what this has to do with nursing, or why the nurses' application should be contingent upon the wishes of professional engineers or any other group.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, except this; I was going to ask the hon. Minister just a moment ago—and it has got lost within about the last 3,000 words—would it be accurate to conclude from what the hon. Minister has said, that the government is contemplating an amendment to The Labour Relations Act that would make it possible for professions to seek collective bargaining rights under that Act rather than an alternative through a separate Act for professions?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No.

Mr. MacDonald: You are not contemplating that?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have not come to the conclusion you stated.

Mr. Bryden: Well, are you thinking about it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This government will consider any legitimate proposition and that we are doing.

Mr. Sopha: I am not at all certain that this government will consider, very seriously, granting collective bargaining to people because I am persuaded this government is not in favour of collective bargaining. Whenever I hear a person mouthing the old aphorisms about the trade unions getting too much, that they are pushing too many people around, then I know that person is a Tory.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: I beg your pardon.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): The hon. member does not like to be interrupted by the Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister said that, I did not. I got into trouble the other night for saying—

Mr. Chairman: Order! We have allowed considerable—

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister of Labour was speaking about—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Letherby: The Chairman wants the hon. member to sit down.

Mr. Sopha: We were speaking about nurses.

Mr. Chairman: Order! We have allowed considerable latitude in this matter, particularly where the bargaining rights of nurses entered into association with The Department of Labour and The Labour Relations Act. Consequently, there has been some mention of other professions, but we are not going to allow any more latitude as far as other professions are concerned; we are dealing simply with hospitals and nurses and no other professions. So, members will stay on the subject of this vote 714.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed, sir, I agree with you wholeheartedly and it was the hon. member for York South who took it astray. He is the culprit of the piece.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I was putting a question to the hon. Minister of Labour on the basis of a statement he made, so I was led astray by the hon. Minister of Labour.

Mr. Chairman: I am making no accusations. We will return to the subject.

Mr. Sopha: Quite obviously the nurses are not going to get any legislation this session, but I throw down the gauntlet to the hon. Minister of Labour. When this next session opens, then I say to him that in all fairness to them, it is his responsibility to tell them whether this government intends to grant them collective bargaining rights or not—in the context of the statement I made categorically that every person in this country, and I do not care what association he belongs to, has the right to bargain collectively through the representatives of his own choosing.

Mr. MacDonald: Including those bargaining—

Mr. Sopha: Members of the legislative assembly do it.

Mr. Bukator: I would like to complete what I started to say, because I did not get my questions answered except the fact that the hon. Minister kept nodding his head when the hon. member for Sudbury was speaking about everyone having a right to bargain for their wages; the hon. Minister kept nodding his head—

Mr. Sopha: He nods his head when he disagrees.

Mr. Bukator: If the hon. Minister agrees, then I am willing to forget about the fact that he does not want to give us the information that I asked for and that is, who are these other groups that are preventing you from bringing in the bill to let the nurses bargain for their wages? Who are these influential people? This is all I am asking.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not understand the hon. member's question. I would like to discuss it with him out of the House or anywhere but I do not understand the question about the influential people—

Mr. Bukator: Just a minute, Mr. Chairman. I have a right to ask a question of the hon. Minister: Who is this particular group that was in today asking for bargaining rights, and who influenced him so the nurses could not get a right to bargain?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They were just an additional group to the ones I have mentioned.

Mr. Bukator: There you are, Mr. Chairman, that is how evasive the man is, "just an additional group to the ones that I mentioned." And I am supposed to accept that as the member for Niagara Falls.

The hon. Minister can rest assured that he may not answer my questions, but I do not accept his attitude because he is evading the issue.

Mr. Bryden: Before vote 714 is carried, and turning to a quite different subject, I want to call to the attention of the House a specific case of what I would call a denial by the Ontario hospital services commission of certain basic rights of a citizen of this province.

I have found it necessary to raise this case once already in this House, namely, on February 1 of this year, as reported in Hansard on pages 181-182. At the time, I thought that would be sufficient to have the problem rectified. I have since found that nothing at all has been done, or next to nothing.

I regret that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) is not in the House at the moment because I would like him to hear the facts I am going to recite. Perhaps when Hansard becomes available, I can send him a copy. The reason I am interested in that phase of the matter is that a week or two ago during the debate on a private member's bill for the appointment of a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman in Ontario, the hon. Minister asked for specific cases indicating the need for such an appointment. I did not cite this case at that time because I thought it would be best to raise it with the Minister directly concerned, namely, the hon. Minister of Health, while his officials were present to advise him and they are now present.

In June 1964, a regulation was approved under The Hospital Services Commission Act providing coverage, among other things, in relation to—and I will now quote the regulation almost in its entirety, or the part of it that is relevant:

The use of occupational therapy and physiotherapy facilities, where available, when prescribed by a physician.

Subsequently, a constituent of mine, who has been a registered physiotherapist engaged in the practice of physiotherapy in the city of Toronto for the past 20 years, applied for recognition under this regulation. A substantial part of his practice is based on referrals from physicians in the area who are in a position, I would assume, to know his work and who presumably have confidence in him. Why, otherwise, would they refer patients to him?

I should state that some years after he was registered as a physiotherapist, he also qualified for registration as a chiropractor and was so registered. He has since carried on practice both as a registered physiotherapist and a registered chiropractor. He has advised me, however, that when a patient is referred to him for physiotherapy, he gives him precisely the treatment prescribed by the referring physician. I assume that this must be true; I do not think that physicians would continue to refer patients to him if he gave them other than the prescribed treatment.

Under date of September 22, 1964, my constituent was advised by Dr. Boyd of the OHSC that his application would be "reviewed by the physiotherapy advisory board," which was described by Dr. Boyd as consisting of "representatives of the two physiotherapy associations, the medical profession and this organization," meaning the OHSC, which would "recommend approval or otherwise to the commission," whose decision would be final.

Under date of October 1, 1964, Dr. Boyd advised my constituent that "the board has recommended to the commission that your application not be accepted." Apparently, although it is not specifically stated in Dr. Boyd's letter, the commission acted upon this recommendation.

It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that this decision was bound to have an adverse effect on my constituent's livelihood. Whenever a patient was referred to him within the terms of the OHSC regulation, the patient would naturally assume that payment would be covered by the OHSC. Was my constituent to advise the patient that his application for recognition under the OHSC regulation had been rejected and that, in effect, he had been adjudged unqualified by the OHSC?

One need hardly speculate on the effect that that kind of admission would have had on his practice. My constituent chose the only other possible course in at least a number of cases—I do not know if he chose this course in all cases—he simply provided his services free of charge in such cases. He has claimed—and I have not been in a position to verify his claim—so I report merely that he has made in, I believe, a letter to the commission—that since the OHSC regulation came into effect, he has suffered a 50 per cent reduction in his income.

He has been placed in this unenviable position without even having had the opportunity to be heard. As far as I have been able to determine, the board on whose recommendation the decision was made has no formal existence at all under the laws of this province. It is simply an informal committee set up by the OHSC to advise it. It does not have a regularized procedure. It meets behind closed doors. It has never indicated publicly the grounds on which it will recommend acceptance or refusal of applications. It gives no reasons for its recommendations nor does the OHSC give reasons for the decisions it arrives at on the basis of those recommendations. There is no appeal from either the recommendations or the decisions.

After my constituent received Dr. Boyd's letter of October 1, advising him, in effect, that his application for recognition had been refused, he came to me with his problem. I telephoned Dr. Neilson, chairman of the OHSC, who stated that he would review the file and advise me. After considerable prompting I received the following letter, dated November 16, 1964, from Dr. Neilson, and I am going to quote this letter in full. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not going to divulge the name of this man. The OHSC already knows his name; I am sure they know the case I am referring to. He is in a difficult enough position as it is, without his name being broadcast, so whenever his name appears in any of the letters I am going to read I am going to refer to him as "the applicant." This is Dr. Neilson's letter of November 16, 1964:

Some time ago you spoke to me about [the applicant] who is a registered physiotherapist practising at—and I have omitted the address:

—in this city.

We have found on investigation that [the applicant] is primarily a chiropractor who has some limited training in physiotherapy, and divides his practice between physiotherapy and the practice of chiropractic.

His application for recognition as a physiotherapist entitled to remuneration by the commission for services given to the residents of the province, was given consideration by a committee which has been examining all applications.

It was the feeling of the committee which contains representatives from the commission, the Ontario medical association and the Canadian physiotherapy association, that [the applicant] was not suitably qualified to be accepted and he was notified to this effect.

From my examination of the matter, I think I am inclined to agree with the viewpoint of the committee.

That is the end of Dr. Neilson's letter of November 16.

Some comment should perhaps be made on Dr. Neilson's statement, that my constituent "has some limited training in physiotherapy."

The plain fact is that he has been permitted under the laws of this province to engage in the practice of physiotherapy for 20 years and has received referrals from medical doctors in the area who presumably know him best.

I will not dwell on this point, however. My interest in the matter has not been based in any sense on a desire to pass my own amateur judgment on the man's qualifications. I simply express no opinion on that point; I am not competent to do so, although I do point out that if his qualifications are not up to standard, it is strange that he has been allowed to carry on the practice of physiotherapy for 20 years.

However, my sole interest is to secure a fair hearing for him. Therefore, on November 18, 1964, I wrote to Dr. Neilson, in reply to his letter of November 16, as follows:

Thank you for your letter of November 16 regarding [the applicant]. I regret to say that I find your explanation most unsatisfactory.

When a committee meeting behind closed doors makes a decision that can affect a man's livelihood, I do not think it is good enough for it to act merely on the basis of "the feeling" that the man is "not suitably qualified." I suggest that, as a very minimum, it should be prepared (a) to state clearly and in writing the precise qualifications that it considers "suitable," (b) to specify the reasons why it thinks [the applicant] does not meet those qualifications, and (c) to give him an opportunity to be heard before a final decision is rendered.

I realize that the commission has to protect itself against unqualified practitioners. I would point out, however, that there is already a significant element of protection in the regulations in that payment will be made to a physiotherapist only where a patient is referred by a qualified medical practitioner. If the commission feels that further protection is needed, then I submit that it should provide for it in an open and above-board manner and not by backroom decisions of an informal committee that does not have to justify its actions in public. I suggest that in simple justice [the applicant] is entitled to a hearing if he wants one and, in any case, to a full explanation, along the lines I have already suggested, of the reasons for the refusal of his application. I would appreciate it if you will let me know if he will receive such treatment.

That is the end of my letter.

I sent a copy of this letter to the hon. Minister of Health. For two months I waited patiently but did not receive a reply from either the hon. Minister or the chairman of the OHSC. Under the circumstances, I felt that I had no alternative but to raise the matter in this House and I did so, as already indicated, on February 1 of this year. Under date of February 25 I received a further letter from Dr. Neilson as follows and I am quoting it in full:

In reviewing our file on [the applicant] I find that he has not lodged an appeal against the decision of the committee appointed to approve applicants for participation in the outpatient physiotherapy programme being directed by the commission. If he should appeal he can be assured that he will receive every consideration and I would ask that his notice of appeal be sent to me.

In reading over your letter—that is, my letter:

In reading over your letter to me of November 18, 1964, I took it as meaning that [the applicant] planned to appeal and that you requested assurance that he would be given a hearing. Pending some communication from [the applicant] I had not acknowledged your letter. I am sorry that this misunderstanding on my part has occurred and I assure you that I had no intention of not replying. I just did not think that a reply was expected at that time.

That is the end of the letter.

It came as something of a surprise to me to discover that the commission had been waiting to receive a notice of appeal from my constituent. I did not know then, and still do not know, of any appeal procedure that has been laid down anywhere. And I do not quite know how it should be expected that this gentleman would appeal when there is no known procedure for appealing. Furthermore, he had been advised in the first instance that the commission's decision in such a matter was final. I did not quibble, however. I sent a copy of Dr. Neilson's letter to my constituent and recommended to him that he should lodge an appeal immediately if he should feel inclined to do so.

Subsequently, he sent to me a copy of a letter dated March 8, 1965, that he had sent to Dr. Neilson. His letter was somewhat argumentative and quite lengthy, setting forth in detail his grounds for appeal. He left no conceivable doubt, however, that he wanted to appeal. He stated that:

On the strength of your remarks in the above-mentioned letter to Mr. Bryden, I would respectfully submit my request for appeal to you.

That was March 8, 1965.

By a letter of April 21, that is, about five or six weeks later, I think, my constituent advised me that he had still not received a reply to his letter of March 8 to Dr. Neilson. On April 23, therefore, I sent the following letter to Dr. Neilson, and this is the last letter I am going to quote, Mr. Chairman, but I will quote this one in full, too:

I would refer you to our previous correspondence regarding the application of [the applicant] for participation in the outpatient physiotherapy programme of the commission.

It was my understanding, from your letter of February 25, that an appeal by [the applicant] from the decision of the committee would be considered. I am informed that [the applicant] sent a letter to the commission to your attention on March 8 indicating his desire to appeal, and I was somewhat surprised to discover that he still has not received a reply to that letter. It would appear to me that action would be in order to expedite the hearing of his appeal.

That is the end of my letter.

From that day to this, Mr. Chairman—the date of the letter I just quoted was April 23 and it is now June 15—I have received no communication of any kind from the OHSC on this matter. Moreover, as of this morning, when I last checked, my constituent has not even received an acknowledgment, much less an indication, of what he should do to forward his appeal. He has not even received an acknowledgment of his letter of March 8, which was sent in more than three months ago now.

To those supporters of the government who so glibly proclaim that the elected member should serve as an ombudsman, I would direct this question. What does a member do when he faces a bureaucratic wall of silence and doubletalk?

In my opinion, this is a case that could appropriately be referred to a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman. Since no such officer exists in Ontario, the only remedy I can think of is to raise it in this House. I already raised it once and now I have to raise it again. I will emphasize that I do not want to pass judgment on the merits of my constituent's application. I am in no position to judge the merits of his application. I do wish to emphasize, however, that he has in my opinion been denied even the—well, it is not my opinion, it is fact—elementary right of a hearing, in a matter which virtually affects his livelihood.

I do not think that at the present time there is even a recognized procedure for an appeal in a case of this kind, but in the name of justice I submit that my constituent is entitled to appeal if he still wishes to pursue that course. I submit further that the OHSC, on its record to date, has disqualified itself from acting as an appeal tribunal in this case. I would say that, if the man now had to appear before them, he could allege a reasonable apprehension of bias; he could allege that the commission has already a closed mind on the matter. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the hon. Minister to give this man an opportunity to present his case to a genuinely independent tribunal, setting one up for the purpose if necessary.

I regret that I have to bring this matter into the House once again, Mr. Chairman. I did not want to bring it here in the first place. I thought that, by taking it up with the responsible officers, something that could be considered reasonable could be worked out. Nothing has been worked out. The first time I raised this with the commission was in October last; and the commission, I would say, on the whole has been quite uncommunicative. But when it has communicated with me, its communications, I have found to my sorrow, have meant absolutely nothing, and I would like to find some way out of this impasse.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I had originally some knowledge of this case when the hon. member brought it to my attention by asking a question in the House; and I have to say, regretfully, that this has been a chapter of confusion and misunderstanding. The chairman of the commission was of the opinion that the man knew he could launch an appeal to the advisory board, that he had a right to know on what grounds they decided he had limitations to his training. And I must agree with the hon. member; if he were registered under the Act, I think the board probably overstepped its responsibility or its authority in calling his ability into question. If there was any question in the minds of the advisory board about the registrant's ability, then their duty was to place this before the board of directors, as the Act permits. However, being duly registered under that Act, no matter how many others he was registered under, so long as he had good standing under this, he should have been given consideration.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, that I have to defend the idea of an advisory board. In fact, I would take a very dim view of the commission if they decided to accept or exclude, on their own initiative, members of professions of which the commission may not have too much knowledge. It is for this reason, for the protection of applicants, for the protection of those who will render services under the Act, that advisory boards or advisory committees are set up. But I can assure the hon. member that I will make it my business to see that this man does have an opportunity to appeal. And if he is not satisfied with the reasons, I will make very clear to him, his right of appeal to his own board of directors, because they are responsible to this Legislature, through me, for the operation of the Act.

I can only say, sir, that I regret very much that this matter has dragged on to this extent, because we all believed that the gentleman in question was given to understand that he had an appeal from the decision.

Mr. Bryden: Well, he did. In fact, as I interpret his letter, which as I say was somewhat lengthy—the letter is longer than I would have written—it did quite clearly say that he wanted to appeal, and this was back on March 8.

Mr. MacDonald: That is over three months ago.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Yes, this is disturbing.

Mr. Bryden: At any rate, I appreciate the statement the hon. Minister has just made. Just so there will be no misunderstanding, I would like to make it clear, Mr. Chairman, that this man's registration under The Physiotherapy Act has not been called into question. My only point is that with a regulation such as I have cited now in effect, his ability to practice is somewhat severely restricted, if he is not recognized for the purpose of the regulation.

I would just mention one other point to the hon. Minister—I think perhaps I mentioned it in the course of my remarks, but it is worth emphasizing—that I think, apart altogether from passing or having a review board to pass on these people, the commission is pretty well protected under the regulation as it stands in two ways. First of all, any applicant, to be accepted must be a registered physiotherapist. That is point one. The second is, that payment will be made only if a patient is referred by a physician. I feel that a physician is not likely to refer a patient to someone who in his opinion is not likely to do a proper job. Whatever I might say about physicians in other contexts, I am quite sure that they are interested in ensuring that their patients get the kind of treatment that they prescribe. So I think there is sufficient protection, without the protection of further review. But if there is to be review of the man's qualifications and if he is in a position where he could be refused recognition so that his opportunity to earn his livelihood could be reduced, then I certainly think a better procedure than this should be worked out.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: I was thinking, Mr. Chairman, actually of protection of persons rendering the service, rather than the protection of the commission. I agree with the hon. member. The commission is well protected, but there is the possibility that the person providing the services may feel the need of protection and it is for that reason I feel his abilities and his standing in the profession should be judged by his own peers, and not left to the judgment of the commission only.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 714 agreed to?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter I would like to raise briefly under vote 714, if I may. It is such a broad vote and there are so many matters involved, that it is sometimes hard to keep track of them all.

This relates to the question of the supply of nurses in the province, which as we all know, is a vital aspect of the whole problem of hospital accommodation. The hon. Minister dealt with this matter briefly at the conclusion of his introductory remarks under the estimates. He stated at that time that the government has been advised, and has accepted the advice that we must double the number of graduate nurses from our diploma schools in the next five years. Then the hon. Minister outlined various plans that have been undertaken to increase the facilities for teaching nurses.

I may say that the figures he cited on our records over the last three years, do not hold out, to me, a firm basis for optimism that we will, in fact, double the number of nurses graduating over the next five years. Between 1962 and 1965, the number graduating—that is in a three-year period—increased by slightly less than 500 from 2,186 to 2,650. Now at this time of night, I do not want to go into a detailed discussion of those figures. It may be that there is an accelerating programme in view, but there is one phase of the matter where I understand that a real bottleneck may be created, even if we get all the physical facilities that are necessary, and that is in relation to teachers of nurses.

The hon. Minister also mentioned that point in his introductory remarks. He said that additional bursaries are being provided to encourage some nurses to take further instruction, and so on, and that efforts are being made to increase the supply of people who are qualified to teach nurses. After all, I assume that they should be of somewhat more advanced qualification than ward nurses. I commend that type of programme, but what I am worried about is this, Mr. Chairman: As I understand it, the salaries paid to teachers of nurses in many of the nursing schools, are hardly any higher than the salaries paid to nurses, which heaven knows are low enough. I would like to ask the hon. Minister just what differential there is between the two, and if he thinks that the salaries now offered to people who will undertake the responsibility of teaching future nurses, are adequate to attract a sufficient number of people into that rather exacting profession.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Chairman, I also mentioned an accelerated programme of producing teachers of nursing.

Mr. Bryden: I mentioned that.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: We are presently turning out 200 teachers of nursing for the next three years. We will be turning out 500 teachers of nursing, and thereafter, 400 each year, with expansion based on the need at the time. There is to be, I think the hon. member will recall, an acceleration of recruitment at the schools now in existence with the present facilities and without the addition of further teachers. It will take in an additional approximately 600 students this year, as the first step in the accelerated programme.

The matter of salaries, general duty nurses, $355 to $420 per month. Assistant head nurses, $375 to $440 per month. Head nurse, $405 to $480 per month. Supervisor, $425 to $525. The teachers of nursing get the same as the head nurse, plus the following bonuses.

Mr. Bryden: Which one is the head nurse, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Head nurse is $405 to $480, and in addition, in recognition of the completion of the Canadian hospital association course in nursing unit administration, an additional $10 per month. In recognition of the university diploma course of eight months' duration, an additional $20 per month. In recognition of baccalaureate degree of nursing, an additional $45 per month.

Mr. Bryden: Are these rates in effect in all the teaching hospitals in the province at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: This is the provincial rate.

Vote 714 agreed to.

Vote 715 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Health.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Mines.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we understand that the Goldenberg report may be presented to the House later this week and I just heard that it may be printed in one of the morning papers. Would the hon. Prime Minister care to comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that there is a report in the morning Globe and Mail which I have looked at. I have had opportunity to read only a part of the Goldenberg report but I would say, in the language in which that story in the Globe and Mail is couched, it is a speculative story. I am not aware that the report has been—there were some rumours around that a copy had been stolen or something—but I am not aware that any copy of the report has been made public in any way. I was given the report at 4.30 this afternoon.

As I say, I have not read it myself, but I have looked this story over in the Globe and Mail and it is my opinion that it is a speculative story.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Could I ask one question following the matter the hon. leader of the Opposition has raised? I understand that arrangements have been made for a release, as of such-and-such a date and hour a few days hence, and the newspaper people are likely to be closeted for some hours in advance. Now, we are always faced with considerable difficulty, because—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt. I have a timetable worked out, which I propose to submit to the hon. member and the hon. leader of the Opposition. This is a difficult matter to deal with, because we have different news media with different deadlines and so on. I have worked out a timetable which I think the hon. member will find satisfactory, which I would be very happy to show him in the morning.

Mr. MacDonald: My question is simply this, and perhaps I should have gotten to my question. Would the hon. Prime Minister consider letting each of the Opposition leaders have a copy—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: That is in my plan.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, it is in his mind.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, because in recent years I have attempted always to do this, that is with the Budget speech, the Throne speech and so on, and I would be very pleased to. This is in the timetable I have worked out and perhaps we can get together in the morning and I will explain it to the hon. member.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10.50 o'clock, p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(Concerning the statement by Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine) on page 4209)

ACTIVE TREATMENT HOSPITAL BEDS IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Hospital	1963 Survey Committee Report		W. B. Lewis' Statement, 1965
	Existing Beds	Planned by 1970	Constructed or Definitely Planned	Indefinite
St. Michael's	770	50	129
Sick Children's	610	191	186
N. York Branson	165	238	310
Ortho. & Arthritic	28	68	68
Queensway General	198	128	120
Wellesley	255	328	312
N. York General	22	278	370
Scarborough General	337	190	240
Centenary, Scarborough		200	480
Women's College	266	148	152
York General		200	200
New Mt. Sinai	337	178	181
Sal. Army Grace	109	126		120
Tor. Western	761	100		80
Sunnybrook	887	100	550*
Etobicoke				300
Fenway				500
Baycrest			93
Toronto General	1234	166
St. Joseph's	584
East General	647	-7
Humber Memorial	319
Northwestern	242
Princess Margaret	120
Lockwood Clinic	45
Private Hospitals	492	77
Totals	8428	2759	2841	1000

*This figure is not included in the total since it was already included in Survey Committee's total of the 1963 existing stock (col. 1).

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, June 16, 1965

Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Wednesday, June 16, 1965

Estimates, Department of Mines, Mr. Wardrope	4241
Recess, 12.30 o'clock	4256

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome as guests to the Legislature today, in the west gallery, students from school sections Nos. 3 and 4 OPS, Lindsay.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall), notice of which has been given. The question arises from an article in yesterday's morning paper relative to Metro housing and is as follows:

Would the hon. Minister inform the House how much he expects will be paid out by vendors as real estate sales commissions on the housing which the Ontario housing corporation plans to purchase in Metro Toronto this year?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer the hon. member's question in this way. All 1,200 dwellings which the Ontario housing corporation is in the process of purchasing in Metro Toronto were offered directly by the present owners in response to the corporation's advertisement. No real estate commissions will be involved.

The Ontario housing corporation has not retained real estate brokers to purchase properties on its behalf, but if any broker has a property to sell, the corporation would be interested in receiving an offer. In all cases, however, the onus to pay brokers' fees rests with the vendor, not the corporation.

May I also clear up one other point that may arise a little later? When the corporation receives an offer to purchase, the property is appraised by the corporation and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation jointly. Regardless of the offering price, the corporation makes an offer based on the appraised value and if this is acceptable a purchase is consummated. Should a fee be payable by the vendor at any time this has no effect on the appraised value and is the responsibility of the vendor, not the corporation.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart), of which notice was given.

Does the hon. Attorney General concur in the statement attributed to Chief Magistrate Klein advocating more frequent and confidential discussions between police officers and magistrates; and if so, why?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Downsview is aware that the remark which he attributed to Chief Magistrate Klein was made to the Ontario association of police chiefs at their annual meeting in Barrie on Tuesday, June 8. I am sure that my hon. friend will also recognize the difficulty in removing a statement out of its context where the real tenor of the complete speech may thereby be lost.

Chief Magistrate Klein spoke to the chiefs of police at length upon several matters. One of the matters which he stressed was that it was most important that the independence of the bench be maintained in appearance as well as in fact. For this reason, he pointed out that magistrates might not appear friendly with policemen in the vicinity of their courts and he went on to explain why this might be so. The whole tenor of his commentary on this particular problem was directed to maintaining the independence of the magisterial bench and those who were present and heard the speech recognized this.

However, Chief Magistrate Klein quite properly indicated that the independence of the bench should not prevent a magistrate from having some contact with the police since it is desirable that the magistrate make policemen aware of his own thoughts on law enforcement and on the proper administration of justice. I think the hon. member would agree that the continuing education of the police as to the principles of the administration of justice and the manner in which they may assist therein is most important and the magistrate is in an ideal position to convey this education to policemen since he sees them in court and in many cases he will be able to utilize this information for the improvement of law enforcement and the administration of justice jointly.

As most hon. members are aware, a magistrate must decide the case before him upon the evidence which is adduced in the trial and if he goes beyond that evidence and acts upon extraneous matters not placed in evidence then the decision will not be sustained by a higher court and his whole decision could thus be invalidated upon appeal.

I would therefore suggest to the hon. member that the comment made by the chief magistrate as stated in the question is unrelated to the context of his speech, and I assure the hon. member that the speech in its entirety was quite consistent with the sound administration of justice and was particularly significant to the chiefs of police.

Mr. Singer: Could the hon. Attorney General, then—since I have not had available to me the full context—make available a copy of that speech?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I might say that I inquired of the chief magistrate and he informed me that he spoke "off the cuff." Further than that I inquired of persons who had been there and heard the speech, one of them being the Deputy Attorney General, and the whole tenor and context of his speech was as I have stated.

But I went further still. The press had taken down certain portions of his speech and we are having it correlated and put together. I may be able to give something that will be a complete story before long.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), and there has been compliance with the rules in giving notice of the question—I say regretfully.

What liability, if any, has the Ontario Northland Railway for the recent theft of the gold bricks at Larder Lake? And second, has the Ontario Northland Railway insurance against any such liability?

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the hon. member's question is that the Ontario Northland Railway is responsible to shippers for declared value of bullion. In reply to the second part, the answer is yes.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is it the practice, when such shipments are made, that the shipments are brought from the mine accompanied by security officers and then left in the station with just the agent there? Probably he has a gun, but it is very fortunate in this case that he did not try to use it.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, I am sure I did not ask them if this was the practice, but it evidently seems to be the practice because this is what happens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Troy: I have a further question for the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, notice of which has been given.

Would the hon. Minister please advise what is the official position of Mr. H. L. Cann, a former CNR employee now on the staff of the Ontario Northland Railway, and what are the terms of reference covering his appointment?

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first part of the hon. member's question, Mr. Cann's position with the Ontario Northland Railway is managing director. The terms of reference covering Mr. Cann's appointment are as follows:

The government of Ontario, having created by legislation, the Ontario Northland Railroad commission, which accordingly is responsible to the government, and the government and the Ontario Northland Railroad commission having deemed it appropriate to create the post of the managing director to take the responsibility for the management and control of the day-to-day operations of all the transportation and other business of the commission, it is deemed appropriate that terms of reference be set out for the future guidance of the commission and of its managing director.

Notwithstanding the provisions of The Ontario Northland Transportation Commission Act, the commission shall function in the same manner as an ordinary corporate board of directors with power to create policies, to set annual budgets both subject to the approval of the government of Ontario.

The managing director of the commission shall be solely responsible for and control the day-to-day operations of all its transportation and other businesses owned by the commission. He shall have sole power to hire or fire all personnel and to set salaries and set budgetary limits providing that there shall be no recourse by any employee to the commission. Provided further that the commission shall approve salaries for senior management personnel, (c) Deal with all labour-management problems and relationships, (d) Negotiate and complete all contracts with shippers, said contracts to be subject to the approval of the commission, (e) Negotiate and complete all contracts for the purchase of equipment and supplies and services, subject to:

(i) budgetary limitations;

(ii) Commission approval of any expenditure over $50,000 or any expenditure which is not budget-approved.

Taken over practically the whole operation, your commission is a very great thing now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Next order of business.

Clerk of the House: The 56th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINES

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, hon. members may recall that last year I prefaced my remarks in the debate on the estimates for The Department of Mines with the comment that I approached the task with mixed feelings, with full recognition that Ontario's mineral production had dropped drastically since 1960 and that, generally speaking, the industry in this province appeared to be showing a lack of its former verve.

Then, if I may be permitted to quote from my own words, I said, a little further on:

I would like to emphasize most definitely that the present ailments of the industry are—or should be—short-term ones, and that, if remedial action is taken promptly, the patient will recover his complete health and be stronger and more robust than ever. That, I think, is a certainty.

Let me say now that the remedial action has been taken, and the patient—who was not really very sick after all—has, indeed, made a most spectacular recovery.

The debate which followed my speech last year showed very clearly that the hon. members opposite did not share my optimism. My hon. friend who represents the people of Sudbury (Mr. Sopha), the centre of what is perhaps the greatest single mining area in the world, had this to say:

The mining industry in Canada is sick. Nowhere is it sicker than in the province of Ontario where the mining industry is dying.

Mr. Chairman, if he was right, then this year we have seen one of the most remarkable death-bed recoveries in history. However, in all fairness, I am sure no one is more pleased at the result than my good friend, the hon. member for Sudbury. He has shown that always.

Let us look at the developments of the last year and the situation as it stands today. I intend only to summarize this recent history, but I am sure that the events following the announcement last April of a major base metal discovery near Timmins are still fresh in the minds of all hon. members.

The Texas Gulf Sulphur Company made its successful find after only six years of conscientious search and research in which many hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended in geophysical examination, diamond-drilling, and other exploratory work. The announcement of success was made only after the company had proved up by drilling an estimated 25 million tons of valuable copper, silver, lead and zinc ore. This estimate was later revised upward to 61 million tons and, almost certainly, that is still a conservative figure.

I would like to say now that Texas Gulf, from the time it first began its operations in Ontario, has been an excellent corporate citizen, scrupulous in the observance of our laws, and more than willing to co-operate with The Department of Mines and other departments of the government in every possible way. The company richly deserves all the success that is accompanying its efforts.

Following the announcement, there occurred one of the most fantastic claim-staking rushes of all time as the bushland, for miles in every direction from the original discovery, swarmed with prospectors seeking available ground. The facilities of the department in Timmins were strained to the breaking point in an effort to keep up with the flood of paper work required to document these claims, land transfers, and the multitude of other details required. At one point, in order to keep up with the hectic pace, the staff of the mining recorder's office in Timmins was expanded from the normal two to a staff of 13, as trained personnel were moved in from other offices in less active areas of the province. I would like to pay tribute now to Mr. Egerton, the recorder at Timmins, and Mr. McGinn, the chief mining recorder, and to all the other officials of the mining lands branch who handled a unique situation so capably.

The ultimate result of all this activity is not yet known, and probably will not be known for some time. About all that can be said at this stage is that a great many square miles of potentially productive ground have been taken over, and the whole area is now being subjected to intensive exploratory work by diamond-drill and geophysical methods. Scores of companies are involved in this work—among them the biggest in Canada—and it will certainly be known before long whether the Texas Gulf discovery will result in one very big mine—a certainty—or a whole group of producing operations.

The stock market furore which followed the original announcement, and which set new records on successive days at the Toronto stock exchange, proved one thing at least—Canadian investors do have imagination and they are ready and willing to invest in Canada's future. Apart entirely from the gains or losses of individuals—and certainly there were both—the most lasting and beneficial result of this speculation lies in the fact that a great deal more money is now available to mining and exploration companies to carry on their work of discovering and developing new properties.

The effect of the Texas Gulf discovery can be seen far beyond the immediate area. The whole history of mining in this province shows that one good find begets another, and 1964 proved no exception. The interest and enthusiasm engendered at Timmins spread throughout the breadth of the province so that prospectors in 11 of the 14 mining divisions worked harder and staked more ground than they have in any year since 1955.

Altogether, last year, there were 51,547 claims staked and recorded throughout the province, nearly three times the number for 1963, which could be considered an average year. It is not suggested, of course, that all or even most of this claim-staking will result in active producing mines, but if even a very few of 1964's prospects result in production this year or in the years ahead, the continuing health of Ontario's mining industry will be assured, and we will have new mines to replace those which go out of existence through the attrition which is built into this great industry. The pace of prospecting is still being maintained at the same rapid pace so that, in the first four months of this year, 14,121 claims had been recorded as compared with 12,476 in the same period last year.

Mr. Chairman, the mining industry is in business to produce the minerals which this country and the world needs. During 1964 it performed this function so successfully that the downward trend of the previous few years was reversed and production shot up by almost $38 million. The total output of our mines last year was something over $911 million. I would say, Mr. Chairman—a good effort for a dying industry!

By far the greater part of this increase—$28.5 million of it—was accounted for by the metallic minerals whose total value was $711.7 million. While it is not my desire to swamp hon. members in a sea of figures, I think that the contribution made to this impressive total by at least a few of the major minerals should be brought out. Nickel, with a total production of 330 million pounds valued at $268.5 million retained first place. Iron production set a new record—nearly 8 million tons valued at $84.4 million. Our mines produced more than 4 million pounds of copper for a value of $132.5 million, an increase of $20.5 million over last year. Other major factors in the total for metallic production were zinc—at a new record value of $19.39 million; uranium $74.3 million; gold $80.6 million; silver $15 million; the platinum metals, $25.20 million; and magnesium, $5.6 million.

The total value of non-metallic minerals was $24.7 million with salt, asbestos, gypsum, nepheline syenite and sulphur being the major contributors. Production of natural gas and petroleum together added $8.68 million to the total, and the structural materials, such as clay products, cement, lime, sand and gravel and stone, added another $166 million to make up Ontario's magnificent total.

At the end of 1964 there were 88 producing mines in Ontario, and in addition 709 quarries and pits of various kinds. At the same time, development work in various stages was being carried on at 24 other properties—work which in most cases was expected to lead to the establishment of producing mines. While perhaps it is not necessary to list all of these prospective mineral producers, a few examples might be mentioned to advantage.

In the historic Cobalt-Gowganda area, eight silver properties are being developed. In the Sudbury area, the International Nickel Company has four new mines, and Falconbridge Mines Limited has one very large new mine, the Stratheona, in the making to add to the long list of producers of nickel, copper and the 12 other elements that go to make this one of the richest mining areas in the world. Six other copper properties, among them Texas Gulf, are being prepared for production, as are three potential gold producers, a possible new asbestos mine, and a zinc mine.

In addition to these, since the beginning of this year, 1965, I had the honour of presiding at the official opening of the Adams Mine of the Jones and Laughlin Corporation, a very large open-pit mine near Kirkland Lake. This operation, which will result in the annual production of one million tons of high-grade iron pellets annually for 30 years at least, will serve as a real shot of adrenalin to the community of Kirkland Lake and to the economy of all that part of northeastern Ontario. This mine will employ about 300 people—nearly all residents of the community—and the bulk transportation of the ore will be important business for the government-operated Ontario Northland Railway.

Also this year, the important mining community of Manitouwadge took a long step forward with the formal opening of the Willecho mine as the area's third producer of copper, lead and zinc. The operation will be conducted by Willroy Mines Limited on property owned jointly by Willroy and Lun-Echo Mines. The ore will be milled and concentrated in the Willroy plant.

Announcements of still other plans which have been made since the beginning of the year will have the most far-reaching effects on our economy and on the growing mining industry in this province.

The Algoma Steel Corporation is engaged in negotiations to option the property of Can-Fer Mines Limited near Nakina, again in the northern area. This is an ore body which has been known for several years, but like other potential iron mines in northern Ontario, it has been awaiting an assured market for its product. It is encouraging, too, if negotiations are successful, that the market is to be found in Canada with a Canadian steel company, thus providing a major field for our skilled Canadian labour.

A similar situation exists in the case of the Strathgami iron property at Timagami. Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited and Cliffs Canada Limited have announced that they have acquired this property jointly and are preparing to mine it. The ore will be treated at Dofasco's steel plant in Hamilton.

I understand, too, that Steep Rock Iron Mines is also negotiating sales agreements with prospective consumer partners and these negotiations are so far advanced that construction of a $15 million pelletizing plant is expected to start this summer. As hon. members are aware, the Caland Ore Company is now well advanced in the construction of a similar plant for the same purpose.

Pickands, Mather and Company has exercised its option on the property of Iron Bay Mines Limited on Bruce Lake south of Red Lake. Production of up to 3 million tons of pellets per year could come from this property. No development or production plans have yet been announced.

Finally, Denison Mines Limited, one of the world's greatest producers of uranium, is negotiating with European countries for the sale over the next 25 years of 100 million pounds of uranium oxide. When and if this contract is finalized and the necessary export permit is granted by the federal government, the sale of uranium oxide will conceivably bring more than $700 million of foreign exchange to Canada and will account for 25 per cent of Canada's economic reserves of uranium. It will also mean, of course, that the Denison Mine will not have to close down as it was expected to do this year, and that Elliot Lake will have taken a long step towards recovery.

Ontario's other giant in the uranium mining field, Rio Algom Mines Limited, has also announced that it, too, is negotiating major sales contracts with friendly nations.

Perhaps on the strength of these developments, I am justified now in reminding hon. members that I have said here time and again that Ontario's uranium industry was far from dead and that a complete revival could be expected before the end of this decade. Indeed, it looks now as though our vast reserves—the greatest in the world—will not be sufficient for future needs and that the mining industry must soon begin to explore for new deposits. We must, in this province, be concerned, I would emphasize, that there will be an ample supply of uranium for the important purposes of Ontario Hydro's projects in the field of nuclear reactor power generation. In this province we have great confidence in the future of atomic power development; hence there is a need to safeguard our uranium reserves for this purpose.

This government, through Hydro, is already doing its share to keep the mills at the uranium mines turning. The first nuclear power plant—at Douglas Point near Kincardine—will be in operation early in 1966. Work on another much larger plant is to start this year in Pickering township, a few miles east of Toronto. The Douglas Point plant will require 132,000 pounds of uranium oxide at the start-up and 50,000 pounds per year thereafter. The Pickering project will require 464,000 pounds for the initial fueling and about half that amount each year to keep it in operation.

All this, of course, has been the best possible sort of news for the residents of the town of Elliot Lake and for my friend, the hon. member, across the way (Mr. Farquhar). It is still "The Uranium Capital of the World," but a capital that has had a pretty thin time during the last few years. In the same vein I should like to offer my most sincere congratulations to my friend and colleague, the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), who is not present, for the decision he recently arrived at in concert with federal authorities to establish an adult education centre there, using existing facilities for housing and education purposes.

Let us look at the mineral industry from the national scale, see what it means to Canada's economy and relate this overall picture to Ontario, which alone is responsible for nearly one-third of all Canada's mineral production.

These are all facts: Mining is the very bedrock of Canada's economy. Production of about $3.5 billion worth of minerals each year represents more than seven per cent of Canada's gross national product.

The mining industry directly provides jobs for 130,000 Canadians—more than 47,000 of them in Ontario—and the wages paid in the mineral industry are higher than in any other industrial division in Canada. It has been estimated that directly, and indirectly, the mineral industry provides employment for approximately 13 per cent of Canada's working force.

With exports totaling $2 billion annually, mining leads all primary industries in Canada's export trade.

Capital and operating expenditures, including purchases of equipment and supplies, amount to $1 billion annually and federal, provincial and municipal taxes amount to $100 million annually. The mineral industry in Canada spends about $45 million annually in prospecting and exploration work.

Mr. Chairman, minerals represent nearly 41 per cent of all the tonnage moved by Canadian railways and inland waterways.

Throughout Canada, and in northern Ontario, the mining industry has given birth to and is the principal or sole sustainer of some of our most modern and progressive communities, as the hon. member for Sudbury will admit.

Canada's mining companies in 1963 paid some $220.5 million in dividends to those individuals who have invested in Canada's future.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on at some length with data indicating the very great importance of our mining industry but perhaps I have said enough to convince the hon. members on this score.

We in Canada, especially Ontario, I do not think fully realize how fortunate we are in natural resources: beautiful agricultural land, plenty of minerals, an abundance of timber, water supplies. I often think we should thank God for this great heritage of ours. Perhaps, however, I might add this quotation taken from an address by a very prominent American banker. I like this and I would like to quote it to you:

Throughout the Rocky Mountains, ages gone, God built stronger vaults in his granite banks than ours. He filled these vaults with gold, silver and copper. He gave the prospector knowledge and insight and guided him on his way to the door of the bank vault. The government handed him his patent title to all therein. It is no crime, but a virtue to enter. With drill, blast, pick and spade the poor man broke the combination lock and entered. But for him our notes in issue would be as the "Stumptail" currency of 1857. But for him this government would be bankrupt. Mines will be producing millions in gold, silver and copper in that future day when national banks are unknown. Remember a mine is simply a crop, already raised, harvested and deposited in the bin or bank. You check it out at your pleasure.

The wealth gathered from the mines immortalized King Solomon. Mining made Rome the mistress of the world. Mining made Great Britain the world's commercial dictator. Mining made the United States the richest country in the world. Show me a country that has no mines and I will show you a people sunk in poverty, and poverty makes cowards of nations as well as men. Mining has transformed more broken men and tramps into millionaires and placed them in positions of honour and trust than any other business. Without the miner you would not have frying pan, a spoon or a hat pin. Eliminate the miner and you wipe out civilization. A nation's prosperity depends largely upon the extent, variety and development of its mineral resources.

Mr. Chairman, I am indeed proud to have been entrusted with the responsibility for the department of this government that is charged with the supervision and guidance of, and assistance to, this industry that is so vital to our national well-being.

As I proceed with details of the department's estimates, hon. members will be given an idea of many of the ways in which we are trying to further the progress of our mining industry, but first I should like to touch lightly on some aspects and some problems which are not specifically dealt with by the department.

First I should like to express my own great pleasure, and that of the senior members of my staff, in the work that is being done by the hard-working members of this House who are serving on the select committee on mining. Many prominent people in the mining industry have also spoken to me about the work of this committee—and their comments have been uniformly favourable. The committee's interim report, recently tabled by the chairman, the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) whom I see in his seat, reflected considerable activity by the committee since its appointment. Still more important, however, in my opinion, is the list included in the report of areas for probable future study when the committee resumes its activities after the present session of this House has adjourned. The committee was given broad terms of reference and its interim report contains food for thought by this House, by my department and by the mining industry generally. I think that we may reasonably expect tangible and beneficial results from their continuing studies.

Any industry that is experiencing rapid expansion is bound to have certain ingrown problems. The mining industry is no exception. This is an age that seems to belong to the professional man, the technologist and the technician. That is as true of mining as of any other major industry in which brain is replacing brawn. For several years now the mineral industry has been faced with a chronic scarcity of professionally trained men—geologists, geophysicists, metallurgists, engineers and others capable of assuming positions of responsibility at or near the top of their organizations. This chronic scarcity is becoming acute, and governments and industry are keenly aware of the necessity for remedial action. Frankly, I do not know just what the remedy might be, but possibly the select committee might come up with an answer, or perhaps the hon. Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis) might have a suggestion.

I should like to again commend the same hon. gentleman—the Minister of University Affairs—this time in his role as Minister of Education, on the recent changes in the elementary school curriculum so that now some elementary training in geology is called for in the early school grades. It might well be that the interest inculcated in these formative years will remain with the student and cause him to enroll in one of the mining sciences when the time comes for him to choose his university course.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that these introductory remarks have served to bring home to hon. members of this House the vastly important place that mining has in our way of life. I hope that what I have said will make it easy for them to approve the appropriations which officials of my department consider the minimum cost of providing the services that are needed to ensure that the industry, for which I have the honour to speak here, is to continue its march forward and play an even greater part in our economy than it does today.

I feel that an explanation, if not an apology, is due those hon. members of the Opposition who, last year, as in other years, said in effect, "If the mining industry is so important—and we do not question this—why then is The Department of Mines one of the smallest departments in the government and why is the budget for the department's work not much greater than it is?"

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the question and I believe that it was asked in complete sincerity.

My reply is this: The department is able to operate with a relatively small staff because, over the years, a very efficient system has been built up to handle the work load in all the branches. Each member of the staff in a responsible position is highly trained, skilled and educated in his particular duties. Because they are, without exception, devoted public servants, they are given sufficient autonomy to handle any but the most unusual situations without difficulty.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that we operate on a small budget, simply because no great sum is required to finance the operations of the department. This government, and certainly this department, has never accepted as a criterion of efficiency the amount of money expended. I ask and expect to receive from this House the amount of money actually required to carry on our work for the coming year. In other years, when the work load becomes greater, or new responsibilities are accepted, it is quite possible that our financial requirements will be greater.

But for this coming year we are asking for only $2,657,000 to cover all ordinary expenditures, plus $1 million as capital expenditure for our share of the cost of constructing roads to resources and other roads under the mining and access roads programme.

This is an overall increase of $173,000, over the total for the past year. The reasons for this increase will become apparent as I proceed, but about $70,000 of it can be attributed to the reclassification programme which was put into effect by the civil service commission. I am sure that no hon. member of this House is likely to object to any step which will improve the standing and morale of the devoted men and women who do such an excellent job for the people of Ontario. I suggest that money thus spent is indeed well invested.

Under vote 1201 are included all expenditures of the main office of the department. The total amount of this vote is $544,000, an increase of $48,000 over the estimates for last year. Of this increase, $24,000 is for general maintenance and it may be attributed to a change in operation this year, through which all purchases of office furniture and equipment for the whole department are now centralized in this one vote.

Our total estimates for the geological branch, covered under vote 1202, amount to $1,135,000, slightly more than half of the total ordinary expenditure for the entire department. The increase in this vote is $37,000. With that money we plan to add three geologists and one draftsman to the staff.

There will be one more field party at work this year than last year—26 as compared with 25—and altogether the branch will have at least 50 projects of one kind and another in operation. With the addition of the three geologists it will be possible to have nearly all the field parties under the leadership of a regular member of the staff, rather than by extra part-time geologists, however highly qualified these may be. The cost of geological surveys this year will be $481,600. This includes salaries, maintenance and travel for the personnel involved. The total for this section is $75,300 more than it was in the current year. There will be one more party in the field, and seven parties in all will be working in areas that are very difficult of access and where aircraft must be used. This, naturally, adds materially to the cost.

Included in the geological vote is a total of $373,300 for the production of the very large number of maps and reports of various kinds which are turned out during the year. This is a reduction of $3,900 from the total for last year. This decrease, in spite of the fact that the number of individual publications will be greater than ever before, is made possible only by the development of new and more efficient techniques in the production of our maps.

This year for the second time we are co-operating with The Department of Lands and Forests in its junior forest ranger programme by giving lectures during a two-month period in the summer to the young students who are enrolled in the programme. The instruction will consist of rock and mineral identification and kindred subjects related to prospecting. The cost in this first year of this work will be only $3,100, although it may be anticipated that if the experiment is successful, the work will be extended in subsequent years.

Since 1959 a total of 196,000 square miles of northern Ontario has been covered by airborne magnetometer surveys. The maps which have been produced in that time as a result of this work have revealed a great deal of interesting and potentially very valuable information about the geological resources of the province. This work was financed jointly by our government and the government of Canada. A new contract signed in 1964 provides that the remaining 121,000 square miles of northern Ontario will be covered in the same way during the next three years. The cost of this year's programme, including the production of maps, is $90,500. This represents a reduction of $59,500 from the cost of the same work during 1964. This reduced cost was made possible by better terms with the contracting company, and that was brought about by the company installing more up-to-date machines that do the work much faster and more cheaply.

The work of the geological branch and the value of the maps and reports which are issued as a result of this work are of incalculable benefit to the mining industry. Occasionally it happens, as was the case with the Manitowadge discovery, that the information contained in reports may not be exploited for several years, but more often the reports are put to immediate use.

For example, the compilation map of the Timmins-Kirkland Lake area which was published early in 1964 has been widely acclaimed by exploration people as a most useful tool during the recent Timmins staking rush. The first edition of 3,000 copies was completely sold out in six months, an all-time record for department map sales, and a new edition was required.

The recent decision of the Teck Corporation to purchase and explore property west of the Macassa mine is expected to have great bearing on the life of the old Kirkland Lake mining camp. Company officials have said that a departmental report on deep developments in the Kirkland Lake mines published early last year, together with an older departmental report, had a considerable bearing on the company's decision to go ahead with this mining enterprise, on which $3.5 million may be spent.

In the Red Lake area a map and report of Heyson township published in 1963 led to detailed exploration for gold in a new locality last year.

The series of publications covering industrial minerals in southern Ontario have given considerable impetus to exploration and development of these industrial minerals, particularly building stone, in that part of the province. In that connection it is a pleasure to note that native Ontario marble is to be used extensively in the new Queen's Park complex on which work was started this year.

New exploration activity in two widely separated parts of the province—one in southeastern Ontario, the other in the northwestern area—can be attributed in large part to recent departmental work that has been done there.

Vote 1203 covers operations of the mines inspection branch. The total estimated expenditure for this branch is $343,000, an increase of $14,000 over the current year. Salary increases, because of the reclassification programme and normal increases, amounted to $16,000. Maintenance was down $3,000 and travelling expenses increased by $1,000. The work of the inspection branch is carried out by highly qualified engineers who are responsible for the enforcement of safety regulations and other factors connected with the actual operation of mines. In addition to the headquarters staff in Toronto, the department maintains engineers at seven other points in the province convenient to the mining areas.

In February of this year, we had a disaster at the McIntyre Porcupine mines and these men were called in. I would like to read to you a letter that was sent to me from McIntyre Porcupine mines by Mr. McCodron, the manager. I quote:

Sir:

Four weeks ago, the McIntyre staff began the grim task of fighting an underground fire over a mile below surface and a mile southeast of our main shaft. Fortunately, through the efforts of The Department of Mines, a very excellent system of mine rescue training has been developed over the years and we knew we did not stand alone.

Our first call for help went to local mines who furnished top-calibre mine rescue teams. As we learned more about the size and extent of the fire we found it necessary to accept offers of assistance from Sudbury and Elliot Lake. Mine rescue superintendents from Elliot Lake, Sudbury, Kirkland Lake, Cobalt and Timmins provided equipment and worked around the clock to keep the equipment serviced for mine rescue teams.

The fact that 44 units of McCoa apparatus were kept in continuous use for 12 days was a test to the excellence of the maintenance. There were no accidents nor illness because of faulty equipment. Messrs. Lockhart and McPhail of The Department of Mines were of great assistance in fire headquarters, helping to make decisions and providing top-level guidance at all times. Mr. A. Graham, local mine rescue superintendent, spent three weeks with us and all other superintendents spent approximately eight days at the mine during the height of the fire, providing us 24-hour coverage.

We are full of admiration for the manner in which these men conducted themselves and for the outstanding work performed by the teams. All work was carried out in accordance with mine rescue training under conditions of intense heat and poor visibility.

We cannot be too high in our praise for the men who did this work and the men who trained them.

Respectfully,

McIntyre Porcupine Mines Ltd.,

P. D. McCodron, Manager.

That is some indication of how important the training in rescue and safety regulations is to this industry and to the province.

Included in the same vote is the work of the cable testing laboratory which is operated by the inspection branch. This laboratory provides a vitally important and highly specialized service to the mining industry. Periodic tests required by The Mining Act are carried out at regular intervals to determine the tensile strength and other factors in all cable used for hoisting in mines. Since a fee is charged for each test, most of the operating cost is recovered directly from the industry.

Research which is being conducted jointly by the department and the Ontario mining association is designed to perfect a method of testing ropes while they are still in actual use. The electromagnetic instrument which is used for this purpose has been perfected to the point where it can be used for all except lock-coil ropes. This research is continuing. Lock coil is there is a lock on the outside of all the wires.

The maintenance of two other laboratories, one in Toronto, the other in Cobalt, is covered under vote 1204. The estimated cost of these two installations is $212,000, an increase of $29,000 over the operating cost in the current year. Except for a $5,000 increase in maintenance costs, this is also the result of salary increases. Three additional staff will be taken on by the analytical and metallurgical laboratory which is situated in the tower of the east block.

The other laboratory included in this vote is the Timiskaming testing laboratory located at Cobalt. Total operating costs here are $82,000, a reduction of $4,000 from 1964-65. The increase in staff of the Toronto laboratory has been made necessary by increased work by the geological branch which accounts for about 50 percent of the total work load of the laboratory.

The cost of operating the office of the sulphur fumes arbitrator, as covered in vote 1205, will be $25,000 in the coming year. All of this money will be recovered from the mining companies responsible for the emanation of fumes.

The final item of ordinary expenditure is $398,000 for the operation of the mining lands branch, covered under vote 1206. This is $44,000 more than in the current year. The increase is made up by $36,000 in salary increases, $3,000 added to travelling expenses and a $5,000 increase in maintenance costs. The mining lands branch administers The Mining Act insofar as it pertains to the disposition of Crown lands for mining purposes, The Beach Protection Act, The Canada Companies Lands Act and Section 66 of The Public Lands Act.

That, Mr. Chairman, completes our estimates of the ordinary expenditures of the department for the coming year. There remains only one item, sir, of capital expenditure, found under vote 1207, for the construction of roads to resources and mining and access roads. The total estimate for this work is $1 million, the same as in 1964-65. The cost of the roads to resources is, of course, matched by the federal government and, in some cases, with individual companies that might be in a position to gain most direct benefit from the construction. The mining and access roads programme is entirely a provincial matter, except that here, too, in some cases companies might be asked to share the cost.

Mr. Chairman, I have given in only the most general terms an outline of what my department is doing, and what we plan to do in the months and years ahead. We have scaled down our financial requirements to the bare minimum necessary if this work is to be done satisfactorily, and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that with the highly skilled and devoted staff of this department, every dollar that this House votes for the department's work will be spent to the best possible advantage.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, in rising to comment on the estimates of The Department of Mines, I would like first to congratulate the hon. Minister on a much more optimistic and favourable report in regard to progress in the industry than he was able to present last year or, for that matter, several years.

Since this committee of the House was last convened, there have been many happenings and many new mining developments, most of which have been for the good of the province and the mining industry generally. A year ago the general consensus, it seems to me, was that the mining industry in Ontario was deep in the doldrums. One of the all-time great producing mines, Hollinger, was about to close its doors, thus leaving a vacuum in Timmins, one of our most important mining communities. Kirkland Lake seemed slated for a similar fate. The slump in both total production and the search for new mines was continuing, but then the unexpected happened. We had the finding of vast new ore bodies by Texas Gulf Sulphur near Timmins. Their success so encouraged new prospecting and claim staking that the search for minerals is now, at long last, on the up turn. This miracle happened at a time when most part of capital was switching to British Columbia, Quebec and to other areas where the opportunity and the climate for prospecting appeared much better than in Ontario.

The good fortune continued. Besides Texas Gulf, we have seen the Jones and Laughlin iron ore operation established at Kirkland Lake, and latterly, the Sherman Mines through Cleveland Cliffs at Timagami. In common with all of us, I am sure that the hon. Minister feels most happy about these developments. However, to put things in their proper perspective, I wonder how much credit is justly due to The Department of Mines or to the government for this improved situation. Is it not the simple truth that the change in the mining picture in Ontario was due, not to any new government policy, government action, or government help, but rather to the progressive attitude of certain American mining companies? Their long-range thinking, their energy, their resources and willingness to take a risk, have pulled our chestnuts out of the fire. The hard fact remains that this government was prepared to stand by and write off Timmins and Kirkland Lake and other mining areas, and let exploration and development continue its downward skid.

Focusing now on the upturn in mining, however, the main point is how long can this renewed activity be expected to last? The progress in the mining industry in this day and age, in common with other industries, requires careful planning and positive government action if it is not to sink once again into a situation of fits and starts, of ups and downs, of patchwork accomplishment, unworthy of this industry's true potential.

Just what steps have been taken by this government in the interests of mining? I will say the establishment of the select committee on the problems of mining was a move in the right direction. It is unfortunate, however, that we had to wait until exploration and development reached such a low point before it was set up. It might well have been initiated at least five years ago. The steady decline in mining in Ontario has been apparent for everyone to see over many years. But aside from this, what has been done? Adequate funds have not been provided for roads. The yearly grant of $1 million does not even keep pace with existing requirements in areas with established potential, let alone with the need for access to new frontiers of development.

Up to now, our hon. Minister has been unable to convince his Cabinet colleagues of the urgent need for seeking out and for positive government assistance in developing our latent mineral resources on a sufficiently broad scale, although I am sure he has pointed out the necessity for such action many times. The Cabinet has apparently not gone along with him to support a provincial investigation of mining possibilities in provincial parks. This government has not moved to provide incentives to ensure that the Texas Gulf smelter will be located in the Timmins area, although the northern Ministers fully appreciate the desirability of doing this and what it would mean to northern Ontario, as well as to the province as a whole. This government has consistently shrugged off its responsibility for increasing aid to mining municipalities which are fighting against odds other municipalities do not have to face.

It is hard to understand such lack of interest, such indifference and shallow perspective, in matters pertaining to an industry that has contributed in excess of $16 billion worth of wealth to this province over the years, an industry where the major part of its output has always been exported—thus helping to keep our country's balance of payments in line in a substantial and continuing way, an industry that produces basic materials so necessary for the growth and development of our secondary industries.

Besides all this, we must realize that mining in Ontario now, compared to its future, is only in its adolescence. It has just got nicely started. Geologists claim that we have only scratched the surface. But hard as it is to understand, the facts stand out plainly for everyone to see. This government is ignoring its obligations to a very important industry and segment of our people in this province. Even a preliminary study of the mining industry and the areas where it is located inevitably leads to the conclusion that there are many things that could and should be done to promote more rapid but orderly development. A close study makes this even more important, and further, the responsibility for the future well-being of the industry lies with the government.

It seems to me that this government has a number of very direct responsibilities to this industry to promote its continuing growth and continuing important contribution to our provincial economy.

1. It has the responsibility of encouraging and assisting individuals and industry in seeking out new mineral resources to a far greater degree than has been done in the past few years.
2. It has the responsibility of seeing that the providers of risk capital be given basic guarantees that their money will be used for the stated purpose for which it was supplied.
3. It has the responsibility of reviewing, in all its aspects, the whole field of mining education, health, safety and the future of the people occupied in the industry with the view of making needed adjustments, necessary changes and improvements that are long past due.
4. It has the responsibility of seeing that exposed mineral resources are developed in the best long-term interests of the people of this province.
5. It has the responsibility of providing money and support to mining communities comparable to other localities making roughly the same contribution to the province, and of guaranteeing these mining communities compensation for the depletion of their resources.

6. At the same time, it must fit provincial capital expenditures into these areas into the long-term overall growth plan for the province.

7. Finally, it has the great and pressing responsibility of taking action not five years from now, but now.

This government could face up to these obligations in a number of ways. With regard to encouraging prospecting and development the committee on mining will shortly point out many opportunities which should be grasped and acted upon. More intensive surveys of our established mining areas should be made. Greater use should also be made of proven technical equipment in conducting these surveys. A more complete gathering of known and available mineral and geological information should be completed and made readily available to anyone interested.

I have already commented on the urgent need for more roads and the need for surveys of our park lands. With respect to risk capital, along with the Kimber report the findings of Mr. Justice Kelly will surely turn up information pointing to the necessity of an overhaul of security regulations for the better protection of mining investors.

In the field of education, as well as the health and safety future of those who work in the mines, there is much to be done. After a few years miners find themselves committed to an industry which has no need for older men. It has been estimated that the average useful work span for an underground worker is ten years. This points up to the need for training services to teach other skills to men who have been displaced by time and changing conditions. This should be an important and continuing objective of this government.

Health and safety laws of mines and mining communities have not kept pace with technological changes in mining. Prevention of pollution alone is a subject worth study by a qualified committee and early action needs to be taken.

On the development of exposed mineral resources, surely the government can take steps to ensure that more of our raw minerals are further processed in this province. I hardly need to point out that this would provide secondary industry employment that we will well need in the future. The accomplishment of this objective would not necessarily call for government restrictions but rather for government incentives. Other provinces have demonstrated that such a course is practical and of very great help to regional development.

In general, considerably more moneys should be allocated to this department in order that it can play the role in the greater development of this industry for which this department was originally created. Greater expenditures by this department will result in much greater returns to this province.

So far I have dealt briefly with four important spheres of government responsibility where action is needed to promote a sound and progressing mining industry in Ontario and the well-being of the people in it.

However, it is the problems of the mining municipalities which I am particularly anxious to stress today.

We should first make sure that the regions producing minerals are properly compensated for the depletion of their natural resources, and then that all provincial capital expenditure in such regions be organized to fit the long-term growth plans of the province.

My colleague, the hon. member for Sudbury has recently pointed out the serious problems of the city of Sudbury and its people in his graphic speech during the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

The situation in the city of Sudbury has its counterpart in varying degrees in a great many other mining municipalities throughout this province. It should be pointed out that these municipalities vary in size and organization from the city of Sudbury with a population of some 80,000 to the town of Cobalt with 2,300 residents and the township of Buck with about 7,800 people. While this difference in size and organization make for a variety of problems peculiar to each, they nevertheless all have certain major problems in common.

One, they were born and grew up as a result of mining and their life as of now continues to be dependent upon this industry. Their existence is not aided by the presence of manufacturing plants or other industrial activities. Their eggs, as it were, are all in one basket. Inevitably a time comes when the source of their revenue and employment dwindles and eventually dries up, because mining operations are based on a non-renewable resource. When all the commercial ore in a mine has been removed, it has to close up shop. This leaves the municipality in a financial strait-jacket.

Unless alternative sources of employment are found, the need for existing municipal services diminishes. More rapid amortization of the capital assets of the municipality is required, resulting in increased costs for the financing of municipal capital expenditures. The brunt of these extra costs must then be borne by the remaining residents, many of whom may be unemployed, or face the prospect of moving to another area.

Second, by the very nature of things, a mining municipality must be adjacent to the mines to which it owes its existence. Many are located in hard-to-get-at areas, and usually are quite a distance from the larger Canadian markets. This puts great limitations on the type of new industry unrelated to mining that the municipality can hope to attract.

Third, the rate at which a mine decides to extract and treat its ore often has a great influence on the municipality, sometimes a most detrimental one. Stepped-up production creates peaks of employment, necessitating rapid growth for the community and calls for an equally rapid expansion of civic services. Any reduction in the rate, on the other hand, results in unemployment, yet no corresponding decrease in the municipality's financial burden. Neither the municipality nor the province has the authority to regulate the rate of mine production. A change in world metal markets is quite often the governing factor. These varying conditions and external influences make orderly financial planning development for a mining municipality extremely difficult.

Fourth, as mentioned before, a community serving the mine must be located close to it. This in the past has ruled out the selection of desirable town sites, and has resulted in their locating on difficult ground where costs are high for the installation of watermains, sewers and other services. In passing, I may say the present hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) is to be complimented on his policy which helps prevent such situations from recurring, but we still have to face up to our past mistakes.

Fifthly, miners are young people. The low average age for residents of a mining community means a large school population, and educational costs well above the provincial averages.

From this summary, Mr. Chairman, you can see that the special nature and characteristics of mining communities require more, rather than less, tax money for elementary and essential services than do other communities.

Now let us take a look at how much is actually made available to mining communities through taxation, and how this money is raised. The hon. member for Sudbury gave us a detailed breakdown of this in his remarks. To begin with, taxing rights of these municipalities have always been more restricted than for other communities. In many cases, a mine lies just outside a municipality, which merely acts as a dormitory and commercial centre. The municipality receives no tax money in such situations. Where the mine lies within the municipal boundaries, the mineral lands are then assessable, but the actual ore in these lands is not and cannot be taken into account in determining land values. Further, all the buildings, plant and machinery used in extracting ore are entirely exempt. Thus, the mining municipalities are denied the authority of levying either realty or business taxes against the major part of the properties of the industries they are serving.

In place of direct taxing rights on mining properties thus denied them, mining municipalities have received since 1952 an annual payment from the province. Without going into detail, these grants are based on a formula involving a fixed dollar amount for each employee working at a mine within the borders of the municipality. Provision is also made for fixed dollar per capita grants in respect to miners working at mines outside the municipality.

Now here are the important points to note: The provincial grants have never been comparable in size to what would have been received under normal direct taxation rights available to other municipalities. Further, these payments are not in line with the high degree of industrialization of mining communities for what, in all fairness, should be provided, considering their complete dependence on one industry and considering the contribution they make to the general welfare of the province. The association of mining municipalities of northern Ontario has many times pointed out these facts and recommended constructive changes.

It was this organization which was responsible for first obtaining the government's recognition of these problems back in 1952 that resulted in the special grants to many mining municipalities. The association has more recently presented a very detailed brief along these lines, both to the committee on taxation and to the committee on mining. Their requests are very modest in relation to what is due to them, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, who is quite familiar with these problems, has recently indicated that something needs to be done, but he is awaiting the report of the tax committee.

He quite correctly pointed out that permitting normal powers of assessment to these municipalities would not solve their problems. However, to continue, Mr. Chairman, at this point only half the story has been told. We have so far only examined one side of the coin. Let us now take a look at things from the standpoint of this provincial government.

To begin with, the province receives the benefit of all regular taxes, including corporation tax and sales tax, which are levied against mining companies, just as they are against other companies operating within this province. Since mining operations involve large sums of money, the revenues from these sources is substantial. In addition, Mr. Chairman, this government receives extra revenue from a special source, the provincial mines tax. This tax is levied directly as a percentage of mining company profits, and has produced varying amounts over the years, currently amounting to about $16 million. It has always seemed to me that while the rate of this tax appears reasonable and is in line with other provinces, the very principle of the tax itself is wrong.

Revenues derived from taxation of a wasting natural resource are being used for current provincial expenditures. In other words, we are dipping into our capital to pay for our day-to-day costs. In any case, one thing is crystal clear in reviewing the actual operation of this tax. An inadequate amount of money collected by it, finds its way back to the municipalities by way of the present grant system. Also, very little of it is being used in operation of the mining branch to develop new mining and none of it is being used to create other productive activities in those regions.

The consistent lack of money justly due the mining municipalities over the years, judged by any or every yardstick one chooses to use, has been the cause of the present plight of these communities today. There was some excuse for this condition in the past because the revenue derived from the mining tax loomed much larger in importance to the overall financing of this province than it does at the present time. Today there is absolutely no excuse since this situation no longer holds true. With provincial spending amounting to almost $2 billion, the $16 million revenue from the mine tax is a relatively small consideration and would scarcely be missed in the overall budget.

I hope the House and this government will realize that something needs to be done to rectify these conditions which have gone on much too long—not something small and of a short-sighted stopgap nature, but rather a far-reaching and imaginative re-examination of our whole mineral resource industry, and not simply plugging holes in a leaky dike whose basic foundations have weakened, but a complete rebuilding job of the basic concepts of mining in Ontario, so that this industry, with its communities, can continue to grow and contribute to the wealth of this province. Growth should be of a permanent nature, not the boom-or-bust type of development we have seen in the past.

In line with the Liberal Party's stated policy of constructive criticism and our hon. leader's (Mr. Thompson's) insistence in suggesting definite and positive methods for accomplishing desirable ends, I propose, sir, that the revenues derived from the present provincial mines tax be segregated from other provincial revenues and be expended annually in the following manner:

1. To pay the operating expenses of The Department of Mines. These expenses should be substantially increased to provide an extension of services to the mining industry by way of geochemical and geophysical work; for assistance in the finding and development of new mineral deposits; to provide additional development roads to known natural resources; to provide a stepped-up programme in existing mining schools, and for the establishment of new courses, thus answering the crying need for a greater number of qualified workers and personnel required for the mining industry.

2. To guarantee grants to mining municipalities large enough to put them on an equal basis with equivalent municipalities in the province. These grants should take into consideration the limited life of the primary industry on which the community is based, as well as the other problems peculiar to mining municipalities.

3. To set up a special northern Ontario and mining area industrial development fund to finance the growth of secondary and ancillary industry in these areas. The administration of this fund should be handled by a board located in northern Ontario, composed in part of northerners. It would be assigned the responsibility of promoting and assisting in the development of, and in some cases, underwriting such industry as may be needed to contribute to the permanent growth of these areas. This industrial development would be designed to provide replacement industries to lessen the existing complete economic dependence on the mines with their relatively short life span, and to co-ordinate the introduction of such replacement industry with the gradual slowdown that takes place near the end of a mine's life.

To sum up, let us review what such a programme would accomplish: It would adjust the unfair and economically unsound practice of draining the natural mineral resources from an area and leaving that area high and dry, once the spoils had been taken. Such a principle has been recognized for years in our forest industries, and reforestation programmes are now provided to prevent the depletion of their natural resources. It would remove from the minds of the northern people any suggestion that they are second-class citizens who are being exploited by the south, as they have been, and supported by inadequate handouts. It would provide a major impetus for the growth and development of northern Ontario and a permanent—not transitory and makeshift—foundation for this growth.

Development would be stepped up to match the pace being achieved in other parts of our province. Mining municipalities would be revived and revitalized. There would be no more ramshackle mining towns. The whole mining industry would be given new opportunities for expansion. It would benefit not only the mining municipalities, not only the mining industry, not only the north and the people in it, but the province and this country as a whole. The resulting new mines and other industry would compound the wealth of our natural resources, Mr. Chairman, and broaden the tax revenue base of the whole province.

Such proposed action is certainly not out of line with steps being taken by other provinces, other industries and other areas of our country, where it is realized that long-term planning is required for steady progress in today's world.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. Minister that he present such a programme to his Cabinet colleagues, not in any apologetic way, as one of the minor Ministers in this government, but rather in the forceful manner to which he is fully entitled as a representative of a major resource industry that has contributed, and can continue to contribute greatly, to the stature of this province and to the world position of our great country.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): The homage paid to private enterprise in the mining industry sounds sincere, but last July's sudden windfall in the Windfall scandal has mostly benefited those entrepreneurs, promoters and speculators who were already sitting pretty, financially speaking.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): The lions' share goes to the lions.

Mr. Freeman: But what came after this windfall can only be described as a tempest with chilling winds. I need not remind the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), unfortunately he is not here, that stock manipulations of the magnitude of Windfall Mines and Oil Limited—

Mr. Chairman: Order. I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that any reference to the Windfall inquiry, which is now under the Royal commission conducted by the chief justice, is sub judice and should not be referred to at any time during the remarks that you make.

Mr. Freeman: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that as far as my remarks are concerned with regard to Windfall, or anything in connection with Windfall, nothing I am about to say has not already been said in the newspapers. I have no real reference to the investigation that is going on.

Mr. Sopha: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. With the greatest respect to you, sir, I submit that there is no rule of this House, neither is there any rule of the British House of Commons—to which we look for precedent—which says that any matter submitted to a Royal commission is sub judice, so far as the power of this Legislature is concerned to discuss it. That rule applies to the courts, and I accede to the soundness of that rule, so far as it applies to the courts. It is a proper rule, very salutary. We should not interfere with the due process of law in the courts.

I submit to you, with the greatest respect, that the same soundness does not apply to the submission of any matter to a Royal commission. A Royal commissioner is no more than a servant of this Legislature, appointed under a statute of this government, of this Legislature. He exercises any powers he has, under The Public Enquiries Act, powers given to him by this Legislature, and powers that can be taken away.

Therefore, we do not stand in the same position, sir, of being beholden to a servant of the Legislature. All he is doing is acting under powers entrusted to him, to carry out a specific task and to report back to the government or the Legislature, as the case may be. Therefore, sir, his existence, the conduct of his inquiry, does not in any way circumscribe us from discussing the matters that are in his hands.

It was Leslie Frost who first imprinted that rule on this House. It was he who raised it in connection with the Roach inquiry. We had not heard anything more about it under the aegis of the present Prime Minister, but I see this morning that it is cropping up again. I submit, sir, that according to our traditions and the rules, no such circumscription exists, and I would be the first to protest against the imposition of any limit to the right of free speech in this Legislature.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order, I think the Chairman was unduly hasty, in that I think he could be assured that the hon. member for Fort William was not going to transgress seriously. He was just going to make no more than general comments on an issue that is painfully relevant to mining and, therefore, relevant to a consideration of the mining estimates. He was not going to transgress seriously.

But now the point has been raised because of your apparent sensitivity on the issue, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say—

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: I am speaking to a point of order. Now that the issue has been raised, I want to agree completely with what the hon. member for Sudbury has said. There are two ways of using a Royal commission. One way is to get at the facts, and the other is to take the issue out of the public mind and out of the public discussion, in order to serve the government purposes. If you are going to impose unnecessary restrictions which, incidentally, were particularly unnecessary in light of the remarks my hon. colleague was going to make, then I suggest to you that we have got to get this rule clarified.

This legislative body is supreme in the province of Ontario. We acknowledge that we have to bow in the direction of the courts, but we certainly do not have to bow in the direction of Royal commissions that are established to do a job on behalf of our needs here, and are servants of this Legislature.

Mr. Chairman: It has been my opinion that the usual procedure of the Chairman is to rule out any matters that are sub judice, and on that basis I have made my ruling at this time.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, speaking to this point of order, as a complete layman along these lines, I simply cannot agree with you at all. It has been ably pointed out, not only by the hon. member for Sudbury but also the hon. member for York South, that this is not sub judice; that this has nothing to do with the courts whatsoever; that this is a matter that has been before a Royal commission and that commission is hired, or can be fired, by this Legislature. To me it is incomprehensible that free speech should be stifled by a ruling such as you have made here this morning, in a matter that certainly affects the mining industry of the province of Ontario, and one I think that will be handled with the dignity with which the hon. members of this Legislature usually handle such matters.

We are not going to discuss something and drag the whole affair out in these august chambers. On the other hand, if it happens to cross the way of the estimates, I think the truth must fall where it may, and surely you, as a Chairman who has been in these chambers for many years, are not going to stifle free speech.

Mr. Chairman: Like the member for Bruce, I am also a layman, and I feel at this time I would like to call on the Attorney General to express his views on this matter.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I have to agree that the expression sub judice does not strictly apply to the type of hearing or inquiry conducted by a Royal commission, which is established by this Legislature. There is a great area of such an inquiry which is public, of course, as all the hon. members of the House are aware; much of the evidence submitted before such an inquiry is public matter and can be related and recounted as the press do. Any member of the public is entitled to hear it, see it, see the witnesses, give such evidence and speak upon it.

I think, however, that the good sense of the hon. members would go this far; I think perhaps the hon. members of the House are not apart on this opinion. I would hope, on whatever side they sit—that where the commissioner, who is a judge, after all, sitting as a commissioner, is hearing evidence, and from that evidence will make findings of fact to be presented to this Legislature in due course—and we trust soon, in this particular inquiry, recommendations for action or for legislation, that the good sense of the hon. members might be called upon to refrain from seeking to draw their conclusions from the facts, and to make their recommendations.

There is always, first of all, the danger that the facts as they have been related and, with great respect to the press, may not be exactly as they were recorded on the transcript of the evidence in the inquiry. I think it is only fair, proper, reasonable and sensible to ask the House, in discussing the Windfall matter which is, as the hon. member for York South has said, somewhat related to mining and the securities field, or the dealing with securities where money is raised for mining, to go so far as to refer to the facts.

I think in discussing it we may go so far as to refer to the facts as we have heard them, but I suggest—and I think the hon. members would accept this—that we refrain from trying to draw conclusions or perhaps express recommendations; we have a most eminent judge of our supreme court seeking to do that very thing from facts which have been presented in a judicial inquiry, a Royal commission. His duty is to draw the essence of the evidence and then present recommendations. I think within those limits, Mr. Chairman, you might very well allow some latitude.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, on that point of order, I agree entirely with the hon. Attorney General. When you, sir, called my hon. friend to order I thought that the hon. member for Fort William was making passing reference only to the Windfall episode. The fact that you jumped in so quickly seemed to me an indication that you were not going to allow the name Windfall to be mentioned, let alone discussed. I agree entirely with the hon. Attorney General. I am glad that he has spoken thus for the government. There is only one point on which I disagree with him, and that is from a layman's point of view. My hon. friend says we should not discuss in depth or make recommendations; I doubt the wisdom of putting that imposition on the members. It seems to me that any discussion that takes place in this House in relation to Windfall will help the judge in making his final recommendations to the House. Surely it would not be prejudicial to the cause that he seeks to examine, and surely any discussion that takes place here will be helpful rather than harmful to the final disposition of this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I hope you do not press your ruling in view of what the hon. Attorney General has said; I am sure that the hon. Attorney General and yourself can rely on the hon. members of this House to discuss this not only intelligently, but with the certain reservation that should be applied in situations of this kind.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is just one small comment, if I may. I do not cast any doubt upon the wisdom of hon. members in this House, or upon their intelligence in discussing any matter. I would just say this again. The facts as they have come forth in public may not—again, I throw out this caution—have been the spectacular facts, and not all the facts, I think, are before this House, as they are before the Royal commission. The other point is, therefore, that in discussing them a person might be led into some error by drawing conclusions from them. The report, of course, will be presented and tabled in this House. I suggest that then perhaps would be the time to make full and proper reference to the facts and the recommendations and to criticize them, offer suggestions of amendment, and so on, if this were found proper after the report had been tabled. I merely say to the House that I think considerable discretion and sense should be used in a discussion of this kind.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly again to this point of order. I think perhaps the hon. Attorney General has put his finger on the solution to the problem in suggesting good judgment and discretion. Nobody wants to rush in and violate what is an area demanding certain propriety. But there was one point in his comments that I just want to isolate for a moment and focus attention on.

He said: "We should not draw conclusions; we leave this to Judge Kelly." Now, with respect, I want to suggest to you that if this is what should be done, I have rarely seen it violated more frequently, rightly or wrongly, by not only the press at the editorial level, but even by the Toronto stock exchange, which has drawn its own conclusions. Some of the conclusions, as a result of this inquiry were painfully obvious. The Toronto stock exchange has now publicly announced, I think in the past 48 hours, some pretty far-reaching changes which years ago they dismissed as unwarranted interjections from outside the operations of their private club. Every editorial, every daily paper in this city have, in effect, had their own report on the Kelly commission.

So it gets a little thick that hon. members of the Legislature, who are responsible in a most critical way for public policy in this province—some of us advanced the ideas now being put forward five and six years ago—should be denied an opportunity. So I make this plea, that even in the area of drawing conclusions, while we should respect certain proprieties, if we are denied the right to our conclusions we are going to be denied something which the Toronto stock exchange, the newspaper editors and a lot of people are indulging in as a result of that inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member and myself are apart only on the matter of timing. I simply suggest that when all the facts are before us properly, with any recommendations that may be made, the hon. members of this House are certainly capable then of having, I think, the fullest discussion and offering any suggestions, conclusions or recommendations by way of resolution or legislation they may see fit. This is all I have to offer, Mr. Chairman, on this point. At this time we perhaps should be restrained to some extent in trying to reach conclusions when we have a Royal commissioner trying to reach some recommendations for us.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to comment on this at this moment. This is a Royal commission inquiry and, although the evidence has been presented, until Mr. Justice Kelly reports, it is still sub judice. When you deal with the depth of the discussion that should take place, it puts the Chairman in an awkward position of when to call order. I feel that you should contain yourself in whatever you say in this connection with a great deal of sound judgment and understanding; I would ask the hon. member to carry on with his remarks.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Chairman, it is closely approaching the hour of 12.30, but I would like to say to you, sir, and to the hon. members of this House, that I am somewhat surprised at you, sir, as Chairman, and at the attitude which is apparently adopted by the chair so very quickly on the opening of my remarks. I have thought for the brief time that I have been a member of this House, that I had exhibited some degree of common sense, some degree of restraint, and some degree of courtesy to all of the hon. members, to the Speaker, to the Chairman and to everyone in connection with this House. I regret that you, sir, as Chairman, or that your advisors may have suggested to you that I had any intention of going beyond the bounds of reasonable decency in laying a basis for my approach with regard to my remarks on the estimates of The Department of Mines. This I regret exceedingly and I am very sorry that you, sir, should have adopted an attitude of that kind.

Mr. Chairman: I did not have any intention of hurting anyone's feelings, nor did I take any advice from anyone; it was my own advice in the remarks which I made. I apologize if the member took it that way. All I am trying to do is to conduct the Chairman's job in an orderly manner.

It being 12.30 o'clock, the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Wednesday, June 16, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Wednesday, June 16, 1965

Estimates, Department of Mines, Mr. Wardrope, continued	4259
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Rowntree, agreed to	4295

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINES (continued)

Mr. Chairman: Before continuing, I wish to bring to the attention of the members of the House that we welcome as guests to the Legislature this afternoon, students from the following schools: In the west gallery, Colborne Street senior public school, Whitby; in the east gallery, school section number 1, Harwich Wilson school, Chatham.

Mr. E. G. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, to begin now leaves me in a bit of a quandary. I think, with your understanding, perhaps I should begin again to carry the intent of the remarks I have to make.

Mr. Chairman, the homage paid to private enterprise in the mining industry sounds sincere, but last July's sudden windfall in the Windfall scandal has mostly benefited those entrepreneurs, promoters and speculators who were already sitting pretty, financially speaking. But what came after this windfall can only be described as a tempest with chilling winds. I need not remind the hon. members that stock manipulations of the magnitude of Windfall Mines and Oil Limited resulted in the appointment of a Royal commission whose findings we will learn later this year.

The Windfall scandal is a direct result of private enterprise taking advantage of existing loopholes in the Acts connected with the mining industry, a result of a toothless Ontario securities commission, and a desire to get rich quick. The fact that the Windfall scandal could develop on the basis of innuendo and rumours speaks for tighter controls of mining stock manipulations by the government.

I have always found that when an association starts defending its credo there is something seriously wrong. Here is a quote from the brief submitted by the broker-dealers' association of Ontario to the select committee on mining:

Even though the broker-dealer may be the controlling shareholder, underwriter, a director and distributor of the company's shares, there is not necessarily an undesirable conflict of interest. Securities regulations and association requirements make it difficult for a broker-dealer to benefit to the public detriment as a result of this relationship.

It was not very difficult in the case of Texas Gulf or Windfall and I must marvel at the lack of sagacity on the part of the association to reveal themselves for what they are in the brief that was written and submitted after the Windfall scandal came out into the open.

However, I am prepared to wait and see what the Kelly commission recommends, and what the government will or will not do after reading this list of proposed do's and don'ts.

How did the Windfall scandal start? It was a by-product of a large mineral finding by a United States firm, Texas Gulf Sulphur Company, near Timmins. This company had explored the Timmins area for several years and had finally been rewarded by success. The Windfall myth could not have developed had it not been for the US company.

Why, we could ask, had not a Canadian mining company found the mineral deposits near Timmins?

After all, the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) has said recently, and I quote: "Private enterprise can do a better job than government in mining exploration." In the light of what happened in the Windfall scandal, I consider this a very fatuous remark, and I am prepared to offer proof that the private enterprise system worked to the public detriment in the Windfall example.

The announcement of the large mineral findings was made by Texas Gulf Sulphur Company, and there is reason to believe that certain insiders got rich quicker than the general public which was officially unaware of the find. Yet the hon. Minister of Mines said in the same interview, published by the Toronto Telegram on May 13, 1965, and I quote: "Geological information is made available to the public as soon as it can be published by the department, so that everyone has an equal chance to acquire mining lands of interest."

We of the New Democratic Party do not hold the view that private enterprise can do a better job than government in mining exploration. On the contrary, and I will spell out our reasons. But first, let me propose what in our opinion would stimulate the mining industry in Ontario and the Canadian industry in general.

We ask the Ontario government to establish a Crown corporation for the exploration of minerals in this province. With an initial capital outlay of about $3 million a year, this corporation could get into the business of finding mineral deposits and developing new mines.

This corporation should be given discretionary powers to acquire mining claims or properties, and to lease management rights for such properties to bona-fide mining companies. This corporation could acquire shares in any operating company formed to exploit such properties, or it could undertake the operation of mining properties under its own jurisdiction.

The aspect of private or free enterprise would be maintained by allowing this corporation to be taxed and to be subject to the same competitive conditions that exist today in the mining industry. This corporation, in other words, should be a profit-making body.

It could be argued that this is not the time to explore for mineral deposits as the mining industry generally is doing very well. But the market for mining products is expanding rapidly, except for uranium and gold. However, if President de Gaulle and Prime Minister Pearson decide to make a deal, France will want $700 million to $800 million worth of uranium from Canada. This would rekindle the dying embers of the uranium industry in Elliot Lake and elsewhere in Ontario.

The market potential for more and more minerals is there, but what is Ontario doing to explore new ore deposits? Only the giants in the exploration field are able to finance a systematic search for mineral deposits. Because of the risk, and because of tax considerations, smaller exploration companies have to rely on the unhealthy system of raising money through the so-called penny market. This often results in investors losing their money because they are victims of what we call non-mine promotions.

Furthermore, may I point out that of this capital invested through the penny-stock market, only about 40 per cent ever reaches the corporate treasuries. Sixty per cent of this invested money goes into the pockets of promoters, broker-dealers and for other profits in the non-mine game. And of this 40 per cent, only 18 per cent is used for exploratory purposes.

Even E. K. Cork, the author of the 1962 staff study for the Royal commission on banking and finance, said in his report:

Government should adopt wise rules to ensure full and honest disclosure to the public, including prompt and detailed reporting of trading by insiders. Greater domestic participation and control—and these two words are emphasized—in Canadian mining could be encouraged.

The voices who advocate a direct participation of government in mining exploration and development are by now forming a chorus whose general theme is that something must be done. We believe that our proposed Crown corporation for the exploration of minerals in Ontario is the perfect answer.

Here is the opinion of five international experts who reported to the organization for economic co-operation and development in 1964:

Canadian prosperity will in the long run depend on the exploitation of a judicious mixture of its rich reserves of natural resources and its equally rich—but almost wholly untapped—reserves of scientific ingenuity and technological competence.

There are some of the positive voices in the chorus. Commenting on the Canadian mining industry, two members of the department of economics at Laurentian University in Sudbury found fit to state, and I quote:

Whatever the source of the disturbances, it is manifestly true that the mining industry is characterized by sudden and random fluctuations in production . . . The purpose here is not to suggest how this variability might be lessened, since the possibility of doing so appears to be minimal unless the province resorted to such close government controls as to stifle the initiative and growth of the industry.

This is a remarkable statement. Here are two professors stating the ills of the mining industry, suggesting a cure but shying away from their own conclusions. Again I must stress that the proposed Crown corporation could very well act as a catalyst to the entire industry, reforming its unsalient aspects, stimulating its progress, helping the junior mining companies along their way and, last but not least, making sure that the individual prospector has more than just a fighting chance of succeeding to maintain his identity.

Last year, the industrial mineral production in Ontario amounted to $911 million, less than in previous years. In 1960 Canadian metal mining companies spent a total of $44,345,000 for exploration, much of which was done in Ontario. Of this $44,345,000 for exploration, 86 per cent was spent by companies of appreciable financial strength, leaving a meagre 14 per cent to the fledgling junior companies.

The reason for this imbalance becomes clear when we consider that of all the mining prospects under exploration, only one in several thousand ever goes into production and returns a profit. In other words, the odds against a mining prospect turning into a profit-making mine are pitifully small. Bearing this in mind I think it is only common sense to leave much of the exploration to an Ontario Crown corporation which can afford to lose money and under the circumstances of the earnings that the province gets from the mining industry, this could be money extremely well invested.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): That is a great theory; wonderful!

Mr. Freeman: It works.

Mr. G. H. Peck (Scarborough Centre): Where?

Mr. Freeman: In many countries in the world. Our neighbouring province is putting it into operation very soon, on a much larger scale than I am proposing.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You might protect some of your own backbenchers who put their money in and lost it.

Mr. Freeman: If the Crown corporation's team of prospectors strikes it rich, the mining industry will gain from the find, and so will individuals or junior mining companies.

Hon. members on the government side of this House need not be afraid that what I propose is what they like to call creeping socialism. While I do not pretend to advocate the Crown corporation as a cure-all for the mining industry I maintain that it will supply our province with new vigour, new hope, new opportunities. An effective cure-all would entail measures far more sweeping and thorough than a Crown corporation, but that is a matter which we hope the Kelly commission in its report will bring to the attention of the government.

I haven't exhausted my reasons for the establishment of a Crown corporation by any means. The Ontario mining industry has little if anything of what could be termed a general inventory of mine prospects with marginal deposits. Some of these deposits of minerals are not rich enough to be developed at this time. But unless the mining industry systematically tables these prospects with their exact data, it cannot hope to know when the time has come to develop a mine.

A provincial Crown corporation could serve as the central library of such deposits and a team of computer experts could then determine when the development of a mine becomes feasible. The price of the metal involved could rise slightly, or the production methods could become more economical—the two main reasons for going ahead and mining these marginal deposits.

Better still, the Crown corporation could acquire these marginal deposits and lease them back to the original owner or to a new company for development depending on the interest shown by the mining industry.

Let me take a look at the methods used in exploration today. The old time prospector cannot hope to compete with modern methods of exploration such as geophysics and geochemistry. So what should he do when faced with advanced technology? If you can't lick 'em, join 'em. That sort of philosophy doesn't apply to the members of this party when we look across the aisle to the government benches. But it applies very well to the prospector.

Those bright young men from the universities with all their new-fangled ideas and techniques will, I can assure you, be very grateful for some sound advice from the oldtimers. And so, I can envision teams of traditional prospectors, mining graduates, and technicians combing northern Ontario for mineral deposits under the auspices of the proposed Crown corporation. These team members will be free from financial worry, free from pressure of having to make a strike as soon as possible, free to use nothing but the best in geophysical and geochemical detecting methods. I think this makes sense.

Up to now, an exploration prospect was normally optioned to a mining company or a syndicate for further testing. This is the time when frustration sets in for the prospector. What will happen to his exploration prospect? With the Crown corporation moving in and exploring the prospect, the finder can rest assured that he will get a straight and honest deal in return.

The other current method of exploring prospects is even more hazardous. Often a promoter will form a new mining company before sufficient work has been done on the mining property. The promoter then tries to issue stock to the public because cash is needed to test the property.

As I said earlier, only a few cents of every dollar invested by the public in new mining prospects goes to actual exploration. Even the most apologetic, free-enterprise adherent cannot call this lopsided ratio satisfactory or efficient. What is more, this antiquated method of financing exploration is dangerous. In Ontario, most exploration companies get started in this manner and often find that the subscribed money is used up before a strike is made, or worse still, that the property being explored is not worth developing because it shows only a marginal deposit.

But let me pursue this line of thought for a moment. Suppose the exploration company has hit, literally, pay dirt. If it is an old, established mining company with large assets, the development of a new mine is no headache.

In 1962, Ontario mining companies had stashed away $400 million for the development of new mines. Because of the risk involved in the mining industry under the present setup, banks do not normally go in for financing mine developments. But what about a new company that has not got a functioning organization? Where can it get the money to develop the strike?

Again, a Crown corporation is the answer. It would then buy the mineral rights from the new company and lease the mining rights back to the newcomer in the field, acting both as low-interest banker and consultant.

Obviously enough, the Ontario government should exercise strict control over such a Crown corporation for the exploration of minerals. The government should impose time limits for the exploration and development of mines. The sale of mining properties or deposits by the corporation should be by tender or by public auction, guaranteeing a fair chance to every interested party.

I have described the main reasons why the New Democratic Party proposes a Crown corporation for the exploration of minerals in Ontario. The select committee on mining, of which I am a member, will go on this year, I believe, trying to assess the ills from which Ontario's mining industry is suffering.

Many of northern Ontario's mining communities are dissatisfied. Some are moribund, others are struggling against taxation odds. They have not grown homogeneously because their reason for existence is a mine. As the erratic mining market fluctuates, as mines deteriorate or are abandoned, the communities that depend on the mines suffer.

If these mining communities were banded together, if they were organized in district governments rather than fending for themselves, if, in fact, a sound regional economic development programme for northern Ontario were instituted, their future might not look so bleak. Such a reorganization into district governments would do more than provide immediate help where needed. It would stimulate the entire mining industry and the mining communities would lose their stigma which is the result of depression-based attitudes adopted by the mining industry.

We know that the industry is short of manpower, both of miners and of scientists. If the industry were given incentives, if it were cleaned up, then we could expect young men all over Ontario to take a second look at mining and think twice before getting a job that promises more economic security than mining does at this time.

I am sure I have the indulgence of the House for using so many ifs, whens and buts. The fact that I have to do so points out the deficiencies in the mining industry and the way it is set up in the province of Ontario, Mr. Chairman.

At this time, mining in Ontario is being shaken up by the investigation of the Kelly commission. The industry and the government have been jarred out of apathy and complacency by the Windfall scandal, by the radioactive pollution of several lakes near Elliot Lake, by the—we hope—temporary decline of the uranium mining industry and of the gold mining industry.

Through the select committee on mining, individuals, companies, associations and communities in northern Ontario have voiced their criticism. They have presented their suggestions on how an unstable industry could be made stable.

We believe that the need for the establishment of an Ontario Crown corporation for the exploration of minerals is pressing. We are fully aware that most practices of the Ontario mining industry and of the stock market promotion of new mines have to be remedied. But these are measures of repair. What we suggest with the establishment of a Crown corporation is a novel way perhaps of getting things done.

The government need not wait for the final report of the select committee on mining. Surely the hon. Minister of Mines is aware of the benefits of such a Crown corporation which we see as a happy marriage between private enterprise ideology and government-sponsored and financed incentive. The offspring of such a marriage will be the expansion of the mining industry, tailored to export markets.

Our province has a vast hinterland full to the brim with mineral deposits. Having these resources puts us in a position where we can explore and exploit our soil. But unless we grasp this chance and explore this soil methodically with government backing, we are being shortsighted to the point of negligence.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I wonder if the hon. Minister would inform us of the details—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

On vote 1201:

Mr. Sopha: By your leave, sir, I was about to ask the hon. Minister if he would inform us of the details of the terms and conditions under which certain concessions were granted to various companies for exploration in the James Bay watershed at some time between the two meetings of the House.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Would the hon. member like me to give him all of them?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, please.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: These are three-year exploratory licences of occupation at the James Bay lowlands.

The licence area 13788: An area of 58,650 acres; total expenditure, $100,000, $25,000 the first year—these are the terms under which they were let, you understand—$35,000 the second year, $40,000 the third year; rent $3,000 annually; no bond; name Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, c/o of N. H. Ursel, Toronto.

The next one was licence 13798: Area of 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; the name, Fort Reliance Minerals Limited, 25 King Street West, Toronto.

The next one, licence 13799: Area of 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name Duncan R. Derry Limited—

Mr. Sopha: Duncan R.—?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Derry, D-e-r-r-y, 25 King Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13758: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Consolidated Morrison Exploration Limited, Suite 1502, 80 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13759: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Argore Explorations Limited, Suite 1502, 80 Richmond Street, Toronto.

Licence 13760: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Goldray Mines Limited, Suite 202, 220 Bay Street, Toronto.

Licence 13761: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Keevil Mining Corporation Limited, Suite 1000, 11 Adelaide Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13788—is the hon. member able to get these down?

Mr. Sopha: Yes; oh yes, fine, thank you!

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Licence 13788: Area 58,650 acres; total expenditure $100,000, $25,000 first year, $35,000 second year, $40,000 third year; rent $3,000 annually; no bond; name, Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 85 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13798: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; the name, Fort Reliance Minerals Limited, 25 King Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13799: Area of 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Duncan R. Derry Limited, 25 King Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13758: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Consolidated Morrison Exploration Limited, Suite 1502, 80 Richmond Street West, Toronto.

Licence 13759: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Argore Explorations Limited, Suite 1502, 80 Richmond Street, Toronto.

Licence 13760: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Goldray Mines Limited, Suite 202, 220 Bay Street, Toronto.

Licence 13761: Area 64,000 acres; annual expenditure $1 per acre, $25,000 minimum; rent $1,000 annually; bond $25,000; name, Keevil Mining Group Limited, Suite 1000, 11 Adelaide Street West, Toronto.

Mr. Sopha: Does that mark the making of a precedent within the province of letting the exclusive right to export the minerals in this fashion to people such as these?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: This was done quite recently and the reason it was done was because there was no outcropping in the area at all. It was all marshy water, and so on. Any signs of minerals were indications by the magnetometer survey, and it takes a lot of money to do it.

The thing is tied up. If they discover anything of value then their acreage is cut away down and the money that they pay is increased, and so on.

This is an area that we want explored. We had no means for years of doing it. It cannot be done by men on foot, the prospector. He goes up in the winter time, he puts stakes in and in the spring when the ice is all gone and the water comes the stakes are all gone and we cannot keep any track of whether it is staked or not. So we thought that this was a good way to do it. It brought money in to the department and it had the appearance of developing an area which has never been touched or developed before.

Mr. Sopha: I think this does represent a precedent. I agree in general outline with the desire to get these areas explored. I am less impressed with whether there was an outcrop of precambrian shield; there was no outcrop of precambrian in the Texas Gulf Sulphur discovery, but yet they ended up with several scores of millions of tons of gold-bearing ore.

However, the price for these concessions does not appear to be out of line, $25,000 is not a lot of money to be required to spend in respect of 64,000 acres which, according to my calculations, represents—I am not very good in mathematics—that would be about 100 square miles of territory.

I just want to draw a comparison with Quebec. The Department of Resources in Quebec, under the leadership of the hon. Rene Levesque, I see in the paper, has granted a concession for prospecting for minerals in northern Quebec, I think in Abitibi county. Mr. Levesque was shrewd enough to keep 11 per cent of the action—if I may use a little bit of jargon from the street.

He decided that if people were going to get an exclusive right to look for minerals in part of Quebec then the people of Quebec would participate in the profits. If I understand the deal correctly, Quebec and therefore the people of Quebec, are to get 11 per cent of the net profit accruing from the development of any ore bodies within that area and without having to put up a five-cent piece toward the exploration.

Now, I would have thought—in fact I was rather surprised—we have not had any difficulty in this province in finding the major ore bodies; they have become revealed from time to time and exploited pretty progressively over the years. In regard to some, a market had to be created, and that is true of an ore body in my own community which ore, when found in 1882, was not of an economic nature and a market had to be created to use it. But I do not see that our ore should be given to groups—and I must say that other than the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway, I thought they had enough mining lands.

We have discussed them at great length in this Legislature and they have too much land. I would like to see us take some back from them and here we see them coming further into the piece and getting leases on further lands to explore for minerals. That really surprises me, because they made a great thing before the mining committee that they were granting licences to people to look for ores in the lands they now hold. If they are not willing to look for ores in the lands they now hold, what are they doing up in the James Bay watershed with a lease from this department to look for ores that may or may not be found under the great clay belt up in that area?

May I ask the hon. Minister whether the thought occurred to him that he might make one of the terms of the lease that the government would participate in the profits from the development of any ores?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Speaking of the Algoma Central, they surrendered the mineral rights of eight and a half townships. The procedure has been finalized in the following: The mineral rights of the townships of Alderson, Mildred, Gurney and the west part of Glasgow.

Is the hon. member familiar with these areas? These are ones they had before: (a) Voluntary surrender dated March 2, 1965; (b) Withdrawal order dated April 9, 1965; (c) Notice of determination dated April 10, 1965; (d) Order dated June 2, 1965, throwing the mineral rights open for staking on June 29, 1965.

The mineral rights of the townships of Martin and Templeton—these have all been returned to us—voluntary surrender dated June 4; notice of determination dated June 29; withdrawal order dated June 29; order dated August 10, throwing the mineral rights open for staking on August 31, 1965.

The remaining townships, Landry, Way and the south half of Franz, have not, as yet, been finalized. The searches of title to complete the documents are so involved that I have not been able to proceed with this matter further at the present time. That is signed by our supervisor of our granted lands section.

The documents surrendering the south half of Franz is in the hands of the railway solicitor. Mr. J. Grant is examining the title of Way and Landry this week. Delay on these townships is due to involved titles.

That is the story on that, but in the new ones in the north—James Bay—if there is anything found, they get 10 per cent and we keep 90 per cent of the area, if they lease it, and then all results of what they find come to us. That is the deal. We thought at the time that it was very fair, and we were also anxious to get this area explored and magnetometerized, and so on, so we would know exactly whether there was anything there or not. That is the story.

Mr. Sopha: When you say you keep 90 per cent—what do you keep 90 per cent of?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Of the area; they get 10 per cent and we keep 90 per cent.

Mr. Sopha: If they find something, they can point out 10 per cent of the area they want?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Checkerboard.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, I see—using the checkerboard grids.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. Sopha: I see.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Minister to enlarge a little bit upon the Algoma Central situation. I understand it to be an attempt to discover a china clay deposit which would establish an industry in that area, and I think it was generally pointed at that idea. Perhaps the hon. Minister could—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I want to say how proud I was to be associated with my friend, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Taylor) who made such a thoughtful presentation as he did today. I do not want to be accused of flattering him, but he is a man of success in the business world and this House has been deprived for too long of the very useful comments based on his own experiences that he is able to make, as demonstrated this morning.

Some hon. members: Hear hear!

Mr. Sopha: I thought his remarks concerning the grants, to mining municipalities and the general use of the mines' profit taxes were very apropos and, of course, one is faced, despite the entreaties of the municipalities, with sharing more gratefully in those grants. Yet one is faced with the stolid and steadfast reply of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) that we have to wait for the Smith committee to report. Now that is all I want to say about it.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: At this time, if the Minister cares to reply to some of the comments made in the introductory speeches, I think he should be given this opportunity, and then we will deal with the items under this vote.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I have the same comment to make about the hon. member for Timiskaming. I want to congratulate him on a very thoughtful presentation, and he may be assured that The Department of Mines will give the items their very sincere thought and attention. I have some personal knowledge of the hon. member. The Taylor Hardware Company has been a renowned organization in the north for years. I think it was in 1925 that I took the first diamond drills into Red Lake, and those sleighs were loaded with boxes labelled the Taylor Hardware Company. So it shows the House how long his father, his grandfather and he himself have had a long line of succession in that very successful organization that has been of tremendous help to the mining industry, not only through this province, but through the rest of Canada.

So I agree with the hon. member for Sudbury, it is a very thoughtful presentation and there is no man more able to give it than the hon. member for Timiskaming.

The other thing that I want to mention is one that the hon. Attorney General generally asked about. This is kaolin and china clay mentioned only in those licences that will go to the Algoma Central and these other people. All the other minerals are open for staking to anybody else. But if you are advising any of your friends, it is a very difficult territory and very costly to work, because it is so heavily overlain with overburden and water. But that is what the licences are for, kaolin clay and china clay. Does that answer your question?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, under this vote I would like to spend a few minutes speaking about the development by way of exploration and prospecting of mining prospects within the province of Ontario, and their proper financing, which, of course, is a matter of great concern to our party.

My colleague, the hon. member for Fort William has put before this committee, Mr. Chairman, an imaginative proposal as to the way in which the mining prospects in the province of Ontario could be developed in the public interest. I would like to spend a few minutes comparing his proposal, imaginative as it is, with the pattern under which so much of the speculative mining development has taken place in the province of Ontario under antiquated financing methods. I might say, Mr. Chairman, that any similarity between what I have to relate and recent events, is purely coincidental.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, might I just say a word to the hon. member for Riverdale? That comes under vote 1206, and if you will wait till that time we will go very definitely into the whole thing with you and discuss it at that time, if that is satisfactory to you.

Mr. Renwick: Just so that I will be perfectly clear, I intended to outline in some detail, a typical pattern of financing in respect to the mining field, and I would assume that the hon. Minister means I may do so under vote 1206?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if we are back on 1201, the main office, I wanted to raise and carry through a point that my colleague, the hon. member for Fort William touched on, and this is the question of research. I presume that the main office estimate would be the appropriate place for discussing this. If it is not, I will be guided otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I think that is right.

Mr. MacDonald: My colleague drew attention to something which I think this House may or may not be aware of, but which is rather startling—that a study was made by a committee for scientific and technical personnel of the organization of economic co-operation and development, more familiarly known as OECD, in 1964. This was a committee that came, in the first instance, to study education aspects related to the mining industry. In the course of their official report, they had some comments with regard to research in the mining field in the province of Ontario or, more broadly speaking, Canada, which I think this House might well ponder.

The first paragraph of what I am going to quote from this report was referred to by my colleague the hon. member for Fort William in the course of his introductory statement, namely, that:

Canadian prosperity will, in the long run, depend on the exploitation of a judicious mixture of its rich reserves of natural resources and its equally rich, but almost wholly untapped, reserves of scientific ingenuity and technological competence.

Before I go any further, let me say that this was a team of five examiners from the mining industry of the US, the UK and France. In other words, here are the disinterested observations of experts and knowledgeable people with extensive mining experience in the field from three other countries. They came to look at education related to the mining industry in this country, and it was in the course of their report that they made the comments that we have this almost wholly untapped reserves of scientific ingenuity and technological competence. Let me give the rest of the four or five paragraphs of quote, and then I have some comments that I would like to make. I am quoting:

A low level of research initiative hampers the development of a unique Canadian province which Canada needs if it is to compete successfully in international markets as something other than a mere supplier of raw materials. The volume of research activity in Canada is relatively low. Canadian research is only about one-third that of the UK or the US. Curiously and unhappily, the sector which seems to be least aware of the need, and the least excited by the challenge and opportunity of research, is industry itself, and the Canadian investors who might profit handsomely from the harnessing of modern science to Canada's vast reserves of natural resources. Canada's economic life has been dominated by industries which depend on the exploitation of natural resources rather than on the exploitation of technical competence and ingenuity. The creation of distinctive Canadian products will depend on Canadian research and developments. The appeal of tax concessions for research expenditure is offset by the fact that expenditures for the purchase of research results from parent firms or others are tax deductible as a normal business expense. Government subsidies are a very dull spur on the thick skins of conservative managements. A more effective stimulus seems to be the research contract, under which research becomes a commodity for the firm to sell. To be effective, Canadian research should be directed to meeting Canadian needs and to exploiting Canadian resources both natural and intellectual.

Interestingly enough, this gives me rather authoritative confirmation of a point that I have attempted to make a number of times in this Legislature on debate on the mining industry, particularly with reference to uranium. The hon. Minister—I say this happily; all of us say it happily—points to the fact that we may, before the end of this decade, be getting out of the slump into which the uranium industry fell. But the tragedy of that, Mr. Chairman, is that when the uranium industry came into its own in the mid-1950s and got contracts through Crown agencies at Ottawa, chiefly for delivery to the United States, they got contracts, as we have said so often in this House, at price levels which gave them a fair return on the investment of their capital, adequate profits on an annual basis, plus a complete capital write-off in a five or six-year period. This means to say that those red-blooded, hairy-chested free enterprisers who went in to develop Elliot Lake and put in $325 million were working on a pretty sure thing, because at the end of five or six years, collectively they had all got their money back. The people who were left holding the bag were the little fellows, the small business men. I heard somebody behind me say here is one. I will not look to see who said that. As a matter of fact, I think there are a fair number around this House.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Not a hairy-chested one.

Mr. MacDonald: Not hairy-chested, he says. Maybe you need to have a hairy chest to be able to get the kind of deal so that you do not lose the money.

However, let me pursue this and not get side-tracked. The other people who lost, Mr. Chairman, are the Canadian people. Or let me put it another way—the Canadian people as a whole who put money into the federal government, and the Ontario people who put money not only into the federal government, but the provincial government. These are the people who lost the money. Unfortunately, what has happened, as always happens in this rather lawless free enterprise system, is that the little fellows get bought out; they have no alternative. You have two giants left in the field who have had all their original capital returned, sitting on a magnificent resource which was our resource until we leased it to them. Already, sooner than we expected, there is now the prospect that this industry is going to come booming back.

We built it. Any money they put into it they got back in five years. They are now sitting on the resource with a proprietary control, and, in the very near future, face the prospect of reaping great benefits. They will get the profit. We carried the risk—they did not—the little fellows and the people of this nation and this province.

Now I come back to tie in with my comments on research. We were deploring the decline in the uranium industry and anticipating the prospect that decline was going to continue maybe into the early 1970s. Many times in this House we have asked why is it not an obligation on an industry that found itself in the position of being left with almost exclusively civilian markets, which could not absorb the peak production that they had a few years ago, to use some of the millions which they had accumulated into developing their own markets. Or, alternatively, if the government does not feel that you need to leave this obligation wholly to the private enterprise itself, why did not the government to a greater extent sit down with them jointly in mapping out a research programme?

Let me throw this into what I think is an accurate perspective, and one which has been used in the House before. What has happened to uranium in the past few years is not a unique development in mining; it is a duplicate of what happened to nickel after World War 1. The nickel industry was a wartime creation. At the end of the war, when the wartime needs suddenly disappeared, the nickel industry was, to a considerable extent, a white elephant. It would be very interesting to have somebody go back and look in and get the details in a serious research project as to the amount of money that was put by nickel into research in developing the civilian markets, with the result that we all know today. You can hardly turn around, no matter where you are, but you will find some product in the civilian market of the nickel industry. They developed it themselves.

What I want to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister and this House is that the amount of money that was put by the uranium industry to developing the civilian market was peanuts.

It has been pointed out, for example—and

I would be curious if the hon. Minister can reply to it—in the latest report on this area of research, which I understand was being looked into provincially and I know federally, too, namely, that uranium might be used with iron in an alloy because it is an anticorrosive. The amount of uranium that would be required for the automobile industry alone—and thereby get rid of that problem that bugs the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) when salt corrodes his car until it collapses on the road, as he is driving down from Owen Sound each week to get to the House—would be about 13,000 tons, our peak production in, I think it was, 1960. What is the reason for the lack of this development? It is too costly?

This is only one of the many illustrations of what might have been done to develop the civilian market. But the uranium industry did not do it. Here we have a study by experts in the United States, France and Britain, who are pointing to the fact that there is a refusal or a failure on the part of the industry on the whole or Canada as a nation—and we suffer the consequences of that failure—to develop the scientific aspects in this industry, to intensify the research, so that the mining industry would not be so much a simple proposition of producing raw material and exporting it to the rest of the world in keeping with our role as hewers of wood and drawers of water throughout history, but rather would be one that would really develop the full potential of not only our natural resources but our human resources.

I wonder if the hon. Minister has any comment on these general observations with regard to more intensive research and more particularly, what has happened, if anything, in the uranium industry to assure the development of civilian markets rather than hoping so completely, or trusting so completely, on the whims of de Gaulle for the future welfare of that industry.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is a very knowledgeable submission and it shows that the hon. member has made a lot of study of it. All the companies in the uranium industry did not make money. Stanrock, if you remember, went bankrupt.

Mr. MacDonald: The little ones that lost got bought out for a song.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The USA provided the risk money for those uranium mines and, as you know, the federal government controls the uranium markets.

But there are two things I would point out. The group that the hon. member mentioned is financed partly—I do not know how much—by the mines at Elliot Lake. I think they are paying part of the research. And then, of course, at the present time, as the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) will know, we are making examinations at Sheridan Park—the very thing the hon. member was speaking of, which is so important for different metals in the car business and other things.

Research on that has been gone into very extensively by International Nickel, Falconbridge, Rio Algom and Consolidated Mining and Smelting. They are all in it in a very big way, although they do not tell us what amount of money they put into it, but they are all in that field. That paper the hon. member mentioned is by a very significant group, who did a great job. I have seen some of their submissions and that is a good group there.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we are confusing things. This comment was part of a report of a five-man team that was sent in from the OECD and I am convinced that it has nothing to do with this joint research—I know it was announced in the House in earlier years during consideration of the estimates—that has been going on in the province of Ontario. In fact, this really has nothing to do with research itself; this was to study our research practices and our educational practices in regard to mining in this country and it was in the course of their report on what we do in this connection here that they made these observations as to the rather pitiful amount of research that is going on and our failure to develop our technological potential as well as our natural resources. So that nobody may be confused, I do not think this has any relation to what the hon. Minister was talking about, namely, the rather joint effort in industry, and to some extent with the government, through the Sheridan Park development.

Mr. Sopha: I want to say I listened with great interest to the hon. Minister with his euphemistic summary of the developments in the mining industry over the past year, and noted the contrast with the atmosphere of gloom that he had last year about it. His report, of course, was followed by the appointment of the select committee of this House to look into the problems of the mining industry.

He quoted my comment about the mining industry being sick and I do not retreat one inch, nay, not even a millimetre, from that position, and I take the position now that the disclosures of the Windfall Royal commission have indicated to me that the mining industry is sicker than I thought it was.

I sometimes validly hold the point of view that I think it is questionable whether we should have a Department of Mines at all in this province, whether the expense is justified. After all, the development of the mining industry, that is to say, the supply of its financial resources, resides in The Department of the Attorney General. The hon. Attorney General has far more to do with the character of the mining industry than the hon. Minister of Mines has, for it is within his department that the regulation of the supply of funds into the industry finds whatever proscription or limitation or regulation that government is pleased from time to time to apply to it.

Then again, The Department of Mines, as I have pointed out, does not advise anybody on mining methods; indeed, if The Department of Mines wants to know anything about mining, it goes and asks the leaders in the field how to mine. Inco and Falconbridge are world leaders in the development of mining techniques, and they could tell anybody in the world how to attack an ore body. They would not go to The Department of Mines and ask for advice, the process is the reverse. Inco and Falconbridge would give The Department of Mines advice on how they mine if the department wanted to seek it. I am not trying to be provocative, I am just stating the facts.

The Department of Mines has something to do with mine safety and as far as I know, it carries out that aspect of the responsibilities very efficiently. It never seems to be able to please various unions operating in the field, but then again, on balance, probably their safety precautions are executed in the public interest and with all possible despatch and care. The department, as far as I can see, could as easily be a branch of The Department of Economics and Development and we could save all the overhead that is connected with setting up an administrative group—you must not use the term bureaucracy any more; somebody resented it the other day—setting up administrative machinery that surrounds a Minister of the Crown.

However, I am not argumentative, I do not want to dwell upon that. I just wanted to reflect that from my personal point of view and my experience and from the fact of having lived my life in the mining community, save for that part of it that was spent in other parts of the world, I do not exactly view the mining industry with rose-coloured glasses. Quite apart from the production of the metals and the tremendous wealth that the mining industry has produced for our people, and indeed for the American people, it has in some respects a very sordid history.

The history of the mining industry in at least two respects is a quite sordid thing. One of them is the fact that in all the years of the half century that mining has been an important activity, there has been on the part of the entrepreneurs—those red-blooded, hairy-chested, free enterprisers, who were neither free nor enterprising but who have come in to exploit our mineral wealth—an utter ruthlessness toward the people they employed to do it.

At first it was the silicosis, which was the bane of the hardrock miner for perhaps 30 or 40 years. Many of the miners who worked in the precious metal mines finally wound up in sanatoria or else spent the last days at home suffering from the dread disease and for a long time not much was done by way of correction of that evil.

The other aspect of the ruthlessness was the utter disregard for what happened to the miner when his energy was spent, when he no longer could go underground and take hold of the drill and carry on his day's work to produce the wealth that abounded so much in the ground. Really, you should bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, that only two companies in the mining industry, to this day—the hon. Minister says there are 88 mines producing in Ontario—but only two to this day, provide a pension for their workers, Inco and Falconbridge.

None of the mines in the constituency of my hon. friend the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs provide one. Hollinger Mine will close down this year and they will throw those workers out on the scrap heap without any pension for their retiring years.

So it is in Kirkland Lake. To correct that evil, the people of this country had to come in with the national pension plan. It is almost the operation of the dialectic. Anything that contains the seeds of its own decay is corrected by other measures. The national pension plan is a means of remedying that evil. And yet, I am told by one of the relatives of W. H. Wright—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many other companies the hon. member may have omitted, but I would like him to add Algoma Steel Corporation to those that provide pensions, and they are provided entirely by the company.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, but it is not really a mining venture.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It is a very large mining company.

Mr. Sopha: No, it is not really a mining company.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: It has a very large mining development at Wawa, which maintains a city of 4,500 people and quite a few in the surrounding area; a very large and most up-to-date and modern mining company.

Mr. Sopha: Listen till I tell you something. You took the opportunity to interrupt. That is a steel company and that is a reflection of their policies with regard to dealing with the steel unions. They are not basically a mining company at all, in the sense the Hollinger Gold Mines and Lakeshore Gold Mines, Wright Hargreaves and Teck Hughes are. Their history is not the same. Their attitude toward labour is not the same. The steel companies are accustomed to dealing with labour unions.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, I shall always take the opportunity to interrupt when a statement is made that is not entirely factual. I do not think my hon. friend said it with any intention of leaving out information, but this is a large mining company, in addition to its refining and smelting of steel and ore, and I did not want it to pass unnoticed. Now it is corrected.

Mr. Sopha: I will repeat again, it is not a mining company at all, in the sense I am speaking of mining companies. It is a steel fabricating company.

However, what is the other side of the picture? The other side of the picture, I am told by some of the living relatives of W. H. Wright, is that when W. H. Wright went to his great reward he left an estate of $47 million. I would be willing to sit up all night for some Tory to explain to me, to show me, where the moral right inheres in any one individual to come into our north country and point to a section of the terrain and say the mineral wealth that is in here, put there by providence, belongs to me.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is within the national interest.

Mr. Sopha: That was what W. H. Wright was saying, and he left his life leaving $47 million which he ripped out of the ground in the great golden mile of Teck township. And yet, as I say, the general— notwithstanding the intervention of the hon.

Attorney General—the general picture of the mining industry is that there are no pensions provided to people who spend their lives moiling in the ground to produce this wealth.

Another side of the picture. I do not know, other than in connection with Inco and Falconbridge, I do not know of any individual or any corporate body that ever exploited our mineral resources, that ever left any testimony to its passing that way in the communities in which they operated. Inco and Falconbridge, of course, support many public ventures, including large contributions to the university at Sudbury.

But Harry Oakes went into Teck township and made untold tens of millions of dollars. Then he took off and ended up in the Bahamas, I think it was, or Barbadoes, where he came to his untimely and unseemingly end. Strangely enough, the only community Harry Oakes ever benefited in this country, so far as I know, is Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls had no connection whatsoever with the mining industry, but if you walk the streets of Kirkland Lake you will search in vain to see some monument to the fact that Harry Oakes passed that way; Harry Oakes, whom the secretary of the YMCA in Cobalt told me a number of years ago, around 1912 had to borrow $2 from him to buy himself something to eat. He was a prospector, with the seat of his trousers not quite intact. Later he became rich as Croesus from exploiting the mineral wealth which belonged to the people of this country. Now that is part of the other side of the picture of this euphoristic canvass that the hon. Minister of Mines stretches out before us.

The third aspect, and I am not going to dwell on it. I never intended to mention the Windfall probe, but I am content to wait to see what Mr. Justice Kelly has to say to it. But in the meantime, I can read the testimony that is coming out. I know that down on Bay Street they are frightened stiff, the family compact, the establishment, are scared skinny about what is going to emanate from this.

In the interval between the two sessions, and pending the appearance of Mr. Justice Kelly's report, I am going to go back the six years I have been in this House to collate, assemble all those things that I said about government control of the Toronto stock exchange and the necessity for it, and the control of the primary distribution. I will just compare those remarks with what Mr. Justice Kelly has to say, and the Kimber commission, because many of them are referring to a number of years. It is refreshing not to have to wait for a decade or 20 years to see the rightness of what you say come true and to see somebody else come to the same conclusion and make the same observation.

What is sick about the mining industry, of course, on the financial side, are two things.

There are the machinations of the people on Bay Street. They do not need to be elaborated at this time any more than to refer to them as machinations—people who would rather mine the public than mine the ground and they have been doing it for years.

And the other thing, more honest but one cannot say that it is any less enervating, and that is the reluctance of the large financial institutions to invest in the future of our country. The banks, the insurance companies, the trust companies, they will not put a nickel into equity stocks, if they can avoid it, to invest in the future of our country; they will not take the risk. Those people do not buy stocks in mining companies except to a very minimal degree.

That has been the history of economic growth, or I should say economic retardation in this country. This country has been retarded because the large blocks of capital in the hands of the classical financial institutions are invested in debt securities and not in equity securities.

I remember a number of years ago my friend the former Minister of Economics and Development made quite a speech about that in this Legislature. That is to say, the large stores of capital go to putting a mortgage on everybody's house. The banks, the trust companies and the insurance companies want to have a mortgage on everybody's house in this country, but they do not want to invest in risk securities which would lead to the development of this country.

Bear in mind—a good example that I never forget—that when they had to build that leg of the trans-Canada pipeline across the northern reaches of the precambrian shield, Trans-Canada Pipelines did not borrow the money from the banks or the insurance companies, they had to go to the public Treasury at Ottawa to get it. We, the people had to put it up in the same way that we had to build the CPR; we the people had to put the money up, $80 million, and the government fell as a result of getting involved in it.

When the mining committee met, in Sault Ste. Marie I think it was, one of the Trans-

Canada Pipelines persons came before us with a brief and talked about the future of mining in the north country, and talked about how Trans-Canada Pipelines was ready to lend an arm and to give every support to it. He read this long brief; it sounded as though it had been prepared by a very expensive public relations expert—somebody of the quality of Don Fairbairn. So when he finished I said to him, "You know you should never come before a government body without acknowledging your debt to the people of Canada and the money the public loaned you to build your pipeline in the northern parts of northern Ontario."

But that has been the history of our economic development. The economic growth of this country—with a scant 19 million people in the seventh decade of the 20th century is a history of economic retardation forced upon it by the unwillingness of large owners of capital to invest in its future. When they do invest, they want a tremendous return; they want to become as rich as Croesus.

We went through Elliot Lake. My hon. friend from York South talked about the lack of risk of the uranium companies. Indeed, we heard many briefs and many beefs from people in Elliot Lake about the economic depression in that area. I made a comment in the presence of some of these big wheels from Dennison and Rio Algom. They said that there was one group that did not suffer in the Elliot Lake process, and that was the mining companies. They went away well-heeled. Consolidated Dennison ended up with a cement company. They have their mines and a bread company as a result of the profits they made.

That stock was selling for 30 cents on the exchange. Just a short while before the discovery of uranium at Elliot Lake you could buy all the Dennison you wanted for under half a buck. Now, it is one of the giants in the Canadian mining industry because its profits were guaranteed by the people of Canada, and the government of Ontario. I do not rue the fact that they have a bread company and a cement company—I just hope that they do not mix the bread with the cement.

I made some comments at an earlier time about how much I regretted the fact that the mining companies, with lots of money in the treasury, seemed to go out of the mining industry; how they seemed to shy away from it. I cited examples—Gunnar and the other giants who made a lot of money out of uranium. Gunnar went into the construction business.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Unfortunately!

Mr. Sopha: Unfortunately, my hon. friend from Bruce, and I suppose there is a lot of support for that proposition, because the stock dropped from $10 to $5. But I wanted to mention the Toronto stock exchange, the headquarters of the family compact. For 15 years I have been studying their operations, and we are almost at the day of vindication of our criticisms. As soon as Mr. Justice Kelly reports—I do not want to suggest what he should put in it—but there are very likely some suggestions for control that he will put in there.

However, that is my view of the mining industry and I had better put it in context, too, just so I will not be misunderstood. I put it in the context of a man who is the son of a miner—my father worked in the mines at Cobalt for 21 years; he worked in the old Buffalo mine 21 years before I was born and worked a good long time afterwards. He went back to work in the mines at the age of 70; he came out of retirement during the war and went back to work, looking after the blast furnace at the Nipissing mine in 1941, I believe it was. I have always felt that I have some ownership of some of those ores in a sort of an indirect way; that they do not all belong in Bay Street; they do not all belong to individuals who come along and want to get as rich as Croesus, like W. H. Wright.

The Toronto Globe and Mail was founded in 1844—it is in its 122nd year—and until 1937 it was a Grit newspaper. It was founded by George Brown as an organ of reform. In 1937, W. H. Wright and part of the $47 million I spoke of came along and bought the Globe and Mail, put George McCullagh in charge, and George McCullagh supported the Grit Party for a while—I think until about 1941 or 1942. My hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) gets the message and he nods—and eschewed the Liberal Party. So you see the interrelationship of the mining industry to practical politics. As a result of the wealth created in northern Ontario the Liberal Party lost the Globe and Mail.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Under what estimate is it appropriate to discuss the various aspects of the problem of mining municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The one we are on.

Mr. MacDonald: I have one point I would like to raise, Mr. Chairman, before we leave it, then.

In the brief that was presented by the association of mining municipalities of northern Ontario to the select committee, they had this comment, and I quote it:

None of the other member municipalities— that is, other than the government-created Elliot Lake:

—of this organization have anything approaching comparable housing or services. Many residents of some of the member municipalities lack adequate water and sewage services. Most of the municipalities are trying to supply these basic needs and improve housing standards, but are prevented by insufficient revenue from industrial assessment and by the increasing cost of other municipal services, particularly to persons.

Now, without going into the full range of problems faced by mining municipalities, I want to focus attention for a moment on one, Mr. Chairman, and to raise with the hon. Minister whether or not this is not an area through our Ontario housing corporation—through your colleague, the hon. Minister of Economics and Development—in which some further government action could not be taken. I was very interested a few weeks ago to hear an announcement from the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) that he is tackling this area of poor housing in rural parts of the province—these pockets of poverty, if you will—by a housing programme which is directed specifically at this problem.

I think the hon. Minister would agree that if you go into mining towns one of the most shocking things is the quality of housing. This is not true perhaps of some of the new ones, though some of the bunkhouses, I think, leave something to be desired. Indeed, I wonder whether there should not be minimum standards that would have to be met, and those minimum standards conceivably should be set down by the provincial government. But on the housing itself, would it not be a fair proposition for this government, through the housing corporation, to intervene with the Central Mortgage and Housing, and produce some arrangements which would make it possible for houses to be built for low enough rental, perhaps for purchase, and that any deficiency below an economic financing figure could be met by the industry involved? After all, these industries are not paying the full level of municipal taxes in many respects. Therefore, I think it is a fair proposition that the industry should meet any deficiency that might accrue in developing this kind of a housing programme.

I wonder if the hon. Minister, either through his department or in conjunction with his colleague, has given any consideration to meeting the housing problem in mining communities?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Yes, I would say that we have. The standards that apply to public housing in these new mines—the standards for bunkhouses—are set by The Ontario Department of Health now, and we are working out a project whereby the mining companies, Central Mortgage and Housing and so on, whoever wants to do it, can finance those homes and the companies will look after the payments for the people who occupy them. There is a move on foot that all these new areas where new mines are springing up have bettered their housing situation; they try to make them more permanent. We have been faced in the past by mines bottoming out, and then we are left with a community with poor buildings and all these things are a tremendous cost—in the final analysis—to the government who has to step in and take over. So we are trying to see that the mining companies and the others interested come along at the inception of a new community, and make it a worthwhile place to live after the mines are bottomed out.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, could I just follow up on the remarks of the hon. leader of the NDP? I realize I am swinging, in one sense, to another area, but I know it is an area in which the hon. Minister of Mines is very interested, and that is with Indians who are working in mines. So that I can get it into context that I can talk about it here, I notice in Manitoba that there is legislation between the Manitoba government and the federal government to do exactly what my hon. friend has suggested, and that is to improve the housing conditions of Indians through Central Mortgage and Housing. Has the hon. Minister contemplated this for areas near a mining area, for example, at Red Lake?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: They do work but it is not under our department.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): I think perhaps I can speak on that, sir. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) spoke on some estimates a few weeks ago about the programme we had with a Cabinet committee working on the Indian problem and the small mining communities were involved in that. We have had discussions with Central Mortgage and Housing with reference to building, not the portable housing that is usually referred to, but portable housing that would be almost permanent although it could be moved on somewhere else if the Indians were moved or the mining camp was moved.

This is one of the problems in northern Ontario. If it is going to be a permanent town or village then these facilities can be put in on a permanent basis. If it is going to be one which may have to move off to some other location in a year or two, we are looking at the possibility of building good accommodation, that Central Mortgage and Housing will assist in financing, which can be moved to other communities. This is part and parcel of the programme between the federal government and this government with reference to the Indian programme that will include these mining communities the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Thompson: I realize that there must be a close association between the two departments. We read some pretty shocking statistics about Indians at Red Lake. Just last year we again read about housing and their lack of opportunity to get employment.

I have really two questions; my first is about the housing programme. Have there been studies to learn the need for housing in this area? I would like to get the hon. Minister's opinion about the Manitoba legislation, where they have moved even to the extent of calling Indian reserves, and I want to emphasize with the co-operation of the Indians, to call this a municipality. They are trying to disintegrate the traditional reserves in order that CMHC could then be used for loans for the Indians.

In view of the shocking figures and write-ups you have had of the deprivation and poor conditions under which Indians have been living in the outskirts of certain mining areas, how extensive is this? What kind of studies have you done on this; and have you looked at the Manitoba legislation?

Then while I am on this subject, sir, I move to another question to the hon. Minister. Do you have any knowledge of the number of Indians who are working in mines, what kind of training is available to encourage them into this particular field?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: We have no exact figures, but I would like to just digress for a moment on your idea.

I have two communities in my riding. One at Lansdowne House, it is run by Father Quimet. It is one of the most up-to-date places in the north and the Indians are clean. They have a beautiful recreation hall there, a saw-mill. They have all these things and it really all stems from the efforts of that one man—Father Oumet.

The other one I have—and I will not mention it—is really very difficult to handle. There is nobody there who has really taken the lead—you know the Indians are great followers and somebody—it might be an Indian who is big enough to take the lead, or a white man who is big enough to take the lead—can make a tremendous change in the Indians.

They need to be taught and they will go along with it. I have found that in my own riding. As far as the mines are concerned, I think that most of them have some Indian labour and those who are there are good workers, they do a good job. As soon as they get a job that is well paid and steady, then their home environment and everything else changes. But I do not know the answer to what Manitoba is doing and I did not know they had a specified policy. I do not think they have any specified policy unless you know of one yourself, I have not heard of any.

Mr. Thompson: It is more in the arrangement of housing that they have made an agreement and perhaps I could just refer that to the hon. Minister for his attention.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say—excuse me, sir—I might say that in this study we are making of the housing accommodation in northern Ontario, particularly with reference to Indians, I think, as you appreciate, it has been a jurisdiction under which the federal government have operated for many years, particularly on the reservations. We are concerned with the reservation problems as well as Indians off reservations. The reason for this committee being formed is primarily to improve the opportunities for teaching them a trade, a permanent trade, and also for educational facilities and welfare facilities. But most of all, as the hon. member has already pointed out, they need good housing; and good housing means sewer and water facilities and all the things that go with a good housing programme.

We expect to have, when this committee has finished its work in the very near future, an area we will take and use as an example of what can be done to improve the housing such as we are talking about here.

The hon. member mentioned Red Lake. When I came into this office the former Minister had completed a housing development up at Red Lake. I think some pictures appeared in the Ontario housing magazine when I had it in the House here last year, indicating what it was before and what happened when the housing authorities moved in and built houses for the people in that area. I would suggest to you that anywhere in Canada where they have an Indian problem, we are putting together the knowledge we have in all provinces. I hope that through this committee we will have further studies on our own Indian problem.

From what I know about Manitoba, they have perhaps a more difficult problem than we have here because I think they have more Indians. I would not be sure of that, but there is quite a bit more controversy about the Manitoba Indians than there is here. I would think our problems are similar. We have not only a training programme to give these people work, but also a housing programme and educational programme that has to be implemented.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming has the floor.

Mr. R. A. H. Taylor (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, there are two points I would like clarification on from the hon. Minister. The question of miners' health, what vote does that come under; and miners' education?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Vote 1203, the mines inspection branch, is the inspection branch and health is under that vote as well; they are both under that, vote 1203.

Mr. Taylor: In connection with 1201 then, Mr. Chairman, last July the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), in an address at Orillia, stated that serious consideration might be given to decentralizing some of our government departments and specifically mentioned Agriculture and Mines as departments that might operate well in their more natural areas.

With respect to mining, this idea has considerable merit, particularly in such cases as such established mining centres as Kirkland Lake, Cobalt, Timmins or Sudbury, which might well be considered as a central point for conducting the mining affairs of this province. It would certainly not be difficult to secure experienced staff, people who were familiar with the problems of the industry, and it would be a positive governmental step towards regional development of an area that is presently being milked of its natural resources.

This would mean perpetuating such a mining town and would simply be returning to northern Ontario some of the contribution that it has made in the past. Has any serious consideration been given to the possibility of decentralization?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Yes, we have our geologists and our mining recorders and others in these areas, but I think of Geraldton in my own area. Geraldton now is almost not a mining town. It started out as a mining town, yet it has become quite an area economy in timber and other things of that kind. It is quite a town. At the inception of it I think there were four mines; today there is one that is not going too well, so they have gone away from mining. I think that is the eventual outcome of these areas, and into that picture would fit what you are bringing up. I think that perhaps we could quicken the pulse along that line by the government doing something, but I have found that the people are doing it themselves anyway.

What is your own opinion? What do you find is happening?

Mr. Taylor: I think it would be a very good idea, Mr. Minister. Along those lines, I wonder if the department has ever made any investigation of a project that has been underway in West Virginia, that of raising mushrooms in abandoned coal mines? I understand that it is a very favourable spot.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Darkness down below would help mushrooms.

Mr. Taylor: Darkness and dampness, and there is commercially quite a market available for them. Has the department ever made any studies in that direction at all?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, not to my knowledge. I do not know whether Agriculture might have, but I can see your point. As a matter of fact, I never thought of it myself. But you have got the darkness, you have got the moisture and you have got the heat. So it could be done. I think that is a problem for the hon. Minister of Economics and Development. I think you should pass that on to him; it is a good idea.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): You have not answered the question about decentralization.

Mr. Chairman: Is vote 1201 carried?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, on this first vote, I would like to make one or two observations. Over the past ten years, during which time the present Minister of Mines and the Minister that preceded him have been presenting their estimates, glowing remarks have been made about our great natural resources in this province, and how thankful we should be for this natural heritage. But I have said before that in as many years there has been a great disregard for the problems facing the people that make these resources worthwhile—that is, the miners who go down and dig the ores and the minerals in this province. I think it is about time that the hon. Minister, in making his opening remarks, would deal with some of the problems that are facing the communities.

Year after year we have to get up and raise them, and we seem to be losing track of the real contribution made by the people in these industries. We all know that the select committee on mining has been sitting for some time and is going to sit on in the current year. Representations were made to that committee, particularly by the united steel workers of America, that dealt with some of the problems facing the miners in their community. I think some of them were of such importance that the hon. Minister should have reported to this House on them, and advised the House as to what action might be taken to rectify some of the immediate problems. Certainly the hon. Minister is aware of some of the housing problems at the present time; certainly he should be aware of the apparent shortage of experienced miners. I have press clippings that tell me that some of the mines may have to curtail production because of the lack of experienced miners. The steelworkers' brief sets out this problem quite clearly, as to what should be done to provide an adequate work force in the mines.

But dealing with the community itself, I think the opening remarks in their brief should have given the hon. Minister some reason to report to this House what the problems are in regard to housing in the communities, and the conditions of the miners who are losing their jobs through various reasons, such as health, and by reason of the mines shutting down. I was enticed to read the whole brief after looking at page 3, giving the steelworkers' comments on the economic position of northern communities. I quote just briefly:

Northern Ontario, where most of the province's mines are located, is very much like a colony of the south. An ordinary road map tells the story well enough. Southern Ontario is criss-crossed by highways connecting numerous cities and towns. Two railways and two highways pass across northern Ontario on their way west. Stretching out from them at various points are the deadend company railways and secondary roads reaching to the mines and timber limits. Heading north along the eastern border is the ONR, the provincially owned development road now cutting back some of its services, and dotted along the railways and highways are the mining towns, some on their way up, economically speaking, and others on their way down. Every mining town falls, of necessity, into one of these two categories.

I would have the House pay attention to the next paragraph.

Old Cobalters are fond of saying that the wealth that once made Cobalt the world's richest silver mining camp is now in the head offices of Bay and King Street, or the smart homes of Bayview Avenue.

Wherever it is, there is no sign of it in Cobalt, I think all hon. members can agree, if they travel through the north and through some of the mining towns that once were bragged about in the southern parts of the country. But certainly I was disappointed that the hon. Minister had not dealt with some of these questions in his opening remarks.

I would like to refer also to page six, dealing with the steelworkers' recommendations in regard to the problem of the miner. It deals with the shortage of miners; this is something we ran into in the past few months and that is why I thought that the hon. Minister might have dealt with it at this particular time. The following editorial appeared in a recent issue of The Miner's Voice, one of this union's official publications:

WHY THE SHORTAGE OF MINERS?

The Canadian mining industry is suffering from a dearth of experienced manpower, reports the Northern Miner of September 10, 1964. All classifications of mine employees are in short supply, but the greatest shortage is in experienced underground miners. Hardest hit are the gold mines. Ontario mining associations blame the industry's losses of experienced workers on the lure of the cities, buoyant industrial conditions in more southern areas, impending closure of a number of long-producing Ontario gold mines, and a move by older miners to join families in southern towns and cities.

The president of a prominent Quebec mine, Campbell Chibougamau, blames the city as the major lure for miners, saying that wages do not appear to be the dominant factor.

I am not going to continue with the brief, Mr. Chairman, because I am sure that the hon. Minister has read it, but I think that one or two paragraphs dealing with the shortage should be put on record, hoping that the hon. Minister will relate to this House what plans he may have in coping with the shortage at this particular time.

I read from the paragraph at the top of page seven:

MINERS REPORT

Too often miners are tied to a bad job by a growing family. Their children see the crippled bodies, broken homes, unemployment fears and job restrictions of a mine-dominated town and aspire to escape to better jobs and living conditions. When they are successful, it is not surprising that the parents would follow their children to comparative economic and social liberty.

And on the same page, the third paragraph from the bottom reads:

SECURITY

In the whole of the Kirkland Lake and Porcupine gold fields or the silver-cobalt area of Gogama and Cobalt, there is not such a thing as a pension for a miner.

When the great Hollinger mine shuts down, supposedly within the next year after pulling more than $552 million worth of gold out of the ground in its 54-year existence, it will put about 1,300 people out of work. About 250 of these are miners who have worked a lifetime at Hollinger and have no pensions to show for it. There are those, too, who have spent a lifetime in the mines without accumulating a very large service record with any one mine.

Maybe some of the employers and perhaps the hon. Minister—I hope not—feel that one mine is shutting down and the miners from that mine can go to work in the other mines that find they are running short of experienced help, but I do not think this is the case. Because of their age and because of their desire to get out of that kind of environment, they are moving out of the districts.

I would hope that the hon. Minister would pay attention to the recommendations of the steelworkers' union in regard to the shortage of experienced miners and help to establish, in co-operation with the federal government, a comprehensive training programme—an apprenticeship programme that thoroughly trains the miner for all aspects of the mining industry and which will, in turn, give him some security in promotion and advancing to the highest paid job on a regular basis with the full knowledge of what the job entails.

I would leave it at this point, sir, and would hope that the hon. Minister will give the House some idea of what might be done, or what the department might intend to do, with regard to some of the community and personal problems of the miners in that district.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman, I know that this is very close to the heart of the hon. member for Wentworth East and he has made an extremely good study of it. He mentioned about highways in the north—"That is very close to my heart"—and so on. I am always trying to get more highways in the north. You go home every night and you come back here and you see the 401 highway. My people say to me up in the north, "What is Toronto doing with all those big roads down there and this is all we have here?" Even with all of that highway on 401, at times you can hardly get on or off it. I sympathize with the northern people and work as hard as I can to get every road that I can for them, but I do realize what has to be done down in these tremendously populated areas as well.

You mentioned the shortage of miners. Mr. Gates of International Nickel told me not so long ago that when these new mines came in in Sudbury and Falconbridge they would be short 2,500 miners—2,500, not 100—and they need a lot of skilled men in that 2,500. Miners today can get jobs almost any place, as you know. But you brought up a point that is one of importance, and that is when a man reaches middle age or beyond and the mine he has been working in for so many years is bottomed out, very often he does not feel like going on to another area and carrying on the life of mining, especially if his health is not A-1.

Fifty mining companies and the universities and ourselves are trying to get a course going for these miners, both the older miners and the young men coming along, to attract the young men into the industry and to try to get new skills for the men who have spent a large part of their life in mining but who do not want to follow it any longer. There has been a lot of work done on this plan and it is a case of money and planning. But we are having very good results and I hope that before too long something will be done.

You talked about that brief of the steelworkers. I always look at their briefs very closely because they are a knowledgeable group, one of the oldest groups in Canada in the way of unions and they have some top men all through the organization. They write me continually about problems in the mines and about things that are going wrong and so on, and I certainly read them all. I do not pass any of them up; they do not let me, because they come along before too long and want my opinion on what they wrote me about. They are a knowledgeable outfit and I assure you that I pay attention to them and so does my department.

About the apprentice programme, as you know, we are going to enlarge our school of mining up north at Haileybury. Professor Walley is the head of the mining institute and we hope to make some room there for the younger men. These plans are all being enlarged and looked at and we are trying to do the best we can for miners generally, both young and old.

One of the things I found in the universities is this—and it is very reasonable, when you think of it. A young man going to university and a girl going to university become engaged and they think of marriage. She says to him, "Look, Bill, I do not like you going away out in the wilds in mining. We cannot live there and have a family; there is no school for the children and it is full of mosquitoes and flies and the housing is not very good." She is the greatest influence in preventing that boy from continuing in mining or work that will take him out in the wilds. It is natural. I have often mentioned that to men in the universities and they agree with me that that is one of the problems.

The thing we have to do is to try to make these mining areas attractive in every way and then take the couple up and show them what a fine life they can have in a mining community. I saw a moving picture in colour of Thompson, Manitoba. The International Nickel Company there is a colossus. They have a whole little town there, 400 miles north of Winnipeg. They have only about two months' summer, and a lot of the town is built on a cement slab because the frost keeps heaving it; they have it on jacks, that is how they keep it level. The most beautiful flowers grow there for two months of the year. If you showed that coloured picture to a girl who is thinking of marrying a fellow who is going up there, she would jump at the chance.

We have to bring to their minds that these mining towns are not dog holes with old houses and all that sort of thing. That is what we are trying to do, we know it is a big job to attract miners to the far north. The hon. member for Sudbury is not here but the way they are beautifying Sudbury and getting the university and everything up there, this is going to make it very attractive for young men to tell their wives, or if they are going to marry, "It is a beautiful city and I am going to go up and work in the mines. It has a university and everything." That is what we should be trying to do. I know of no other way to cure the difficulty of attracting young miners.

The hon. member spoke of a very important thing, about the middle-aged miner who, when one mine is closing, does not want to continue in that vocation because he has worked very hard and would like something a little easier. I do not blame him at all. Well, we are doing things there, too. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) is sitting beside me saying yes, and they are conducting a tremendous amount of study on these changes in industry for men at the senior age.

I assure the hon. member that we do not just throw the steelworkers' briefs in the wastepaper baskets; we look at them and we study them.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. Minister is in such a friendly mood, would he inform myself and the House as to why he has not been able to convince the hon. Minister of Labour that he should bring in the voluntary revocable check-off that has been asked for so often by the steelworkers and which pertains to the health and welfare of the community? I understand the hon. Minister of Mines and some of his predecessors were in favour of it, but they have not been able to convince somebody to—

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question. This morning he spoke of the number of claims that were staked in the province. We know there are small mining companies trying to develop ore bodies; we also know there is an individual gentleman in the province trying to develop an ore body, too. Of course, I understand it is always the money which slows them up in order to develop these prospects. Is there any money available from The Department of Mines or The Department of Economics and Development, if there is a good prospect, for assistance to these small companies or individuals to see how large an ore body they have?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Would the hon. member bring this up under 1206—that is the mining lands branch—and we will go into that for him?

Mr. R. Brunelle (Cochrane North): Mr. Chairman, with reference to vote 1201, I would like to say that I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth East with reference to the retraining of miners and diamond drillers. I would like to mention that this matter was brought to the attention of the select committee on mining. About two weeks ago, the president of the Timiskaming mine operators association, Mr. Jerry Jerome, wrote to me and sent a copy to the hon. member for Timiskaming and as a result we contacted The Department of Mines, The Department of Labour and The Department of Education. I am happy to report that on Monday next there will be a meeting in Haileybury to discuss the possibilities of the courses for the training of diamond drillers, and also for the retraining of miners.

I wish to compliment the hon. member for Timiskaming for his assistance and also, once more, The Department of Mines, The Department of Education and The Department of Labour for their co-operation.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, may I just direct a question to the hon. member in regard to his remarks? I am very pleased to hear what he has said. Have the departments working with the unions involved, or the employees, if not organized, involved, going to have representation on the employer-employee groups in their talks about the retraining programme?

Mr. Brunelle: I would hope so. We will make sure that the representatives of the unions are included. This retraining programme will be in conjunction with the federal authorities.

Vote 1201 agreed to.

On vote 1202:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister consider, starting now, that mining companies in production be required to keep logs of the geology which they discover? And to have it filed at some central place with The Department of Mines, so future generations will be acquainted with the geology of the actual workings underground? I am sure it would save a good deal of expense at some future time, rather than having to do it all over again. For example, from the point of view of the Cobalt camp, where the incidence of silver is found so sporadically, had there been mapping in the early days of geology it would have saved a good deal of exploratory expense.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have, in the central library of our own department, a great deal of that material. It was given to us voluntarily by all the companies, and it is available to anybody. I think if we have not got it there in our central library, and if somebody came in who wanted certain information that we did not have in our library, we would endeavour to get it for them. There is a central library that has that information on the old properties. I suppose they would not give it to you while they were operating, but once they are through with a property they would make it available. Does that answer the question?

Mr. Sopha: Well, yes, but it leads to another supplementary question. Would it be feasible for The Department of Mines to require companies in stages of exploration to make regular reports to the department—say weekly reports—of the contacts they have had with the drills? The Department of Mines could, of course, keep that secret, and keep it to itself, but there would be a measure of control over wild speculation; in the public interest The Department of Mines could publish the results if it became necessary.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am told that if it comes to The Department of Mines it becomes public property, so it would be hard to keep it secret. That is one of the difficulties.

Mr. Sopha: Well, a little amendment to The Mining Act.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Who would believe you?

Mr. Sopha: Here now, my friend, the hon. member for Timiskaming, passes me this clipping: "Central Registry for Mining Data Proposed." I am quoting from the Globe and Mail of Friday, March 12, 1965:

Fenton Scott, a geologist with Area Mines Limited, said that there should be a law to compel the filing of information about the geology covered during drilling.

He said:

Availability of results from exploration work, the correlation and re-examination of this data, could conceivably lead to the drilling of a successful hole on property where nothing had been previously found.

Speaking as an individual, I say there is no reason why this should not be made available. It would not affect a company's development to disclose this geological information. The cost of transmitting the information from a property to a central registry would be negligible. The benefits from a central registry of this kind would be elimination of extensive and costly duplication and the speeding of ore discoveries.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, we will certainly take that under advisement. But the thing I am afraid of is forcing a private company to disclose their geological information until such time as they agree to do it. You know, they have their money sunk in there, after all; they might want to do something in the future and they probably want the person who is seeking the geological information to come to them and say: "Look, we will pay you so much for this information and knowledge because the owner may have paid out money for it." Now if they have given up the land a new group can go in there with a drill or a geologist and get the information. I think you will agree that is pretty fair.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, under 1202, last year the hon. Minister pointed out that most of the croppings of rock in this province have been prospected and that we are having to put more stress on magnetometer surveys, geophysical surveys and seismic work on the technical side of prospecting because the favourable geology is now buried deep beneath the surface of the ground. I agree with the hon. Minister that this job of prospecting today depends more and more on technicians and technical equipment. Such being the case, my question of the hon. Minister is, why are we not making use of all the available technical equipment in searching for our minerals? We are currently completing a series of magnetometer surveys that may disclose certain anomalies. Why are we not making use, at the same time, of electro-magnetic surveys and geochemical surveys if, by so doing, we can more closely locate and identify our latent mineral resources?

Up to now, the government has maintained that it is not in the prospecting business, and that should be left to private individuals and companies. The mines department seems to be operating under the ludicrous policy of spending money to locate mineral deposits, but are afraid to make use of all available technical instruments for fear they might find something. It seems to me that any airborne magnetometer surveys being made should be expanded to include simultaneous electromagnetic and other equipment surveys. It is estimated that this could be done with only a 20 per cent increase in cost. The problem in this respect is that today only the larger companies can afford to make such surveys on an individual basis, and as a result of the present system, there is costly duplication of effort by government and by private companies.

The result of such an expanded government programme would make more complete airborne survey information available to all those interested in mineral exploration. If such a programme had been followed in the past, it is likely that the Texas Gulf discovery in Kidd township might have been made ten to 15 years earlier.

In this connection, with respect to the work being done by the government department, Dr. Hearst, in one of our committee hearings, indicated that at the present rate that studies were being made, it would take another 25 years for the province to complete the mapping of the areas they intend to do. Surely, with the current demand for minerals and the speed-up of our civilization, more money and effort could be put into the present programme.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, might I request that there be a five-minute recess?

Mr. Chairman: At this moment, I request a five-minute recess and I now leave the chair and resume at 4.05.

The House resumed at 4.13.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, in addition to my previous remarks, there is one other thing I would like to say in this connection, and that is that under the estimates I note that the salaries budget for this year for geologists is $716,000, against last year's budget of $606,000. The increase is certainly very desirable, but in view of the fact that last year you only spent $504,000, I wonder what are your hopes for getting additional adequate staff in the coming year?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: While I am getting the answer to that, I will give the hon. member for Timiskaming the other answer.

It is doubtful whether an electromagnetic survey conducted simultaneously at the same flight altitude of 1,000 feet and flight space in one-half mile as the aeromagnetic survey, would have been satisfactory. As a rule, electromagnetic surveys are carried out at lower altitudes and over smaller selected areas. And the speed of mapping depends on available geologists. We would very much like to step up our geological mapping programme, but we are limited by trained personnel. We have difficulty getting geologists, as you know. They are all in strong demand, and if a company realizes we are after a certain man, probably they will boost the ante a little bit and get him away from us. But we are studying this all the time. We want to get the survey done as quickly as we can. We have set certain goals and are certainly glad of the suggestion that the hon. member made.

Mr. Taylor: In that connection, do you have an age limit on the hiring of geologists? An upper age limit?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, we have not, but we try to attract young men into the field. That is why we try to keep the age down, and I think that government should do that more than industry. They can go out and hire whom they like, but we try to get young men started who will stay with us.

Mr. Taylor: My point in that connection was, of course, that if you are short of geologists, maybe there are some geologists that are available at an older age who would help you complete your programme.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am told that the older men are not physically able to do the field work. That is one reason why we have not done more of it. But I assure you that if we are short and we can find a man, regardless of his age, if he can do the job, at all, we will get him.

Vote 1202 agreed to.

On vote 1203:

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, under 1203, this deals with safety and mine inspection, and I would raise the question with the hon. Minister that has been raised so many times before. I have always felt that the hon. Minister looked favourably on the suggestions made by the employees, or the union on their behalf, in regard to a situation. I refer to part eight of The Mines Act, operation of mines. The hon. Minister may recall our previous discussions, that is section 152, section two, responsibilities as to qualifications. The section reads:

Subject to the requirements of this Act and except as otherwise herein provided, responsibilities for the authorization and decision as to the qualifications of employees shall rest with the employer or his agent.

As I say, we have raised this question many times and given what we felt were good reasons for a change in that Act that would provide in the second line, where it says: "except as otherwise herein provided" — "or subject to a collective bargaining agreement."

Many mines are organized, with a trade union as their bargaining agent, and all union contracts carry provisions for grievances to be processed in an orderly manner. They provide, also, seniority provisions, provisions to provide for the promotion, demotion or transfer of an employee from one job to another. Of course, they also carry provisions that where management and union cannot agree, they can arbitrate their case, take it to a board of arbitration, and have a binding decision made by an arbitrator.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question? Often, I wonder, and I represent a big part of labour—about people who are not in the labour movement—farmers, druggists, grocers and everybody else—how do you account for that?

Mr. Gisborn: I would say that the hon. members from the ridings can represent their particular group as they see fit. I happen to be a trade unionist, and I think it is necessary, if one believes in the trade union movement and they have problems, that this is the place to raise them and try to convince the government to pay attention to their problems. I am content—

Mr. Edwards: May I ask a supplementary question? I appreciate and agree with that, but I would say that so often you fellows in unions—and I appreciate all you do—but you do forget all the other people.

Mr. L. Letherby (Simcoe East): He is trying to organize them!

Mr. MacDonald: You do not know anything about the trade unions.

Mr. Edwards: What do you mean? You were not up in my riding last time.

Mr. MacDonald: I will come up some time shortly—

Mr. Edwards: You come up and see how far you will get!

Mr. Gisborn: Briefly, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Perth, Mr. Chairman, I would say that I believe that the trade union movement plays a type of role in the life of our society, and I would also say that he has not been listening very well if he has not realized that this party has taken an active part in the whole community and has applied its considerations to all of our community.

Mr. Edwards: Which party are you talking about?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, to get back to the section of The Mining Act I was referring to—section 152, subsection 2—that gives the mine management or its agents the complete right to determine the qualifications of an employee in regard to his work. I related that to the collective bargaining agreement that provides for grievance procedure and provides for seniority provisions relating to promotions, demotions or transfer of employment and the methods on which they settle their problems in this regard.

The trade union movement and its local unions have felt that this section has been used, in some sense, to reduce the intent of the collective bargaining agreement. I have raised this many times in the House and as I said at the start, I felt that we received some favourable replies from the present Minister and previous Ministers of Mines that they were giving consideration to amending this section so that the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement would prevail in regard to qualifications.

Certainly, both the employees' representatives and the employee and management have mutual responsibility in making sure that the man is qualified to carry out the job assigned to him, but where there is a collective agreement and seniority provisions prevail, the union likes to have the right to grieve against any kind of a promotion or demotion, in relation to an occupation. With this section as it is, the union has no right to invoke the terms of the collective bargaining agreement, and I would appeal to the hon. Minister to give consideration to having this section amended so that the collective bargaining agreement would prevail in this regard.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister indicated that miners' health came under 1203. I understand that when a miner applies for work underground he is required to take a series of chest x-rays and when employed has periodic x-rays to check whether there might be any indication of the development of silicosis. All of this service, I appreciate, is under the direction and control of the workmen's compensation board.

However, one of the most difficult problems for the board as well as for an injured miner, is to establish and settle fairly the problem of an injured back incurred while working in a mine. The workman has a great deal of difficulty proving that his back was injured on the job and the board itself has the problem of finding out whether the back injury occurred because of a previous injury or whether the condition came about through working on the job.

It strikes me that it might be helpful to all parties if, when the workmen's compensation board takes an original chest x-ray, it might also take back x-rays which would provide a continuous history of each miner's condition. Such x-rays might show early back deterioration and preventive measures could be taken, as in silicosis, to prevent the employee from becoming a compensation case. Would that be possible?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I think that the hon. member has a point there. I do not think that this has come to my attention before, but when they are taking a chest x-ray, it would seem feasible to take a back x-ray, too. Have you found cases where a man's chest has been all right and some trouble has developed in his back that was traced back to the same time?

Mr. Taylor: No. My point is that after a miner has incurred a back injury, or supposedly incurred an injury, while at work, the problem for the board is to determine whether this was the result of a previous back injury or not. If continuous back x-rays were taken each time a chest x-ray was, they would establish the fact of whether there had been any prior back deterioration or not. In that way the board could more fairly rule on the present condition of the miner.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is a good suggestion, and a novel one. We will follow it up.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I understand that miners' education comes under this vote and I would like to refer to something that the hon. Minister has touched on earlier in one of his other votes. That is that the one bright spot on the Canadian mining educational scene is the increasing number of mining technicians who are being trained at the provincial institute of mining at Haileybury.

Even here the demand for technicians exceeds the supply. In 19 years of operation, 684 students have completed the mining course, or an average of 36 per year. These graduates, as you know, have had ready acceptance by the industry and many have risen to prominent positions. Commonly, Haileybury graduates now occupy positions that were formerly filled with bachelor of science graduates. The enrolment for the past year in Haileybury was 126, with 61 students in the first year, 42 in the second year, and 23 in the third year. This was an increase of 30 over the previous year.

When you appreciate the shortage of technical personnel that has developed in the mining industry, you can appreciate the importance of the provincial institute of mining as a whole. The mining departments of nine Canadian universities graduated only 33 engineers this past year. For this current year, 1965, the estimated number of graduates is 34. By 1966, all the mining graduates will come from only four universities in Canada.

Sir, if our mining industry in Ontario is to develop and expand in the future, provisions must be made to supply the required technicians, and the provincial institute of mines appears to be the only school in Canada capable of so doing. A request is currently before The Department of Education for the expansion of these facilities at Haileybury and the interim report of the committee on mining has recommended immediate action be taken by the department to ensure that the present accommodation, facilities and teaching staff of this institute be expanded to meet the constantly increasing number of applicants, and that necessary facilities be ready for use when the school year begins in 1966.

I am sure the hon. Minister and the department will give their full support to this request. However, the very expansion of this institute brings up another problem that The Department of Education should be considering. The hon. Minister of Education, in his announcement of the creation of community colleges, indicated that because of the sparse population and the distances involved, residents might be built for these colleges where they are located in northern Ontario. Similar conditions do exist at present and will intensify with the expansion of the provincial institute of mines facility. While local boarding arrangements have worked well in the past, as the school expands these facilities will become more and more limited.

Of the total enrolment of 126 in this past year, 63 students came from north of North Bay, 38 from south of North Bay, 15 from other provinces and ten from other countries. One can appreciate that with the increase in educational facilities, residential requirements will increase sharply. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he confer with the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) and strongly recommend not only the immediate increase of educational facilities but also the provision of a suitable residence for the students. I am sure the town of Haileybury would co-operate fully with both departments by finding suitable land and providing the necessary services.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would say to the hon. member that I cannot imagine not wanting to live in Haileybury. But I think Mr. Mawhallig and that school is rated, as you know, very highly in mining and other circles as well. I think that the hon. Minister of Education has made up his mind that he is going to do quite a lot up there. I will bring it to his attention; the hon. member should do so, as well. The necessity is for housing for these students who might go up there, because not only will they get a wonderful education, but there will not be so many other diversions around to take them away from their seat of learning. I am all for it, and I will certainly help it all I can.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Just one step further to that.

I have spoken on two or three occasions to Mr. Mawhallig, in connection with people desirous of entering the university there, or at least the mining school. I am wondering if the hon. Minister would advise me—I think the question is more properly directed to education—but is there any qualification under the student loans for this particular school, or is there any help of any kind available for people? We recognize that they can go to Haileybury from grade 12, but I am wondering if this would not be another approach that would help to interest young fellows to get into the mining field.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I would like to inform the hon. member that there are scholarships available from the mining companies for these boys. If there is somebody that the hon. member has in mind who would like to go there, and if the hon. member notifies the department, they will tell me who to get in touch with. I think they will see that he is looked after, because they are very anxious to see boys go up to that school, too.

Mr. Farquhar: At the same time, in a formal way through The Department of Education, there is no—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Sure—that would be all right too, because it will get to them.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, while we must admit that there have been great improvements in reducing safety and health hazards, I feel that we must also admit that there are still too many accidents taking place in the mining industry. We should be doing everything we can to reduce them.

I would reiterate my appeal to the hon. Minister to make provisions in the safety inspection section of The Mining Act to make it mandatory for the management to establish joint safety and health committees. Certainly from the last Royal commission we had on industrial safety, the McAndrew report recommended that there should be joint management and employee safety and health committees. There is no doubt that the employees, those who are performing the work, have a great knowledge of the operations and where hazards would exist. Joint co-operation is, in my opinion, best in all fields. I do not think we can stick forever with the idea that management must have the sole right to determine what is safe and what is not safe.

I feel that in the brief the steelworkers point out that the employees are asking more strongly for this measure now because of the type of supervisors who are being appointed by management. The employees have not, in all instances, confidence in their supervisors; as the situation is now, if an employee reports to an immediate supervisor that he feels that something is not just right and, if in the opinion of the supervisor, it is right and he is instructed to continue his work, he has to do it. I do not think this is a good way to promote safety. I do not think we can fear the fact that it would disrupt operations, because it would not mean in every case that the employee would stop work if there was a joint committee, or had the right to report to management or to a joint committee that he had reported to his supervisor that there was a hazard and it was not looked after. I think there would be a lot of co-operation if it was made mandatory under the Act, and I think it would do a lot towards reducing hazards. As we do away with safety hazards on one hand, others spring up; they are there at all times. For the best results mutual co-operation is best in the long run. I would appeal to the hon. Minister to have provisions made under the Act to make it mandatory for joint management-employee safety committees.

Vote 1203 agreed to.

On vote 1204:

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1204 I would like to ask the hon. Minister a number of questions with regard to the Timiskaming testing laboratory in Cobalt. This comes directly under the estimates here. Do I conclude correctly, then, that employees in this institution are civil servants? Or are they in some separate category?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We have both; some are civil servants, some are not.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the number of employees and how many of them are senior employees at the testing laboratory?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Four permanent civil servants, and it ranges from eight to 14 casuals.

Mr. MacDonald: The point I really wanted to get to is that I have been informed it ranged from eight to 14 casuals. Can the hon. Minister give any explanation as to why you would have casuals, almost on a permanent basis? The hon. Minister will recall that some years ago we really came to grips with this issue in The Department of Highways and The Department of Lands and Forests. In one instance—I believe it was The Department of Highways—where the hon. Minister stated that for other than seasonal employees, if a person was hired, within one year he went on permanent staff. He did not have a “permanent casual,” the kind of situation that you discover in some departments where a man has been a casual for 20 or 25 years. Do you have people coming and going, so that there is any excuse at all for people being casuals all the time? What is the score there?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am told, sir, that these casuals are coming and going. Some that were asked if they would prefer to be a civil servant rather than a casual said no. Now why, I cannot tell you; a salary cut, that is it.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, there is an opportunity to become a member of the permanent staff if they so desire?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: This is fair enough. I understand that the manager is Mr. O'Shaughnessy?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: How long has Mr. O'Shaughnessy been there?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Fifteen years or more.

Mr. MacDonald: I have never met the gentleman. The one occasion when I tried to visit the place, he happened to be out just at that time, or that day. I have never met him.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Very fine fellow.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope this does not embarrass him. But I am told, for example, that he has never been able to get into the pension arrangement available to civil servants. I assume he is a permanent civil servant, as the manager. I am just curious as to why you have what appears to be—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am told he was over age when he came on.

Mr. MacDonald: He was over age when he came on. How old is over age in this government?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: You have to put in 15 years before you come to pension age of 65, and apparently he was over 50 when he came to us.

Mr. MacDonald: I see.

Vote 1204 agreed to.

Vote 1205 agreed to.

On vote 1206:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the remarks that I would make would be to compare the imaginative plan which my hon. colleague from Fort William put forward to the antiquated pattern of financing of mining properties in the province of Ontario, which has been used for a great many years.

I have attempted to set out seriatim the steps which I think are typical of the way in which mining ventures in Ontario are financed within the speculative field. I do so because I want to make just two points. There are many other points which can be made, but I wish to make two points, and draw them to the attention of the government in anticipation that something will be done about them.

Within broad limits, you will find in the financing of speculative mining ventures something along the following steps.

1. A prospector stakes and records a group of claims.

2. A group takes an option to buy the claims for, say, $25,000 cash and 300,000 shares of a mining company.

3. The option is exercised.

4. The mining company is incorporated, or control is acquired of a mining company whose shares are already listed and traded on the Toronto stock exchange.

5. Let us say the capital of the company is three million shares of $1 each.

6. The group agrees to sell the claims to the company for $50,000 cash and one million shares.

7. The group comprises or controls the board of directors of the company and the chief executive officers of the company.

8. The company enters into an underwriting and option agreement with the group for, say, 1,600,000 shares at prices ranging from 12.5 cents a share to $2 a share, to be taken up within certain time limits at the rate of, say, 50,000 shares per month.

9. The first of these options is for 400,000 shares at 12.5 cents per share, or $50,000.

10. The payment by the company of $50,000 for the claims is made by transfer to the group of the first 400,000 shares from the treasury of the company.

11. Therefore, the group receives one million vendor shares and 400,000 treasury shares.

12. Of the one million vendor shares escrowed by the Ontario securities commission, 400,000 are released from escrow on the basis of one share of escrowed stock released for every share of treasury stock sold.

13. An additional 100,000 shares are also freed from escrow following the policy of freeing ten per cent of the vendor's interest.

14. At this point, the group owns 900,000 free shares.

15. The balance of the vendor shares, 500,000 shares, remain in escrow, of which 300,000 belong to the original option or prospector who located and recorded the claims.

16. The group cost for the 900,000 free shares is, therefore, $25,000 plus incorporation and other expenses, say $5,000, or about three cents per share.

17. The group also has options on treasury share blocks, as previously stated, now commencing at about 15 cents per share.

18. 500,000 shares are now offered to the public at 30c per share.

19. If not already listed, a prospectus is filed with the Ontario securities commission and the shares of the company are listed and called for trading on the Toronto stock exchange. If already listed on the Toronto stock exchange, no prospectus is required.

20. Within a few weeks, the stock is selling on the Toronto stock exchange at 78c per share.

21. The group recoups its original outlay by selling some of the 900,000 free shares.

22. $150,000 is paid into the company on the exercise of the options for the 500,000 shares which are sold to the public.

23. Let me say that there has been no concealment by the group in any way.

24. A new situation now develops.

25. Shares are taken down under the option, say, 150,000 shares, for which the company receives $50,000.

26. Accounts are opened with brokerage houses and shares are deposited in those accounts.

27. Public interest is stimulated to create a demand for the stock, for orders to be filled from the brokers' accounts.

28. The market price goes up from 78c to $1.44. A market is made. The group sells 467, 800 shares, against purchases of 348,700 shares, or a margin of sales of 119,100 shares.

29. Later the account shows a short position of 19,100 shares and a credit balance of $53,136.

30. The market is now $2.07 per share.

31. The price is artificial so that professionals move in to break the price by short selling.

32. The groups buys 330,300 shares to maintain its position in the market.

33. Within days, the account shows a long position for the group of 154,000 shares, and a net debit balance of $340,597.

34. The group advances 200,000 to try to place the accounts in good standing.

35. A few days later the group's accounts are long by 204,000 shares and owe $276,064.71.

36. The group transfers 250,000 shares to stabilize the market.

37. The wave of share selling continues, the price holds briefly at a peak of $2.64.

38. The price breaks, the group are long 624,600 shares and owe $828,377.74.

39. The exchange auditor orders buying to cease by the broker until the accounts are liquidated.

40. By a deal between the shorts and the longs, their respective problems are solved and the price drops back to 40 cents.

Within the framework of that pattern, Mr. Chairman, most of the speculative mining ventures that have been financed through the Toronto stock exchange, have taken place. There are variations, because the persons who are engaged in this kind of activity are able to think of all sorts of variations and methods by which this basic scheme can be altered.

You will notice throughout the recital of the particular steps the actual value of the property does not have a great deal to do with it. The quality of the property, the likelihood that there is mineable ore body on the property, is not really an important feature of the various transactions in any way, shape, or form.

This particular transaction, again not in specific detail, is one which was investigated by the Ontario securities commission some 19 years ago, and I am quite certain that there are hon. members of this Legislature who can think of similar patterns of financing prior to that time, and similar ones that have taken place since that time.

One of the recommendations that was made as a result of that particular investigation was that the stock exchange should study the daily buying and selling by each member broker, and any rapid or unusual fluctuation in the market price of any stock should be fully inquired into. If it appears evident that a market has been, or is being, manipulated in a manner detrimental to the public interest, appropriate action should be taken and full disclosure made to the public.

Mr. Chairman, I would simply comment to this House that we are aware that among the hasty steps that have been taken by the Toronto stock exchange in the last few days, the recommendation that was made by the Ontario securities commission in October, 1946 is likely to be implemented finally by the Toronto stock exchange within the next several days.

You will readily see from the example which I have outlined to the committee that the price itself at a certain point became entirely artificial. The number of dollars that actually went into the company was negligible—I believe in this particular instance, up to that time, about $200,000 only went into the company for use, presumably, for further development and exploration work; but quite likely only a small portion of the $200,000 was, in fact, so used. So it would be fair to say that the treasury of the company did not benefit in any way by reason of either the high price to which the stock rose or by reason of the volume of trading.

Again, I would emphasize that so far as the group was concerned in terms of the criminal law or accepted practices in Ontario at that time, and in a very broad sense within the framework of accepted practices today, there was not necessarily any deceit or falsehood or other fraudulent means used for this purpose.

The advertising was rather quaintly referred to in the report of the commission as "optimistic, enthusiastic, flamboyant, misleading, but never false." As a result of that particular transaction, the securities commission conducted an extensive review and study of the fluctuations of the stock. If any hon. members are interested in it, they will find it in the Northern Miner for the year 1946, in the month of October, where the whole report of the commission is quoted verbatim. The Northern Miner in its editorials and elsewhere has a number of useful and worthwhile remarks to make about it.

The second point that I would like to make is related also to that pattern, but I would refer to the report of the hon. Attorney General's committee on securities legislation in Ontario, which has been placed before the House and which has been discussed on other occasions, and particularly to the section of the report dealing with this question of primary distribution of the shares of companies engaged in speculative mining ventures through the facilities of the Toronto stock exchange. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, I am certain, the recommendation of that committee that this particular facility for distributing shares to the public by way of primary distribution should be discontinued. We here had criticized the report on this particular point, not because we could or could not assess the validity of the recommendation, but the report itself simply stated that it was a good thing to do in Ontario because it had been done in the United Kingdom many years ago and because it had been done in the United States of America in 1933.

But in making that recommendation, I would like to again refer to what took place in the debates in this Legislature some 18 or 19 years ago and to the remarks at that time of the present Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) who, I regret, is not in the House today and who, of course, was a former Attorney General of the province and was at the time of this particular debate a private member sitting for his present riding. I shall quote from Hansard of October 28, 1947, from the debate by the committee of the whole on that date:

Clerk of the House: Fifth order. House in committee on Bill No. 31, The Securities Act, 1947—which was the bill of Leslie E. Blackwell, who was the then Attorney General of the province of Ontario.

I notice that the hon. member for Grey South was present in the House at that time and made some comment in the debate, but I am particularly interested in the remarks of the present hon. Minister of Lands and Forests when the section of The Securities Act which presently exists and which presently exempts this kind of distribution to the public from the prospectus requirements of The Securities Act, was considered. He had this to say:

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in regard to section 46 (b); I noted that this section makes the provisions of sections 43, 44 and 45—which are the prospectus sections:

—not applicable to a sale of any securities which are listed with any recognized stock exchange, for sale through such exchange.

This is the same as it was in the 1945 Act. It has the effect of permitting primary distribution to take place through a recognized stock exchange without the necessity of producing a prospectus, which otherwise would be required.

Now, I think I should bring to the attention of this House the fact that in that section [not "in that section," but "that section"] was involved in an inquiry that took place last year when the 1945 Act was in force. A company currently known as the Beaulieu Yellowknife Mine Limited, under investigation, a copy of which I have here—an 11-page finding by the commission, or rather by Colonel O'Connor, senior solicitor, and Mr. J. H. Collins, senior accountant for the commission, and bears date of October 18, 1946. Briefly, in this case, the report indicated a shocking method of high financing.

And in another portion of his remarks:

The Beaulieu shares, it must be remembered, were listed on the Toronto stock exchange at the time. The transactions at this stage brought no new money into the company's account.

And further on his remarks:

A great volume of sales consequently went through the Toronto stock exchange and at a certain stage of the manipulations a short interest appeared and rumours circulated on the merits of the property as reflected by the then high price of the shares on the Toronto stock exchange.

And further on:

Now the unloading through the Toronto stock exchange of several hundred thousand shares to get money to clean up aposition of $680,000, that unloading undoubtedly was the sale which occurred in the course of the primary distribution of shares and yet no part of that went into the company. What was purely a manipulation in the broadest sense of the word in my opinion, a market manipulation carried on in that manner. With that fact facing us at this time in the findings of this commission with this section before us, I felt in duty bound to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, and to the attention of the hon. members of this House, that that sort of thing can go on under this section. Whether it can be stopped or not may be another question, but it seems to me at this point that we ought to pause before we pass a section which permits tradings of that sort to go in the primary distribution through an exchange, without even the formality of passing out prospectuses which must be done in all transactions outside of the stock exchange.

It is true that several recommendations were made to the stock exchange and some have been carried into effect. Mr. Chairman, I content myself with making these remarks with respect to the section and draw respectfully to the attention of the House that if we pass section 46, we are permitting primary distribution to be carried on through stock exchange, exempt from the accompanying passing on of the prospectus, as is required in all cases which are carried on outside of the exchange.

The then Attorney General, Mr. Blackwell, made a few remarks about the suggestion of Mr. Roberts at that time and ended his remarks by stating:

The proposal of the hon. member (Mr. Roberts) is quite off the path which is being followed by the commission and is not acceptable to the government.

After some questioning, Mr. Roberts again replied:

I do feel we should pause at this section and determine whether or not some correction is necessary here. The stock exchange was put on trial and the stock exchange was found wanting in that report. Whether they have corrected their actions and methods sufficiently to prove for the future they will not be found wanting, yet remains to be seen.

Later on, at the conclusion of that debate, Mr. Meinzinger, the member then for Waterloo North, said:

If this is so serious would it not be advisable to withhold the bill in the meantime?

Mr. Blackwell: No.

Section agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, without going into any number of other questions which are related to the relationship between the Ontario securities commission, the Toronto stock exchange and the proper development in the public interest of mining prospects in northern Ontario, I would suggest that for 20 years, on these two points, this government has done absolutely nothing, and from what I have seen today the hon. Minister of Mines is not interested in pursuing the topic.

I would urgently suggest that, after 20 years, perhaps this government, on those two issues could recognize that they must be attended to, and that because of these two items there must be several other items which equally would require the diligent attention of the government.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, under vote 1206, I have two subjects I would like to mention.

Under the mining lands branch, one thing that has been very hard to reconcile is that while this department states it is anxious to provide adequate facilities for the expansion of prospecting and mining in our province, it would at the same time consider closing one of its most active mining recording offices. The Montreal River office at Elk Lake registered the fourth highest number of claims of the 14 such offices located in Ontario last year. This office was also the fourth highest in 1963 and the third highest in 1962. The activity in this area has been steady and continuous over the years. In 1964, there were almost double the claims staked in 1963.

Apparently because of housing problems, the department has been considering combining this office with the one in Haileybury, which is located some 50 miles away. For prospectors residing in Elk Lake, this would mean an additional 100 miles of travel to register claims; for those from Gogama, it would mean 150 miles; from Matachewan, 160 miles, and from Shining Tree, a full 200 miles. And these are the areas in which the claims are being staked.

Quite often, also, two or three trips to the recording offices are necessary in the staking and recording of a group of claims. The move to Haileybury would definitely inconvenience, and present additional problems to, the local prospectors.

While this mining office in Elk Lake normally employs only two people, it is still the most important industry to the people of Elk Lake and brings considerable traffic and other business to the merchants of the town. For the past several years, because of lumbering and pulp problems, this has been a distressed community. A transfer of this office would not only have a considerable effect on the community, but would be contrary to the best interests of the department and to the encouragement of prospecting and mine development throughout the area.

This has been discussed with the hon. Minister and the deputy a number of times, but the shadow still lies over the community. Can the hon. Minister put this to rest, by assuring the chambers of commerce for that area that no such move will be made in the foreseeable future?

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, the hon. Minister said for me to ask the question in regard to—as he said this morning—the number of claims that were staked. We know that in this province many small mining companies and individuals are trying to develop ore bodies. Suppose there is a good showing of ore and then it takes these small companies a lot of money to drill many different holes, is there any assistance that would help these small companies or individuals to develop the size of these ore bodies, either from The Department of Mines or through The Department of Economics and Development?

Another question I would like to ask the hon. Minister—maybe I could do it now and shorten the time taken—is in regard to the mining roads. When is the decision made by The Department of Mines as to when it will assist with a mining road? I understand it pays 50 per cent of a mining road. Of course, these small mining companies build the road first, to the prospective mine, then I understand The Department of Mines has to be sure there is some kind of ore body there. It takes, I understand, two to three years before The Department of Mines will pay over its 50 per cent share of the road, which delay I am informed does cripple or hold back some of these small mining companies from going ahead as fast as they could, if they had this money from The Department of Mines earlier.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Could I answer the previous hon. member's question and say this: My heart rather goes out in the direction yours does, you know. We have no alternative but to move, as we are being evicted from our building in Elk Lake. Nothing definite has been done about this. Approximately 90 per cent of the business at Elk Lake can be carried out by mail; now that does not say it is going to be. But we will certainly take the hon. member's submission under advisement and see what we can do about it.

Mr. Taylor: In that connection I understand an alternative has been proposed by the local people there. They are prepared to build a building for The Department of Mines if that is the deciding factor.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: That is right.

Mr. Chairman: Vote—

Mr. MacDonald: No, Mr. Chairman, there are two topics that I would like—

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kent East, we are going to answer yours under vote 1207. It is on the other side of the page. Is that all right?

Mr. Spence: All right!

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two points which I would like to raise under this estimate. One is, I want to go back and underline and expand a bit on the problem and the solution that my hon. colleague, in his introduction, spelled out to this House, suggesting that the establishment of a Crown corporation for exploration and development of minerals would make a real contribution in this province.

The hon. member for Riverdale has given us a rather interesting glimpse into a chapter of the history of this Legislature some 20 years ago, when problems that are now besetting the mining industry and the Toronto stock exchange were investigated by the Ontario securities commission, and recommendations were made but no attention was paid to them. Indeed, previously the same kind of plea has been made time and time again since about six or seven years ago, when Toronto Saturday Night had almost a full article exposing the operations on the Toronto stock exchange. Those of us who dared from this side of the House to raise the issue were sloughed off as people who knew nothing about the operations, and we were going to frustrate the whole development of mining in the province.

After listening to and reading some of the things that go on in the market, I am almost tempted to quote the old adage of somebody who one time said: "Why be a crook when you can gouge the public so successfully on a completely legal basis?" One is almost driven to that conclusion when one sees some of the things that have been tolerated, Mr. Chairman.

Now, the hon. member for Sudbury in his earlier observations, when he spoke on the first vote, made a comment that rather puzzled me. He said: "We have not found any difficulty in discovering ore bodies in the province of Ontario." It puzzled me, because I can remember a year or two years ago when the same hon. member really went into oratorical flight in browbeating this government for presiding over a province in which there had been no new discovery of ore for ten years. He went back to Manitouwadge and others—you name it; it was ten years or more ago. You had the Texas Gulf shortly afterwards, and he has changed his mind so quickly that he now comes to the conclusion that there is no problem in getting ore bodies.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): It shows you how inconsistent the Opposition is.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is par for the course, as a Liberal spokesman. Indeed, I was also intrigued in another thing. We will concede in the New Democratic Party that the proposal of a Crown corporation for the exploration and the development of mining is, as far as this province is concerned, and as far as I know, not completely novel. It is an adaptation, insofar as we have been able to look at it, of the kind of thing that Rene Levesque has proposed in the province of Quebec. But I did not notice the Liberals raising it here. They are willing to praise what is done in Quebec, in terms of the government there making sure when they handed over these resources that they retained 11 per cent, but they are not willing, as I have suggested on a number of occasions in the past—because they are closer to those Bay Street boys whom they browbeat than they would like us to believe—to come up with the real answer to the problems.

Mr. White: It would be worse than the shoe factory in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, nonsense; the shoe factory in Saskatchewan. The oil development and the mineral development in Saskatchewan under the aegis of a democratic socialist government was as spectacular as any province in this country.

What I want to draw to the attention of this House, to the hon. Minister and to the government which will be getting another set of recommendations from the Kelly commission shortly, is that before the Kelly commission was set up at all, before the whole Windfall storm broke upon us, a study had been done for the Porter Royal commission on banking and finance—a study of finance in the mining industry by a man by the name of E. K. Cork—to which my hon. colleague referred. Let us hammer his points home, because they are fundamental. Eighty-six per cent of the money that goes into the development of mining came from the big companies who dominate the field. They did not have to go to the stock exchange to raise the money at all. They have it in the treasury, notwithstanding the complaints that we sometimes hear from the business world because of very generous tax and depreciation allowances. I can remember, for example, when International Nickel went into the development in Thompson in Manitoba about ten years ago and spent $180 million. The fact of the matter is that in the first ten years after the war, in depreciation allowances and favourable taxes they had accumulated something like $250 million. To use the hon. George Dunlop's inimitable phraseology years ago, they had it "in the sock." It was in the sock, ready for rainy days. They had accumulated, by generous tax structure, $250 million. So for the development of Thompson, they did not have to go to the stock exchange; they did not have to go to the public; they just dipped into the sock for $180 million of the $250 million. That is what is being done on 86 per cent of the mining development in this nation by the big corporations.

Let us go to the 14 per cent—the junior companies, those who do their financing on the stock market, the penny stocks, and so on. What happened in the 1953-63 period, upon which Cork based his analysis and his report to the Porter commission? The fact of the matter was that the junior companies in that period raised $850 million on the stock exchange. Sixty per cent of it went to the brokerage houses and others engaged in the promotions. So out of the $850 million that was raised in the stock exchange, $510 million went to the promoters. Three hundred and forty million dollars got into the treasury of the companies. Now, how much of that 40 per cent—$340 million—was used for actual development of mining? The answer, Mr. Chairman, was 18 per cent. Eighteen per cent of it, or a total of $150 million. The rest of it? Well, you know what happens when you get money in the treasury, and it is used for paying the directors who have control of it and a little bit of development—or so-called development.

Mr. White: Your biases are showing.

Mr. MacDonald: My what? My biases are showing? My facts are showing, too, and I want you to look at the facts.

Mr. White: You are cooking the books.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not cooking the books. I am quoting the authoritative study of E. K. Cork for the Porter commission. If you want to repudiate the Porter commission, go ahead and repudiate it.

Hon. J. R. Simonett: (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Eighteen per cent of your millions is out.

Mr. MacDonald: Let's just review the record: $850 million was gotten from the public. This is by the junior companies who represent only 14 per cent of the development of mining. Eight hundred and fifty million dollars were raised from the public, 60 per cent of it went to the promoters, leaving $340 million in the treasury of the company. Of that $340 million, only $150 million went into the development of mining.

Mr. Chairman, if you can come up with a more incredibly inefficient financing procedure to developing mining than that, quite apart from the elaboration of other aspects of it that my hon. friend, who is knowledgeable in a professional sense about how these things operate, I would like the hon. Minister or anybody else to get up and defend it. And this is what you defended for years. No wonder you make intelligent people become overnight socialists—if that is capitalism, you can have it.

If only they will face the facts instead of looking at the biases. I lay this before the House along with the Kelly commission report, and along with the ignored reports of the securities commission for 20 years, so that next year when we come back and all of this is here for action, that we will get some action, and not sort of slough us off as Leslie Blackwell sloughed off Kelso Roberts 20 years ago. The result is that a lot of people have had a lot of difficulties in the last year because we did not correct the procedures.

Now I leave that, Mr. Chairman. I have a second point that I wanted to comment on.

I want to get to mining after I have set the background, which will take about one minute. To go back to the Algoma Central Railway; we have raised this with the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests who is in negotiation with the Algoma Central Railway. It has been going on now for about a couple of years. Some concessions have been made on both sides, but the House, I think, will be interested, and I suspect the hon. Minister from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wishart) will be most interested.

In the current issue of the London Economist, June 12, 1965, there is, in keeping with this very authoritative and well-known publication of the business world, a report of the annual meeting of the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railroad Company. Sir Denys Lawson made a report on the company's progress. In it is this paragraph. I read it to the House and I invite them to go back and read what the hon. Minister said he would be going to do.

During the past year, the provincial government began serious talks with the company concerning our 850,000 acres of land grant lands north of Sault Ste. Marie. At this point the company has no way of knowing the extent of any takeover, the timing of such a move by the province, the price that might be arrived at by negotiation, or in fact whether the matter will be pursued to a conclusion.

I remember the very tough statements by the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests, how he was going to sit down and get an answer to this a year ago, and repeated a few months ago. Here we have the president of the company, in a report to the shareholders printed in far off London, England, asking when the matter will be pursued to a conclusion. That is how much determination they think the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests has in coming to a conclusion on these unresolved things.

However, let me quote the rest of the paragraph:

Naturally we would prefer to retain and develop our own lands for which, in effect, we paid a large price many years ago, calculated to have been the equivalent of at least $18 million at the time, and are only now about to reap some return on that benefit.

I invite the Cabinet at their next meeting to sit down and try to figure out when Algoma paid $18 million, or the equivalent thereof, for what they got as a handout for building that railway 60 years ago. They are just as unrepentant as they ever were, and I would like to see some evidence soon that this government is really coming to grips with this problem.

However, Mr. Chairman, this is all mildly irrelevant, because it is within Lands and Forests. I want to get down to the mining aspect of it, because last June, there suddenly emerged the most innocent little press release, the most disarming little press release I have ever read. It came from The Department of Mines, June 3, 1964, and announced that Algoma Central Railroad had handed back to the government nine townships on which they had been holding mineral rights. Now the background of that—hon. members of the House may or may not be aware of—is this problem.

If you are paying land tax, you do not have to pay the mineral rights. But if you dispose of the surface rights and you do not have to pay any land tax from that point on, then you become obligated to pay the mineral rights.

Back about 1952, some clerk in The Department of Mines, I presume, accidentally came across the fact that the Algoma Central Railway had been disposing of land from 1925 on. Therefore, from 1925 on, they became obligated to pay for a tax for mineral rights, which is ten cents per year per acre, from way back in 1925 or 1927. Indeed, there was one news story which quoted an unnamed—and I will bet he had better remain unnamed for the future of his security in the civil service—spokesman in The Department of Mines who stated that the accumulated mineral tax for Algoma Central Railway at that point stood at $3,250,000.

Now, when this clerk innocently came across this backlog in 1952, the then Prime Minister, Mr. Frost, entered into some agreement with Algoma Central Railway—how cosy and solicitous these arrangements are. We found that they owed three and a quarter million dollars, so did we insist that they pay up? Oh, no! We entered into an agreement, giving them 10 years to see whether or not they wanted to hold the land any further. And so for ten years, or a little better, they continued their explorations and admittedly, they spent some money. Indeed, if you read this annual report of the chairman of the company, he said they spent $80,000 during 1964 in mineral explorations. They spent some money, and at the end of the ten-year period they came to the conclusion there was nothing for them, so they handed back the nine townships. There are even more townships that I think may be handed back when they have completed their explorations.

But what happened to the three and a quarter million dollars back taxes? Nothing, Mr. Chairman. They got away with not paying them. They not only got away with that, but they got away with the little deal that the Liberals handed them in 1940. You remember back in 1940, they had not been paying land tax since 1925, and they had accumulated two-and-a-half-million dollars in back taxes. And so the Liberals of that day—no different from the Tories, merely the opposite sides of the same coin because they acted in precisely the same way—said to Algoma Central Railway; “you owe us two-and-a-half-million dollars, give us back half of the land, we will let you have the other half and we will forget the bill.” And not only that. Just to show you how solicitous they were—the Liberals passed a law that legally give the ACR the right to pay no taxes from that point on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Looks like your honeymoon is over.

Mr. MacDonald: Our honeymoon was never on. Whatever you saw for a little while there was "a common law" arrangement, I can assure you. It was not very honourable. The only thing that pushed us into it was that what you were doing was even less honourable, so we got into an alliance to try to cope with your tactics.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I leave the matter there. But how in heaven's name, can any government on that side of the House, with the record in The Lands and Forests Department, with a record now in The Department of Mines, deny that Algoma Central has been handed out of the public Treasury, directly or indirectly, something in excess of $4 million taxes that they have not paid and which they have been forgiven, and now we have the president of the company, reported in London on June 12, saying that at this point the company has no way of knowing the extent of any takeover. Remember that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests said they were thinking of taking it over, and it got quite some headlines up in Sault Ste. Marie—that they were going to reclaim these lands back to the Crown.

At this point, the company has no way of knowing the extent of any takeover, the timing of such a move by the province, the price that may be arrived at by negotiations, or in fact whether the matter will be pursued to a conclusion at all. I will tell you who is running this province on this issue, not this government, but Algoma Central Railway. They have been running it, not you. I hope sometime soon that you will stand up, and be men, and protect the interests of the people of this province, instead of letting them call the tune, which they have been doing for 30 or 40 years, and getting money out of the public Treasury while they are in the process of doing it.

Mr. Taylor: On this vote, Mr. Chairman, the other point that I would like to discuss stems from the very useful interim report of the Legislature's select committee on mining. That committee recommends that extensive geological and geophysical surveys be undertaken prior to the scheduling of areas as provincial parks, and that every effort be made in the establishment of new parks to locate them in tracts of low mineralization. I believe this to be an excellent proposal, Mr. Chairman, and it is a proposal which I suspect the hon. Minister of Mines views with some approval.

I hope that this report, and what I am going to say, will strengthen his hand in his discussions with his Cabinet colleagues.

There is one salient point about our mineral resources, and that is that the minerals we take out of the ground cannot be replaced. Every ton of ore that is mined is a ton that can never be mined again. Even though improving technology may mean that we can get more value from each ton of ore we mine—in fact we are now going back and obtaining commercial minerals from the refuse of earlier mining operations—but nevertheless the amount of useful mineralization in the rock of this province is limited, and in the long view of human history will, at some time, come to an end. We must, therefore, accept a couple of fundamental truths about mining in this province, and build from there.

First, we must recognize that our resources are limited. While we may not know these limits yet—and the total of our mineral resources is many times larger than even the optimistic of us now imagines—nevertheless we are dealing with a diminishing resource. This fact suggests, and even demands, that we should manage our mineral resources in the full light of the knowledge that they are limited, which brings me back to the recommendations of the select committee.

They tell us that we should ascertain the extent of mineralization in an area before that area is designated as a provincial park. If potential mineralization is present, then other arrangements should be made for park land.

Actually, the reasoning behind this is very simple, Mr. Chairman. Because we are dealing with a diminishing resource, and because world demand for minerals is going to increase steadily in the foreseeable future, eventually the economic imperatives involved will require us to extract minerals, no matter where they might be found. In fact, Mr. Chairman, our consumption of minerals and metals is bound to be so voracious in the future that if at some date in the 21st century, someone found nickel in the ground in this area, then I am certain that our successors of that day would have no choice but to remove themselves to other locations.

I foresee this kind of condition everywhere. I foresee it particularly in our park lands. In future, there is no doubt in my mind that parks will have to be sacrificed if commercially valuable minerals are found within their boundaries.

Right now, Mr. Chairman, we still have a lot of undeveloped land in this province. This means that park land is not yet in critically short supply but in the future the supply of suitable park land is likely to diminish. The effect of this is this, if we do not act with foresight now, we will find ourselves in the future sacrificing irreplaceable park lands at a time when the province is more fully settled and new park formation has come to a standstill. How much better it is to make that decision now when alternatives are still available to us, rather than to lose our parks later by default.

This argument leads on to another. What is true of our new parks now is equally true of existing parks. If valuable mineralization exists under our provincial parks right now, we should know this fact. We should do the geological work necessary to determine the extent of mineralization in existing parks and we should, on the basis of this knowledge, prepare ourselves for the day when it becomes imperative to exploit these mineral resources. This might mean altering the boundaries of the existing parks; it might mean other solutions to what is admittedly a very difficult problem.

Hon. members should try to visualize the problems they would face if an ore body like that discovered by Texas Gulf Sulphur turned up in the heart of Algonquin park. Pressures from all sides would be enormous. Faced with such pressures the government of the day would have to reach a decision and if it did not have a clearly formulated policy in advance, its decision would probably be a bad one.

Thus it is imperative that such policies be worked out now. Adjusting park boundaries is one possibility; imposing conditions and restrictions on mining operations is another. The only possibilities that are impossible are the obvious ones, either prohibiting all mineral extraction in the park land, or sacrificing parks to the economic demands of the mining industry.

The second possibility I mentioned above is a useful one I believe. It is no longer necessary for mining operations to turn the landscape for miles around into the kind of terrain the astronauts are going to find around the moon. Mining operators can, in fact, be required to return the land to its original condition. This is done today in northern England. Restoration of its original beauty to the landscape is possible through the underground disposal of tailings or by restoring tailing storage areas to other uses, as Hollinger and McIntyre have learned to do in the past. International Nickel has even experimented with the growing of grain in these tailings.

Undoubtedly if government penalties and inducements were applied, the necessary technology could be developed, probably at a very modest long-term cost, to ensure that mining operations do not permanently blight the landscape. Even now, far-sighted and public-spirited mining operators are able to run their industry with a minimum disturbance of the terrain and of other potential uses for land. Timagami Mining has operated in this way. In fact, this firm has probably added to the usefulness of its area through the construction of a mine access road.

Government policy requiring respect for terrain should be instituted now for all mining operations. It is desirable everywhere and it is essential if, as I believe is inevitable, we reach the time when we are mining within the boundaries of provincial parks. Such policies cannot be created and imposed in ignorance, and here is where immediate action is essential if mining and parks are not to be in conflict in this province now and in the future. We must know what mining potential, if any, underlies our existing parks. Only armed with this knowledge can we save ourselves from future trouble.

My remarks, Mr. Chairman, boil down to three proposals which I submit to the hon. Minister. First, as has already been recommended, thorough survey work for mineralization should be undertaken before the location and boundaries of any new provincial parks are established. Second, similar survey work should be carried on in existing park lands so that we will be able to plan intelligently now, for the day when mineral resources in existing parks must be used. Third, legislation should be introduced now to require mining operators to respect the value of the land on which their mines are sited. Such legislation should provide both penalties for unnecessary neglect of the terrain, and inducements for mining companies which undertake energetic programmes to maintain the natural beauty of the land which lies over their ore bodies.

I might add one final word on this: Most hon. members will apply these remarks almost completely to northern Ontario, but we should remember that they apply equally well to the sand and gravel and aggregate extraction operations in southern Ontario. Everyone is familiar with the ugly scars on our landscape produced by abandoned gravelpits. The proposals I have made are intended to be applicable to all such operations as well as to the hardrock mines in the north.

Vote 1206 agreed to.

On vote 1207:

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, before this vote is carried I wonder if the hon. Minister of Mines has any comment to make on the matter raised by the hon. member for Riverdale and the hon. leader of this party relating to the financing of mining operations and the role of the stock exchange in that.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I would say to the hon. member that I have very little knowledge of those things. It comes under The Department of the Attorney General and the securities commission. It really does not affect us; we have nothing to do with the market at all, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. members are aware, the report of the Attorney General's committee on securities legislation was received some weeks ago and tabled in this House. I think I have informed the House previously but I will now do so through you, sir, that legislation was immediately got under way and is in preparation of being drafted. It is not being presented to the Legislature at this session and one of the reasons for that is so that these proposals may be given full study and that the legislation may be carefully drafted. The other is, of course, that the Royal commission which was appointed in July or August of last year, just finished hearing its evidence and the report, I believe, is being prepared now by the commissioner, Mr. Justice Kelly, and will be received, no doubt, shortly.

I think, as the hon. Minister of Mines says, this matter of the financing of particularly mining companies, industry perhaps to some extent also, and the security market falls within the area of the Attorney General's department with respect to the regulations thereof, and that the legislation which will result from the committee's report and from the Royal commission I feel sure will meet this problem. I should think it would be reasonable to expect that we might give an opportunity for that legislation to be presented.

Now I think I can say that to the House, without in any way suggesting that there is any delay whatsoever taking place in the matter.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think there is one phase of this matter which relates to The Department of Mines and which should be noted and emphasized at this time.

A justification that has often been advanced for the sort of skin game that goes on down in the Toronto stock exchange is that it is essential for the mining development of this province. Now, whatever may have been true 40 years ago, I think it is quite obvious now that that operation has so little to do with mining development it does not matter.

The hon. Minister of Mines—and I think quite properly—does not even consider that it is a matter of any great interest to him in his capacity as Minister. I think we should bear that in mind. The amount of money raised by primary distribution through the stock exchange for mining development in the province is not a drop in a bucket. Actually the operation is essentially a skin game for taking as many suckers to the cleaners as possible.

I can understand that the hon. Attorney General has to have time to consider these matters, but they have been under consideration for many years. I would suggest to him that he should not wait until the last report of the last Royal commission is given, because until legislative action is taken, I venture to suggest to him that there will be Royal commissions regularly investigating whatever may happen to cause the latest scandal. I think there is now enough information for genuine legislation to be brought in at the next session, whenever it may be; I hope it may be this fall so that we can get moving on the matter.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We agree. We have just received the report a few weeks ago.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but then the hon. Attorney General mentioned the Kelly commission as the occasion for further delay.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I can tell the hon. member legislation is being prepared and it will be produced, I am quite confident, at the next session.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, may I say to the hon. member for York South, with respect to the matter of the Algoma Central Railway in which I am very interested, that it is by no means at an end and that there are developments of matters going on which he knows not of and which I at this moment am not at liberty to tell him.

Vote 1207 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Mines.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions and beg leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will deal with second readings, committee of the whole House and with estimates of The Department of Public Welfare. At five o'clock an hour will be set aside, as previously arranged and understood, for other public bills. There will be a night session tomorrow evening.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5:55 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 17, 1965
Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 17, 1965

Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	4299
Tax on the consumers of tobacco, bill to impose, reported	4301
Establishment and operation of commuter services, bill to provide for, reported	4303
University of Toronto Act, 1947, bill to amend, reported	4306
York University Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	4306
Lakehead University, bill respecting, reported	4306
Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario Act, 1961-1962, bill to amend, reported	4309
University of Guelph Act, 1964, bill to amend, reported	4309
Department of Education Act, bill to amend, reported	4309
Children's Institutions Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, reported	4309
Homes for Retarded Children Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, reported	4309
Department of Public Welfare Act, bill to amend, reported	4310
Pension Benefits Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	4310
Université d'Ottawa, bill respecting, reported	4311
Raising of money on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund, bill to authorize, reported	4312
Ontario Mental Health Foundation Act, 1960-1961, bill to amend, reported	4312
Liquor Control Act, bill to amend, reported	4312
Liquor Licence Act, bill to amend, reported	4313
Establishment of regional detention centres, bill to provide for, reported	4314
Milk Act, 1965, bill intituled, held	4314
Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, bill to amend, reported	4315
Recess, 12.30 o'clock	4315

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we extend a special welcome, in the Speaker's gallery, to a group of United States editors who are touring the province as guests of The Department of Tourism and Information. I may say these members of the press represent some 26 states of the United States and come all the way from Vermont, Massachusetts and New Jersey in the east, to the Carolinas in the south and even as far west as Utah and that other republic known as Texas.

We also welcome, in the west gallery, students from Cataraqui public school, Cataraqui.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The forty-eighth order, committee of the whole House; Mr. W. G. Noden in the chair.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

Except as provided in subsection 2 of section 2 of The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965, every person shall, at the time of purchase or delivery, pay to the Treasurer for the use of the Crown in right of Ontario, a tax at the rate of 20.5 cents per imperial gallon on all diesel fuel purchased, or delivery of which is received by him in Ontario for his own use, as provided in Bill No. 143, The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965.

Resolution concurred in.

THE MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL TAX ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 143, The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) with regard to section 2, if he is familiar with any violations of the use of diesel fuel, which has up until now been tax free for agricultural purposes, and if this is perhaps the reason why this bill has been brought in?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, I may say that we provide in the bill for the continued use by farmers of diesel fuel without any inconvenience to them, and the bill is not for that purpose, it is rather to provide better administrative practice covering the whole Act.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, I inadvertently overlooked the first resolution with respect to Bill No. 143.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor also recommends the following:

That,

the moneys required for the purposes of The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965, during the fiscal year 1965-66, shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided in Bill No. 143, The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965.

Resolution concurred in.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer, if any of the producers of the fuel have raised objections to this. Are there other additional expenses attached to the marking of the fuel?

Hon. Mr. Allan: There will be some additional expenses incurred by the marketers of fuel oil because of the colouring of the fuel oil. This has been discussed at very great length with the companies concerned, and I would say, with one exception, that there is a reasonably good understanding and agreement with the provisions as provided in the Act.

Mr. Nixon: There is provision under The Gasoline Tax Act, I am thinking now of the use of gasoline by farmers, for the tax rebate for the fuel that is used in the agricultural industry, and I believe that that has worked fairly well without the marking of the fuel. There is no marking under those circumstances and I was wondering why the hon. Provincial Treasurer feels it is essential in this particular area when it is not in the other.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to assure the hon. member for Brant that we really were not thinking particularly of the diesel fuel that is used by farmers as a reason for bringing this bill. This is indicated by the fact that farmers will be permitted to use coloured diesel fuel, there will be no problem so far as the farmers who use diesel fuel are concerned. It will be even more simple than claiming a refund. Now if they do use the clear, uncoloured diesel fuel in their tractors, they then can ask for a refund. But I would expect that they will, in all probability, use the coloured fuel and obtain it more cheaply in that way without paying the tax at all; they would not find it necessary to claim a refund.

Mr. Nixon: If that is the case, then, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. Provincial Treasurer might foresee, in the next session, a comparable bill that would permit farmers to buy marked gasoline as well, and not have to go through the procedure of having to get a rebate. Is that possible?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. member for Brant is thinking always of the welfare of the farmers. I may say that the—

Mr. Nixon: Nobody else does.

Hon. Mr. Allan: —the member for Haldimand-Norfolk is, also. However, I am afraid I cannot make any commitments.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I raise another question which rose directly out of what the hon. member for Brant has just raised? I think there is validity in what he has said, and if the government is going to consider it, why do they not consider it also in reference to gasoline that is used in boating? I have had representations made to me by people who say that to claim the rebate that many people are entitled to, which may amount to only $10 or $15 a year, they simply do not know the procedures, or the routines. They do not retain all their bills, and the result is they do not get what they are entitled to by way of a rebate. Now, to avoid all of these administrative difficulties, it would seem to me that if you are considering what the hon. member for Brant has raised, which is an extension of this for farmers, that it be done for gasoline that is going to be used for boating and marine purposes. It would obviate the necessity of paying the tax in the first instance, and you would then not be getting, by default, money that you really do not want—or you do not want to take, let us put it that way.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the hon. member for York South does not know the Provincial Treasurer as well as I thought that he did.

Mr. MacDonald: My tongue was in my cheek. You could see it, but it did not get registered in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I would be very glad to discuss this at another time, Mr. Chairman. There are considerable difficulties in undertaking your proposal. On the face of it, I agree that it looks quite reasonable. We have given this consideration and will continue to consider it, but very great problems are apparent.

Mr. MacDonald: Five or six other provinces have done it.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Not many.

Mr. MacDonald: I am told—five or six.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I doubt that there are that many.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could we ask your indulgence, sir? Could the hon. Provincial Treasurer give us some of the reasons for this, because I, like the leader of the new party, have had letters where people have not collected all their bills for gasoline for boating. I had one about a month ago where the fellow had been writing back and forth; the cost of the mail going back and forth covered more than the amount he had spent on the gas. Could the hon. Provincial Treasurer tell us some of the reasons why he would not consider it?

Hon. Mr. Allan: The reasons, I might say in a general way, are that it is very difficult to sell untaxed gasoline and make sure that it does not get in motor vehicles. To put it very plainly, that is the real reason that this has been done. Many of the hon. members will remember that during the war there was an effort made at marking gasoline. The experience at that time was most unsatisfactory from the point of view of collecting the revenue that was due.

Sections 3 to 22, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 143 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That, during the fiscal year ending the 31st day of March, 1966, the money required for the purposes of administering and enforcing The Tobacco Tax Act, 1965, shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided in Bill No. 144, An Act to impose a tax on the consumers of tobacco.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor also recommends the following:

That,

every consumer shall pay to Her Majesty in right of Ontario a tax computed at the rate of

(a) one-twentieth of one cent on every cigarette purchased by him;

(b) one-fifth of one cent for every five cents or part thereof of the price at retail of every cigar purchased by him;

(c) one-half of one cent per ounce or part thereof of any tobacco, other than cigarettes or cigars, purchased by him at a rate of less than 50 cents a package or one cent per ounce or part thereof of any tobacco purchased by him at a rate of 50 cents or more a package, but on any purchase under this clause the minimum tax payable is one cent, and every fraction of a cent shall be considered as one cent, as provided in Bill No. 144, An Act to impose a tax on the consumers of tobacco.

Resolutions concurred in.

TAX ON THE CONSUMERS OF TOBACCO

House in committee on Bill No. 144, An Act to impose a tax on the consumers of tobacco.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I move that clause (c) of subsection (1) of section 2 of the bill be struck out and the following be substituted:

(c) One-half of one cent per ounce or part thereof of any tobacco other than cigarettes or cigars purchased by him at a rate of less than 50 cents a package or one cent per ounce or part thereof of any tobacco purchased by him at a rate of 50 cents or more per package, but on any purchase under this clause the minimum tax payable is one cent and every fraction of a cent shall be considered as one cent.

Mr. Chairman, by way of explanation, I may say that before drafting this bill we gave this subject a great deal of study. We visited other provinces which had experience with tobacco taxes and had most helpful and informative meetings. I am grateful for the co-operation and assistance received.

Since the bill received first reading on May 13, and copies have been made available to those interested, we have had further contacts with persons who were experienced in the tobacco tax field and more suggestions have been forthcoming.

I mentioned a few days ago that in the transition from retail sales tax to tobacco tax we did not want to see a reduction in tax on the higher price of cut tobacco. The modern trend in taxation is to tax cut tobaccos on a weight basis. On further studying this feature, I now believe that consideration should be given to the lower priced tobacco items, the largest of which is the fine-cut tobacco used by those who choose to roll their own cigarettes.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister this? This seems to be doing away with the nuisance of collecting a sales tax on tobacco in the province of Ontario. If it can be done with tobacco, is it not possible to do it with soft drinks? There are many small businesses in this province which have to keep a box or a scribbler to keep track of the sales tax on soft drinks and tobacco. If it is being done away with on tobacco now, why can it not be done away with on other products?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, we shall always be glad to explore the possibilities of doing away with any inconvenience so far as the merchants who collect the tax for us are concerned. This was an area in which the lines are few; it was an area in which experience has been gained by other jurisdictions, and we shall see how we get along with this in the meantime.

Mr. Spence: In other words, the hon. Provincial Treasurer is going to try this out?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Yes, that is right.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, section 4 says the controller may suspend or cancel the permit of any wholesale dealer who does one of the things set out in the balance of the section.

I am very puzzled as to how the government justifies what appears to me to be indirect taxation. They are obviously going, from the intent of section 4, to impose certain burdens on the wholesaler to do collection of taxes. We all know that section 92 of the BNA Act does not allow us to do this. It would seem that when you read section 4, together with the regulation section, you will have this broad power of passing regulations and you are trying to circumvent the legal method of our constitutional system of taxation. The province can tax directly, but it cannot tax indirectly. Now, surely the implication in section 4 is that you are going to tax indirectly? I want to know on what basis the hon. Provincial Treasurer is putting this forth.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I might inform the hon. member for Downsview that we do not propose to tax indirectly. The tax will be collected as a part of the price of the tobacco and will find its way back to the Treasury, to the consolidated revenue fund. As the hon. member knows, this is the same principle as is followed in the collection of gasoline tax.

Mr. Singer: Well, it may the same principle, Mr. Chairman, but I can only read section 4 one way. You are going to impose certain burdens on the wholesaler. If the wholesaler has to collect taxes and he passes it on to the retailer, who in turn passes it on to the consumer, what else can it be other than indirect taxation?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment here? Let us call a spade a spade. This is an indirect tax. The government has been engaged in indirect taxing for years. The answer, as I see it, as a layman, is that the gasoline companies in the very well established precedent have not seen fit to challenge it in the courts. Therefore, while even a layman, I think I could agree with a lawyer that there appears to be a fairly strong case for this being an indirect tax. The fact of the matter is that it likely will be proceeded with, because it is administratively so much more efficient than having each retailer collect the tax. So until the hon. member for Downsview, in his professional capacity, finds a client to take it to the courts and challenge it, it is likely to continue.

Mr. Singer: Well, my friend cavalierly brushes aside the BNA Act.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not brush it aside. I am just dealing with the reality.

Mr. Singer: I am told—let me put it to the hon. Provincial Treasurer this way—that very strong representations have been made to you, sir, that you are doing something that constitutionally you are not allowed to do.

An hon. member: We do not agree.

Mr. Singer: No such representations have been made to you? Well, sir, somebody is misinforming me. The person who approached me on this, indicated that very strong representations had been made to the government and that he was of the opinion that you were doing something that constitutionally you are not allowed to do.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, the one thing that I would never wish to do in this House would be to mislead the hon. member for Downsview. I would be very frank to admit that I did have a deputation from the wholesalers, but they came principally to endeavour to find out how this was going to work.

Mr. Singer: Just a searching party.

Hon. Mr. Allan: They came to see how it was going to work and I informed the person who requested the appointment, I felt it would have been better to wait until we had the regulations ready; however, due to the fact that he came from the town of Simcoe, I saw the deputation. We had a very pleasant discussion and they are coming back. I do not anticipate—

Mr. MacDonald: Is he a member of the Tory association?

Hon. Mr. Allan: No, he is not.

Sections 4 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 144 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,
the moneys required for the purposes of The Commuter Services Act, 1965, during the fiscal year 1965-66, shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided in Bill No. 147, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of commuter services.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): In this regard, I understand it is an amendment to Bill No. 146?

Clerk of the House: No, we are on the resolution of Bill 147.

Mr. Sargent: Well, again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to voice my opposition to this bill, as outlined before.

Mr. Chairman: Wait until we get to the bill, please.

COMMUTER SERVICES

House in committee on Bill No. 147, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of commuter services.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in effect, this bill as outlined by the hon. Prime Minister, will give a capital gift of $7 million this year.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is out of order. The principle of the bill is decided on second reading. If he is addressing remarks to any specific section he would be in order, but he simply cannot talk about the principle of the bill.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the government has not told the House how it will give the rest of Ontario a like amount. The hon. Prime Minister told the House that this would unleash funds for the rest of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Order! You are out of order. This should have been on second reading, unless you can point out one section on which you would like to speak.

Mr. Sargent: The bill is out of order, too. You are giving $14 million less to the rest of Ontario than you are giving to Toronto in this bill.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

On section 4:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subsection 2 of section 4 of the bill be amended by striking out the word "acquired" in the third line and inserting, in lieu thereof, the word "sign."

This amendment is only to correct a typographical error.

The word "acquired" will be replaced by the word "sign" in subsection 2 of section 4. This deals with the plan. The plan must be signed in the registry office. It is purely technical.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if I am in order on this; I am sure if I am not you will so rule. Since the introduction of this bill I have been having a look at other commuter services in the States and I was interested in the commuter service in Boston. The federal government had to finance it, I think, to the tune of $10 million a year. I understand, and I raise this question, that Metro Toronto was doing a study concerning the feasibility of people using public transportation. This study as yet, I understand, has not come out. I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister if he was aware that such a study was being done and whether it has come out, and what the findings were if it has come out.

It is a very important factor to the bill, the fact that you have the capacity for 6,000 people every half hour. I am sure we were all concerned, at the time we talked on the principle of the bill, that we educate people to use the public facilities. This study by Metro was going to be done to see the reaction of people to using public over private transportation. Am I correct that there has been such a study, and has this been taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of the detail of this. The hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is, because the studies that were made resulting in this bill, were made in a committee of which he was chairman, and I am quite sure that he will be able to answer the hon. leader of the Opposition's questions. I am afraid I cannot.

Mr. Thompson: Could I repeat, sir; do you want me to repeat it?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, I wish you would.

Mr. Thompson: My question was really that having looked at other cities, I had noticed that in Boston the federal government had come in to the tune of $10 million a year to subsidize public transportation. I think it encouraged a greater use of this kind of transportation. The problem had been the factor of trying to get the public to use public transportation. I understand that there is in Metro a study being done of this and I could not get the information as to whether the study had actually been finalized. My question was whether the hon. Minister had seen this study to determine the acceptance of commuter services by people in outlying Metro areas.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Chairman, Metropolitan Toronto did undertake a transportation study on its own. The parts of that study that could be incorporated into the study being undertaken by the provincial government. There has been a pooling of information—I think this has been mentioned here before—a pooling of the information that developed in the course of Metropolitan Toronto's transportation study, with the information available from the departments of government, such as Transport, Municipal Affairs and Highways. Again, if you examine the personnel of the technical and advisory committee, you will find that it is made up of representatives of those government departments and representatives from Metro Toronto in the persons of Mr. George Grant, the Toronto roads commissioner and Mr. E. Comay, the Toronto planning commissioner.

We have taken full advantage of those portions of the Metropolitan Toronto study that lend themselves to the broader nature of study that we are undertaking at our level. I cannot speak with any degree of accuracy about the extent to which the findings of Metropolitan Toronto's own study have been made public, but certainly the complete information within that study has been available to the province.

The reference of the hon. leader of the Opposition, if I may say so, to the study of Boston, is just as he says—the principal amount, if not all the funds for that study, have been put up by the federal government. As I understand it, this takes place in all those urban areas of the United States where similar mass transportation studies are under way. I think it relates to a percentage, something like 1.5 per cent of another budget for overall transportation. It must be directed to these mass transportation studies. Whether that percentage is accurate or not, I cannot say, but it is a percentage and in Boston it works out to a very considerable amount of money. The same is taking place in New York, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Philadelphia—across the continent. Great quantities of federal funds are employed for that purpose, whereas here, of course, they are all local or provincial funds.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that, but my third question was really: Had the hon. Minister the opportunity of seeing the Metro study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very much so.

Mr. Thompson: And that you worked closely with them.

As far as referring to Boston, I was not referring to a subsidy for study; I was referring to a subsidy to keep the commuter service going. I mentioned on the figures I got they were losing $10 million annually, and this is why it caused me some concern.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, yes. On that point, Mr. Chairman, I might just qualify that. They have, in Boston and other areas, undertaken some demonstration and trial projects as well. They have done it in New York. The Long Island railroad is undertaking that; it is a trial situation, and the same in Boston. They have worked with the Boston and Maine railroad there. They have not got into it on as full-blown a scale probably as we propose to do it here, but they call them demonstration projects over there.

Mr. Thompson: They are $2.8 million in the red—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Exactly, I think you are right.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister this. Clause 3 says that "services to any one or more areas of Ontario." Would the hon. Prime Minister inform me if the same ratio is available to the rest of Ontario that has been given to Metro Toronto? In other words, if you are going to make $7 million capital available for commuter services in the Toronto area, will $14 million be available to the rest of Ontario on the same basis, and also $4 million a year subsidy on other commuter services like Ottawa, Sudbury, Windsor, all over the province? Is the same ratio available to the rest of the province?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this question has been debated in this House many times. We do not do things on ratios in our allocation of provincial funds for any purpose —highways, education, and so on. Many times the allocation of funds is done on the basis of need, so if we spend X number of dollars in the Metro area, we do not necessarily say because we have spent X number of dollars here, we therefore will spend X number of dollars somewhere else. The hon. member might be interested in knowing, for instance, that when we were doing a study concerning highway financing and toll roads in the province, it was proven to us—and the hon. member for York South will recall this—that on the 401 bypass, as it was known then, around the northern part of Toronto, the gasoline tax consumed on that road alone—nothing other than gasoline tax—would pay for it in six years. Now the hon. member is always trying to point out that we spend too much money in the Toronto area. I recognize exactly what he is getting at. I would like to point out to him that the Toronto area produces an enormous amount of tax revenue. It is not necessarily all spent in the Toronto area.

As an example, I am pointing out to the hon. member that on Highway 401 running north of Toronto, if you simply took the gasoline tax collected by the government and the cars using that highway, in six years it would be completely paid for. That is the original highway, as it was constructed. Of course, we will continue collecting gasoline tax on that highway for years and that revenue will be spent in other parts of the province which never have any hope of generating enough tax money to pay for the cost of the roads there. But this is the way you operate a province. You do not simply say: "We are going to spend in any one area precisely what that area produces and no more." Much of the money that is put into roads—for instance, development roads in northern Ontario—is generated on the Queen Elizabeth Way, which has been there for 30 or 35 years, and was long since paid for. But it is still generating tax revenue used in other parts of the province.

So it is impossible for me to say to the hon. member that because we are going to spend $7 million in the Toronto area, we are then going to allocate a precise number of dollars based on any form to be spent elsewhere. We make our grants to municipalities on a basis of need. The lower the assessment, the higher the grant in many instances. We follow a formula of need, and not any strict form such as the hon. member suggested.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you. I do know that the hon. Prime Minister can make his figures justify what he is saying. The devil can quote scripture to cite his purpose, too. But we are concerned about the fact that you are flying a kite here with $7 million of money belonging to all of all Ontario to look after the Golden Horseshoe area. I think it behooves the hon. Prime Minister and his government to tell the rest of the province what moneys they have available along the same line, without leaving it out in left field or some place for them to pick up if they go after it.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Just look at the estimates of The Department of Highways and the hon. member will see what money is available. I am quite sure if the hon. member wants the exact figures as to how much money is going into any particular area in grants for road purposes, we would be delighted to give it to him.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation in intervening here for a moment to say I am 100 per cent on the side of the hon. Prime Minister. I will not share in any attempt to create an internecine warfare between various parts of the province, as my genial friend from Owen Sound is always engaged in. I can remember—

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We are not concerned about Metro Toronto getting mobility in commuter service; we are in favour of that. But we are opposed to this give-away all the time to Metro Toronto at the expense of the rest of the province. This has to stop some time, and this is a good point to pin it down.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): That is the chief plank of the Liberal Party.

Mr. MacDonald: The point I was going to make, Mr. Chairman, really follows from a comment of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrobe) yesterday, when he said that he had difficulty in explaining to the people in the north who always say they are not getting enough roads.

I can understand their feeling, when they have waited for two generations to get a road, such as from Atikokan to Fort Frances; I can understand their feeling. I remember back on the toll roads committee—and this illustrates the point, we were given figures—and these are now ten years out of date—that the amount of traffic on the Queen Elizabeth Way between Hamilton and Toronto on Labour Day weekend exceeded the annual traffic on the old Trans-Canada highway—No. 11—exceeded the annual traffic in one weekend! Now when you translate that into gasoline tax, there is no mystery as to the fact that a highway with the traffic that you have on 400 or 401 pays for itself in six or eight years.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying is: let us not set one off against another. We are generating down in this area revenues which are used to build highways, in some instances in northern Ontario, which will never pay for themselves in terms of gasoline tax. Now I am not saying that the highways should not be built, because there are reasons why they should be built. Indeed, I would say to the hon. Minister of Highways, now that he has finally succeeded in getting the Atikokan to Fort Frances highway, he should get off his stationary position and start building a highway from Atikokan north to the Trans-Canada, instead of having to run around such a distance. However, that is getting out of order.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I want to make one little observation here. I do not think the hon. member for Grey North was in the House when we debated this bill on second reading, and I just want to make one important suggestion to him, that emanated from the comments that were made. I am quite sure the House was in full agreement with the principle of what is being done here in Metropolitan Toronto. This is not a give-away, it is not a kite-fly, it is nothing of the sort as far as Metropolitan Toronto is concerned.

These expenditures are experimental in nature, they are designed to prove the extent to which we can attract people to use another form of travel that may effect very great economies in our capital expenditures. If this is the case, and it was stated in the House, there may very well be more capital money to spend in Owen Sound and around the province. On that basis alone we think it is a sensible thing to do, but it is not a give-away, it is not a kite-fly, or anything of that nature, and I think the hon. member is aware of that, certainly his hon. leader is.

Mr. MacDonald: You might even be able to finance the traffic lights at Meaford.

Mr. Thompson: I fully understand the sentiments of my hon. colleague behind me. His interest is for an equality of service throughout the province. We have endorsed the principle of this bill, but he naturally is a fighter for regional developments throughout the province, and I think it is a cause well worth fighting for when I see a great deal—

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 5 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 147 reported.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1947

House in committee on Bill No. 148, An Act to amend The University of Toronto Act, 1947.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 148 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

the property vested in York University and any lands and premises leased to and occupied by York University shall not be liable to taxation for provincial, municipal or school purposes, and shall be exempt from every description of taxation so long as the same are actually used and occupied for the purposes of York University, as provided in Bill No. 149, The York University Act, 1965.

Resolution concurred in.

THE YORK UNIVERSITY ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 149, The York University Act, 1965.

Sections 1 to 22, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 23:

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder if I might ask for one point of clarification on section 23. I am rather interested as to the relationships between the board of governors and the senate. It says here that the board can take action after "consultation with the senate," and in the previous section, I was just trying to put my finger on it, it says "with the concurrence of the senate." I hope we can resolve, to some degree, this relationship between senate and board of governors, and I think this bill does. It has been an area of some conflict within the institution, and I am wondering why there is the apparent contradiction here, that generally it is "with the concurrence of the senate, and yet in this specific Act it says "only after consultation."

Hon. Mr. Roberts: May I ask what specific section? I cannot find it.

Mr. MacDonald: Section 23.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: "Consultation" is used in the sense of capacity to affiliate. As to "concurrence," what section is that? I can tell the hon. member this, that this bill was very carefully drawn up to deal with the relationship between the board of governors and the senate of the university, and the provisions of the bill as set out were concurred in by the senate and the board of governors. I can perhaps understand that consultations might take place if you were to do an affiliation which really has perhaps nothing to do with the normal functions of the senate of the university, that is, if you are going to affiliate with another body, but I do not see the section.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have found it. Can I draw it specifically to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister? On page 4 of the bill, subsection K of section 10 spells out the powers of the board, and it, in effect, says "to establish faculties, schools and institutes with the concurrence of the senate." When you get to 23, you have in effect an affiliation which in general is the same kind of area, and yet here it is only "consultation."

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I think that these matters were agreed upon by the parties as to where the senate was to be consulted and then where its concurrence would be necessary. I can see some difference between the two areas. The establishment of a faculty or a school in the university really affects the academic function of the university pretty closely. If you are going to affiliate, this gets to be a mechanical task, and in my view might fall to the board of governors. However, the consultation would mean, I suppose, that the academic aspects of even the affiliation would have to be considered before the board of governors could act upon it. My only answer is that this bill was agreed upon by the parties involved before it was brought into the House.

Sections 23 to 28, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 149 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

the property vested in the board of governors of Lakehead University and any lands and premises leased to and occupied by the board of governors of Lakehead University or the university are not liable to taxation for provincial, municipal or school purposes, and are exempt from every description of taxation so long as the same are actually used and occupied for the purposes of Lakehead University, as provided in Bill No. 150, An Act respecting Lakehead University.

Resolution concurred in.

LAKEHEAD UNIVERSITY

House in committee on Bill No. 150, An Act respecting Lakehead University.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. E. C. Freeman (Fort William): Mr. Chairman, with regard to section 7 particularly, the Lakehead University, as it will be known from July 1, is supported in part by contributions from the people in the Lakehead area. There has been some criticism in the Lakehead area with regard to the people who go to make up the board of governors and it has been felt that some consideration should be given to the idea of adding representatives from women's organizations; women should be represented on the board and possibly the working group at the Lakehead.

There is a great deal of commendation expressed in the Lakehead area with regard to the choice of some of these people and I think that much credit could be given to such people as Mr. R. J. Flatt of Fort William, E. Lorne Goodall of Port Arthur and William G. Tambllyn of Fort William, who have served on the board for a number of years. Mr. Tambllyn, in particular, has given extremely fine service and a great deal of time to the affairs of the college, and now that he has been named as the leader of the new university, I believe that the choice has been well made. I think that he will make an excellent president and I am sure that the people at the Lakehead will join together with the board and work in bringing out extended activities.

One of the things that the people at the Lakehead are particularly appreciative about—as is the whole Lakehead area, as a matter of fact—is that extension courses have been set up to take care of such places as Atikokan, Dryden, Kenora, Nipigon and Geraldton. I believe that next year the university has in mind extending this service to Fort Frances and other communities. The summer school, too, is growing splendidly.

All of these things, I think, are due in part to the fact that the people such as I mentioned—Mr. Flatt, Mr. Goodall and Mr. Tamblyn—have worked very hard in connection with this university setup. I know there are a number of points that people have raised with regard to such things as, when the president is not available who takes over, and so on. There is no real understanding in the university at the present time as to what the process will be. I hope that The Department of Education will clarify this with the Lakehead people so that they will have some formula upon which to base their future actions.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I should like to underline one point that my hon. colleague has raised. One of the most encouraging things about the Lakehead University development is, as I have said before, that after having got off to what I felt was a slow start, I think they are now succeeding in integrating their activities with the whole of the northwest. It is really quite exciting to watch in operation.

As hon. members will know this all started out with a fairly heavy technological basis and up in this area, with the mining and the forest industries, and so on, it is understandable and, I think, desirable. So there is all the more reason then why, sir, in setting up the directing body of an institution that this new university should have done what York and Brock have done—conceivably others, but I know for certain in those two instances—that is, given representation to organized labour in the area. I think you are going to get participation of organized labour in the kind of retraining, in the extension programmes and in the direction of the young people to the Lakehead University—instead of being lured down to Toronto and to some of the longer established universities—by having organized labour represented on the board of governors and I regret that it is not there. Conceivably it cannot be done now without consultation, but I think that in The Department of University Affairs' continuing review of the Acts that we have for our various universities, this should be considered as a general principle, particularly in the northwest.

I have a second point, and this may not be the appropriate section in which to raise it, but I raise it for the hon. Prime Minister's consideration so that he can come back into the picture, if he will. There is this anomaly that the students who graduated six weeks ago, graduated from Lakehead University, which will not come into being until July 1, so technically this was an illegal act. The hon. Prime Minister intervened in what I thought was a very wise intervention when we raised this earlier, and said that perhaps there could be an amendment to the Act which perhaps could be retroactive and cover this year's graduates. I am wondering if that cannot be done either on second reading now, or conceivably, if the rules permit, on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: My assumption, Mr. Chairman, is that this has been taken care of. However, I will check with the deputy Minister of The Department of University Affairs and if it has not been, then we can do it either here or on third reading.

In regard to the points made by the hon. member for Fort William and the hon. member for York South, I am in full agreement with them. I think the board of governors of this university should be completely representative. I recognize some of these names and some of them I do not; I assume that they are representative. However, I do notice that there are three persons to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, which gives the government some control even yet, and I would be very pleased to see that the hon. Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis) is made aware of the comments that the hon. members have made here this morning.

In regard to the replacements for these people, you will notice that their terms of office are staggered and there will be replacements from time to time. Those appointments do not rest with the government; they rest with the board of governors itself. Therefore, I would think that as time goes by, this board will be, I would hope—and I am sure the men who compose it would want it to be—completely representative of the community which it serves. I will see that the remarks made by the hon. members are given consideration.

Mr. MacDonald: One final word, if I might, Mr. Chairman—final as far as I am concerned—and that is that I hope the government will give serious consideration in its appointments through the Lieutenant-Governor. One of the problems—and I want to say this without necessarily specific reference to this university because it applies to all—is that there has been a tendency for the board of governors of universities to be self-perpetuating bodies and to make appointments so that it does not become more representative, it becomes even narrower in its representation in the community. Again I think this is another feature of all our universities that we have to take a look at in the future. One way to avoid that happening here is for the government to exercise its right through the appointment by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of three members of the board to make certain that the broadening takes place immediately.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Before the bill is reported I should like to say that no amendment is necessary to look after this year's graduates.

Sections 7 to 31, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 150 reported.

THE AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE OF ONTARIO ACT, 1961-1962

House in committee on Bill No. 151, An Act to amend The Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario Act, 1961-1962.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 151 reported.

THE UNIVERSITY OF GUELPH ACT, 1964

House in committee on Bill No. 152, An Act to amend The University of Guelph Act, 1964.

Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 152 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable, the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

the cost of the establishment, maintenance and conduct of a college of applied arts and technology shall be payable until March 31, 1966, out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided in Bill No. 153, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Resolution concurred in.

THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 153, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, under section 1, I would just like to raise, really for emphasis, the point of section 1 (f), about the granting of certificates and diplomas of standing following successful completion of any programme of instruction. I would hope again that universities would give consideration to the diplomas and certificates so that there will be recognition of standards by universities. This is something which has been discussed. The hon. Minister is away at the moment but from our point of view I would say that we feel it is very important that the community colleges should have the stimulus of academic training and study and I am thinking of the liberal arts particularly.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I can only say that in the government we are well aware of the apprehension that has been expressed by many people in the press publicly. We are aware of it. I think the hon. Minister, in introducing the bill and on second reading, made it very clear what his policy was and I will convey to him the comments the hon. leader of the Opposition has made this morning. I would try to allay his apprehension because I think we are at one on this. Perhaps in a year or two years from now we will examine this situation and see what happens, but I would say that we agree with the point he makes.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 153 reported.

THE CHILDREN'S INSTITUTIONS ACT, 1962-1963

House in committee on Bill No. 154, An Act to amend The Children's Institutions Act, 1962-1963.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 154 reported.

THE HOMES FOR RETARDED CHILDREN ACT, 1962-1963

House in committee on Bill No. 155, An Act to amend The Homes for Retarded Children Act, 1962-1963.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 155 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

the moneys required for the payment to counties and district welfare administration boards of subsidies for the cost of administration of welfare services under section 7 of The Department of Public Welfare

Act may, until March 31, 1966, be paid, in accordance with the regulations, out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided in Bill No. 156, An Act to amend The Department of Public Welfare Act.

Resolution concurred in.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 156, An Act to amend The Department of Public Welfare Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 156 reported.

THE PENSION BENEFITS ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 157, The Pension Benefits Act, 1965.

Sections 1 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, on section 18 I would move that subsection 4 of section 18 of Bill 157 be amended by adding thereto the following:

and any employee covered by a pension plan, or any duly authorized representative of a trade union representing employees covered by a pension plan, shall be entitled to inspect such information return, and to abstract information from it during the regular office hours of the commission.

Mr. Chairman: Moved by Mr. Renwick that subsection 4 of section 18 of Bill 157 be amended by adding thereto the following:

and any employee covered by a pension plan, or any duly authorized representative of a trade union representing employees covered by a pension plan, shall be entitled to inspect such information return, and to abstract information from it during the regular office hours of the commission.

Mr. Renwick: The purpose of moving the amendment, I think, is self-explanatory. It is that the employees, or the unions representing them, should have an opportunity to obtain information from the return which is required to be filed with the commission annually.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Speaking to the motion, I would have to oppose it. The whole purpose of the commission as it is set up is to ensure that the pension funds are dealt with properly and this, as I say, is the function of the commission itself. It is a government-appointed body that has established certain standards, and it deals with and ensures the proper investment and the proper looking after of the pension funds, and I do not think that this is necessary in any way in order to protect the interests of those who will in due course become entitled to the pensions. The question has been debated in this House before and I believe a similar amendment was offered. I am of the opinion, in the terms of this bill, this amendment is not necessary for the protection of those who will in due course be the beneficiaries of the pensions that must be filed and must comply with the regulations and standards established by the pension commission.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed to the motion, please say "nay."

I declare the motion lost.

Section 18 agreed to.

Sections 19 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on section 21, I would move:

That clause (a) of subsection 1 of section 21 of Bill No. 157, be amended by striking out the words "ten years" in the second line, and substituting the words "one year"; (b) by striking out the words "and who has attained the age of 45 years" in the fourth and fifth lines.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves:

That clause (a) subsection 1 of section 21 of Bill No. 157 be amended (a) by striking out the words "ten years" in the second line and substituting the words "one year"; (b) by striking out the words "and who has attained the age of 45 years" in the fourth and fifth lines.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is simply to provide for a vesting of the employee's interest in the pension plan at the expiration of one year of the employment, rather than at age 45 and after ten years of service.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I would have to oppose this amendment, and in so doing, I would say, as I have said before, that this legislation is new. I think perhaps over a period of time, as it develops and as the administration of this Act goes on, there may very well be amendments which will lead to, and in the direction of, the amendment offered by my hon. friend. However, at the moment, we have some form of agreement, for instance, with the other provinces.

The government of the province of Quebec has introduced a bill into their Legislature. It has not yet been processed, but since the last time I spoke on this matter in this House, the government of the province of Quebec has introduced a bill which is similar to this. We are seeking to establish uniformity across the country, and in order to achieve this uniformity, this bill provides—as does the bill in Quebec—for a national organization of pension commissions.

Such matters as are raised in my hon. friend's amendment, will be dealt with by that national body, and it would be our hope that we would then be able to achieve complete uniformity, so that when these amendments such as you suggested, are made, they will be made on a national basis.

What we are seeking at the moment, is national agreement, so that we can establish the portability we seek.

The other point I would make is that there are two aspects to this. There are both the vesting of the amount that may be contributed by the employer, there is also the question of locking in the contribution of the employee. If such an amendment were to be dealt with, I would think you would have to deal with the two aspects of it; one, the vesting in the employee of the contributions of the employer, and secondly, the locking in to the fund of the contribution of the employee.

However, at this stage of the development of the concept of this bill, I would think that this amendment would be an obstruction rather than a benefit, and, therefore, I would oppose it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, from our side, we would support this amendment, because I think one of the principal aspects of this bill is to permit mobility of labour, which the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) in his many moments of eloquence, has emphasized, and I think the hon. Prime Minister recognizes this.

I am not going back through debate, as was expressed on second reading and which we have expressed, but it seems to me that when you put on the limitation of 45 years of age that this is not really permitting mobility. I will not go on into the fact of younger people wanting to move, and so on.

The point of building up a fund? I did not catch the hon. member's point that at one year, did he say, he would rule out the—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Vesting!

Mr. Thompson:—vesting after one year. I would say what appeals to me particularly is the abolition of the age of 45, and it is on that principle—in order to encourage mobility of labour—that we endorse the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion, please say "aye."

All those opposed to the motion, please say "nay."

I declare the motion lost.

Section 21 agreed to.

On section 22:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr Chairman, I have an amendment to subsection 3 of section 22:

That subsection 3 of section 22 be amended by striking out the word "benefits" in the third line and substituting, therefor, "benefit credits," and by inserting after "in respect of" in the third line, the words "remuneration and."

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the section will then read:

No amendment of a pension plan, consequent upon the coming into force of the Canada Pension Plan, shall adversely affect the pension benefit credit of any member in respect of remuneration and service or membership in the plan prior to the first day of January 1966.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to clarify how this subsection will apply in the case of final earnings pension plans, and also it makes this bill conform with the bill presently before the Legislature of the province of Quebec in our endeavour to create at least portability between these two provinces at the present time.

Section 22, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 23 to 29, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 157 reported.

UNIVERSITE D'OTTAWA

House in committee on Bill No. 158, An Act respecting Université d'Ottawa.

Sections 1 to 35, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. Prime Minister a question on this. It is more for information. I am rather curious about the procedure here—four members of the board being appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor, and in this particular instance they have been named. Is this at the request of the university that they seek the Lieutenant-Governor's appointment of four; is the appointment made on the university's recommendation and, if so, from whom, or does the decision rest with the Lieutenant-Governor in Council?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Chairman, it all depends upon the circumstances. In the previous bill we discussed dealing with the Lakehead University there is a provision for naming three but they are not named. This was done in consultation with the various groups that this bill pulls together, so to speak, and forms into the university.

As you can well understand, this bill is the result of many years of negotiation and naturally it was handled with some delicacy. The people named here were named because they were the people whom the parties concerned wanted to hold these posts and to serve on the board of governors.

In the case of the Lakehead University, of course, that is an entirely different situation and the same circumstances did not obtain, therefore we were able to proceed and we will name those three men in due course. Once again it will be done by consultation with the local people. But in this case all these loose ends were tied up before the bill was introduced.

Bill No. 158 reported.

CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND

House in committee on Bill No. 160, An Act to authorize the raising of money on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 160 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

the real and personal property, business and income of the Clarke institute of psychiatry are not subject to taxation for municipal or provincial purposes, as provided in Bill No. 161, An Act to amend The Ontario Mental Health Foundation Act, 1960-1961.

Resolution concurred in.

THE ONTARIO MENTAL HEALTH FOUNDATION ACT, 1960-1961

House in committee on Bill No. 161, An Act to amend The Ontario Mental Health Foundation Act, 1960-1961.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 161 reported.

THE LIQUOR CONTROL ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 162, An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask clarification from the hon. Provincial Secretary? I notice on section 1 (3) (i) he refers to wines from grapes, cherries, apples or other fruits grown in Ontario, the concentrated juice thereof, and to which are added herbs, water, honey sugar or distillate of Ontario wine. Has he covered dandelion wine, which is quite a popular drink?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Actually, these only cover the commercial varieties of wine, and that would be wine produced in the home. It does not come within the term of the wine produced commercially. I know of no commercial producer of dandelion wine, although I understand from those who enjoy it that it has a great medicinal value.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the explanatory note says this amendment will allow Ontario wine to be made from apples or other fruits as well. Why should you not allow it to be made, and then if they want to sell it commercially that could be dealt with? Personally, as I understand the meaning of the explanatory note, it is not allowed to be made for commercial sale.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: These are the wines that come within the definition of The Food and Drug Act.

Mr. Singer: That is no answer.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): It is not intoxicating.

Section 1 agreed to.

Sections 2 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, there is one section here, I have looked through this bill and I cannot find where I should bring it up. I am concerned with the municipality I come from. Last February they had a vote regarding the bringing in of lounge licences, and as of January 1, 1966, they are annexing another two townships. What our local council is concerned with is whether the liquor licence board has done anything about bringing the municipalities that are annexed in under the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is under The Liquor Licence Act.

Mr. Worton: Is there no way that this can be—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The next bill.

Sections 21 to 80, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 162 reported.

THE LIQUOR LICENCE ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 163, An Act to amend The Liquor Licence Act.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I have section 8 or 21.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I will make mention of it when we come to it.

Mr. Worton: All right!

Sections 8 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 21:

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, if there had been any amendment to take care of the matter which the hon. member referred to, it would have required the repeal of section 84 of the Act itself. Just for the information of the hon. members of the House I would read the section as it now stands:

No amalgamation of a municipality with another municipality and no annexation of the whole or a part of a municipality to another municipality, affects the operation of this Act at the time of the amalgamation or annexation, in the municipality amalgamated or municipality or part annexed or elsewhere, until such operation is affected pursuant to a vote under this Act in the municipality amalgamated or municipality or part annexed, as the case may be.

Now if Guelph, having voted to permit sales in dining lounges and lounges, were to annex any portion of the surrounding territory—for example, Puslinch, which I think is now a dry township—there will subsequently have to be a vote of those people in the annexed area to determine what they want by way of the law in their respect. I gave a full explanation of this at the time of second reading.

Very often people think in terms of a wet annexing a dry area, but there are municipalities where the annexing municipality is dry and the annexed is a wet municipality and such a principle would really cause a disturbance. There is a procedure by which this can be worked out.

Mr. Worton: The thing I am raising, Mr. Chairman, is in connection with the University of Guelph. In acquiring the township of Puslinch in this new annexation, Guelph has acquired one or two large motels with dining facilities. The city went to the expense of some $10,000, and I might say that the association which put on the drive for becoming wet spent another $12,000, in fact you would have thought the city was going out of business with the advertising that they did in order to make it wet. It seems to me foolish, when an area such as this is annexed into the city with the facilities there, that they have to go through another vote within a year.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 22, it is really a minor amendment—

Section 21 agreed to.

On section 22:

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I move that section 22 be amended by adding the following subsections:

(2) Clause (k) of the said section 85 is amended by striking out “banquet entertainment” in the first and second lines and inserting in lieu thereof “special occasion” so that the clause shall read as follows:

(k) governing the issuance and cancellation of special occasion or military mess permits and prescribing the fees payable in respect of the issue of such permit.

Subsection 3: Clause (r) of the said section 85 is repealed.

That clause, Mr. Chairman, refers to prescribing the official seal of the board, and so on.

Section 22, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 23 and 24 agreed to.
 Bill No. 163 reported.

REGIONAL DETENTION CENTRES

House in committee on Bill No. 142, An Act to provide for the establishment of regional detention centres.

Sections 1 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.
 Bill No. 142 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,
 the moneys required for the purposes of The Milk Act, 1965, shall, until March 31, 1966, be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided by Bill No. 135, The Milk Act, 1965.

Resolution concurred in.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

House in committee on Bill No. 135, The Milk Act, 1965.

Sections 1 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I move that the following be inserted as paragraph 64:

Designating milk as grade A milk, industrial milk or reconstituted milk, and that the present paragraph 64 be re-numbered as paragraph 65.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?
 Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the section as amended stand as part of the bill?

Section 18 agreed to.

On section 19:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here. I move:

That section 19 of the bill be amended by deleting subsection 4 and substituting the following therefor:

And notwithstanding the provisions of this or any other Act, no council or municipality shall by bylaw require that food milk products sold in the municipality be produced or processed in the municipality or in any other designated area.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?
 Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the section as amended carry?

Section 19 agreed to.

Sections 20 to 26, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 27:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 27. I move:

That section 27 of the bill be amended by inserting after the word "force" where it occurs the second time in the seventh line, the words "insofar as they are not inconsistent with this Act."

This is another technical amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?
 Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 27, as amended, stand as part of the bill?

Section 27 agreed to.

On section 28:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here, too. I move:

That sections 28, 29 and 30 of the bill be renumbered as sections 29, 30 and 31, respectively, and that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following section:

Moneys. 28. The moneys required for the purposes of this Act shall, until March 31, 1966, be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund and thereafter shall be paid out of moneys appropriated therefor by the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the new section 28 stand as part of the bill?

Section 28 agreed to.

Sections 29 to 31, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a question which I hope is not going to be out of order or too complicated in the absence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart). There is one aspect of the existing structure of the milk industry that is now going to be rather fundamentally altered which, as I understand it, is likely to disappear. I am curious to know why the government is apparently deliberately seeking to do this. I am referring to the milk co-ordinating board. This Act envisages the cheese marketing board and the cream marketing board continuing as separate entities. The other two—fluid and concentrated milk—will gradually come together, so it would seem to me that there is still a function for a co-ordinating body. It has been my impression that in recent years this body has played a very useful role in bringing the various wings of the industry together.

In addition, I am told that the board has moved into other areas, such as the provision of group insurance for producers and presumably in all of the various sections of the industry. My question is, why is the Act in its reorganization of the milk industry apparently going to jettison completely the milk co-ordinating board, which I believe I am correct in stating had some legislative status in the previous Act?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I must admit that I am in no position to answer the hon. member's question and I would suggest that we leave the reporting of this bill until the hon. Minister of Agriculture is in the House. We will be in committee of the whole again and before we move that the bill be reported I think it would be preferable to wait for the hon. Minister to answer the question.

Mr. Chairman: Bill No. 135 will be held.

THE MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 137, An Act to amend The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, I move: that section 9 be amended by adding thereto the following item:

5. $50,000 to the Sisters of St. Joseph's toward the cost for operating the Providence Villa home for the aged.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I might say that this has been requested by Metropolitan Toronto. It is a grant formerly made by the city of Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 9, as amended, carry?

Section 9 agreed to.

Sections 10 and 11 agreed to.

Bill No. 137 reported.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions, and certain bills without amendment and certain bills with amendments and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain resolutions, certain bills without amendment and certain bills with amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if you would recognize 12.30, this afternoon we will proceed with the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

It being 12.30 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario

Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 17, 1965

Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 17, 1965

Estimates, Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Cecile	4319
On notice of motion No. 14, Mr. Worton, Mr. W. B. Lewis, Mr. Bryden, Mr. Eagleson	4349
Motion to adjourn debate, Mr. Eagleson, agreed to	4357
Recess, 6 o'clock	4357

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: We are pleased to welcome as guests to the Legislature this afternoon, in the west gallery, students from Colborne Street senior public school, and in the east gallery, Holy Rosary separate school, Milton.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I would ask your indulgence and the indulgence of the hon. members of this House to make note of a very happy occasion.

Today marks the completion of 25 years in the public service of the province of Ontario by Miss Connie Potten.

In a week or so, she will also have completed some seven years as secretary to Mr. Speaker. In the years past, she has not only been the right hand of Mr. Speaker, but she has been the guiding light of many of the hon. members of this House. I know that we all wish her well as she begins another 25 years of service to the people of the province of Ontario.

Clerk of the House: The 56th order. House in committee of supply. Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, we are entering another fiscal year in which welfare expenditures will reach a new high. The estimates of The Department of Public Welfare, which we have before us today, call for a disbursement of $105,552,000. We can add to that, nearly $33 million in refunds from the federal government. Thus, the total amount to be expended through my department is $138,393,000. This is $23,448,358 more than we spent in the fiscal year just ending—approximately a 20 per cent increase in total. We are all aware of the trend in which government accepts public responsibility for an ever wider scope of difficulties encountered by the citizens of Ontario, and is expected to provide the social services to resolve them.

The number of individuals and families in financial need fluctuates, of course, according to the economic health of the country. In the last 12 months, the economy of Ontario has operated in high gear, with employment at the highest level in the nation and, I might add, in Ontario's history. The job situation is better than last year and much improved over several years ago. In March, the peak month of unemployment, 3.1 per cent of the labour force in the province was out of work, as compared with 4.2 per cent in March of 1964.

These more prosperous conditions are reflected in our welfare programmes. This is particularly true of emergency and short-term relief. The general welfare assistance programme has declined in caseloads and costs over the last year, and over the past few years. But some time ago, relief ceased to be the one major factor in public welfare. The long-term allowances programmes are now established as one of the characteristic features of our services.

If we compare one month with another, it is apparent how a decrease in unemployment, and so a decrease in general welfare assistance, is partly offset by increases in the long-term allowances. In March, 1965, there were 8,500 fewer persons on general welfare assistance than in March, 1964. The relief load had been reduced by that number. But in the meantime, 6,800 persons had been added to the regular long-term allowance programmes. Other causes are operating, besides employment, to add weight to the public welfare budget. The continuing growth of the population of Ontario accounts for a great deal; so also does the rise in living costs and standards of living. But one reason immediately apparent to us is that each year, public welfare accepts new responsibilities while, at the same time, elaborating, extending and refining the programmes which we have.

Evidence of this growth, of this taking on of wider obligations, is the fact that I can think of at least ten new allowance programmes that have been inaugurated since 1952. This is welfare in the form of direct continuing payments to families and individuals.

There has been an even greater development in supportive service programmes. I am referring to provisions in legislation for some specific type of service or facility available to a family or individual, other than a cash allowance. Homemakers and nurses services, rehabilitation and homes for the aged are examples. I am sure we could name another ten of these supportive service programmes also introduced or radically expanded in the last decade.

The recent past, in our welfare services is a story of progress, and I am confident the future will see a similar advance. Events and plans broached in 1964, in the area of social security, will have a broad bearing in forthcoming provincial legislation. The introduction of the Canada pension plan is certain to have a notable influence on public welfare. Eventually it should reduce the number of cases solely dependent upon welfare allowances, and its benefits will be enjoyed by a much broader section of the population. But there will inevitably be a need to supplement with welfare payments, the income of many persons who qualify for a basic pension under the social security plan as it now stands.

The federal government also proposes to introduce a Canada Assistance Act. This would have more direct and immediate significance for my department. When the Ottawa proposals are translated into legislation, their effect on provincial welfare will be widespread and fundamental. It will mean a redesign and transformation of welfare services in Ontario.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that during the last session of this Legislature, I said that I would be meeting the federal authorities and other provincial Ministers at a conference on shared-cost programmes last spring. At that preliminary meeting, Ontario made a number of firm proposals in regard to federal-provincial relations in welfare. A further conference was held on April 8 and 9 of this year. I was pleased indeed to learn that the Ottawa government had adopted the main principles we had put forward. I am glad to say, too, that they were generous enough to give credit for the suggestions on which the new policy is to be based.

I shall take the liberty, Mr. Chairman, of quoting the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the hon. Judy LaMarsh. These were her opening remarks at the conference held last month:

I think I am right in saying that during the talks last May a clear consensus emerged in the area. Broad objectives in terms of the form of a new public assistance programme were stated by several provincial representatives. Mr. Cecile of Ontario, for example, expressed the view that: "It is timely for the federal and provincial governments to proceed with all-inclusive legislation which will bring into reality a proper basis for the cost-sharing arrangements in relation to the various welfare programmes that are essential to Canadians as a whole."

He went on to suggest that "a new approach must be taken in serving those persons who have eligibility for public aid on a continuing basis," indicating the desire of his province to "be in a position to develop a budgetary approach" to public assistance which would promote "suitable standards of assistance, as well as improved administrative practices toward meeting individual case requirements."

In requesting that the federal government introduce legislation without delay which would "form the basis for the redesign of provincial welfare programmes," he expressed the view that this would "serve to supplement and augment the national social security maintenance scheme which is now in the offing."

That is Miss LaMarsh's recognition that the proposals of the federal government follow closely the revisions long advocated by Ontario. We have, on many occasions, expressed some dissatisfaction with the restrictive features of the federal-provincial agreement under which we must administer the categorical programmes, old age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances. We have said that a bold step must be taken by the federal government to permit provinces to operate their shared welfare programmes under conditions peculiar to the province, and according to the character of the population. It is understood that standards must be maintained at an acceptable level, yet there should be room to move beyond this level, and to vary the service to obtain the greatest value and benefit to the recipients.

We have, for a long time, advocated the budgetary needs basis for maintenance allowances instead of a flat rate. In our own provincial programmes, such as mothers' allowances, or in general welfare assistance, where federal regulations permit, a budget calculated on the basis of individual need determines the amount of grant. We shall be happy to extend this method to the other services.

You will be aware that The Canada Assistance Act plan has not yet been written into law. Discussions are continuing between provincial and federal authorities during the development of this legislation. We expect that the proposed Canada Assistance Act might be in operation as of April 1, 1966.

In view of this enlightened development, we intend to design a comprehensive Act that will collect all the maintenance assistance into one piece of legislation. Perhaps a distinction will have to be made between the programmes administered by the provincial Department of Public Welfare, and those in which municipalities take part. It may be that some of the supportive service programmes, through private organizations, will remain separate legislation.

But I assure you that a new design will emerge after the federal government passes The Canada Assistance Act and concludes an agreement with this province. That design will aim at maximum flexibility to cover all needful situations.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the federal government and the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare, in proposing this new assistance plan, and to say that Ontario will take full advantage of all the features that it offers.

With all these prospects in the future, we have, nevertheless, not forgotten the current requirements of our recipients. You will have noticed within the past month or so, important revisions in the regulations to both The Mothers' Allowances Act and The General Welfare Assistance Act. By far the greater number of persons on welfare depend upon these two as beneficiaries. The nearly identical dependent fathers' allowances cover more than 15,000 persons, while general welfare assistance in March of this year, had about 100,000 on the rolls. In all, 135,000 persons are benefited by the amendments to the regulations.

For these people, we have raised the amounts allowed. This adds up to a considerable increase in the average monthly grant which will, in most cases, be about 15 per cent higher than before. We are anxious that the gain should be a real one in terms of dollars and cents, in the hands of the recipient. So we have removed the ceilings which, up to now, prevented the total grant from rising beyond a certain maximum, according to family size. We have set one maximum for all cases, on general welfare assistance and mothers' allowances; namely, $300 a month. Under the prior rates, it had been possible for the larger family to receive a grant in the neighbourhood of $255 monthly. Now they may get up to $300 per month. This indeed permits up to $3,600 yearly, if the family continues to require aid. But, more than that, they also receive medical assistance, hospital insurance and some dental benefits.

Family allowances are, of course, received by these families, and a portion of any other income they may earn is exempted from deduction.

The recent amendments include a number of other acceptable improvements. But I need not stop to review them, as the regulations are, or will be, readily available to you. I should say that the advance in the maintenance allowances has been matched by some progressive steps in the supportive service programmes also.

These supporting programmes are various and different, but they all have a similar pattern in relation to my department. In this dimension of welfare, the province provides advice, supervision and a substantial percentage of funds to municipalities and to private organizations who have the administrative structure, the staff and the facilities to offer a certain specialized service.

Under the heading of supportive service programmes, there is institutional care of several kinds. You will recall The Children's Institutions Act of 1963, which placed these group homes for children under separate legislation. After two years experience, we consider it advisable to increase our financial participation.

Accordingly, the Act has been amended in several respects most favourable to the private organizations who operate these centres of group care. The provincial subsidy for construction of buildings and additions was 50 per cent of the cost, with a maximum of $2,500 per bed. The grant will now be up to $5,000 for each bed established. If the organization purchases an existing building, the grant may be up to a maximum of $1,200 a bed.

Our financial support for the day-to-day maintenance and treatment of children has also been greatly extended. In the beginning, we tentatively introduced certain maximums. After further examination of the programmes, we removed the maximums and offered to share 50 per cent of the actual net expenditures. We will now raise this to 75 per cent of the gross cost of maintaining a child who needs this type of special attention.

We have taken similar action in regard to group care for the retarded children. The Homes for Retarded Children Act, two years ago introduced an entirely new programme into the circle of public welfare services. This year, the provincial grant for the capital cost for new buildings is up to $5,000 a bed and $1,200 for acquired buildings. We are also raising the maintenance grant to 75 per cent of the gross cost. I am confident that this will encourage new construction, and a general expansion of service to the disturbed and the retarded child.

These are comparatively small groups among a total of more than two million children in Ontario. Yet, their needs are urgent, and they present a real challenge in methods of therapy and training. Ample public funds are now placed at the disposal of the people devoted to this work. The two Acts, with successive amendments, are surely examples of rapid forward strides in a supporting service programme.

All in all, I think you will agree that this has been a significant year for child welfare services. The new Child Welfare Act is one of the most important pieces of legislation we have ever drafted. Since it has already been introduced and discussed in this House, you will be familiar with its terms.

I can add a pleasant footnote on the results of our on-going adoption campaign. My department, so far as I am aware, was the first to use the novel method of advertising on behalf of children, in newspapers and on radio and television. We began to seek permanent homes in this way, in 1959. In the five years prior to that date, the number of adoptions through children's aid societies was at a stable rate of about 2,500 boys and girls placed annually. From 1959 on, there has been a consistently higher figure of 3,500—that is 1,000 more adoptions a year. In more precise terms, we have reason to assume that 4,246 children have found permanent homes due to the stimulus of the adoption advertising.

Here, I want to pay a well earned tribute to the Toronto Telegram and to Miss Helen Allen of their staff. During the past year, this newspaper has run a regular feature called "Today's Child." Each day, Miss Allen has presented a photograph and a description of a child available for adoption. This has been done with the best intentions and good taste. The response has been excellent. An average of 20 letters daily come in from prospective parents, and more than half the children advertised have now found permanent homes. These children were boys and girls hard to place for some reason or other, but 133 have been adopted in this way.

This advertising has been at the full expense of the newspaper. There is no cost to the public, except in the help we give in getting information and in co-operation with the children's aid societies who have the children in care.

I am pleased, Mr. Chairman, to say that an official reception was held for Miss Allen and the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) presented a scroll as a token of gratitude for her services.

Child welfare, like every other phase of welfare, has many aspects. We are dealing with human personality in all its complexity, and must consider a variety of approaches. With The Children's Institutions Act and the new Child Welfare Act coming into operation, it is timely to explore new methods of treating the problems of emotionally disturbed children.

For this reason, my department has agreed to the broad terms of a plan put forward by the children's centre known as Boys' Village, which is located on Sheppard Avenue in Downsview. Boys' Village will undertake—over the next five years—a series of programmes which collectively might be called the child services project.

The general purpose is to test and demonstrate methods of helping boys and girls whose social and emotional problems are of the kind that are commonly looked upon as matters of public concern. This is to be a practical undertaking, working directly with the children, a course of treatment as well as an experiment. These children may be living with their parents, or they could be residents of an institution or in the care of a children's aid society.

The range of activities planned is quite extensive. Besides direct services to children and families, there is included, training of staff, research as to the special needs of children, consultation with such advisory bodies as the child welfare league of America, and a demonstration to all children's organizations of the methods and results of the total project.

Under the general heading "direct services to children and families" there is a list of six different programmes. One of these offers case-work counselling to families and special classes, if the child is unable to adjust to the regular school programme. Another involves the placement of children in foster homes after special training for the foster parents. There is also to be group home care for children who cannot live in a family setting, and for more severe cases of disturbance, intensive residential treatment. Experienced child case workers will visit homes to assist directly in child management, and groups of parents and children would voluntarily attend counselling courses and receive psychiatric consultation.

You will note that all this is an effort to discover the ways and means that are most beneficial for the child, whether in a family home, foster home, group home or in an institution or school. The board of directors of Boys' Village will administer and operate the child treatment project, in co-ordination with my department, and in consultation with other organizations.

This project will get underway during the summer, and we expect it to be a valuable experience in the continuing improvement of child welfare services.

The day nurseries programme is also developing well. Ten new nurseries have been added to last year's total of 348, so that 358 are now licensed and in operation. The day nurseries legislation was extended a year ago by an amendment, and the advantages are readily apparent. Formerly, the nurseries had mainly received children of less than seven years of age, not attending school. Now the aim is to help the working mother with child-minding difficulties. The age limit has been raised to nine years, regardless of the school attendance of the child, if the mother is employed.

This has proved to be of immediate benefit, and in the past year several hundred more children have registered in day nurseries and nursery schools. One instance is outstanding. You will recall that Riverdale hospital in Toronto, some time ago was seeking nurses to increase their staff. They established a day care centre for children, on the hospital grounds, and in this way, I am advised, gained 40 qualified nurses—mothers who could leave their children at the centre, took advantage of the opportunity. This plan of nurseries near the job is becoming more of a necessity as more mothers follow the trend and go out to work.

In many cases, the mother is the sole support of her children, and certainly deserves social aid whether she chooses to earn a living or requires welfare assistance. There are a great variety of reasons why women find themselves alone with a family to support. One reason is the desertion of the husband. This abandonment of wives and children is a continuing social problem. It is a question of great magnitude. Although I cannot vouch for the figure, I have seen an estimate that there are 20,000 deserted wives in Ontario. We do know that there are over 3,000 families on the mothers' allowances and general welfare assistance rolls, due to the desertion and non-support of the father. The annual cost to the public for these cases is over $4 million.

We are naturally concerned in this matter, both from the point of view of the well-being of the family and the cost to the public. In 1961, we established a special investigation unit, which deals with about 2,500 cases annually. Although North America is a large area and the population is mobile, our unit does locate 40 per cent of the deserting husbands. We attempt to effect reconciliations where possible, but at least we ensure that a legal arrangement is made, whereby the man accepts some part of his financial responsibility.

The family courts set a fixed sum, and the usual method is to have the man pay the money into the court to pass it on to the wife. But, unfortunately, these court orders are not always obeyed. There is a considerable amount of delay and default in payments. The amount the husband is supposed to be contributing is deducted each month from the welfare allowance. If the contribution fails to appear there often has to be an emergency adjustment in the welfare cheque, with a certain degree of difficulty and extra effort on the part of both the wife and the welfare officials.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I was impressed by the suggestion made on an earlier occasion by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden). He proposed that, if a deserted family is receiving welfare, the welfare authorities should collect the husband's payments from the family court. In this way, the monthly income of the family would remain at a steady level, and the authorities would be immediately aware of any default in payment and take steps to rectify the matter. Towards that end, we have and we are still consulting with the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) to explore the legal aspects and see how a system as such might be established in Ontario.

Turning from the well-being of the family and the young to that of the elderly, I want to point out that the homes for the aged continue to develop at an unprecedented rate. Although no striking changes have been made in the legislation recently, homes for the aged is one of the most prominent and successful of the services operated by close co-operation between my department and the municipalities. We have contributed over $30 million in capital grants, yet last year the volume of building was greater than ever before.

Prior to 1950, municipal homes sheltered the indigent and the name "Houses of Refuge" described their limited and outmoded function. In 14 years, The Homes for the Aged Act has transformed an almost dormant system of 35 municipal establishments into an array of 60 homes, most of them among the finest and best to be found anywhere. This advance began when the province offered to match the municipalities dollar for dollar in the construction and remodelling of their buildings. The excellent response of municipal authorities, and the promotion and guidance of my homes for the aged branch did the rest. The new model home has proved to be highly acceptable to people who need that type of care, and there is a steadily rising demand for more of this accommodation.

While I am on this topic of care for elderly persons, I want to commend the establishment of the select committee on aging. I am in accord with the thorough and perceptive way the members of the committee have gone about their work since last spring. The social conditions of the elderly is right now a subject of widespread interest. We welcome the committee's inquiry into the facilities and services that now exist, and we look forward to their report.

Let me now ask you to turn your attention to the problems of adults who are handicapped in some way, but are prospects for rehabilitation. Rehabilitation in some form or another—whether as restoration to health or to activity or to economic independence—that is the constant ideal of welfare administration.

Rehabilitation presents itself to us in two contexts. In a broad sense, it is a method of handling chronically dependent cases to restore them to self-support and independence. In a more distinctive context, it is the treatment, training and placement of the physically handicapped.

When persons are granted one of the long-term allowances, it is evident that there are some sound objective reasons why they will require maintenance into the foreseeable future. On the other hand, general welfare assistance or relief, is essentially short-term aid. Yet we find a fairly small percentage who continue on relief rolls for many months, sometimes for years. These are people with what we might call social disabilities. We have felt that, given special help and attention, they are prospects for rehabilitation.

Towards this end, we have undertaken exploratory projects in order to find and demonstrate the effective methods of re-establishing such persons. Three years ago, in co-operation with the city of Toronto, we set up an assessment and rehabilitation unit for men over 50 years of age, who were continuing on relief. Each month, from 60 to 100 men are medically examined, vocationally assessed and, if possible, placed in employment. The unit has consistently been able to find jobs for more than half of these older men who had so much difficulty on their own.

In addition, we have carried out demonstration projects with long-term assistance families. These have been well publicized; reports have been issued on the first project completed in Toronto in 1963, and a second in Hamilton, finishing in May of 1964. In the past few months, members of the department have been assigned to work on similar projects in other cities. The results have been encouraging and enlightening to the municipalities, and we hope to extend the methods even farther.

In the second context of rehabilitation, our rehabilitation services branch is the organization which has the function of helping persons who are severely handicapped through illness, accident and congenital defects. The branch aims to establish or restore the working capacity of the individual, and it has a comprehensive range of services, including medical, social and vocational assessment, counselling and guidance, vocational training and employment placement.

This service, which began in 1957 with a trickle of 400 handicapped persons, has broadened into a flow of approximately 2,500 presently receiving services. Thousands of persons today enjoy the fullness of life only because of what vocational rehabilitation has done for them.

This is a programme that shows a profit not only in terms of human happiness, but also as an economic gain. It costs on the average $900 to train a person, yet the contribution they make through future employment far surpasses this expense. We find that for each dollar expended in training, the rehabilitated individual earns $2.75 in the first year—that is not for the year, but as he goes along.

I am convinced that rehabilitation is one of Ontario's most potent weapons in the unending battle of many fine people to achieve a personal victory over their handicaps. To this end, I am happy to announce that our estimates provide for an increase of over 50 per cent in staff to carry out this programme during the coming year.

In order to ensure that we obtain as many rehabilitation counsellors as possible, we are taking full advantage of the federal-provincial agreement for the training of such staff. Unlike other professionals, as in medicine, law or teaching, rehabilitation officers cannot be found on the open labour market. There is no academy or graduate school for them; they must be specially trained. In co-operation with the University of Toronto school of social work, we have developed a special training course, whereby a steady flow of professional rehabilitation counsellors will become available to serve Ontario's handicapped.

Continuing this review of recent progress in supportive service programmes, I should like to make several clarifying remarks on the subject of nursing homes.

As you know, since 1958, the province, in agreement with the federal government, subsidizes municipalities for expenditures on behalf of certain residents in private commercial nursing homes. There are regulations under The General Welfare Assistance Act to govern this procedure and to assure acceptable standards in those nursing homes that are used.

As of January 1, 1965, an entirely new set of regulations went into effect. You have had the opportunity to study these regulations and will note that they accomplish three main purposes. First, the amount of subsidy is raised substantially. Formerly the maximum shareable payment to the municipality for one month of nursing home care was $100. Now, the maximum is $175—that is a 75 per cent increase. Second: experience has shown that there are two distinct levels of care, according to the residents' needs and the qualifications of the staff in attendance. We have thus recognized a differential between "sheltered care" and "nursing care."

These titles are descriptive, for there is a contrast between the resident who requires little more than a home with a measure of personal assistance in daily routines under the general supervision of a registered nurse, and the other person who needs not only this, but also the close individual attention of a registered nurse exercising the skills of her profession. The difference in degree of care obviously means a difference in cost. For this reason, we have set the subsidizable amount for sheltered care at $148 a month, and for nursing care at $175 monthly. This we believe adequately covers current rates.

The third major effect of the new regulations is to maintain high standards of care for the health, safety and well-being of the residents and the efficiency of the nursing home.

Another programme, which also has this triangle-shaped relationship between the province, the municipalities and private organizations, is homemakers and nurses services. This, too, was introduced only a few years ago, and we are one of the few jurisdictions in North America who support such services with public funds.

That support has been strengthened through new regulations, effective from April 1. In regard to homemakers, the shareable cost has been raised from $8 to $12 a day. This means that a municipality can pay $12 to provide a household with a homemaker on a daily basis and recover 50 per cent of the expenditure from the province. The increase was the result of our review of actual costs which indicated that homemaker organizations are now usually charging from $10 to $12 for a day's service.

In regard to nursing services, the provincial contribution of 50 per cent of cost has also been favourably adjusted. As you know, organizations such as the Victorian Order of Nurses and the Red Cross, visit the homes of convalescent and elderly people, in fact, anyone who needs this type of occasional nursing attendance. The organizations have agreements to charge a fee for each call, where the municipality has accepted financial responsibility for a person unable to afford the service. The shareable fee had been $2.50 a visit; we have increased it to $4.50. In fact, none of the nursing organizations as yet find it necessary to charge that much, so that the new maximum rate is well ahead of actual cost.

Here I might take a moment to point out a difference in principle, between a supporting service programme, such as homemakers and nurses services, and older conceptions of public welfare. Welfare has traditionally been for the indigent, at least for cases where no member of the family could earn an adequate livelihood. These were not cases of low income, but of practically no income, and welfare was granted to persons who would otherwise go short of such basic items as food, clothing and shelter.

Now, the manner in which our legislation is written for supportive service programmes does permit subsidies in cases of low income, even where the family head is fully employed. In these programmes, we have left our regulations as flexible as possible, based on the reasonable question: "If the resources of the family or individual are compared with their needs, can they afford this extra service?" If they cannot, we are ready to assist. But we have entered this very indeterminate area with discretion. In homemakers and nurses services, as in similar programmes, we have thought it best to leave the answer to the judgment of municipal authorities who are on the spot, who know local conditions at first hand and can judge each case on its merits.

Mr. Chairman, I have outlined the recent improvements in both the maintenance programmes and the supporting service programmes. These, of course, are reflected in the increased expenditure of the estimates before us now. Before closing these remarks, I wish to refer to several special areas of current interest.

I would like to mention a project which, though small, is significant for the future, in consolidating the variety of health and welfare services of local areas. We suggested to the social planning council of the city of Hamilton, that they join us in establishing an information and referral office in a representative Ontario community. The town of Burlington was the location chosen. We have consulted the town and the adjacent municipalities, and I understand that they will co-operate in support of this venture.

The purpose is to set up a central office, acting as a clearing house for the individual queries and cases that arise in welfare matters. Most communities have a number of different organizations providing service. There are the welfare administrations of three levels of government, as well as various private agencies. A central office should prove useful in answering preliminary inquiries and in directing people to the right places to receive the help they need. It should be a co-ordinating factor among the social services of an area, leading to a higher degree of understanding and efficiency.

The Burlington all-purpose welfare centre will be a pilot project. A staff of social workers and a research worker is to be engaged and operations to begin shortly. We look forward to great value being obtained this way, with a view to extending the development to other communities.

The major purpose, of course, in this development is to assess and determine the benefits that can be gained in local communities in answering the inquiries and treating the problems of any person who is in need of advice and assistance. The representatives of my department will collaborate fully with the information and referral centre.

In the matter of securing staff for future developments, we have made available opportunities and funds to enable personnel to obtain education and training.

This past year, we have had 38 people on bursaries and leave of absence with pay at the schools of social work. In the coming year, there will likely be 50 or more. These persons are committed to work in public welfare services in addition to other professional graduates we are recruiting.

Last September, we noted with satisfaction, the opening of a new course for welfare workers. I refer to the welfare services course at the Ryerson polytechnical institute in Toronto. I might say that my advisory council on public welfare training originated the idea of a two-year vocational course, and with The Department of Education and the Ryerson institute, have seen it off to an auspicious start. Seventeen of the 24 students enrolled are receiving bursaries through my department. Added to those at the schools of social work, this makes 55 persons we are supporting through their period of long-term education. There are also staff members on other short-term courses, as well as a programme of in-service training. In these various ways, we are securing a high proportion of persons well prepared to carry out the functions of the department.

At the same time, I must pay tribute to the dedication, hard work and competence of my staff throughout the department. I know they would compare favourably with any group in public or private welfare services. Through experience and through formal training, they are well qualified for the work they do. The staff has increased by nearly 100 per cent as our programmes have grown through the last ten years. There are now about 630 persons employed, more than half of these are, as one would expect, in clerical and stenographic work. Out of that 300, 80 persons hold university degrees; most at the post-graduate professional level.

It should be remembered, however, that public welfare services on this continent were built from the ground up, mostly by the common sense and hard work of non-professional people. Many of those persons are still around, contributing greatly from a wealth of experience and self-acquired knowledge.

Yet, it is true that one out of every four of the administrative and field staff has a university education relative to their duties. This is a comparatively good ratio, and in a year or two at the present rate of intake, it will be one in three.

The staff of the department works efficiently and in excellent harmony. One evidence for this is that the turnover of staff is only 12 per cent annually. This is exactly on the average for the total civil service, but quite low for a welfare organization. I have heard of some agencies where 40 per cent or even 50 per cent of the staff leave within the year.

I should add that the child welfare branch of the department has now a larger number of professional social workers than at any previous time. I am convinced we have here, a group of senior people who are a credit to a fine profession.

I believe that the employees of the department generally fulfil their heavy duties in a most obliging way. One proof of their capabilities is the manner in which thousands of cases are treated through the year with skill and kindness, and without disturbance or complaint. It is apparent that we can meet this multitude of requests for aid, or in some way satisfy the applicant, that he has received fair and sympathetic consideration. This is due as much to the courtesy and diligence of the staff as to the comprehensive nature of the services.

Should there be exceptions or any special case of need, we welcome the requests of any citizen of the province. We have every reason to appreciate the understanding and assistance of the hon. members of the House in maintaining the services of the department.

Mr. Chairman, I would add this note, that I am very pleased to announce to the hon. members of this House that my Deputy Minister who, as you know, has been very sick for the past few days, is now on the way to full recovery, and I thought the hon. members would like to hear that.

Mr. Chairman, I have also here a statement, if you will allow me later on when we come to that particular phase of the estimates, on Indians, and I would like to release it and bring it back when that part of the estimates comes along.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Before starting my remarks, I was a little hurt when the hon. Minister did not send me a copy of his remarks. I did not want to go upstairs and steal one of his copies, but to show him that I do not hold it against him I am going to send him a copy of my remarks beforehand.

Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this year's estimates for The Department of Public Welfare, I would like to take as my theme the concept of action. It is becoming ever more apparent that we in the Opposition must keep emphasizing action and planning, since The Department of Public Welfare seems to have so much trouble realizing what these concepts imply. We hope, sir, that by continual repetition of what is wrong with welfare in Ontario, and of what should be done for the people of our province who need welfare, we will eventually force some action out of this department.

I will give you an example of the kind of thing I am talking about. For many years the Liberal Party has been urging the adoption of a new comprehensive Child Welfare Act. The hon. Minister finally appointed a committee to study the question of child welfare in May, 1961, and this committee issued their report in May, 1964, three years later. They made a thorough and complete study of the problems of child welfare of Ontario and I would like to read to you from their report. In their comments on page 45 the commissioners write:

The findings and recommendations of the Minister's committee on child care and adoption services reporting in 1953 are still valid, and many of the principal recommendations are repeated in the present report.

Thus, 12 years after the hon. Minister appoints a committee to report to him he appoints another committee which makes substantially the same recommendation. This, Mr. Chairman, is real progress. In the same report, and on the same page, if I can quote further, we find:

In 1954 the advisory committee on field services of the child welfare branch reported that the government had responsibility to help children's aid societies develop higher standards of services. A minimum of ten qualified child welfare supervisors and a full-time field service supervisor in the branch was recommended as necessary to fulfill this responsibility. The child welfare branch has been attempting to function with less than half this recommended minimum.

So, Mr. Chairman, 11 years after this committee's report we see that nothing has been done; that the child welfare branch has been attempting for the past 11 years to work with less than half the staff it should have as a minimum requirement. Finally the government brought in a child welfare bill, yet even it completely ignored the whole question of staff requirements and of inadequate welfare staffs in Ontario.

I will return to this question of staff in a few moments, but right now the point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is the great inaction of this department. It waited 12 years before bringing in an Act of this type, though it has been recommended before. Even then the department persisted in ignoring some of the most important and pressing problems in child welfare, just as it has consistently ignored them in the general welfare field.

In the same way, we have seen this department present a children's institutions bill during the 1962-63 session—a bill which blatantly ignored several recommendations made by the hon. Minister's own committee—to examine children's institutional needs. As a further slight to the hon. members of this House and to the people of Ontario, and a further blot upon the concept of public welfare in this province, the hon. Minister refused—perhaps neglected is a better word—neglected for three years to table this report before this Legislature. Of course, this is all old news, but how indicative it is of the lethargy and inaction of this department.

So, Mr. Chairman, what we want is action. We do not want just any kind of action. We want positive, planned, co-ordinated action. We have seen that, during the past year, this department raised relief payments and mothers' allowances; but the fact that these two items were raised, while commendable itself, must be criticized because it is haphazard action, patchwork welfare and completely unrelated to 20th century concepts of welfare and present needs of the people of Ontario.

We saw last year that the welfare estimates increased by some 15 per cent or $15 million. This year we see that they have further increased by some $23 million, I think the hon. Minister said. We do not want to criticize these increases—indeed we feel that they are long overdue—but we do have some questions and some very serious doubts as to how this money is being spent. I can assure the hon. Minister that these questions will come out during the individual votes. In my introductory remarks, I would like to concentrate on the general philosophy of welfare services in Ontario in the middle of the 20th century and to point out the backwardness, the lack of co-ordination and the general inadequacy of The Department of Public Welfare in this province.

I remember the story of the psychology professor in a university who, year after year, set exactly the same questions on his final examination. Finally one day the dean of his department came to him and said: "Why do you persist in asking the same questions on all your examinations? Don't you think it is time for a change?" The professor answered: "No, the questions never change but the answers do." So it is, Mr. Chairman, with welfare services. The problems always remain the same; how do we assure equal opportunity to that portion of the population that has difficulty in making ends meet? The question never changes, but the answer does.

In the last century, the answer was relatively simple. It could be best summed up in the old adage: "The best government is the one that governs least." This was the period of laissez-faire, of laissez-passar, when government had no positive role at all in guaranteeing equality of opportunity. Since that time the answer has been changing. It was demonstrated that the kind of freedom that existed in a laissez-faire society resulted in injustice for many people; not security, but insecurity. Only where justice and security are available to all can we speak with any relevance of equality of opportunity.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, the answer changed. Public welfare was introduced as a positive responsibility of government, necessary to provide the framework within which equality of opportunity could become a reality. A system of social policy and of public welfare was designed. But I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that the social policy was designed for a particular set of social and economic conditions and is valid only within the framework of those conditions. Social and economic conditions are changing as they always have been changing, but today they are changing more rapidly than they ever have before. This rapid change in the social and economic framework of our society is threatening tremendous dislocation within our economy. Once again the answer to the perennial question of providing equality of opportunity is changing.

Let me quote to you, sir, from a paper by Professor John S. Morgan and Professor Albert Rose, both with the school of social work of the University of Toronto. This paper was presented to a conference on social security sponsored by the Canadian labour congress in March of this year. Professors Morgan and Rose write:

It has become fashionable for politicians, civil servants and even some academicians to dwell upon the remarkable difference between the so-called health and welfare expenditures in 1914, or even before 1930, and those of the 1960s as if this were the difference between social insecurity and social security. It has become fashionable as well to compare and contrast the nature and variety of the public and voluntary programmes in the health and welfare services of the period prior to World War I, with the public and voluntary programmes after World War II, as if this comparison, too, indicated that the millennium had arrived.

It is well to be aware of what we have accomplished in providing services to meet the needs of persons and families in the modern industrial society, but pride must always be tempered by reality. Even if we were to achieve a national medical care scheme in Canada, within the next five years, we would really have managed to provide the framework for a programme of social security appropriate to the social and economic conditions of the quarter century which commenced in the fall of 1929.

I would like those remarks to stand, Mr. Chairman, as the background before which I lay my criticisms of The Department of Public Welfare and its patchwork hodgepodge of policies which attempt to solve the welfare riddle, but succeed only in further confusing the matter. Of course there are many things for which I could criticize this department, Mr. Chairman, and undoubtedly these will be recorded in the transcript of debate as we proceed with these estimates. At this time I would like to confine my remarks to three very general, and I might add, most revealing failures of The Department of Public Welfare and its Minister; failures which show clearly and unmistakably that the department and this government are using the wrong answers, the wrong approach to the problems of welfare in Ontario today.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, I must criticize this department for its attitude toward money. We have heard the hon. Minister in this House in these estimates and in the estimates last year and in other years before that, proudly proclaim that he had increased mothers' allowances, that he had increased relief payments. It seems that every year the hon. Minister decides to increase some aspect of his welfare payments just around estimate time; a little bit here, a little bit there, but never enough.

I would respectfully suggest to the hon. Minister that money is not everything. We in the Liberal Party believe, sir, that the job of welfare cannot be measured in terms of dollars and cents, but rather in terms of the quality of life. And in this modern age of rapid social and economic change I submit, sir, that the quality of life, the minimum standard of living which we must ensure for all the people of Ontario, is no longer related to income in the same way it has been. Once again, yesterday's answers are not suitable for today's problems.

We can see this attitude toward the quality of life expressed in the contracts of organized labour. Organized labour is concerned with the standard of life, not the mathematics of income. This can be seen in the new emphasis on fringe benefits in union contracts. We feel that a similarly enlightened approach should be found in welfare, but unfortunately it has not been forthcoming from this government. I suppose this is the lot of reactionary government, to be in the rear-guard of social change; but I think, sir, that the hon. members of this government would at least attempt to keep themselves informed by reading something else in the newspapers besides reports of Queen's Park.

In the last few months there have been several articles concerning welfare in the press. I am not going to quote these articles, because I am sure they will be quoted time and again and perhaps have been quoted before during the votes on these estimates, but I would like to read some of the titles of these newspaper reports and editorials for the benefit of the hon. Minister.

First, an editorial from my local paper, the Ottawa Citizen, entitled: "Ontario's Haphazard Welfare Services"; an editorial from the Globe and Mail, entitled: "Haphazard Welfare Threat to Welfare"; and an article from the Toronto Daily Star, entitled: "Ontario's Handling of Relief Blasted by Welfare Council."

There are many more of these articles, Mr. Chairman, and I would like to mention one or two more to support what I am saying about income and the standard of living.

First, an article from the Globe and Mail of this week where Mrs. Esther Peterson, Lyndon Johnson's special assistant for consumer affairs was quoted as saying:

The poor not only pay, they pay more, for food, more for clothing, more for shelter and more for credit.

And again, from the Globe and Mail of this past week, from an article entitled: "Welfare System Overall But Cuts in Aid to the Aged Urged"; I would like to quote, sir:

A great many aged persons have too much money for their easily satisfied needs and either turn it back to government in taxes or pass it on to relatives, who in the end are really the assisted persons. Yet at the same time there is inadequacy in the provision of housing and health care for the aged.

And this quote was from a talk by the dean of the social services at Laval University, Dr. J. M. Martin.

It serves, Mr. Chairman, to point up the repulsive attitude on the part of the department, that money is the answer for everything. We urge The Department of Public Welfare to take a more human attitude, to think in terms of people, in terms of situations, and not in terms of dollars and cents. We feel that welfare payments should be adjusted to regions, adjusted to specific situations and not applied on an across-the-board formula which results in injustice and financial insecurity for many of Ontario's residents.

In addition we urge the department to reduce its obsession with dollars and cents. We realize that welfare payments are extremely small and that they should be, they must be, increased if justice is to be done in this province. But at the same time we say concentrate more on services: Concentrate on homemaking services, on housing services, homes for the aged, day nurseries; build up these services and you will be doing a far better job than increasing welfare payments alone.

I did notice that the hon. Minister mentioned something about these services I have mentioned, but I think that we can say in this case, as we have for other things: Too little, too late.

We would recommend, too, that new services be instituted, that something positive be done to try to get people who are on welfare reintegrated into the economy. This, above all, should be the chief goal of any welfare programme, we feel, and this above all, has been an area where the record of this department shows nothing but failure.

Again, the hon. Minister has mentioned that something is being done, but I say there should be a crash programme of rehabilitation of the welfare recipients. We sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that The Department of Public Welfare in Ontario comes to realize soon that the reason it exists is to serve the people and begins to take a more humanistic view of its functions in this province.

The second general criticism I must lay against the hon. Minister and his department, Mr. Chairman, is a charge of discrimination. This is not the blatant, obvious type of discrimination; it is subtle, it is devious; but it is the worst kind of discrimination. It is not easy to see because it is not directed against individuals. It is directed against a group of people, which makes it more despicable and most dangerous.

This is the intolerable attitude so prevalent throughout The Department of Public Welfare that people who accept welfare payments are somehow second-class citizens. Unfortunately, the idea still persists in this province that all those who take assistance are second-class citizens, shiftless or dishonest, to be punished for their poverty. I can cite numerous examples of this discriminatory—for that is the only word which describes it accurately—this discriminatory treatment in Ontario.

For example, at the Ontario welfare council conference this year a delegate from Peterborough charged that residents of this municipality were suffering without payment, and in some cases drugs, because of the abuse they receive from local officials. Mr. Chairman—this is in the official records and I am sure the hon. Minister has a copy of that document—I can cite another, more specific example. David Freeman is a 21-year-old victim of cerebral palsy. He has been carrying on a campaign to educate the public to the fact that cerebral palsy victims are in no way inferior mentally, and should not be treated as if they were retarded. David Freeman wrote an article for Maclean's magazine this past year in which he talked frankly about his experiences with The Ontario Department of Public Welfare, and I would like to quote to you from that article. Mr. Freeman writes:

From my own experience, I think these people—he is referring to the people in The Department of Public Welfare:

—have not realized that the CP—cerebral palsy—is a human being. The first time I quit the CP workshop, I was advised to seek the help of a welfare worker. He told me to go back to the workshop for the time being, which I reluctantly agreed to do. But I went one day a week to him to discuss my problem, thinking that he would eventually find something better for me.

Then, one day, even knowing how much I disliked the workshop, he told me that this was the best thing for me to do because "I learned about people there." A week later, I quit the workshop for good and nothing he could say would make me return. However, he had been trying to get me to accept the government disability pension, so I finally did. Now I was unemployed, disillusioned, and totally fed up with life, but, once I accepted the pension, according to him, life was fine again. He couldn't get me out of his office fast enough.

Out of short-sightedness, or else simple lack of ambition, welfare and social workers are in too much of a hurry to brand us "unemployable" and to make the public pension the final step.

That article was written by Mr. Freeman on July 4, 1964. He was paid $400 for it by Maclean's magazine, and on March 2, 1965, The Ontario Department of Public Welfare took away a great part of David Freeman's disability pension. Because of the $400 he was paid by the magazine, David Freeman was rewarded by The Ontario Department of Public Welfare with a cut in his pension of $32.96 a month.

Mr. Chairman, if this is not an example of discrimination I do not know what is. Where is the encouragement The Department of Public Welfare should be giving to people like David Freeman? Indeed, where is the understanding? I know the hon. Minister will say "That is the law, that is what we have to do. He made more money than he was allowed, and we had to take it back." Well, sir, I say to that, the hon. Minister is responsible for changing the law. Ministers of the Crown are the last ones who should be allowed to throw up their hands and say: "The law's the law, and there is nothing we can do about it."

There are other atrocities in The Department of Public Welfare. There is Jamie, there are the caged boys, but most important, there are the hundreds of thousands of people in this province, ordinary average people, who are subtly and continuously made to feel aware that they are somehow inferior, somehow different. This unjust situation must be remedied, Mr. Chairman, and it calls for a complete reorientation of attitude on the part of the department and the hon. Minister. To illustrate what I mean, I would like to read into the record this editorial from the Globe and Mail of February 16, 1965.

Welfare Minister Louis Cecile's continuing ignorance of the work of his department is a wondrous thing.

I am not saying that, Mr. Chairman, this is the Globe and Mail.

Thursday, he told the Legislature's committee on health, education and welfare, that very few persons on welfare lists were employable. Apparently he had not seen the report prepared in the office of his Deputy Minister, Mr. James Band, and published last April of a demonstration project concerning 100 long-term welfare families. The gist of the report was that, after counselling, 42 per cent of the families left the welfare rolls, 21 per cent because they had found employment. That is not "very few." Evidently, Mr. Cecile still believes that most persons on welfare are not good for anything else.

This, sir, is a most deplorable attitude, especially on the part of the hon. Minister of Public Welfare.

The third criticism I must make of this department is a revealing lack of co-ordination in welfare services; a lack of co-ordination within the various departments concerned; a lack of co-ordination between the province and the municipalities; and a lack of co-ordination even among the various services provided.

In the first place, the fact that welfare services are so broad and include so much, necessitates some interdepartmental division of responsibilities. Some welfare services are under The Department of Health, some under The Department of Labour, some under The Department of Education. Dealing only with child welfare for a moment, we can see that in this one branch of welfare services, no less than four departments are involved. The children's aid societies are the responsibility of The Department of Public Welfare; the Ontario hospitals and the Ontario hospital schools for mentally ill or emotionally disturbed children are under The Department of Health; the training schools for delinquent children are under The Department of Reform Institutions; and the schools for deaf and blind children are under The Department of Education.

The lack of co-ordination in these departments is appalling. We recommend, sir, that a Cabinet committee be set up to co-ordinate the work of these various departments, to prevent unnecessary duplication and to assure justice and equality of treatment to the individual citizen. We feel this is an urgent requirement, and hope that the hon. Minister will keep the best interests of the people foremost in considering the establishment of such a committee.

The second problem of co-ordination is co-ordination between the province and the municipalities. The way I understand it, the system now in force makes the province responsible for setting the maximum payments per month to a family, and then matching the payments of the municipalities up to a maximum of half the ceiling. Thus, if the ceiling set by the province is $300 a month and the municipality pays $25, then the province too pays $25. If the municipality pays $150, then the province pays $150. But if the municipality pays $200, then, as I understand it, and if I am wrong I wish the hon. Minister would correct me, the province still pays only $150.

If this is the case—and I believe it is—then it is clearly discriminatory. It discriminates against the people who live in the poorer municipalities. We do not believe that welfare payments should be uniform throughout the province. But we certainly feel that this is not the best way of attaining the flexibility that is so necessary to an adequate welfare programme. We would much rather see welfare grants proportioned to the regional cost of living, not to the wealth or poverty of a particular region of Ontario.

Earlier this year the Ontario welfare council expressed its concern that municipalities have the final say on who receives welfare allowances and how much, yet they contribute the smallest amount of the cost. We feel that this whole area of provincial-municipal co-ordination and sharing of responsibilities should receive serious attention and study in the near future.

The third problem of co-ordination is that of services. There seems to be a trend toward categorizing services and a definite movement away from working within the family framework. We feel this is bad and should be corrected. We find that different members of the same family have to come to different branches, deal with different personnel and go through different red tape to receive welfare services. Even more appalling we find, as the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis) pointed out in these estimates last year, that different branches make different payments for the same service. The hon. member pointed out last year and I would just like to re-emphasize what he said—that a mother with six fatherless children, under general welfare assistance, receives less money than does a mother with six fatherless children under mothers' allowance payments. Now surely such an anomaly points to the fact that greater co-ordination of services within this department are necessary.

We would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this problem be attacked immediately, and that the guiding philosophy of the department be to use the family as a unit—working through the family as a unit—wherever possible in providing welfare services.

Before sitting down, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to briefly go over some of the other failures of this department. I will not be too long on these because I can assure the House that they will be coming up again and again as we go through the votes.

The first point, sir, is the actual amount of relief payments. As we are all aware they were recently increased by something like 15 per cent according to the Globe and Mail. This means that where a family of six previously received a maximum of $220.05 monthly in the winter—which included fuel allowance—it can now receive $253.30. For a family of six this works out to about $42.21 per person per month; or to about $1.07 per person per day in the winter. Stop and think about that; $1.07 a day. We in the Liberal Party are very pleased that these payments were increased, Mr. Chairman. We feel that this has been long overdue, but $1.07 a day? Remember, sir, that this is the maximum. In some municipalities, I believe in most municipalities, recipients of welfare will not even get that much. Mr. Chairman, this is not social policy or social justice. If it were not so serious, I would say that the hon. Minister was trying to be funny.

We have many more criticisms and questions to ask of this department during the estimates, Mr. Chairman. We are appalled at the reports in the Toronto papers that the child welfare branch lost four of its expert staff in seven months, and that staff conflicts within the department are becoming the rule rather than the exception. We are appalled at this. We are shocked at the jungle of red tape that faced Mrs. Shirley Hansen and her three children when they tried to receive temporary help this past April.

We are amazed to find that there are 400 to 500 people daily in the waiting rooms of regional welfare offices in Toronto. As I say, sir, these matters will be brought up again during these estimates; and again and again until finally we can get some action on the part of the department to replace its band-aid approach to welfare with a positive, integrated programme of service and assistance to the people of Ontario.

Before sitting down, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some positive suggestions for the improvement of welfare services in this province. During the past week, and especially over the weekend, we heard many rumours and read in the press that it was expected that the hon. Minister of The Department of Public Welfare might be replaced. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that changing the Minister will not change much in this province's administration of welfare. I am glad to see that the fact that welfare is not being handled properly is being acknowledged, if not officially, at least by the press.

But I would like to say that it is not the hon. Minister who is at fault. Rather, it is the philosophy of welfare services of this whole government. This philosophy is outdated, Mr. Chairman. It is an answer to the problem, which was valid once, but is no longer valid. It is, as I said before, a band-aid approach to welfare. The government waits until an emergency develops or until the estimates are about to come up and then rushes in with band-aids, sticking plasters and props. There is no direction, system of priorities or integration in Ontario welfare services.

I propose, Mr. Chairman, that a Royal commission be established to review the whole system of public welfare in Ontario. That this commission be instructed specifically to review the philosophy of public assistance, the regional disparities in living costs and welfare services, the emphasis on providing more services relative to cash payments and the whole problem of co-ordination of services and co-ordination of agencies. I would hope that this commission would be able to clearly define the role of the family, the role of the municipality and the role of the province.

I firmly believe, Mr. Chairman, that only by such positive action will we make any progress in solving the welfare riddle in this province and find the right answers for the third quarter of the 20th century.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, this is a calm, placid and tranquil atmosphere that prevails in the House this afternoon and I do not intend to drastically upset it. I shall, from time to time, become a little exercised in what I have to say, but not perhaps with the ferocity which was characteristic of these estimates last year.

I must say that I think, in this department at any rate—and it must be said frankly and honestly—we have made some considerable progress since 1964; that in the various fields which the hon. Minister himself has outlined, he must in truth be commended.

Like my hon. friend from Ottawa East, I do not wish to see the hon. Minister necessarily depart with alacrity. I do not think that a shift in Ministers will necessarily solve some of the very difficult problems in public welfare in Ontario. I also suspect that the speculation does nothing other than to undermine some of the morale and some of the stability.

At the outset of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, let me say on behalf of this party that we wish, through the hon. Minister, to extend to his deputy the best possible convalescence. As is well known in this House, the indispensability of Mr. Band to the department is now legendary and one cannot but wish him a speedy recovery and return to this particular office.

A detailed criticism of this department, I think, can justifiably be left to some of the individual branches and the individual items as they arise. The branches as they are laid out leave us an entire spectrum of analysis. Hon. members of this party intend to subject some of those branches to a careful critique. I shall not overdo things now by indulging in unnecessary detail.

I want to relate myself primarily to the hon. Minister's own field. I want to relate my remarks to the first two pages of his manuscript, to the all-embracing nature of the changes imminent in The Department of Public Welfare. I want to agree with him that it is time for a sweeping and total reorganization of welfare services and programmes in the province of Ontario, and that indeed the time is propitious.

The hon. Minister, if I understand it correctly, will be in Ottawa for a conference of welfare Ministers some time in July. As he himself pointed out, the embryonic outline of The Canada Assistance Act is now before the nation. There is obviously a good deal of flexibility within which to work and I should like to suggest, on behalf of my party this afternoon, what the hon. Minister should in fact be saying when he goes to Ottawa next month, and saying in categorical and unequivocal terms.

Indeed, the one aspect of his speech which I found a little disheartening was the reservations and qualifications that couched some of the language where the essence of this department is concerned.

Like my hon. friend from Ottawa East, I have a generalization to make at the outset. Ontario's present welfare pattern is a crumbling mosaic. It is characterized by a good deal of chaos and a large measure of futility. It is guided by principles of budgetary control, rather than by principles of human rehabilitation and self-sufficiency. It is this philosophic rationale which undermines much of the department's work. It is in many ways a series of partitions; in fact partition, I think, is the best word to describe this department. It is a department of arbitrary rules, of competing administrative procedures, of overlapping Acts, of an impossibly complicated network of provincial-municipal authority which cannot be coherently assembled.

In a sense, Mr. Chairman, The Department of Public Welfare is a department of last resort. It is the whipping boy for the rest of this government. After all, The Department of Public Welfare primarily compensates for the deficiencies of all the other departments of government. The extent of involvement of The Department of Public Welfare simply points up the social and economic irresponsibility of the rest of the government, and The Department of Public Welfare then becomes last ditch—

Mr. W. D. McKeough (Kent West): Nonsense!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: Oh, how the neanderthal personalities are pricked by suggestions that all is not well in public welfare, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I may say that public welfare itself is an odious and unpleasant term. It is characteristic of the entire philosophy behind the department, and before I retire to my seat I am going to suggest an alternative name for this department which I think will be rather more meaningful in the public mind.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the attitude which prevails—and I am not going to document all the facets because it has been done time and time again in this House and very effectively—the attitude which prevails need not be. There are entirely new roles open and possible. Some of the most exciting concepts currently in vogue in North America, in the United Kingdom, in Scandinavia, relate to areas of public and social assistance. The guaranteed annual wage, the income maintenance programme, the differential use of social workers and welfare workers and volunteers, the emphasis on planning and research, of which this department is frankly devoid; all of these things give an exciting substance to the department which it presently now lacks but may one day acquire.

I listened to my hon. friend in the Liberal Party and I listened to the hon. Minister when he talked about research; and I have to smile, because the research projects that we discuss in this House, are a series of much trumpeted pilot schemes which are just another costume in the welfare masquerade.

Imagine coming into this House and saying that there was something of great significance in having provided special counselling services to 100 long-term chronic cases, and that because of those special counselling services great things were achieved. Some people, 42 per cent, were taken off the welfare roles. And then we think that we have stumbled on a revelation in the year 1965, that if you give people a little more counselling the possibilities of rehabilitation is somehow greater. That was an accomplished fact 100 years ago. It does not take a Conservative government in the middle of the 1960s to prove that obvious truth. And that does not pass for research in the province of Ontario in The Department of Public Welfare. It passes as a substitute, as a façade—in a sense as a method of diverting attention—but it is not of itself sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, not only is the welfare fabric inadequate, but in terms of a nation as a whole it is probably the worst in Canada. Ontario spends the lowest percentage of its provincial budget on public welfare of any province in Canada. Let me read the figures into the record:

Quebec, 10.6 per cent; Newfoundland, 10.5 per cent; Manitoba, 10.4 per cent; Alberta, 10 per cent; Prince Edward Island, 10.4 per cent; Saskatchewan, 7.9 per cent; British Columbia, 7.9 per cent; Nova Scotia, 6.8 per cent; New Brunswick, 6.8 per cent.

Mr. McKeough: It does not prove a thing!

Mr. S. Lewis: An average across the country, Mr. Chairman, of eight per cent expended on welfare and social assistance, and in the province of Ontario five per cent. Now, the hon. members of the Conservative Party would wish to delude themselves into thinking that this was somehow a manifestation of prosperity in Ontario.

Mr. McKeough: Why do you not read the unemployment figures?

Mr. S. Lewis: It is not at all, Mr. Chairman. It is a manifestation only of arbitrary categories and of the hopeless level of allowances and of the desperate areas of need; of nothing more. To pretend that it is because there are differential unemployment statistics is frankly irrelevant.

Mr. McKeough: Nonsense!

Mr. S. Lewis: Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kent West becomes more animated during the welfare estimates than during any other estimates of this House, but we will forgive him that, Mr. Chairman. The mien of the country yeoman gentleman farmer does not fit very well with welfare, one can understand a certain gap in values.

However, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that another interesting aspect in comparison with Canada as a whole should also be noted. It is simply this: that Ontario forces its municipalities to pay a greater proportion of the social assistance costs than any other province in Canada. And let me tell you, Mr. Chairman—that is not only discriminatory, it is profoundly unfair. It results in gross inequality, and in a total emasculation of services in one part of the province after another.

Again, what is the percentage? Across the board in the province of Ontario, fully 30.5 per cent of the welfare costs are assumed by the municipalities. The closest to that is New Brunswick at 19.1 per cent, and the average across Canada is 13 per cent. Indeed, Mr.

Chairman, the disparity in understanding, the lack of comprehension in this province, is nowhere better dramatized than in the onus of responsibility it puts on municipalities whose backs are presently so laden that you have to have special one-man commissions to re-evaluate entire municipal structures. If anyone wants to know, incidentally, where some of these figures are coming from, they the coming from this authoritative document, Provincial Finances, 1965, from the Canadian tax foundation. They are figures, of course, which the hon. Minister's department has itself submitted.

Now, let me take another point, Mr. Chairman, because it conflicts rather strongly and, I think, importantly, with some of the things the hon. Minister has said. In all of the supplementary assistance programmes in Canada, in those provinces which are in any way comparable to Ontario, Ontario gives less, and is more arbitrary and restrictive in its patterns of giving. More is given by Quebec, more is given by British Columbia, by Manitoba, by Alberta, by Saskatchewan than by the province of Ontario in all the supplementary allowances.

And who does the supplementary allowance affect, Mr. Chairman? It affects those on old age assistance; it affects disabled persons; it affects blind persons. These are the people that the province of Ontario discriminates against. Then the hon. Minister comes into this House and has the effrontery—I know no other word for it—to read into the record the following, and I will quote him:

We have, on many occasions, expressed dissatisfaction with the restrictive features of the federal-provincial agreement under which we must administer the categorical programmes, old-age assistance, blind and disabled persons' allowances.

What does he mean, "the restrictive features"? In these areas of allowance, in the western provinces a supplementary assistance related to need is given without any maximum whatsoever. In the province of Ontario, supplementary assistance is given by municipal administrators to a maximum of $20 a month, of which the province assumes $16 in its overwhelming sense of largesse, plenitude and benevolence. Mr. Chairman, social assistance in its meaningful sense; social assistance which overcomes the abhorrent categories; social assistance which rehabilitates people and gives them a sense of self-sufficiency rather than maintaining them in a state of social deprivation; that kind of social assistance is available to all provinces now. It is not restricted by the present category; it is restricted only by the truancy of the Conservative government opposite.

And finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to note also that this is the only province in Canada which, to this day, has yet to indicate that it will not participate in the federal Department of Health and Welfare's total survey of manpower training. It is the only province which did not participate in the 1951 to 1954 survey, the only province which has not given its OK as yet. The reason, Mr. Chairman, is patently obvious.

The humiliation that Ontario would feel when the nature of our staff allocations were revealed would barely justify taking the survey at all. But let it be said that the survey must be taken, and we must some day—indeed, before these estimates are over—know what the manpower requirements are.

Now because I was goaded into some vigorous statements by some of the hon. members to the left of me—it hurts me to use that term in that way—I shall retreat to a more reasoned and sober evaluation.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that the attitude which prevails in Ontario, and which is comparable in certain of the other provinces, but is rather more pronounced here than in any of the other provinces in Canada, is an attitude which is both insensitive and self-centred. It is essentially an attitude of a parochial potentate handing out alms to the undeserving poor. It is far too prevalent in our welfare administration. We in this party are desperately afraid that you will miss the great opportunity which the Canada assistance plan presents, so let this party suggest, Mr. Chairman, what this government should now do.

The fundamental measure in the major reorganization which is necessary, is to abolish, all the cost-sharing programmes, all the categorical aid programmes with their invidious means tests, and substitute one general social assistance Act based on a needs test formula. Do not merely contemplate it, as the hon. Minister does in his speech; do not discuss it in generalities, but state it categorically. Tell us that you are going to the conference in July, 1965, and that that is what you are going to ask for. And stand on the floor of this House and say, as I am about to say now, Mr. Chairman, that the Legislature should repeal at its earliest possible opportunity the assistance to dependent fathers, the assistance to widows and unmarried women, the general welfare assistance, the supplementary aid, the mothers' allowance programme, old age assistance, blind persons' agreement, disabled persons' agreement, and substitute a comprehensive, all-embracing, general social assistance Act based on a needs test formula.

Let me add, because I think it is important to put this on the record, that there would be every wisdom and justification for old age assistance and blind persons' agreements and disabled persons' agreements to be provided at the point of eligibility without any means test whatsoever at the rate of $75 a month; that those three programmes can continue on that basis and over and above that, the general social assistance plan will prevail. But the welter of other confused cost-sharing programmes should go out the window and we should have this one general social assistance project.

Like the hon. Minister I have been rather interested in discussions with the federal government, and I am reminded that the stage is set. I am reminded of the speech of the hon. federal Minister of Health and Welfare, Judy LaMarsh, when she spoke in Prince Edward Island, Charlottetown on May 20 of this year, and said, and I quote:

The idea of the Canada assistance plan is that assistance will be provided on the basis of real need. This means that both the size of an individual family, and the costs in a particular area, will be taken into account.

She goes on to say:

The Canada assistance plan, intended to be available across the country, will supplant eventually present means test assistance programmes with one general new needs approach. And the target date for implementation is April 1, 1966.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that if the target date for implementation is on the basis which the hon. Minister described in his opening remarks, then I hope that target date never comes. If we are to have a comprehensive statute based on the budgetary provisions presently prevailing, then we are to have a comprehensive statute for sustained subsistence living, and nothing more. We are to have a comprehensive statute for maintaining people in a state of economic penury, and no more, and I intend to demonstrate rather concretely in a short time, with comparisons from material available.

First, Mr. Chairman, let me deal for a moment with this vexing subject of categories again. We have tolerated categories for far too long in this province. I suspect the instincts of the hon. Minister of Public Welfare are honourable ones. I suspect that his trouble is with his Treasury board, and if so, I do not know what animates that kind of mentality, because it was within the right of the province to alter the categorical features of several of the programmes they presently administer. They have refused to do so, and if they did not alter the categorical features then it was perfectly within their rights to extend supplementary assistance, and they have not done so. Something is profoundly wrong in that conscienceless crew of the Treasury bench. I hope that this general assistance proposition will somehow provide a remedial measure.

Let me point out to you that Saskatchewan abolished the means test categories in its social aid programmes two decades ago for a great many areas. Let me point out to you that British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba have abolished the invidious and odious categorical features of several plans over the last several years, but that in Ontario we remain reactionary and inflexible. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, even in the province of Quebec—I do not mean that in a denigrating way—incredible strides have been made.

The finest document on social assistance I have ever read in this country has just come out of the province of Quebec, and it is called "Reports of the Study Committee on Public Assistance"—the Boucher report. It is probably the best provincial analysis that has been provided. The Minister and the hon. member for Ottawa East have doubtless read it in the original. I had to read it in translation. It loses much of its flavour, but the flavour that is there is expressed with vigour and without hesitation. One cannot commend this report sufficiently.

It agrees and recommends to government—and it does not couch it in all kinds of qualifying verbiage—on the scrapping of all these other programmes. It agrees on the reorganization of regional welfare units. It agrees on the differential social work, welfare worker pattern; and it presents concrete recommendations to government.

I do not want to fall into the paths of the Ontario welfare council and the hon. member for Ottawa East and say we should have another Royal commission. We have a plenitude of commissions in this government already as we go from one commission to another. We have enough evidence available now on which to base a concrete programme. But listen, for a moment, to what the Boucher committee report said about categories; and I have never seen it said this way in a public document before, so I want to put it on the floor of this House.

Until now, categorization has been practised chiefly for administrative convenience, and not with possible rehabilitation in mind. The category is based on the immediate cause of the recipient's present situation and not on a testament of his potential self sufficiency. He is administratively established in a situation which should be modified at all costs, yet nothing indicates to the staff of the department whether this or that case in a certain category is likely to make progress.

Well, it certainly could not indicate it to the staff of this department, a department addicted as it is to categories, and a field staff with a case load of 396 per worker. I do not know what could possibly commend itself to such a staff, except a year-long vacation. I go on to quote from the Boucher report:

As conceived and applied at present, categories lead to excessive rigidity and unrealistic stringency between groups who are thereby often permanently labelled. Consequently, it becomes difficult to incite some of these recipients to live by their own resources, when a whole vast, administrative structure condemns them to permanent social deprivation, by not trying to rehabilitate them on the one hand, and by quasi-final categorization on the other hand. When a change is made from one category to the other, it is for reasons of classification and not because of a successful attempt to guide a person toward ultimate independence from public funds.

Now a more apt summary of the prevailing welfare pattern in Ontario could not have been written.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): Has this been adopted by the Quebec government?

Mr. S. Lewis: It most certainly has been adopted. Much to my chagrin it is a Liberal government that is adopting it, but I assume that ultimately it will commend itself even to a Conservative government.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): What is wrong with that?

Mr. S. Lewis: I just said, "much to my chagrin"; do not become excited, gentlemen. Mr. Chairman, one of the interesting things about the—

Mr. Bukator: What does "chagrin" mean?

Mr. S. Lewis: It is in a dictionary, my hon. friend, it is easily accessible. One of the interesting things, Mr. Chairman, is that the categories to which the department assigns people, with which the hon. members of this House are familiar, relate not at all to needs. We watch cases—I am sure I speak for every hon. member of this House—come across our desks in that inimitable fashion of letters from the Deputy Minister, and they are moved from disabled persons' allowance to dependent fathers' allowance to general welfare assistance, and from mothers' allowance to general welfare assistance; from one category to another category, and they never relate whatsoever to the rehabilitative factors involved.

They relate only to the administrative facility. We cart people around from category to category, giving them a few dollars more here or a few dollars less there, never once approximating the needs for self-sufficiency. We are obsessed in this province, Mr. Chairman, with questions of eligibility, of permissible income, of amounts to be paid and of enforcement procedure. The entire emphasis is on the stark financial control rather than the rehabilitation of people, and it is time that ended.

Now let me simply remind the House of a few of the features that the hon. member for Ottawa East mentioned. I, too, would like to mention a couple. The widows and unmarried women's allowance, a special category created at the age of 60. At the age of 59, a widow finds herself on general welfare assistance; then, by some miraculous transformation, at the age of 60, the same woman finds herself in the widows and unmarried women's allowance. No logic whatsoever, no relationship to need whatsoever.

Or take the supplementary assistance for such indispensable things as drugs. For the aged and the blind and the disabled, not a penny more than $20 a month. If the drugs cost $40 or $50, not a penny more. An arbitrary ceiling and, again, no relationship to need. Or take the maximum allowable income for a blind person who is married. To get an allowance, he can have a maximum allowable income of $2,580 a year. The maximum allowable income for a totally disabled person who is married is $2,220 a year. A difference of $330. Why, Mr. Chairman? I challenge the hon. Minister to rise and tell us why. Where is the sanity in that kind of arbitrary division of maximum allowable income?

Further, if you are blind or disabled, no allowable liquid assets are given when requiring some kind of assistance. No doubt that is to discourage affluence. You would not want disabled people to be opulent in this society—after all, it would be inconsistent with the Tory concept of disability. But for unmarried women, whose plight may be more severe or less severe, we have a maximum allowable liquid asset of $1,000. Again, totally irrational. No judgment whatsoever. No analysis whatsoever. No justification whatsoever. Just arbitrary figures.

As far as disabled persons and dependent fathers are concerned, the definitions which are given in the statutes in this province make it incomprehensible to place a person in either one or the other. Indeed, to shift a person from dependent father's allowance to general welfare assistance is often an incomprehensible feature, again subject to these absurd and irrelevant categories.

I recall, Mr. Chairman, that if an unemployable unemployed man has a wife and a family, he gets a dependent father's allowance. If he is an employable unemployed man, with the same wife and family, he gets a general welfare assistance allowance that is considerably less. What makes the needs of his wife and family any different in the one case than in the other? The only thing that makes the needs different is that the Conservative government feels that somehow the employable unemployed are the undeserving poor, the reprobates of society—at the lower end of the social and economic scale. Somehow they should not have the degree of opportunity and self-sufficiency that is given to others.

One of the things which very much interested me when this government handed down—with all the fanfare and pride that was attendant on it—its new scales for general welfare assistance and mother's allowance, was to put them together; and I did so, side by side. I ask the hon. Minister another question, and I assume that when we come to the proper branch, he will answer it. For a mother living alone, with two children, one under the age of three and one over the age of ten: if she is on mother's allowance she gets $87.15 a month; if she is on general welfare assistance, she gets $70.15 a month. In other words, a difference of $17 a month. In the one case she may be a deserted wife who has not heard from her husband and so is eligible for mother's allowance. In the other case she may be a deserted wife who has heard from her husband from time to time, but he is not paying a penny into the family and so she is only eligible for general welfare assistance.

Now, what difference is there in the mother and the children involved that you arbitrarily discriminate to the tune of $17 a month between these categories? What is wrong with the mentality over there, Mr. Chairman? How do the Ministers sleep with their conscience at night; or perhaps the collective conscience is precisely what is lacking, because it makes no sense whatsoever. There is exactly the same human need, but a totally different set of allowances; and let it be said that these are deplorable allowances. The hon. Minister should have been ashamed to announce the increases that came into this House not so long ago, and I shall demonstrate very shortly for the record precisely why.

My hon. friend from Ottawa East mentioned the David Freeman case. I do not want to go into that case any further than he did, but it was a dramatic illustration of this government penalizing people for efforts to improve their own self-sufficiency, penalizing them for an effort at self-rehabilitation. This is not a department of public welfare, it is a department of public warfare. Consistently and premeditatedly, human beings are damaged by the callousness that characterizes so much of our categorical aid programme.

Now it is patently evident, Mr. Chairman, that drastic changes are needed. All these programmes involve, according to the analysis of the year 1963, some 170,000 people in the province monthly; no less, 170,000 people a month. So if we can call for a repeal of all existing programmes governed by the means test and establish this general social assistance Act governed by a needs test, I think we will have what can amount to a general social code in the province of Ontario to govern our whole framework of public assistance legislation.

But I want to do something, Mr. Chairman, at this point in the Legislature. That is to spell out just once the essential difference between the means test and the needs test. The two terms are used too often interchangeably and too often in a facile fashion.

The hon. Minister can correct me if I am wrong, but as I understand the means test: We will let A equal a predetermined arbitrary income, an absolute sum from which there is no deviation; then B will equal the present income of the family involved and whatever will be acceptable by the allowable income, the hours of work and whatever is rejected as non-essentials.

In our means test formulation, Mr. Chairman: Telephones are non-essentials, street car tickets are non-essentials, television set viewing is a non-essential; all the things that the rest of society assume as a matter of convenience, for the undeserving general welfare assistance recipient is a non-essential, including transportation and telephone. It is another interesting observation on the mentality of the welfare department.

Well, if A equals the arbitrary figure and B equals the actual income so-called, then C is the allowance. It is what we pay, the difference, and it is called the budgetary deficit. It is the difference between the income that people receive and the arbitrary ceiling that is imposed. That is a means test and there is no room for flexibility within it.

Now on a needs test, Mr. Chairman, it is a rather different proposition. A is equal to the actual family expenditure based on the actual family need. It is not an arbitrary figure. It is the actual family need. B is again the examination of the income which prevails, and it accepts all kinds of things which give a sense of self-worth and self-sufficiency. It does not discriminate against people because they find themselves in difficult economic situations. C then becomes the difference again, the budgetary deficit again.

But in this instance it is the difference between what the people presently have and what they really need, rather than an arbitrary maximum figure.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Who decides what they need?

Mr. S. Lewis: I am coming to that, and that difference makes all the difference in the world, because you inject into your public welfare framework an entirely new psychology.

Now let this much be said, Mr. Chairman: In some small degree the hon. Minister agrees, because in his opening remarks he talked about a budgetary method of establishing need. He talked about a pre-added budget. He may not have used those terms, but I am sure he subscribes to them. They operate now within his department, and so in one sense we are on the same wavelength.

I want to make one or two points clear, because one of the things which my hon. friend from Eglinton has hinted in the wings is quite valid. The needs test is not a panacea and no one has ever claimed it is. The needs test does not eliminate the necessity of interviewing people and of establishing certain factors. Obviously we need some frame of reference, obviously we need some formula of standard which will apply. But within that formula, Mr. Chairman, within those standards, the needs test applies far more equitably than the harsh realities of the means test approach.

The four basic ingredients of the needs test—I shall outline them—are these:

1. The economic and social setting; 2. The characteristics of the persons receiving the assistance; 3. The circumstances which create the state of indigence; 4. The duration of the state of indigence.

It is important, of course, in a needs test, to analyze the duration, because short-term people may require a little less than long term, so these are features that have to be worked in. Now that gives us a compromise, that gives us the compromise which the Ontario government has chosen to call its pre-added budget.

Well, its pre-added budget in this province, Mr. Chairman, I hope will never relate to the general social assistance Act which we have in mind, because that budget imposes a sub-standard scale.

It is harmful in itself. It appears to the recipient to be calculated by a committee of 20th century Scrooges for whom there can be no redemption. Indeed, I am going to give a precise financial comparison to this House so that they grasp the total measure of the disparity.

The most vivid comparison possible is that between the government pre-added budgets and this superb guide for family budgeting put out by the social planning council in Toronto. Mr. Chairman, this guide was drawn up by the best possible people in the field. Every item was scrutinized by a panel of experts. It is broken down into the smallest particles of concern and the definition which precedes this guide may be of interest to the House:

The level provided is sufficiently above the subsistence-survival level as to be consistent with the maintenance of good health and a sense of self-respect, yet considerably below any level of living that could be called luxurious.

The report goes on to say:

The various categories in this report include all consumer goods and services identified as bare or conventional necessities and a selection from those commonplace ones which are so important to the social and emotional well-being of families that they rank with necessities. No luxuries are included.

I suppose that the parting stage is at the level of social and emotional well-being. That is doubtless where we part company, for this guide for budgeting includes in its analysis the following range: Food, clothing, home furnishings, household operation, personal care, transportation, school, leisure time needs and personal discretionary needs. And, Mr. Chairman, removing the categories of shelter and heating and medical care, which are provided by this government separately and which are provided in this budget separately, let me tell the House what the budget finds. For a mother with two children in the province of Ontario, a girl under three and a boy over ten, under general welfare assistance the province provides $70.15 or $841.80 per annum; under mother's allowance, they are provided with $87.15 a month, or $905.80 per annum.

According to the guide for family budgeting by the social planning council, an absolute minimum, non-luxury guide, the budget is $150.91 per month or $1,810.92 per annum. In other words, in one category after another, the schedules established by this government are fully $1,000 a year below what is called a subsistence survival level. And I have not made any comparisons with shelter, medical care and heating which would make it even greater. But the schedules are anywhere from $1,000 at the bottom of the scale, to $2,200 at the top of the scale, below a subsistence survival level.

That is why the province of Ontario only provides five per cent of its provincial budget for welfare matters. Not because of any plenitude in the rest of this society, but because of the hopelessly inadequate level of payment, and because of the pretensions that accompany those payments.

One other thing should be stressed, Mr. Chairman. When you have established a general social assistance Act, based on a needs test, you can shift from the pre-occupation with money, to an emphasis on services. The social workers, or the welfare workers, or the volunteer workers involved, can begin to provide for the family a spectrum of services in the community. They will not be totally preoccupied with ascertaining eligibility and income levels, and maximum allowances, and all the other paraphernalia and trappings with which we clutter our categorical aid programme. There will be a shift in emphasis to service and away from financial obsession.

Further, Mr. Chairman, as a part of this total programme, we will need in the province of Ontario a board of revision—an appeal board—and I want to quote recommendation 59, from the Quebec Social Assistance Study. It says:

The department should institute a revision board where any applicant or beneficiary of assistance who feels that he or she has been wronged, may vindicate his or her rights.

The report goes on to comment in this way, and I thought it a rather interesting comment in view of what happens in the province of Ontario:

The creation of a revision board would cause the elimination of the numerous recourses to third party, such as members of Parliament, political organizers and other so-called persons in authority.

Let me pause at this point to make one point clear. It gives everyone in this party immense satisfaction that when they get an harassed welfare case, or some recipient who has been hard done by, or discriminated against by a myopic and intransigent welfare officer somewhere in some suburb, it does all our hearts good to be able to telephone the Deputy Minister and say, "Can you look after this problem?" and know that something is likely to happen.

But I say without any reservation, Mr. Chairman, that that is not the way to run a welfare apparatus in the province of Ontario. You should remove the discriminatory features at the source; remove the need of intervention of third parties. And if there is some area of discrimination, you provide a regularized board of review or revision, and you do not litter it with political patronage.

There is something to be said for politicians serving their constituents to the best of their ability, and providing the channels and the referrals wherever it is humanly possible. But they should not be the main course of referral. There should be boards of review for those respondents and recipients who are unhappy about their claim.

More important, all these things at source should be provided with a more enlightened regional welfare apparatus so that your municipal administrators are not arbitrarily restricting people because of their own preconceptions of what makes the worth of a man; whether he has done what he should for his family; whether his family falls into such-and-such a category. For far too long in the province of Ontario, countless numbers of people have been arbitrarily abused; have received less than they are entitled to because of the operation of municipal authorities in the far-flung corners of the province.

It is nothing new that I am saying. It has been said again and again by the Ontario welfare council, by the social planning council, by the Canadian welfare council and by every agency in the field in their call for new units of administration, a greater degree of enlightenment and a greater degree of skill and training amongst the workers involved.

While I congratulate the department on the facility with which it responds to individual requests, I say that that in itself is not an answer. The answer is far more fundamental, and must be taken cognizance of.

So, Mr. Chairman, we should have a general social assistance Act based on a needs test, eliminating all these cost-sharing and categorical programmes. You would have a board review providing a channel of review for certain of the programmes like blind persons and disabled persons and old age assistance, a minimum of $75 a month at point of eligibility and social assistance making up the rest. You could, in fact, move further in The Department of Public Welfare. One could logically bring day nurseries into the whole child welfare apparatus. There should be in this department, a totally separate training branch—we shall come to that later in this estimate—for training is sorely neglected in The Department of Public Welfare. There should be a totally separate branch incorporating all aspects of home care—the homemakers, the visiting nurses and the special home care projects—and also a special branch of planning and research, because nothing can be done in this department of a meaningful kind without a new emphasis on planning and research.

And when the hon. Minister is finished this reorganization, he can remove forever from the statute books of this House the odious and invidious term of public welfare. He can remove the invidious emphasis on individuals as opposed to the family units and the family structure, and the multi-problem aspect of so many of our social and economic problems. He can rename his department "The Department of Family and Social Services," and give to it the substance, the importance and the content which will allow it to be viewed with some respect, rather than with so much concern and despair by such a large number of people.

I say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that we have come—I admit to the hon. Minister again—a considerable way in one year, and that he has before him now The Canada Assistance Act and all that that opens. I profoundly hope that he will take advantage of it. More important perhaps, that his Treasury board colleagues will take advantage of it, because there is no reason whatsoever that the department should have the reputation it has in the public eye.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I believe that perhaps it would be in order for me just to make a few statements. I appreciate the fact that the hon. members who have spoken have done so with sincerity in what they believe, and I suppose, as was stated so well in one good speech that I heard by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) during the Budget debate, that we talk in such a way in trying to bring forward the policies which are expressed, or that we preach apart from political parties, and with that I agree.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would say this to the hon. member for Scarborough West, who spoke last. I must say to him that maybe he had more meat in his speech than in his previous speech, although some of the views he expressed are the views of his party.

On a lot of it I agree with him. A lot of it is possibly a bit on the idealistic side; that is quite all right, I do not take any wrong view of that either. But there is one phase I think we agree with, and I would like him to believe I am very sincere when I say that what is happening in Ottawa today or next year I hope will take the form of law with which we can co-operate and through it have a completely different point of view on the welfare services, not only in this province but across Canada.

I would like him to believe that we have been endeavouring and working on this for many years. I think the other provinces have done so as well. I do not believe the province of Quebec will form part of it, I think they are going to opt out, they have expressed that point of view. I think the report, as the hon. member mentioned, the little bit I have had an opportunity to read, is a very interesting document and I think very worthwhile. If the government itself has accepted it as a whole after studying it, I do not know.

The last time I saw the Minister, when I met with him in May, we discussed it very little; he never made any public expression concerning it, but at the same time he told me that they were getting this report and were studying it very closely.

However, before I resume my seat I would not like the House, Mr. Chairman, and yourself, to have the impression that we are as bad as is sometimes expressed, especially in dealing with public assistance rates as they were outlined across Canada. From what I see here, the maximum payment in Canada is by Ontario. Next to it, as far as I have it here, is Manitoba.

Sometimes we do make comparisons with other provinces, but I always feel that it does not accomplish very much. It is rather odious to make comparisons with other provinces. In the province of Quebec, for instance, in old age assistance, Ontario has 13 per cent of the 65-68 group receiving the allowance. In Quebec this is about 34 per cent and Newfoundland about 67 per cent. The incidence is very different, let us put it that way. That is why I say we do not gain too much by making these comparisons. Sometimes they prove a point and sometimes they disprove it. That is my feeling about it.

However, in listening to the two speeches that I have heard, I must in all sincerity say that in some points I think we are going the right way. How far we shall go, this we shall see. But I would not like to commit myself to any definite pronouncement as far as what I will do until something has been decided elsewhere, which we can look at and discuss with the hon. members of this House at another time. I am sure that we will then receive, as we have received in the past, some help and some light in these particular matters.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I posed the comparisons with the other provinces, the only comparisons that are really viable comparisons, the only ones that are given in the provincial finances study, because they, like the hon. Minister, accept that certain things are not comparable. For instance, the numbers that he quoted in a certain age category on assistance are not comparable. Unless one studies the evolution of The Public Charities Act as it emerged in Quebec before 1960. I could have come into the House and pointed out that on, I guess it was May 11, 1962, Quebec went off municipal payments towards welfare. Municipalities pay absolutely nothing towards welfare now. The province has assumed the total responsibility. But because that comparison was in truth not justified in certain other respects, I did not use it. I tried to use the comparisons which were justified.

One of the comparisons which was justified was the analysis of the supplementary incomes. You see, Mr. Chairman—I just want to deal with this in slight detail for a moment—what the supplementary assistance does in Canada is to allow provinces to get around the objectionable features of category. So that when the hon. Minister says to this House, "We have to work within the category," he in fact does not, he can put in supplementary assistance which is rather different.

Now let me give him the precise facts. I did not include them in the opening, but perhaps they make sense in view of what he has said. The supplementary income given to old age assistance: In the province of Ontario the government pays 80 per cent of $20 or $16, and that is the maximum; Quebec and Alberta give it on a needs test with no maximum; and British Columbia gives it, but the maximum goes up to $30.

Now take disabled persons: In Ontario again a $20 maximum; British Columbia $30; in Quebec no maximum whatsoever.

Take blind persons: In Ontario again a $20 maximum; in British Columbia $30; in Quebec, Alberta, Saskatchewan, no maximum whatsoever.

These assistance programmes, these supplementary assistance programmes, are the way in which the governments get around the category, the way in which they bring people to a viable standard of living without humiliating them under the categorical approach. There is no reason in the world why the province of Ontario could not have instituted that.

Now as to not committing himself: That is what really concerns me, Mr. Chairman, the unwillingness of the hon. Minister and the department to commit themselves. Why is it not possible to say that you will abolish these categorical programmes and have a general social assistance Act? You hint at it, we have talked around it in the House; why is it not possible to say that that is what will be argued in July? One of the most ironic things, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I said I do not want to abandon any position that I now have in case I do not get the new programme I was thinking about, and as the hon. member was expressing it.

Mr. S. Lewis: Since the total provincial contribution at the moment is only five per cent, maybe the hon. Minister could make the assertion and make up the rest himself. I could not help but think, Mr. Chairman, that one of the most ironic features of this Boucher report is that the one—if I can put it this way—the one non-Quebec name in this report, referred to in the introduction, is Professor John Morgan of the University of Toronto school of social work. It was Professor Morgan who contributed a lot of material which went into the rationale of this report. Now Professor Morgan is also an advisor to this department, if I understand correctly. Yet it took the government of Quebec to enshrine some of his opinions to be adopted by policy. I suggest that it would equally behoove the hon. Minister of Public Welfare to take into account many of the views of such people.

Let me ask him rather specifically, Mr. Chairman, who does he intend to take with him in his entourage when he goes to Ottawa next month? Who are the people in the social security part of the welfare field that he is taking with him? I know there will be Treasury officials and I know there will be the Deputy Minister, if he is well. I know that we will work out a good financial deal, but who is he taking to Ottawa with him to work out a good welfare deal? Which of the eminent people in the field will accompany him?

Mr. Chairman: Now that a general discussion has taken place in all these introductory speeches, I think that we should relate our remarks to specific items as we come to them in the budget.

On vote 1701:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, this question falls in 1701.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the questions of the hon. member for Scarborough West, I think it would be prudent and wise to say that the matters that will be discussed in the conference will be especially a matter of establishing policy as between the different governments.

As far as dealing with the other matters I have, as you say, Professor Morgan, who has been one of our advisers in this matter. I suppose we will have a member from the schools of social work, especially we have in mind a gentleman like Professor Hendry and persons of that description.

As far as the conference is concerned, I doubt if there will be the time, in the day or two we will be sitting, with other matters, to discuss all these other items. What we want is an establishment of principle, and I suppose then the matter will be discussed as between the officials of both departments, plus the consultants, persons similar to those two I have named that come to my mind at the present time.

Mr. S. Lewis: I suppose there will be some of those people along with you at the conference?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I hope to have them with me if they are available at that time. They have already been advised, I think, and I hope they will be available. There may be others, but these are two who come to my mind at the present time.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I am delighted to hear that at least those two are—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on the first vote, having to do with the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's advisory committee on Indian affairs.

In years past, I know that some of the committee members have attended the session of the Legislature when this matter was going to be brought forward. I would like to say, to begin with, that the hon. Minister is very fortunate in having been able to get Indians, who themselves are so eminently qualified, from various parts of Ontario to serve on this committee.

I would like to draw to his attention, however, that it would be well within the realm of possibility and advisability if the hon. Minister, when the personnel of the committee changes from time to time, would consult with the elected councils of the various reserves from which these people come. I would in no way be critical of their qualifications, but I would be critical of the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps, as well, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), in their method of selecting these advisory personnel.

I would like to say just in a congratulatory tone that one of the most useful pamphlets on Indian affairs in Ontario that has come my way in some time is that published by the Ontario human rights commission, entitled, "Human Relations." One of these issues, December 1964, was given over to the discussion of the affairs of Indians in Canada, and specifically in this province. From this source, and from some others, there are some useful recommendations that I am sure have guided the hon. Minister in what he proposes to do with the Indian responsibilities in this province.

However, from my own work with the Indians in my constituency, I have come to the conclusion that they are very much concerned that the retention of their general jurisdiction be kept at the federal level and that the reserve system be kept largely as it now is. Any arguments that are put forward that would tend to, let us say, foster the idea that the government is going to do away with the Indian reserves and integrate these people with the rest of the population are not met with any favour. Certainly anyone who proposes this should do some careful research before they make any public pronouncements, because it certainly stirs up a good deal of ill-will, in my experience.

They are also very keen, I would submit, Mr. Chairman, in retaining their cultural tradition; and in fact enlarging this. They are proud of it and they have every reason to be proud of it. The government has many methods at its disposal to assist them in this that, I feel, are not being used to the fullest extent. Finally, they are searching—more than anything else—for economic independence. I would say between 25 and 30 per cent of the citizens on the reserve that I am familiar with are in receipt of some form of welfare. I would like to think that our general programme over the years would be to channel this money out of direct welfare and into such projects that would enable these Indians, in their own reservations and in their own areas, to take part in economic projects that would be useful to themselves and advantageous to the community.

As far as this economic independence is concerned, I have often felt that The Department of Economics and Development of this government might take a more definite stand in assisting small projects, small business projects and manufacturing projects, that have been suggested to them in the past. I know that there are many skills among the Indians—manufacturing snowshoes, bows and arrows and certainly many other items—that would be useful in tourist trade, that could be fostered by The Department of Economics and Development. I wish the department would step in and give assistance in this.

There are already various examples in Ontario, and across Canada, where government agencies have made some financing available; but more than that, some managerial assistance so that these projects can be put on a working basis and so that those Indians who want to take part can be properly trained in manufacturing. As I say, there are several examples which serve as excellent models for other projects that could be established in the reserve system.

I have often felt, as well, that we are not assisting the Indians as we should to make good use of their potential tourist attractions. In the reserve in Brant county there have been recent road developments that have assisted tourists to get into the area; but there is much more that could be done there and in other parts of Ontario. Mind you, many of these areas are good for farming, where agriculture has not been as fruitful as it should be or as profitable as it might be. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) might well direct his ARDA officials to go into the Indian reserves and offer them some assistance in establishing community pastures, with the thought of co-operative farming as something that could well be fostered by the funds available through ARDA, as well as the expert advice that might come from this area.

The point of this, Mr. Chairman, is that the responsibility for the development and assistance of the Indians is far more than a welfare problem, and I hope you will forgive me if I have strayed from that a bit. It really does depend upon the exertions of a co-operative effort of many Cabinet responsibilities. I understand there is a committee of some sort that is attempting to co-ordinate these efforts, but the fruits of the co-ordination are not apparent as yet and I hope that in the hon. Minister's comments a bit later we will see that there are definite steps to be taken in the near future.

In the preservation of the cultural traditions of the Indians, which should be one of our chief responsibilities as far as our assistance is concerned, I am aware—as I am sure the hon. Minister is aware—of the many cultural projects that the Indians have instituted on their own initiative. One thing that we might do to give assistance is this, rather than move in and tell them how these projects should be run, is to assist them with advertising through our ministry of information. We should make a real effort to get the crowds out from the surrounding communities and, as a matter of fact, from areas far distant, that would really give significance to their cultural pageants, fairs or—I suppose you would call them pow-wows—attracts of the type they have in Manitoulin that have already attracted many thousands of interested citizens, both Indians and non-Indians.

The history of these people has never been properly told to the citizens of our own province. A chief complaint, as far as their cultural heritage is concerned, is that our official histories do not deal with this adequately and our young people still have their views of the Indian population and their background shaped by the cowboy-and-Indian movies that they often see on some of the poorer television programmes.

There is really something that can be done here, to see that their background is made readily available to students and to tourists; and that, in fact, their culture becomes a part of our own culture.

In education, I would say that much has been done in recent years to improve Indian education. In the reserves that are in southern Ontario there are already very adequate systems of schools at the primary level. Unfortunately, a good many of the Indian students, having graduated from grade 8 and left the reserve to go on to secondary school—are subjected, for the first time, not to an attitude that I would call discrimination but to a feeling that they have indeed left home; that although the teachers and the students with which they now work are friendly and co-operative, there is a definite pressure on these young Indian people to withdraw into themselves and into very small groups. This pressure results in, I would say, by far the largest drop-out average from the school system of any other identifiable group.

I am not sure what the answer to this may be. But I believe that in an Indian community of 7,000—of the type that we have in Brant county—it might well be a useful project to set up some continuing education beyond grade 8, perhaps associated with some technical training as well, so that these Indian students can carry on with their education on the reserve in an atmosphere where they will not feel strained and pressured into dropping out of the school system.

I do not know how far this could be continued because eventually we feel that the young Indians, whether or not they eventually decide to stay on the reservation, should get out into the surrounding community and deal with their white brethren in the local towns and cities.

As a matter of fact, many of these Indians do elect to leave the reserve and there are many of them here in the city of Toronto. The hon. member for St. George (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) frequently refers to them in this House and the problems that they might be assisted with by the action of this Legislature and the hon. Minister whose estimates are before us this afternoon.

My own experience is that these Indian drop-out students realize, just as any other student would, that they have made a mistake in not getting all the education that was available to them and many do return to take part in programme 5 retraining. But once again, the pressures that are exerted on an Indian in a white man's classroom are very apparent and cause him great difficulty in achieving the success that, really, the statistical averages predict for him.

I think there should be more of an effort for these retraining programmes to be made available on the reservations themselves, and in the Indian communities of northern Ontario where the Indians live off the reserve.

As far as the reserve system itself is concerned, I have already said that many of the Indians try their luck off the reserve and many are successful. They have some special skills in working on high construction and on bridges; they have many other abilities that we would fit them for special occupations. But as we know, many do return to the reserve, and sometimes they are not able to get adequate employment there and do find themselves on the welfare rolls. This is where I feel that our attention to the reserves themselves might well bear fruit as far as the welfare department is concerned.

If some of the money that is allocated by the government for Indians affairs—even though this is not our prime responsibility—would be put into economic development, I am sure that this would bear good results in a very short time.

As far as the federal jurisdiction is concerned, we are all familiar with the discussions that have taken place in the province of Quebec that deal with the transference of this responsibility, and we know that there are certain authorities in Quebec who feel that Eskimos and Indians should come under primary provincial responsibility. I feel that our responsibility is to make it very clear to the Indian that he can take part in every programme that this government has for the development of the community without sacrificing his special position in the community by virtue of his residence on the reserve.

I believe that this government is prepared to take this step. My experience is that they have extended programmes in several departments wherever it has been brought to their attention that there was some particular programme that was available to the rest of the citizens, but not available to the Indians because they live on reserves. I have mentioned the fact that The Parks Assistance Act applies on reserves and that certain welfare measures have now been made available there—reforestation, restocking and the list is becoming long and quite impressive. But the fact remains that all too often we find that the Indians are kept out of programmes, and the most recent one that has been brought to my attention is the community programme responsibility of The Department of Education wherein the local recreation councils have not been granted the support of this government simply because they are not organized on a municipal basis.

Now this can be changed readily, and I am sure will be changed. So surely the hon. Minister's committee—the committee that we are asked to vote, is it, $1,500—might well see that a search is made of the legislation so that all of these community development programmes would be made readily available to the Indian communities. As a matter of fact, with the opportunity, and go out of our way to see that they will accept this opportunity.

As I say, there are many things that we could do for the Indians on the reservation. The responsibility seems to lie directly with this hon. Minister, and I am looking forward with great expectation to his remarks on Indian affairs so that many of these things may be brought into being.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, as I stated at the opening of my remarks, I had a statement to make on Indian affairs, and this concerns those native Indians in Ontario who are not properly prepared to make their way in contemporary society. Naturally, I am sure that hon. members, and especially the hon. member for Brant, will know what I mean when I sometimes use words that I do not like to use.

During the course of the debates on the estimates of The Department of Lands and Forests, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Prime Minister indicated to the House that I would make a full statement on the policies of this government with regard to the situation. Hon. members will be pleased to know that circumstances of the Indian population of Ontario have been, and are, strictly in the forefront of our attention.

I am aware that hon. members would like to see the Ontario government develop a comprehensive plan which will ensure social and economic betterment for these descendants of the original inhabitants of this land.

I believe a programme is evolving which will place increased responsibility on the province in the treatment and the needs of the Indians.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the most vexing of all the difficulties associated with a proper Indian policy up to now, is the division of responsibility between the provincial and federal governments. The artificial status concept of the treaty Indians resulting from a background of federal legal responsibility and control, has unfortunately set them apart from other citizens. Last year, for example, there were 48,000 registered or treaty Indians living in Ontario. Approximately 14,900 of these resided off the reserves, most of whom were dependent on the province for service and assistance.

In addition, while there are no census figures available, it is estimated that there are 11,000 people of Indian ancestry who are not classified as Indians. The problems encountered by many of this non-treaty group are not unlike those of the treaty Indians. However, they do not qualify for assistance under federal Indian legislation. The ideal arrangements would be to include all people of Indian culture in one group, eliminate divided responsibility and, in addition to a new programme designed to expand their opportunities, provide for their continuing needs and establish provincial programmes.

Generally speaking, the policy of the federal government to its Indians has not altered appreciably over the years. The great majority of Indians continue to live on reserves assigned to them during the last quarter of the 19th century. At that time, treaties were signed with each band in recognition of the surrender of Indian interests in Canadian soil, and the Crown undertook to set aside reserves and to provide other benefits such as cash payments, annuities, educational and health facilities and other considerations.

For all practical purposes, treaties have now been replaced by the federal Indian Act and accompanying regulations. While the Indian Act does not place restrictions on any of the previous rights contained in the treaties, it does provide some benefits not embodied in these agreements.

The British North America Act, section 91, charged the federal government with responsibility for Indians and Indian lands. The major function of the federal administration has been the management of Indian reserves and surrendered Indian land, tribal and band funds, education, health, relief assistance, housing, descent of property, treaty obligations and enfranchisement of Indians and a variety of minor matters. Beyond this, Indians have continued to live on reserves according to what is considered their traditional custom. There are many complex problems involved in the development process which must be taken into account, and foremost among these are the conflicting values of the Indians that have blocked acceptance of the white man's life. Attitudes, first of hostility and then of dependency, the loss of social roles and social goals and the lack of knowledge and skills required to earn a living in a temporary industrial society.

To be sure, Indians have emulated and accommodated to our life to a degree that indicates some progressive change. On the other hand, privation and disorganization continue among some reservation populations, and they signify that whatever adaptation that has taken place has been accompanied by tremendous mental and physical suffering.

Second in importance among the problems is that psychological and sociological Indian concepts have not been given full recognition.

If the problems are to be overcome, government must come to grips with all aspects of the situation. If the hopes of the federal authority for a more productive and satisfying social adjustment among Indians are to be realized, we believe that certain Indian values such as responsibility for the welfare of the tribe, the importance of satisfying social relationships and pride of heritage have been too long overlooked and opposed. Yet these values persist and must be considered as essential for bringing about a more harmonious adjustment.

What we are dealing with is not the Indian problem that can be solved through the payment of money alone. The personal rehabilitation of the Indians will be a complex task, and will call upon all the insights and skills, social and psychological, as well as educational and economic that can be brought to bear. This implies a series of related problems which necessitate not only the adaptation of existing methods where these have been proven practical, but also the development of entirely new concepts of treatment to the specific needs of one group in our society.

In these remarks, I hope I have indicated that one of the key points which must be appreciated is that the cultural, social, political and economic background of the Indian is entirely different than from the common heritage of other Canadians.

The Algonquin Indian had no visible political organization, he lived in relatively small groups where strong bonds of kinship held the social units together. His subsistence activities involved hunting, fishing, trapping and harvesting of fruits and herbs. Accordingly, mobility was essential.

The religious philosophy of the Algonquin emphasized reverence for the game animals upon which he depended. It might be thought that after several hundred years of contact, the Indian people of Ontario would no longer maintain any of the attitudes, beliefs and behaviour patterns briefly outlined here. To believe that they do not is false. It is therefore inappropriate for us to make value judgments about the living conditions and conduct of Indians based upon the standards which apply to ourselves.

Similarly, to talk about the Indian problem without considering the great difference in cultural level between groups and families living in various parts of Ontario, either on or off reservations, is unrealistic.

Many groups of Indians have resolved social difficulties and are as advanced and comparable to non-Indian communities. I would say that standards and social conditions at Walpole, Six Nations and Tyandego reserves, for example, are equal to those of non-Indian communities in the vicinity. I am pleased to note that the Walpole band council has taken over full administration of their affairs in the same manner as the municipalities.

Geography in a province as large as Ontario has played, and continues to play, a very significant part in the nature of the problems faced not only by Indians but by other citizens as well.

The government of Ontario recognizes a responsibility for Indians and during the past 10 years it has acted on this premise. As a result, Ontario has instituted many specific measures to assist Indians so far as legal limits permit. In 1955, The Indian Welfare Services Act was passed, which extended to registered or treaty Indians all assistance programmes administered by the province. The Métis and non-treaty Indians, of course, have always been considered in the same manner as other Ontario citizens.

The importance of The Indian Welfare Services Act is that it acknowledged for the first time the Ontario government's responsibility to the treaty Indians. A weakness in the present arrangement is that while Ontario can provide, to Indians who qualify, all the benefits of on-going programmes and services, it has no power to provide a viable form of service designed to acculturate these people. There are at this time several items in which special arrangements have been worked out with the federal authorities to allow the Indian government more direct contact with Indians, and more particularly with the administration on reserves. An example of this is the inspection of Indian day schools on reserves by inspectors of The Department of Education.

Another is the construction and maintenance of roads and bridges on reserves by the Indians under the supervision of The Department of Highways. It is of interest to note that Indian reserves received $500,000 in provincial grants last year for this item.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests has already informed the hon. members of the House of the work done by his department, the resources development agreement with the federal government and the training of individuals for fire protection and silvicultural work, which represent outlays by the province of between $300,000 or $400,000. However, it has been recognized for some time that these ad hoc arrangements are less than satisfactory.

Similarly, several practices adopted in other departments have materially assisted the Indian people. The Department of Agriculture has extended The Agricultural Societies Act and The Community Centres Act to apply to Indian reserves. Agricultural representatives and the extension branch of the department work in close co-operation with Indian bands. Last year some 255 Indians from northern Ontario worked on farms in southern Ontario as part of a special action taken to provide these people with both income and training.

The Department of Education has several new policies now under way, I am advised, including special capital assistance grants to boards of trustees in Red Lake and Moosonee, grants to the Indian-Eskimo association, special one-week residential courses for Indian leaders under the community programmes branch and some 15 specialized courses offered by the department to Indians under programme 5 of the federal-provincial technical and vocational training agreement. I know that is what the hon. member had in mind when he spoke a moment ago.

The Department of Health has established seven public health inspection offices which serve 81 communities in northern Ontario, containing 5,500 Indians. In addition, The Department of Health underwrites the full cost of health services provided in a number of predominantly Indian settlements by the seven public health units operating in the territorial district.

The work done by The Department of Public Welfare is, however, the basis for most of the efforts of the provincial government in dealing with needs of the Indians. It is noteworthy to mention that payments on behalf of Indians by the department in the last fiscal year, so far as these can be determined, exceeds some $2.5 million. It should be noted that the ratio participation by Indians in provincial welfare programmes is three times greater than the provincial average. Public welfare is the only department which has a full-time staff dealing specifically with Indians.

These efforts have been concentrated in three major areas. The first has been the extension of the category of assistance programmes for individual Indians: Old-age assistance, mothers' allowances, dependent fathers' allowances, disabled persons, widows and unmarried women's allowances, blind pensions, rehabilitation services and child welfare services.

The second was the extension of The General Welfare Assistance Act to reserve

Indians on the same basis as though the Indian band council was a municipal council.

The third programme is involved in community development processes.

On other occasions I have described our accomplishments and progress with off-reserve Indians in such centres as Red Lake, Moosonee, Minaki, Hornepayne and Batchawana. Here the department, with the assistance and support of The Department of Education and the Ontario housing corporation, has accomplished major resettlement and re-establishment of a large number of formerly nomadic Indians. The township of Red Lake was the first community with a nomadic Indian population to ask for assistance.

As a result, sir, extraordinary action was taken to provide development officers to serve the municipality for an indefinite period.

In collaboration with the municipal council and local citizens' committees, a major change has taken place in the standard of living among the Indian residents. Recent reports reveal a sharp contrast in the monthly earned income of some 224 local Indians within a two-year period. Where formerly the monthly earnings of this group did not exceed $6,000, they now show income of in excess of $45,000 a month.

This has meant that many of the amenities of living are now within reach. Forty-nine families have abandoned their dilapidated primitive shacks and now live in serviced houses that are comparable to other homes in the community. Their children are integrated into the public school system, and regular health check-ups combined with modern hygienic practices have removed many of the discomforts and objectionable features of their former existence.

The accomplishments at Red Lake are largely due to the work of the native Indians employed on the staff of The Department of Public Welfare. It was found that difficulty of communication was one of the chief obstacles to the development of those people. To overcome this handicap the department has recruited five well-informed native Indians who can converse in Ojibway and Cree. They are being trained in a community development programme. The experiences gained at Red Lake, Moosonee and elsewhere have firmly established one principle, which is that government programmes of assistance and the purpose of these will be interpreted to Indians through a medium which they accept, understand and trust. The prospect of further provincial participation in the affairs has been under discussion with the federal authorities for some time.

Mr. Chairman, I have just about another five or six minutes, but I would not want to interfere with the promise of the hon. Prime Minister yesterday to call these bills, so I am quite willing to continue this when we come back, whichever the House would decide.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Deputy Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we would now like to turn to a resolution in the name of the hon. member for Wellington South, No. 14 in the grouping Other notices and motions.

NOTICE OF MOTION NO. 14

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I move the resolution in my name, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon).

I rise to speak on a problem which shames and distresses the people of Ontario. It is a problem involving our sense of justice and humanity, a problem which forms an important part of our continuing attempts to improve the conditions of human life in Ontario.

It is also a problem which, shamefully, has been neglected in the province for far too long. I say shamefully because I can see no serious obstacles standing in the way of its solution—no serious obstacles except, perhaps, the reluctance of the present government to seriously involve itself in meeting human needs and reducing human misery.

The word "misery" is an important one in this context. Because where our outdated divorce laws are concerned, misery—real human misery—is the all-too-common result of our defective legislation.

Before I begin to talk about divorce and our legislation on divorce, I want to make a distinction on the subject of marriage. When we talk about marriage we are talking about one or both of two things. Marriage is a unique kind of institution in a society like ours, because it is, for most people, both a religious sacrament and a legal contract. As a religious sacrament, it is an institution involving a person's faith, convictions and ethics and morality. As a contract—as a secular institution—it is a legal entity.

We must and do accept the fact that most marriages are in effect two marriages—that most marriages are both a legal and a religious ceremony. Thus, when we speak in this Legislature of dissolving a marriage, of divorce, we are speaking only of the "legal" marriage and the civil rights arising out of this kind of marriage. The religious ceremony or sacrament is not affected by anything we may say or do here and I would emphasize most strongly that we have no right to interfere in any way with marriage in the religious sense, and no court has the right to interfere in this religious ceremony known as marriage. However, I do submit that this Legislature does have the right and the responsibility to examine "legal" marriage.

When my distinguished colleague, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Thompson), first raised in this House the idea that Ontario might take some initiative in re-examining existing legislation on divorce, he was greeted with remarks by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) which can only be interpreted to mean that the present government believes all responsibilities in this field lie in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, as we shall see in a moment from a quick review of the history of divorce legislation in this country, the hon. Prime Minister was, with all due respect, incorrect in his belief that initiative must come from Ottawa.

In Great Britain, the first Royal commission on divorce was appointed in 1850. The commission reported in 1853, and the first Matrimonial Causes Act was passed at Westminster in 1857. That Act was the basis for further English legislation of 1870 governing the dissolution of marriage. And that 1870 legislation, Mr. Speaker, was the model for The Divorce Act (Ontario), passed by Parliament in 1930.

Before 1930, no court in Ontario had jurisdiction to grant a divorce for any reason. Then, in 1930, our courts acquired the right to dissolve marriages on grounds arrived at in England in 1853. The province passed an Act in 1931—The Matrimonial Causes Act—which laid down the practices and procedures to be followed in Ontario for the federal legislation of the previous year.

Thus, by 1931, Ontario had reached the point England was at before 1870. And that is where we still are today. In the meantime, of course, the British have advanced from their 19th century position. Two more British Royal commissions—the Gorell commission in 1912 and the Morton commission in 1956—have re-examined marriage as a legal institution and have broadened understanding of the causes for the failure of marriage.

Essentially, our law today recognizes only two symptoms of the failure of marriage as being of sufficient importance to allow the dissolution of that legal marriage. The two symptoms—the two legally recognized grounds for divorce—are adultery and, on the part of the husband, sodomy or bestiality.

There is an observation I would like to make on this—an observation that is obvious and familiar to all of you. When the law recognizes only adultery as grounds for divorce then you will have—as we have in Ontario and have had for many years—a deliberate flouting of the law. In fact, in a great many cases, otherwise honest citizens find themselves forced into perjury themselves in order to obtain a divorce. Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that a law is a good law when people are forced to break another law in complying with it.

I mentioned the Gorell commission in the United Kingdom in 1912. This commission recommended that grounds for divorce should be extended to include:

1. Wilful desertion for three years and upwards.
2. Cruelty.
3. Incurable insanity, after five years' confinement.
4. Habitual drunkenness, found incurable after three years from the first order made.
5. Imprisonment under a commuted death sentence.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the progress in responsible thinking about divorce that was made in Great Britain 53 years ago.

In Ontario we have not yet reached the point which was reached in the United Kingdom half a century ago. Our thinking, and the legislation that embodies it, has not advanced from the point reached in 1870. I wonder if there is any other field of social legislation which has remained untouched for a century? I wonder if there is any other area in which we feel that solutions to social problems arrived at in the middle of the 19th century are still the sure guide to our actions today?

For our present practices with regard to the dissolution of marriage are certainly not adequate today. It is not necessary to explore the shocking facts of disrespect for the law on the part of persons seeking divorce. It is not even necessary to think about the unnecessary amount of human misery caused by our archaic legislation. A few simple facts will be sufficient to show that our laws are not adequate.

For example, it has been estimated that there are 500,000 Canadian men and women living together pretending to be man and wife. And the major reason why that figure is so high is the difficulty of obtaining a divorce. Of 40 common law couples recently studied by the school of social work at the University of Toronto, 38—note that, 38 out of 40—were faced with a legal bar to marriage. The conclusion from this startling fact is obvious. Our law, which was intended to preserve and strengthen the legal institution of marriage has exactly the contrary result. It forces thousands and thousands of our people to bypass and ignore that institution.

Another fact is significant. In Toronto right now there is an average backlog of almost 900 uncontested divorce cases on the waiting list of the courts. At the present rate of trying cases, this means a delay of eight months or more before a particular case is heard. My colleague, the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), has already made comments during this session about the backlog of cases in our courts. For the present, however, I merely want to point out that not only is our divorce law inadequate, but the administration of that law is inadequate as well.

Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that the hon. Prime Minister was mistaken if he felt that initiative in studying and changing our divorce laws must come from Ottawa. This is simply not so. And it is not so because tradition and practice in this country have made divorce legislation a matter primarily of provincial concern. Our Ontario law is substantially the same as that of the prairie provinces. But Nova Scotia law adds cruelty, impotence, and blood relationship to a prohibited degree to the grounds for divorce. And New Brunswick and P.E.I. recognize frigidity, impotence and blood relationship as grounds for divorce. And Newfoundland and Quebec, of course, have no divorce courts at all.

It is therefore apparent, Mr. Speaker, that with the variation in divorce laws throughout Canada we cannot expect Parliament to enact one divorce law for the whole country. Nor can we expect—nor would we want—the Parliament of Canada to take it upon itself to pass divorce laws for Ontario without our prior request. In short, it is we who must attempt to determine what is best for the people of Ontario and take steps to ensure that proper legislation is passed for the benefit of this province. Thus, if any changes are to be made, the initiative must come from us.

Now, there is one other aspect of this problem which I must bring to the attention of the House. Earlier I made the distinction between marriage as a religious sacrament and marriage as a civil institution, and I pointed out that we have no jurisdiction here over the sacrament of marriage.

There has been, in the past, a great deal of confusion over the attitude of religious denominations towards the dissolution of marriage. As far as I can see, all denominations have taken a stand and spelled out a position on the sacrament of marriage, and on the possibility of its dissolution under certain circumstances. Legislators have, in the past, believed all too often that what the churches said about marriage as a sacrament was identical with their attitudes towards marriage as a civil institution. This, I believe, more than any other single factor, lies behind our failure to improve our laws with regard to divorce.

But it is now plain, for all to see who care to look, that religious leaders of virtually all denominations do not wish to impose their particular view of marriage as a sacrament upon the civil institution of marriage. I could bludgeon this House with authority after authority, from virtually every religious denomination, but I shall let one such authority speak for all.

Richard, Cardinal Cushing of Boston, a distinguished and much respected prelate of the Roman Catholic church, said very recently:

Catholics do not need the support of civil law to be faithful to their own religious convictions and they do not seek to impose by law their moral values on other members of society.

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be plainer than this.

Cardinal Cushing was speaking of Catholics, but his words could stand for the views of virtually all enlightened religious leaders in the world today. They do not wish to impose the special beliefs of their denomination on others who may have other sets of beliefs.

I must emphasize this point. I must be specific. I suspect there are a great many

hon. members of this House who have not yet realized just how progressive the thinking of our religious leaders is today, just how far tolerance of a diversity of views has gone. The ecumenical movement is only one evidence of this welcome change. There are others. Cardinal Cushing was speaking for Roman Catholics when he said that good Catholics would not want to impose their beliefs on everyone.

I would like to share with you the views put forward recently by another denomination. In the most recent issue of the Presbyterian Record we find the following statements in an editorial:

The church recognizes that the divine intention is that marriage should be a lifetime partnership. Yet it also accepts the unhappy fact that we are sinful creatures, and that in some cases it is unwise to perpetuate a relationship that does not in fact exist.

Obviously, the Presbyterian views is different from that of the Roman Catholic Church.

But the point is simply this: No Roman Catholic would want to prevent a Presbyterian from obtaining a divorce if the Presbyterian's conscience and beliefs led him to take such a step. And, conversely, no Presbyterian would want to force a divorce upon a Roman Catholic if the Catholic's conscience and beliefs led him to reject divorce as a possible solution to marital problems.

Mr. Speaker, I am very hopeful that this House will adopt the resolution that I have placed before it. I expect this to happen because, quite frankly, I do not believe this House could be so out of touch with the present-day needs and wishes of the people of Ontario as to reject it.

Let me quote from editorials from three Toronto newspapers which, although they do not always see eye to eye on matters of public policy, nevertheless they have done so on this occasion.

The Toronto Daily Star has said:

If the Ontario government accepts Mr. Thompson's suggestion, there will be at least a chance that Ontario can lead the way toward civilized divorce laws for all of the provinces of Canada that desire it.

The Globe and Mail has said:

The current pressure from Ontario Liberals for a provincial initiative to bring about changes in divorce law is one which the government of the Premier, John Robarts, could surely yield gracefully. If the law ever did enjoy popular support in Ontario, it certainly does not now and every effort should be made to explore ways of changing it. Divorce law is one of the most depressing examples of laws which have fallen so far out of step with public feeling, that dishonourable ways of evading them are constantly sought and practised. Where adultery is the only way of escape, collusion and perjured evidence by desperate people seeking divorce are inevitable.

The Toronto Telegram has said:

Virtually the only ground for divorce in Canada is adultery. There are some minor local exceptions, but if a man or woman is declared incurably insane or sentenced to life imprisonment, the spouse remains married and there can be no reunion. The immediate goal of the Liberal resolution would be to add desertion, long-term imprisonment or confinement to mental hospital as grounds for divorce. This is reasonable and sensible.

Mr. Speaker, my resolution does not call for instant revolution in our divorce law; it simply calls for the beginning of discussions which could lead to a study of existing legislation and to revisions of legislation if, after careful study, it was apparent that the people of Ontario did want changes. I am confident that changes are desired and, as my resolution indicates, I believe that we should be very certain before we act. Then when we do act, we will find ourselves in step with the wishes of the people and not, as at present, decades and decades behind the wishes of the people.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge acceptance of my resolution by this House as the first major step toward a very desirable social goal.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. W. B. Lewis (Humber): Mr. Speaker, some of the comments I would like to make must be credited to the Right Honourable the Earl of Birkenhead who has made an intensive study on this subject and, after reading them, I thought they were worthy of note as part of my address this afternoon.

I should like to begin my comments on this resolution by discussing the implications that are inherent in the wording of the resolution before the House. In my opinion, the elected representatives of the people of Ontario assembled in this Legislature have a very clear responsibility to speak openly in the interests of their constituents in the matters of public concern. I do not feel that the existence of a constitution which divides jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government should, in any way, limit a duly elected member of this House in the expression of his opinion and views on any matters that affect the well-being of his constituents.

Nevertheless, there are obviously limitations imposed on the government of Ontario by The British North America Act. The government of this province must concern itself solely with those matters which lie within its jurisdiction. There are, of course, many areas where there is no clear dividing line between the responsibilities of the federal government and those of the province. In these areas the government of the province has the right and the duty to discuss and negotiate these matters with the federal government.

This is particularly true in the case of financial arrangements; but in areas where there is no question of the constitutional prerogatives of either the province or the federal government, the government of the province has, in my opinion, no right to negotiate, discuss or in any other way interfere with the legislative or administrative responsibilities of the federal government.

Having said that, there are a few thoughts on divorce which I should like to convey to this House. The problem of divorce leads to many differences of opinion; some of the most important of which are irreconcilable. There is, however, one point on which unanimity can be claimed and that is the existing law is anomalous and unsatisfactory. The view is held by many upright and sincere persons that marriage is, or ought to be, indissoluble. They honestly believe that indissolubility of marriage is enjoined by God and, further, that it is essential for the welfare of society.

A variant of this principle based upon the gospel of St. Matthew admits one exception—but one—the case of adultery, and adherents of this belief will not be satisfied by any accommodation or compromise. Any cause of divorce to one party, or any cause except adultery to the other, is absolutely indefensible. These persons cannot be convinced, consistent with their own faith; they must be overborne. For the former it is sufficient, perhaps, to bear in mind that their rule has been definitely rejected and that their reasoning has not been accepted by the vast majority of their fellow creatures.

To answer those who do admit the acceptance of adultery but oppose any extension, it is necessary, perhaps, to examine the principle in more detail. The history of divorce in this country is of the greatest importance. It is properly supposed that the monogamous marriage is based on the teaching of the Scriptures, but that is not so. The only specific reference to one wife only is the statement that a person who has more than one wife should not be made a bishop. In truth, the law of marriage is derived from many sources, mainly, the pagan law of Rome as purified and revised by Christian teaching. The canon law, as settled in the course of the Middle Ages did, undoubtedly, lay down two great principles: 1. that marriage must be monogamous; and 2. that if a marriage has been validly contracted it remains indissoluble while the parties are still alive.

It is to be regretted that the problem in Britain and in Canada, since our own Canadian law is based on the British law, has been complicated by the fact that matters both ecclesiastical and matrimonial were profoundly affected by the matrimonial eccentricities of Henry VIII. He popularly is said to have desired and obtained a divorce; but in truth he aimed at a declaration that his marriage was null on the grounds of affinity. Divorce puts an end to a marriage; a degree of nullity declares there never was a marriage.

History, however, has shown that in no period has a man of sufficient importance desired in vain to put an end to his union, merely because marriage was indissoluble and the authorities created by ecclesiastical law, to accommodate the unyielding principle of indissolubility to the relief just demanded, has constituted a veritable system of legal fiction whereby a marriage could be declared never to have been a marriage.

From the end of the 17th century, divorce in the sense of putting an end to an existing valid marriage was obtainable in Britain by the procedure of promoting a bill in Parliament founded upon the allegation and proof of adultery. This remedy, judicial in substance though legislative in form was, however, so costly that admittedly none but the wealthy could take recourse to this procedure. Nevertheless, the exercise of such a legislative power put an end in Britain to the principle that marriage was indissoluble.

The Matrimonial Causes Act of 1857 transferred divorce jurisdiction from Parliament to the courts, which meant that the remedy was no longer reserved to people of great means. As our law stands now, since it is based on this Act, a petition may be presented by a husband or wife praying for a dissolution on the ground that the other party has been guilty of adultery. This is beyond all doubt a recognition by our system of jurisprudence of the principle that marriage is not necessarily indissoluble.

There is, however, a broader principle on which divorce should be justified, for surely the true principle is that marriage ought to be dissoluble on any ground which establishes that in a particular case the fundamental purpose of marriage has been frustrated.

To insist upon the divine origin and nature of marriage in order to keep in existence unions which have ceased to have anything in common with real marriage but the shadow, and in the name of God to refuse redress to society and the individual, is to fall into the error of those who had to be reminded that the Sabbath was made for man.

The conception of marriage which insists on the union of flesh obscures the real issues. Further, by laying undue stress on the physical nature of marriage, it underrates and minimizes the spiritual side of marriage and leads to the curious result that the breach of the spiritual obligations of married life, the highest and most important of all, is rejected as a ground for divorce in favour of one which, admittedly sufficient to justify dissolution, is not on the same plane of morality.

From any point of view, religious or social, how can it be good when a marriage that has ceased to be in everything that really matters, shall remain in being simply because it so happens that adultery cannot be proved? It often happens that the proof is wanting merely through the want of means, and there it is a denial of justice to the poor merely because they are poor. The court must, while adultery is the ground to be alleged, insist that adultery shall be adequately proved where the person is normally domiciled.

It could not for a moment, for instance, listen to a poor woman who says: "My husband is in British Columbia. I am sure he is committing adultery, but my means prevent my obtaining the evidence." A person of means or position can be easily, though sometimes expensively, traced. If there is evidence, it is procured; for expense is not a bar in such a case. But it is for those who cannot afford the expense of ascertaining whether there is evidence, quite apart from producing it, that further relief is necessary.

Insistence upon adultery, and adultery only, as the ground to be proved, may and does, and in an increasing degree, produce the same state of affairs as if an Act of Parliament had to be obtained. The remedy is open to all if they can afford it. This defect cannot be remedied merely by reducing or abolishing the fees paid to the court. The main expense of legal proceedings is the cost of investigation and the production of evidence, and even if court and council and solicitor are all made free, the expense for a wife who has been deserted by a husband who has vanished, or in any similar case, remains prohibitive.

Broadly speaking, there are two points of view on the subject of divorce. One view is that of those who accept the principle that marriage should be dissoluble when the substratum has wholly disappeared; the other is that held by those who object to divorce for any reason whatsoever, and those who only admit adultery as the cause.

Between these two incompatibles there can be no compromise. One side or the other must prevail and the minority must submit, not because it is convinced of errors but because it is overborne by the majority. There is, naturally, no compulsion to seek divorce, however the law be framed. Those who object to divorce, whether it be altogether or only on certain grounds, need not seek redress unless they choose. The question is whether persons who would, if the law be altered, claim the relief given by the new provisions, are to be allowed to do so or prevented from obtaining a decree in circumstances which the existing laws deem insufficient.

The implication of this resolution now before the House would be to place the government of Ontario in the position of a supplicant before the House of Commons in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, this Legislature can debate the question of the divorce laws and the hon. members can express their opinions on this matter. This Legislature should not, however, ask the government to intervene on behalf of the people of Ontario with a Legislature in which the people of Ontario are represented by another group of elected representatives, who are responsible to the people of Ontario for legislation in the matter of divorce.

Mr. Speaker, of my own volition I have two or three letters here, on which I will not read the names or addresses of people, that may bring this subject clearly into view.

Dear Sir: I have a problem. I have been married 34 years, but for the last 20 years I have not lived with my husband or have been supported by him. Could I get a divorce on these grounds? I have met someone I feel I could live happily with. Would you kindly advise.

Dear Sir: I am very much interested in broadening the divorce laws in Canada. I for one am a victim. I have been living apart from my legal husband for 20 years hoping day by day, year by year, that something will be done soon. I am a Christian woman and my morals are high, but I also like to live a normal happy life. I think we, in such circumstances deserve a second chance. I do not think anyone wants a divorce unless it is impossible to live with someone, that life is impossible. I would like to see divorce granted after five years of separation.

Dear Sir: Sometime ago a business man in London had a long conversation with me in which he described the enormous cost of obtaining a divorce, which amounted in his case to $6,000, plus the cost of final settlement. He complained that this situation must lead to justice denied, in many instances where the person affected did not have this type of resources. I told him that I thought there was nothing that the provincial government could do about it, but I would draw the matter to your attention in case you are able to influence your associates in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I would say the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is a magnificent example of the Tory desire to be on both sides of the fence at the same time. He is in favour of the substance of the resolution, but against the principle of it, or something like that.

I suggest to him that there is no merit at all in his submission that, because this is predominantly a matter of federal jurisdiction, this House should not take any position on it at all, or alternatively, we should not request the government to initiate discussions with the federal government. I do not see why in this day and age of almost continuous federal-provincial conferences, it could be considered that the fact that one government initiates discussions with another puts it in the position of a supplicant. I do not believe that when Mr. Frost in 1957, I believe it was when he was the Prime Minister of Ontario, advocated that the federal government should assume financial responsibility in the field of hospital insurance, he was thereby becoming a supplicant vis-à-vis the government at Ottawa.

We live in what is now called an era of co-operative federalism, or perhaps joint federalism or consultative federalism would be a more accurate term. Whatever the term, I think the basic import is that this is an era in which fewer and fewer areas can be compartmentalized into one jurisdiction or the other, because most problems affect both jurisdictions.

Therefore, the proposal of the resolution that the government of this province should take the initiative, start the ball rolling in discussions with Ottawa, is in my opinion, a sound proposal and one that in no sense would put this province in the position of a supplicant.

The problem we face, of course, is a difficult one in many ways, not least of all because it has in the past, at any rate, aroused very strong emotions among the people of the community, and conflicting emotions at that. I think, as my hon. friend from Wellington South indicated, some of these strong emotional overtones that used to appear in the past in relation to this subject are now moderating and there is not the same unwillingness to compromise in the community. That being so, I think it is incumbent upon us to regard the matter in what I think is its true context, so far as we as legislators are concerned.

Divorce, of course, is a matter that has both religious overtones and civil overtones. Marriage, to many people—I suppose to the majority of the people in this province—is a religious sacrament. It is also a civil ceremony, carrying with it certain obligations enforceable under the civil law. I think that we, as legislators, can look at the matter only in the second aspect. It is not our function to interfere with religious liberty, and I believe that if we adopted the resolution of the hon. member for Wellington South we would not in any way be interfering in religious liberties. We would merely be facing up to our responsibilities as legislators in the civil field.

Looking at it from that point of view, I think the problem again has two aspects. On the one hand, it is a legal problem. I will not vie with the distinguished constitutional authorities who preceded me in this debate and attempt to outline the law and its history, even from the days of the New Testament. I will profess total incompetence in this field, and say as little about it as I can. I will say this much, however, that as far as I can see it is an extremely complicated and obscure field of the law.

On the other hand, the matter has important social overtones. It is a problem that really arises, as nearly all our problems arise, out of a social context. The difficulty that we are now in is that the obscure complex and difficult laws under which we operate bear very little relationship to the social aspects of the question as they now exist, and as they are now understood by the people. I think the hon. member for Wellington South made some reference to the fact that the law and the thinking on the matter is out of date. Well, I do not see how the thinking can be out of date. The thinking is as it is at any time. It is the law that is out of date, because it does not correspond with what I think is now the thinking of most people on this subject. It is time, as the resolution proposes, that we should make the law correspond to the social realities of a society of the second half of the 20th century, which it clearly does not at the present time.

We, in this party, support at least the objectives of the resolution. I do not think it is worth quibbling about words. The purpose of the resolution to us is supportable. It is an objective that has always been supported by our party, and the CCF which preceded the New Democratic Party. From the days of J. S. Woodsworth down to—shall we say—the days of Reid Scott, who is now a member of Parliament, our party has advocated a harmonization of the law with the social reality in this important area.

Failure to create that harmonization has resulted in two consequences, both of which in my opinion, are evil. One is that in some cases the inability to get divorce on grounds on which it should be granted leads to collusive arrangements through which the law is in effect evaded. The other is that the rigidity of the divorce law leads to common law relationships. And the problem with common law relationships is that the relationships of the two parties are not very clearly defined as far as the law is concerned. This often leads to grave injustice.

For example, I had a case come to my attention quite recently of a man who was killed in a traffic accident. He had, unbeknown to almost everyone except the parties immediately involved, been living in a common law relationship with a woman, and one that I would consider a stable relationship for about 20 years. The only reason he was living common law was that one of the parties was married in an indissoluble marriage, not only indissoluble religiously but also civilly. He and his common law wife had lived together as man and wife for 20 years. This man unfortunately had not anticipated death; he had not reached that age when people think very seriously about it. He had left no will and this woman had no rights at all.

Surely something should be done to rectify that. Even if we do not try to accomplish what the resolution wishes to accomplish, I think at least we should do something in our law to define the common law relationship and the rights of the parties in such a relationship. That at least is something that we can put right in this Legislature without any reference to Ottawa at all, and I think while we are waiting for action on the broader question of divorce we should do something about that in this House.

Another problem that I think we should consider, and one about which we may be able to do something in this House, was referred to by the hon. member for Humber, and that is the question of the cost of getting a divorce, even where there are grounds.

Our legal aid system simply does not touch this question. Where the divorce is being obtained collusively, as so many of them are, I would take it that the basic legal cost—apart altogether from any investigatory costs, which may not be very large if the arrangement is collusive—will be at least $1,000 and, in addition to that, there will be certain court costs. So the effect of that is that divorce under collusive arrangements—and divorce even where it is justified under the law as it now stands—becomes largely a privilege of the rich.

If a marriage has broken down and is irretrievable, the rich usually get a divorce and the poor live common law. There are a large number of people living common law—probably far more than the number who get divorces—because the poor, as we know, are more numerous than the rich. But this is the situation that now exists because of the obsolete laws in effect at the present time.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is one other phase of the matter of divorce that I think we should bear in mind when we are discussing this subject at this time. I believe that, traditionally, the term "divorce" referred to two different types of settlement—if I may use that word. There was what was called divorce from the chains of matrimony, which was a complete and absolute divorce; then there was, on the other hand, divorce from bed and board which, in the less picturesque and descriptive language of today, is usually referred to as "legal separation." But it is still a form of divorce, and if we are going to initiate discussions with Ottawa on the subject of divorce as I hope we will, I think we should raise the question of legal separation.

I think this is a matter for which a remedy could be found even more quickly than on the very complicated and hitherto controversial problem of divorce from the chains of matrimony. As I understand it, Ontario is the only province in Canada in which it is not possible to obtain a legal separation.

This is an historical accident and it is time that such a ridiculous anomaly were eliminated. I hate to see Ontario in an inferior position in relation to all the other provinces. The inability of a person to obtain a legal separation in this province, even when the state of the matrimonial relationship clearly indicates that it is desirable, sometimes leads to great injustices.

I would like to refer to another individual case that came to my attention not too long ago. This was the case of a woman with three children, whose husband is a chronic alcoholic; unfortunately under present arrangements in Ontario there is not too much that can be done for him—he is periodically confined to jail. When he is in jail the family leads a fairly peaceful and happy sort of existence, but this woman contacted me because the fatal day—and it is sad to have to call it that, but that is what it was for her—was drawing nigh when he would be released from jail. The entire domestic relationship that she was trying to maintain for the benefit of her children would be again upset; he would come back into the home and, on his previous record, he would be a thoroughly disruptive influence.

Now she cannot, under the law of Ontario, get a legal separation; she cannot, as I understand, deny him access to the home. He can come in and beat her up; if he does, she can probably charge him. He may threaten her, or she may be in fear that he will beat her up. She may have him bound over to keep the peace, but she is not protected in any of those situations. To have him bound over to keep the peace, when one considers the type of person involved and the problem he unfortunately has, is no protection for her at all. Surely in a case like this the only answer is a legal separation—a divorce from bed and board—if total divorce is not to be granted.

This woman was not seeking full divorce, she just wanted to have a separation. She wanted to have it established that she was lawfully entitled to live separately with her children. Everybody that I talked to, every lawyer I talked to, agreed that the sensible thing was legal separation. But there was no way of achieving that. Surely this grave anomaly in our law can be remedied as a first step toward a general reconsideration of the divorce laws as they affect the province at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that this group supports the resolution; we commend the hon. member for having brought it forth; we regret that at least some of the members on the Conservative side of the House are now taking, shall we say, a "hair-splitting" attitude toward it. They agree that it is good thing, but they do not think that we should do anything about it. We hope that this attitude will be overcome; that this House will in fact go on record as supporting the principle of the resolution and discussions will in fact be initiated between this government and the federal government on the subject. How else are we ever going to make any progress? If we all agree, but do nothing, no progress will ever be made. I suggest it is time we get on with the job.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Hear, hear.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, in a Manitoba case some few years ago a supreme court judge at that time indicated that there were two grounds for divorce—adultery and perjury. For those who did not like to commit adultery, he added, and were too honest to commit perjury, there was no relief.

Our law in this province on divorce almost causes our people to use the courts as a dupe. The adversary system is almost completely broken down since most divorce cases are undefended. Adultery often causes cases of blackmail in addition because of the moral implications involved. A wife often dares her husband to step out of line after having caught him in a surreptitious act of adultery. Adultery is also the easiest ground to fabricate. One can scarcely fabricate a long course of cruelty or insanity or desertion. The law at present requires adultery alone as a ground for any divorce proceedings. In some instances, the adultery is ancillary to other actions which might warrant the dissolution of the marriage. In others, however, it is a completely unrelated incident, and yet our laws suggest to the affronted party that a divorce should be sought because adultery is the only ground recognized.

In other situations, a husband could be an alcoholic or a wife-beater and cause his wife and family any amount of stress and sorrow, and yet the wife would have no course of action in the divorce courts.

Similarly, a husband could desert his wife and family and the wife would be obliged to trace him and ascertain whether adultery had in fact been committed. Surely the time has come when the federal government should take steps towards divorce reform. It makes sense that if a marriage has to all intents and purposes ended because of the desertion by the husband, or the insanity of one of the parties, that there should be legislation that would allow a divorce action to proceed.

It has also become a fact in our present society that divorce is often available only to the wealthier groups. A woman who has been deserted by her husband and has moved to another province or even another country, finds herself faced with a heavy financial burden if she is to undertake a divorce action. The amount required could range from $500 to $2,000 in certain circumstances.

If the woman had sufficient funds available for that purpose she might take those steps. However, as is more often the case, the amount is prohibitive and she is more inclined to forget the divorce action and use the funds at her disposal to bring up her family. Oftentimes this subsequently results in a common law relationship. A similar result occurs if the husband is jailed or committed to a mental institution.

The hon. member for Wellington South refers to difficulties caused on certain occasions by the law of domicile. Perhaps he is referring to a suggestion made by Mr. Elliott Pepper, formerly the Queen's proctor for our province, wherein he stated that perhaps domicile should be national rather than provincial. I cannot agree with his suggestion, since I feel it would be too great a change from the more universally accepted view with regard to domicile. However, on the other hand, I would not be averse to the suggestion that a wife could be given a domicile of her own. As the law presently stands, a woman who is deserted by her husband and the husband turns up, perhaps in British Columbia, the woman would be obliged to sue for divorce in British Columbia because that is the domicile of her husband.

I would comment critically on the phraseology used in the resolution referring to long-term imprisonment. I think this leaves a great deal to be desired and specific wording should replace it. I would suggest that a term of 10 years in prison could be one referred to if a man were convicted of such an offence and sentenced to 10 years in prison. This might not necessarily mean that he would spend the 10 years in prison; because of our present parole system but rather he might be in jail for perhaps four to five years.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of this debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Thursday, June 17, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Thursday, June 17, 1965

Estimates, Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Cecile, continued	4361
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4391

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Clerk of the House: The fifty-sixth order, House in committee of supply; Mr. N. Whitney in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE (continued)

On vote 1701:

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, to continue the statement where I had stopped at five o'clock this afternoon, I wish to say that the prospect of further provincial participation in the affairs of Indians has been under discussion with federal authorities for some time. These discussions led to a federal-provincial conference which was convened last fall. The Ontario delegates to this conference were the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) and myself, with senior officials from our two departments.

In effect, the conference was exploratory, to test provincial reactions to direct participation in the affairs of Indians and assumption by the provinces of some financial responsibility for their care. The proposal did not, however, outline satisfactorily the specific area of the provincial authority and it failed to identify specifically federal responsibility for off-reserve Indians.

People of Indian ancestry not registered with Indian authorities were excluded from benefits of the plan, as were certain registered Indians. It was agreed that the possibility of an extension of provincial services to Indians should be studied in each province to consider priorities in the broad field of social and economic development and with a view to concluding agreements acceptable to the Indians and to the federal and provincial governments. Discussions have been taking place between officials of the governments of Ontario and Canada regarding the further extension of provincial welfare services and extension of community development to Indians.

These discussions have established a consensus as to the manner in which this could be done and on the nature of the agreements that would enable such provincial services to be extended to Indians. However, further progress must await discussions between the federal government and the federal-Ontario Indian advisory council, which comprises Indians representing bands from all parts of the province. This step is in accord with the federal government's policy of requiring that proposed major changes in the method of providing services to Indians must be considered by this council so that both governments may have the benefit of the council's advice and have an opportunity to consider suggestions or recommendations that may emanate from the council.

In short, while there has been a large measure of agreement reached between Ontario and Canada as to how this province's welfare and community development services could be extended to the Indian if it is the desire of the Indian bands of Ontario to receive such services on their reserves, I feel it would be improper for me to elaborate further until the Indian advisory council has been brought into the picture and the members of the council have had time to consider the implications of the discussions that have been taking place.

Within the Ontario government certain steps have been taken with the view to establishing a co-ordinated policy for Indian affairs. In January of this year, a Cabinet committee on Indians was created under my chairmanship. Other members of this committee include the hon. Ministers of Education, Health (Mr. Dymond), Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner), Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) and the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). Attached to this group is an executive committee of senior civil servants who are directed to review existing programmes and co-ordinate the activities of all departments of government that can render a service where Indians are concerned.

The three basic policy decisions that have now been made and which are not affected in any way by negotiations now under way with the federal government are:

1. The province will ensure that the programmes carried out by the various departments are co-ordinated and that they meet with the approval of the Indians themselves. It is therefore the intention of the government to consult with the Indian advisory council.

2. To ensure the maximum benefits of any provincial plan, Indians must be employed by the government to carry out this programme. The government therefore intends to develop specialized training programmes for Indians to meet current and future needs.

3. A federal-provincial co-ordinating committee on Indians has been appointed, four members from Ontario and four from Ottawa. The committee is composed of senior civil servants representing the four major departments of government primarily involved with programmes designed specifically to assist Indians; that is, Public Welfare, Education, Economics and Development and Lands and Forests. The chairman of this committee will report directly to me and will be responsible for the programmes of development among Ontario Indians.

The advantage of this arrangement is that the federal-provincial committee will be enabled to advise both governments as to the needs of the Indians. It will also report on the appropriate administrative machinery necessary to carry out the programme.

As of now, all provincial departments engaged in rendering services to Indians are required to co-ordinate these activities with the Cabinet co-ordinating committee. The hon. members can be assured of our sincere concern for the problems of these people and that we are moving as rapidly as possible towards a comprehensive plan for their development.

I may add, Mr. Chairman, that we have been negotiating with the Ottawa government, especially with the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, Mr. Nicholson, who, I must say, has taken hold of the matter very well, and we are progressing very favourably. As a matter of fact there has already been an exchange of draft agreements between the two governments. As late as June 9 I have a letter addressed to me by Mr. Nicholson which I think would be worth reading, Mr. Chairman, in which he states:

Dear Mr. Cecile:

I am pleased to hear of the excellent progress being made by members of our respective governments in reaching agreements on the extension of welfare and community development programmes to Indians.

Agreement formats are being cleared at present with our legal and financial people and will be sent to you shortly for further consideration.

In the interim, I am informed that it may be necessary for you to begin preliminary work in community development with Indian people living on provincial Crown lands immediately. I understand that these Indians live off reserves and that they are unorganized and it would be desirable to include them in any development projects that are introduced now.

The question raised by your people in a recent telephone conversation with my officials was whether these off-reserve Indians could be covered later by general community development agreement when we are ready to sign it. The federal cost-sharing proposals in community development are intended to meet the needs of any group of registered Indians living in Ontario to whom the province wishes to extend its development programme.

The federal government is now accepting project submissions from several provinces which set out the scope and cost of community development work in specific geographic areas. Under our present authority we are able to consider such project submissions before more general and all-embracing agreements in community developments are signed. If you wish, you may want to prepare such a submission with off-reserve Indians to enable you to get an early start in development work with these particular groups.

If these submissions are consistent with the general framework of the federal government as proposed and which has been reviewed with your officials you can expect to recover a share of the cost of this work from this department. When a general agreement in the community development is signed later such projects would be merely incorporated into such an agreement.

This is what has been going on, and we have been working very progressively. We hope that very soon a formal agreement will be signed to take care of all these programmes, and I am assured that the meetings the federal people have had with their own Indian councils have been progressing very well, too, and I can say the same thing as far as we are concerned. So we are really on the road to progress.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I have listened since I have been in this Legislature to the hopes and the complacency of the hon. Minister of Public Welfare about Indians, in fact about the whole gamut of his organization. I may say it is all very well to read some communication you have had with Ottawa about community development. We have pointed out to you consistently what they are doing in Manitoba, for one. You talk of yourself as the great avant garde in human betterment.

As far as I am concerned, the only area that we read about is when we hear from the Toronto Telegram, a paper which is usually fairly receptive to you, about the shocking conditions of Indians who have left a reserve and then suddenly, with an hysteria that seems to be part of government when any crisis is exposed by newspapers, you move in a bit.

Frankly, listening to the dry, parchment-like approach of the hon. Minister's readings of some communication from Ottawa, and telling us that we should be satisfied and he hopes things will develop—I am tired of hopes when we think of a minority group in our society which we know has one of the highest mortality rates with respect to child-birth, for example, Kenora. I notice that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) was very quick, when I referred in my Budget speech to the Kenora area. He turned to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and said, this is because of the Indian population.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Is that the speech you read? Are you criticizing us for the speech we are reading?

Mr. Thompson: I am not criticizing him for reading his speech, because otherwise I would spend more of my time criticizing each Cabinet Minister, including yourself, sir.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, you said the dry speech he read.

Mr. Thompson: I am talking about the contents of it, not about the fact he read it.

I would have hoped that by now the hon. Minister would be telling us that he had done something for the Indians. I would hope that the hon. Minister would be talking about the fact that CMHC, as they have in Manitoba, has taken a new approach to housing. Or in connection with the training of Indians, that he could stand up and tell us with some pride: "This is our accomplishment."

But year after year, since I have been in this House, this hon. Minister has stood up and I must say, speaking personally, no one has a higher regard for the dignity, the warmth and the personality of the hon. Minister as a person, but as the Minister of Public Welfare, as far as I am concerned, he is a failure. I do not know if it is the hon. Minister's fault or not, but I say—

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Well, as far as we are concerned, you are a failure! That proves nothing.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I say you are a failure because you look at this area of people, and this is what counts, what has been done for people. This is the barometer of a civilized society. What has been done for the Indian?

We now learn that there are going to be further negotiations with Ottawa. In Manitoba they talk about community development. Within their provincial department, they have had a community development programme. To you this is something like talking of astronauts. It is away up in the moon or something.

You are going to arrive at it slowly. You are making negotiations with Ottawa. I think you have got to do better than that. I hope that there will be a day when the hon. Minister of Public Welfare stands up and tells us what he has done, rather than what he hopes to do. In the case of the Indians, I agree that there has been an unimaginative approach through the years from the department in Ottawa, and I do not care which government it was. But they are honest, according to the commission of Indian affairs in the United States, who wrote on the Indians of America.

Mr. White: They are a complete failure in that area.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I will not go to that extent and say it has been a complete failure. I am not talking about today.

Mr. White: Professor William Morris has quit your party because of the inadequacies of the Liberal Indian policy.

Mr. Thompson: Well, there have been some others. I happen to have studied the Indian question across the country, and I would say it is an indictment on the government, no matter Conservative or Liberal. You want to be more partisan and say it is just Liberal. Well, that is your concern.

Mr. White: No, but Professor Morris left—

Mr. Thompson: I am not interested in Professor Morris. I suggest to you as a lecturer—perhaps you have been raised to a professor at the university now—you are an erudite fellow. I suggest you do a little more reading in this area, with all respect.

But I suggest that no government, I do not care which they were, has been imaginative in this approach. But on the provincial level, there is also an area of responsibility, and as you go out west to Saskatchewan—the hon. Prime Minister hates the word Saskatchewan—

An hon. member: He does not think so.

Mr. Thompson: If he went out to see what they have done with the Métis; the advances they have made with the minority groups with co-operatives; of trying to have priests and others work with Indians, it is an awfully inspiring thing. We talk about a peace corps going over to underdeveloped countries!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We do not. It is your group in Ottawa.

Mr. Thompson: All right. Well, I wish you would talk about a peace corps in connection with community development of the people who have left reserves—

Mr. White: If you had listened to Professor Morris—

Mr. Chairman: Order, order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. The Whip surely must exemplify an attitude of respect and dignity towards the House.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, somehow he seems to have lost the sense of decorum I thought he had. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for calling the House back to the dignity which we always assume it should have.

A peace corps with a minority group who have left the reserves would be an awfully challenging thing. The hon. Prime Minister says this is something Rt. hon. Mr. Pearson suggested.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Chairman. In order to set the record straight, I was thinking that it might be a little more attractive if we developed something of our own, instead of borrowing from our neighbours to the south, and I am referring to the federal government, of course.

Mr. Thompson: May I say that unfortunately in Ontario we never have anything attractive, so we have to borrow from the south. If you could give the example—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: All right. What have you got? We have just got through with the hon. Minister of Health about our mental institutions—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Why, then, do they come up from the United States?

Mr. Thompson: They go back again when they look at the Victorian age that you have developed. You and your adulation of Lord Bennett, or Viscount Bennett, or something. Let me say this, there is a challenge—

Hon. Mr. Dymond: He looked at the crystal ball.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot get all these interjections.

Interjections from hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Let me simply say this, that there is a challenge to young Canadians where we see there are pockets of poverty, or missed opportunity, and the hon. Minister of Public Welfare should be inspiring people, young graduates from universities and from other areas. I do not say borrow from the United States with a peace corps, but you could have some other original name for it.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): The Company of Young Canadians.

Mr. Thompson: The Company of Young Canadians—a very excellent suggestion. I may say that it was suggested by my hon. friend from Brant before. Let us have some imagination and leadership. All the hon. Minister of Public Welfare offered us when we asked him what he was doing about community development, was to read correspondence. I am not interested in correspondence any more; I am interested in achievement and in what you are doing. That is all I want to make. I want this government to stand up at some time and tell us of the challenging things they are doing with minority groups to help them to raise themselves, rather than your correspondence with Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, my only answer to the hon. leader of the Opposition, and I am sure he is sincere, is that you just cannot deal with Indians like my hon. friend from Brant who spoke a moment ago—you cannot impose anything on them. They are most difficult to compel to do anything. They have to come into the picture. I think Ottawa has been doing this and so have we, and the matter is now entering a period of fruition.

This correspondence is certainly not useless. It has now come to the point where we shall have a firm agreement with Ottawa, not only in welfare services as I know them, but also in economics and development and housing and education and all the aspects of social services. This has to be done on that federal-provincial level. I am sure all the provinces who were attending the conference agreed with that principle, and I think that the government at Ottawa wants to do this as well as we want to. But at the same time you just cannot rush into such a thing, and you have to be very careful about this. I think some of the developments that we have had at Minaki, at Red Lake especially, and at Batchawana and such places, are proof that it can be done. On that basis, I think we will have a firm agreement within the next month or so which will start this community development rolling.

As a matter of fact there have been studies made and we intend to start a project early this year at Moosonee. This is certainly a place where we will see what we can accomplish with community development. I understand there are in that area 5,000 Indians who will be dealt with. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I cannot make any prediction, all I can hope, when we see what has happened in smaller areas, is that this larger plan will be a success.

This has been a co-ordinated effort. I do not think that we have been wasting our time. I appreciate the words of the hon. leader of the Opposition, but I can assure him that is just where we are going now. I think the correspondence has been very useful, and I might say this: I am not a man who likes to deal with matters swinging from one course to another according to the political situation. I think that Mr. Nicholson has been one of the better Ministers we have had in that department in Ottawa, and I think he has done a good job. We are going to go along with him in this and he has assured us—or so I judge from the tenor of conversation with him—that this agreement will be carried out.

Mr. R. M. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word about this Indian problem, because I know a great number of them myself and I do not think that any of us can hold our head up and be too boastful of what has been accomplished for the Indian population of Canada. The main blame for this should be with the federal government of years gone past. I do not think, no matter what political party was in power in Ottawa, that it has been too successful. There are so many problems, and the hon. Minister certainly has my appreciation of the difficulties under which he works.

I think one, Mr. Minister, is this. The average Indian in the province of Ontario is afraid of the government of Ontario for this reason; Not because you happen to be there, but because of the fact that ever since Confederation they have dealt primarily with the federal government at Ottawa and they have a natural tendency not to want other government bodies in their particular jurisdictions. No one appreciates more than I the fact that provincial governments should move in on Indian problems more than they have. They have not always been welcome, but I think that they should try to liaison with them and become a little more friendly; not that you do not wish to be friendly yourself, but to get them to reciprocate.

Now, how you would do this I am not prepared to say, but I think you should try to sell yourself. A few moments ago you said that Indians will not be pushed around and that you cannot impose your will on them, but the one thing that you could do is give them a selling job on the many advantages that can be derived by the many reservations in the province of Ontario from the various departments in your particular Department of Public Welfare.

After all, there is little similarity between the Indians in British Columbia and the Indians in Alberta and those on reservations in southern Ontario. Then we have the problem of the many Indians who have left the reservation.

I suggest that you have three distinct areas: One, Indians such as those in Moosonee and the outlying districts; two, others in reservations such as the one in Brantford or Cape Croker, Chippewa Hill in my own area; and three, Indians who have left the reservations altogether.

Each of them have their own individual problems. Many of the leaders of the Indians have left the reservations. This is one of the problems, and consequently some of those who are left behind are not too anxious to give the leadership needed on their particular reservations.

I suggest, Mr. Minister, that you should not be afraid to go and see these people yourself, and have officials of the department travel around and tell the various councils of the opportunities your department will provide. Tell them that you are most willing to co-operate, because in my own experience in talking to them I have found that they are not too willing to have the provincial government move in when the great white father—even though he has been a very poor one in my estimation—namely, the federal government in Ottawa, is still their father in their opinion. They are not too anxious to have other departments of government under provincial jurisdiction move in.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, one word about this vote.

I am quite interested in this problem of the Indians, but it seems to me that one of the great weaknesses is that those who are on the reservation would be much better off if they were moved from some of the reservations they are on, some of them the worst land in the country. The government gave them land that was no good for agriculture whatever.

I think these areas should be changed to sections where there are stretches of good land to which they could be transported if they are interested in agriculture. It is absolutely impossible to make a living from the rocky terrain on which some of them are now living. All hon. members know of this, and those who have seen the Indian reservations are astounded at the beneficence of the federal government of the past which gave them this type of land for their reservations.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on another item on this, and I think it would probably come under The Charitable Institutions Act.

This is in connection with unmarried mothers. I suppose the barometer of any government, and of any civilized society, is the compassion with which it looks after the babies that are born, whether they are legitimate or illegitimate. I assume that the writings of Charles Dickens aroused the conscience of the English-speaking world in the 19th century to the mother who would go through the snow and the blizzard and put her baby in a basket before a church and hope that someone would look after it. Of course, today we have a more positive role by government and the assumption, from the recent Act, that the Minister of Public Welfare is the person who sees that no child is abandoned. We have had legislation to see that there is no stigma attached to the child no matter what the background of the parents and so on.

However, I was interested to talk to some of the directors of children's aid societies and others, and I have permission to use their names in a discussion that I will present to the House here. One of the people was Mr. Gardner of the children's aid society. I am talking about the services for unmarried mothers. He suggests first that the requests for services continue to increase, and yet we have more limitations because of lack of funds and facilities.

He emphasized very strongly the great need for maternity homes and said there was a great shortage of foster homes in the community. By that I mean a girl who becomes pregnant and wants to leave her community, will work as a domestic or something else because there are just not other places for her to go. Another point is that babies have to remain in the hospitals because there are no homes for them. Another thing, which I frankly did not know, was that babies are covered for ten days on medical insurance, only for ten days, on well-baby care.

I raise this question to the hon. Minister and after I have finished I hope he will answer this: The mother has to pay for the baby after the ten days and until a home is found.

Mr. Gardner of the children's aid society says there is a real backlog, a permanent backlog; they just cannot catch up in this. He says that their real limitations are in terms of money; there is no money for foster homes; there is no money for advertising about foster homes—for recruitment and for study to locate the right kind of homes for these babies.

He suggests that the costs of services to unmarried mothers is carried largely by voluntary grants. Then he comes to the point that there are very few mothers, unmarried mothers, who are able to carry the financial burden; yet she has to attempt to carry the burden of the cost of the maternity home and of the baby. About one in three are able to keep their babies and he suggests that, in many cases, the children's aid societies would like to encourage the mother to keep the baby; she wants to, she has the maternal longing to raise her baby, but it is financially impossible. If there was more financial assistance, this would be possible for the mother.

It is the financial situation that causes this separation of the mother and her baby. There are no co-ordinated day nurseries in this community. I remember last year raising, with the hon. Minister, the idea of trying to get married nurses back to hospitals; and asking him how he selects where there should be day nurseries. I got a very vague answer from him that it seemed to me it was political pressure or some other thing that decided where you would have day nurseries, and there is not a clear-cut idea of whether you agree with day nurseries.

Then the second question is that there are many married couples where both man and wife are working because of economic pressure, but there are not day nurseries for them. I am not sure what the government's policy is on this. I agree that you are not going to have day nurseries in Forest Hill or some other wealthy community so that the wives can go out and curl, or whatever they do. But on the other hand there are mothers who, of the financial necessity to keep the home going, have to get out and work. I am thinking of unmarried mothers who would want to keep a child, but there are no day nurseries for them. I will not go into this aspect of the emotional disservice to a mother of having to part with a child.

In Toronto, of the mostly private day nurseries, there are a few that are operated by the municipality. Could I raise this in the second question to the hon. Minister? Perhaps, and I pray his indulgence, he might be good enough to answer me. My question is about the need for day nurseries operated by the provincial government.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Might I ask my hon. friend if I could answer that question under the heading of "Day Nurseries"?

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1701:

Mr. Thompson: I am still continuing on this. On the question of whether illegitimacy is increasing; and some may make the point that if we give help to the unmarried mother, we are really trying to encourage more illegitimacy. Again I quote from Mr. Gardner of the children's aid society, where he says that, from the background studies that have been done, it is not increasing in view of the population; there is a slight increase, but it is not anything that is out of all proportion and that the mores and the morale of society have not been completely disrupted.

He argues about social workers, the fact of the pressures on them within his own society from a mixed load, the turnover because of this pressure and the need for more trained staff; and these are quasi-government operations, the children's aid societies. The salaries need to be increased; he said they cannot get the funds from the local community and the provincial government gives very little toward the care of the unwed mother.

I asked about the numbers of homes for unwed mothers. There is a Rosalea Hall, which I am sure the hon. Minister is aware of. It is a Catholic home for unwed mothers and has 30 beds. Apparently it has an enormously long waiting list. We talked to the Mother Superior, or the Sister who is in charge of the home, and she told us she hated to answer the phone because she is so short of room. She said there are girls who have to wait month after month before they can get into this home; often they do not apply soon enough and they become emergency cases.

Frankly, from the conversation on the phone from the person who had phoned for me, it sounded like there was real desperation with the number of young girls who are coming into the city of Toronto with this situation of pregnancy and nowhere to turn to. This Catholic home for unwed mothers just cannot accommodate all of them. Apparently it phones all the other homes in Toronto for referrals, only to find they are all booked up as well. Since January this year there have been 75 girls apply.

They have now decided to tighten up a lot in the home. They have a very tough, as well as a very efficient, administrative set-up. The girl who comes into the city now has to be referred by her priest and she has to write out an application form, she has to have a signed medical form, and then she will be accepted. Of course they have to be well in advance before they will even be considered. That is the Catholic home for unwed mothers. In talking to them it was a plea of desperation, a plea of enormous pressure and an inability to fulfil the need of looking after the unwed mother.

The Anglican home for unwed mothers, Homewood Home, has 26 beds; ten double and six single. They try to have the girls there ten to twelve weeks before birth and they provide some after-care. Last year they had 142 girls. They turned down, and I want to emphasize this, this one home turned down 250 girls. They are completely booked up until the end of July and they have bookings for August and September. Now what is the province doing in all this situation? After all, the children that are born are going to be citizens of Ontario. The province per diem grant is $4 per day for those who cannot afford it, and only for those girls who have a year's residence in Ontario. In 1964, in this Anglican home for unwed mothers, the total budget was $48,587. The provincial grant was $9,723.

The other was the Salvation Army home for unwed mothers, which has 30 beds. Only in the seventh month are pregnant cases allowed to come in to it. School girls are allowed to come in on their fifth month. There were 225 last year; some 25 were referred to other homes. Operating costs were $34,000 last year. At this point they are booked up until August.

The Salvation Army home for unwed mothers in Hamilton has 23 beds; stipulation—you have to be seven months pregnant. There were 160 girls last year; 87 so far this year. It has refused 20 so far this year. Per diem grants; they pay up to 25 per cent.

United Church home for unwed mothers, the Victor Home, has 27 girls. They are taken in during their seventh month, except in an emergency. At least 200 girls have been turned down since January—it could be at least 300—but they say it is definitely 200. They are booked up until September. The provincial grants per diem rate for unpaid bills add up to about $10,000 out of a total operating cost of $50,000. Church funds have to pay the rest.

There are no provincial homes for unwed mothers in Ontario. The only assistance that the provincial government gives is through grants and, as I have listed here, they are far from sufficient. There are only six homes in the city of Toronto, and they are all sponsored by religious groups.

I would like the hon. Minister to listen to these facts. The Salvation Army alone turned away 181 girls so far this year. Where do these girls go? Are we living in Dickens' time? What happens to these girls in an Ontario which has as its clarion call "human betterment"; what happens to the child? The 181 girls last year turned away from the Salvation Army. As of now the Salvation Army is booked up till mid-September. Because of lack of space, they cannot take the girls until their seventh month; they have only 20 beds, and there is no provision for after-care. However, in serious cases the Army attempts to assist them until they can find a job. They ask the girls to pay if they can afford it but of course there are some who cannot pay any money towards their upkeep.

What should be done? What can be done? Well, I suggest if this government really had a sensitivity towards the welfare of its people, that it would be thinking of the children, whether they are born out of wedlock or not. And I think there should be co-ordination between the welfare, the health and the education departments. The detachment of a child physically should be undertaken in family counselling centres, grouping together all the necessary specialists and services for guidance and treatment. And we have hit at this matter steadily.

The government had Bessie Touzel do some experiments and write briefs on the needs for preventive services, and for family counselling; and year after year, since I have been in this House, we ask what are you doing about it. Always you are considerate in your answers; always you are very gentlemanly, but we do not get the concrete facts about preventive service around this province.

We turn towards the hon. Minister of Education. He is not quite as polite as far as the local school boards go and so on; he decides he is going to do something and he does it. You keep saying you are moving step by step on the problem; I am talking about the problem of mixed-up kids—girls who get into trouble. Part of the problem is through lack of family counselling and as yet you have no uniform family counselling throughout this province. We need specialists and services for guidance and treatment.

Adoptions should be encouraged, but half these doors are closed to the unwed mother who comes into Toronto. I quoted a number of the homes where they have turned away as many as 160 to 200 people.

In Holland—and I know the hon. Minister resents it when we refer to other countries, and he should resent it because by comparison he looks awfully petty—in Holland, the strength of the personnel can be expressed in the number of children that one staff member has to look after. It varies from 3.7 to 20.6.

In Denmark, the preventive measures are based on the principle that removal of the child is the final resort. And let me say that principle is not found in The Ontario Child Welfare Act; the assumption is that the mother should be separated from the child and get the child out for adoption, and you do that through your supported services as well. I am still not convinced. And I will be eager to hear from the hon. Minister whether he believes in day nurseries. If he believes in it, he is not taking much action to develop it.

Take Denmark for example, and I am talking about child welfare in Denmark. I know this has been discussed but I want to get it on the record so that it can be a comparison with what is done in Ontario. For children up to the age of 14—I am talking about child welfare—they have educational homes for short-term placement, they have educational homes for long-term placement, they have educational homes for short-term placement of children with behaviour problems, educational homes for long-term placement for children with behaviour difficulties—including the mentally retarded, educational homes for children with behaviour problems that require more differentiated psychopaediatric treatment than may be provided for.

I could go on with that at some length—but I would like to say to the hon. Minister that it is quite obvious—as it must be to him—that voluntary agencies and religious organizations, which we have to commend for their wonderful charity in providing for the unwed mothers, have tried to keep pace with this and to do a job. But I am sure that it must hurt them enormously, for example, when a Sister of a Catholic order has to turn girls away. She must think what an uncivilized, inhuman society we have that we cannot provide more for these girls. And I am sure that the hon. Minister must himself be awfully sensitive to this. I have been quoting the fact that the institutions we have are not sufficient and that girls are being turned away, and I quoted the figure of 160 and so on, and I ask the hon. Minister, what is he going to do about it? After all, this is the responsibility of the province. I say to the hon. Minister, what is he going to do about this? For these are the facts of the situation.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I suppose this is one of those cases in which, regardless of what is done, it is very difficult to achieve perfection. I do not intend to presume that everything can be done. But at the same time, I hope my hon. friend does not think I am responsible for all the illegitimacy that appears in the province, although I am pleased to say that according to statistics, Ontario has the lowest rate on the continent, which speaks well, I presume, for our young people.

As the hon. member knows full well, there is an Act—The Charitable Institutions Act, which he has mentioned, and which is available to any group of people who wish to enter this field. It is available to them as far as construction grants or other grants, and I am advised that the grant is now at a maximum of $4 per day as regards maintenance. But when The Children's Institutions Act comes into force there will be an improvement.

The hon. leader of the Opposition mentioned that these particular homes have refused a lot of these girls because of shortage of space. I might say also that many of these girls live in homes with families up to the time of the birth of the baby. I presume it might be more satisfactory if they could live in a home of that description, where there is not the general care of an institution, but the love and care of the family itself. I suppose in one way that this might be more of a deterrent to future occasions than if they lived in an institution where possibly they do not receive the same kind of treatment.

How to answer that fully, whether you can deal with this problem in a definite way so as to cure this situation that my hon. friend has described—and I know how sincerely he does this—would be a very difficult thing to answer. But I still maintain, Mr. Chairman, I still maintain that there is a definite responsibility, not only for the government, but also for the people of this province generally. Because this is a problem that touches the very roots of our way of living.

I do not know if I would like the idea of solving this on the same basis as all other programmes in this particular respect because I think that a mother has placed herself in the situation. But if it is a case of wanting help, then I think that the people generally in the community have a duty to look after her, just as well as the government has. We must not deal with the situation as if it were a deterrent but only in order to help. If there are not enough of these institutions then I would suggest that I would ask the people of Ontario and the different municipalities if they could form these helping organizations, and I am sure there are many who would be interested. I am sure the speech of the hon. leader of the Opposition will have its impact on this situation if we have not got enough of these homes.

We are quite willing to help organizations along and, as I stated, there is The Charitable Institutions Act. It is available for all groups of people who want to take advantage of it. As far as the subsidy is concerned, which is a maximum now of $4 a day, I note here that we range from $3.06 a day up to in some cases $8 a day. I understand that under the new Child Welfare Act there are new rules outlined for the particular purpose of dealing with children born out of wedlock. I suppose lots of unwed mothers from rural areas come to the larger centres, to larger cities. That was one of the reasons that at the time we thought it proper following the recommendation of the committee that sat for two years, that we revise the new Act. They recommended that we should take over the full cost of these children, and I think it was proper to do so.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister did away with the rest of this requirement.

Previously I understood the municipality would be charged.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister did away with this and I congratulate him on that. I think that was a beacon concept.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I appreciate, with my friend, the hon. leader of the Opposition, that that is a problem, and I suppose it was a problem from the beginning of time and it will be forever. If it was possible to arrive at an average of what would happen in a year in this respect I suppose we could set our sights that way, but I do not suppose it would be possible to arrive at any precise figure in that particular respect.

We know how many people reach the age of 60, 70 or 80, or pretty close to it, but this is something we do not know anything about and it would be very difficult to deal with. I am quite sure that the people who are dealing with this particular problem are doing the best they can. Maybe there are not enough, but I am sure, after hearing my hon. friend—and we know this, too—there are not enough of these homes.

The only thing I can say now, Mr. Chairman, and be sincere with myself, is to encourage more people to enter into this field of endeavour and also maybe touch the conscience of the people themselves in the different municipalities. I hope to say something further as the votes go along in the matter of day nurseries and also preventive services. I can appreciate that this may be a slow process, but when you deal with human beings that may be expected. I have had talks with the child welfare league of America and others along this line, but you cannot rush such developments. You do not institutionalize matters of this kind.

Without saying that you play it by ear, you also have to bear in mind this is the responsibility of you and me as citizens of a municipality, of a province, and also as members of this House. It is a joint responsibility, I believe, in that particular sense, and I can assure my hon. friend that I do not think we have been lax in this.

Possibly, as in every other thing, we would like to provide more, but at the same time we have to deal with all the programmes. The apple is just so large and we have to deal with it according to priority. We have to work to the best of our ability and along with the people who are in the field. At the same time we are always willing and ready to improve. If that means an amendment has to be made in The Charitable Institutions Act along the lines of The Children's Institutions Act to change the subsidy as regards the maintenance factor, then we would be quite willing to look at this and deal with it in the proper sense that it should be dealt with. I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition that we have never refused to aid, as far as I know, any organization entering this field, and I hope that my words, along with his words, will be an encouragement along that line.

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions to ask on this vote. The first is on the question of staff of this department. If I understood correctly, the hon. Minister told us this afternoon that there were 80 persons on staff with university degrees. I would like to find out from the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, how many of those university graduates hold the title of MSW or BSW in the department.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if I could just intervene at this moment. The question is an excellent one, and I do not want to deflect it, but I want to know how we are going to handle this estimate. We have been discussing children under the first vote. Where do we discuss staff? How is it properly divided? How closely are we going to hold to, or are we going to roam in, this first vote?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It would be carried on as the vote came along, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. S. Lewis: Where would you discuss staff, at least the numbers of graduates, and so on?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That would be under 1705.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine.

Mr. Racine: Well, Mr. Chairman, then I shall ask a question about that under 1705. I would like to make a comment or two on the grant, item No. 11 in 1701. Two of the grants particularly interest me. One is to the Canadian welfare council and the other is to the Ontario welfare council. Both those grants are the same this year as they were last year—$17,000 apiece. Would it be presumptuous on my part to ask the Minister how these amounts are arrived at? Do they follow the formula that both of those organizations recommend to determine the contribution of each province in this respect?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The Canadian welfare council grant used to be based on population —$3 per thousand population. The Ontario welfare council was an organization which was for provincial charter and composed of interprovincial federated groups who are interested in public welfare. Their grant, I believe, at one time was much lower than $17,000 and we felt that when we raised it to $17,000, the other one was reduced accordingly. We are not using the basis of $3 per thousand population because we felt that if there was one that should be encouraged it was the Ontario council. This might be arbitrary perhaps. We were working in closer co-ordination with the Ontario welfare council than with the Canadian welfare council and we saw no reason why we should give less to one than to the other. At one time, I know that the formula across Canada, as I understand it, was $3 per thousand population. But much has changed in Canadian welfare.

Mr. Racine: I would like to thank the Minister for his answer. I have not the figures here, but I believe that Ontario and possibly another province are the only two that do not follow the formula. I have been told that there were some negotiations between officers of the Canadian welfare council and the department with a view to raising the grant to the amount that would come up to the formula, and I think this would be somewhere around possibly $21,000.

Now, if I may just say a word or two, Mr. Chairman, about the work of the Canadian welfare council, I would like to mention that we could make a lot more use of the facilities of this organization. As a matter of fact the federal government has recognized the capacity to do that kind of work by the Canadian welfare council and has given many jobs to this organization. I think, perhaps The Department of Public Welfare and the hon. Minister could find tremendous advantages in working much more closely with the Canadian welfare council. It has some of the best trained people in the field in Canada, and I am sure that many of the problems that they encounter daily could be solved by the proper use of this organization.

Mr. R. J. Harris (Beaches): Mr. Chairman, for a few moments I would like to touch on that portion of the hon. Minister's responsibility which relates to the senior citizens of our society. In doing so I realize that the suggestion which I wish to place before him affects not only his department but The Department of Municipal Affairs and the hon.

Provincial Treasurer. However, it relates to the welfare of the aged and his department is the one where primary consideration should be given.

My suggestion, sir, is this: Persons over 65, residing in their own homes, be permitted to apply for and receive a deferment of their municipal taxes until termination of their ownership by sale or by death of the owner, or in case of joint or common ownership, by the death of both owners; and that these taxes, which would otherwise be payable, be collected by the municipality, or by the province, following termination of ownership in much the same way as tax arrears are collected.

Now I say "or the province," because it may well be that the burden of financing these deferred payments should be lifted from the municipality to the province.

Mr. Chairman, may I be the first to say that this suggestion involves no sweeping act of public largesse, the province will receive payments of its tax loans and it will cost the municipality nothing. There is obviously no means or needs test involved. It is simply a mechanism for helping a particular group of our older people who might find it of value.

As a first step, the hon. Minister of Public Welfare and his research people should assess whether there would be enough older people to warrant its execution.

Certainly in the area of Beaches, which it is my privilege to represent, I know there are a very large number of married senior citizens owning their own homes who all of their lives have been very thrifty, hard-working citizens. However today, because of a small income plus old age pensions, they just cannot maintain their homes and pay the necessary taxes, maintenance, and all the other necessary living expenses. It is only a matter of time, in many of these cases, until their home is lost.

We all know, Mr. Chairman, that the Senate of Canada has been studying aging, and this Legislature's committee on aging is occupied with that subject at this time. Throughout this province and country many groups of the public at large are increasingly directing their attention to the situation of our older citizen. Out of all this many new and comprehensive programmes will evolve. However, in the meantime, I would be grateful if the hon. Minister and his department would assess the value of this suggestion with respect to deferred taxes.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the older people who would be helped would not be those who have squandered their lives. They are couples who have successfully borne the burdens of two world wars and of one great depression. So as far as I am concerned then, sir, I would not require evidence that a vast number of people would benefit to convince me that this proposal should be accepted. Simply to know that some of the older couples would be helped to live on in their own home for some years longer, would be enough to make me feel that this suggestion is worthy of acceptance.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Would the hon. Minister give an opinion on that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, this matter is now before the select committee on aging, so we will wait for that.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, sometimes that type of committee is handy to pigeon-hole things that should not be pigeon-holed.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think the members of the committee are, in themselves, a guarantee against that happening.

Mr. Trotter: I am one of the members of the committee I know, but that does not give an excuse to delay things.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question on grants as to new and acquired buildings. I am always happy to see a vote made, and in this case it is on item 12 of vote 1701, $6,535,000, which is a nice figure to see. The trouble is it never looks as good as it appears, because when you go back into the public accounts ending March 31, 1964, we see that previously we voted a slightly larger sum and had $2,738,000 unexpended. I would like to say something on that, but first I would like to ask the Minister why did we previously vote over $6.5 million and leave nearly $3 million unexpended?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It is there for the people if they wish to make application to do the construction work. If they do not complete the stages of construction within the fiscal year the money remains unexpended.

Mr. Trotter: These grants, as I understand it, are dependent upon whether or not some community can raise the funds and therefore get grants from the province. Well, now, here is the situation.

You heard the hon. leader of the Opposition talking about the lack of proper space for unwed mothers. Obviously there is a great need for new buildings throughout the province and it is obvious also, as you look at the tax base—and this affects so many items in the government of Ontario—as you look at the tax base of municipalities, these municipalities in many cases simply cannot afford to start new projects. They do not have the funds.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, these are for a private organization!

Mr. Trotter: Whether it be a private organization—again you can see the trouble at the sick children's hospital in trying to raise funds from the public. The economy of the country seems such that whether it be for municipalities or private funds the money is just not available, so that you are going to have this unexpended amount remain from year to year. All it amounts to, really, when you allocate a sum of $6,535,000, is window dressing.

In fact, I think the hon. Minister of Public Welfare should win the title of window dresser of the year, because that amount cannot possibly be spent from what we know is available at the present time. Surely your experts in this field know that that money will not be used as things are now, because usually we know by prior announcement that a building for the aged, or a structure under The Charitable Institutions Act, is going to go up. We have some idea of how many are going up, and obviously, a year ago or two years ago, when this money was voted, you either deliberately overestimated or just did not know what was going on.

Mr. Chairman, here is nearly $3 million that the government felt it could have spent and felt was available, and yet it just was not used for the purposes for which it could have been used. So again I want to protest through you, Mr. Chairman, to this House, that, glad as I am to see the money voted, I deplore the fact that almost half of it is not used for the purpose that it is really needed for. The truth of the matter is that the province is going to have to take more and more of an economic responsibility for constructing some of these homes whether it comes under The Charitable Institutions Act, or The Children's Institutions Act.

The Department of Public Welfare is going to have to face up to the fact that where it has 100 per cent constitutional responsibility, it is going to come very close to having 100 per cent financial responsibility, and this unexpended amount in the public accounts report is evidence in black and white that the municipalities and private charities are no longer in a position to take advantage of the so-called grants that have been offered. They are being offered something they cannot use and The Department of Public Welfare knows they cannot use it. It is just window dressing as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, as the House well knows there are two funds that provide assistance to needy veterans of World War I: the soldiers' aid commission and the Ontario canteen fund. There is also another fund from a private source, the Elizabeth Hammond fund, which is only for widows of World War I veterans. Since the number of widows that would be eligible for that fund are dwindling, and there is a fair amount in the fund, are negotiations being undertaken, or is the possibility being considered of making the widows of World War II who might be in straitened circumstances, eligible? Have any negotiations been carried on, with the trustees?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, Mr. Chairman, there have been some negotiations and some study, as you know. Some of these matters will have to go before a court of law to get an order. Personally, I would like to see all these moneys handed over to the Canadian Legion to deal with along with the projects they have now, although under the terms of the will of the late Kathleen Hammond, this cannot be accomplished unless we get an order from the court. This matter has been under study and I hope some day that it can be changed, because I think possibly that a better job can be done with that money, which is accumulating more than diminishing, and which should be used for many purposes. Under the terms of the will, the funds are accumulating as you say, and something will have to be done.

Mr. Troy: I am sure if Mrs. Hammond were alive that she would agree that this would be a very worthy position to take.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, there is an assortment of grants here among the miscellaneous grants going to various universities. I notice $10,000 to University of Toronto school of social work, and $10,000 to St. Patrick's college, Ottawa and then another $10,000 to St. Patrick's college-Ottawa school of social welfare building fund. I am curious as to why some of these seem to be scattered through this estimate, rather than in The Department of University Affairs. Are they for special projects that relate directly to welfare? I wonder if the hon. Minister would answer this.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes. You will note that the St. Patrick's school and the Toronto school of social work, each receive $10,000 for general purposes. Then there is also an additional grant, if you notice, to St. Patrick's school for their building fund. We instituted this payment about six years ago, in recognition of the special needs of this school. Their facilities have been strained to capacity to accommodate more students, in order to relieve the great shortage of social workers. It was evident that a new building was required, yet the college had few financial resources and the school received nothing from any other department of government. As you know, before the passage of the bill that was in committee today, regarding The University of Ottawa, it would be hard, Mr. Chairman, to say this was a completely legal grant; maybe I would not be telling you the exact truth.

Mr. MacDonald: Is this now going towards part of the new university?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, that is right. I understand the new school will be a separate two storey building, costing over $300,000 and it is to be paid through a 20-year mortgage, costing about $23,000 yearly. The $10,000 grant was of material help in getting the construction underway.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, under item No. 12 where the hon. Minister gives, among other things, a grant to the homes for retarded children. Would he consider giving a similar grant for a home for emotionally disturbed children? For example, we know there is a great shortage for the care of emotionally disturbed children and I think it has been kicked around from the health to public welfare department, etcetera, but there are many children who are more of a welfare problem, than they are a health problem. There is an association I know, which is fairly active in Toronto—the association for emotionally disturbed children; they must raise all their funds for a school for these children. Could you not consider helping them, because they now have to go out and raise money on their own, and they would be eligible for grants if there was a law?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, it is available under The Children's Institutions Act.

Mr. Trotter: Under the children's institutions? They do not get it.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, but they have been getting what was allowed before. There was a stated amount, but now, as of this moment, the bill that was passed in committee of the whole House today, has only to receive Royal assent and we will be able to deal with the people you have in mind. A grant of $5,000 per bed for construction and the 75 per cent gross cost for maintenance will be paid from that time on.

Mr. Trotter: 75 per cent of the gross cost will be paid, and will they have any grant for operating costs? The gross cost including the building and all?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right. The full cost of the building up to a maximum of $5,000 per bed.

Mr. Racine: I would like to ask the hon. Minister one more question on this vote. I notice that for 1964-65, there was the sum of $75,000 allocated for grants and bursaries re training. That is item No. 8, 1701. I notice that this amount has been reduced for 1965-66 to $70,000. Now I understood that there was a great demand for social workers and that the department really wanted to do something to encourage young people to follow this profession, so I think perhaps that this reduction of $5,000 requires an explanation on the part of the hon. Minister; item number 8 on 1701.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That would be item 9, would it not?

Mr. Racine: Item 9. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is under "Grants and bursaries re training."

Mr. Chairman, the main expenditure under this item is for bursaries for students attending the University of Toronto school of social work, the St. Patrick's college school of social welfare and the welfare services course at the Ryerson polytechnical institute.

Three years ago we increased greatly the number of bursaries to students at schools of social work who would commit themselves to work in public welfare. Formerly we had offered five or six each year. In 1963, we granted 27; in 1964, we offered 36 and 34 were accepted; in 1964 we also granted 17 more bursaries to persons on the Ryerson course. We gave educational leave with pay to four other staff members, which makes a total of 55 bursaries to support students throughout the academic year of 1964-65.

The total cost of these bursaries for the current fiscal year will be an expenditure of approximately $114,451; costs for the coming fiscal year will be larger, estimated at $140,000. The federal government is expected to share 45 per cent of that amount, hence the present item for $70,000 in the estimates.

Vote 1701 agreed to.

On vote 1702:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, before we get into the substance of this vote, I have a reasonably serious matter to raise in this House. Several weeks ago, Mr. Chairman, I put an order requesting the tabling of correspondence on the order paper of this Legislature relating to four senior civil servants who had resigned from the department or from the child welfare branch of The Department of Public Welfare between June and October of 1964. The only person mentioned at that point was Mr. Douglas Gardner, whose name has already been brought into this debate earlier this evening by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I admit that considerable time has passed since the resignation of that group of people, but I suspect the reasons for their resignations continue to prevail. Although I would not pretend to pass judgment on the collective reason, or indeed on the reasons of any other than Mr. Gardner himself, I think that certainly his case, if no other, is exceedingly dramatic and important on the floor of this House.

The hon. Minister, for whatever reason, saw fit to disregard the request for tabling of correspondence. However, I feel that such tabling is necessarily—and I do not say this in an immoderate or unduly animated way—a reflection of the malaise which besets The Department of Public Welfare as a department.

I have received permission from Mr. Douglas Gardner, former child welfare supervisor in the child welfare branch, to read into the record tonight his letters—I use the plural—of resignation. I wish to do so because they are moderate letters; they are thoughtful letters; they are sensitive letters; and they are important letters. Mr. Gardner—as I will go on to show when I have read them into the record—is one of the most esteemed people in the child welfare field in the entire province of Ontario.

His first letter, dated peculiarly enough, exactly one year ago to this day, was sent to Mr. James S. Band, Deputy Minister, The Department of Public Welfare, Government Buildings, Toronto, Ontario:

Dear Mr. Band:

It is only after long and careful thought, and with considerable regret, that I have made the decision to resign from The Department of Public Welfare.

Because of my investment of time and effort in nearly 11 years of service within the department, I feel my reasons for reaching this difficult decision should be made perfectly clear in order that my leave-taking might not be misunderstood, or misinterpreted.

Having been optimistic for a number of years and hopeful of desired change, I find I no longer have confidence in the organization and administration of the department as a whole which, in my opinion, has not developed over the years either policy or sound plans in keeping with contemporary knowledge of social work, the needs of people and the efficient administration of services.

While I have seen much growth and change within the department and the development of some excellent legislation, I am concerned that the attitudes and methods of administration often impede rather than facilitate an improved quality of service to people.

In my view, responsibility is not delegated appropriately nor does the organization as created and used over the years allow orthodox communication, productive co-ordination of effort and the careful planning and assessment required if welfare services in Ontario are to make the best use of qualified personnel and current knowledge and techniques from the field.

The rather superficial recognition given by the department to the profession of social work allows for little or no impact in terms of policy formulation and performance or influence on the quality of service. I am not convinced that the department really understands or accepts social work and the contribution it can make to public welfare, administration and service.

However, I still believe, with real conviction that public welfare at the provincial level can and should provide one of the most stimulating and exciting experiences for the professional social worker.

In all my assignments with the department in the past ten years, I have attempted, to the utmost of my ability and in keeping with the ethics of my profession, to carry out the responsibilities assigned to me in the interests of provincial service.

Mr. Gardner then makes reference to a holiday schedule and ends: "Yours sincerely, Douglas Gardner, child welfare supervisor."

There followed a letter to Mr. D. J. Collins, chairman, civil service commission, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario. This was a week later:

Dear Mr. Collins:

Because of our discussion nearly two years ago regarding my concern for The Department of Public Welfare and the role and responsibility of the professional person within the department, I am taking the liberty of sending you a copy of my letter of resignation to Mr. James S. Band, Deputy Minister of the department, in which I have worked since November, 1953.

In addition to being a child welfare supervisor in the child welfare branch, I have been for the past three years, executive secretary to the Minister's advisory committee on child welfare. Mr. C. J. Foster, former chairman of the civil service commission, was committee chairman and we have worked very closely together during this period. The committee recently completed its work and the final report has been presented to the Minister. In August I will assume the responsibilities of a branch director with the children's aid society of Metropolitan Toronto.

I am distressed on leaving the civil service and The Department of Public Welfare after nearly 11 years service in a very broad work experience. As I mentioned to you previously and as I have tried to indicate in my resignation, provincial public welfare holds enormous challenge for me professionally. I would willingly and gladly continue to cope, provided I had respect for, and confidence in, the administration of the department, but I have such concern about what is, in my view, a lack of principle and integrity in the administration of the department that I can no longer remain associated with it.

I believe the problems within the department are serious, so serious that the recruitment and retention of competent and qualified staff will remain a problem and Ontario will fall further behind other provinces in the provision and administration of effective and efficient services based on sound professional principles and attitudes. I do not believe the situation will change for the better without some sort of protest and intervention. My resignation is my formal protest.

Yours sincerely,

Douglas Gardner,

Child Welfare Supervisor.

Mr. Chairman, I think those letters are telling documents and I think that Mr. Gardner is a courageous man. I want to take a moment to tell this House just who Mr. Gardner is.

He has been associated with The Department of Public Welfare, as he said, for 11 years. He was made executive director of the Minister's advisory committee on child welfare. In other words, he was considered perhaps to be the most competent person in the province of Ontario to be secretary to the most important committee on child welfare that this province has ever formed. As executive secretary he obviously played a major role in drafting The Child Welfare Act, that Act which just went through this House.

In his years with The Department of Public Welfare he served in a variety of branches, was in a very large way responsible for the drafting of the excellent homemakers legislation, has been in other areas of equal importance and capacity. He is to my knowledge one of the most esteemed members in the entire child welfare field. I cannot emphasize that strongly enough. There is not a person to whom I have spoken who does not regard Douglas Gardner as a leading member in this entire area of social work experience. He is, if I may put it this way, solid Deputy Minister material in some branch of government and we cannot afford to lose such men.

Mr. Gardner now, as befitting his status in the field, is branch director, Toronto branch of the metropolitan children's aid society, in which position he supervises somewhere between 150 and 200 people directly in the field concerned with child welfare.

Mr. Chairman, I simply say this: I am not going to take exceptional issue over it, I think it is a very sad and yet illuminating thing when men of the capacity of Douglas Gardner feel moved to leave the department for the reasons enunciated.

He did not leave so long ago. Let me emphasize that his criticisms are not criticisms of the child welfare branch; that is obvious. Indeed, in the minds of everyone I have spoken to, the director of that branch is regarded with respect and affection. Mr. Gardner's criticisms are criticisms of the department, of the administration of the department, of its attitude to social work, of its philosophy, of the manner in which it conducts its programme, of the level on which it operates its services, and the relationship in which it stands to other provinces in this country.

I suggest to you, sir, that altogether we have here an unusual former civil servant, unusual in the sense that he put his views, finally, born of a certain desperate frustration, on paper. They are not his views alone.

They may be the only openly expressed views, although if the hon. Minister would have the grace to table at least one other letter of resignation amongst the four people involved, I think he would find that there was at least another who held a similar view. But I shall not press him on that, because I do not think it is necessary to press the others. Certainly Mr. Gardner is eminent enough and worthy enough an individual to stand and to make the case.

It underlines, Mr. Chairman, just to bring this to a close, a feeling of concern which has worried members of the Opposition—for at least my short term of two years in this House—worried us profoundly. There seems to be something profoundly wrong at the core of this department in the animation of its staff and their feeling for the work and the goals it could achieve and the objectives it might reach.

Child welfare supervisors are not easily found. Mr. Gardner is a child welfare supervisor who looked after, at one point, over 40 children's aid societies in the province of Ontario. A more responsible job you might not possibly find. Similarly with some of the others who have found it, for whatever reasons, necessary to leave. These are responsible people, these are indispensable people, these are people with enormous integrity. The words mirrored in this letter, I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, stand as a reflection of other views and other attitudes. I think it important that at least the observations made in this letter and the feelings expressed in the letter somehow move the hon. Minister to revamp his philosophy and revise his administration, and indeed to rebuild his department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, there is a great French Canadian novel which is entitled Un de perdu; deux de retrouvés. Where we have lost two men we have gained seven, and two more are coming in as of July 1. The letter, as I stated, I suppose was a sincere one; but it was just one man's opinion.

As I say, we have gained, or we will be gaining, where we lost four. I should also say that another gentleman by the name of Mr. Lumsden wrote along the same lines as this gentleman. I have not brought forth this matter before, because for some reason or another I am a man who has been quite a long while in this world and knows people—I hope I do—and can dissect people and possibly know how they think and what they do.

There was one reason on which I would not elaborate further. The two gentlemen were living together and they worked together. More I would not like to say in this matter, except possibly to read the memorandum to me from Mr. Band in this particular respect after the motion was put through. I think Mr. Band, as far as I am concerned, has a lot of experience with employees and has seen them come and go. This is what he relates to me:

This relates to four employees who resigned from the child welfare branch in the year 1964. Mr. B. Gardner was a child welfare supervisor and also served as secretary to the advisory committee on child welfare during its period of study and review of the legislation and the child welfare programme in Ontario. He accepted a position with the children's aid society in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. R. Lumsden was also a child welfare supervisor and accepted employment with the department of education of the city of Toronto. Both gentlemen indicated that the policies of the department were not in keeping with their views of social work practices. It is considered that they have expressed personal views in relation to their own positions within the child welfare branch. Their opinions in this respect do not coincide with those of the other professional staff in the department. I should say that Mr. Gardner's services on behalf of the advisory committee were found to be capable. Indeed I am sorry that both these men did not remain to assist with the implementation of the new child welfare programme.

Miss C. Johnson served the branch as a supervisor of children's institutions. She received an offer of employment from the York department of education and accepted the position at a higher salary. In this case there was no comment in the resignation.

Miss M. Oomes was employed as a child welfare supervisor on a probationary basis for a period of about seven months. She then left to join the children's aid society of Metropolitan Toronto. Again there was no comment on the resignation.

The professional staff of the branch has increased this year and the services of these additional persons are proving to be of an excellent quality. Further additions to child welfare personnel are anticipated in the near future. I am assured by the director of child welfare, and agree, that the morale of the child welfare branch is at a high level. It is evident that the staff are operating as an efficient and satisfactory unit. The offices of the branch were moved to the east block where the personnel are now in closer touch with the rest of the department.

I should add by way of further comment that the professional staff within the department, social workers and others, have full scope in carrying out their work to personal satisfaction and professional fulfilment.

I am enclosing a statement which gives statistical data on the staff of the department, as well as those in the child welfare branch and you will note that resignations have indeed been small in relation to the total staff in each case.

This I have related before in my comments made before the House. So again I say, Mr. Chairman—and I am not making any comment one way or another—the gentlemen in question did not work well with the people inside and they gave their personal views. I do not doubt the sincerity of their views, but it does not mean that their views actually describe a situation within the department as the hon. member would like to leave the impression. I do not think it has.

I might say this, in referring back to the novel I was speaking about a moment ago: Where we have lost two, we have gained seven.

Mr. S. Lewis: Four, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Where we have lost four, the other two—

Mr. Trotter: This sounds like a hockey trade, not The Department of Public Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It might be a good trade at that!

Mr. Chairman, the reason I have not mentioned this and produced the letters before was first of all that I did not have permission, as my hon. friend has, from Mr. Gardner. At the same time, I do not like to deal with any personal views that one might have in respect to anybody who has worked in my department. I would be the last one in the world who would speak of them publicly in the fear that I might be the cause of hurting them for any employment they might seek any other place.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I take no serious exception to what the hon. Minister says. I respect what he has said. I, too, made certain I had Mr. Gardner's full permission before reading these particular letters. I simply point out to him, and I think it is important that this House recognizes it, that however well the branch of child welfare has functioned over the last five or six years, it has functioned with two, three or four child welfare supervisors where there should have been between 12 and 15. This figure of 12 to 15 is corroborated in the advisory committee report to the hon. Minister, and in every estimate of a properly supervised case load that is known. In other words, for whatever reason, in the most important and vital field of child welfare, we have been seriously and sadly undermanned.

I do not say that words are necessarily invincible. I think the observations and the reflections offered in the letter are very serious, and I think the esteem in which the department held Mr. Gardner is a reflection of their seriousness. You do not give a man that much responsibility and importance in a department of government without obviously holding him in very high regard for a period of some 11 years. And whatever the hon. Minister might have meant by his other than pleasing aside, merely to say that perhaps things did not work well in the department is not a sufficient explanation.

I would be happy, as he is, not to dissect the individual. But the idea seems to me to be important, and a branch which has been undernourished and understaffed for so many years is also important. A branch which now pretends to supervise an enlarged Child Welfare Act and a Children's Institutions Act with anything under 15 full-time child welfare supervisors cannot possibly function adequately. Equally, it cannot lose people as important as these men, without suffering serious loss.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the hon. members in this Legislature know what supervising means. The hon. members probably think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the hon. members may well feel that supervising children's aid societies and children's institutions mainly involves going to the institutions, assessing their work environment, helping them formulate their budgets and giving them some kind of direction and supervision. It means that, Mr. Chairman; but it also means a great deal more. It means sitting down with all the boards of governors in various communities, it means sitting down with all the elected municipal officials, it means sitting down with all the working committees as part of that municipality and as branches of that board of governors. It means, in other words, a tremendous spectrum of activity far beyond the mere supervision of individual societies or institutions. In other words, it means a work load which, I suggest, in this branch requires a minimum of 15 graduate social workers. Now, 15 is a minimal number, it is probable that the job could not be done even with 15.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we cannot have this kind of shift. I appreciate the hon. Minister's French aphorisms, I know the novel of which he speaks, I—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The hon. member should read it in the original, in English it is not good.

Mr. S. Lewis: The only thing that the hon. Minister and I have ever struggled through in the original is Simone de Beauvoir, and I do not intend to try any other. But I will say that these things are not brought to the attention of this House to incur the mocking shouts of disarray, but to point out that if this branch and this department is to function effectively, it has to give the appearance of better functioning. I think as these estimates go on it can be demonstrated that that has not always been true, and Mr. Gardner demonstrated that in his letter.

Vote 1702 agreed to.

On vote 1703:

Mr. S. Lewis: May I ask just one or two brief questions about 1702?

An hon. member: It has been carried.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, can we not have this chatter stopped by those who apparently are not interested other than interrupting the procedure of the debate?

An hon. member: If you do not like it, you know what you can do. You do not have to sit here.

Mr. MacDonald: If I do not like it I know what I can do, Mr. Chairman, I can match it, but—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I have no objection if the hon. member wants to ask a question on the vote. I do not know why his hon. leader is objecting.

Mr. MacDonald: I will explain why. There are four or five people here just chattering all the time. They do not like the revelations that the hon. member has put on the record.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Chairman, in connection with this, I would like to explain that I hope that under our free enterprise system, if a man wants to discontinue employment after 10 or 11 years in a department, he may do so. I have even known members of the NDP who discontinue. I have known members of the press who changed from the Toronto Daily Star to the Telegram, and from the Telegram to the Globe and Mail. When we have 35,000 to 40,000 employees in the Ontario provincial government, who may wish to switch into other departments or other places of employment, there is nothing to prevent them, and I, for one, would not attempt to.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, when a man leaves and gives his reason in quite rational fashion, I do not think it is appropriate that his former boss should get up and, in a mildly slanderous way, throw doubts—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Just go back and read what the hon. Minister says.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I will not pursue this, but I refer to the veiled aside, and it does the hon. Minister's honour no good, or his reputation. We had an exchange which could have been conducted in honourable terms, it need not have been denigrated.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: What did I say that was dishonourable?

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. Minister made reference to a man which had no relevance to the matter under discussion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister said he would leave it there with suspicion to grow without any explanation. I suggest either he should not have made those statements, or he should have said what he meant, if he knows.

Mr. Chairman: Discussion on this particular section is concluded.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I would beg the chair's indulgence. I took my seat because I thought that someone else would rise. I would like to ask some other questions on the vote which are not relevant to what we have been discussing.

Mr. Chairman, earlier in this session we passed The Children's Institutions Act which gives certain amounts of money for per diem costs and construction costs. I want to ask the hon. Minister whether he has any intention of differentiating on the per diem rates for the various schedules involved, the per diem rates on the one hand, let us say, to Warrendale, and on the other hand to Loyal True Blue and Orange. I take the extremes.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Seventy-five per cent of the gross cost, wherever they are.

Mr. S. Lewis: Seventy-five per cent of the gross cost, whatever they are across the—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Wherever they are.

Mr. S. Lewis: And has the hon. Minister worked out any basic formula for computing these gross costs which can be applied to the institutions without engaging in an unhappy exchange over what is relevant and what is not?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think so.

Mr. S. Lewis: And you do not anticipate any further difficulty then, in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, I would have never had any difficulty if we could have had good accounting all the way. That is the only thing. Maybe it was our fault, maybe it was their fault, maybe the board's fault. This is something that I am not sure, but I have to account for what I spend to the auditors of the province, and that is why there were delays sometimes in these particular areas. It was because the accounting was not something which could be proven as such.

Mr. S. Lewis: As a matter of fact, Mr. Minister, you have a very valid point. I will not argue with you on accounting procedures. I would simply make this point though. If there is some area of dispute in the accounting procedures, it seems to me inadequate that the entire sum should be denied while we arbitrate over one small facet of it. If you could possibly pay the areas which are mutually agreed upon, and withhold those other smaller areas for arbitration, it would not hurt the institutions involved so profoundly. An institution like Warrendale—there may well be a difference of opinion over accounting procedures; but for an institution to be behind $40,000 or $50,000 seems unnecessary, if you could at least pay them the agreed-upon portion.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I might advise my hon. friend that I agree with him and I have given that order. This will be done.

Mr. S. Lewis: And I admire its spirit. I commend the hon. Minister.

Mr. Chairman, on 1703, I wish to ask the hon. Minister about his policy in regard to day nurseries in this department. His annual report shows that the growth in the number of day nurseries has not been exactly overwhelming. I fear that in the day nursery branch, as in the child welfare branch, the fundamental problem is that we do not have enough people at the centre energetically prosecuting the cause of day nurseries; and because there is so much resistance in one municipality after another to the idea, it takes a fairly high powered and persuasive staff to sell the concept of day nurseries.

Now, I would be interested to hear from the hon. Minister how many people he has in the field for the more than 900 municipalities in the province of Ontario. I would also be interested to hear about specific experiments to be extended into other areas.

His annual report, if I recall, makes reference to the day nursery wing in the Riverdale hospital, which brought 40 nurses back into the active pursuit of their profession. I wish the hon. Minister had somehow conveyed this idea to the hon. Minister of Health.

For a considerable time we on this side of the House have said that, if you want to make up your nursing shortage, then provide day nursery facilities for your nurses in wings of hospitals and allow them the opportunity to return to active work. For whatever reason, that has not been done across the province and the nursing shortage persists. In the one area where it has been tried it has been most successful.

So I ask the hon. Minister first, as to the extent of the staff in the development of day nurseries generally; and second in the day nursery hospital wing expansion that may or may not be contemplated.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, during 1964—I would like to mention this as we go along—a total of 398 day nurseries were supervised at one time or another by this branch of the department. During the year, 50 new nurseries opened and 41 closed, for one reason or another, giving an overall increase of nine day nurseries.

The staff of the day nurseries branch visit as many areas of the province as possible to promote the development of these needed services. We feel the initiative, rightly or wrongly, in the long run must come from local groups and authorities. The director and four supervisors we have in this service do a great deal in this regard, and we also issue a great deal of advice and other literature to aid local groups.

During the recent months I am happy to report the number of inquiries from local municipalities are gaining and we are doing all we can to stimulate their interest and channel it into concrete action. One of the features, as I have mentioned, is the branch concentration to promote day nurseries adjacent to certain places of employment. That was proven very satisfactory. This was accomplished in September 1964.

I would say that the following areas are where public nurseries are most needed, representing the area that is now Metro Toronto. For instance, I am sure that North York, Etobicoke, Scarborough, Windsor, Chatham, Brantford and Hamilton would be places where they would be very necessary.

Did my hon. friend ask me also the qualifications? I do not recall.

Mr. S. Lewis: No, I was particularly—well let us take it one at a time. What will you do to bring a day nursery to Scarborough? That is a municipality with which I am faintly associated. In this municipality, under the aegis of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, you have a very excellent low rental housing project—Warden Woods. Several score units; presenting a desperate need for day nursery facilities.

You could not possibly find a better opportunity to set up a day nursery environment, and so the mothers in the low rental housing get together and they bring the formidable array of figures and needs before the Scarborough municipal council. The Scarborough municipal council, in its worldly wisdom, sniffs its nose at them and tells them to run on their merry way. They end up with whatever small sort of co-operative, make-shift mechanism they can provide. Now how do you persuade a municipality to do the job, unless in the day nursery branch you provide sufficient personnel to go side by side with the groups interested, make the representations to the various municipal bodies and put pressure on them from the provincial centre?

With the tremendous number of working mothers in this society, Mr. Chairman, we have a social responsibility. It is simply not enough to lapse back into the old mystique about the place of the woman in the world, that old mystique that so bedevilled the equality of the sexes. If you are going to have working women, then you have a sense of social and moral responsibility. You have a sense of responsibility to the children involved. So you have to obviously exercise some leadership, and just as there has never been any hint of local initiative in the field of adequate low cost housing, so there is not any hint of local initiative in the field of day nurseries, or indeed of homemakers services.

Those are two areas in this department sorely lacking. Now we are now talking about day nurseries and I would like to know what are you going to do in Etobicoke. What are you going to do in Scarborough? Representations have been made. Some of us have endeavoured to do so. Parent groups have come, but never through the department, because the branch simply does not have the personnel to do the job. I tell you that it is profoundly wrong. You do not run society that way, with the needs that these people have.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, Mr. Chairman, the only thing I can see is to continue to press them to try to be involved; because if other municipalities can, I see no reason why they cannot. Now if the local municipality does not want to do it, I do not know what I can do to force them into it, except to try to influence them and show them the right track. We are doing this as much as we can. At the same time, they are hard to influence in that particular respect. I appreciate that. I am sure my hon. friend has tried himself. I know we have tried very hard. I suppose that the people generally in Scarborough would know this.

The new setup that was described to you today should provide an opportunity to do a better job there. Or maybe it should be under the metropolitan authority to do that, I do not know. But at the same time it is another thing to use influence and to use pressure, as my hon. friend suggests could be done. I am sure we have people who can attend with them at any time. I do not feel that we are short in that particular respect.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, may I just follow this up and then I shall subside. I just want to add a point that is really revealing with respect to the balance of values. If the Ontario water resources commission says that there is a certain degree of pollution existing in a municipality, then it becomes a mandatory pressure on that municipality to clean it up; they must respond by Act of this Legislature. But if a hundred thousand mothers need day nursery care for their children, and several thousand of them are working mothers, then there is no social responsibility connected to it any longer.

Then we use these artful devices of persuasion; we make phone calls; we send out happy pictures on brochures; and we add a sense of urgency to our voice. I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is simply not sufficient; it does not work. You have a municipality; whether it is a municipality today and a city tomorrow is irrelevant. You have a municipality of a quarter of a million people and the municipality will not grant compensation for homemakers services. What about the whole spectrum of need in this part of society?

I vigorously suggest, Mr. Chairman, that even if the legislation be not mandatory, if that affronts the hon. Minister's conscience too directly, then at least let him send his supervisors into the field to work with the municipalities involved. Let them not merely make phone calls and give urgings and promptings, but let them go on a regular circuit and make strong and insistent representation because you cannot leave this to the desperate voluntary efforts of the mothers who are thus affected.

Mr. Reilly: Leave it to the municipality.

Mr. S. Lewis: Sure and it will never happen.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I cannot let the remark of the hon. Minister go by—that they are doing everything that they can in this field of nurseries, because when we look over the records of the past year we know there is a great shortage of them in this city. We know in Hamilton, in Ottawa, and a number of these towns and cities across the province of Ontario, especially where there is a number of factories, that there are simply not enough paid nurseries. There are two million working mothers in Canada and the majority of those working mothers are in Ontario and half your working mothers today have children that are sixteen years and under and—

Mr. Reilly: The majority of them do not have to work.

Mr. Trotter: Well there is a ridiculous Tory remark from the hon. member for Eglinton, because this is the very point I want to make. The majority of the working mothers today work because they have to and I think it is a hangover—

Mr. Reilly: They do not. They work because they want to, not because they have to.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Trotter: If there is ever a hangover from the Victorian era it is the idea that mothers are leaving their children and going to work just for the fun of it. Two million people in this country do not go to work just for the fun of it. When you think that half of them have children sixteen years and under, it is obvious that this is a social change and an economic change that has gone on in Canada and more particularly in Ontario and even more so in that area between Oshawa and Niagara Falls. This has taken place in the last twenty years and when a government with the wealth of the province of Ontario comes up with an estimate of $361,000 for day nurseries, and when you even left unexpended for institutions nearly $3,000,000—mind you in vote 1 you have $2,700,000 unexpended and yet in another place like this only $361,000 for the entire vote—it is obvious you have not looked into what is a very serious problem.

This goes right through all our cities and towns; they all seem to have the same viewpoint, but the hon. Minister of Public Welfare is the responsible individual in this province. Toronto, for its protective services for children, spends the same amount as they do on Riverdale zoo and there is no excusing the city of Toronto for that approach. But the approach of the present hon. Minister of Public Welfare is worse and when I hear remarks coming from some of the Tory back-benchers that the women do not have to work it is ridiculous—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): He is a front bench.

Mr. Trotter: —because when you see the cost of living that continues to rise, and the wages some of the men are earning, particularly if they are working in the civil service, you know the women have to go to work. We have gone over this wage problem in the province of Ontario with the civil service and with others and it is obvious you cannot keep a family on what thousands of men are earning today.

Mr. Bryden: Listen, what the Ontario government pays—

Mr. Trotter: When one industry in Scarborough made a survey of the working women, they found that only 25 per cent of their children that were in nurseries, or some would-be nurseries, were receiving proper care; only 25 per cent of them. Unless we come to grips with this problem it means that in the long run you are going to have more of these emotionally disturbed children; you are going to have more health problems and your Minister of Reform Institutions is going to be faced with more expensive problems.

Is it not far more sensible economically and far more humane to get to work and give some leadership in this day nursery problem? Whether the municipalities themselves are at fault, either because of stupidity or lack of funds, is not the question; the leadership is up to you because once these children—either as children, as juveniles or as adults—get into trouble they land up being paid for by the provincial government or by the federal government. It is far better to come to grips with the problem now, and I cannot believe that you are so utterly blind, and so completely stupid, that you have gone so long and done so little and clung so tenaciously to these Victorian tight-fisted ideas which you have. It is a disgrace to this province—the leadership we are getting in welfare—and this vote is typical of what is going on.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am merely an expectant father and I do not speak with the knowledge of many of the members in this House but I want to say that from the remarks coming from the left of me, one sees precisely the root of the problem. The problem is that the Conservatives in this government, in the province of Ontario, still cling to that outworn fetish that the moral place of the woman is in the home and nowhere else.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine, let us get it on the record. It is that old second-sex, Beautiful Homes and Gardens, Ladies' Home Journal philosophy of the inequality of the sexes. Well, it does not commend itself, Mr. Chairman, it does not commend itself to those on this side of the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. S. Lewis: The fact of the matter is, Mr. Chairman, that a great majority of the women who work today do so because they have to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): They also do it through choice. The great trend in the employment of women in the work force on the North American continent today, and the surveys having to do with those matters proves it is part of the social change, involves a woman's desire to work, whether she is married, a mother with children at home or otherwise, and this is quite different from the impression that you are trying to convey to this House.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I recall a recent survey of working women conducted by the women's special branch in the federal Department of Labour—as always when one wants it the material is never here—but these estimates have some time to go and we can get the precise percentage. The hon. Minister of Labour knowing more about this field than I do probably thinks the term “vast majority” is wrong and if it is then I will withdraw it. I will say that my withdrawal is as irrelevant as his intervention because whether it is a small percentage or a large percentage who have to work, is not important. Whether they work by choice or not, the government has no right to have preconceptions about the place of women in society. Whether a woman wants to work, or has to work, then we as a society must provide the nursery facilities for these women's children.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am very sad, Mr. Chairman, because this is obviously a profound philosophic difference—I will tell you something else, Mr. Chairman—it is not only philosophic, it is the overexaggerated male ego, if I may put it that way.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give you some idea of the amount this government has spent on day nurseries. Considering the value of the dollar—we actually spend now less money on nurseries than we did in 1944 and 1945 and in 1953 and 1954. That is going back 20 years; in other words, we are moving back as quickly as we can under this Tory government.

For example, from 1944 to 1945 under this vote, our expenditures were $365,000 and this year we are actually budgeting in this field for $361,000. When you think of the decline in value of the dollar, and when you think of the tremendously increased needs, we are actually going backwards. This is how this vote has changed. In view of the decrease of the value of the dollar over the years, even if you had the same amount, it would show that we are falling back. The fact that our population has increased and the fact that more women are working in industry. Let us face it, some hospitals like Riverdale would have to close down if we did not have women out working or to go into some of these various factories. The women of today must work in order not only to help their families but to sustain industry; but here is a vote that is continually going backwards.

Just to give you some idea—and it does not come from a politician or from somebody making politics out of this. Livia Langford, the executive director of the Humewood house association, in discussing the problem of unwed mothers and the mother's desire to keep the child, mentioned how they had to go to work and they needed these nurseries. She said that in order for women, whether they were unwed mothers keeping their children or whether they were deserted wives who had children and had to work, she said it was necessary that we have day nurseries. Bear in mind that the number of desertions has increased over the years. This involves not only the married women who live at home with their husbands, there is an increasing number of deserted and divorced women who must work; they have no other choice except to go on welfare.

Maybe the hon. Minister would rather keep them on welfare!

Miss Langford pointed out the necessity of having more nurseries because of the tremendous increase in the number of women who must work. Certainly this system has worked in many countries. In Great Britain they had a great extension in day nurseries; and they had a great extension in Sweden. They have proved very successful, both for the family and for industry.

I would like to point out again to the hon. Minister that even 10 or 12 years ago we spent in this department $322,000, which is still just slightly less than we are spending this year. We are literally, even on the estimates, going backward.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a remark at this particular time. I do not know the exact figures for 1944 or 1945, but I would point out that in those days the federal government was also involved because of wartime services. At that time practically every woman was working and somebody had to do this. The men were not even here; they were fighting or in training. It was really a wartime measure more than anything else in those days, but I would—

Mr. Bryden: Why was their place not in the home then?

Mr. Trotter: Even so, Mr. Minister—sorry, I thought you were sitting down.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The estimates show that there is a $71,000 increase this year provided from last year in this respect.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, 150 years ago the Tories of this province took the position that the state really had no responsibility with regard to the education of children. They were finally converted on that point after a long time. But even now, in the year of our Lord 1965, they cling to the notion that there is no responsibility on the part of the state for providing for care—or no significant responsibility I think would be the fair way to put it—to provide for care and training of children below the arbitrary age that we select for starting school.

In the mid-thirties, Mr. Chairman, I spent a considerable amount of time off and on in Nazi Germany, and there the slogan with regard to the role of women was summed up with the three words: "Kirche, Kinder, Küche." What I heard in this House tonight revived a long lost memory and brought back to my mind some of the things I used to hear in Germany in those days.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about the Russian system, tell us about that?

Mr. MacDonald: That is a fatuous comment!

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, I think the argument about whether working women have to work or not is really quite beside the point. There is no question that some, and indeed a remarkably large number, have to work. However, this in itself is a matter of opinion. I have no doubt the Tories opposite think that a family with two or three children, where the husband makes $3,600 a year, is living in the lap of luxury and the wife does not have to work. I am sure they must think that, because they pay 35 per cent of their own employees less money than $3,600 a year.

But I say, and it is my opinion, that in such a situation the woman of the house has this choice: either to see her family live in a state of penury, or else to go out and work. It is women from families of that kind in many cases, who are out working.

How many is really beside the point, because I take the view that if a woman wishes to work, she should work.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: We are not asking you to look after her children, we are asking you to provide a service which in most civilized countries is considered a desirable service. I think if a woman feels she has a contribution to make to society beyond the home that society should welcome her contribution. In wartime we welcomed the contribution, but as soon as the war was over, apparently the women were supposed to go back into the home.

As one of my hon. friends over here pointed out, if you made it illegal for married women to work you would be hard put to find staffs for your hospitals. Now, I do not know if hospital employment is considered to be a useful contribution to society or not by Tories, but I consider it a useful contribution. I think that it should be made easier for women to make such contributions if they want to.

The only regret I have with regard to women working is that far too many of them are in a position where they are forced by economic necessity to work. I do not think they should be in this position. I do not think that in this society wages should be so low that the mother has to go out to work because of economic necessity. I think if she goes out it should be because she chooses.

The point is that right now we do force them out to work. Indeed I am sure this government itself forces women out to work by the wages it pays. I think as long as we have the conditions where they are forced to go to work, and even when we advance beyond that condition and women go to work purely from choice, I would suggest that a sensible, intelligent and economical way to provide for the day care of the children would be through day nurseries in a co-operative community type of project.

I think the comments made by the hon. member for Scarborough West and the hon. member for Parkdale are very much to the point. From the kind of comment with which they were barraged from the Tory benches all around in this House, we can see the attitude of the Tory mind.

I do not really think the hon. Minister of Public Welfare himself is as much inflected with that Tory mentality as some of his colleagues. I would suggest to him that he allow his normal humane outlook to prevail. I think he will then see this in a rational light and he will see the need to develop this branch.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, before we lose sight completely and give the impression there may be none of these in Ontario at all, I would like to point out that there are 354 of these nurseries in Ontario, with 16 coming in the next few months. I have nothing against women working; that is fine, perhaps that is a matter of their choice and sometimes also of necessity. But I simply say that maybe, in the way of philosophy, we differ from you. As far as I am concerned I do not think I should impose this upon municipalities or upon others. They know their needs better than I would, and I have to deal with it that way.

Mr. S. Lewis: We are talking about regional government.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think the members of the municipalities know what they have to do and what they need, and the means are there to do it if they want it. We will not refuse it, we encourage it, we promote it every day. It is a matter of philosophy possibly, but I am not one, and I do not think this is the thinking of the government that we want to force any of these things on anybody. I am sure that the hon. member for Scarborough West has enough influence in his own area that he can sell the idea for this.

Mr. S. Lewis: No.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am surprised that he admits this.

Mr. S. Lewis: I do not speak with the arts of government, Mr. Minister. Since the hon. Minister does not believe in imposition, let me ask him a question. How many people does he have situated in the head office of his day nursery branch in non-clerical or stenographic positions?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Five.

Mr. S. Lewis: Five! And if I am right there are something in excess, at the moment at any rate, of 900 municipalities. These are autonomous municipal units about which we hear so much, whose autonomy we value so much that we are moving to regional government. Let us not be specious in our argument.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Nine hundred municipalities surely do not warrant a day nursery in every one of them.

Mr. S. Lewis: Let me assure the hon. Minister it warrants something more than 300, and it warrants something more than a staff of five.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I can assure the hon. member that I live in a town of between 9,000 and 10,000 people and a nursery is not necessary there. Providing such facilities, when it is done, it is done by people in the service clubs and that sort of thing who can do this, but it is not necessary there, and there are many places of that calibre throughout the province of Ontario. It might be revealing if I say that in Algoma county there are two day nurseries; in Brant there are nine; Carleton, 19; Cochrane, two; Dufferin, one; Durham, two; Elgin, two; Essex, 14; Frontenac, eight; Owen Sound, one; Halton, 11; Hastings, four; Huron, one; Kent, two; Lambton, five; Lanark, three; Leeds, one; Lennox-Addington, one; Lincoln, 12; Middlesex, 15; Muskoka, one; Nipissing, one; Norfolk, one; Northumberland, two; Ontario county, two—

Mr. Trotter: How many in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: There are seven in Ontario county. In Toronto, in the county of York, there are 88, plus 48 which is what there are in Toronto, taking in Aurora, East York, Etobicoke, Forest Hill, King, Leaside, Newmarket, North York, Richmond Hill. I see there are some in Scarborough—

Mr. S. Lewis: They are not—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It must be some other place. Stouffville, Toronto city 47, Richmond Hill, North York 30. Scarborough, I have a total of 16 here.

Mr. S. Lewis: That will be a revelation to the people in the municipality.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: York township, eight. Here is what I have: Scarborough, public none, private seven and nine, that is 16, all private.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, all right. The hon. Minister has included in his figures the private agencies which do not have the same kind of public incentive and public sponsorship. Second, Mr. Chairman, just to bring this back into perspective with all the numbers that may be located in Metropolitan Toronto, I would remind the hon. Minister of a very important survey called The Needs and Resources Survey of Metropolitan Toronto which was published last year. It went to considerable length to document the desperate need for day nursery care throughout the entire metropolitan area. These were people expert in these fields, some of them from within his own department. So that without falling into the obvious adage that there will always be a need for more, I do not think that we have overcome the minimum requirements, at least in this field.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, just so the hon. Minister does not get carried away with the idea that he thinks we are being fooled by the list of figures he gives, I just want to give him some idea—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I never tried to fool anybody.

Mr. Trotter:—of what one expert in this field, Lillian Thompson, a well-known social worker here, thinks of our resources in regard particularly to day nurseries. On May 12 of this year she made an address before the annual conference of the Ontario welfare council, and she discussed at that time—and I do not intend to read her remarks, I am just giving a summation—but she discussed at that time how we in Ontario, despite all the economic and industrial changes, cling to the old ideas and that we more or less look upon the man as doing the manly job and the woman stays in the home. She pointed out that despite the fact that many women are working we have not really coped with the problem. And she says this:

Ontario is better equipped than most parts of Canada to cope with these trends.

“These trends” referred to women working and the need to take care of children in nurseries.

Yet day care is said to be one of the underdeveloped services. The failure to provide effectively for this service is identified in reports of the Ontario welfare council, in the needs and resources study in Toronto, and in recent investigations in other Ontario communities such as Ottawa. At the same time there is disturbing evidence—

This is one thing I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman:

At the same time, there is disturbing evidence that private arrangements, or the absence of arrangements for day care, are exposing children to neglect and danger, sometimes resulting in disease and even loss of life. The need is for several forms of day care, kindergartens, day nursery schools, family day care. Such resources need to be in the most useful locations which could be identified by survey methods, and they need flexible time schedules to match the variations in work shifts.

I just want to say this to the hon. Minister. He pointed out that there were a number in Metropolitan Toronto, but when you think of the number of women working in this area, and the number of children, and also the hours, they all do not necessarily work from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the evening. There is this problem of shift work. Our facilities are extremely low, and if this hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, would even face up to the problem of what actually were the needs in the province of Ontario and in these various growing communities, you would at least be doing something worthwhile. But to come in here with the same old estimates! Again I say, despite the fact of what the federal government was doing during the war, we are doing less than we were 20 years ago, despite the tremendous increase in the problems. It is a disgrace that the hon. Minister has allowed this whole matter to become bogged down.

Vote 1703 agreed to.

On vote 1704:

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on 1704, I wonder if the hon. Minister would take a little time to give us some particulars about his field services branch. I take it this is the area of regional offices, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Can the hon. Minister give us some idea, of the number of regional offices and their actual responsibilities? I have never been clear in my own mind from the report just how much responsibility they have, what initiative they have.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have a statement here, Mr. Chairman, which I would like to make.

The major functions of the field services branch are:

1. To complete applications and report on all persons applying for or receiving allowances or assistance from the province under the six welfare allowances programme. In the 17 regions under the direction of the regional welfare administrator, this function is carried out primarily by welfare field workers through visits to the homes of applicants or recipients. At the present time, there are approximately 170 welfare field workers.

2. To examine and approve all municipal expenditures for general welfare assistance and related programmes to ensure that provincial reimbursement is made within the terms of the legislation.

3. To administer The General Welfare Assistance Act and other public welfare legislation in areas other than that of municipal organization and territorial districts of the province.

4. To investigate and report on any matter relating to the general welfare of any individual or family in the population and to assist them in finding a solution for their difficulties.

Staff responsibilities: Regional welfare administrators are responsible for the immediate direction, discipline, assignment of work and so forth of the staffs employed in their region and for the general operation of their regional offices. They may also examine and approve municipal accounts for provincial subsidy, assist and advise municipal welfare administrators, investigate specific welfare problems in their region and act in a liaison capacity for the department with other social agencies. In areas other than municipal organization, the regional administrators are responsible for the authorization of general welfare assistance and other public welfare services normally administered by municipalities. The salary range is $6,600 to $8,600.

Welfare field supervisors: In the two larger regional offices, Toronto and Hamilton, welfare field supervisors assist the regional welfare administrator in the assignment and supervision of the field workers staff. They also carry out special investigations on problem cases as required, and advise municipal welfare administrators and represent the department at community functions. The salary range is $5,500 to $6,600.

Welfare allowances officers: The primary duty of welfare allowances officers is to examine and to approve municipal welfare accounts. They also conduct investigations on individuals and families who experience welfare problems and advise the municipal welfare administrators. In areas without municipal organization they carry out extensive investigative and rehabilitative services under the general welfare assistance programme. The salary range there is $4,600 to $5,500.

We have the special investigating unit, that is also in the field services branch. A special investigating unit operates within the field services branch providing a service for municipalities and the welfare allowances branch to locate deserting husbands and fathers whose wives and families have applied for and who are receiving public assistance. The services of the unit are being used by an increasing number of municipal welfare departments, although about 50 per cent of the referrals still originate in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

The unit is now investigating over 250 cases a month and is successful in locating the deserting father or husband in about 42 of every 100 cases referred to it. Of the cases where the deserting father is located, about 80 per cent result in public assistance payments being either suspended or withheld. An analysis of the general welfare assistance cases for a nine-month period, where the husband was located and assistance withheld or suspended, indicated the husband was found living in the home and fully employed in 26.4 per cent of the families. In 20.8 per cent of the cases the mother was found to be living in a common law union with another man. And in another 20.8 per cent she was employed, with her earnings making assistance unnecessary.

When appropriate, the municipalities concerned instituted court action against the applicants or recipients who were receiving assistance by fraudulent means. The above demonstrates the importance of the unit in providing payment of public funds to persons who do not qualify for public aid.

I have further, if I may continue, Mr. Chairman, professional social work and counselling services.

Continuing efforts are being made to improve the quality of service provided to families and individuals on the public assistance rolls, to incorporate counselling services and the routine work of the field staff. During the past nine months particular attention has been given to mothers' allowances and dependent fathers' families by the assignment of competent field workers to serve these families exclusively, with reduced case loads. There are now 14 such specialized workers and more will be assigned as suitable staff is obtained and trained.

The more frequent contact between staff and recipients made possible by these specialized case loads are producing very encouraging results, both in helping some families to become self-supporting and in helping others to utilize the allowances they receive more wisely and thus improve their standard of living. In addition, staff seminars have been conducted by the branch director in 15 of the 17 regions to discuss counselling services and to initiate a programme whereby a small number of cases are selected by each field worker for concentrated attention. This programme appears to have good possibilities for the more rural area of the province where individual field workers cover larger geographical areas.

Within the department, a committee of senior personnel has been established and is meeting regularly to plan and develop professional social work services for the various branches of the department where social work skills are required.

In the field services branch, for example, it is anticipated trained social workers will be deployed across the province to whom cases can be referred when emotional and behavioural problems appear to be the underlying reasons for their dependency. Such a unit is now in the formative stages for the Toronto area.

Mr Chairman, you will appreciate that one of the great difficulties faced by the department, of course, has been the shortage of qualified social workers and non-professional welfare workers. We are aware, I can assure you, of the need for such specialists in the administration of our services, and we intend to accomplish our objectives. Each year the training facilities are improving, stimulated by grants to our educational institutions and financial assistance for students. From these sources we hope to recruit the staff we will require to develop our programme.

I do not know how comprehensive this statement is, but it gives you a picture of what is being carried on, I think, as well as I can do it right now.

Mr. Trotter: Has the hon. Minister any idea what the case load is for a field worker?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It all depends on the part of the province, but I am advised he will have a look at between 300 and 400 cases.

Mr. Trotter: When he has to look after 300 or 400 cases, would that be per year or per month?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: A year!

Mr. Trotter: Per year, all right! How would, let us say, Metropolitan Toronto, compare with the north?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that Toronto's average would be around 425.

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question about salaries paid to these field workers. It seems to me that last year the hon. Minister told us that the salary range for that type of work was from $3,600 to $5,000. Could the hon. Minister advise this House what the salary has been increased to, as we understood that this was being increased this year?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I thought I mentioned this a moment ago. For welfare administrators, the range is $6,300 to $8,600; the welfare field supervisors, $5,500 to $6,000; welfare allowances officers, $4,600 to $5,500.

Is that what my hon. friend wanted?

Mr. Bryden: What was the last category that carried the range of $4,600 to $5,500?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The welfare allowances officers!

Mr. Bryden: Do you not have a classification of field officer or something like that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: We have the regional welfare administrators, the welfare field supervisors and the welfare allowance officers. Their primary duty is to examine and approve municipal welfare accounts, conduct individual investigations and advise welfare administrators.

The field workers are $3,900 to $4,600. That is the range.

Mr. Bryden: Are those fully trained, qualified people? As I recall the discussion of last year you had two categories. One was a sort of training category and the other was a fully qualified worker. You are talking now about the fully qualified worker or the trainee?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The $3,900 to $4,600 would be called a grade one field worker, and the grade two would start at $4,600.

Mr. Bryden: And go up to what?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Around $5,200, I believe.

Mr. Bryden: That represents a small increase over what was reported last year. It sounds to me like about $300 a year, as I remember the figures from last year.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It is what they call—I often wonder what the word means—but it is a two-step increase in this particular case.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, but have the ranges themselves been increased?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes!

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, I think I would like to ask a question or two about these field workers. Could the hon. Minister advise this House how many of those in that branch are trained social workers, with either an MSW or VSW? My question is posed because I think this is important work, and I think this is a field where there should be a larger number of trained social workers.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, there are two graduate social workers here in main office. In the child welfare branch we have seven, and there are two coming in; which will be a total of nine. I am speaking of MSW, for the most part; except the odd one is a BSW. In field services, I have five. Rehabilitation services, 13. They are all MSW's except five; who I believe are known as BSWs.

Mr. S. Lewis: Of the 179 field supervisors that you indicated at the outset of your remarks, can we have a general breakdown as to education and training? You must have them in some educational breakdown?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, I have not that with me right now, but I can get it for my hon. friend. You mean the breakdown of the qualifications, schooling and that sort of thing?

Mr. S. Lewis: Yes. I was just wondering how many would be out of grade 13; how many would be with some university training. I am curious as to whether this is available in the department.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes. It is available to the department, but I have not got it with me right now.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine. Might I then ask further, what training do the 170 field supervisors have? What kind of course do they undergo to fit them for the work?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Most of them have grade 13, although some have grade 12, and they have a six-week course in the department; in-training, you might call it. Four weeks at school and two weeks in the field.

Mr. S. Lewis: And if I am right, the four-week course that is given in the department relates primarily to the explanation of the Acts and the regulations thereof. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: So that these people are put into the field to administer this range of programme, with six weeks of training. Now, I am sure the hon. Minister will agree that this is not an overwhelming training programme and I do appreciate the difficulties.

I am wondering, given the problems involved, is there any opportunity for a subsequent training programme? Is there any specific pattern of leave? Are there any intensive courses for three- or six-month periods? How many take advantage of them, and what has been the pattern?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I have just been handed something which I have here, which is related to vote 1704. I have another statement which would clarify that, I believe. If my hon. friend would wait until then, I would like to make a statement on vote 1704.

Mr. S. Lewis: This is 1704.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Oh, that is right. I am sorry. I thought I had read this, but apparently I did not.

Mr. S. Lewis: You read a statement, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, it is 1704. But 1705 is what I have about staff training. I thought I was right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Oh, I see. I would appreciate it if the House could spend some little time on this area of education training; it intrigues me. But would you like to hold all of the education and training, even for the field worker people, into vote 1705?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: Fine!

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1704?

Mr. Trotter: One short question. What do you normally consider a proper case load for a field worker? I understand it is between 200 and 250 cases. Would that be what would be considered proper for a worker to do a good job?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, in our kind of categorical investigation, as it stands now, I am advised that it would be around 400.

Mr. Trotter: Oh, I know. Each worker has to do around 400, and in the Toronto area—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The case load is about 350 to 450, as I have it here. Specialized cases would be about 150.

Mr. Trotter: That is what you have, or is that what is considered the proper way to run the department?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Well, that is what we have now.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, well, what I am getting at is, what do your authorities in this field think should be the norm? How many cases? I know it is up in the 400 plus, but is not the optimum situation considered to be between 200 and 250 cases per field worker, depending on the spread of the geographical area?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, we feel that a field worker can handle that very easily.

Mr. Trotter: Handle 400?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. Trotter: You are one of the few that think so.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, just following up on the question that the hon. member for Parkdale asked. Is it considered that they have any duties other than simply checking on the recipients of assistance in whatever category to make sure that they are not cheating on the regulations? The temptation to cheat on the regulations must be overwhelming in view of the low level of allowances, but I am wondering if the department, when it considers that a 400 case load is satisfactory, envisages anything but a negative role for these people, or does it think at all creatively that they might provide service to the people concerned, as well as checking on them?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that they consider in the department that it is quite in order and it can be handled very easily. It is done; the matter of investigating and reporting. The decision is made by whoever makes the decisions.

Mr. Bryden: In other words, purely a negative function. Just investigating to see what their income is, or whether or not they meet the qualifications.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Specialization is a different thing. The case load there would be about 150.

Mr. Bryden: Well, one other phase of this, Mr. Chairman. I am happy to note that there has been a modest increase in the salaries paid to these field workers—of approximately $300 a year, I take it, since last year. That works out to a little better than $5 a week.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Four hundred dollars.

Mr. Bryden: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Four hundred dollars.

Mr. Bryden: Four hundred dollars a year has been the increase. The salaries last year were even worse than I remembered. So it is $400 a year; it may be $7.50 per week or something like that. I suggest to the hon. Minister that, if the range for the experienced people is now $4,600 to $5,200, it is still a very low range for the kind of work these people are expected to do. This, I think, is characteristic of salaries all up and down the line in this department. There is an old tradition, which we still have not shaken off, that in this particular field people can be paid low salaries.

I know that the hon. Minister does not have the determination of salaries in his own hands, but I would hope that the pressure will be maintained to push up the level of salaries in his department from the field worker category up. I think if that is done there might be less difficulty in attracting people into this profession and in encouraging them to take not the minimum amount of training that the department thinks it can get away with, but the degree of training that would be desirable for proper discharge of their very important functions.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I think the House was inadvertently misled. The case load is 396 cases per month, not per year; 396 cases per month. I have the 32nd annual report of the department in front of me and I point out that 396 cases per month, Mr. Chairman, is a work load of 17 cases a day. You cannot conceivably dispense more than a negative kind of service with that rate of effort.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that they have that amount of cases to look at in one year and they are recorded as such.

Mr. S. Lewis: Well, I read from your annual report the average monthly case load per worker throughout the year—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is the same—

Mr. S. Lewis: Agreed, but we are dealing, I gather from the figure in the back of the report, with 170,000 people a year in this field.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I understand that for most of these cases it means one check a year and for the others it is two checks a year.

Mr. S. Lewis: What is the difference, Mr. Minister? Which programmes are reviewed once a year and which are reviewed twice?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Old age, disabled, blind once a year, that is by law, others may be twice.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say I have been sitting quietly here, but every time I listen to the answers by the hon. Minister, sir, I hear the most extraordinary explanation come from his philosophy. It takes me back to Oliver Twist. I would not be surprised if a dinosaur marched into the room with the antiquated sort of attitude that develops in his philosophical approach to welfare.

Here we talk about field service. I had hoped that there would be some kind of a progressive attitude, saying that it is preventive, not just an investigation. What a dry, dehydrated effort on the part of the department! I would hope you are going there to bolster morale and help people to help themselves to get on their feet. This routine effort that you are suggesting frankly shows why there are resignations by top people from your department and yet you give us these sly innuendoes as to why people leave. There are a lot of first-class people who would not want to belong to your department because there is no challenge and a clarion call. To suggest that your field service branch has 350, and get muddled about whether you know if it is a month or a year! How long have you been in this job?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: It is the total case load of a worker for a year divided by the 12 months to get an average monthly case load of 350.

Mr. Thompson: All right, we asked you whether it was a month or a year, you say it is 350 a year.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I said 396 to 400 in the first place.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I challenge you on that statement. I would say that if a case worker is doing 350, and according to the job he has to investigate and report, you say once in some cases and twice in others, I say he is not working hard enough. Yet I know from talking to some of your case workers that there are dedicated, hard-working people who are trying to do everything they can, and I know they are visiting more than that.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You say they are not doing enough.

Mr. Thompson: I am saying if he only has 350 that he visits once a year and in some cases twice, I would suggest that it is not enough for a man to be doing. I would suggest that if you could have told us that he is counselling, advising and helping the family situations, and that he has sensitivities to people in order to bolster them, to help them with work and to get them on their feet again, then this would be a worthwhile job. But you stand up and tell us that all he does is gather information and report. I think that is a shocking thing, you should push this department so that they are doing far more.

Vote 1704 agreed to.

On vote 1705:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before that vote is carried, 1705, I would move that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow there are three second readings and a few bills left, and one question raised by the hon. member for York South in the committee of the whole and then we will resume the estimates of this department.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Friday, June 18, 1965

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Friday, June 18, 1965

Assessment Act, bill to amend, Mr. Spooner, second reading	4395
Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 1961-1962, bill to amend, Mr. Spooner, second reading	4396
Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, Mr. Wishart, second reading	4396
Milk Act, 1965, bill intituled, reported	4399
Meat Inspection Act (Ontario), 1962-1963, bill to amend, reported	4399
Seed Potatoes Act, bill to amend, reported	4399
Farm Products Marketing Act, bill to amend, reported	4399
Municipal Act, bill to amend, reported	4404
Assessment Act, bill to amend, reported	4408
Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 1961-1962, bill to amend, reported	4408
Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963, bill to amend, reported	4408
Estimates, Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Cecile, continued	4410
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4417

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome, as guests, students from the following schools: under the Speaker's gallery west, Kearney public school, Kearney; in the east gallery, Listowel public school, Listowel; and in the west gallery, Kensal Park public school, London; and Sunbury public school, Sunbury; also in the east and west galleries, Oneida Central public school, Caledonia.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a correction to a reply given to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) on Wednesday, June 16.

The checkerboarding of an area referred to applies only to leases from boring permits for petroleum, gas, coal and salt in that part of Ontario lying north of the transcontinental railway and not to the leases emanating from the exploration licences we were discussing, which are restricted to ten per cent of the area.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

THE ASSESSMENT ACT

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill No. 164, An Act to amend The Assessment Act.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): I would like to make a few comments about some of the sections of this bill. There will be a few amendments presented when the bill is dealt with in committee of the whole. I think I might as well make comments on them in order that there be no misunderstanding, because the bill in its present shape deals with a number of amendments which are desirable to The Assessment Act; since it has been written a number of problems have come about and been made known to us, so we feel that further amendments are required.

For instance, paragraph 1 of the bill, which deals with paragraph 9 of section 4 of The Assessment Act, is to be amended to provide that only the assessment of parking lots on land owned by the harbour commission are to be assessable. As the section now reads, it would indicate that it was the intention of the amendment to assess lands owned by local boards and school boards, and also harbour commissions. It was not our intention to do that, but we presented this amendment on the basis of a representation which had been made by the council of Metropolitan Toronto. Since the bill has been printed and been available, representation has been made to me that it would be desirable at this time to amend the Act, this bill, for the present, and that only lands which are used as parking lots of properties owned by harbour commissions should be assessable.

Section 2 of the bill deals with the matter of institution of assessment manuals and that, I suggest, is desirable.

Section 3 of the bill deals with a provision for the adjustment of the assessment of pipelines by the application of the latest provincial equalization factor. Hon. members will remember that the assessment on pipelines is statutory. We have found in some areas that it has worked to the detriment of the owner of the assessed property because other property in the municipality was assessed at a figure of, shall I say, perhaps 50 per cent of the manual assessment whereas the pipelines were assessed at 100 per cent. With this amendment, the pipeline assessment will be equalized in accordance with the equalization factor in the particular municipality.

Subsection 2 deals with a similar matter.

In connection then with sections 4 and 5, and also, I believe, 6 of this bill, these matters deal with the appointment of assessment commissioners and district assessors, and so on; and these are just to add authority to the Act as it is at the present time.

Another amendment, Mr. Speaker, which I will move in the committee of the whole House, deals with section 9 of the bill. It provides now for eliminating the so-called vacancy allowances, and it is necessary to amend certain other sections of the Act which relate to the same subject in order to make the Act consistent in all of its sections. I will move that amendment in the committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES' RETIREMENT SYSTEM ACT, 1961-1962

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves second reading of Bill No. 165, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement System Act, 1961-1962.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: In explanation, I might say that here again it is my intention to present an amendment to section 1 of the bill by putting a time limit on it, for the time in which this will go into effect. The date will be January 1, 1966, because that is the date, of course, when the Canada pension plan will come into force. It is desirable, in providing for the integration of the Canada pension plan and pension plans which apply in the case of employees of these particular municipal organizations, that this date should be inserted into the Act, into the amendment. Then there is no question as to when it goes into effect.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE EMERGENCY MEASURES ACT, 1962-1963

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General) moves second reading of Bill No. 166, An Act to amend The Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the first three sections of the bill are simply making certain changes in organization and titles. What was known as a "commissioner" is to be known as a "director" in title. The appointment of staff is changed to the normal procedures under The Public Service Act.

The emergency measures organization is to be regarded as a branch of The Department of the Attorney General.

Then the particular section providing for the carrying out of the organization is section

4. Under the emergency measures organization, as hon. members are aware, the whole organization is directed primarily from the federal government, which provides plans and delegates certain powers, then down to the provincial government. At the provincial level the organization is carried through to municipal governments. Section 4 provides for that power from the federal area to be delegated or directed to a Minister, and you will note that the section says "the Prime Minister who may send, name or delegate a Minister of the executive council to be responsible."

Provision is made for direction to municipalities to co-ordinate their services, to approve plans which are to be prepared by municipalities, and for the control and the direction of various services where more than one municipality may be involved in an emergency, or disaster area.

I may say that The Emergency Measures Act is designed to cover a situation where either a natural or a national type of disaster may occur. The services which then may be directed by the Minister, where more than one municipality is involved, will be such things as police service, fire fighting services, traffic, welfare services, the use of hospitals and medical services, supply of food, the provision for water, and so on.

This is the general design of the Act. I think it provides a more direct and a more active part for the provincial government to play, in co-operation with the federal government, in preparation for any emergency which might arise.

There is provision in subsection 4 of section 4 to direct one municipality to give assistance to another. Subsection 5 goes so far as to provide that, in an emergency situation, the provisions set forth in the Act would take precedence over other statutes—such as, for instance, The Hospitals Act, The Highway Traffic Act, or any such Act, where the situation requires that there be central direction in a situation of dire or national emergency.

That, generally, is the purpose of the Act.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in reading the Act, I recognize that in section three (1), Every plan shall be prepared under the supervision and guidance of the director.

I am assuming that there will be a great deal of clear-cut planning ahead. I think one of the real problems about this whole organization has been the fact that there is public lethargy, apathy and indifference.

I notice that in the further sections, in 4, it keeps referring to "where an emergency exists." It seems to me that if the event takes place—the emergency that we hope will never take place—then everything is prepared for after the emergency takes place. Nowhere in this amendment is there an emphasis on trying to work out plans before an emergency takes place.

I was out near Brighton last week and was talking to someone who is working for the emergency measures organization. He was telling me his radio does not cover a lot of the areas, and he just wonders if this whole thing is not an exercise in futility.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I might say to the House that I spent all of yesterday with the hon. Minister of Industry and his group of planners in Ottawa on the matter of emergency measures. It is admitted that there is a good deal of public apathy, and this is bound to be the case, I think, where in the world situation happily, at the moment, there is a rapport or a détente between nations which is a little better than existed some time ago. The apathy exists in matters of defence, and I am speaking of the military defence. It is hard to recruit for what used to be called the militia, or for the armed services in such a situation, and it is particularly difficult when you are speaking of civil defence, of which emergency measures is regarded as a part. There has been, however, a good deal of planning done by the municipal organizations, not as much as we would like to see and not as complete as we would like to see. The purpose of our conference yesterday was not only to clear our thinking, but to relate our plans and have an understanding of where our areas of duty and responsibility lay; to encourage the planning; to have the plans completed; have them approved and to have tests and exercises done, so as to bring these plans up-to-date.

I think with the passage of this Act, and with the very close understanding and liaison which now will exist between the federal and the provincial authorities, that we will be able to improve the situation, to have the planning brought up to date and to have the plans tested and approved, subject always to that difficulty we have of obtaining the interest of the public, to the extent we would like to see. But perhaps it is not an unmixed evil that we have a world situation where the public are not so greatly concerned that an emergency may ever arise—and we would hope it would not—but we have to be prepared for it.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised at the mild nature of the comments emanating from the Liberal benches with regard to this bill, in view of the fact that when the bill was given first reading, it was alleged from that quarter that it provided for the establishment of martial law.

We do not take that view of the bill. We do not take an alarmist view of it at all. We think that it could very well be a useful measure. It involves, as I understand it—at any rate it provides the basis for—a considerable administrative reorganization and certain co-ordination of powers under The Emergency Measures Act.

Now, we trust that the additional powers granted under this bill, both for reorganization and for co-ordination, will lead to an intelligent approach to the problem of emergencies. The hon. Attorney General somewhat surprised me when he said, just a minute ago, that it is hard to get people to take an interest in emergency measures, because the world situation, as I understood him, is not such as to create any sense of public alarm.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. I compared it to a situation which existed some years ago and said the détente or rapport between certain nations was better than it was some years ago.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would say that the present situation in Vietnam does not lead one to take, shall we say, a complacent attitude towards the world situation, and I do not think that the public of Canada takes such an attitude. The public of Canada, however, is indifferent to the emergency measures programme, because it is a totally useless and meaningless programme. That is where the difficulty arises.

I think my hon. colleague from Yorkview (Mr. Young), who is out of town at the present time, summed it up very well back on May 13 when he said, and I am just going to quote a few sentences from page 2921 of Hansard for that date:

The emergency measures organization has existed for some time in this province and has, it seems to me, in recent years served only one purpose. That purpose has been to disperse certain moneys to municipalities for fire equipment. Perhaps this debate should have taken place earlier in the afternoon, after The Milk Act vote, because this is a sacred cow which gives perhaps no milk, and which is a very expensive item to keep.

This is the problem we are up against. The emergency measures organization is essentially an organization that was set up under federal initiative to give some retired generals the opportunity to continue playing soldiers. It does not provide any meaningful answer to problems that may arise in relation to emergencies.

Certainly it gives no answer to the problem of nuclear warfare. The only protection against the nuclear bomb is to ensure that it does not fall. I think it has been well established everywhere that that is the only protection against it.

There is, nevertheless, a role for some sort of machinery for dealing with emergencies which may arise from natural causes, and even in the course of war, although I think we just rule that out as an impossibility. But it cannot be done by a separate organization sitting off on the side, which is not integrated with the general provision of services for the community. If an emergency arises, and we hope one should not arise, but they do from time to time, it is obvious that the protection of the community is going to be achieved primarily through the existing police and fire forces that are on the job all the time.

There may come a situation where the efforts of those forces may have to be co-ordinated, and where supplementary assistance may have to be given to them, but we will never get any protection against any emergency by having an organization sitting off on the side that is designed to deal only with emergencies, and is not really operative at any other time.

We in this group will support this bill in the hope that its provisions will provide an opportunity to reassess the whole approach to the problem of emergency with a view to disbanding this ridiculous emergency measures organization and providing for the supplementation and co-ordination of the normal protective services of the community in the cases of emergency. We believe that there could indeed arise a situation such as is contemplated in subsection 3 of the proposed new section 6A, and we believe that that power is necessary and should be there. But I think that if the hon. Attorney General is now undertaking a reorganization of the emergency measures system, he should take advantage of the opportunity to make a genuine one, so that we will have genuine protection against emergencies where they arise and not the false protection arising from an organization that obviously could not operate if an emergency did arise.

I suggest to the hon. Attorney General that the public indifference to the present

EMO setup arises from the public realization of the total futility of the whole thing. Let us hope that the hon. Attorney General moves forward under the powers given here to create a meaningful organization. He is an extremely cautious man and moves forward very cautiously, but I found that when he starts moving he moves fairly continuously. So let us hope that, now that he has got started in this field he will carry right through and do a proper job of recasting the whole structure and philosophy of the organization.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think I should add a word at this stage. First of all I would like to make some reference to the expression "martial law" which the hon. member—

Mr. Bryden: We do not agree with that expression, but I will leave it to the hon. Attorney General to make correction.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I realize that. It was used by, I think, the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) some time ago in speaking to the press. I would like to make it very clear that this is the civil defence organization. There are no armed services—army, navy or air force—in it. It is purely a civil defence organization for the protection of the public by a public organization, an organization of its own in an emergency situation. Martial law implies the calling in of the army or a military force to take command of government services in a country, which is, of course, a ridiculous thought of which there is no suggestion whatsoever in this legislation.

We, in our whole history, I think, have shown our aversion to any such thing as martial law. Our Emergency Measures Act has no thought of it, no contemplation of it; it is designed as a civil organization. I would just simply say to the hon. member who has spoken that this is intended: the purpose of this whole Act is that there may be a reorganization and a stepping up of the activities in the organization of emergency measures for civilian defence. It does use, and it is intended to use, the normal services: the police, the fire department—that is the local forces—the hospitals, the welfare services, and all the local services in the municipality.

We are seeking to have the municipalities bring their planning forward, to have those plans approved, to get public participation to a much greater extent in them, and to have them activated and encouraged by testing, so that the public will be ready to act, and to act efficiently, in any emergency which might arise. And I think we may look forward, I am sure, to a considerable increase in interest and efficiency under this emergency measures legislation.

Motion agreed to, second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The sixty-eighth order; the committee of the whole House. On Bill No. 135; Mr. J. F. Edwards in the chair.

THE MILK ACT, 1965

(continued)

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might just repeat the point that I raised when the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) was kind enough to leave the matter over because the hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart) was not in the House at that time.

The point I made was, briefly, that in the old setup in the milk industry, the milk co-ordinating board played a rather major role in co-ordinating various groups. In the new setup which is envisaged in this bill, we are going to have a separate cream producers' marketing board and a cheese producers' marketing board. The other two branches of the industry will be brought together to whatever extent is possible, and therefore, it seemed to me that there would still be a continuing co-ordinating role. I wonder why, in the new setup, there appears to be a deliberate move on the part of the government to dispense with the milk co-ordinating board.

Not only that, if I may just add one further point with reference to co-ordinating in the milk industry, but I understand that the board has moved into other functions normally associated with a fraternal organization for farmers who are involved in the milk industry, such as the provision of group insurance. My question, briefly, is, what is the government's thinking with regard to the future role of the milk co-ordinating board, and if it is the thinking that this body must be, or should be, disbanded, why?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity to answer the hon. member's question in this connection. There has been concern expressed by the co-ordinating board's personnel as to why the Act calls for the dissolution of the co-ordinating board. I would be the first to admit and to commend the co-ordinating board for its activities in the past and for the contribution it has been able to make to the dairy industry.

When the co-ordinating board was first set up it was intended that it might be the body that would bring together the four groups, and indeed, bring them together in such a way that they might fulfill the purpose that we hope the new Milk Act will fulfill in establishing a single marketing board for milk.

It was not possible for the groups to agree among themselves and to really come to grips with the problem as it existed and continues to exist, but the co-ordinating board did provide a service to the groups whereby they could meet together and perform useful functions, I would like to say, in addition to the "paternal" influence—the term I think was used by the hon. member for York South. They did considerable promotional work. For instance, in the dairy lane at the Royal winter fair we had the butter exhibit that always attracts a good deal of attention.

The co-ordinating boards were influential in the dairy princess competitions held across the province to focus attention on the dairy industry, and were quite influential and participated to a very marked degree in the provincial competition at the Canadian national exhibition, having to do with the dairy princess competition.

There has been no thought that we have not recognized this but we do believe that when we bring together the groups, through the marketing board that will be established, we think that this marketing board will provide the service that has been provided by the co-ordinating board in all of these respects that I have mentioned, but it will go further in establishing a marketing plan, a single marketing agency for milk.

It is true that the cream producers' marketing plan will be left outside because this is something that just does not fit into the other pattern.

The cheese producers marketing board, for the time being, will continue because they are the only export agency that does exist to handle surplus cheddar cheese in the province of Ontario, or indeed in Canada for that matter. So we felt that they could well carry on for the time being, but there is no thought that the producers of cheese milk will be left out of the new marketing plan.

Indeed, a great many letters, requests—and resolutions—have crossed my desk from the various areas of Ontario where cheese milk is produced, asking that cheese milk producers be included in the new milk marketing plan—and, I think, with good reason. There may have been a misunderstanding, due to my remarks in the House here, that the cheese producers marketing board should be continued, but the cheese board deals only with the sale of cheese—the produced and finished product—and not necessarily with the cheese milk itself.

The milk co-ordinating board will be continued throughout this year, or until the new marketing plan comes into operation. They will carry on as they have always carried on; they will get the same contributions from the various groups that they have always got; but when the new marketing board is set up, we would hope that the present function of the co-ordinating board would be blended into the new marketing plan. I cannot very well see why the producers themselves should be required to contribute toward two plans, which really will be providing the same function. That is the intention.

This has all been explained to the co-ordinating board and I feel that any misunderstanding that may have developed has been corrected. I can assure you that we want to maintain the services of the groups, but I would like to see them in one place—not diversified.

Bill No. 135 reported.

THE MEAT INSPECTION ACT (ONTARIO), 1962-1963

House in committee on Bill No. 138, An Act to amend The Meat Inspection Act (Ontario), 1962-1963.

Sections 1 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 138 reported.

THE SEED POTATOES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 139, An Act to amend The Seed Potatoes Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 139 reported.

THE FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 140, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Sections 1 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

On sections 5 and 6:

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill No. 140 be amended by renumbering sections 5 and 6 as 6 and 7, respectively, and by adding, after section 4, the following section:

1. Clause (d) of subsection 2 of section 18 of The Farm Products Marketing Act, as enacted by section 11 of The Farm Products Marketing Amendment Act of 1962-1963, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(d) Providing for the seizing, removing, destroying or otherwise disposing of any growing tobacco plants or tobacco produced or marketed in violation of this Act or the regulations, and the retention or disposition by the local board of any proceeds of sale thereof.

Subsection 2. The said section 18 is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

Notwithstanding section 13, every person who fails to comply with or contravenes any of the provisions of this section, or any of the regulations, orders, or directions of the board, or the local board, made pursuant to this section, is guilty of an offence and, on summary conviction, is liable for a first offence to a fine of not more than $500 and, for a subsequent offence, to a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $5,000.

On section 5, as amended:

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, I am a little worried about the broad wording of this. This is section 5, subsection—it is the new section 5, is it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, it is.

Mr. Singer: Clause (d) of subsection 2 is repealed and the following substituted—and I presume that allows for regulations to be passed, setting up—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not necessarily. It is spelled out. Mr. Chairman, may I explain why this has been done?

Mr. Singer: Do, please.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This was brought about, and it affects only section 18 of The Farm Products Marketing Act. This is a special tobacco section. It provides only for production control, and that is the only commodity that is under production control in Ontario under The Farm Products Marketing Act. That is why it is in a separate section.

The problem is this: The old section provided only for the destruction of any growing tobacco plants; in effect, if the grower grew more tobacco than his rights called for under the Act, the farm products marketing board would authorize the local board—that is the flue-cured board—to destroy that tobacco. This is a very difficult thing to move in and do because I think most growers plant, in the initial instance, more tobacco than they have the right to grow. They may cut back the plantings, or the acreage which is not as good as the rest of the crop, so that they then conform to what their rights should be. But, you see, there have been some who have not done this.

This went through all the processes of courts of law right up to the Supreme Court of Ontario, and the flue-cured board was upheld. So, instead of leaving the wording of the Act only for the destroying of any plants, we have made this amendment, which provides for “the seizing, removing, destroying or otherwise disposing of any growing tobacco plants, or the tobacco produced or marketed in violation of this Act.” Because we think that this spells it out much more clearly, it strengthens the hand of control that might be exercised by the flue-cured board. I think this is in keeping with the decision which was handed down by the supreme court.

The other section I read—the last one, the penalty clause—simply provides for an increased penalty other than that provided in section 13 of The Farm Products Marketing Act, which is the general penalty clause of that Act. And the fine is so insignificant that it does not mean anything, really, in a commodity that is as valuable as tobacco. So these clauses were both inserted.

I discussed them with the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), because I knew he was the member for his party in the area where tobacco is grown extensively. I also discussed it with the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. MacDonald) as well, because I quite recognize that this is an introduction, at committee of the whole House, of a completely new section. But the idea for bringing it in was generated by the problems faced by the flue-cured board in this year, 1965. It was felt, through their solicitor and ours, and all the best legal advice we could get, that we should introduce this amendment to provide for the controls which are really intended in the Act.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, certainly I am not sufficiently familiar with the whole marketing scheme for tobacco to quarrel with the hon. Minister on principle. It seems to me, in the few words I have had with my hon. colleagues about this, that the principle he espouses is a reasonable one. But I am very concerned with the arbitrary powers that are given now to a local board to descend upon a man who is growing tobacco and seize it, remove it, destroy it, or otherwise dispose of it, completely on the board's own initiative. It can go in, without any checks, without any balances, and say, “In our opinion you should not be doing this. We are going to take your property and destroy it. We think we are right.” But once it is gone, the individual, if he has been wrongly treated, may have great difficulty establishing any remedy.

To draw a parallel: Suppose the police suspect that X is in possession of stolen goods. They cannot just arbitrarily walk into his house. They have to go to a justice of the peace and get a search warrant. Suppose they come to the conclusion that Y has narcotics that he should not have. They cannot just lightly descend upon him, break down his door and search his place. There are certain legal protections and even though this is a serious problem—and I am not suggesting that this remedy should not be there—I am very concerned about the complete lack of safeguards.

Should there not be some method of proceeding to a justice of the peace and getting a warrant, or establishing somewhere a prima facie case before you go in and destroy a man's property? Should there not be some obligation on the local board to take every possible precaution to make sure that it is not offending an individual's rights? I am very concerned, because here we are extending this pernicious principle of giving to nameless and faceless civil servants—and I have used that phrase often—the power to go in and seize and destroy a person's property, without any safeguards being attached to it all.

I emphasize, Mr. Chairman, I am not suggesting that for the proper control of tobacco marketing perhaps this power should not exist, but I am worried about the safeguards. I am worried about the one farmer who might be hurt by the arbitrary exercise of power by the local board, or by the wrongful exercise of good intention, which is just as bad to the farmer who could be affected. I would urge the hon. Minister to take another look at this and see if there cannot be some sort of set of safeguards put in here. I think it is most important, because I think the hon. Minister would be the last one who would want to empower local boards to act in an arbitrary manner.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, the amendment as proposed does exactly what my hon. friend suggests. It makes much more flexible the action of the flue-cured board in control of the growing of tobacco outside of the rights of any individual, than does the present Act, in its present wording.

If my hon. friend would look, he would note that The Farm Products Marketing Act, section 18, item (d), under subsection 2, reads as follows:

—providing for the destroying of any growing tobacco plants or other development in the producing of tobacco or tobacco produced in Ontario by any person.

It goes on to explain the three conditions under which this may be done.

But our amendment provides not only for the destroying, but for the seizing, removing or destroying or otherwise disposing of. This means that if the farmer persists in growing tobacco illegally, the flue-cured board has then the right to seize the tobacco he grows, and say to him, "You cannot market this tobacco that you have illegally grown." So it provides the safeguard that if he has grown the tobacco, it may be decided then by the courts—as it has been decided this last year—right up to the Supreme Court of Canada's decision, that the man was illegally growing the tobacco and he could not market it in the province of Ontario. But he could get it out of the province of Ontario and market it there and pocket the money so obtained.

Then he could come back to the flue-cured board this year and say to it, "I am going to grow tobacco again." And the board, unless it has this clause, is in the same position it was previously. The board is now provided the opportunity to seize the tobacco and the individual has the rights of British common law, through all the courts, to appeal that decision in any way he possibly may do so.

But the flue-cured board has never moved in to destroy anyone's tobacco yet and it feels, and I think for the reasons that my hon. friend has mentioned, that it is not wise for it to do that. The crop having been destroyed, it finds itself in the position that if a mistake was made, then the right does come back on the individual to say, "Well, I was badly done by, and I should not have had this crop destroyed." But if the crop is seized, after having been grown, as the new subsection provides, it puts the individual in a much better position to plead his case and have a decision rendered, than the old Act does.

I feel that my hon. friend has raised a point that has been given consideration: that the individual is protected to a greater degree, in a more flexible position than he was ever placed in before, and it provides the necessary strength that is so essential to the proper, and I would say effective, control of tobacco growing in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister I do not think has quite grasped my point. I am not arguing the principle of this and I accept the principle. As I say, I am not as familiar with the techniques of tobacco marketing as many other hon. members of the House are, but I have consulted with my hon. colleagues and we accept the hon. Minister's defence of the principle. We think it is reasonable and it is logical.

What do concern me, though, are perhaps what you might want to call the legal niceties of the matter. The problem of placing it in the hands of the local board is what you get down to. This probably means Mr. Smith or somebody on the local board comes to the conclusion that Farmer Jones is doing something improperly and he is going to go in, and on his own initiative, he is going to seize, remove and destroy or otherwise dispose of, any growing tobacco plants.

What I am trying to suggest, Mr. Chairman, is very simple. I think that before Mr. Smith, the administrator of the local board, or the man who makes the decision on the local board, goes this far, that he should have to go before someone and establish at least a prima facie case, perhaps go before a justice of the peace and swear out an affidavit saying that, "In my opinion, so and so—" and the justice of the peace will issue him a warrant to allow him to go in. Some legal protection is needed because I am worried that one case could go wrong.

The hon. Minister says he is not aware of any that have gone wrong, but the hon. Minister would agree with me that it could go wrong, and it could go wrong with honest people, and it could go wrong through arbitrariness or through a clash of personalities. I do not care for what reason it might go wrong; there is a possibility that it might and that an individual's rights could be seriously hampered.

Even though a similar power may be in the Act now, that does not make it right. At present, before the House, we have something in the administrative legal niceties that concerns me, as they might affect the rights of an individual citizen. I would think that if the hon. Minister wants this power—and there seems to be no one objecting that he should have the power—there should, however, be some basis on which we can avoid the possibility of a future mistake.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a bit on this. I would agree with the general proposition of the hon. member for Downsview that we should protect the rights of the individual to the fullest extent necessary. But in my view, as I understand what the government is doing, and as I understand the problem that it has moved to tackle, I think it has protected the rights of the individual adequately. I will explain why.

For example, as I understand the representations of the hon. member for Downsview, what he is proposing is that one should have to go before a justice of the peace or some other such official to establish a prima facie case before one can move to seize this illegally grown tobacco. In my view this is going to complicate the implementation of the objective of this Act and I think complicate it unnecessarily.

The board is not in the normal sense a nameless and faceless civil servant. The local tobacco board is a board that is elected by the producers. It is a board which is fulfilling the collective desires of the producers. Therefore, if it comes to the conclusion that on the evidence on the books it granted so many acres of rights to a producer, and that he has exceeded those rights, then it seems to me irrelevant and unnecessary that the board should have to go to somebody and prove that they would have the right to go in and seize this illegally grown tobacco. It seems to me an unnecessarily costly thing, because as I understand it, and I think the hon. Minister is correct, that if perchance they move wittingly or otherwise in a malicious fashion, then there are all the other normal procedures that the individual may take within the courts.

On the other side of the coin, the one that I am interested in, farmers have been for years trying to come to grips with the problem of how you control production so you do not get a market which is so swamped with a surplus that you destroy the whole stability of the market. This is a very, very complex problem, so much so that the normally cautious small "c" conservative farmer has been grappling with it without really coming to grips with it for a great number of years.

The tobacco board was forced to come to grips with it, and you had—and this is the point that I think we should not ignore—in the instance of the tobacco growers a few people who were deliberately going to violate the collective decisions of the tobacco growers. In effect, they thumbed their nose at the tobacco board and said, "No matter what you say, we are going to grow all the tobacco we want." Then when they grew the tobacco, because of the Act which the hon. Minister is now going to amend, they could not market it through the marketing board in Ontario. But all they had to do was go down to Quebec and market it, and they had the money that they could not get directly from marketing here in Ontario.

In other words, the Act was being circumvented, they were destroying and undermining the whole objective that the farmers are seeking to work out in production control, and all the necessary machinery to achieve production control.

As I understand this amendment will mean that the board can move in and, as the amendment says, they can provide for the seizing, removing, destroying or otherwise disposing of any growing tobacco plants or tobacco produced and marketed in violation of this Act. It seems to me that not only is this an objective of the Act which was very controversial, but this controversy has now been resolved through the courts. The Supreme Court of Canada has said that this is a legitimate power of a local marketing board.

Therefore, in keeping with a plea that I have often made to this government, when you give farmers control of their marketing, give them adequate power to enforce it. My complaint has been that so often the government has come in and frustrated the adequate implementation of marketing objectives. Here, for once, they are coming in to give the local marketing board the power to do the job. As I see it, this power at the moment is going to be exercised, if at all, against people who have been deliberately, openly and without hiding their objectives at all, been seeking to frustrate the whole objective and operations of the marketing board.

Therefore, though I concur with the necessity of protecting the rights of the individual as a general proposition, I think in this instance it has been done. The government has given the power to the farmers. They are entitled to run their own business and operate their own marketing, and we will unhesitatingly support it, but watch its implementation in the future, because this is ongoing and continuing and you always have to watch.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7, formerly sections 5 and 6, agreed to.

Bill No. 140 reported.

THE MUNICIPAL ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 146, an Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, on section 4 I would move that subsection 6 be amended by striking out "a town or city" in the second and third lines, and substituting therefor "an urban municipality." This will take care of a village corporation, then.

Amendment agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 5 to 16, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 17:

Mr. Singer: On section 17, Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister perhaps tell us when he is going to bring in his licensing arrangements?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I hope to bring that into effect on January 1, 1966. I have had a committee of officials of the department discussing this matter with a certain number of members of the executive of the Ontario association of assessing officers, and we have pretty well discussed the manner and method of licensing. There will probably be more than one kind of licence. We have to deal with the assessor who has been in an assessment department for many years and who will continue, and who has, by and large, performed the responsibilities of that office in an efficient manner, but because of his own personal circumstances or conditions does not wish to undertake the in-service training course which we have now provided with the institute of assessors through Queen's University at Kingston. Then we have the new man coming into the field of assessing, and he will be required to take the course and will be required to engage himself to complete the course within a period of no more than five years. I think it will work out satisfactorily, but I hope to have it into effect by the first of the year.

Mr. Singer: I think what the hon. Minister says makes good sense. You cannot just go in and arbitrarily establish a set of qualifications for all existing ones. All new ones certainly should be, and must be, required to meet certain standards. I am also concerned about whether or not—and I suppose this really is not in the Act—there is any intention of making these assessors, licensed or otherwise, abide by the new manuals that you have got.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I am sure the hon. member realizes that this field of activity is one that requires time. I might tell you, for instance, that last night I was in North Bay and met with the representatives of the district of Nipissing municipalities with a view to instituting a district assessor system in that district. There is general interest in this, and I think that we are making some progress in that area.

Tomorrow, I hope to be in Sault Ste. Marie to meet with the representatives of the municipalities of the district of Algoma, and some time in the near future I think my staff and I are going to somewhere in northwestern Ontario to take up the same matter.

Insofar as instituting the manual as mandatory in municipalities, or districts, or counties, I think we have to attack that problem with a great deal of caution, and we have to be certain of exactly where we are going. We cannot just make a carte-blanche order that would cover the whole of the province, or even the whole of the county. But our manual is meeting with general acceptance. Our own staff people in the assessment branch have all been trained to train others in the use of the manual, and we are, I am quite confident, making progress as fast as one would wish. I think in the days ahead we will make even greater progress, and we have to sell it to certain people who are a little concerned. There is a certain amount of misunderstanding among the local politicians who think that if their assessment is conducted under a county assessment commissioner system or under a district assessor, that they lose local autonomy, while actually, if they look at The Assessment Act, they have no authority to tell the assessor what to do in the first place; but that opinion is expressed from time to time. The assessors, on the other hand, are sometimes afraid to talk to the local politicians—and with very great respect I mention that. However, I think we are making progress, and our objective certainly is to do everything possible to improve assessment practice and assessment generally in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am amused that the Minister is finding these words "local autonomy" coming back to haunt him.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Oh, they are not haunting me at all. I have lived with them for 35 years.

Mr. Singer: You fellows have ground forth this great idol of local autonomy, and frequently it does come back to haunt you. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, at this time when the Minister is going to embark on the system of licensing, which I think is a good one, that he perhaps has an excellent opportunity, which will not occur to him again, to lay down methods by which he and his department advisers think the assessment should be conducted. In other words, while you are licensing them, the licence and the manual can—and should, perhaps—go out together. But use this opportunity, starting on January 1, to begin to promote a uniform system of assessment.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I might say to the hon. member that I have been a salesman all my life, and in this very field I think that one has to do some selling; and I am using every facility at my disposal to reach the objectives we have in mind.

Sections 18 to 27, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 28:

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, in the unavoidable absence of my colleague from Yorkview (Mr. Young), I move that subsection 3 of section 28 of Bill No. 146 be amended by adding thereto the following:

18. The council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto may pass any of the bylaws referred to in this section with respect to any class or classes of shops in the said municipality, and where such a bylaw is passed it shall supersede any bylaw respecting the same class or classes of shops passed by an area municipality.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the hon. members not support this amendment because, as you know, we have just now received the report of the Goldenberg commission which deals with this very matter of licensing, and other matters allied to it. There is, at the present time, no request from the Metro municipalities to provide this legislation; and, as far as I know, none of the Metro municipalities have early closing bylaws in effect at the present time.

I think this is a matter which should be left for a year, or left until we deal with the whole question of Metro in all of its aspects.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, I hope we do not turn the Goldenberg report into an excuse for doing nothing even where action is clearly required and is quite possible. The hon. Minister is well aware, I think, of the problems with regard to early closing bylaws in an area such as this. I discussed it in this House, and in standing committees of the House, on numerous occasions. Making it a municipal function really makes it meaningless to an important degree, because the official boundaries of municipalities in expanding urban areas no longer relate to the actual trading areas concerned.

This is a problem, as I said on second reading of this bill, in all the major urban areas of the province, but it is a particularly acute problem in the Metropolitan Toronto area. The city of Toronto for years had sensible, coherent, early closing bylaws, which were supported by the overwhelming majority of merchants in the various trades concerned and also, I think, by the public. I think the public is not anxious, or the majority of the public is not anxious, to exploit small merchants, and put them in a "dog-eat-dog" form of competition where they have to stay open for 15 or 16 hours a day. There was protection when the trading area here was embraced mainly within the boundaries of the city of Toronto; but, of course, as we know, the area expanded, and out in the suburbs anything goes.

This is most difficult for the merchants in the suburban areas themselves, and it also kicks back on the merchants in Toronto. They have early closing bylaws in some trades; but they face competition from discount houses, quasi-department stores and so on, which stay open almost all the time, largely on the basis of the lowest possible wages they can get away with. The merchant in the city of Toronto is put in an extremely difficult position, not to speak of the small man in the suburban area. The Goldenberg report, if implemented, might alleviate the problem by reducing the number of area municipalities but it still will not solve it.

I spoke earlier of a case at the corner of Bathurst and St. Clair, where a gasoline station is half in the city of Toronto and half in the township of York. After seven o'clock at night, when the city bylaw comes into effect, it closes down its pumps in the city of Toronto and keeps its pumps in the township of York open all night. That particular anomaly will be eliminated if the Goldenberg report is implemented in its present form, but there will be still other anomalies. It is quite possible that there may be an establishment, half in one of the new municipalities and half in the other which will carry on on that sort of basis.

However, I do not think we have to speak in terms of special cases; much better to speak in terms of the general case, and the general case is that the small merchant is being ground down steadily. We hear so many noble comments about how we should encourage small business, but when the chips are down it is usually the big guy who is listened to, and I am getting fed up with it. It is only because of Towers, and a few people like that, that we do not have proper regulation of store hours in this city. It seems to me that opening one or at most two evenings per week, is quite sufficient to meet all the legitimate needs of the public; bylaws should be constructed which will prevent opening at any other time, and which will give the merchant an opportunity for some rest and recreation. In fact, I would think, if they are going to be open, say, two evenings a week, it would be desirable to have a compensating afternoon off, or something like that when all the stores will have to close. This will not hurt the public. It will help the merchant.

The problem the small merchant is up against now is that if somebody else stays open, then he has to stay open too, or he will lose business. The net result is that they all end up by staying open. They end up by all working, shall we say, six, eight, or ten more hours per week, but they do not get any more business than they got in the first place because the business is just spread over a longer period of time. They may very well lose money by virtue of the fact that their overhead is increased by the longer hours. But you will always get somebody who thinks he can get an advantage over the others by staying open when the others are closed. Of course, the advantage is temporary because the others are forced to open up if one opens up.

I am suggesting to the hon. Minister that, when he says there are no early closing bylaws in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, he is not entirely right. There is a certain truth in what he says, and I think we could amend his statement to say, "There are no effective early closing bylaws," because it is impossible to do this job effectively on the basis of the area municipality. The only effective way it can be done is through the Metro municipality. This amendment does not require the metropolitan municipality to do anything, it just empowers them to do it, subject to the general provisions of the Act. So if there is no demand for the Metro municipality to act under the amendment, no harm will be done. But I suspect that as soon as it is discovered that the Metro municipality has this power—if they should get it—then there will be moves on the part of merchants in various places to have Metro bylaws enacted. Then the regular provisions of the Act can come into operation, and all the conditions that have to be met will be met, otherwise there will be no bylaw.

The hon. Minister is simply evading the issue. There certainly is no reason for delay until after the Goldenberg report. The amendment does not affect the basic reorganization of the area. It is merely an attempt to give meaning to section 379 (a) that now exists in The Municipal Act, with respect to Metro Toronto. That section is close to meaningless now. It is couched in terms of a totally antiquated type of municipal organization, and why should we not make it meaningful? If the section should be in the Act at all, then why should it not be meaningful in Metro Toronto? Why should not the power be given to a council that can act in such a way as to make it effective?

The hon. Minister's objections, I submit to the committee are completely specious, and I would ask some of the hon. private members on the Conservative side to express their views on this matter. I believe that some of them, being a little closer to the people perhaps than the hon. Minister, who is preoccupied with his duties down here, are well aware of the kind of problem I am talking about in this Metro Toronto area.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I cannot find myself in agreement with the remarks of the hon. member for Woodbine. If he is so anxious to draft early closing bylaws, I would suggest that he get himself elected to a municipal council and therein, in that position, he will be able to determine whether there should be Wednesday afternoons, or Saturday nights, or whatever it is.

But this is a very serious problem. It has been talked about for as long as I have been in local politics, and in provincial politics. The city of Toronto, and my friend the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) and my friend, the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman), over the years must have filled ten cabinets full of briefs arguing for and against early closing bylaws and how they should—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): And I bear scars, too.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions is showing the scars that he has suffered from these various battles.

In 1959, Mr. Chairman, the Metropolitan Toronto council, at the urging of a number of merchants who wanted uniform closing bylaws, had a series of hearings, and long and many representations were made by a great number of people. The city of Toronto had just completed the same thing and they turned over two or three of their filing cabinets full of information. But these hearings went on, and the metropolitan council, in their wisdom at that time, came to the conclusion that they did not want to ask the provincial government for the power to have uniform early closing bylaws. So that request never came forward. It was the decision of the council of that day, that they did not want to get into this.

Now I think the hon. Minister makes a very valid point. The Goldenberg report, when it is implemented—and I presume it is going to be implemented in some way—certainly recommends changes about licensing. That is going to have to be a consideration. There is no point now in attempting to do this, because there is a variety of interests. You cannot compare the small merchants, say, on the Danforth with the small merchants who are in a shopping centre in North York or in Scarborough. You cannot compare the shopping habits of the people who want to take the tour through a shopping centre on a Friday night or a Saturday afternoon, with the shopping habits of the people who might want to shop down at Bay and Richmond on Wednesday afternoon.

There is a very substantial argument, insofar as early closing bylaws are concerned, about doing it by regions. I do not think there is any great magic in drawing the Metro line, either for administrative purposes, certainly for early closing purposes, at Steeles Avenue, because as anyone who is familiar with the area knows, there are several shopping centres located just immediately north of Steeles Avenue. I would suspect one of their considerations in so locating is that they will beat any type of regulation.

North York, Scarborough and Etobicoke, the councils sitting in those municipalities, have, over the years, deliberately refrained from passing early closing bylaws. The city of Toronto council has had different concepts, and I would think that it would be only after very careful consideration, that the system of local determination should be changed. If you are going to change it at all, I do not think you are making any sense by giving it to Metro, when north of Steeles and east towards the Ontario county boundary on one side and the Peel county boundary on the other side, you are going to get people who will deliberately locate there to beat it.

Let me give just one simple illustration, Mr. Chairman, about how easy it is to beat it when you tie it into artificial lines. There is a gas station in Hogg's Hollow, just north of the city limits on Yonge Street. It has had the greatest gallonage of any gas station in the whole of the metropolitan area for the last great number of years, merely because it was beyond the city of Toronto boundaries and in the North York area. It was not bound by early closing bylaws. It has never once entered into a gas war, and it did, certainly in my time there, and I think still today, pumps more gas than any other station in the whole area.

Now if it can do that there, certainly north of Steeles it can do exactly the same thing. I would have strong criticism about tying North York—or early closing bylaws—into the artificial boundaries of Steeles Avenue. If it is going to be done, then you have to do it regionally, to make any sense.

So for those reasons I cannot support, nor can my colleagues support, the amendment of the hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. Bryden: It is nice to see what side the Liberals are on. I thought at one time that they were in favour of trying to get some rationality in this matter. We have had some battles in the past, with particular reference to gasoline stations. In standing committees they took a very strong line, and I always thought they were in favour of rationality. Now the hon. member for Downsview makes a characteristic jibe, one that is characteristic of him, that if I want to draft municipal bylaws, I should get into municipal politics. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that that, of course, is completely irrelevant. The amendment does not draft any municipal bylaws, it merely would give a certain power to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. The hon. member for Downsview is quite right when he says that the sensible way to deal with this whole problem is on a regional basis. I would think that the province should take responsibility itself and deal with it, probably through The Department of Labour. The only trouble is that a few years ago, the government decided in the exact opposite direction. The whole matter had been under the jurisdiction of The Department of Labour and was moved over to the jurisdiction of The Department of Municipal Affairs. Admittedly, there was no significant change made in the law, but the point is that the whole concept of regional regulations was thrown out at that time. However, Mr. Chairman, it is possible to achieve a certain degree of regional regulation, at least in this Toronto area. There is always going to be a problem of boundaries. If the boundary is not Steeles, you may get a little north of Steeles, but there will still be somebody beyond that boundary. The point is that the present boundaries of the Metro municipality embrace most of the trading area, and in the face of a firm government determination that it will not deal with this on a regional basis, I would suggest that it should at least be dealt with sensibly, or we should give the power for it to be dealt with sensibly within this area.

I am well aware that the council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto decided it would be very happy to get out from under the whole problem back in 1959. That is not exactly what you would call a courageous approach to a problem, but that is the attitude they took. They will still be able to get out from under, even if this amendment passes, but they will not be able to get out from under it on the claim that they have no power. They are, at least, going to have to face the question.

I think the service station operators may be in a position to go to them again and make them face up to the question and determine it, not on the basis of a lack of power to act, but on the basis of a policy decision. If they decide in their wisdom they are not going to do anything about it, that is up to them, and they can account to their own electorate when the time comes. I just cannot understand this Liberal approach that perhaps something should be done about the problem, but not now. This is an opportunity to do something about it. It would help to rationalize the problem in the Metro area, failing any possibility of getting a decision by the government to deal with it on a regional basis throughout the province.

One last point I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that as far as the merchants in the shopping centres are concerned, many of them are prisoners of the shopping centres. Most shopping centres have one or two big stores; those big stores want to stay open and the small merchants are compelled to do the same. They have no option, the shopping centres dictate the hours when they must stay open. There are people, hon. members of this House, who unfortunately are not present right now, who can tell you about that because they are personally involved in the situation and they resent it very much. A change in the law such as we have proposed would at least create the possibility of remedying that sort of situation.

Mr. Chairman: Moved by Mr. Renwick that section 3 of section 28 of Bill No. 146, be amended by adding thereto the following:

The council of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto may pass any of the bylaws referred to in this section with respect to any class or classes of shops in the said municipality, and where such a bylaw is passed it shall supersede any bylaw respecting the same class or classes of shops, passed by the council of an area municipality.

All those in favour please say "aye."

All those opposed, please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

All those in favour of the motion will please rise.

All those opposed, will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 5, the "nays" 51.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Section 28 agreed to.

On section 29:

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I have a slight correction in section 29, page 16, 379 (e) (1). I move that subsection 1 of section 379 (e) be amended by inserting after the word "imposed" in the tenth line, "upon the owners of such building." This is to make it clear that these special charges are to be imposed upon the owners of the buildings that impose a heavy load on the sewer or water systems.

Motion agreed to.

Section 29, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 30 to 39, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 146 reported.

THE ASSESSMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 164, An Act to amend The Assessment Act.

On section 1:

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, with reference to section 1 of the bill, I move that paragraph 9 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

9. Subject to section 43, the property belonging to any county or municipality or vested in or controlled by any public commission, municipal parking authority or local board, as defined by The Department of Municipal Affairs Act, except property of a harbour commission used for the parking of vehicles for which a fee is charged, wherever situate and whether occupied for the purposes thereof or unoccupied but not when occupied by a tenant or a lessee.

I gave an explanation of that on second reading.

Mr. Singer: What have you done about the school board?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I have taken it out; I have left only the property of a harbour commission used for the parking of vehicles for which a fee is charged.

Mr. Singer: Okay.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2:

Hon. Mr. Spooner: In section 2, Mr. Chairman, I move that subsection 1 of section 21 be amended by inserting after "guidance of assessors" which is at the end of the third line, the words "in valuating lands"—three words.

Of course, that is what assessors do. If I were an assessor I would consider that that was exactly my responsibility. I might tell you that it was the law branch that brought this matter to my attention in order that we could be very specific.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 6 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Mr. Chairman, I move that section 9 be amended by adding the following as subsection 2:

Subsection 2. Subsections 9, 10, 13 and 14 of the said section 131 are repealed.

These sections have reference to the matter in 9 (a).

Mr. Singer: What is the effect of taking them out?

Hon. Mr. Spooner: Wait until I quote from the Act.

This section deals with cancellations, reductions and refunds of taxes. We are deleting all that authority in the Act. Section 9 dealt with limitations and restrictions. The period of vacancy had to be more than four months in any period, and so on. Section 10 was limitations and restrictions re vacancies insofar as pipelines were concerned, section 13 dealt with the fact that an application for a rebate of taxes was not applicable to unimproved lands and real estate that had a fixed assessment, and section 14 of the said Act was to the effect that a rebate did not apply in respect of taxes levied for local improvement.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

Section 10 and 11 agreed to.

Bill No. 164 reported.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES' RETIREMENT SYSTEM ACT, 1961-1962

House in committee on Bill No. 165, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement System Act, 1961-1962.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Hon. Mr. Spooner: There is an amendment there, Mr. Chairman. I move that section 3 be amended by inserting, after the word "Act," in the first line, "except section 1," and by adding thereto the following subsection:

2. Section 1 comes into force on January 1, 1966.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

Bill No. 165 reported.

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor recommends the following:

That,

where an emergency exists in Ontario or any part thereof the president of the executive council, or a member of the executive council designated by him, may require any municipality in Ontario to provide such assistance as is deemed necessary to the emergency area or any part thereof and may authorize the payment of the cost of such assistance out of the consolidated revenue fund, as provided by Bill No. 166, An Act to amend The Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963.

Resolution concurred in.

THE EMERGENCY MEASURES ACT, 1962-1963

House in committee on Bill No. 166, An Act to amend The Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 166 reported.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour) moves that the committee rise and report a certain resolution and certain bills without amendment and certain bills with amendments.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report a certain resolution, and certain bills without amendment and certain bills with amendment.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 76th order. House in committee of supply; Mr. N. Whitney in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE (continued)

On vote 1705:

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, before we get into this vote there was a little exchange, or excitable altercation, here last night to which I should like to make reference.

We on this side of the House were discussing the numbers of working women in the province, and the reasons for said women working, and the requirements for day nurseries. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) rose to correct the use of a term that I had put forth: of the "vast majority" of working women having to work for economic reasons.

I admit that I was speaking from memory and he was rather decisive in his correction. I want to say to him, and to the House, Mr. Chairman, because I think it is rather important, that I went back last night to the literature which exists. I now have before me the study, in eight Canadian cities, on married women working for pay; the analysis of the available material in "The Family in Canada" by Frederick Elkin; "Women Workers in a Changing World," the UNESCO study; plus the federal material which is available.

Without quoting directly from them, I want to inform this House that on one thing are they agreed; anywhere from 75 per cent to 80 per cent of married women working do so for economic necessity and for economic objectives.

If 75 per cent to 80 per cent is to be considered a misinterpretation of the phrase "vast majority," then I will again withdraw the phrase. But I say to this House that that is precisely the fact that is on record; if there is any scepticism, let me refer to Elkin's study, "The Family in Canada," and its chapter on "Working Women." He says:

From the point of view of the women themselves, economic motives are of paramount importance in their decision to take a job.

And a further quote:

The Tremblay and Fortin study in Quebec arrived at the same conclusion. In three out of four cases in which wives work, she is forced to do so because the family suffers a serious deficit in the general budget.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would like to point out that, on a point of order, the statement is usually brief. I believe that this is developing into another speech.

Mr. S. Lewis: You are right. I will not proceed further. I simply think, in view of the animation last night, that some of this should be put on the record.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I do not think there was any animation in relation to the point I raised. My observation came from the use of the words "vast majority," and what I took as an inference and an implication that practically all working women worked because of economic need. I do not want to get into a play on words; the hon. member this morning has used the words "economic objectives," even though that phrase opens up a vast area as to whether it is actual need or not. However, we are not going to get into that but, in support of the reason why I took the position I did last evening, it was because as recently as within the last three weeks I have personally discussed this matter with respect to the position of women in the work force on the North American continent with the head of the women's bureau of The US Department of Labour. And the trend and general impression of the remarks I made were those which I had gained from the director of that bureau in the last two to three weeks.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): On vote 1705, sir, I think at the end of the evening, in discussing what the hon. Minister's (Mr. Cecile's) field staff did, he said he preferred to talk about this under finance and administrative branch. I would like to suggest to the hon. Minister that it might be possible that I misunderstood him. He was saying that there could be a case load of 350 to 400 a year. He reported that the job which they had, in some cases, would be one interview a year and in other cases it would be two. But surely the hon. Minister must have his staff doing more than this. I am referring to an article that was in the Globe and Mail on February 16, 1965, and it said this:

Welfare Minister Louis Cecile's continuing ignorance of the work of his department, is a wondrous thing. Apparently he told the legislative committee on health, education and welfare that very few people on welfare lists were employable. Apparently he had not seen the report prepared in the office of his Deputy Minister, Mr. James Band, and published last April, of a demonstrative project concerning 100 long-term welfare families.

The gist of the report was that after counselling, 42 per cent of the families left the welfare rolls, 21 per cent because they found employment. That is not very few. Evidently Mr. Cecile still believes that most persons on welfare are not good for anything else.

The point I am making is that when we are asking you what your field staff does, you are still coming back to the same old record, that all they do is just go out and make one visit or, in some cases, two visits. Surely the emphasis that you should be making, particularly in view of this project, is one of counselling to help people stand on their feet. I would ask if the hon. Minister would re-clarify that position for us because, frankly, I found it shocking if that is all that he thinks his staff is doing. I am sure the hon. Minister did not mean to give that impression.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I am sure I did not mean to give the impression that my hon. friend has, nor that that the newspaper got. The newspaper reporter, I am sure, did not get the meaning either. But that does not bother me at all. They can think of me what they like.

I might say that the caseload for a person is 400 per year. There might be 100 visits a month, it might be 120 a month, but the statutory visits for all categorical old age assistance and that sort of thing, is at least once a year. Many visits are made more than that. They might make 50 visits in a week for that matter if they were able to do that. They might have seen something there in that particular home which they would like to review again. But the caseload, as such, is about 400 a year. I do not know if I have made myself any clearer.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear from the hon. Minister, what is the object of this interview that the case worker will have?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: To clarify myself, this is the information I get. A person makes an application for assistance under the categorical programmes, disabled, blind or old age assistance. The first visit is to investigate the case, to find out, to make the report. That is the statutory visit, the first visit. Then he might go back and visit the same case many times in a week or a month, but 400 of these cases might come up, and that is his load. That is what I mean.

Now, in respect to the mothers' allowances, two visits are necessary per year, one every six months because the cancellations are made on that basis. As far as old age assistance is concerned, it has to be done at least once a year.

But for the new cases, if I may use that expression, the case load might be for many visits.

There is the first visit—the statutory visit—then it is done yearly, but it does not mean to say that he might not visit that very same case many times during the year.

Mr. Thompson: I just want—

Mr. Chairman: Order! I would suggest that this is properly dealt with in the field services branch, which was passed last night.

Mr. Thompson: I would say, Mr. Chairman, with deep respect to you, that the hon. Minister said that he wanted us to discuss this under this particular item rather than under field services.

Mr. Chairman: Well, then it is quite all right.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I thought, Mr. Chairman, it was discussed last night, but I have no objection to discussing this with my hon. friend again. I am trying to make myself clear to him.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I may say that I am really trying to clarify what I think would be a very bad impression made by the hon. Minister. Last night he said that the purpose of his field staff was to report and investigate. I would hope that it would also be to rehabilitate and to get people on their feet, but I think the very omission of that shows a lack of philosophy, and that is why I am glad that you say "Oh, yes." I think I would put it at the head of the purpose of your field staff, to rehabilitate, report and investigate. That is the kind of philosophy I would like to see.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think, Mr. Chairman, that was expressed in my opening remarks. However, we were discussing, as I thought last night, the case load. For example, in a certain district there might be 400 cases that can arise. Counsellors visit and counsel on rehabilitation. I am sure this is the decision of the supervisor first and then the field worker himself. I quite agree that perhaps that should head the list—rehabilitation.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, last night the hon. Minister was asked how many of his staff had a bachelor of social work and he gave us some figures. Is it the desire of the hon. Minister that as many as possible of his staff should have such social work training, and that he feels there is a lack of such training?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I think I would be remiss if I said no to this question. I think we do. But at the same time I must confess that I think the people who do not have these degrees, but who have training in the field and deal with people generally, do not require these degrees as much as those who are supervisors, who are instructors and who guide these field workers. It would be an absolute impossibility to get everyone with a degree. My department wants to take full advantage of what we have to offer, and not to take away some of the experts from the other fields of welfare services such as children's aid. But our aim is to get as many people with degrees as we possibly can.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would agree with the hon. Minister, he would be remiss if he were not trying to get properly trained people. I suggest he is remiss. I want to quote from an article by Scott Young, which was in the Globe and Mail of March 23, 1965.

Mr. Chairman: I would ask, is this still on vote 1704?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, vote 1704.

Mr. Chairman: This was passed last night. We have allowed quite a lot of latitude, and I must rule any further discussion on 1704 out of order. We are dealing with vote 1705 and this matter should have been dealt with under 1704.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask you, Mr. Chairman, how do you know what I am going to bring forward in this article by Scott Young, before you rule?

Mr. Chairman: I asked you if it dealt with vote 1704 and you said it did, so that is sufficient. Vote 1704 was passed, and I announced we were dealing with vote 1705. We have allowed some latitude on 1704, but we feel that that has gone far enough as vote 1704 was passed last night.

Mr. Thompson: I will deal with 1705 then, under administration. And I suggest that under administration you need administrators. And if you are going to have to have administrators, you need to have trained people, I think this is very pertinent. And, therefore, I come back to Scott Young and he said, and I quote:

Here we are, back with administration, and who actually would function, who would be the people who would make the administration.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, it is a logical and incisive man who agrees with me on this point:

Here we come right down to the good old blue nose Ontario.

So says Scott Young.

The hon. Minister has just said that he would be remiss if he was not trying to encourage more qualified social workers. Waterloo Lutheran University wants to establish a school of social work, in order to get administrators, so they would be able to work under the financing of this particular section. But because this university has a specific religious faith, it does not qualify under the policy limiting Ontario educational grants to non-denominational schools. Already there is one exception to this rule.

St. Patrick's in Ottawa. This Roman Catholic college receives provincial financial aid for its school of social work, but gets it from the public welfare department rather than the education department.

Now I would ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, in view of the fact that he said he feels he would be remiss if he did not have qualified administrators, why he is not giving a grant to Waterloo University, in order that it can have a school of social work. When he, I know, agrees with me, that there is a great dearth of qualified social workers, why he is not giving a grant to Waterloo Lutheran University, when he gives it to the University of Ottawa?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): The trouble is, when they graduate, they become politicians.

Mr. Thompson: And very few; there should be more. There is a great need for more.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In politics?

Mr. Thompson: I asked that question of the hon. Minister, sir.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am sympathetic with the views of the hon. leader of the Opposition in this matter, as I stated last night.

I am sympathetic with your views in this matter, that a school should be opened, but as you know, there was a great demand at the time from the Ottawa university in that particular respect. How it came about, personally I do not know, nor how I can explain it, but it did come about at any rate.

As to the Lutheran university, I might confess to you that I have tried to do this personally, but apparently the law would not allow it. How it did in the first instance, I do not know. I cannot explain this.

Mr. Thompson: Is it illegal?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The regulations as set out in The Department of Education Act, I believe, or whatever Act there is in The Department of Education dealing with these matters, do not allow it, but for some reason or another, it was passed through this department for purposes which I have not available to me now. It was seven or eight years ago, I believe, that it was brought about and it was payment through my department. Because it was there, I was able to maintain it. If I could find a way to do the same thing for the Lutheran people, I would have no objection to it, I can assure you, because we need these schools, and that is about as much as I can tell you.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Minister, I appreciate this very much. We have heard that if a way can be found for you to do it, that you will do it. I wish that the session was a bit longer, because I would be in touch with the Lutheran people. I look forward to presenting to you a way by which you can do it, I appreciate that we will have your whole-hearted support and I know that when we have that, things get done. Thank you.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I find this a trifle amusing. I suspect the hon. leader of the Opposition does too, because he will remember at the back of his mind the forthrightly negative stand taken by the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) when this precise matter was raised.

I would like to offer an observation on this business of a school of social work, Mr. Chairman, because I think we perhaps discuss it in a somewhat flippant fashion. I am not at all persuaded, frankly, that Waterloo Lutheran is precisely the place for the next school of social work in the province of Ontario. I suspect there are a great many reasons other than the so-called religious one that motivated the response of the hon. Minister of Education in the earlier debate.

I suspect it because when you open up a school of social work, you need a minimum of five full professors, you need in the first year a minimum of 25 to 50 students, and you need a minimum of $250,000 self-sustaining, which a private institution might not carry. Graduate schools of social work require around them a very heavy network of other graduate schools in order to sustain them, and if I understand it properly, Waterloo Lutheran probably does not have that network of graduate departments. Above all, you need a system of agencies in the community, to which students can be referred for field work, and the complex in that particular geographic urban area may not permit it.

I have used "may" all the way through, because I am not certain. But I suspect that some of those reasons operated in the back of the mind of the hon. Minister of University Affairs, or Education, whichever cap he was wearing. I do not think we should allow it to become merely a diversion because of the so-called religious factor. St. Pat's university obviously could sustain these things, and met all these various arguments.

Surely the way in which we establish the next school of social work in the province of Ontario is for the advisory committee of university presidents to sit down with the requisite departmental people and decide where that school should go. Then we go to the university which is number one on the priority list, and say, "Should it be here? Would you have it here?" And if not, then we go to another.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this business of social work education and training at the upper level is obviously the crux not only of this department, but of all the others in this general field. I have some observations I would like to make on the field, but I remember the hon. Minister last night saying that he had a statement on this vote and I suspect that it would be more appropriate if he made his statement, than if I jumped in, and I wonder whether he would consider doing so.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I was hoping to do that.

Over the past year, the in-service staff training and development programme for departmental personnel has gone forward and should continue to progress in the year ahead. There are two types of in-service training: (a) The formal six-week training course of orientation and instruction and (b) on-the-job training.

The formal six-week course under the guidance of an experienced training supervisor consists of four weeks of classroom instruction plus two weeks of closely supervised field calls. The classroom work involves a study of how the various public agencies engage in the provision of welfare services, the meaning of departmental policy and detailed knowledge of the legislation and forms pertinent to the administrative field. An examination of private agency roles is undertaken and instruction is given in interviewing techniques, development psychology and human behaviour.

The two weeks of field work involve cases selected from the case load of the Toronto district workers. Actual cases are assigned. The trainee is briefed and calls are made. The results are then analyzed and critized by the training supervisor. Graduates from the course are returned to the field to work under decreasing supervision, as indicated. They may work in various capacities — welfare field workers, welfare allowance officers, regional administrators and rehabilitation counsellors.

During the past year, 54 staff members successfully completed this training course. Forty-four are now working as welfare field workers, five as rehabilitation counsellors, two as welfare allowance officers, one as a regional administrator, one as a departmental nutritionist and one as a departmental auditor. A minimum of 43 welfare field workers and 15 rehabilitation counsellors are expected to be trained on this course during the 1965-66 fiscal year, plus a number of staff who will serve in other capacities.

On-the-job training continues to be emphasized and developed. This takes the form of intensive supervision and individual instruction. For example, during the past year, particular attention was paid to this type of training for seven welfare allowance officers, five desertion unit officers, five child welfare supervisors, three administrative assistants and nine rehabilitation counsellors. The rehabilitation training supervisor, in addition to giving nine counsellors on-the-job training, has been responsible for providing the necessary professional supervision to six students, placed for field training with the rehabilitation services branch of the University of Toronto school of social work.

Twenty of the 38 counsellors on the staff of the rehabilitation services branch have full professional qualifications, that is post-graduate degrees in social work or psychology or an equivalent education from a British or European professional social work training institution; 12 counsellors have a BA degree, while six have grade 13 or partial university education. Because it is the policy of the department to raise the qualifications of these counsellors to professional level, all undergo a six-month in-service training programme, under the direction of a specialist in social work education. At a later stage this is followed by educational leave on full salary, to enable these counsellors in training to attend a school of social work.

In addition to the above, of course, the branch also offers field work instruction to six students from the University of Toronto school of social work, to provide opportunity for students to obtain qualification as rehabilitation counsellors. Two students from the welfare services course at the Ryerson polytechnical institute have been similarly trained in the general welfare assistance branch and the field services branch. An increasing number of staff members have been encouraged by the department to avail themselves of various opportunities for individual development and advancement through extension courses at the university and at the Ryerson polytechnical institute. Some one dozen persons are presently involved in this type of evening or correspondence training. They are variously proceeding towards completion, at McMaster University, of the certificate course in social welfare, the Ryerson certificate course in public administration, and the BA degree for entrance to a school for social work. Upon the successful completion of each year of study, it is anticipated that there will now be full reimbursement for the cost sustained by these employees.

The department continues to participate in the training of municipal welfare officers and children's aid society staffs. During the past year, the training supervisor gave a municipal welfare services course to a number of local welfare officers at the Lakehead. The officers attending this course showed noteworthy enthusiasm for the instruction. There is no question but that they have carried back, to their several municipalities, increased knowledge and determination to improve their respective local administrations.

Some of the instructional staff is drawn from our child welfare branch for the training courses under the auspices of the association of children's aid societies. They are senior personnel from this branch and they represent the various branch units. A staff member assigned to each one aspect of the course may also sit as a student in other aspects of the course, to take formal lectures in an area of child welfare which may be less familiar to him.

It is anticipated, further, that a number of homemaker training courses will be given by department personnel in various municipalities and homemakers agencies. This will help to alleviate the shortage of trained homemakers and encourage the development of this service, particularly in the rural municipalities where it is now lacking. At the end of the fiscal year, the province will recover 50 per cent of the cost of these courses from the Dominion government.

The department has assigned a rehabilitation training supervisor, and a director of field services, to specific lecturing duties at the University of Toronto school of social work, and the welfare services courses at the Ryerson polytechnical institute. Valuable student contact is thus obtained and, for students so inquiring, they have been able to describe the various employment opportunities available in the department.

The Minister's advisory council for public welfare training was established in February 1961 under the chairmanship of Professor Charles E. Hendry, director of Toronto University school of social work. The other members who represent public and private sectors of the community include Mr. James Band, the Reverend Swithin Bowers, Mr. Stuart Legg, Miss Robena Morris, and Miss Bessie Touzel.

There are three major purposes: First, to promote ways and means of continuing the recruiting of suitable persons for training and placement in the public welfare services, Toronto, Ontario; second, to consider and recommend measures for the advanced training of personnel for service in the public welfare field in Ontario; and third, to study and recommend measures to encourage the further development of the present programmes and facilities for the education and training of social workers, with specific reference to the public welfare services of Ontario.

Among the accomplishments of the council are four noteworthy achievements:

1. Under the guidance of the council, representations were made to the federal authorities to stimulate the formation and realization of the present national welfare training grant policy. The Ontario representations were among those which were the most forthright and they put their case forth with great vigour and conviction.

2. Primarily as a result of the well-documented Ontario representations, the welfare training nursery programme has been greatly extended to facilitate the professional and vocational education of social workers at the postgraduate and technician levels. The number of bursaries for students at schools of social work has been increased, from some half dozen in 1961 to 27 in 1963, and to 34 in 1964. Bursary assistance for students on the welfare services course at Ryerson polytechnical institute is encouraging in making possible this type of necessary training at the technician level.

3. The concept of formal training at the technician level was born out of the deliberations of the council in this regard. This concept has now come to fruition, with the establishment of the two-year welfare services training programme at Ryerson. The concern and interest on the part of my colleague, the hon. Minister of University Affairs, helped immeasurably in the realization of this programme. The Ryerson staff have also lent the most genuine support to the development of this much needed training facility.

4. Under the guidance of the council, the department has published a booklet entitled, Social Work, A Rewarding Career. This has been widely distributed, particularly to the university students across the province in the liberal arts graduating years.

The upsurge of interest in professional social work shown by such university students is in part related to the intensive distribution of this well-written document. At the present time, the schools of social work are receiving many more student applications than can be approved for admission, and suitable candidates are having to postpone their graduation education in this field. The schools of social work have apparently been unable to develop a suitable number of field placements, or training locations, and this has had some control of the student intake. Now the council is concentrating on the development of a suitable training course for staff employed in children's institutions, and it is anticipated that this type of training will be undertaken at a very early date.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have a variety of questions. The first is that I have a table of the numbers of full-time students in the masters programme in Ottawa and Toronto, by the field of practice in which they were taking their field instruction. This is dated November 1, 1963. It is rather interesting, and a little disturbing, and I do not quite understand it. There are a large number in child welfare—about 40. There are a large number in family agencies—56 in total. And there are large numbers in the field of psychiatric care—33. But not a single student from either Ottawa or Toronto is in the field of public assistance; not one, doing their field training. I am wondering now whether there is any way of providing an inducement, or some stimulus, to bring some of these social work people into the field of public assistance?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: To what year was my hon. friend referring?

Mr. S. Lewis: This is November 1, 1963.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: In 1964 we had one in it, I understand.

Mr. S. Lewis: You had a student?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Yes.

Mr. S. Lewis: How is it that there is such a disproportionate number, Mr. Minister? You have anywhere from 20 to 50 in other fields—even in the area of correction there are eight doing their field work—and yet in public assistance, in the public sector of the welfare field, not a single student was doing field work at that time. You say there is one now. I would have thought that this is going to make life rather difficult for the public side.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that this was started in 1964, and we now have six students. I presume that the study of the council will also try to carry on further and raise that interest which my hon. friend describes.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. Minister: In order to attract people—I am thinking of graduates, into the field—have you got a promotional service? I know other provinces where they have, for example, a film showing the actual work a social worker would do in public welfare. I can think of one province where they show the mode of travel out in rural areas, and show the type of cases he has. It is a very attractive film, which goes to high schools and other areas. I wondered what kind of promotion the hon. Minister has.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised that we have no such thing as a film showing here. I am also advised that this booklet, about which I spoke a moment ago, has really quite an impact and has proven very successful. Perhaps my hon. friend's idea is a good one and I will have a look at that.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, what does the hon. Minister think of the possibility of undergraduate programmes in the province of Ontario in fields of social welfare and social work? Has his department, in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Education, given any thought to this?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Actually, Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend will appreciate that this is really a matter for university officials to some extent. I can assure him that, as we have in other programmes now, our officials are looking at this. As for the policy being defined at the present time, as I stated before, we will leave it to the universities themselves. I cannot say that anything has jelled as yet between the officials, but this matter is being looked into to see if the encouragement and the push cannot be promoted to a larger extent than it is now.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I had wondered—and I apologize for having to leave because of a telephone call, so you may have already stated this and, if so, I shall read it in Hansard—but is there a co-ordination with the various departments in which social workers would be needed? I am thinking of field placement in mental institutions and prisons and workmen's rehabilitation. Do you see where, during the summer months, a graduate who has been studying at the university—if three or four Ministers connected in this area were to agree—could receive placement in any one of these areas, mental hospitals and so on, as I have stated? Have you got a co-ordinated approach on this?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am advised, Mr. Chairman, that this matter is under study now by the civil service commission, which really has the jurisdiction in these matters, but I say that all social workers receive possibly the same training basically. It is to direct them into certain fields of endeavour. The study is being directed so as to determine what should be added to that particular course, but right now this is being undertaken by the civil service commission in respect of my department and other government departments involved.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, I might advise the hon. leader of the Opposition that we already have students of social work working in our department for the summer.

Mr. Thompson: Is it the civil service commission that would do this or would it be the four Ministers? I appreciate the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions telling me that he has students.

One of the reasons that I suspect people are not going into the field of public welfare is because they do not want to be narrowed down to this one area immediately. Yet when you think of the challenges within any government department for young people who are taking social work, if there were some flexibility—the training, for example, that they would get in working with people in The Department of Reform Institutions—I am sure it would be very useful for them in some other areas. The training they might get in a mental hospital would be very useful in moving out into the field, and I would hope that apart from the civil service commission studying this question, the Minister responsible for the departments might co-ordinate it and co-operate on it.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, what prospects are there for the placement of a student in the Ryerson course as at present constituted? Which agencies have refused to accept these students? Has a specific area in the welfare worker's spectrum been carved out for them? Is there a place for them, for instance, in the civil service commission range, and are there areas in the various departments where they can be effectively allotted? There was, if I may remind the House, not so long ago in the press an assertion on the part of the man who headed the Ryerson course—I believe it is Russell Jolliffe—that he was meeting with, first, some resistance from the professional social workers, and second, some resistance from obvious placement agencies. Since the government was part and parcel of the formation of the Ryerson course, I am curious to know what is happening.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: As you know, we are now in the first year, and the students still have another year to go in this particular course. That relates to our department, very much so. At the same time this course will also provide services for the municipalities and all other services like the children's aid societies and so on, and it is expected to be known as social work technicians three. The course is not over until next June, I think. It is expected to produce social work technicians 3.

As far as I know right now, no agencies have refused to accept a Ryerson student. Private industry has readily taken them for placement. I can assure you that as far as the department is concerned, they need not be afraid, any one of them, that we will not grant them a placement in any of the other areas. We will be able to use them.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am tempted to ask you what technique a "social work technician 3" uses. Why this term "technician"? Perhaps you could tell me a little bit about the difference between social work technician one and social work technician three, and the salary range.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Would that be the last question I would be asked by the hon. member?

Mr. S. Lewis: No!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed: Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we will continue with these estimates, third readings and the Budget debate. This is the order of business, for however long it may take.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.00 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, June 21, 1965
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Monday, June 21, 1965

Statement re members' northern tour, Mr. Roberts	4422
Statement re implementation of report, council on labour safety education, Mr. Rowntree	4423
Statement re use of Rule 56, Mr. Speaker	4423
Estimates, Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Cecile, continued	4424
Recess, 6 o'clock	4461

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 21, 1965

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests: In the Speaker's gallery, the Crediton women's institute, Huron riding; in the east gallery, students from Laurie Smith public school, Burlington, and in the west gallery, students from Pine River public school, Ripley.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct three related questions to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree):

1. When will a fair wage schedule or schedules become effective for highway construction undertaken by The Department of Highways?

2. Will the schedule or schedules regulate hours of work and, if so, in what way?

3. What are the principal categories of labour for which fair wages will be set?

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my department is actively engaged at the present time in the establishment of fair wage schedules covering all recognized trades and classifications in highway construction and providing for maximum hours of work to go into effect at the earliest date possible. It is also planning and establishing the organization necessary to operate and enforce a proper road-building fair wages system.

I should also inform the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, although he obviously may already know, that as recently as last Wednesday my officials spent several hours with representatives of the provincial council of carpenters in a detailed discussion of this matter, including the subject of hours and categories of labour.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts).

What position does the government take with regard to plans of the University of Toronto, acting under legislation passed by this Legislature, to expropriate land on which houses are standing on the Streetsville road when vacant land is available in the same vicinity that would be suitable for the purpose the university has in mind?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been raised by others whose interests may be drawn into this as a result of the action apparently contemplated by the University of Toronto authorities.

I would point out that the university is an autonomous organization and within the broad framework of our expropriation laws, has had powers of expropriation for many, many years. The government at present is making the necessary contacts and investigations so as to inform itself as to the facts of this situation.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), but as he is not in his place, I would be agreeable if it could stand over until tomorrow.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to ask a question concerning the apparition I see across the floor from me. I wonder if it is because the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests wants to remain faceless and nameless?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in a moment or two I will answer the question.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Health, I have been asked to draw attention to the epilepsy information centre for Metropolitan Toronto, the first of its kind in Ontario. It is a protégé of the Ontario epilepsy association.

Its success has stimulated plans for opening similar centres in other parts of Ontario. Present activity toward the establishment of similar centres is under way in Hamilton, Ottawa, Peterborough, London, Windsor, Owen Sound, North Bay, Sault Ste. Marie, Port Arthur, Brockville and other cities.

The kit on hon. members' desks describes the aims of an epilepsy information centre—understanding through education dedicated to removing the fear and prejudice which surrounds this much-misunderstood affliction.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your courtesy in allowing me to make a short statement before the orders of the day in connection with the now rapidly approaching hon. members' trip to northwestern Ontario and the coastal waters of the province.

A letter is on the desk today of those hon. members who have indicated their intention of taking this trip. To make sure that those who are not in their seats will receive a copy, we are taking the precaution of sending duplicates to the homes of all these hon. members.

I am glad to say that we are now in the final stages of preparation of this trip and if we are blest with good weather conditions, I expect it will be a memorable one for those who take it. The vastness of this province in its far northern regions cannot be comprehended by reading and this will be an opportunity of seeing this hinterland of Ontario. A copy of our proposed itinerary accompanies this statement, and for the record, it contemplates daily travel for seven days, each day over distances greater than that from Windsor to Ottawa, which roughly is the width of southern Ontario.

We will pass over parts of the old fur traders' routes, including the Dawson trail, to reach the southern part of the great northwest, Fort Frances, in time for the opening by the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) of the road there, which will be a memorable occasion in the riding of Rainy River.

The following day will see the commencement of the deep penetration of the north, taking us into "the lake country" of the old maps, and the area inhabited by the Round Lake Ojibwa, thence northwestward across "the muskeg country," from the old maps, through which such great rivers of northern Ontario as the Severn, Winisk, Attawapiskat and Albany flow from sources in the lake country to either Hudson Bay or James Bay.

Some wit in the department has recorded in the proposed itinerary, at the appropriate place, "During the remainder of the trip our time will be spent inspecting spruce, moose, goose and papoose."

If we are fortunate, we may get a glimpse of some white whales in Hudson Bay, although we may be too early for the annual cruise of these half-ton to three-quarter-ton mammals of the ocean. I am still hopeful that some summer I will have the opportunity of joining in an Eskimo hunt of them which I have observed but never yet participated in. I can assure hon. members it is quite a thrilling sport.

As we fly over a portion of Hudson Bay we will be able to recall the 16th century episodes of Frobisher; of the 17th century activities in those waters of the Hudson's Bay Company, some of whose factors we will be visiting; the voyage of Henry Hudson in 1610 from the Thames to Hudson Bay—named after him—and the lower bay, now James Bay.

When we reach Fort Albany we will recall that towards the end of the 17th century and in the early 18th century, it alone continued to be occupied by the English when D'Iberville and his French force occupied a good deal of bay territory.

Our schedule calls for us to arrive at Port Severn and the mid-Canada line at Winisk on Thursday, July 1, Dominion Day, where we will see the new Canadian flag and the new Ontario flag flying at those faraway posts, the two most northerly settlements in Ontario.

While I expect that most of this trip will be under pleasant summer conditions, there may be one or two periods when the wind will be blowing from the Arctic, and I strongly recommend one change of good warm clothing.

All participants in the trip will be issued with head nets from army surplus supply which has been made available, and to which, Mr. Speaker, your attention was drawn a moment ago when I was trying to model it for a moment, by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Appropriate lotion will also be available as required—I am referring now to skin lotion. Last week I was in the north for a few days and I can say authoritatively that it was wise to take these precautions, but I anticipate that we will not be subject to too much inconvenience in this connection.

Steps have been taken to see that reasonable insurance coverage is carried for all while travelling on aircraft of The Department of Lands and Forests. The programme, which will commence with an extraordinary demonstration of mechanized logging at the Lakehead, will be varied throughout the trip and will reflect many local activities.

We will have with us on the trip, from time to time, chiefs of the Indian tribes of the territories to be visited. The schedule is of such a nature that the main fishing opportunity will be at Gogama. I would remind the fishermen that there will be a quantity of fishing tackle available there, but those who wish to bring their own can do so and it will be packed and transported so as not to inconvenience the travellers en route.

To those ardent fishermen who may look for a longer period at Gogama, arrangements can be made for an additional 24 hours there, if notice is given in time.

As of now, it is estimated, Mr. Speaker—and I am glad to know that you are numbered amongst those who will be travelling on this trip—that the number, including members, press, executive officers, staff officials and air crew, will be approximately 80. From the Lakehead we will be travelling in 12 Land and Forests aircraft. A large number will be starting from Toronto. Reservations have been made from the Toronto international airport at Malton, for flight 503, Air Canada, 9.15 a.m., Monday, June 28, and anyone who has not already notified us of different intention, and who intends to join the tour at some place other than Toronto, please notify Mr. Charles V. Rich, local 2735, immediately, so that the release of reservation from Toronto can be made.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, in December of 1963, I asked the labour safety council of Ontario, a body representative of both employer and employee interests, to study safety education in the province, and to recommend means of dealing more effectively with accident prevention through the medium of education.

The council reported to me in January. During discussion of my departmental estimates, I undertook to inform the House at a later date about the implementation of the report. This I shall do now, and as briefly as possible.

The council's recommendations and our own conclusions on the steps that should be taken to implement them, are based on four principles:

1. Employees themselves, through their own organizations, must be brought into more active participation in safety education programmes.

2. There must be close liaison between enforcement and education, since the latter is an indispensable support for the former.

3. There must be maximum utilization of existing education resources, plus a greatly expanded overall programme.

4. The present voluntary participation of employer and employee groups through the seven safety associations now operating under the sponsorship of the workmen's compensation board, must be preserved and, indeed, expanded.

Now these four principles, Mr. Speaker, must underly the implementation of any new and more effective safety education programme in Ontario. In line with these considerations, the following steps will be taken.

1. The labour safety council will be reconstituted and its terms of reference substantially expanded, to make it the coordinating and advisory body for both education and enforcement at the policy-making level. The membership will consist of the chairman, the presidents of the seven safety associations and corresponding senior labour representation. The council will report directly to the Minister of Labour, rather than having a role subordinate to the workmen's compensation board. It will be assisted by a full-time staff, under an executive director.

2. The workmen's compensation board will establish a safety education department, under a full-time director, to integrate resources and co-ordinate the programmes of the seven safety associations, at the operating level. This department will allocate funds to the safety associations and oversee their budgets; co-ordinate the development of safety programmes and the production of programme material; integrate safety association personnel administration; supply statistical guide lines to all agencies in the safety field and develop new programmes for areas outside the individual concern of any one association.

3. A close staff level liaison between the advisory, enforcement and education agencies will be created through the executive director of the labour safety council, the new director of the safety education department of the compensation board, and the director of safety and technical services of The Department of Labour.

Now many of the detailed aspects of the council's report can only be implemented as this new machinery goes into operation. It is my hope, however, that this programme, coupled with other measures already in operation, and our newly revised safety legislation, will constitute an overwhelming alliance in the battle for safety, and the creation of accident-free working conditions throughout Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I thought I would take the opportunity of making a statement regarding the use of Rule 56, Lewis' Parliamentary Practice, which I may say to the members of the House, I have discussed with the leaders of all parties and their rules experts and have their unanimous consent.

For the information of the House, I would like to put the following on record:

Re amendments to motions for second—or third—reading of a bill and the application of Rule 56 as it applies to Lewis' book on parliamentary practice.

Several times during the life of this Parliament, procedural difficulties have arisen with respect to the effect of the defeat of an amendment to the motion for second reading of a bill. This difficulty has resulted from a failure strictly to observe the provisions of Rule 56, which provides that:

If on an amendment to the question that a bill be now read a second time or the third time, it is decided that the word "now" or any words proposed to be left out stand part of the question, Mr. Speaker, shall forthwith declare the bill to be read a second or the third time, as the case may be.

Probably by oversight or inadvertence on a number of occasions over the years, a vote was taken on the motion for second reading, even after the defeat of such an amendment, so that in the course of time this procedure gained the force of precedent, with the result that I specifically ruled, both during the 1964 session and again in the current session, that this was now a recognized procedure in this Legislature, and that Rule 56 was reduced in its application to hoist motions. In view of the difficulties that have arisen as a result of these decisions—and I only mention the occasion some ten days ago, on second reading of Bill No. 136—and after serious consideration of the problem and of the authorities, I have come to the conclusion that, if the House approves, we should return to the strict application of Rule 56 in future, even though this means the reversal of two rulings previously made by myself, as well as several rulings by former Speakers of the House.

So that all members of the House may clearly understand the correct procedure, I feel it desirable to outline it in detail.

When on a motion for second or third reading of a bill a member moves either a reasoned amendment or a hoist motion which seeks to strike out the word "now" or any other words from the motion for second reading, the general debate continues on that proposed amendment until its conclusion. On the conclusion of the general debate, the Speaker does not put the amendment as a whole, but first puts the question:

Shall the words sought to be struck out stand part of the question, or shall the word "now" stand part of the question?

If this question is decided in the affirmative, that ends the matter. The bill is forthwith declared to be read a second or a third time and no further debate or amendment is in order.

On the other hand, if that question is decided in the negative, and this is possible in Houses with a small government majority so that the House has decided to strike out words from the motion for second reading, then the Speaker puts the question, "Shall the words sought to be substituted stand part of the question?" and the debate may then continue on that question, and an amendment may be proposed to those words as in the case of any other motion.

The important point is that no such amendment can be offered to the proposed substitutional words unless, and until, the House has decided to strike out the original words. This applies to any type of motion, and an amendment to strike out words and substitute others.

Precedents may be referred to at page 526, and the following of May's 17th edition, as standing order number 39 of the United Kingdom House of Commons is identical, word for word, with the Ontario rule 56.

Of course, rule 56 applies only to motions for second or third reading of bills. It has no application to substantive motions, where a vote on the main question must always be taken either in its original form, or as amended.

Thank you.

Clerk of the House: The eightieth order. House in committee of supply; Mr. N. Whitney in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE (continued)

On vote 1705:

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned, I think the hon. Minister was going to answer questions relevant to social work technicians.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I presume that the hon. member for Scarborough West meant the Ryerson institute.

With reference to the question concerning the level at which the Ryerson graduates will work, I think it will be necessary for me to describe this role in comparison with the other levels of work being performed in the public welfare field generally and in my department in particular.

I should also say at this point that the civil service commission is at present engaged in writing a "social work technician" class theory. However, I would prefer the use of the term "certified welfare worker" as distinct from the area of responsibility of the professional social worker.

The basic level of case servicing is carried out by our welfare field workers, who have high school graduation and relevant employment experience and who have been trained within the department. They work under supervision to provide the necessary service which leads to the determination of eligibility for applicants and recipients of assistance. They provide common sense advice and guidance to clients where needed and refer difficult case problems to personnel at the higher levels.

A second level of case servicing is provided by departmental field workers who are skilled in elementary family counselling techniques. They may have a BA degree in social science and appropriate experience and competence in elementary case work, or they will be graduates from the Ryerson welfare services certificate course.

These certified welfare workers meet special family needs by rendering the necessary counsel for problems that are eventually concerned with household management, the budgeting of income, the care of children, and so on. They are particularly knowledgeable about community resources which could be deployed to meet special needs for drugs, housing, child adjustment, social restoration and rehabilitation generally. In this way, a significant approach to the prevention of further social breakdown can also be made.

Of noteworthy importance, I believe, is the fact that the workers performing duties at the level expected of the Ryerson graduates have the particular ability to understand and recognize the social distress they see in their day-to-day work. They can define most case problems and deal with them at a preliminary counselling level, referring the very complex situations to professional personnel within the department or to professional social work agencies.

The necessary supervision of this level of work is provided by regional administrators and welfare field supervisors, some of whom are professional social workers, with the remainder being required to have university graduation or background and experience in social welfare administration. It is generally recognized that there are many jobs in the public welfare field that can be effectively carried out by personnel who do not hold the BSW or MSW degree. Indeed, the Canadian welfare council, the American public association and the association of professional social workers have made statements to the effect that the role of the certified welfare worker requires serious consideration in view of the different levels of competence required in the field and the extensive shortage of social work graduates.

In supporting the two-year Ryerson course we have responded to the consensus of professional opinion and to the expressed wishes of municipal departments of welfare and other social agencies. Many of the lectures at Ryerson are given by social workers and the director himself is fully qualified professionally. The exact level of competence of the graduate, of course is not yet known, nor will it be fully known for a year or two after the first graduates come from the course in the spring of 1966.

Judging by the content of the curriculum, the way the candidates are carefully selected on the basis of employment experience and maturity, and by the work 13 of them are doing this summer in my department, their competence after graduation is expected to be quite satisfactory.

We sincerely believe that the Ryerson graduates will be able to perform effectively the jobs for which they are being trained. The jobs that I am referring to are, of course, those that combine routine municipal or provincial welfare services with elementary counselling, jobs that are concerned with the more routine aspects of adoption processing, and children's aid court work and with jobs that call for trained personnel to give basic services to the aged, the infirm and children under institutional care.

It is generally recognized that professional social work skills are not required to handle many of the routine aspects of public welfare. However, the certified welfare worker will be properly equipped to give a quality of service at the level to which he has been trained.

One quarter of the Ryerson trainees this past school year have been on leave of absence with pay from my department; 11 others have received our bursaries. On graduation there will be departmental jobs for them to fill. Municipalities, children's aid societies, institutions and social agencies of various types are awaiting the first graduates as well.

I would also like to explain again that those areas of service requiring professional social work competence in my department are continuing to be emphasized, as in the past. Six social workers with their BSW or MSW degrees have recently accepted positions in our field service branch where they will serve as special family counsellors. The plan is for every regional office eventually to have professional social work service built into its welfare administration operation.

Family counsellors receive referrals from the field work staff and treat such complex case problems as emotional disturbance, alcoholism, marital conflict, family breakdown, school drop outs, delinquent behaviour and so forth. They also deal particularly in involved case situations requiring rehabilitation services and preventive social work by making use of resources within the department or from outside agencies.

In other branches, social workers continue to be recruited to serve as rehabilitation counsellors and child welfare supervisors. We have more such professional staff than before and again I would say that where a job requires professional social work competence we will endeavour to provide just that and nothing less.

Mr. Chairman, that is the statement I had to make on Ryerson.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, I noticed where the hon. Minister said that he had six new MSW or BSW workers coming on the staff this year. I appreciate that he has gone into more detail with respect to the work of his public welfare workers. Frankly, I apologize in one sense, although I think there is a certain responsibility on his part to explain his reference in the previous discussion to a Justice Bathgate's report.

I was quite convinced that he would have a wider range of challenge for his social workers, but I am still very concerned that there is not enough stress on the trained social worker and this comes under the staff training. Again I do not know, within your in-service training, how many leaves of absence are granted for people who go ahead and take further training. I would like to bring some of these points to you.

Daniel Feeney, who is director of the Ottawa children's aid society, said it costs $8,000 a year to provide a trained social worker's services for one year. This figure includes the worker's salary and administrative costs. The average number of families that are counselled in a year by one social worker is 100. This means that prevention of family breakdown by counselling costs the taxpayers approximately $80 per family.

If we have established that the social worker can do something in helping to keep a family together, keeping the children within the family, then he is suggesting that it saves the agency $1,000 a year for maintenance of each child that the agency has to remove from its own home and place in a substituted agency foster home. If families average three children per family, 100 families account for approximately 300 children, and if these children had to be removed from their homes because of neglect, their maintenance would cost the taxpayers $300,000. I think that is fairly simple and I notice that Mr. Feeney is now with The Department of Public Welfare.

I would think in view of just the economic factor alone, really we should be getting far more stress on your part with respect to trying to get qualified people. I come back again—and you have offered your sentiments about wanting to get new schools of social work, and you want to do what you could. Well, there is a block somewhere which obviously you are not at liberty to disclose. But we know there are two schools of social work; we know there is a university; and, as the hon. member has pointed out, perhaps it is for other reasons than religious that Waterloo Lutheran is not having this school.

I do know that Waterloo Lutheran said to me that they have available staff, that they had recommendations from the Canadian welfare council, and that they were keen to get going on this; but for some reason it has been stultified. I say this is a very small-minded approach on the part of the government, when we think of the finances that can be saved in welfare costs if we get people who will look into a situation and act as a preventive service to hold families together.

I frankly had hoped—and I have asked the hon. Minister this on previous estimates—to talk more about the challenge of the staff. I have a feeling that you are doing a patchwork job, that your staff goes in with its limited resources and the interpretation of various Acts, and I think it needs a Philadelphia lawyer to really decide whether one person comes under one particular segment of welfare service or under another. I hope you are getting a broader approach on the basis of need and not on technical interpretation.

I would like to go into this a little bit with the hon. Minister because this comes clearly, to me, under staff training. What is the challenge for the staff? And I want to say it comes under finances as well, because from estimates as to the number of persons living in poverty in the United States and Canada—major surveys in the United States indicate that between 20 per cent and 25 per cent are in poverty.

I will take examples—there are Robert Lampsman, the AFL-CIO, the United States bureau of statistics—to show my figures on this. Harrington, as you know, has written a book on it. There was the U.S. House of Representatives committee and there have been many others.

It was suggested that Canadian figures—and I am talking about Canadian figures, not Ontario figures—are apparently about the same. Ontario has about 19 per cent on the basis of being in the poverty area. Official studies, comparable to those from the US, are lacking. This is another point.

I know I am criticized when I ask for research, but when I think of the lack of foresight on the part of this government in so many areas, it seems to me that it is the most logical thing that you should be doing some studies in order to see what is the best way to bring about services. You did a study in the past; you had these 100 cases which you studied with intensive counselling. It was shown from this that you could get people back on their feet. I would hope that from that experiment there would be something to infuse your whole department with new techniques, and new enthusiasm, and new imagination.

In your study—and I am referring to the study of the 100 cases, which I hoped would be in part of the curriculum of training which you give to all of your staff, whether it is at Ryerson or whether it is in-training of six weeks—I had hoped that you would be emphasizing that poverty is self-perpetuating, principally because impoverished parents are increasingly unable to provide their children with values of education, and other opportunities which will fit them for everything else in our society and which will develop them into productive citizens. It is suggested—and again this is from a United States study, but I think it is also apparent to us that it would apply in Toronto and in Ontario, too—that school drop-outs seem to be almost universal phenomena among the so-called lower economic classes. In Canada, there is a high and interesting co-relation between the amount of education and earnings—we all know this—so there is a rapidly diminishing demand for unskilled labour. And if the impoverished parent has no skills, and does not see the value of education for his children, this is part of the recurring poverty which is taking place—the hard-core cases.

May I say what are some of the results of poverty—and these must be apparent to you, we have discussed them in other estimates—if we do not tackle the problem? American studies of low-income groups indicate that they have the highest rates of physical illness, most mental illness, alcoholism, juvenile delinquency, crime, school drop-outs, desertions, bad housing, unemployment and almost every problem to which welfare pertains. And this is why, economically—all I am trying to argue is on an economic basis—your staff training, which we are discussing, should be so important. This six-week course, and this lack of trained people, and your voicing hope that we may get more and then telling us here that you have six more coming in, is just not putting up an adequate battle in connection with saving costs for the people of Ontario with respect to welfare cases.

I remember, as I talk about this, that I have had, from certain Conservative private members, the suggestion that the poor—and I had it two sessions ago, although I am not going to name the person—had a lack of backbone and initiative. I know that, in a way, they are invisible to the general public because we are living in a fairly affluent society, but yet I think the hon. Minister is totally aware that there are real gaps within our society for such people, and that there is a lack of opportunity for them—and it applies to both rural and urban areas. I think we have seen, from Galbraith and others, evidence pointing out the fact that we have to get some kind of redistribution in our affluent society to make sure that the possible aids and services toward human betterment have priority.

The poverty line used in Canada is $3,000 a year for a family of four, and it is more than $1,000 under what they require according to the new budget guide which has been prepared by the social planning council for Toronto. Let me ask: Who are the people with whom you are concerned? You have named some before but I want to re-emphasize this. They are mostly persons, for example, who, for any reason, have become long-term recipients of public allowances. They are the aged, the disabled, widows and their children; they are wage-earners who, for various personal reasons of inadequacy, limited training, obsolescence of skills, or business conditions, are unable to secure a sufficiently high regular wage for themselves and for their wives and their children. And there are many people, as ARDA has disclosed, and even shown us in Norfolk county, who are living in depressed rural areas, or are members of "disadvantaged" groups.

I am thinking particularly—when I am talking of "disadvantaged" groups—of the Indian who has left the reserve. I am not trying to put the blame solely on the provincial government in this area; I think that this is a co-ordinated effort on the part of both federal and provincial governments to get going on this situation. We know where the poor are located; we know they are located in depressed rural areas and in the city centres of urban areas; and we also know that this is a permanent thing—and I want to come back to this fact again.

There is a hard-core group—and you, with one of your studies, found this out—which is passed from generation to generation. This is why I am saying that we have got to have thoroughly skilled people to try to break through this barrier of a tradition of poverty on the part of people. I could quote statistics from both the United States and from England showing that a group could stay steadily at a very low income level.

I want to re-emphasize that I think the poor have become poorer, not because of being spineless or lacking in initiative and the other things that used to be thrown at them, but because I think they develop into a culture of poverty in which the poor, through the mutual influence of persons in similar conditions, develop values and outlooks that are in conflict with our society as a whole.

I have done quite a bit of reading on this over the past year. We have Harrington pointing this out to us. It requires more than a six weeks training course. If I may say so, though I understand the need for technicians, you need a greater challenge than that. You require training in sociology and anthropology to understand the cultural barriers that you have to break through.

Let me say this, and we are still talking on finance, Mr. Chairman, that with the services which your people must offer after their six weeks interpretation, that is insufficient. But they go out to 979 municipalities in Ontario, and as I said before, I think that from all your different legislation, your sponsored programmes and so on, it must be an extremely confusing picture. I think they go out as bureaucrats almost, for I think it is for the most part what they have had to be learning.

I would far rather see these people going out, perhaps with not all the knowledge of the existing legality of one law over the other, but with far more sense of dignity about human beings and wanting to get people on their feet. As I said when you were listing the orders, I would have hoped instead of investigation and report that the top order would be to help people to help themselves. But in your municipality, and this comes under the financing, I think that there is complete inadequacy of service. I think that in some of your shared programmes, the homemakers, the nurses and the nursing homes—we will be coming into some of this later so I will not dwell on it—there is utter disparity all over Ontario.

Welfare provinces can provide some of these services, and provide them well. Welfare municipalities can provide them well. But often in municipalities which need them most, they cannot meet the cost of these requirements.

We have had clarion calls from people like Bessie Touzel suggesting that we co-ordinate on a county level, and that we amalgamate services; from people like John Morgan asking you to get away from this quilt patchwork approach to welfare services. Yet somehow you are moving so very slowly on this.

At the county level, I would be interested to know how many county administrations you have. But you are still timid in comparison with the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) in his approach. I would hope that you would be producing a system, not only of administrative order, but also order in connection with the different classes that people fall into.

I can speak very personally of cases that come to my office. I would like to say again that I am very sorry to learn your Deputy Minister, Mr. Band, is ill, because I think every member knows that in almost every case he has tried to see if there has been a gap, or tried on some basis of humanity, to get coverage. But far more important for us as lawmakers is to see that we are not pushed into this situation where the member is asking Mr. Band to use his humanity. Let us make our laws more humane and more recognizable with respect to the needs that are there.

I think that there are municipalities of which you are fully aware that have strained resources. I think there are some that frankly have had less public understanding of what could be done with trained people.

As well as training the people yourself, I think you have got to do a selling job in showing that a trained person really can benefit a community economically. I do not think you have done that completely. I think within your department also—I say this with respect to the majority of them, because it takes dedication to work in The Department of Public Welfare—there may be cases where some people have an ingrained suspicion of new approaches, an ingrained suspicion of the person who has got a new enlightened approach to social science.

And let me say that I think that you do get young people who walk out with a master's degree and think that they understand the whole world's problems. And that does not apply either. There is a balance in this. Somehow we have got to try to get those two things drawn together.

We are talking about a lot of money when we are talking about welfare, and I think we should emphasize this under this financial administrative branch. We are talking of 12 per cent of the national income which is being spent by every level of government on health and welfare. The federal government was spending $3.98 billion in 1962-63. It was spending 69.3 per cent, the province was spending 27.7 per cent and the municipalities were spending 3 per cent.

I suggest, sir, that we are spending our money badly, because we are not tackling the preventive areas. Instead of coming in when the ship has got a leak and trying to plug it up, what you are doing with your little technical books is that you are taking six weeks of whatever it is the staff are studying. They move in with their services after the ship has floundered, and then say OK, you are entitled to so much to get salvage and such. I think there could be far more done in connection with prevention.

It is quite obvious to me that one of the most important Acts that you produced was homemakers and nursing services, and this should have been a force of people, of crusaders, who were going around this province, to hold families together, to keep people from getting into institutions, to keep young children from being broken up from their homes. Yet year after year when we ask, yes, there is a little bit of progress, there are more municipalities.

But it has not been a sweeping movement around this province, and I suggest that is so because of a lack of courage, or perhaps because it is the sacred cow of municipal autonomy to you. But above municipal autonomy rides the transcending aspect of trying to keep families together, and also to keep institutions from getting overcrowded. There are many things that I think you could be doing, and I want to list some of them under your training programme. I know a number of others have been listed before from the studies that you have done, but I would like to see again—I would like to see a new budget for families, couples and individuals, living in rural and different sizes of urban communities, based on studies of actual living costs, in each type of community and use this as the yardstick for establishing allowances in any public assistance programme.

I would like to see—and I may say these are recommendations of the planning council of 1961-62—that the operation of all public assistance programmes be based on sound and clearly defined standards, with respect to the amount of assistance, at a level consistent with health and decency; an adequate provision for qualified staff to administer the programme and to provide case work and counselling service. This means that when you say there is a lack of trained people, you then ask why are there not more. You then say the source from which we get trained people is too small. You say, therefore, that if there are universities that are going to be preferred to develop schools of social workers, you, sir, I hope will say, "I do not care how we do it. Whether it was through some technicality that it did not come from The Department of Education, I need these people for my department, and whether The Department of Education and the Minister are scared about precedents, I need them. I managed to get around it with the University of Ottawa and I will get around it with the University of Waterloo. I need the people and I am going to get them." This is the approach I would like to see taken.

Let me say that according to Dr. Bessie Touzel—who I think has given great service to this province in a quiet guidance which I know the hon. Minister has availed himself of and I know, indeed, so have many others—no thought has really been given for many years to the question of how county and local municipalities organize to deliver services for which they are responsible. I refer you to the report of the welfare services in York county.

Let me take another point. It has been pointed out by the advisory committee on child welfare in its recent report, that recommendations made over 12 years ago by the committee on child care and adoption services, are still pertinent. This group also noted that findings and recommendations of the Minister's committee on child care in 1953 are repeated in the present report. Five other committees since then were noted by that committee as having made similar recommendations. Their conclusion was that recommendations cannot be implemented satisfactorily without a broad, well-integrated and long-range plan for welfare services in the province of Ontario and that it was time action was taken.

Integration of services is something that has been fought for year after year, not only in this Legislature, but also from outside. You hear, as I say, the voices of Professor John Morgan, of Bessie Touzel and of every other authority in the field of welfare.

During the past two years, the various operations of 30 municipalities in the Sudbury district have been integrated into one operation for the larger area and I think that is a great step. I think it is a very great step, and I would like to see that across the province. I do not know whether we could take the period of time when you started this desire for integration of services on the county level and the number that have been done and then say, "In view of the number that are done each year, how much longer will it take us until we finally get across-Ontario coverage?" But I suggest it may be something like another 20 years. Perhaps, if I am wrong, the hon. Minister would correct me.

In ten municipalities of Wentworth county, the local and county services, other than those of the children's aid, are provided through the county unit, and the recent decision by Welland county council has been to do likewise.

Dr. Bessie Touzel, in her recent report to York county, recommended that this be done in York in progressive stages. The first stage would include the homes for the aged, hospitalization of indigents, training school arrangements, homemakers and nurses services and nursing homes, as well as for general welfare assistance, both sanitary care and non-charitable services. The second stage, and you have done something on this, and I congratulate you on that, would be the child welfare services, now being provided as you have with the new Act.

But I suggest that we have got to have more integration of services, be it on the county or on the regional level, and it should be more than just encouraged. Surely you have come to this realization. You have a very persuasive and a very charming personality and we all recognize that. But you must have come to a realization that your powers of persuasion just have not got the counties together. It has been slow and it has been too long and who suffers? That is the question that must trouble you. Who suffers?

Let me take it in certain priorities which the government might assume. Who suffers? The government, because it costs it money. We talked about these 100 families. If they had qualified people, one child being kept within the home would cost $100. If the child is not, if it is taken into a children's aid society, the cost is $1,000, or $300,000 in all. So, not just on a humanitarian basis, just economically, we are suffering on this. But apart from that the whole disruption of family, the whole overcrowding of institutions, the breakdown that we have, the juvenile delinquency, and—I hate to say this—a large part of some of the high rates that we have are because of the inadequacies of a preventive force and a preventive emphasis on the part of the welfare services.

I sit down, sir, with this point again: The cost of staff training at $29,000; six new social workers coming into your department; your Ryerson programme; your lack of social work schools, and the fact that staff are leaving, all are an indictment on someone, an indictment that welfare services in this department are not functioning properly. I do not know who the indictment is on, but I know who has to take the responsibility in this House, and that is the hon. Minister of Public Welfare.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. Minister is going to wait for a minute to reply, perhaps I could make some comment on this branch in an area which has been worrying me for close to two years, and which I have been exploring a little and on which I would now like to offer some thoughts.

My mind goes back to a reference on the comment page of, I think it is, the Canadian Welfare Journal, December, 1964. A mournful and plaintive letter was reprinted by this journal. I would like to read a section of it into the record because it is the peg on which I would like to hang certain remarks:

Dear Mr. Editor:

We all know of essential primary welfare services where key positions have been vacant for years and where overworked and disillusioned personnel have withdrawn to secondary services or left the field altogether, deploring the singular lack of concern or action by the appropriate provincial authorities.

Could someone tell me why the provincial Department of Public Welfare seems so lacking in conviction about the value of the services provided by the children's aid societies?

Mr. Editor, I have convictions about the value of our services or I would not continue as a local director but my head gets mighty sore from banging against the wall of provincial indifference. My heart sinks at the increasing flow of competent personnel away from our field to other allied disciplines of secondary importance to family welfare; my feet grow weary in a constant endeavour to build up a local public image of welfare with no provincial guidance to support me.

In short, Mr. Editor, I need staff, and I want to know why the provincial Department of Public Welfare doesn't appreciate my problem and do something about it. My opposite number in the field of public health has constant, constructive guidance from The Department of Health. What is wrong with our relationship with our provincial department? Why won't my best friends tell me?

Signed,

ONE OF THE GOATS

It sounds like a prelude to an advertisement for bad breath, I realize, at the end of it, Mr. Chairman, but it is singularly relevant to this particular branch in the department.

I want to remind the hon. Minister of something about which he is now acutely cognizant. As one social service estimate after another of this government appeared in this Legislature over the last five months—I can think of Health, Reform Institutions, Attorney General, and Education—the plea, nay, the whimper and the cry, has been that “We cannot adequately perform because we do not have an adequate staff complement.” And “It is not our fault, gentlemen, we are doing everything under our power, we are advertising in all the reputable newspapers for a superintendent at Mercer reformatory, we simply cannot find anyone.” And similarly in one department after another.

Now from Public Welfare, this abject plea comes forth across the Legislature saying, “We are endeavouring to draw people in but we simply cannot find them.” So our public welfare services can reach only a certain level, appreciably below the optimum level, let it be said, and can proceed no further.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say—in conjunction with other hon. members on this side of the House, and the hon. leader of the Opposition—that that simply is not true. That the reason for the low level of social services across the entire province of Ontario, encompassing every government department, and every aspect of social welfare, reflects only the inability of the government, and particularly The Department of Public Welfare, to undertake a vigorous, meaningful, staff programme. There is nothing in this province worthy of the name “staff programme.” Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the province of Ontario has less imagination in the development of social service personnel than any province in the country. Indeed, I would say, worse than any state in the United States, with the exception of certain southern areas. And one study, one survey after another, has demonstrated that to be true.

So we have this silly pot-pourri of six-week training schemes in one department after another, essentially training the same people for roughly the same services, total overlapping, very little content and very little substance, as I am about to show. And let no Minister again have the temerity to come into this House and say, “We cannot find the people,” or “We cannot reach a level of services because we do not have the people,” when, in fact, no effort has genuinely been made.

I recall a remark of Mr. James Gripton, of the University of Toronto school of social work, who is an eminent authority in this business of staffing the social welfare services. Mr. Gripton said in a recent article:

It is pretty clear that we are little interested in Canada in solving the personnel problem in social work unless it be by talking it to death.

And that is all we have had in this session where social welfare personnel are concerned, Mr. Chairman: a relentless, consistent talking to death.

I want to suggest five specific areas for expansion and development. Some of these will not be new to the hon. Minister. I think one of them—the last—particularly important; but I want to suggest them and to make short comments about each of them and then perhaps evoke a response.

The first is the obvious area of professional social workers and schools of social work. Let us, once and for all, kill this business about professional social work staff having to handle all social problems, or that it is desirable that they should. Mr. Chairman, those of us in this Legislature—I am sure all hon.

members, and certainly the government hon. members, will know that it is simply impossible to find enough graduate social workers to do the job. They do not now exist; they will never exist; and it is futility to engage in this frustrating pursuit of social workers who will not, in fact, exist.

If memory serves me correctly, the number of social workers, as a percentage of the social work complement generally, has been diminishing since World War II. It has been falling rather than rising, and that is true in every jurisdiction. In the year 1964 in Canada we graduated 238 social workers, and we lost 278 either by natural attrition, death, retirement, or whatever the reason; so, as a percentage of our entire social work welfare personnel, our entire complement, social workers are a contracting proportion.

For every social worker who graduates, there are four jobs available on the open market and easily 75 to 80 per cent of our jobs now in the entire agency area are still held by non-graduate social work people. That means, Mr. Chairman, that we have to face reality. We have to give up this myth of founding our entire social work structure on a professional level; it cannot be done. And it means very simply, as I am sure the hon. Minister knows, that we have to reassign our social work personnel, our graduates, our MSWs, and our doctors in social work; we have to allocate them rather more intelligently in the areas where they will best serve. Then we have to develop a wealth of ancillary staff such as hitherto we have not even contemplated. And that, I suggest, is a great lack on the part of the government.

In other words, we must redefine the relevance of the present schools of social work.

Mr. Chairman, in one sense there can be no doubt as to the validity of the Opposition argument in this Legislature: We need not only one new school of social work in Ontario, we need a minimum of two graduate schools of social work in this province at this moment. I profoundly hope that the hon. Minister of University Affairs (Mr. Davis), in conjunction with the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, is about to undertake such an expansion.

Then the question must be asked: What do we do with the graduate schools of social work once they are operating? I suggest that their function has changed somewhat. They have three specific fields: First, the continuing work in graduate education, that indispensable ingredient to give strength and bulwark to the field as a whole; second, specialized training for people who are presently in the field, who can come to the school of social work for special courses for special periods of time from whatever agency or government department; and third, a totally new intensification of research, something that has been sorely lacking. Social work departments of any kind, that are worth their salt, sustain themselves on the research drive. We have been so hard pressed to produce bodies that we have lost a lot of the research orientation.

Those three areas, I suggest to you, must mark the schools of social work. It is academic whether the schools are placed at Waterloo Lutheran, or Western, or at Queen's, or at York, as I have heard rumours. It is much more important that they be geared to fill the new role in the whole field of social welfare personnel. That is the first point, Mr. Chairman—the redefinition of schools of social work, the recognition that we cannot rest our entire hopes on social workers—the hon. Minister, I am sure, will agree—the expansion in that area.

The second aspect is probably heretical in the province of Ontario. It may not sit well among some hon. members of this Legislature, but I think it should be put forward as a possibility. It is the possible development of undergraduate university courses in social welfare or social work. And by that distinction, I draw a distinction between the theoretical and the practical at the undergraduate university level.

Let it be said, Mr. Chairman, that in a variety of jurisdictions in the United States, of which California and New York and Massachusetts are the best examples, the only way they solved their staffing problems in the field of social assistance services was by a crash programme of undergraduate degrees. We do not do things that way in Ontario; we worry, and perhaps rightly, about watering down the undergraduate liberal arts programme; we worry, perhaps rightly, about an excessive vocational orientation of our undergraduate programme if we start giving degrees in social work and social welfare.

But what has happened in other jurisdictions is that courses, in sociology in particular, have been greatly reinforced by specific subjects in social work and social welfare, and the young men and women who have emerged with that kind of degree have fitted much more readily into the total social welfare structure.

Let me remind the hon. Minister and the House that there are two such courses functioning in Canada now. At Sir George Williams University in Quebec you have an undergraduate—three-year, I believe—social work course with a degree; and at Memorial University in Newfoundland, you have, for the first time in Canada, a four-year honours degree social welfare course, fitting people right into the apparatus of social service establishments.

Mr. Chairman, again I do not offer this categorically as the answer. I offer it as something that is worthy of exploration. It strikes me as odd indeed, that when many jurisdictions in North America and, indeed, in some of the western European countries—I shall refer to them in a moment—are developing this idea of undergraduate social work education; we are still quarrelling about a new school of social work, rather than developing the ancillary services. I suggest that this is one way to do it, and the point that breaks one's heart, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not as if nothing is known.

As recently as the year 1964, Dr. Maisey Rogers, school of social work, University of Manitoba, did a study of all the undergraduate courses who would respond to her questionnaire presently functioning in the United States—undergraduate courses in the field of social welfare and social work. She got 73 replies—all of them affiliated, let it be said, with the council on social work education.

Of the 73 replies, 30 were particularly applicable to our environment because they were from liberal arts colleges. Dr. Rogers found, interestingly enough, that of all the replies, most of them had successfully functioning undergraduate departments in social welfare or social work. And where they were not specifically designated as such, they were strengthening the course structure of sociology, or psychology.

As soon as the men and women graduated from these general or honours courses, they were fitted directly into the mainstream of social welfare establishments, just below the graduate social worker and somewhat above the welfare worker.

So the studies are available, the material is available. The council on social work education—the Canadian equivalent of the American body—produces one treatise after another on undergraduate content in social welfare courses and on the need for such. The investigation of such groups as the Canadian welfare council go on record as suggesting that this area be explored. But not a word from this government. I think that is very sad because you do not cure a critical situation by perpetuating an indifference, and that is, in fact, what is happening.

That is the second area I wanted to mention, and I mention that it need not, in any sense, if properly planned, water down a university curriculum.

The third area, to which the hon. Minister has made reference is the establishment in the province of Ontario of defined career lines in the social services. By that, one means the social worker, then the undergraduate social welfare worker, then the welfare worker who comes out of the Ryerson course, then the administrative supervisors who are a category unto themselves, and finally even the area of clerks and stenographers, the people who make first contact with the welfare recipient in the majority of cases.

This is one of the few jurisdictions on the North American continent that does not have established welfare roles—where there is not a differentiated welfare worker career line. The United States is now federally, as the hon. Minister knows, discussing two distinct career lines; the social work level and the welfare work level. And one province after another—Newfoundland, since the year 1949—has worked on the basis of different career lines in the staffing of public services.

But not so the province of Ontario. We have just started the Ryerson course; we have marshalled forth our creative powers and called it “social work technician three” as though we were operating on a television set rather than on a human being. We retreat a little and talk about certified welfare workers—I hope you erase that phrase, “social work technician three” from the vocabulary of the civil service.

This is our nod in the direction of a desperate staff shortage.

That is our nod. And why do I call it a nod? Because at Ryerson, Mr. Chairman, in this well-trumpeted course, there are a total of 23 students enrolled, even though there were 100 applications the first year and 300 applications the second year. The only increment that the director can think in terms of is jumping from 23 students to 30 students, and The Department of Public Welfare feels that it has indulged in great largesse in paying for six from the general welfare assistance branch on a full-time basis to the Ryerson project.

There are 13 field agencies participating in this two-year Ryerson project. But it is important to point out that the social work profession as a profession and the agencies as agencies are still not clear in their own minds what they are going to do with these people, or whether they want them. Too many agencies still have a BA fixation, despite the fact, I think this is worth pointing out, that there are some 13 or 14 courses given over the two years oriented to social welfare and social work, and their field work is of an exceedingly high quality. That is what we should be doing: developing a new welfare worker level and using our community colleges for that declared purpose.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, as shown in one study after another, the public assistance areas are the important areas of tomorrow. This is where people may show their idealism, if such it be, and their practical involvement, if such it be. But to have one course in the province of Ontario for 23 people, expanding to 30, is ludicrous.

You should have a network of welfare worker courses right across the province, bringing people literally in the hundreds, not to say thousands. And you do not start them, as you started the Ryerson course—overnight; think of it on a Wednesday and announce it on a Thursday, in effect.

I appreciate that that is unfair, because it was in the planning stage to some degree. But just to hurl it into the mainstream of social work so that even the agencies did not know what it was all about! To this day there are many social work agencies who do not have a clear conception of what is going on in the Ryerson course.

How does one expect to gain community assistance when operating at that level? You must have a clearly defined plan—from which the government shrinks. And into the plan, you fit the welfare worker. You multiply the courses across every community college in Ontario, so that when you have 300 applying you do not have to turn away 90 per cent of them. Then, Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect to the hon. Minister, one department after another would not have to come to this House and plead for redemption because it hasn't enough workers to staff its social assistance services.

That is just terrible myopia. It makes no sense at all, and all these areas are as yet to be exploited. They have not been exploited in this jurisdiction, although they have been exploited in all kinds of other jurisdictions.

Let me make reference to another thing with which the hon. Minister will be familiar. The Younghusband report in the United Kingdom made a total analysis of all social assistance-social work areas, and came to the conclusion that you could carve out three distinct levels: the social work level, the welfare worker level, and the level which is something just below that. They are now on a crash programme of development, producing graduates who fit neatly into the social work-social welfare scheme, and they are overcoming their crisis.

We in Ontario have a crisis at the graduate school level. We have no undergraduate programming, we have one welfare worker course with 23 students about whose future we are uncertain. Nothing else. This simply flies in the face of all the logical progression in this whole field. It shows no imagination whatsoever. I suggest to the hon. Minister that a very powerful look has to be taken at this, along the community college line that has been proposed.

I will say in ending this part of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, that the government has at its disposal the best people in the field. You could not have a better man in the field area than Professor John Morgan. I am sure—I have not discussed it with him intimately—but I am sure he would give of his services to this government in setting up these training courses. The finest training course in Canada is in Newfoundland, of all places, and it was set up by Professor John Morgan. It seems rather odd that all the advisers to this government, in order to find a practical demonstration of their theory, have to go either to Quebec, or to Newfoundland, or to Saskatchewan or to British Columbia; but they can never fulfill their objectives in Ontario. In Ontario they receive only hostility, they receive very little encouragement. No one can pretend that in the area of staffing the social services we have come up with any kind of plan.

The Canadian conference on social work has accepted the welfare worker rationale. We have found in one agency after another that it is commonplace in other jurisdictions and yet nothing at all is done in Ontario.

Let me quote once more from James Gripton on staffing and training, before the Canadian conference on social work, as far back as June, 1960.

Not only must we face the reality that social services may never be staffed exclusively by professionals, we must also recognize that it would be undesirable and extravagant to do so. The necessity of employing the non-professional may be acknowledged in the first instance because of the shortage of professionals, thereby making it necessary to entrust certain functions to the non-professional, and thus conserve professional time and skill. However, there are many tasks in any service than can be performed quite adequately by the non-professional.

I ask the hon. Minister, where are these non-professionals, and I say to him that, alas, we do not as yet have them.

That is the third point, Mr. Chairman, a different set of career lines with separate training programmes.

The fourth point I want to emphasize, Mr. Chairman, is the question of in-service training. I am going to be as kind as I possibly can and say that in-service training in the province of Ontario, whether it be at the public agency level of government or at the private agency level is a sad, laughable joke, nothing more than that. The very heart and soul of in-service training in The Department of Public Welfare consists of a six-week course. What a pathetic manifestation in the middle of the 20th century—a six-week course.

What does this emboldened course do? It looks at the Act and the regulations thereof and explains them to the recipients of the course in detail, rather like the way we might go through a bill on the floor of this House. It does not have time for discussing the relationship of the worker to the welfare recipient. It does not have time to discuss social work skill. It does not have time to discuss the subtleties and sensitivities of this field. It discusses only the Act and the regulations in great detail.

Lest the hon. members of this House think that I overdo it, let me tell them what is done in the province of Newfoundland in exactly the same six-week course for comparative purposes. Here is its curriculum:

1. Objectives of social welfare programme: An introduction to the social welfare programmes of Canada, their philosophies, objectives and limitations with particular reference to the legislation of Newfoundland.

2. The art of interviewing and helping people.

That is not so unorthodox for social workers, people who will handle a case load of 400 a month—the art of interviewing and helping people. We do not get it in this province. And what does it consist of in Newfoundland?

A study of the principles and skills used in interviewing people in need, with special attention to the importance of an understanding of human growth and behaviour.

We are just beginning to institute courses on human growth and behaviour for teachers in OCE and in teachers' college, so I suppose it is too much to ask that that be given to people who are working in the social welfare field, but it is desperately needed. Then, thirdly, you have administration in public welfare:

A study of the principles and practices of administration, particularly as they would apply in the case of Newfoundland.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, why is it not possible for the biggest and most resourceful province in this country to have a similar six-week programme? Why must we limit all our activity to this restricted circumscribed parochial stab in the direction of Acts and regulations? It is not enough. No wonder your social services break down.

When the hon. leader of the Opposition sneers about what is being done for people in the field, he has every right to sneer. It is pretentious and extravagant in the extreme to think that people trained for four weeks on the operation of Acts and regulations can perform a proper service in the field. It is impossible. Some of the most difficult human problems relate to general welfare assistance; and these are the people with whom such workers are dealing. It is no fault of theirs that they inadequately perform the service, it is the fault of government.

I would also point out, Mr. Chairman, that unlike this province, where you have this kind of welfare-worker and in-service training in a government, in Newfoundland you do not have people leaving in large numbers. Again, Newfoundland is a very interesting example. I do not know how many people would want to work in Newfoundland for a lifetime and dedicate themselves to it—I suppose indigenous islanders would like to—but it is significant that 25 per cent of its welfare department has served over ten years, that another 25 per cent has served from five to ten years, that another 25 per cent has served from three to five years, and that only 25 per cent has served under three years. I do not know what the breakdown is in the province of Ontario but I would be willing to guess that it does not bear comparison.

I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that that is a reflection of the inadequacy of any government in-service training. As a matter of fact, just to expand for a moment, one of the other tragedies is that whereas there is no government in-service training there is very little agency in-service training. I have some figures here and I find them rather interesting. To put it in the simplest terms: out of 74 people in the private service field engaged in some kind of educational training or instruction, not a single one of them in the year 1963 was full time—not one. The only full-time instructors we have are in the department for social work at the graduate level.

And why not one? Because, for example, when we passed The Child Welfare Act through this Legislature we made no provision in the body of that Act for grants for the purposes of education and training. The only training programme we have to which the government adheres is this little six-week expedition; the occasional application of an individual to a school of social work; the back-door training which the government sponsors in conjunction with the children's aid society—that is really the children's aid society's, not the government; and the Ryerson course—which I suspect, if the government could have dropped it, would have been dropped, only Ryerson took it on and it is now a distinctly Ryerson course; and one or two other things like the Thistle town childcare worker experiment which is The Department of Health and not the The Department of Public Welfare.

In other jurisdictions, Mr. Chairman, governments have realized that if we are to avoid an indescribable crisis in this field, government has to make provision for in-service training. In the United States in 1962 legislation was passed which is remarkable in the western world. Before individual states could receive federal funds, they had to meet certain training standards. They had to meet certain staffing requirements. Every state had to have a full-time state training director.

What do we have in the province of Ontario? A man who gives the six-week courses. I have no doubt as to his dedication, but that is not a training director in the meaning of the word.

Not later than July 1, 1967, every American state had to have a fully operating programme of staff development, including: 1. A description of the organization and scope of the staff development programmes; 2. An organized programme of in-service training available to all staff in state and local agencies administering public assistance; 3. An outline of what the plan must encompass, the length of time for training, the number of employees who must be involved, and the nature of the orientation. In every single state it is made mandatory that individual agencies have full-time directors of training before the federal grants will be available—not only the province or the state, but the agencies as well.

Mr. Chairman, we have nothing corresponding to that in the province of Ontario. This government will not even concede the relevance of agency staff training. It will not even, under its new Acts, like The Child Welfare Act, grant money appropriated for that purpose. One area of social assistance after another will fail and fail wretchedly, unless we begin to develop in-service training and staff training programmes.

They do not exist at the government level, and they do not exist at the private agency level, except in individual inspired experiments, like Thistle town, the Jewish family and child service and some of the children's aid societies. And there is no direction coming from this government at all. The direction from The Department of Public Welfare is reminiscent of that given to day nurseries, or homemakers. It is here; it is showpiece; if you want it, take it, otherwise fend for yourself—regardless of the damage to families and children in the process.

Again there is this whimpering cry that we have not enough staff and not enough trained people; but this will not stand up to an analysis of the situation in the province, and that, Mr. Chairman, brings me to my fifth and final point on this vote.

One of the fundamental reasons why we do not have enough social workers, why we do not have enough undergraduates moving into this field, why there is an insufficient welfare training programme, and why there is no in-service training in the province worthy of the name, is that we are the only jurisdiction in Canada which does not know what is required. We simply have never made a manpower survey in the social welfare field; never, in this province; for what reason I do not know.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): I do not know how we get along without you.

Mr. S. Lewis: I simply do not know. I have mentioned at other times, Mr. Chairman, that back in the early 50s there was a survey made of all of Canada—although it managed to except Ontario—and in one jurisdiction after another they knew their needs. But not in the province of Ontario.

Not only do we not know our staff needs, the manpower needs, Mr. Chairman, we do not know the caseload or the workload. If some of the hon. members want to decry this particular facet of it, I ask them to ask the hon. Minister some of these questions.

How many people at a supervisory administrative level in social welfare will we need by 1970 in the province of Ontario? I challenge the hon. Minister for an answer. How many people will we need at the post-graduate level in social work, by 1970? What is the best ratio of worker to case load, in highly complicated general welfare assistance cases, in aged cases, in disabled cases, in blind cases? How many? Why is it that this jurisdiction does not know, when one after another of the other jurisdictions has a careful manpower programme worked out? Why is it Ontario has not announced specifically that it will join the federal Department of Health and Welfare survey of manpower needs? Why can none of these questions be answered by this government? Is it purely a matter of hope and prayer and Scotch tape, and nothing beyond that? Is it the panic-ridden holding up of a crumbling structure of welfare, because no one knows the requirements? And so no one can plan.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Nonsense!

Mr. S. Lewis: I am perturbing the hon. Minister of Labour. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that at least the hon. Minister of Labour, in his new blueprint for industry and in his new research branch, is beginning to evaluate manpower needs across the province; for that we, in the Opposition, congratulate him. But in the public assistance field, nothing is known; absolutely nothing. We are planning completely in the dark, and we do it with a bravado which bespeaks one tragedy of social assistance after another, because the majority of our problems in this field relate to a lack of awareness of what is needed and what is involved.

You can speak to one agency head after another, to one professor at the school of social work after another; one can read the literature from the council on social work education. Everywhere there is the same cry, "Why cannot we undertake a manpower programme, an analysis of demands, and a meeting of needs, staged over the next five or ten years?" I do not know why. I do not know why the hon. Minister and his comrades have refused to do so, but they have, for whatever reason.

So who has had to do it? This is the interesting thing. When The Department of Education failed in its training of teachers to identify certain exceptional children in the schools, the Ontario mental health foundation, a private agency, government-subsidized, had to run across the province from school to school, giving courses to teachers, in the abdication of government responsibility, in the abdication of government responsibility. And in the abdication of this department's responsibility, the Canadian welfare council has had to step in.

In 1963 and 1964, the Canadian welfare council undertook a series of studies under the commission on utilization of personnel. These were the areas it undertook to study, and I would simply like to put them on the record, to show the specifics about which so many people in this field are concerned:

(a) To identify levels of competence, education, and experience required to satisfactorily carry out various types of social welfare tasks.

(b) To develop a system of classifying social welfare positions that will indicate the level of competence required for the social welfare tasks assigned to each class of position.

(c) To test the validity of the classification system by trying it out on a representative number of public and private agencies. Hopefully, such a series of tests would also give a rough indication of the number of personnel needed at each level of competence to man the range of welfare positions found in Canadian social welfare services.

(d) To determine, while testing the validity of the classification system, the possibilities for making more effective use of professional social workers in the redistribution of social welfare tasks in the agencies under study.

Mr. Chairman, why should such a study have to be carried out by the Canadian welfare council—and concentrated indeed, in large measure, in the province of Ontario?

This is not a private agency task. This is a government task. It is a government which evaluates the manpower needs in society, not some private agency whose conscience is so unhappy at the prospect of diminishing services that, in desperation, it turns to such a survey.

So they analyzed an agency here and an agency there, and learned a number of fascinating things. They learned that we were not utilizing our personnel properly; that we were abusing our professionals; that they were in the wrong positions; that the wrong people were supervising; and that the wrong people were in field work; that the jobs that were being done by professionals could better be done by volunteers; that we were either under-utilizing or over-utilizing; that, in the agencies studied, the welfare worker set-up was, by and large, inadequate. So that, even as we now stand, we could make immeasurable improvement if the government took a manpower survey under advisement. But it has not done so, and it is not enough to wait for the Ontario welfare council or the Canadian welfare council to do so.

As I say, it is not only Canada and the province of Ontario, Mr. Chairman, who have done this. There is a Michigan study, with which the hon. Minister is familiar. There is a United States bureau of family welfare services study which is available; and there is, above all, and I want to make reference to it in this House, a California project, with which the hon. Minister is doubtless familiar. What they did in California, faced with a similar crisis, two years ago—part of the fruits of which some of us who were on the trip saw—was this. California is no idyllic social welfare apparatus; but, in certain areas, particularly reform institutions, they had a masterful set-up of trained people.

What California did two years ago was to take 500 cases at random in the state, analyze each of them and break them down into areas of greater complication and lesser complication. Then it analyzed the number of cases to match a worker of a certain skill level, projected these skills to a statewide basis, and decided how many workers would be needed to fulfill this certain case load.

When it was finished, it was able to estimate for the year 1970, an exact ratio of manpower needs in the entire social service area. Then California went to work, gave the money, and began training the people in equivalents to Ryerson courses and undergraduate courses, and spending tremendous amounts of federal money in in-service training. But the point was, Mr. Chairman, that they made the study; and it is a study we have never made. And the wails on the other side of the House will not ring true until such a study is made, and until the hon. Minister is able to answer some of the questions.

The hon. leader of the Opposition, and I think the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter), asked the hon. Minister earlier in his estimates: What is a reasonable case load? We could not get any answer, Mr. Chairman, about a reasonable case load, because no one in the province of Ontario has worked out the degree of complication in certain shared assistance programmes, and the number of cases per worker that is desirable. Every other jurisdiction which has worked it out has come to the ratio of one worker to 50 or 60 complicated cases. Our ratio is one to 396 at the moment. Now maybe it would not be as small a ratio for the province of Ontario; but we cannot tell until the study has been made and the study simply is not available.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that this is in many ways a restless Legislature as the bells for tomorrow ring nigh, but I think that on this side of the House it is incumbent on us to raise these particular areas in these estimates at this time, and at length, because unless we get an answer here, there is no answer.

Unless this government begins training programmes and manpower surveys in the field of social welfare, our entire service will be crippled for lack of personnel forever. There will never be a solution, just never.

As I say, the modest, and I have no doubt intensely sincere, responses of the hon. Minister that they are trying will not provide an answer, because when we look over those five areas again—just let me enumerate them—we have no plan, no blueprint. The hon. Minister of University Affairs—I think he was at the time wearing the hat of the Minister of Education—admitted during the Education estimates that there was in fact no blueprint in this area. It is the only such area of government. We pretend to a blueprint in every other area, except this one.

First should come graduate schools of social work, their relevance, their role and the numbers required; second, undergraduate courses leading to a degree in social welfare or social work; third, welfare worker career lines, and training provided at the community college level for a new level of social welfare worker; fourth, in-service training at government level and private agency level, with a massive inpouring of funds; fifth, and most important, a detailed analysis of manpower requirements in the social service field right across this province, missing not a single agency. That, in the ultimate goal, Mr. Chairman, is the only conceivable answer to our manpower problems in this field.

Mr. Chairman: Before proceeding with vote 1705, I would like to make an announcement. This House is always pleased to welcome important groups of visitors, and today we would like to welcome the Preston schoolboys safety patrol in the west gallery.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to be very long. I have appreciated and enjoyed the two discourses, first by the hon. leader of the Opposition and now the hon. member for Scarborough West.

In reference to the hon. member for Scarborough West, he has expressed his views and he has brought forth some comparisons which in most instances I trust were compatible. I would say some others might not be as compatible to this province as to other parts of the country, but, however, on the blueprint he has expressed five points. As to the points themselves, I am not in entire disagreement with him. How to arrive at them is another story. Naturally, he professes a different point of view than we do on this side of the House and that I can appreciate. But at the same time, I think these five points have a lot of merit and I can assure you that we will look at this very closely. The full implications were not expressed in so many words, but I think his views can be found in there and some analysis of his sentences will be required for that. I cannot say honestly that I disagree with him.

However, I will also tell him that with the small experience I have had with this field in dealing with people generally—either firstly as a professional and then coming in through this field later on, and also as a politician, if you wish—sometimes the theory is so much easier than the application of what you would like to do. It is one of those actualities that you have to work with. When he is an authority—I do not know if the hon. member will ever be, but when he finds that out—he will remember these words I have spoken now, that theory is so much easier than practice in many of these things. However, I think he put that forward with his usual sincerity in this matter and I think the points are worth looking at and I will do so, I can assure him.

As far as I am personally concerned, if the universities can afford or will have—let us say they should—a course in social work, all of them, I would appreciate it very much. Anything I could do from where I stand to encourage this I would, I can assure you. I think perhaps the course at Ryerson will be an encouragement and will be sort of a guiding light toward that end somewhere or another, especially in the undergraduate field.

I like the idea and the point that he brought out, that professionals cannot do the whole thing. As a matter of fact, they can do very little when it comes to that field, I would say. I still like the good old common horse sense of people who deal with people as they go along and they do not need a lot of fancy education to do that. I have been in the field myself when I was younger, and when I was a country lawyer, if you wish, and I have had many occasions to deal with these things. I found out that people can be talked to much easier, they are not as scared, if they know they are on the same level, rather than when talking to some guy with a lot of titles at the end of his name.

Mind you, graduates of the in-service training and the practical course for the people going on the job, those who have that experience, they get to know the people and they get to be trusted. They are not only there to fill in forms, I can assure you. If I left that impression, I wish to take it back. They are there also to counsel people. They are sort of like a father confessor in many instances and they can give good advice. This I know. And I know that these people do not look at the clock to see what time it is and if they should quit work. There is no time of the day or night when they do that. My hon. friend knows this, too. I think we cannot do without those people. I would rather do without the professionals than I would do without these people.

I would say I appreciated his words and I can assure him that they will be given very close study.

In respect to the hon. leader of the Opposition, I think he, too, understands how we work and he understands, too, that some matters are very difficult sometimes to put into practice, although they are there and we are trying to do these things as much as we can. We are only human beings, and he knows that.

I would like to say, by the way, that I appreciate his words when he mentioned four regional welfare services. I found out this afternoon before I came in here that there is another region that has come in definitely and that is the district of Parry Sound. Again, Mr. Chairman, I do not know, and perhaps I am all wrong, but I just cannot force anything upon anybody. I like them to come along and I try to persuade them, and I think maybe the new Act, which this Legislature has been so kind to pass, at least in second reading, and up until third reading, to help these people in their administration costs, will be a means of bringing them in. Mind you, I have never met any groups yet—and I have talked to many groups, united counties or groups of that description—who have spoken against regional welfare consolidation. They are all for it.

But at the same time, if my hon. friend has any experience with people out in the country dealing with county councils and that sort of thing, you are dealing with hard stock politicians. As far as we are concerned here, we are sissies compared to these fellows. So these are the fellows you have to convince.

But I am quite satisfied, sir, that we will do so in the long run because they take experience from the others. That is one way of doing it, and I hope we will be successful, and I hope that next year that number will be more than doubled. As a matter of fact, what happened when I made a plea for this at their convention recently was interesting. Something I seldom do is to have a speech that I have made—because I never found them that good—printed and distributed, but I have been requested to do that for them, so apparently they have shown some interest, at least.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what else I can add here. I will easily tell you that I do not profess to have that great ability of retaining the speeches very well, and the meat that is in them. I am trying, as I talk to you, to remember what has been said and if I have not answered most of the points, I felt that they were a theory expressed to help me in my work more than questions to be asked directly about administration, which really is what the estimates are. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks that were made by the hon. gentlemen in question. I know they were sincere and I know they have been made to help me, and those who work with me in the performance of what we have to do each and every day.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a couple of comments, if I could. I am a little concerned by the hon. Minister's remarks that in a professional worker, as far as he is concerned, good old common sense is the thing that counts. When I think of the great advances in medical science, Mr. Chairman, I would rather take a young doctor who has studied, and graduated, and got some degrees after his name when I am lying on an operating table, than I would some horse-and-buggy old guy who has got some kind of medicine.

I would say that in the social sciences, although it may be hard for some to realize, there have been discoveries, there have been new approaches in connection with behaviour problems, and so on. I am just a little concerned about constant reliance on the fact that in the case of the professional, someone who happened to go and study some of the social science that is developing around the world, you are suspicious of them, because that is what I infer from it, and I suggest that is probably the case.

I believe there could be a very stultifying atmosphere in your department where there have been people who have felt that, according to regulation 22, you give an unmarried mother 20 bucks. That is according to the old Elizabethan law, which is almost like a rite from the Bible, from a descendancy from one of Moses' utterances, but this is what we stand by. Ours is not to question why, ours is but to do and die.

I think there needs to be a little more questioning in your department, and I think that you need a little bit of theory to get away the cobwebs of practice, because you are costing us a lot of money with your cobwebs of practice.

I suggest that my hon. friend from Scarborough West is introducing a breath of fresh air in this Legislature with some of his approaches. And if you suggest that this is new or something else, then I say, with great respect, that there is senility developing on the part of a government that has been in for 22 years.

May I say I am not referring to you personally, but to the philosophy of a department that cannot look at fresh new ideas. The hon. members drew them from around the world to you.

One of the things that concerned me is that you have not used imagination to recruit new people. And I was concerned at your whole attitude to women—and I will pause after that. I wanted to say that I have a column here, it is "Do you want women to study their place in community?" What I noticed, and unfortunately it is not here—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): That is a research.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, and it is a research that I am sure you and I would both gallantly step into to look at. One of our situations is this, that when you talked of common sense—and I want to concur with you to some extent on this—I think just academic background in itself is not enough when dealing with human beings. On the other hand, I do think that from social science research we are learning more about behaviour problems. I think that there should be a balance of these two, but I never sneer at a guy who has a professional degree. I appreciate the hon. Minister did not say that, so I stress it.

Let me say this—and this comes back to the manpower study that my hon. colleague from Scarborough West was talking about—I know that he was including women when he referred to manpower. It is because of his legal background that he refers to man when he is also referring to woman.

Let me say that in the United States there was a report of the commission on the status of women, and I am bringing this up because of the reactionary approach that we had from certain members around here the other night when it was thought that women might perhaps want to do more in their society. It was suggested that in some cases the only reason that they move out into society to take jobs is not from the economic need but because they have got to keep up with the Joneses or something else. The hon. Minister of Labour did not say that, but there were some others, more reactionary in their conservative thinking than the hon. Minister, who certainly suggested that. I would say in my own riding that there are an awful lot of women who have to get out to work, and they would love to be able to stay at home.

Let me come to this study because this is an untapped source that you have not used enough. This is from this president's report on the status of women. It is a part-time study:

The commission finds that for mature women using educational facilities at any level, part-time study is the most likely pattern. Its legitimacy must be recognized by institutions of higher learning in assessing plans of study suggested on this basis, and by academic and other bodies determining eligibility for fellowships, scholarships and loans.

The problem: The problem is the current rigidity in regard to admission—prerequisites, residence and scheduling. They have to be made more flexible. For example, proficiency testing should be widely available as a means of obtaining credit for knowledge acquired outside regular academic courses.

I think my hon. friend would agree with it.

In the nursing profession, in the welfare services, you have women with experience of having brought up children, with a sympathy toward the problems. You have a whole untapped force there, and I consider that one of the reasons why they are not being attracted to take part in this field after their children are grown up is because of the rigidity on the part of both university and training courses, and I would include Ryerson with that. You have got a kind of a time-clock approach, so you say they have to be there at nine for their study and leave at five.

Some of them would be glad to work part time, but they have to get home in order to cook supper for their family and keep it together. There has been no imagination in this area, yet here is a great wealth of source. I would hope in your manpower study you will be including women, and trying to think in terms of the woman. Let me say that we never think in terms of the woman in our society, in the vocational work. The hon. Minister of Labour, I think, is probably doing a study now on this. He has got a women's division, I understand, but certainly from this—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We think of them every day.

Mr. Thompson: Have you done much study in some areas?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Certainly we have.

Mr. Thompson: Well, let us have a look at some of this kind of thing.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Have you seen any of the surveys in this field?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I have. I have looked at some of your surveys.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Then you must know what has been done on them, the work that has been done on them.

Mr. Thompson: For example, in nursing and nursery schools, I could ask the hon. Minister, how did you decide on priority of giving grants to nursery schools? Did the hon. Minister decide to put them in certain industries? Did you decide to place them in certain hospitals? What areas did the hon. Minister decide that the nursery schools should get grants for the working woman? What about certain ethnic groups in connection with where there are two parents who have to get out to work to get established? Have you done studies on this to know that a nursery school should be located there?

I will tell you bluntly, you have not. You have not done studies on so many areas, and the hon. member for Scarborough West was completely on the mark. Last year, I asked, for example, about rehabilitation services. How many people in this province needed rehabilitation services? The hon. Minister told me he did not know. The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) does not even know this. I do not want to wax irritated at the inefficiency that I behold in the department, otherwise it would take me from now until six o'clock at night.

But to tell me you have done studies, sir, is just not accurate. On the one study that you did do, on the 100 cases, we heard the ludicrous philosophy in which you came out as saying that most of these people could not be employable. I think there was an editorial in one of the papers saying, "Cecile puts his foot in his mouth again," or something. Take advantage of the very meagre studies you have done, but do more. One area to attack is women, and I will come to that later because, under rehabilitation, I want to talk about the rehabilitation of this lost sex and show that they should be able to play a greater part in the community.

Vote 1705 agreed to.

On vote 1706:

Mr. H. S. Racine (Ottawa East): Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on this vote. First I would like to note that the general welfare assistance estimates have increased, between 1964 and 1966, some $16,041,064 to $19,319,000 in 1965, and to $25,534,000 for the estimates of this fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, I am not quoting these figures to criticize The Department of Public Welfare for these increases. I would like to say, however, that this does not prove that a better job is being done. I think it can be said, without fear of contradiction, and it has been said many times today, that a lack of trained workers, at all levels, tends to make us wonder whether this money is really being spent in an adequate manner.

I would like to make a few comments on a series of articles published in the Ottawa Citizen in March this year. I do not agree with all the facts and figures in these five articles. These articles have been objected to by social workers and others because: (1) The series did not present a balanced picture of the welfare situation in Ottawa; (2) Statistics had been twisted; (3) Selected exceptional cases had been used to make the points; and (4) The articles negated the value of education in welfare worker training.

In the first of these articles—and I think this will be of interest to the hon. Minister; he has probably read those articles, or someone from his department has done so—it says:

Ottawa's welfare department has replaced its knuckledusters of yesteryear with fancy kid gloves. Financial assistance, once so grudging, is now as free as the law permits. The welcome mat is out all the way. As the result city welfare assistance doubled and redoubled during the past five years from $545,000 in 1959 to more than $2 million in 1964.

I am talking about the city of Ottawa, where there is perhaps the smallest number of unemployed in this province; and this is the story of welfare assistance in that city.

And the 24,410 persons assisted in 1959 mushroomed to a record of 73,000 in 1964, a figure equal to 30 per cent of Ottawa's total population. In addition, a sum exceeding $3 million was paid out in Ottawa by provincial and federal governments for child welfare, mothers' allowances, old age assistance, excluding pensions, medical and dental services, blind persons' allowances, and other welfare payments.

Now a little further in this first article it says:

Now the case load threatens and still threatens to smother the workers, many of whom were forced to deal with 200 and even 300 files at a time.

I shall not read the entire article, it would take too much time, but I think I can quote you some of the pertinent facts.

There is one thing that is being said in the article, and that is the fact that perhaps a lot of people leave the smaller municipalities to come into the larger cities, and this problem applies to Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, Ottawa, and other places.

This article says:

Probably the reluctance of the smaller municipalities to accept this responsibility will never be better revealed than by a letter received by the Ottawa department of welfare, in reply to its request for a verification of residence for Mr. and Mrs. Mike Smith.

This couple, wrote the welfare officer of an eastern Ontario township, is a prime example of the kind of person whom we are expected to assist and support through welfare. He will only work if there is no alternative, and then only if he can see his way clear to swindle his employer or helpers or someone. He lacks ambition to get up and go to work when he is employed. He is unreliable and even objectionable if work is provided for him. He has lived here for two years with no welfare because he knew it was not the habit to grant welfare to persons of his age—he was 40 years of age;

—and ability, who was in good health. Here we tell them: "There is a job in your trade, so hop to it," and if he did not work that is his fault, not the fault of the municipality.

Then they go on, naturally, about how this gentleman left this small municipality and came to Ottawa to receive welfare assistance.

From this second article, I will just pick out one paragraph here and there:

What is more, this fact is often so obvious that welfare workers actually advise menployed persons not to go to work. They would be fools, one welfare official explained, to take a job, say, at $50 a week when it means they would be cut off welfare assistance. Why I would not do it myself.

Then another paragraph here:

Other so-called employable persons seek the sympathy of their doctors, some of whom grant certificates of unemployability at the drop of a hat.

Then they talk about Alan Brown, 48, who was not satisfied when a doctor found no applicable disease and rated him fully employable. So, six weeks later, he went to another doctor who, referring to his previous examination reported:

"This man has had the benefit of a thorough medical recently and nothing in particular turned up. I would categorize him as a medically unstable person." Mr. Brown is now home free and can go on receiving welfare assistance indefinitely without fear of being asked to find a job unless, of course, a future medical report tells a different story.

Mr. Chairman, I have another paragraph in the third article. This is in connection with welfare workers and the job they have to perform:

We found no welfare workers who did counsel their clients to the full extent of their considerable abilities, though most were aware that this was not their prime function. Many felt that they had no choice, in the absence of more qualified assistance, but to offer the best advice they could. "What do you do?" asked Sid Ford, a welfare worker who is married and has two children, "when you recommend that a woman who has just had her eighth illegitimate child should see her doctor regarding birth control and she refuses?"

In the same article, they refer to the lack of social workers available. They refer to one, a girl 21 years of age, a graduate of St. Patrick's college, who carried a load of about 150 cases just nine months after being on the job:

Miss Gray says she was most disturbed by the poor diet of many welfare recipients. Some mothers fed their children nothing but bread and milk for a large part of each month. In most welfare homes, it was a feast when the monthly welfare cheque arrived, then after a very few days it was back to the bread and milk. Efforts to assist families budget their spending were generally futile. They simply had too many bills to pay. One man had only $12 left for food after he paid his bills, Miss Gray said, "How can he possibly live for a month on that?"

In such cases she would sometimes ask the Salvation Army to help out, which it invariably did, with big boxes of canned foods.

Article number four talks about how hard it is to turn back the needy, and this article talks about the regional office at 288 Dalhousie Street where about 80 per cent of applications are received:

—is modern and bright with private cubicles for consultation. Unless a case is urgent, Mr. Georgenis prefers to have interviews conducted by appointment. Each of his workers hears seven applications on a typical day, allowing about 45 minutes for an interview.

Single applicants are generally judged on their record of residence. All applicants are obliged to state whether they have money in the bank before the city will help them, and the welfare department has the right, if it cares to exercise it, to search the list of depositors in local banks to discover if a particular applicant is telling the truth.

On one occasion the city found it was supporting a woman who had $11,000 in her savings account. Recently assistance was refused to two elderly sisters who claimed they could not make ends meet on their income. They had been trying to squeeze by on the interest on their savings; the principal totalled more than $60,000.

Article number 5 talks about the various problems of the welfare setup in Ottawa, and this paragraph says:

Every welfare worker in the firing line knows full well that money alone can never bring victory. Yet, because it is the only ammunition available, he makes the most of it.

I visited welfare aided homes in Ottawa where the filth and stench were so bad you would swear the occupants kept a dead horse in the cellar. In a gloomy corner you would find half a dozen tiny children huddled around an old TV set. It was as if their only glimpse of the world was caught through a 17-inch screen. Curiously, almost every welfare home has a television set. Youngsters often call it their "dream" box.

Without doubt, extreme poverty exists in Ottawa, no less than in other cities, and nobody has found a cure for it; and the city welfare department director, Mr. Godfrey, last year initiated a series of training programmes for his staff that gives promise for the future. To spur the effort, he hired Miss Jean Grant, an MSW graduate of the University of Toronto with 18 years experience in the Toronto welfare department. She is in charge of the training programme and, at the same time, supervises the department's child welfare unit, comprising four workers who specialize in cases involving child maltreatment neglect.

Attempts have been made to co-ordinate the various services of welfare in Ottawa. Apparently they have not encountered too much success and, as this article says, in ending:

However, past attempts at co-ordination by the Ottawa welfare council were unsuccessful. Explained a spokesman: "Nobody wants to be co-ordinated."

Mr. Chairman, I think this series of articles—and I have already said that I do not agree with everything that appears in them—seems to prove what my hon. friend from Scarborough West and my hon. leader have said about the lack of social workers in the field.

Naturally there are not enough social workers in the provincial Department of Public Welfare, and I think the same problem exists all throughout the province in various municipalities.

I would like to say a word or two, Mr. Chairman, about housing and welfare, because in this amount we pay out for welfare in this province, I think we have quite a considerable amount of money for housing. Some time ago there was a meeting of the Ottawa welfare council where the question of housing was discussed. It was said at the time that there were approximately 900 to 1,500 families in Ottawa who needed public housing.

In the past few years no housing of any importance has been made available to families receiving assistance. Mind you, my point is this: There have been a number of new housing units built in Ottawa but very, very few of those housing units have been made available to the families receiving assistance, particularly to large families. Welfare workers have told me that no more than eight families with limited income had been given suitable housing in the last year or so.

In the case of private owners, of course, we understand that they will rent their homes or their houses in better circumstances. I would just like, in closing, to make a few remarks about this family that I know well, living not far from my own home—a family of eight children, father and mother. The father is working and the mother is at home, and the father works for possibly seven or eight months a year and is out of work for the balance of the year. At the present time, this family receives assistance from the city of Ottawa, and consequently from this department.

This family is living in a very old, unpainted house, where they are paying $95 a month rent. This house, if it were not rented to that type of a family, might bring about $35 or $40 in rent. But this family is really paying a tremendous rent because this is the only accommodation that is available. It means that this government is paying quite a considerable amount of money, not only for the rent of those people but for other welfare allowances. I say that there should be better co-ordination between The Department of Public Welfare and the other departments in order to avoid this kind of a situation.

We know that these families need assistance, but I am sure that this one family, for instance, if it received proper assistance from a social worker, could be off the welfare rolls within one year. Naturally, this cannot be done at the present time because of the lack of sufficient trained social workers. But, continuing on this thought, that was very well explained by my hon. friend from Scarborough West, of having sufficient trained workers, I am sure that not only this one case I am quoting, but many other cases throughout the province, could be taken off the welfare rolls if we had a sufficient number of trained workers to rehabilitate those families.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. Minister wish to reply?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: No, go ahead.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to make reference to one part of the hon. Minister's opening presentation, that part which disappointed me, frankly, more than any other. I suppose there are degrees of disappointment in the minds of the Opposition—the hon. Minister doubtless smiles to himself—but it occurred on page 8, and it came as the last paragraph of a very perfunctory summary of nursing home regulations, and read as follows:

The third major effect of the new regulation is to maintain high standards of care for the health, safety, and well-being of the residents and the efficiency of the nursing home.

Mr. Chairman, our nursing home legislation, supervision, well-being, and maintenance of care is a travesty in the province of Ontario. It is one of the most serious areas of government delinquency that we have had during the course of this session.

It was exceedingly sad to those of us on this side of the House that after the excessive public furor in the concentration of the media, the newspapers and informed opinion on the inadequacies of nursing homes, the hon. Minister could walk blithely into the House on the lead-off of his estimates and suggest that all we would do would be to perpetuate these new regulations which are already proven in the minds of those to whom they will apply as irrelevant and ineffective. Maybe the hon. Minister can answer some questions about these new regulations, promulgated under The General Welfare Assistance Act in December, 1964. Section 27 (e) says:

Proprietor means the person who has been granted a licence to operate a nursing home under a bylaw passed by the council of the municipality in which the nursing home is situated.

Mr. Chairman, how does the hon. Minister judge a proprietor? On what basis? With what qualification? What qualification is needed to be one of those who looks after a total of 5,500 people in nursing home care across the province?

Then 27 (l) says:

An inspection of the building is made each night to ensure that there is no danger of fire.

By whom, Mr. Chairman, and under what circumstances?

Section 27 (m) says:

Adequate supervision is provided at all times for the security of the residents and the nursing homes.

What adequate supervision? How can you define adequate supervision? What does the hon. Minister mean by adequate supervision?

Similarly 27 (s) says:

Adequate dietary standards are maintained in the nursing home, and nourishing meals are provided at regular and reasonable intervals and are prepared by or under the supervision of a competent person.

What adequate dietary standards? And which nourishing meal? And what kind of effrontery is it to pass this vagary in legislation when one scandal after another reveals the hopeless inadequacy of so much of our nursing home structure?

Section 27 (b) says:

A sufficient number of staff in relation to the number of residents cared for is on duty in the nursing home at all times.

Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House challenge the hon. Minister. What does he mean by a sufficient number of staff? What are these nebulous staff ratios which result only in the damage of our elder citizens?

Each member of staff is of suitable age, physically fit, and qualified to undertake his duties in the nursing home, and certified by a physician to be free from active tuberculosis or other communicable or contagious diseases.

What qualifications? How does one establish them? What kind of control is the province prepared to exert over nursing homes which now, it is known widely, have been abusing the privilege of caring for elderly citizens?

Section 27 (y) says:

Medical care and attention is made available to the resident.

What is meant by medical care? Under what circumstances? How does the hon. Minister apply it?

And then section 28, I guess it would be, subsection (g), says:

For the purposes of subsection 7 the director may require the inspection of the nursing home by a provincial supervisor.

Why should inspection be a permissive part of this legislation? Why is it not mandatory? And why is it not made regular? Why is it not accepted on a constant basis across the board?

Finally let me refer to number (f):

Adequate arrangements are made so that a physician is available at all times to provide medical care and attention, in emergency or otherwise, as may be required from time to time by any resident.

How do you guarantee such an establishment? How, Mr. Chairman, has the hon. Minister sought to guarantee it under the regulations of 1964 which, in their context, are in some respects even more ludicrous than the regulations which preceded them? Indeed, Mr. Chairman, that is by no means the opinion of isolated members of this House, it is the opinion of Associated Nursing Homes Incorporated, Ontario, which circularized a letter to—

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the member if he would confine his remarks to vote 1706, general welfare? Homes for the aged is the next vote.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I am on vote 6, General Welfare Assistance Act, under which fall all the nursing home regulations. This is the only branch under which they legitimately come. The hon. Minister is nodding his head in agreement, Mr. Chairman. They would not, in fact, come legitimately under any other branch, not nursing homes as such. Am I right Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right.

Mr. S. Lewis: Thank you. The associated nursing homes then circularized a letter to all the hon. members of this Legislature, and indeed to the public at large. They indicated that the government had not even taken the trouble to evaluate its new regulations in the presence of the people who would have to enforce them. This is a pretty serious proposition, Mr. Chairman, when you are dealing with the lives of 5,500 people, at a minimum, in the province of Ontario. And what did the letter say; what did the associated nursing homes have to say? They said as follows, and I quote:

Regulations imposed on essential facilities without consideration of their feasibility or enforceability are not only useless—

I emphasize, “are not only useless”:

—but hamper the efforts of persons concerned with providing services to those requiring nursing home care.

Then they ask some very pertinent questions and I quote:

How is it possible to employ registered nurses and registered nurses’ assistants according to the demands of the regulations when the number of these persons available in Ontario is not sufficient to staff our active treatment and chronically ill hospitals? If professional nursing services were available to staff nursing homes according to the regulations, how can nursing homes absorb this increased cost of care and provide all the other essentials to good patient care at the per diem rate for care set by The Department of Public Welfare?

Obviously both questions are applicable, both questions are appropriate and both questions were never taken into account by the department before it drafted the regulations.

Then we have this very interesting accompanying letter from the medical officer of health in Kent county, as he applies the proposed bylaw to the establishment of four very good nursing homes in Kent county. He said this:

The present nursing home bylaw has little legal force. It is quite possible to run a nursing home and not be licensed.

I repeat, “and not be licensed.”

The present bylaw is not designed to upgrade nursing homes, its only purpose is to facilitate welfare payments and prevent the indigent inhabitant of a nursing home from becoming a charge on the welfare budget of the municipality. The proposed new bylaw for nursing homes suffers from all the defects of previous bylaws for nursing homes. It in no way prevents unscrupulous operators from running shabby nursing homes.

Is it the policy of this government, Mr. Chairman, to promulgate regulations which promote the running of shabby nursing homes by unscrupulous operators? Obviously, the hon. Minister would answer in the negative. But that is the effect of his regulation as at present constituted.

Then the medical officer of health in Kent county questions one after another the regulations which I raised a few short minutes ago in this House and indicates that they are distinctly inappropriate and cannot possibly be enforced in one respect after another.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, we had a pretty serious crisis in the nursing home field. We related hair-raising stories in the press, of abuse and damage to senior citizens, of exploitation and inadequate medical attention. We had private surveys done, and individual stories in various periodicals and newspapers of the day. There developed a public furor which, in its proportion, was equalled only by the hospital bed shortage in Metropolitan Toronto last year. And the hon. Minister of Public Welfare went into hiding, and came forth with this anaemic recitation of regulation—the total purpose of which would be to perpetuate the ills which have existed up till now.

Then the Ontario welfare council, Mr. Chairman, was good enough to release to the public the results of a preliminary survey. The two major points in that survey were as follows: Out of 425 nursing homes in the province, 165 give inadequate care—165 out of 425. How does the hon. Minister justify it? And, in addition, the nursing homes employ 1,034 practical nurses for whom there is no consistent training programme in the province of Ontario.

Some of the things the report did not say, which will be new to this Legislature but which I suspect the report will say, is that we now, at the nursing home level, have only one registered nurse for every 36.8 patients. And, on the basis of all of the model nursing homes operated in the province of Ontario, that ratio should be one to 17 patients. In other words, the ratio is something under half of what it should be. And I say, Mr. Chairman, in the strongest possible terms to the hon. Minister, that that is not geriatric care, that is geriatric contempt. It is not geriatric aid, it is geriatric abuse.

It is not sufficient merely to have a select committee on aging studying the problem at this point. The select committee on aging has a very able chairman, and it is doing some very effective work; but if memory serves me it was the select committee on aging that also became concerned about the nature of the nursing home regulation.

Now we have had the associated nursing homes expressing the same concern, within the last week, to the hon. members of this Legislature. And it seems to me that we cannot sit back in a sort of reconciled washing of hands and say that we will wait for a final report from the select committee, or we will alter these things some time in the future. There is nothing, Mr. Chairman, but nothing, preventing this hon. Minister from reconstituting the entire set of nursing home regulations; indeed, I want to suggest to him in a moment that he can go much further than that; and I intend, on behalf of our party, to set out an alternative proposal in this entire field.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that neither the major scandals nor the general public inquiry has been answered by this quiet, reticent, whispering declaration on the part of the hon. Minister that the purpose of the new regulations is to maintain high standards of care. Your medical officers of health claim that you will lower care.

The hon. Minister says "Name one." I have spoken to other doctors in health areas; I can think of Dr. Dale in Wellington county, I believe, who submitted alternative nursing home regulations. We have the medical officer of health in Kent country. One can think of several across this province.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: On both sides.

Mr. S. Lewis: On both sides? I hesitate to suggest that, Mr. Chairman. I would think that all the medical officers of health are unanimous in their feeling that the regulatory function by the provincial government, where nursing homes are concerned, must necessarily be inadequate.

And, Mr. Chairman—this is equally important—this government treats nursing homes and the work they must fulfill in this society in a patchwork and disoriented way. You have your Homes For Special Care Act under The Department of Health; you have your nursing homes applied under general welfare assistance; you have the sheltered home care under another Act; you have foster home care under yet another one. There is no co-ordination or integration of this entire field.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that that is more than half the problem, that in the plethora of Acts and the amalgam of administration we are defeating our own purposes; we are undermining every single constructive proposal that might be made.

It cannot go on, Mr. Chairman; it cannot be allowed to go on. There are 5,500 people involved. The majority of them, the vast majority of them, 77.9 per cent of them, if memory serves me, are in nursing homes of less than 20 beds; and every reputable study of nursing homes suggested that figure is, in fact, too small, that you cannot maintain the kind of standards required unless you have homes of at least 40 or 50 beds, when the size of the problem is to this extent. There are some of us who would quarrel with the whole rationale of nursing home care. That can be left for another time, during another session. But, under the circumstances as presently constituted, the small nature of the homes, the inability of supervision, our inability to supervise adequately, and the lack of provincial direction, I suggest to you, are very serious liabilities.

So, Mr. Chairman, I should like to make the following proposal to the government and to the hon. Minister; and I think it is a proposal which would be echoed by people directly involved in the field of geriatric services. I wish to propose a new Act governing the licensing, administration, and operation of nursing homes in this province. What Ontario needs at this moment, when nursing homes are essentially business ventures to rehabilitate the aged, is a specific nursing home Act, an Act comparable to The Homes for the Aged Act. Such a nursing home Act should include in its jurisdiction nursing homes and sheltered care homes. The Act would supersede and consolidate all existing legislation, whether presently applicable to The Department of Health or The Department of Public Welfare.

Now, in other words, Mr. Chairman, these nebulous regulations must be defined as to what is meant by "nursing home" and what is meant by "sheltered care home"; and the constant overlapping, confusion, and competition between departments must somehow be overcome.

My second suggestion is that the new Act should specifically define "nursing home and sheltered care home services" as distinct from "boarding home services."

Third, nursing homes and sheltered care homes must be provincially licensed under one government department.

Fourth, this nursing home Act should apply to all nursing and sheltered care homes, not just those including welfare recipients or patients discharged from Ontario hospitals.

Fifth, there must be a uniform licence fee for nursing and sheltered care homes.

Sixth, we need in Ontario a training programme for practical nurses, which would meet the approval of the college of nurses of Ontario. Training plans should take advantage of existing programmes 3, 4 and 5 under the Dominion-provincial retraining agreement. Indeed, section 3 in particular opens up the range of training for practical nurses to staff nursing homes. It has not thus far been exploited by the government.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose on behalf of my party that an information and service bureau be set up in urban areas and in county health units. This service would place residents in the proper facility—that is, either a nursing home, a shelter care home, a boarding home for the aged, or a foster home for the aged. Regulations to the new nursing home Act would follow these lines, and let me set them out:

1. Exact definition of nursing sheltered care and boarding home services; that does not exist under the present regulation.

2. Staff required and its ratio to the number of beds for all three types of homes; that is not given under the present Act. And the inspection needed within all three categories relating to medical officers of health, fire and building departments.

3. What is required for the physical plant of such homes, doors, fire escapes, adequate landscape features, windows, toilets, baths, temperature—all these things must be spelled out if our nursing home legislation is to operate effectively.

4. Nightly inspection of the homes, elimination of fire hazards, use of oxygen, water supply, fire alarms, fire drills, etc.

5. Preparation of food and diets and dietary standards generally in something other than "adequate dietary standards will be maintained." Declarations of motherhood, Mr.

Chairman, are not appropriate in provincial regulations.

6. Patients' records should be uniform in all homes.

7. Qualifications of the nursing staff, the kitchen and cleaning staff should be set out.

8. Definite arrangements for medical and dental care for each resident. Not medical and dental care holus-bolus on one visit, but a regulation for each patient.

9. Medication control, such as locked cupboards for drugs, and records kept, as required by law.

10. A minimum standard programme of recreation and reactivation, including the provision of a common room on each floor of a home. One of the most despairing features of nursing homes as they are presently run, and as I think the final Ontario welfare council report will show, is that the reactivating ingredient, the rehabilitative features, are the ones most woefully lacking. We consign our elderly to the wastebasket of the geriatric system, and that is not good enough. It is scandalous that the government is prepared to tolerate it, and if one is going to set up legislation to give nursing homes for aged, then the least one can do is to have the moral and social responsibility to set up the minimum regulations and enforce them by government.

And finally, Mr. Chairman:

11. Treatment rooms and equipment for emergency cases.

The hon. Minister of Public Welfare has been quoted as pondering provincial licensing of nursing and sheltered care homes. This would only be a halfway measure, I suggest, for a service that is fraught with ineptitude and malpractice. Indeed, if pressed I have cases of malpractice on my desk here in the Legislature now, which would make—I do not mean this unkindly, Mr. Minister—even the small fertility on the top of his head rise and take notice. Nothing short of a new and stringent nursing home Act will alleviate the situation of thousands of older persons in nursing homes, and set a provincial standard for nursing homes.

Mr. Chairman, the provincial government, and The Department of Public Welfare in particular, can no longer retreat from this proposition. It is no longer sufficient to think in terms of regulations only, I suggest. Indeed, I suspect, I have read many of the submissions—my hon. colleague from Hamilton was good enough to show some of them to me—I have read some of the submissions made to the select committee on aging, and

I think that the people in the field are obviously moving in the direction of something more than mere regulation. They are moving in the direction of a consolidating Act for nursing home and sheltered care home care, stringently and vigorously run by this department of government, with no holds barred, tolerating no further abuse, recognizing the trite but important maxim that the aged have made an immeasurable contribution to this society, and that we have a moral responsibility to provide for them once that contribution has terminated.

That, Mr. Chairman, is our proposal.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, a lot of the words my hon. friend has spoken I thought maybe I had written myself at one time or another. But I would like to put the situation in perspective now. You say that the government of Ontario, or some department of government, should now license all these homes? With that I do not disagree. That is coming to a fruition, I think. But we do not want to apply the remedy too soon in case the remedy might be worse than the cure for the time being. There is a progression towards this goal.

As far as these regulations are concerned, as you know, we are not licensing, as of now, the nursing homes. We are simply reimbursing the municipalities who license these homes with part of the cost that they pay for indigents while in these homes. We have increased these subsidies towards that service, and the regulations have been made more stringent than usual because of the fact that we are leading exactly to what my hon. friend has in mind.

I would much prefer to have across the province homes for the aged in sufficient numbers that they would take care of all our aged people if that were possible. I think we have established as policy now that we are trying to build more than one home in each county. Instead of having one institution, we will have more distributed all over the area where they are needed, because that will render a better service in that particular instance. The homes will never become large institutions, but will always remain as a home. All of the facilities are in these homes for the aged that were mentioned a moment ago. We have features of reactivation and common rooms and so on.

I think we are leading up to licensing, and I appreciate the doctor's point of view of a moment ago. But other doctors may want the plan in reverse. I have letters from some doctors who do not agree with the hon. member. I have the expert doctors in my department who certainly have a lot of experience in this, and are complete professionals in this matter. I have reference to the two main doctors there, Dr. Stuart and Dr. Priddle, who are very well known, and who say this is a progression towards the idea that you have in mind. As a matter of fact, I have had that idea in mind for many years.

I cannot tell you now under which department licensing should be because of the features it has, but I believe this department has handled the nursing home problem in pretty fair fashion so far, and I think it may be that you are right when you say it should be done this way. In other words, it should be fashioned along those lines. With that I do not disagree.

He knows very well, and I guess he has mentioned this, that many people get into the nursing home field now. Retired doctors, for instance, retired nurses, and so on, are getting into this field on a very high quality basis. So much so that no indigent would ever be placed in some such nursing homes as exist now in a few instances. But the day will arrive, and, like my hon. friend, I hope it will arrive, when there is control over all these nursing homes, and we can deal with the municipalities in the same way we deal now with those who are indigent. And the programming will be just as good for that particular person as for the person who can afford treatment. I think, in the main part of his talk in this respect, we are not too far apart. But at this present moment, I am advised that most of the people who run nursing homes across the province who want to get the service of a nurse or an assistant nurse, can get them if they wish to.

Mr. S. Lewis: May I answer the hon. Minister? I simply wanted to say to the hon. Minister, if he is in fact moving towards consolidation of an Act, that now is the time to start talking about it publicly. I feel that very earnestly. I think that we make a mistake in talking purely about the licensing of provincial nursing homes because it allows the field in general and the public in particular, to assume that all we are concerned with are particular features of particular regulations, rather than the overall social problem. If the hon. Minister is prepared to accept the proposition—I did not realize that he was—that a provincial nursing home Act is a likelihood in the future, then now is the time to talk about it, while the field is exceedingly fluid and flexible.

I want to suggest to the hon. Minister, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the objective which can kill the nursing home situation, it is the progression of steps towards that objective which is killing the situation, because the progression is in fact too extended.

I do not want to read a letter into the record, but the hon. Minister knows because he has received a copy, the hon. Minister of Health has received a copy, the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) received a copy, and I spoke to the woman involved last night. He has received a copy of this famous case of a loss of some $7,555 over a three-month period in one nursing home, Mr. Chairman; an approach to nursing homes which was not only exploitative in human terms; but in the worst kind of avaricious economic exploitation.

And this kind of thing can go on. It goes on apparently in many homes across the province. The licensing, the policing, the provincial Act is needed now, or you will have hundreds of people similarly exploited, in very short periods of time. In this case, less than three months, to lose $7,500 to one unscrupulous nursing home operator!

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to pursue the details because it is probably not right to do so, but it is a demonstration. I mention it because I know it has come to the hon. Minister's attention and it is a distinct case of the kind with which we are perpetually dealing in this field.

So let us have the Act without further ado—perhaps even before the select committee on aging reports.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have listened to the hon. Minister's remarks. He talks about "too soon," and he is working towards something.

As far as I am concerned, I have been appalled at the indifference on the part of this government to people who are placed in nursing homes, to the homes for the aged and to the whole approach that is being taken. I know you object to this because you always want to say Ontario is the leader. As you look at other countries, you see that there is a compassion and a respect and a dignity for people, especially the aged in their declining years.

Sir, there is a man who, in many other ways I have a great fondness for, but I think he developed the insidious disease which comes to a government that has been in power too long. This comes to a government that has been in for 22 years.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Are you referring to Mackenzie King?

Mr. Thompson: No, I am referring, frankly, to a man of whose riding I am a part-time constituent. In some ways I think he looks after some of his riding, but he has this dangerous, insidious disease of complacency.

These are remarks that he has made, sir, in a report from Queen's Park in the Port Hope Evening Guide of January 6. He says that today Ontario is considered to have the finest homes for the aged anywhere in the world and that very few in the United States even approach the facilities provided for aged persons in Ontario. It is interesting to see that, because that was given on January 6.

Let us look at some headlines, because I am going to raise the headlines that have been written steadily across this province. "Brutality probe uncovers 21 cases." Is this what you are satisfied is the finest in the world?

Mr. Reilly: Are those private?

Mr. Thompson: I am quoting now:

A six-week police investigation of alleged brutality in city nursing homes has revealed 21 cases in which there might be grounds to believe—

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton): Nursing homes—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Not a home for the aged.

Mr. A. V. Walker (Oshawa): Stick to one subject at a time.

An hon. member: What are you talking about? Homes for the aged—

Mr. Thompson: What I am talking about is simply this, that you have had a responsibility for too long—

Mr. Walker: You will always be right where you are, in the Opposition.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, could I have order?

Mr. Chairman: I would ask that you confine yourself to vote 1706, general welfare assistance branch.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I am. I am talking about general welfare assistance—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: You referred to the homes for the aged.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I referred to the homes for the aged and I would still maintain that position, but now my hon. friend is making a comparison between a home for the aged and a nursing home and I do not think he should make that comparison.

Mr. Thompson: All right, I accept that. Let me put this to you. As far as I am concerned, you are responsible for the treatment of people in these nursing homes, whether they are aged or whether they are not, and for the standards and for the licensing, and you yourself have told us—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I am not responsible for the licensing.

Mr. Thompson: You have told us that you are going to move in. I hope I understood you, with respect to standards for these. I shall quote time after time, instances where because of indifference of government and where you have not looked into situations, there has been brutality uncovered in many situations. I just want to read a few of them into the record. This is from the Globe and Mail of June 30, 1964:

A six-week police investigation of alleged brutality in city nursing homes has revealed 21 cases in which there might be grounds to believe a criminal act has been committed, Chief Leonard Lawrence reported to the board of control yesterday.

I could go on into that fact. From Kirkland Lake—now I am going around the province a little bit:

Five elderly pensioners died last night when trapped in the blazing top room of a rooming house which served as a temporary old aged home.

Here is another:

DEATH AT GREEN ACRES HOME FOR AGED WILL BE PROBED

The action came after Mrs. Gertrude Atkins of Scarth Avenue complained her mother was not sent to hospital until five days after she fell and broke her hip.

Then it goes on into the fact where she says:

—residents sitting on toilets for long periods of time, calling for nurses who were too busy to come and help them back to bed.

I could go into many other areas.

From the Hamilton Spectator comes a picture headed "Rotten Drapes Again Budget Fight," and it shows a controller waving a tattered faded set of yellow drapes before his budget-cutting colleagues. The controller described the conditions of Macassa Lodge draperies; they are rotting off the walls, they are disgraceful. The story goes on right down that line, and I realize some people will laugh. Sure, I want that on the record. They have laughed at us on it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: In the Ottawa Journal:

Mayor Reid promised Monday night to look into complaints about admittance requirements to Macdonald Manor apartment units project for the elderly.

It seems to be rather a dictatorial basis by one person who wants to—

Mr. Walker: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. leader of the Opposition permit a question? Did you ever visit Macassa Lodge? Did you ever visit—

Mr. Thompson: No, I did not.

Mr. Walker: Well, we did; that is why we laugh at your suggestion. So did the hon. gentleman down there and he would refute what you just said.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I am sorry. As I list time after time from reporters—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Never mind reporters, we were there.

Mr. Thompson: Are all the press wrong?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You cannot guarantee those facts.

Mr. Thompson: I see. Well, afterwards I will look through Hansard to see how many papers you have not guaranteed the accuracy of. I think there will be quite a number.

Mr. Kerr: Those papers must have quoted you wrong.

Mr. Thompson: In the London Free Press he is arguing for some kind of a halfway house situation, which would be established in homes for the aged and nursing homes to fit persons with minor disabilities, and also goes on listing a number of things which give some sense of responsibility to the patients.

"Rules Bar" is the heading in the Globe and Mail. I suppose that is another one you do not guarantee the accuracy of.

Many aged persons in Metropolitan Toronto who need low rental housing cannot get into existing facilities because of inflexible eligibility requirements, according to the Metro social planning council.

And then the article goes into a number of situations. The Globe and Mail did a fine series about the whole situation of homes for the aged being understaffed and so on.

Here is another one from the Globe and Mail, about Newmarket now:

Deputy Reeve Floyd Perkins of Richmond Hill yesterday told York county council that York Manor home for the aged was understaffed by Nursing Home Act standards. He told council the Act called for one registered nurse to be on duty at all times in the nursing home for each 50 patients. In the home for the aged, there are only three registered nurses on call for 150 patients.

And so it goes on. From the Toronto Telegram:

North Bay—Ontario Welfare Minister Cecile has refused to order an investigation into the home management unless the board asks for one, because it might bring on demands for a spate of other inquiries.

This is you quoted in the Toronto Telegram of March 25, 1965. It seems an awful kind of approach, but if you are concerned about the conditions, it seems to me—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: About having an investigation, Mr. Chairman, nobody from North Bay ever asked me for an investigation; that was strictly a question from a newspaper reporter to which I answered: "If somebody asks me for an investigation, then we will look into it if an investigation is required." But nobody ever asked me.

Mr. Thompson: I refer you to this and I do not know if you refuted this. I have been misquoted in the press myself. This is from the Toronto Telegram, March 25, 1965.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That is right; I remember the interview.

Mr. Thompson: If somebody had asked you for an investigation, you would have had one conducted, am I correct?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The municipality did not ask me for it; nor did anyone else.

Mr. Thompson: I go again into the Niagara Falls Review, which is urging a study into staffing needed at homes for the aged. I take here the Toronto Daily Star of December 30, 1963, which criticizes the treatment of the aged. Add that one to the list that you say I do not quote correctly. Perhaps you will agree with me on this:

"No country treats its older citizens as badly as Canada," Alderman May Pritchard said yesterday.

She goes on to say that Toronto has slums, whether we like to call them that or not. She moves on to describing some of the homes that they have.

The Telegram of February 25, 1965—

Mr. Walker: The hon. leader of the Opposition is all wet, and he knows it, because he has never been there!

Mr. Thompson: How blind can you be?

Mr. Walker: Go and see it with your own eyes. All you are doing is reading—

Mr. Thompson: I am quoting, time after time, from a variety of newspapers from all over this province.

Mr. Walker: All you are doing is quoting from newspaper clippings. You have never been there!

Mr. Thompson: Let me suggest to you that I have been in some of these homes. I happened to work with an aged group myself at one point.

Mr. Walker: We had better put you on our committee and you would find out.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say that I would assume that this writer has been there, much as you have wanted to refute every single newspaper story here. Let me take another one—the Toronto Telegram of February 25, 1965:

A writer who worked undercover in Ontario nursing homes said last night: "Procedures read like a living script from Dickens' 'Oliver Twist'."

A report on nursing homes appeared in the March issue of Chatelaine—another thoroughly irresponsible report, I suppose. How blind can you be!

Mr. Walker: We are not arguing about nursing homes.

Mr. Thompson: I have quoted steadily from a number of papers about conditions in nursing homes, and if this particular colleague wants to suggest that these reporters are all inaccurate in the conditions which they describe, then I suggest that he really needs to get a new set of blinkers.

A report on nursing homes appeared in the Toronto Telegram and the author, Miss G. Salter, describes a Toronto home where patients are "treated like savages and the air is filled with violence." She goes further:

A helpless, sweet-faced, old lady covered her face with her hands when Miss Salter approached her.

And she goes on:

Her hands and arms were covered with livid bruises. She was told by an attendant that the bruises were the result of brutal handling.

The spattered floors and the battered walls were in keeping with the nauseous stench emanating from the rooms of neglected, incontinent patients. The helpless patients spent their days sitting on sodden piles of wet rags.

No backrubs were given, nor were chafed, wet body areas washed or dried. The nurse, on call 16 hours a day, lived in a town 60 miles away from Toronto.

"Nursing homes," said Miss Salter, "have become big business."

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Chairman: Point of order.

Mr. Carruthers: Is that the article out of Chatelaine?

Mr. Thompson: No, it is from the Toronto Telegram.

Mr. Carruthers: Several of these articles, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, what is the point of order?

Mr. Carruthers: The point of order is this: You are quoting newspaper articles—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Carruthers: Many of these magazine articles have been written, and the writers have had a very difficult time to get them published.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is a good point of order—a very good point of order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Thompson: Nursing homes—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You used better material than this when you wrote them—

Mr. Thompson: May I say, sir, that as far as I am concerned I would not have the irresponsibility to suggest, as a number of your colleagues are doing, that all of these papers in some way have irresponsible reporters. I would have the sensitivity to say that these reporters are uncovering a desperate need, and a disgrace to every one of us, and to you, sir, and to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, for not having acted sooner. I am arguing the point that he says he does not want to move too soon. I am suggesting you are moving too late, and I am quoting reasons why I am suggesting you are moving too late:

"Nursing homes have become big business," she said last night, "and there are lots of racketeers in it. There is plenty of room for good private nursing homes. I just do not think people should make money out of human misery."

Let me go on with this.

This is from the Toronto Telegram, a paper which I must, in all honesty, say has not always shown a complete bias toward my own party. The headline says: "Woman Tied to Chair in Metro Nursing Home"; and this was April 3, 1965—not 1865, Mr. Minister, but 1965.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: If my hon. friend is trying to show me that nursing homes are not good in the province of Ontario as a general rule, as I said in my remarks a moment ago, he does not have to convince me that nursing homes in many cases are not what they are cracked up to be. I know this. The thing is that we are progressing toward this regulation, but if you apply the remedy too quickly, the cure might not be as good as it could be.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Minister, as far as I am concerned, I am reading an indictment of you. If you have been aware of these conditions over the years, and you stand up before this House and say that if we apply the remedy too quickly we might not arrive at the cure, then, sir, you should have resigned. You should have—if you have not come through with some legislation in order to protect the citizens of Ontario.

"Woman Tied to Chair in Metro Nursing Home" reads the headline, and you stand before us with a complacent face—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Why are you telling that to me? You should tell that to the metropolitan council or to the city council.

Mr. Thompson: I will tell it to whomever I feel is concerned, and who should do something about it; I feel you are, and that is why I am talking to you. The authority lies with you in connection with the standards,

Another headline—"Many Nursing Homes

Condemned as Fire Traps by Hospital Chief"—is in the Globe and Mail of January 8—two days, by the way, after my friend, the hon. member for Durham told us we had the finest in the world. Dr. John B. Neilson told the legislative select committee on aging: "From what I have seen of nursing homes, I hope if I become chronically ill—"

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carruthers: He has got to the point where he does not know what he is reading now. Does it say what the patient was tied with? I have been in nursing homes; I have been in local nursing homes where the patient has been tied in the chair with a bed sheet—very comfortable and perfectly in order. If she had not been tied in to it, she would have fallen out.

Mr. Thompson: Sir, I become more sickened with some of the arguments raised by this government. We had, at 999, a man who, we understand, has been tied to a chair because of lack of staff; he had not had proper treatment and he died. And we have the insipid kind of argument on the part of the hon. Minister of Health: "We tied him with a bed-sheet," he said, "what is wrong with that?" And for the hon. member for Durham to stand up and talk about a woman tied to a chair in a Metro nursing home, and say: "The fine point is how she is tied." I suggest he should be far more concerned with getting adequate staff and standards rather than the kind of rope you are going to tie people with.

Dr. John B. Neilson is a very responsible man according to some of you outside; he happens to hold a responsible position in our hospital services commission. And what did he tell the legislative committee on aging? He said, "From what I have seen of nursing homes, I hope, if I ever become chronically ill, that someone will not put me in one." He said a lot of these places are fire traps and the commission chairman said, of nursing homes, "I think my friend has been through a lot more than you have"—this is Dr. Neilson talking. Is he as irresponsible as all of these newspaper reporters, or would you say that he has some sense of responsibility about the welfare of the people within these homes?

He said there is no privacy in any nursing home he had ever been in, and a lot of these places are fire traps. "Garbage For The Blind"—let us have a look at this one. And the hon. Minister says, "Don't move too soon, we will work towards agreement, or work out something." And what do we get here? "Garbage

For The Blind" is the headline from the Toronto Daily Star, January 9, 1965:

Two statements about private nursing homes this week made a full-fledged inquiry a necessity.

Burrow Dean Morris, past president of the associated nursing homes of Ontario, testified before a legislative committee that some nursing home operators are profiteers who are cheating the public and shamefully mistreating elderly patients. He even suggested that some operators have indulged in despicable practices, such as feeding blind patients meals made up of scrapings from other inmates' plates.

Later in the week, Dr. J. B. Neilson, chairman of the Ontario hospital services commission, also deplored conditions in the province's nursing homes, charging that a lot of them were fire traps.

This is the end of the editorial of January 9, 1965:

Instead of treating serious charges by responsible people as if they were idle gossip—and let me repeat that one for some of the hon. members in this Legislature:

—instead of treating serious charges by responsible people as if they were idle gossip, the provincial government should appoint a qualified commission of inquiry to search out the truth. The helpless old in nursing homes must be protected against swindling and neglect.

As far as I and my party are concerned, to hear that plaintive whine, "Don't let us move too soon," when I read out indictment after indictment and think of the suffering of each of the people in this kind of situation—

Mr. Carruthers: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition permit a question?

Mr. Thompson: I suggest to you that we have to move quickly and the government has to assume its responsibilities with respect to this whole area.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have listened to the cackle—because it is cackle, they really have not reflected much on it—

Mr. J. R. Knox (Lambton West): Your own members know that statement is not true, they would not agree with you.

Mr. Thompson: I would say this, sir: If this is the attitude; and I am sure it is not because I notice from the front benches, the Treasury benches, we are getting a different approach than we are getting from some of these fellows, they are listening attentively—

An hon. member: There are only three of them there.

Mr. Thompson: I suggest the hon. Minister is listening to this, but that there is an overwhelming indifference, a blindness on the part of a number of his colleagues. This is fine for me, but I say—

Mr. Carruthers: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Thompson: —I am making my appeal to the hon. Minister of Health on this. What should be done—

Mr. Chairman: If the member for Durham wants to speak afterwards he can. This member has the floor.

Mr. Thompson: What should be done—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: If I am lost on this, it is because I have such a mass of documentation by responsible reporters in connection with an examination of our nursing homes that I really find it hard to choose which to read. I may say that I also find a certain nausea at the fact that there is this indifference instead of an aroused concern—

Mr. Knox: It is not indifference!

Mr. Thompson: —an aroused concern by all of us to try to do something about it. Standards and control are obviously the first things, and I appreciate the hon. Minister is saying that he is looking into this area. All I say, sir, is in view of the reports that we have had steadily here, you should not be coming to us today saying: "I do not want to move too soon." You should be coming and saying: "I should have moved far long ago with respect to this." I suggest you have been moving, as you have in so many areas, too little and too late.

May I say that I could look, for example, at what they have done in Sweden and the standards they have set and the approaches they have taken to help older people, who can work in their community and live in a day care centre where they have freedom of movement. May I say there is a whole new approach there—and I will not go into it at this point—that can be applied with respect to this nursing care.

I would have hoped that before this session ends the hon. Minister would have come through very clearly to declare the province's responsibility for demanding standards of these nursing homes. In view of the indictment we have made, in view of the obvious human suffering that these stories show, I would have hoped, sir, that the hon. Minister would have come through with legislation and with the full authority that he has as provincial Minister of Public Welfare, to say, "This mess is going to be cleaned up and I am going to see that citizens, older citizens and ill citizens, are not pushed around for cheap commercial gain and abused in hidden crevices of nursing homes around this province."

Mr. Carruthers: Mr. Chairman, just to set the record straight, that statement I made to the Port Hope Evening Guide, I will back up any time, in any place.

As far as the provincial homes for the aged are concerned, they are the finest, I would say, on the North American continent. The committee visited a number of these. We visited the older homes in the province and I think thanks to the committee's work those homes are now going to be replaced. The hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman, tried his best to confuse the issue, starting out with homes for the aged and then ended up with nursing homes, with a great number of comments from individuals who make personal comments through the press; in many cases, perhaps, just for publicity.

The one case in particular—I have explained this in the House before and he brings it up again—in connection with feeding the blind the scraps off the plates of other patients in nursing homes. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who made that statement was invited to come and verify those remarks before our committee but it was found he was not in a position to do so. It is rather odd that the same accusations, the same criticisms, appeared in an article in a United States publication. It paralleled exactly the remarks made by that gentleman in connection with feeding scraps to the blind off the plates of other patients.

It is rather odd that in many of these cases, when the people are asked to verify statements they have given to the press they are not in a position to do so and refuse to appear before the committee.

These things cannot carry very much weight. If the hon. leader himself had investigated the situations then I think we would be prepared to listen to him; but just to read other people's comments adds very little weight to an argument in connection with nursing homes. We realize and the hon. Minister realizes that a great deal has to be done in connection with nursing homes, but certainly that kind of argument, carries very little weight, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Walker: I would just like to add a word here in support of what the hon. member for Durham has said. I believe the hon. leader of the Opposition was a little upset because he heard, as he put it, I think, it was, "from this area." He must remember that sitting in the first two rows on this side of the House are five members of the homes for the aged committee who have visited east and west and north across this province. We visited nursing homes and we have visited homes for the aged. We in this committee could not argue his statement in regard to nursing homes. We have found nursing homes in which we ourselves would not like to be placed. On the other hand, we have found nursing homes that were very fine institutions.

Mr. Carruthers: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walker: But he is a little mixed up—which is not unusual for the hon. leader of the Opposition—when he inserts in the middle of his tirade something about Macassa Lodge and refers to other homes for the aged in this province, then he is absolutely wrong.

I want to say here and now that I visited Macassa Lodge from one end to the other and I certainly did not see any drapes on the windows decaying or falling off or any of that other tommy-rot that he was talking about. I do believe we have to keep the record straight. Nobody, I do not think, in this whole House, is going to argue that there are not problems in nursing homes in this province; and that is one of the big items with which the homes for the aged committee is dealing.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to reply to my hon. friend that first of all I have quoted from newspaper articles. I assume that they are responsible papers. I do not think that we would disagree with this.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: I would also say, sir, that from my own point I have visited homes for the aged, and it was one of the main interests that I had for a period. Unless we want to take the approach that unless, for example, you had typhoid you cannot speak about typhoid; in this particular situation I have worked with a group of aged people, of retired pensioners in a settlement house. They came as a group to this settlement house once a week. We worked in trying to create new interests for them, to broaden them out into the community. I think it was a successful experiment, it has been written up across the country.

I do not think, if I want to be boastful about it, that there is another member who has had a similar experience, and I have written articles on it. But I am not talking about what I have done personally, I am talking about the fact that it would seem to me that from such evidence written by reporters, they all cannot be so biased. As the publisher of a paper, the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Boyer), I am sure that he feels the integrity of newspaper men is such that you will not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: Well, I was simply reading the facts as presented in the papers, and if it hurts the government and they have decided to squawk and say that all these men were prejudiced, then I suggest that that is a weak argument on their part.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the hon. leader of the Opposition knows that his statement is nonsense.

Mr. Thompson: What statement?

Mr. Boyer: The statement that we are irresponsible on this side of the House and have no regard for the people who are in boarding houses, in nursing homes or in homes for the aged. I ask him, is he not failing to distinguish between the exceptional, the particular case, as reported so sensationally in the items he has read; failing to distinguish between these and the general picture; and thus failing to give credit to the good care which is given to so many people in many nursing homes, and certainly throughout the whole province in homes for the aged.

Mr. Thompson: I am not denying that there are many good homes.

Mr. Boyer: You never mentioned any.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: And you know why I did not mention this at the start. I am concerned that if there is one home where the facts, as stated in these articles, pertain, then I am not satisfied to say I will wait. I would be concerned to pass legislation to close that home down, or to ensure that standards were maintained.

Mr. Boyer: That is utter rot!

Mr. Thompson: I do not think so.

Mr. Sargent: I agree with the hon. member for Oshawa that the committee on the aged have done a very responsible job. They are concerned about the plight of the older people, and the people in nursing homes. My knowledge is that the people we have in this business across the province, by and large in the infancy of this new trend, are trying to do a job. But I do not think we can do enough to pinpoint the importance of what my hon. leader has said, that there is a great area for criticism in this field and anything we can do to focus this is good for all of us.

Now, in light of what my hon. leader has said, and I agree with the hon. member for Oshawa that they have tried to do a good job and we appreciate that, but this is a relatively new field in welfare. We have to look upon it as an area in which there can be rackets. Since 1959, the nursing homes of Ontario have tried to incorporate and get some legislation on their behalf, and it is only since this year in the Ontario Gazette, January, 1965, that we have had some legislation to make this thing tick.

So I do not think you should stand up and brag about the job the hon. Minister is doing in this field because he has been prodded for five years to get to this point. There are many things that this Associated Nursing Homes Incorporated of Ontario, want done, but they cannot prod this department into action. And for you, like a bunch of trained seals again, to clap and criticize my hon. leader for trying to help these people—

Mr. Carruthers: Get down to facts.

Mr. Sargent: He was talking facts.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: We are all here trying to do the same job through our people, and they stand up and they hate to be criticized. Everything you do is right. Now, that is not true.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Well, the association in their letter, and all the nursing homes of Ontario have five very pertinent points that they cannot get the hon. Minister to act on. I respect the time of the House, but you should have read this letter from the Associated Nursing Homes Incorporated.

An hon. member: Everyone got that.

Mr. Sargent: Then I do not see, in light of receiving this document, that you can be so pure and think this department is doing a good job in this field.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): I read the letter, and it made sense to me; it was laudatory of the hon. Minister.

Mr. Sargent: After the remarks from the hon. Minister I deserve to take about half an hour to reply. But it is such stupid remarks that he gives out that takes the time of this House.

Mr. Chairman, I say again, we respect the job this committee has done, but there is a big change they have yet to bring about in this field of nursing for the aged, especially in the field of getting together with The Department of Health in supplying nurses, trained nursing staff to service these homes. We have, under this Act, legislation to say that nursing homes must have this staff, but there are no trained staff for the positions. So how, I would like to ask the hon. Minister, do you intend to implement this Act if you have no trained staff? That is your problem, it is not ours.

Mr. Knox: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to comment on the scurrilous article that the hon. leader of the Opposition was reading there with respect to blind people being fed scraps. The Ontario association of the blind does not know of a single case of that ever happening in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is thinking of the hair dryer.

Mr. Knox: I might also add that for a patient to be tied in a chair is not as bad as the hon. leader of the Opposition makes it sound, and he knows that very well. There are many occasions when this is the only answer to getting somebody out of bed. They can be gotten out of bed, but they are unable to sit and remain in the chair, unless they are tied there. This they want, and this is done, and it is carried on in a perfectly proper manner. If the hon. leader of the Opposition has gone around all the places that he says he has, he knows it.

Mr. Thompson: I would like to ask if this is a fact. I understand there are 440 licensed homes in Ontario and several unlicensed homes. Could I ask the hon. Minister of Public Welfare, is Ontario the only province which does not license nursing homes, establish standards for them and provide provincial inspectors with authority to see that the standards are maintained?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Would the hon. leader of the Opposition please repeat it?

Mr. Thompson: I asked you, sir, is Ontario the only province which does not license nursing homes, establish standards for them and provide provincial inspectors with authority to see that the standards are maintained?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I have not that information with me here, Mr. Chairman. I cannot give that to the hon. leader of the Opposition. I do not know if any other provinces have standards and maintain them.

Mr. Thompson: May I say, sir, in the calm and gentleness of this debate and taking part in it with the same sort of feeling that has been expressed toward me, that I consider it pretty shocking for a Minister of Public Welfare—in view of the indictment that we have had across this province and the deep concern which we have about these standards and the lack of standards that we have—to stand up in this House and tell us he does not know what the standards are in other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: If my hon. friend has any pleasure in abusing me in that respect, that is quite all right, but I do not think I should have to carry that kind of information any more than I could tell you how many nursing homes there would be in the state of California, or how many nurses would be there.

Mr. Thompson: I want to clarify again, I did not ask you how many nursing homes are in the state of California. You have a competent staff around you; if you would use them they could give you the facts. We are asking, are there any other provinces in Canada which do not provide licensed nursing homes?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You do not even know the question without reading it.

Mr. Thompson: I am very sorry. I am asking are there any other provinces which do not license nursing homes, establish standards for them, provide provincial inspectors with authority to see that the standards are maintained?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. S. Lewis: I am just a trifle concerned with the way in which this general issue has been deflected and I was so encouraged by the hon. Minister's original remarks that if I could, I would like to bring them back for a moment.

I would like to ask rhetorically, what we are all fighting about. The hon. Minister is on record as wishing to revise regulations and possibly bring them within provincial inspection, because there are certain inadequacies. The select committee on aging is rightly and courageously on record as expressing inadequacies in nursing home areas and the need to move. I think what we have to accept, all parties in this Legislature, is that mere provincial licensing is not enough, and that we must now move to the point of a provincial Act, specifically for this entire field, of which licensing will be but one aspect.

Since the hon. Minister by and large agreed with this direction, and I suspect that the select committee on aging does as well, let us not be lost in the somewhat futile pursuit of sensational exposés. I admit all of us in the Opposition indulge in this from time to time. At this point, we have found a certain area of agreement and I want to ask the hon. Minister whether he is prepared to give us any point in time at which he would move from provincial licensing to an actual Act. Has he given it any further thought in those terms?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say at this moment, I cannot commit the hon. Minister of Health. Right now, both our staffs and we ourselves are looking at this picture very closely and have been doing so for the last year and a half or so. As a matter of fact, licensing was incorporated in the two amendments that were brought in in similar Acts on other occasions; it is all in the same field. After the surveys—and we have looked throughout the province for at least the last two and a half years—it has been found that this is one thing that you have to go into rather calmly and not try to hurt the people who are in such homes more than you would help by closing the homes up right off the bat, so to speak.

There has been a great movement, as you know, from the western provinces and proprietors are coming here and building here, which is really giving an impetus. Now I think we are pretty close to a solution somewhere or another, but we have got to find a spot where we can put these residents, before we throw them out. I would say to my hon. friend that I would hope that we could move into this pretty definitely. Maybe next year we will have something very definite to show. I could not really assure him of that, but this is my sincere hope. That is as far as I can go.

Mr. S. Lewis: Then I profoundly hope that is true.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, since I could not get an answer, I will read the hon. Minister this quote from the Globe and Mail of July 27:

The Ontario government is at the moment shirking one of these burdens. It is the only province in Canada which has not brought nursing homes under provincial licensing and controls.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You want to be thankful for one thing. If there was a really good newspaper strike, you would be out of all information.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister of Public Welfare's attention was drawn to the announcement made by the law reform commission as reported in today's paper? It is going to inquire into family law, adoption, illegitimacy, consequences of divorce and separation, and generally the field that the hon. Minister concerns himself with. I wonder what arrangements, if any, the hon. Minister has made with the law reform commission, or internally with his own staff, to make themselves available to the law reform commission as it embarks on the conduct of what could and should be a most valuable study for the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, I must tell the hon. member for Downsview that I am glad he brought it to my notice. I have not had a chance to look at a newspaper yet today.

Mr. Singer: I would appreciate it if perhaps before the estimates are over, the hon. Minister can consult with his colleague, the hon. Attorney General, because—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure if we check back we will find, as we do in most instances when these commissions are appointed, that we offered them all the facilities of the government at any time, in any field of study. This is pretty general in every commission that this government establishes, and I imagine it is true for this commission.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I imagine it is true, but I thought that I could perhaps come to the hon. Minister's assistance this afternoon, when he said he was going to get a new statute underway very shortly—

Hon. Mr. Cecile: I did not say that.

Mr. Singer: —and he could call on the services, the excellent services, of this group that is set up by the law reform commission and I am sure it would be more than anxious to assist him in his task. I just wanted to be helpful.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Chairman, there is a problem which I would like to raise relating to this vote. In a way I suppose one could say it is a small problem, but on the other hand, it is a big problem so far as some people are concerned. I will explain the problem and I would like to give a concrete illustration of it.

As I understand it, there is no provision for dental care under any welfare allowance other than mother's allowance, and that under mother's allowance dental care is available only for children. Am I right in that assumption? The only dental care that is possible under the welfare allowance is extraction—in other words, have your teeth completely destroyed. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: That used to be the case. Now it is extended to all adults under both programmes.

Mr. Bryden: When did this happen, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Just in a recent amendment to the regulations.

Mr. Bryden: I am glad to know that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Reilly: I bet that spoils your speech.

Mr. Bryden: No, it does not spoil anything. I think this was a serious gap in the regulations, but I am glad that the department has finally recognized the nature of the gap and has done something about it.

I may say that my experience was that this probably was as big a nuisance to the department officials as it was to the people affected, and no doubt this was a factor in getting the matter straightened out.

Vote 1706 agreed to.

Vote 1707 agreed to.

On vote 1708:

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, under rehabilitation services, it seems to me that the hon. Minister's statement that the department, in co-operation with the University of Toronto school of social work, has developed a special training course whereby a steady flow of professional rehabilitation counsellors will become available to serve Ontario's handicapped, leads to several questions. How long a course is it, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. leader of the Opposition would not mind, I had intended, as I intimated some time ago, to make a short statement.

Mr. Thompson: Is the hon. Minister going to make a statement?

Hon. Mr. Cecile: If I could do it now perhaps it would answer some questions.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Cecile: The rehabilitation services branch of The Department of Public Welfare is responsible for administering the federal, provincial and vocational rehabilitation programme. The basic purpose of this programme is to develop or restore the working capacity of handicapped persons and to prepare and place them in safe and satisfying employment. It does not take the place of basic health, welfare and educational services provided by hospitals, schools or local welfare departments, but rather supplements and co-ordinates services on behalf of individuals so as to provide the necessary continuity of service without which the seriously handicapped person could not achieve ultimate rehabilitation.

Although the programme is administered by The Department of Public Welfare, its services are not confined to welfare recipients but are available to all handicapped persons who can benefit from them. This includes persons discharged from general hospitals, Ontario hospitals and clinics, doctors in private practice, voluntary organizations such as the Canadian national institute for the blind, Canadian arthritis and rheumatism society, march of dimes, Ontario society for crippled children, Canadian hearing society, and public services such as municipal departments of public welfare and national service.

To be eligible a person must (1) be a resident of the province for one year; (2) suffer from a physical or a mental disability which causes an employment handicap; and (3) have a reasonable expectation that rehabilitation services may prepare him for work.

The services available are the assessment services which are required for the determination of eligibility for service and the nature and scope of services to be provided. This includes medical assessment to establish the nature and degree of disability, the need for medical attention, and the individual's work capacity. It also includes social and vocational assessment to evaluate the person's potential in relation to various occupations.

The primary objective of rehabilitation services is to restore the disabled person to maximum functioning by either eliminating or mitigating his physical or mental impairment. This is accomplished by providing medical, surgical, psychiatric care, artificial appliances, therapy, and other medical and related services.

While many handicapped persons referred to the branch already receive complete medical attention financed by the Ontario hospital services commission or Physicians Services Incorporated, our counsellors found it necessary to finance treatment and appliances for 302 people at a cost of approximately $50,000 during the fiscal year 1963. Substantially full implementation of this aspect of the programme has been achieved during the past year, and further utilization is being anticipated in the years to follow.

Individual counselling and guidance through all steps of the rehabilitation process help the disabled persons select and obtain the right job objective. During the fiscal year 1963-64 over 3,000 persons received such help. At the present time the active case load is over 2,500, an increase of 22 per cent over 1962-63. While it is possible for some handicapped individuals to return to former occupations following medical rehabilitation, many are forced to learn new trades because of functional limitation. With the exception of counselling, vocational training continued to be the most expensive service provided and involved an expenditure of over $486,201 in tuition, books and supplies, transportation and maintenance, during training.

At the end of the fiscal year 1963-64, 459 handicapped persons were undergoing courses of training. Eight months later this number had increased by 18.5 per cent to 544. Clerical occupations continued to provide more training and placement opportunities than any other single course of employment, but a growing emphasis on the training-on-the-job method is opening up more opportunities for the handicapped in other fields which hitherto were not available. With 22.8 per cent of this training being conducted by on-the-job technique, Ontario leads to quite an extent in the utilization of this method of rehabilitation.

There is maintenance and transportation during the provision of training and restoration services: Approximately two-thirds of the clients attending courses of training also receive maintenance allowances. In February of this year, regulations under The Rehabilitation Services Act were increased so as to make it possible to pay allowances to single persons of up to $100 or $120 a month, and to married persons of up to $180 or $220 per month.

Equipment and tools, if necessary, are provided to give the person a fair start: barbers, watchmakers, electrical equipment repairmen, were among those trainees who were provided with the necessary tools. One paraplegic, who was confined to a wheelchair, was helped to start a thriving electrical repair shop in Owen Sound.

Placement on the job and follow up after placement ensures stability of employment: during the fiscal year, 1963-64, some 139 handicapped persons were placed directly into employment while 415 were successfully employed following training or the provision of restorative treatment and orthopaedic appliances. Improved employment conditions greatly facilitated the placement of the handicapped but they have also created a problem. Many persons with lesser disability have been able to become rehabilitated without the help of organized programmes. This leaves a great number of referrals, consisting of more seriously handicapped persons suffering from mental illness or mental retardation, and long-term recipients of public assistance. While successful rehabilitation of such persons is more rewarding than that of the less seriously disabled, success is less assured, and greater demands are made on the time and skill of the rehabilitation counsellor.

As indicated, the rehabilitation services branch is responsible for the actual administration of services. This is done in co-operation with voluntary and other departments of government, and here the central agent is the rehabilitation counsellor. He serves as the basic professional worker in the field and is responsible for the operation of the case-finding programme, and in identifying clients' problems and helping them establish eligibility. In consultation with the attending physician, he helps the client develop a plan leading to rehabilitation. The counsellor is directly responsible for counselling, guidance, and placement, and he arranges also for purchase of training services. With respect to placement, of course, the national employment service under the rehabilitation of disabled persons agreement is responsible for assisting with placement, and our policy is to utilize their facilities to the utmost.

A clear-cut plan of co-operation has been arranged so that the full facilities of the employment service can be utilized, both in planning training programmes and placing handicapped persons following training. The counsellors of The Department of Public Welfare are assigned to the department's regional welfare offices so that services may be provided on a local basis. The job of the counsellors is to work closely with hospitals, private organizations, the national employment service, private physicians, social services, and rehabilitation officers of The Department of Health in their various localities, to make sure that handicapped persons, wherever they may be, can have the opportunity to utilize the full range of services provided in this programme.

To meet the rapidly increasing demand for service, our estimates are providing for a 50 per cent increase in the staff of the branch. This increase will bring the total to 61 and will provide for the location of staff in our regional offices—Windsor, Chatham, London, Kitchener, Hamilton, Toronto, Peterborough, Kingston, Ottawa, North Bay, Sudbury, and the Lakehead.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Monday, June 21, 1965

Evening Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Monday, June 21, 1965

Estimates, Department of Public Welfare, Mr. Cecile, concluded	4465
Resolution re supply to defray expenses of government departments, concurred in	4465
Third readings	4469
Motion to adjourn, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4498

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 21, 1965

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE (continued)

Vote 1708 agreed to.

Vote 1709 agreed to.

Vote 1710 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This concludes the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

This also concludes the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1966.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee of supply rise and report certain resolutions.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report certain resolutions.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The Chairman of the committee of supply reports the following resolutions:

Resolved,

That supply in the following supplementary amounts, and to defray the expenses of the government departments named, be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965:

Department of Economics and Development
Special grants	$ 3,520,000
Department of Energy and Resources Management
Special grants	858,200
Department of Health
Special grants	9,372,000
Department of Public Welfare
Child welfare branch	1,640,000

and Resolved,

That supply in the following amounts, and to defray the expenses of the government departments named, be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966:

Department of Agriculture
Main office	$973,000
Agricultural and horticultural societies branch	1,009,000
Agricultural rehabilitation and development branch	1,258,000
Dairy branch	1,005,000
Extension branch	2,943,000
Farm economics, co-operatives and statistics branch	387,000
Farm products inspection branch	556,000
Farm products marketing board	114,000
Information branch	478,000
Live stock branch	838,000
Office of the commissioner of marketing	43,000
Ontario food council	156,000
Ontario junior farmer loan branch	255,000
Ontario telephone service commission	109,000
Soils and crops branch	582,000
Veterinary services branch	1,393,000
Demonstration farm, New Liskeard	94,000

Department of Agriculture, continued

Horticultural experiment station, Vineland	$571,000
Kemptville agricultural school	690,000
Western Ontario agricultural school, Ridgetown	588,000
Federated colleges, Guelph	7,449,000
Main office	600,000

Department of the Attorney-General

Main office	97,000
Ontario police commission	606,000
Legislative counsel's division	164,000
Administration and finance division	486,000
Civil law division	180,000
Criminal law division	1,268,000
Administration of justice division	8,830,000
Public safety division	2,408,000
Ontario securities branch	463,000
Office of superintendent of insurance	259,000
Ontario law reform commission	158,000
Ontario provincial police	23,907,000

Department of Civil Service

Main office	155,500
Position administration	216,500
Recruitment and examination	224,500
Training and development	97,000
Administrative services	324,500
Pay research	90,000
Ontario joint council, civil service arbitration board and grievance boards	33,500
Employee relations	67,500

Department of Economics and Development

Main office	4,896,000
Economic council	211,000
Office of chief economist	612,000
Ontario development agency	288,000
Ontario House	416,000
Trade and industry branch	1,335,000
Ontario housing corporation	1,797,000
Ontario housing corporation	9,750,000

Department of Education

Main office	340,000
Departmental business administration branch	878,000
School business administration branch	346,000
Personnel branch	137,000
Information branch	236,000
Programme branch	9,803,000
Teacher education branch	5,930,000
Special schools and services branch	5,063,000
Technological and trades training branch	6,635,000
Youth branch	75,000
Ontario fitness programme	100,000
Federal-provincial agreements	30,294,000
Scholarships, bursaries, etc.	2,535,000
Legislative grants	342,083,000
Miscellaneous grants	1,070,000
Grants to Ontario colleges of education	3,774,000
Grants to Ryerson polytechnical institute	5,473,000
Teachers' superannuation, etc.	14,893,000
Student aid loans	100,000

Department of Energy and Resources Management

Main office	$203,000
Energy branch	660,000
Ontario energy board	102,000
Conservation authorities branch	1,623,000
Ontario water resources commission	4,077,000
Water management programme	400,000
Conservation authorities branch	6,750,000
Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario	1,800,000
Ontario water resources commission	25,000,000
Water management programme	1,500,000

Department of Health

Main office	8,703,000
Public health administration branch	2,442,000
Public health nursing branch	84,000
Maternal and child health branch	115,800
Dental service branch	85,200
Nursing branch	410,000
Epidemiology branch	912,000
Medical rehabilitation branch	603,000
Tuberculosis prevention branch	5,622,000
Industrial hygiene branch	1,119,000
Environmental sanitation branch	297,000
Laboratory branch	3,560,000
Mental health branch	74,860,000
Hospital services commission of Ontario	68,078,000
Hospital services commission of Ontario	9,500,000

Department of Highways

Main office	4,734,000
Maintenance—King's highways and other roads	87,383,000
Construction and other capital projects	237,252,000

Department of Labour

Main office	1,124,000
Industrial training branch	1,494,000
Conciliation services	445,000
Labour standards branch	689,000
Labour relations board	515,000
Safety and technical services	2,060,000
Human rights commission	119,000
Research branch	200,000
Labour standards branch	9,500,000

Department of Lands and Forests

Main office	1,985,000
Fish and wildlife branch	562,000
Forest protection branch	208,000
Lands and surveys branch	1,096,000
Parks branch	172,000
Research branch	879,000
Timber branch	1,068,000
Forest ranger school	235,000
Junior ranger programme	820,000
Basic organization	21,613,000
Extra fire fighting	750,000
Lands and surveys branch	100,000
Timber branch	793,000
Basic organization	4,000,000

Office of Lieutenant-Governor
Office of Lieutenant-Governor	$330,000
Department of Mines
Main office	532,000
Geological branch	1,135,000
Mines inspection branch	342,000
Laboratories branch	212,000
Sulphur fumes arbitrator	25,000
Mining lands branch	398,000
Main office	1,000,000
Department of Municipal Affairs
Main office and branches	55,195,000
Ontario municipal board	438,000
Main office	1,557,000
Department of Prime Minister
Main office	146,000
Cabinet office	91,000
Office of Provincial Auditor
Office of provincial auditor	547,000
Department of Provincial Secretary and Citizenship
Main office	381,100
Companies branch	529,800
Citizenship branch	318,500
Office of the Speaker	27,500
Legislative library	74,100
Clerk of the legislative assembly and chief election officer	129,300
Sessional and other requirements	1,321,000
Queen's printer	238,700
Registrar-General's branch	820,000
Post office	720,000
Department of Public Welfare
Main office	6,966,000
Child welfare branch	8,791,000
Day nurseries branch	403,000
Field services branch	1,687,000
Finance and administration branch	337,000
General welfare assistance branch	25,534,000
Homes for the aged branch	3,156,000
Rehabilitation services branch	938,000
Welfare allowances branch	36,314,000
Welfare allowances branch	21,199,000
Department of Public Works
Main office	1,125,000
Ontario government buildings	9,000,000
Leased premises	3,200,000
Maintenance of locks, bridges, dams and docks, etc.	125,000
Miscellaneous	160,000
Public buildings	43,000,000
Dams, docks and locks	975,000
Department of Reform Institutions
Main office	2,690,000
Parole and rehabilitation service	605,000
Institutions (Ontario reformatories, industrial farms, training schools and district jails)	18,269,000

Department of Tourism and Information

Main office	$129,000
Administrative branch	1,069,000
Publicity branch	278,000
Advertising branch	1,107,000
Tourist promotion and information branch	361,000
Tourist industry development branch	557,000
Public records and archives	337,000
Theatres branch	118,000
Travel research branch	81,500
The St. Lawrence Parks Commission	1,900,500

Department of Transport

Main office	1,031,000
Ontario highway transport board	217,000
Highway safety branch	484,000
Motor vehicles administration	6,096,000
Motor vehicle accident claims fund	603,000

Treasury Department

General administration	1,262,000
Accounts division	7,243,000
Revenue division	5,809,000
Data processing branch	604,000
Ontario racing commission	239,000
Pension commission of Ontario	163,000

Department of University Affairs

Main office	332,000
Grants to universities and colleges	62,786,000
Miscellaneous grants	30,000

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motion:

Bill No. 44, An Act to make uniform the powers of expropriation granted to universities.

Bill No. 66, An Act to amend The Public Service Works on Highways Act.

Bill No. 73, The Private Investigators and Security Guards Act, 1965.

Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Energy Act, 1964.

Bill No. 84, An Act to amend The Gas and Oil Leases Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 85, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Bill No. 87, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Bill No. 88, An Act to amend The Public Schools Act.

Bill No. 89, An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Bill No. 90, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

Bill No. 94, An Act to establish a foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife.

Bill No. 95, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Bill No. 100, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Bill No. 101, An Act to amend The Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964.

Bill No. 102, An Act to amend The Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I rise and I would like your indulgence to make a point of order. This afternoon, just after the House convened, the government Whip called me and told me that we were going into the Budget debate following the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare. I see he is not here to confirm the agreement, or whether there has been some change. I know my own group said that the last instructions they had been given was that they were going into third readings, but I felt that the Whip's conversation with myself was a change in order and I instructed my group to that effect.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that this has been the order of business, I believe, as I announced it last week: that we would complete the estimates and take third readings and then complete the Budget debate. This has been my understanding and there has been no change. Whether there was some misunderstanding between you and the government Whip I do not know; but certainly this is what I told him as well, because it has been the course of business in my mind for some days.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I agree that there may have been some misunderstanding, but that is the reason, I believe, why the rest of the members are not here.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I say, sir, in all fairness, in a communication I had with the Whip today, he told me that this was the order of business.

THIRD READINGS

(continued)

Bill No. 104, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Bill No. 106, An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 107, An Act to amend The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 108, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Bill No. 109, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Bill No. 110, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Bill No. 111, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Bill No. 112, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Bill No. 113, An Act to amend The Limited Partnerships Act.

Bill No. 114, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of the Centennial centre of science and technology.

Bill No. 115, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Bill No. 116, An Act to amend The Power Commission Act.

Bill No. 117, An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Bill No. 118, An Act to amend The Justices of the Peace Act.

Bill No. 119, The Child Welfare Act, 1965.

Bill No. 120, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Bill No. 121, An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act.

Bill No. 122, An Act to amend The Securities Act.

Bill No. 123, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Bill No. 124, An Act to amend The Public Service Superannuation Act.

Bill No. 125, An Act to amend The Public Service Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 126, An Act to amend The Racing Commission Act.

Bill No. 127, An Act to establish The Ontario institute for studies in education.

Bill No. 128, An Act to amend The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Bill No. 129, An Act to amend The Financial Administration Act.

Bill No. 130, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Bill No. 131, An Act to amend The Logging Tax Act.

Bill No. 132, An Act to amend The Income Tax Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 133, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 134, An Act to amend The Succession Duty Act.

Bill No. 135, The Milk Act, 1965.

On Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have tried to elicit from the government some understanding of what it really meant by coverage of the bill. We have asked it for some of the most pertinent facts which I think the people of Ontario would wish to know about a so-called medical services insurance plan and we find that not only in this Legislature have we been denied these facts, but the facts have been denied the people of Ontario.

We, at this point have been asked to pass this bill, and have not the slightest idea what the premiums are going to cost the people. We have asked other questions in connection with the coverage of the aged, and the coverage of those abhorrent words, the "poor risks." Will it be a maximum amount for them, or will it be less? Again we find a vagueness, almost a fog put up to try to describe the inadequacies of this bill, not only to the Legislature, but to the people of Ontario.

The purpose of the bill has been referred to as making medical services insurance available to every resident of Ontario regardless of age, the state of past or present health, financial means or occupation, and yet, sir, we know that a bill substantially based on the same principles as this, which is in the province of Alberta and which is a voluntary plan, includes over 210,000 citizens out of a population of almost 1.5 million that are not covered and we firmly believe that the same kind of situation will develop if this bill were to go before the people of Ontario. This is not a medical services insurance bill which is available to every resident of Ontario regardless of age, the state of past or present health, financial means or occupation. It was put most adequately by one of the hon. members of the Opposition:

Availability may be for every one to have a Cadillac, but if you do not have the financial means, it is not really available to very many people within the province.

We say, sir, that it is believed that there are marginal income families who are too proud to find a means test or who are unable to pay the premium, even with some subsidization as is provided for a certain income bracket. We have this fact on the experience of Alberta. We suggest on the basis of the operation of the Alberta plan it is estimated that 900,000 citizens of Ontario will not be covered under the present Ontario medical health plan.

May I say that I am reading here some of the points which are being presented to the people outside this Legislature today by a group of people, to show that there are church institutions which are not deserving of the name of being "comfortable pews," and this includes members of every congregation and of every denomination who have become aroused at the situation being brought before the people of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Thompson: Let me quote in this respect:

We believe that family premiums, and if the family premiums are estimated at $180, then we believe they are excessive.

In trying to elicit answers from the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond)—who I notice is not here when this bill is coming up for third reading—we tried by every device we could to learn from him what the premiums are.

He said that it was ridiculous for a Globe and Mail article or editorial to suggest that the premiums might be something over $200, and when we tried to push him on this to find what they really were, we could get no answer from him. We suggest that if $180 is just for physicians' services for many families who are in this grey bracket, who are outside subsidization or even under some part of subsidization, then this bill is inadequate because it will not provide coverage.

It in no way considers the whole health coverage; it in no way considers prescription drugs; it in no way considers, for example, the treatment of children with respect to dental care or with respect to optical services or with respect to regular checkups. When we wanted to get into regular checkups, we found again that there was evasion and answers that were vague.

We talked about the people who probably—in my terms—most need coverage. Surely a government that was deeply concerned about the health of the people would be concerned about two categories, and they are the young child or the baby, and the mother. We know that in this crass, hard term of "bad risk," these are the people who are bad risks, and similarly the aged. Yet we get the callous kind of approach from the hon. Minister of Health, who in every defence of his bill was constantly referring to the fact that under most existing insurance plans this kind of thing is not covered. I am not interested in the insurance companies and the sort of coverage they give; what we on our side are interested in is in the health of the people of Ontario.

We protest that the Ontario plan will discriminate against bad health risks and I want to emphasize that and underline it—the elderly and the ill. We believe that a medical health plan should provide for a basic premium uniform for all citizens. The Ontario health plan does not cover certain health needs which I mentioned before, such as drugs, psychiatric care and dental care. We believe that a health plan should be comprehensive in coverage and may I say, sir, that we oppose the inefficiency and the duplication of overhead and the excessive costs of coverage implicit in the Ontario medical health plan with its employment of private insurance carriers.

I base that on the fact of one of the most comprehensive studies that has been done in the history of Canada and I refer to the Hall commission. When I think of, for example, volume 1 of the Hall commission report—over 1,980 pages of statistical facts set up, apart from volume 2—I think to myself, "Surely when the government is bringing in its plan—"

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have a point of order?

Mr. Cowling: Lewis' Parliamentary Procedure, page 61, has to do with third reading and in that section it says:

Debate on a motion for the third reading of a bill is more restricted than is the debate on the second reading as discussion is strictly confined to the contents of the bill.

My point of order, Mr. Speaker, is that the hon. leader of the Opposition is not talking about the contents of the bill.

An hon. member: Certainly he is!

Mr. Cowling: He is talking about the Hall report.

Mr. Speaker: It is my opinion that the leader of the Opposition is speaking relevant to the contents of the bill and as the bill has some 28 or 30 sections it allows for some latitude. However, I must inform the member that although bills may be discussed on third readings—the same as on second readings—nevertheless discussion is somewhat more restricted and you perhaps should confine your remarks as to why the bill should not be given third reading at this time.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that, sir, and I am giving reasons why I think the bill should not be given third reading. In order to show that I am talking about sections of the bill, I will come to (b) carriers, and I suggest that from examination that has taken place, we are aware that the retention cost of carriers has been 27 per cent as compared with 7.5 per cent in Saskatchewan with the government agency, and that we believe the administration of a medical health programme should be by a government agency. We believe that the medical profession should remain in complete charge of the areas of its medical, professional competence, and we hold that the treatment of sickness is not a commodity to be traded in the market place.

Sir, I could go on at considerable length in connection with this bill, but I am going to deal with some of the arguments which I have listened to from the other side in connection with certain sections of the bill. One of the arguments that was raised, was that the hospital services commission was not a compulsory body and if the hospital services commission, if we want to get into some semantics about it, is not a compulsory body, then I suggest that within the principle of this bill we could use, instead of carriers, the hospital services commission. But I would strongly urge, on any person who is a thinking person within the government ranks, that he be fully aware that the hospital services commission is compulsory; but the hospital services commission has 15 or more employees, who are obligated to belong to it, and we see nothing wrong with this. We are delighted with the fact that the citizens of Ontario are able to get coverage through a premium so they do not have the fear of excessive hospital costs; our argument, sir, in connection with medical costs, is based on the fact that we consider, for many of the people, that there is a very real dread of sickness taking place within a family.

We recognize that in this province, and in Canada, we have had enormous advances in medical science. We recognize that we have had some of the most brilliant men, within our province, who have developed such things as insulin. I think of Dr. Banting and Dr. Best, and many others, who are working in order to get greater health for the people of Ontario. We also recognize, sir, and I want to re-emphasize this point, that part of the reason for the research which is being done, in order to bring benefit to the people of Ontario, is because of the fact that a government, taking a collective responsibility, has provided funds for the research.

We recognize that we need more doctors. We are fully aware of this and we have asked about this. We recognize that, in the education of doctors, there is a responsibility of government, and I think the government itself recognizes this. The hon. Prime Minister has informed us that, with the lack of doctors and the need for doctors, he has started two new medical schools, and we in no way feel embarrassed, or hate or detest the fact that we are compelled to pay taxes towards educational facilities for doctors. We are proud to do that. We say, sir, that we recognize we have an obligation—not only in paying a premium individually, which is our choice, except for those who are working with 15 or more employees—through taxes, to be compelled to pay for the health of all the people. We are sharing this cost.

Taking the fact that medical science has advanced, taking the fact that the practitioners of medicine are helped in their training by us, taking the fact that the hospitals themselves are contributed to by us, by the people of Ontario, we are arguing that this whole health field then should become an obligation of society itself, and that it should not be left in the hands of private profiteers. And I say this although I, myself, have nothing against profit motive in many areas.

In many areas I think this is the incentive of free enterprise, but when it comes to the health of the people, and when it comes to education, then, sir, I suggest that we, collectively, have a responsibility not to just hand this over to groups of private profiteers so that they can make the most profit they can from it.

We have looked, as has the Hall commission—with respect to my hon. friend from High Park—and examined, as has Pierre Berton in Maclean's magazine, as have many others, at the kind of coverage which has been given in the past by the profit-making organizations, the insurance companies. And if the field is open to them, and there is nothing else, why should they not be in it?

But the point is: With the field being open to them, in order that they can give coverage they have to limit the coverage. In order that they can give coverage, they naturally have to make some profit. They have to do sales promotion, and this means a high administrative cost.

And I think all of us recognize Hall as a man of great eminence—indeed he has been so recognized by the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis), in that he has been appointed to look into another very delicate problem in this province. No one, I am sure, is going to belittle the scholarship of a man of the eminence of Hall. Besides, as I am sure my friend is going to point out, he was appointed by Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, which again should cause a certain amount of affection towards him.

Let us say, on the basis of philosophy—and this was another argument that came up, sir—there were some who said that, as Tories, they really could not go for the idea of having a compulsory medical insurance plan. Well, of course, there were such contradictions in their arguments that made me blush, almost, to listen to them. You had the situation of the hospital services commission. We even had the hon. Minister of Health, not a philosopher—I never thought of him as a philosopher, because he told me he had listened to a man in the early '30s who I considered, even though he did not belong to my party, a pioneer for social justice. Then he listened to Mackenzie King, another man who set a platform for us. Then he listened to Bennett, and everything Bennett did politically was a failure because it was all ultra vires; therefore he went over to England to take his knighthood, or viscountcy, or whatever it was. And this was the man—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the member, if he would try to speak to the contents of the bill. He must keep the contents of the bill always before him.

Mr. Thompson: Well, sir, you see the bill is such a complicated one to speak to, that I am trying to deeply understand the motivation behind the hon. Minister who drafted it. I felt that, perhaps, if I could discuss some of the heroes whom he idolized, that this might give more understanding; but, in view of what you say, I will swing back again to the bill.

I would say that Hall has shown that there is a great need for people to get coverage. He has shown that, from the sickness survey in 1951, there were people with low incomes who had a high rate of illness and yet who were not able to use the services of doctors. He has shown, sir, that, from a national point of view, and I say from a provincial point of view too, health is important. And he suggested that, when you saw the rejects in the armed forces during World War I, this showed up that with all the medical science we have, with the fact that we have a high proportion of doctors, with the fact that we have magnificent hospitals, there were still people who were not able or, for various reasons, were not taking advantage of the health facilities that this province and this nation could provide. And he said that we have got to do something in connection with this.

He examined and studied every possible way; and I am sure, the man appointed by Mr. Diefenbaker is a man with perhaps a background of Conservative philosophy, I am sure that he is. Let us look at the idea of income grading, let us look at it. And may I suggest, first of all, in the Hall commission report that he decided that this—

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I will have to inform the member that he is for the most part discussing the Hall commission report and his philosophy of medical insurance or Medicare, and the member is not really discussing the contents of the bill; so I ask that he be just a little more restrictive in his remarks.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate that, sir, and, as always, I recognize your ruling. Therefore, I would say that I am talking about the open enrolment period, section (1) of 1, because, you see, that open enrolment period means that there will be only certain times when you can get coverage. If we went further into the kind of coverage under some of the regulations, we would find that some of us will get subsidized coverage but others will get it given to them completely, because we are so low in the economic bracket that we have become charity cases.

Mr. Hall, taking those two sections which are referred to—section (l) and section (n)—said: “This is a lot of nonsense, and it will not work.” He deplored it. He deplored it for these reasons, because he said inherently this is a means test—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Thompson: I am afraid, sir, that the unfortunate thing is that it does not have enough to do with your bill. We are pointing out the inadequacies in it and the very fact that you, with the comprehensive study that has been done, refuse to listen to the facts of the study, that an income basis for making the basis of getting coverage was wrong, that it had a means test attached to it, that there would have to be enrolment periods and so on down the line like this. And Mr. Hall said, “Let us have a ringing charter with health, let us start moving in the 20th century on it.”

And what do we see here with the basis of this Hall commission? What do we have as an alternative? We had a Hagey commission. And what happened when we had the Hagey commission on which most of these sections are structured? People came before the commission and said, “Surely this government with its wealth, its affluence, surely it will have concern for the people of Ontario and will not bring in something structured on such plans as those of Dr. Hagey.”

I was on a debate with Dr. Hagey, and I was hoping that there would be a tussle—I think he is of Irish background—not only of personalities, but of philosophy and everything else in connection with its findings. And do you know what he did? He denied. You know I could almost refer to a Biblical situation of when—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: —where someone denied responsibility. Dr. Hagey denied the responsibility for it. He said, “I have passed it, as Pontius Pilate, over to some other place.” And what did they do with the Hagey commission? You know what the hon. Prime Minister of this province said in his defence. I have listened to a lot of others in the defence of the sections of this bill, and I want to say there is one of them who I thought wanted to argue on a constructive basis and that was the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly). There were a couple of others who are up in this area. They took the retention figure and they said, “Okay, we are going to argue on the basis of the retention figure.”

What did we hear from the hon. Prime Minister of this province? I want to list to you the arguments as I heard them. These were his arguments on it. His first argument was, “Don’t talk to me about Saskatchewan.” That is a kind of emotional attitude about Saskatchewan, he did not want to hear anything about Saskatchewan. Here is the first demonstration of another approach. But let us go further on this. In Saskatchewan, the premium is $24, and the premiums that we are hearing suggested, although we do not know, are going to be something like $180.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Now, Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. leader of the Opposition cannot compare the premium in Saskatchewan with the premium under the Ontario plan.

Mr. Thompson: No wonder the hon. Prime Minister does not want to hear about Saskatchewan. No wonder he will jump up and get mad about it. This is a coverage of a plan, and in this situation we have him saying, “I am tired of hearing about Saskatchewan.”

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. Prime Minister rose on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I only wanted to ask the hon. leader of the Opposition a question.

Mr. Thompson: I am sure the hon. Prime Minister will have his turn.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He is afraid to answer; he is intellectually dishonest. He knows there is no comparison.

Mr. Thompson: “He is afraid to answer a question,” he says. How did the hon. Prime Minister answer that question? He told us it was a part step forward, but I say it is—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I realize the member—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to remind the member once again that we are really straying on the third reading of this bill; I am trying to be not too restrictive and as tolerant as possible. But I find that whenever the member indulges in questions and answers, and when he continues discussing the philosophy of the Hagey commission and the Hall commission, we are really getting away from the contents of this particular bill and I must bring you back to that. I would ask the leader of the Opposition if he could try to confine himself to the contents of the bill.

Mr. Thompson: Let me say, sir, that the next point we had on the bill was this, and frankly I was disappointed in both the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Health on this, because in my first speech as the leader of this party I had outlined fully what our programme was. We have tried to keep this on the basis that it is written in Hansard, there are three pages on it, about basing it on the Hall commission. And yet the hon. Prime Minister got up and I suggest, sir, that he was so embarrassed with the inadequacy of the bill that he started to play politics and he said, "I do not know what you stand for" and the hon. Minister of Health said that. I suggest it is because the hon. Prime Minister did not bother to read what we stood for. It was in the papers, we clearly enunciated what we stood for, a compulsory programme.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Thompson: You know, you can override the rights of people and show a lack of concern for the people, but those men who stood on the steps—and I heard some people laugh at them—those men are becoming an increasing army of people aroused against the government.

Now let me come to another point on this bill. One of the arguments that the hon. Prime Minister had raised was the fact that the federal government was not sure, or he was not clear, on what they were going to pay. As far as I am concerned, I would go to Ottawa myself if I were the Prime Minister of this province, and even though I am not the Prime Minister of this province, I would go to Ottawa and I would say to the federal Liberals, "You went to this country on the basis that you would work for a national medical insurance programme."

I have, and I will again. As the Premier of the province I would not back down on this score, hiding behind the skirts of the Ottawa situation.

I would go up, feeling that I belonged to and represented the greatest province in Canada and I would tell them, "You on your platform said you were going to have a national medical health plan, and you were going to co-operate with the provinces. Stand by your words and get on with it."

Has the hon. Prime Minister done that? Has he gone to Ottawa? No, sir. He has not. I can assure the House that my provincial members and I, with the small voice that we have—because we are concerned with the Ontario situation here—together with the voice that we have with our federal colleagues will say: "Get on with this! Get on with this!"

We watched the hon. Prime Minister of this province swivel and turn and dodge and the other things. Then when he goes to Ottawa, what does he do? We find that he has gone to Lesage and Pearson and come out with something. He, of course, was taking his first timid steps; then he is going to say "Me, too." What is he doing in this medical insurance thing? Time after time he has been saying, "Me, too" or "I cannot quite go very much further, we have got to go slow." We have listened to the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) talking about the nurses' situation. I know what he did with his estimates, which certainly reflects from the point of view of this bill. What did he do? He rushed the last three through as quickly as he could—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to point out for those of you who were not here at five minutes after eight, there were three Liberals in their seats.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: You would not know, you were not here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Now once again I am going to inform members that we are not discussing the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare. We are discussing third reading on the contents of Bill 136. Now please try to stick to that if you can.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is the most loyal, he bangs his desk the hardest.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I respect your ruling not to talk about the hon. Minister of Public Welfare. If I did not respect it I would suggest that there were many Tories absent during the day who just came in now.

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the member not to discuss the estimates of The Department of Public Welfare.

Mr. Thompson: I just wanted to note the kind of thing I might have said if I did not respect your wishes. May I say, sir, we are the Medical Carriers Incorporated and surely should be feeling the pulse of the people. Surely this should not have people such as the United Church ministers, and others who are downstairs, picketing on this. Surely this Medical Carriers Incorporated should show a breadth of representation from across this province. Does it? No, of course it does not.

Let us look at the fees for doctors. What kind of control have we got over the fees for doctors? Have we had examples in the past where perhaps the doctors might raise their fees? Doctors are human like everyone else. Many are great men who give with dedication and sacrifice to the service of their community, but there are situations—you can ask people in PSI or AMS and others—where there could be abuse in connection with fees. What control is there over this? By some vague indirect way the hon. Prime Minister of this province tried to bail out the hon. Minister of Health and say that there will be control, in some respect, over it.

I could go on—I would be quite happy to do it, and I may just do it—taking section after section of this bill; a bill that is full of leaks; a bill like a bucket with holes which cannot hold water. I would suggest that, from our point, we have tried to appeal to this government through reason. I appealed myself to the hon. Prime Minister, at one point, and what did I get as a reply? “I do not go for that.” This was the reply of the hon. Prime Minister of this province when we were discussing a bill on the health of the people.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Stop playing to the gallery and get down to business.

Mr. Thompson: I suggest to you, sir, that we wish you had got down to business. The fact is, that with the arrogance of a massive majority on all sides around us, this government is going to push this through. It is going to push it through and people have said: “You have fought hard, you have tried to make reasonable requests to them. Surely you have appealed to their sense of rationality; surely you have shown them the Hall commission; surely there are one or two of them that have read it; surely they will give some recognition to the most comprehensive coverage; surely the government has not rejected the Hagey commission.”

I said: “Well, they have, really, because they do not mention it at all.” Then they say: “On what basis have they built the structure of this bill? On what principles have they based it?” I had to answer them: “They laid this—they produced this child—and instead of thinking that they might try and help to give it some limbs, or to help in some way this freak child they have produced, they are holding tight with their heels dug in.”

These people say to me: “Well, do not these men realize that they are going against the desires, and the aspirations and hopes of the people of Ontario?” I said, “You do not know them; you have not seen them on the police bill; you did not see how entrenched they were until there was a break in party ranks.”

I would agree now there is a break. Look at the absenteeism; 30 of their members had a conscience and have left.

Sir, because of the inadequacies of this bill; because of the shame which this brings to any government with the wealth and the affluence of Ontario; because of the fact that it shows a disregard for the health of the people; because of the fact that it shows a disregard for the scholarship and for the study which has been done—the most comprehensive study across Canada; because it is based on no facts; because we, sir, have not even heard of the most fundamental aspects of this bill; because the hon. Minister of Health has dodged the facts about premiums, has dodged the facts about appeal, has wiggled, weaved, turned and has finally wiggled himself so far that we do not know where he is right now—he must be under the desk or something; because of all these reasons I move, seconded by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), that Bill No. 136 be not now read and be read a third time this date six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the Opposition moves, seconded by the member for Downsview, that Bill No. 136 be not now read but be read a third time this date six months hence.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I suppose one could say the controversy regarding health insurance—as it used to be called; medical care insurance as it is now called—has been going on in this country for at least a generation. I found it rather melancholy tonight, Mr. Speaker, to reflect that it is still a political football; it is still regarded in many quarters as nothing but a cheap dodge in order to get votes.

The hon. leader of the Opposition delivered what he no doubt considered to be an inspiring oration with regard to the position of his party on this matter. This is the position, I suppose, as of about three months ago—

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): How be if you get on with your own position?

Mr. Bryden: I was rather interested to note, Mr. Speaker, that he apparently accepts fully and wholeheartedly the plan in effect in the province of Saskatchewan. We all can recall, at least those of us who can remember beyond yesterday can recall, that the Liberal Party fought that programme right down the line from beginning to end with everything possible to sabotage it and allied itself with the most extreme far out right element with racist overtones—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I am afraid I will have to call the member for Woodbine to order. There is an amendment before the House that this bill be not now read but read six months hence. If the member would endeavour to speak to the contents of the bill; why he thinks this bill should be read six months hence instead of now, rather than going over the Liberal position on the bill, I think perhaps the House would appreciate it.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, it is rather remarkable to me that the hon. leader of the Opposition was allowed to range all over the lot for half an hour and I am on my feet for two minutes and—

Mr. Speaker: I must say that I tried my best to try to keep the leader of the Opposition within the contents of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I must point out to you that there was no intervention from you at all for at least half an hour, and I think it is remarkable that there should be such a rapid intervention in my case. I am perfectly prepared to act within the rules, but I think they should be applied equally to all speakers. However, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made my point with regard to the Liberal Party on this matter.

Mr. Sopha: What was your point?

Mr. Bryden: As a matter of fact, my point was well stated by a famous organ of Liberal opinion, the Toronto Daily Star, which stated that the Liberal Party must accept responsibility equally with the Conservative Party for the fact that we have reached the melancholy state in Ontario where we have not got a Medicare bill, not even a step toward a Medicare bill, but a step away from such a bill. The Liberal government at Ottawa, with which my hon. friend should have some standing, has flatly refused to move on this matter for nearly 50 years, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sopha: Forty-six.

Mr. Bryden: Forty-six, the hon. member for Sudbury tells me. Now we are told that the hon. leader of the Opposition thinks that the hon. Prime Minister ought to go down and tell the people at Ottawa that they finally ought to get on the rails. Mr. Speaker, I think it is regrettable that this matter has been reduced to this situation. We have a poor bill in Ontario for third reading tonight, mainly because both of these parties have been playing "footsy" with this issue ever since World War I. When they are in Opposition they are in favour of medical care insurance, and when they are in government they are against it. That is the size of the matter.

Mr. Thompson: Give us a chance and we will show this House.

Mr. Bryden: I am sure that nobody would be so bereft of his senses as ever to give the hon. member a chance.

Mr. Sopha: And the same goes for the hon. member for Woodbine.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): For once they are both right.

Mr. Bryden: The apologists for the government have argued time after time during the discussion of this bill that this is a first step towards medical care insurance. They have even alleged that it is in line with the recommendations of the Hall commission, in that the Hall commission proposed that we should advance toward a complete health plan by stages.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it should be made clear that this is not a step at all in the sense in which the Hall commission envisaged it. The Hall commission was thinking in terms of a total health plan similar to the one in Britain covering all phases of health services: hospital, medical, nursing, dental and so on. It regarded hospital care as one step, which we have already taken, medical care as another, dental as another, and so on. But here we have the Tory government coming before us with the proposition that it is taking a first step in a first step. It is not putting in a medical care insurance programme, it is just taking what it calls a step in this direction.

I found a certain consolation even in hearing them put forward that argument, Mr. Speaker, because previously they had claimed that the kind of bill that we have now before us is the answer to the problem of medical care insurance. Now apparently they think it is only a first step. They think that we may take further steps in the future. Heaven only knows how far in the future. I would suggest, however, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to meet the objective set forth by the Hall commission of achieving in this country a complete health programme by 1970, we must in this year of our Lord 1965 make a much larger step toward medical care insurance than is represented by this bill.

I would not try to claim to the House that we can provide medical care insurance for a premium of $24 a year. The programme is not provided in the province of Saskatchewan for that amount: the programme that the Liberal Party fought against so vehemently is not provided for $24 a year. No programme could possibly be provided for that amount. I would, however, suggest that it is possible to provide complete medical care insurance coverage for the people of Ontario much more economically than is proposed in the legislation that is before us.

I would refer, for example, to the proposal that this party has put before this House on more than one occasion—which has been well substantiated by statistical analysis and supported in effect by the analyses of the Hall commission—that it is possible to provide medical care insurance for all the people of the province for a basic premium of 30 cents per week for a single person and 60 cents per week for a married person with or without children, plus — and I will quite openly state the “plus.” I do not go in for the kind of deception of the hon. leader of the Opposition. I do not claim that the Saskatchewan programme is provided for $24 a year. I do not claim that what we are proposing would be provided by a 30-cent or a 60-cent premium. It would be provided by that plus additional contributions scaled to income, which for low income groups would amount to little if any more than we are proposing, but for high income groups would amount to substantially more.

Just compare this with what the government has before us tonight. It has a bill under which the public will take responsibility for providing medical care insurance, or medical care coverage at any rate, for the lowest income group—the high risk medical group—and this, according to what the hon. Minister of Health told us, is going to cost the public Treasury $180 per year per family. The taxpayers of this province, including all taxpayers who have a taxable income of more than $1,000 a year, are going to pay for that coverage, and in addition, if they want similar coverage for themselves, they are going to have to pay an even higher amount to buy a policy from a private insurance company. This is the kind of plan that the government is now trying to foist off on us. Unfortunately it has become easier to foist it off because the Liberal Party, over even the past two or three years, has had five different policies on this matter.

We have never been able to mount a real offensive for a proper complete medical care insurance bill similar in principle to that enacted by the New Democratic government in Saskatchewan, similar in principle to a plan which undoubtedly will be established all across this country within the next ten years.

It is only regrettable that at the moment, and not for very long, I believe, we have a Tory government opposite which does not take advantage of the opportunities now available to go ahead in this province with a plan similar to that in Saskatchewan. I would suggest that if such a plan were introduced in Ontario and came into effect, it would be no time at all until it would be in effect all across the country. The federal government would be unable to stall any longer; it has been stalling for 45 years—

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Forty-six.

Mr. Bryden: Forty-six years, thank you. It would be unable to stall any longer, and other provincial governments would then come into line if there was some leadership from the federal government.

The critical province is the province of Ontario. If it would follow the lead of Saskatchewan as it did after a 12-year delay with regard to hospital insurance, then I think we could get proper medical care insurance for the whole of Canada. I hope it does not wait 12 years to follow the Saskatchewan example in this case. Indeed, I am sure Ontario will not wait 12 years because we will not have this government in office for 12 years, or for even much more than three years.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): What happened to the one in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: I notice that the Tory party in Saskatchewan supports the Saskatchewan Medicare plan right down the line.

Mr. Speaker, that is with regard to some of the general features of the bill. I would like to deal with some of the details in it now and the significance of what happened when we got into committee consideration of the detailed provisions of this bill in this House. Oh, I know my hon. friends who are always yapping from these benches along here—the Chicago corner, is it, they call it?—think that the Opposition should have nothing to say at all, but we did take quite a long time considering this bill in committee—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Bryden: I think the time was well spent. I think it has now come across to the public that there is no merit in this bill at all. When it was first introduced on first reading and even when it was debated on second reading, the press accepted the government propaganda blurbs about it as if they were the whole unvarnished truth, as if everything they said was totally correct.

The government line was that this was an important step forward in this field. It did not matter what we on this side said, that was the press line. There was no more news in it, they said; there was hardly any reporting of the debate on second reading of the bill. The story was finished. And yet, when we got into committee session and started to analyze the clauses in detail; even the press began to see what a total phony this bill is, Mr. Speaker.

Even a paper such as the Globe and Mail, which is basically Conservative in its philosophy—I would agree it is independent in its commentaries, but undoubtedly it is Conservative in its philosophy—even it has turned against this bill. It can see little or no merit in it. The Globe and Mail, when the bill was first introduced, followed the popular line that it was a desirable step forward. No doubt everyone in this House noticed the editorials it has been writing recently, to the effect even, that this bill—these are not its words, but the import of what it said—the bill is a sell-out of Conservatism. There is nobody really that has any good thing to say about this bill now that the full import of it has come across to the public.

Just to emphasize the total inadequacy of the bill—not only in terms of its principle, Mr. Speaker, and I think we have made it abundantly clear that we object to the bill from stem to gudgeon in principle—but even within its principle, in its execution there is little or no merit in it. It is so full of loop-hopes than even the people who support the principle cannot support this bill.

I would like to summarize some—not all, but some—of the basic objections to the details of the bill, accepting its principle and just taking the implementation of the principle. I attempted on an earlier occasion to present to this House what I called a bill of indictment against the detailed provisions of the bill. I was not able to do so as it was not the proper time, but now, I think, when we are finally reviewing our positions on this bill, it is in order to indicate some of the fatal flaws in detail, as distinct from principle in this bill.

1. No provision at all is made for the large number of people who will not qualify for government subsidy and yet will not be able to afford the high cost coverage available from private carriers. We talked about these people before. I will not belabour the point now, Mr. Speaker, but anybody who has a taxable income just in excess of $1,000 a year will not be able to afford insurance for himself and he will not qualify for the subsidized coverage provided by the government, yet he will have to pay taxes to provide coverage for other people who are somewhat worse off than he is. What kind of justice is that? Could even the Tories say that is a just situation?

2. The provision that a private carrier must make a standard contract available to anyone applying for it is unenforceable. This is one of many pieces of window dressing in the bill. It is claimed that a private carrier must make a standard contract available to anyone applying for it, but there is no effective way of enforcing that provision and thus there is no guarantee that people not in the subsidized groups will be able to get standard contracts even if they are willing to pay for them.

3. The coverage provided by this standard contract is unduly limited in the bill and can be still further limited by regulation. This is one of the most objectionable features of the bill, Mr. Speaker. The standard contract, in my opinion, is quite restricted as set forth in schedule A of the bill and yet there is power under regulations to limit its coverage still further. The hon. Minister said that no regulations would be passed except those that amplified the coverage of the standard contract, and yet anyone who reads the bill can see that the regulations can only be interpreted to limit the coverage. There is no way of interpreting them to amplify the coverage.

4. The people who need medical care most, the so-called "bad" insurance risk—that is the jargon of the insurance industry in its approach to human problems—will be discriminated against in the premiums private carriers will be able to charge for standard contracts.

5. Since the maximum premiums which the government is to set by regulation will necessarily be calculated in terms of the bad insurance risks, there will in fact be no effective maximum at all for most of the people. In other words, the government has the power to set a maximum, but it has to make that maximum high enough to cover the bad risks. Thus for most of us there will be no maximum at all, it will simply be permanent open season for insurance companies on the public.

6. The payment of 100 per cent of the Ontario medical association schedule of fees for services rendered under standard contracts will result in a huge subsidy to the medical profession, which is already the highest paid group in the community. We in this group have already suggested that the extra income that the medical profession as a group will get out of this bill will be at least $20 million per year. Yet the average income of medical doctors in Ontario exceeds that of the next highest paid group in the community by $3,000 per year.

7. As a result of this, the cost to the public Treasury of providing standard contracts to subsidized groups will be excessive, as will be the premiums that non-subsidized groups will have to pay. In other words, this is essentially a raid on the public Treasury.

8. To add insult to injury, there is nothing to prevent extra billing by doctors. Under this bill a doctor can get 100 per cent of his fee schedule which will probably result in a substantial increase of his income, and then he can send extra bills to the people, presumably covered by standard insurance contracts. In other words, even though doctors will be exceedingly well paid, they will still be able to send additional bills to patients.

9. The medical fees to be paid under the legislation which will be determined unilaterally by the medical profession with no machinery for ensuring that the public interest is protected. As a matter of fact, the bill right now contains an open invitation to the medical profession to raise its fees before the bill comes into effect.

Presumably the bill is to come into effect on July 1, 1966. It is provided that payments under the bill will be according to the OMA schedule of fees then in effect—not the schedule now in effect, but the schedule then in effect. In other words, it is an open invitation to them to jack up their fees before the bill comes into force—and do not suggest that they might not think of doing it. They have shown themselves to be completely without conscience in the way they will set their schedule of fees at the highest possible level. Just a year and a half ago they jacked up their schedule of fees by about 20 to 25 per cent, even though at that time too they were the highest paid group in the community.

10. Because of this carte blanche given to the medical profession to set their own fees there is no possibility of effectively controlling costs under the bill. If the Ontario medical association decides to increase fees, the cost to the Treasury of covering subsidized groups and the premiums paid by non-subsidized groups will have to be increased willy-nilly.

11. Private insurance companies and the medical profession are given a preferred position in advising the government in the administration of the legislation, and little or no provision is made for hearing the views of representatives of the consumers of medical services. This is, from beginning to end, Mr. Speaker, a bill that is set up for the benefit not of the public, whose interests are little considered and whose views will not even be heard. They are not represented to any significant degree on any of the machinery under this bill. It is not a bill for the benefit of the public, it is a bill for the benefit of insurance companies and of the medical profession.

During the committee consideration of this bill, my hon. colleague from Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) proposed an amendment to change the title of the bill, which is now The Medical Services Insurance Act, simply by changing two words—striking out "services insurance" and putting in "carriers benefit," so that it would be called The Medical Carriers Benefit Act. The Chairman, for some reason that escapes me, ruled the amendment out of order; he suggested that it was frivolous.

Mr. Speaker, so far as we are concerned the amendment was not proposed frivolously at all. That is an accurate description of the content of this bill, subject perhaps to one modification. I would differ from my hon. friend from Riverdale in this respect. It is not really a medical carriers benefit bill, it is a medical practitioners and carriers benefit bill. That would be a fair title for it. It is a bill for the benefit of private insurance carriers and medical practitioners and it is not a bill to provide medical care insurance to the people of the province.

The government has quite obviously got off on the wrong foot in this bill. It listened only to the insurance industry and the medical profession. It did not listen to the people of the province. The voices of the people are being heard more and more now, in many ways, as they understand the full significance of this bill. They are opposed to it. I think the government, if it had a chance to reconsider it and had not got its neck stuck out on this bill, would also be willing to reconsider it. In fact, there is not much doubt, Mr. Speaker, that if there were no party discipline in this House, and I am not complaining about party discipline, but if there were no party discipline and members of the Legislature were able to vote on this bill strictly in accordance with their consciences, this bill would be defeated in this House.

Some hon. members: Oh, no, it would not.

Mr. Bryden: All 30 of the Opposition members are opposed to it, the Liberals by a recent conversion, the New Democrats by long conviction.

Mr. R. A. Eagleson (Lakeshore): You might change your mind.

Mr. Bryden: The one thing I am a little doubtful about is that even between now and the vote, the Liberals might change their minds, but I am hoping that they will stand firm up until then. Assuming that they will, Mr. Speaker, there are 30 Opposition members who are opposed to this bill. It is no secret at all that there were at least 30 members on the government side who, in the privacy of the government caucus, were opposed to the bill, believing that we should have a proper programme in this province—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Take those 60; that is a majority of the House of 108. Unfortunately, the Whips will prevail; these hon. gentlemen once again will line up to vote for something they do not believe in, and I have no doubt that the amendment will be defeated and that the bill will carry on third reading. It will be a sad day for Ontario, Mr. Speaker. It would be much better if the government would accept the proposition that third reading of this bill be deferred for six months, so that it could think about the matter and reconsider it in the light of all the adverse comment. If it did so, I think it would withdraw the bill of its own volition.

However, I will suggest to you, Mr.

Speaker, that this bill will never become law in the province of Ontario. It will pass here tonight, and it will be assented to by the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor either tonight or tomorrow, whenever that is arranged. But the government is so lacking in confidence in its own bill that it is not willing to bring it into force until a year from now. I would suggest that within the next year its total inadequacy will be so thoroughly demonstrated that the government itself will withdraw the bill, just as it, in effect, scuttled The Pension Benefits Act of a few years ago, which it brought into this House as a solution to the problem of portable pensions. I realize that it has retained a secondary portion of that bill, but the main portion it scuttled of its own free will. I think the same thing will happen to this bill and it will be a great day for Ontario when this bill is scuttled, so that we can clear the road for a genuine medical care insurance programme in this province.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member wish to speak on third reading?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, this is the night of crisis in the province of Ontario as this bill faces the Legislature. Today we have seen outside the House a demonstration—a mobilization of public opinion and the growing concern of our people about the bill. We see there a group of clergymen who are marching up and down in front of the doors, meeting people who are coming in and going out, handing them—

An hon. member: NDP literature.

Mr. Young: They can do no better, but in any case, they are handing them a sheet of paper outlining their objections to the third reading of this bill. The church, or a section of the church at least, is becoming concerned about this, and I would only hope that that small section of the church could sit over here on my left, and that as small sections of the church down through the ages have shown the way to civilization, this group will show the way not only to this province but will also show the way to the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick and Newfoundland, to name three specific provinces where Liberal governments are now in power, so that those governments may also hear the message which their brothers here in this House are talking about tonight.

It is encouraging to see this change of heart. I would be much more encouraged, Mr. Speaker, if these people could also make their protest in these other places, so that our hon. friends here could understand the message and would be permanent in their persuasion. The men who are on the steps tonight are the men who are pioneers in this movement, and I think they are going to light a torch which will sweep across not only the church, but across the citizenry of this province, until they understand the implications of this bill, because they understand the needs of the people of this land.

As a matter of common courtesy, I think, Mr. Speaker, the message which these men are presenting to us—

Mr. Speaker: I really do not want to be too restrictive to the member and I know the message that he is endeavouring to get across, but I must inform him that he is really outside of the contents of the bill by trying to get across the message from another group at this time. I have given him quite a little bit of latitude up until now, because he really has not referred to the contents within this bill and third reading must be on the contents of the bill. I wonder if in the few remaining remarks that he is going to make that he would endeavour to stay within the scope of the bill.

Mr. Young: I will do that then, Mr. Speaker, since I have been persuaded by these gentlemen outside the door that their case is relevant. I am going to present their case as my case for opposing this bill and for supporting the hoist motion which is before this House tonight.

I believe, as these men believe, that a medical health insurance programme should be universal, covering all citizens. This does not cover all citizens. In the province of Alberta, which has a voluntary plan, 210,000 citizens of the population of 1,400,000 are not covered. It is believed that these are marginal income families who are too proud to sign a means test or are unable to pay the premiums even with subsidization as provided for certain income brackets. On the basis of the operation of the Alberta plan, it is estimated that 900,000 citizens of Ontario will not be covered under the present Ontario medical health plan.

In the second place, I submit, and the gentlemen submit, too, that family premiums estimated at $180—this is the figure the hon. Minister has given for the subsidized part—are excessive. A medical health insurance programme should be state subsidized with a basic minimum premium for all citizens. The average family should have the responsibility of paying a modest premium, the remainder of health costs must come out of the public Treasury.

Third, we protest and I protest that the Ontario plan will discriminate against bad health risks, the elderly and the ill. We believe that a medical health plan should provide for a basic uniform premium for all citizens.

Fourth, I note that the Ontario health plan does not cover certain health needs such as drugs, psychiatrists and dental care. We believe that a health plan should be comprehensive in coverage.

Fifth, I oppose the inefficiency, duplication of overhead and excessive costs of coverage implicit in the Ontario medical health plan with its employment of private insurance carriers. The Hall commission report estimates that the cost of servicing health insurance policies in Alberta with multiple carriers adds 27 per cent as compared to 7.5 per cent in Saskatchewan with a government agency.

We believe the administration of a medical health programme should be by a government agency. We believe that the medical profession should remain in complete charge of the areas of their medical professional competence. We hold that the treatment of sickness is not a commodity to be traded in the market place.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are all interested here tonight in the matter of human welfare, just as these men are interested in the matter of human welfare. We must remember this, that when we propose a programme such as we are proposing here, when we back a programme such as these men are backing, that we are pioneering a field which is desperately in need of pioneering. It has been said, you know, that a Conservative is a worshipper of a dead radical and how true this may be. So, when we hear objections to men who are pioneering, as these men are doing outside the door, these men are so-called radicals today, but eventually the efforts of these men will be recognized as having borne fruit.

Those of us who are pushing the idea of a universal plan, of a low-cost plan run by government—which has already been pioneered not only in this country, in Saskatchewan, but across the democratic world—are not talking of something new and untried. We are talking of something that human experience has hammered out and that we must eventually adopt in this province.

Tonight, Mr. Speaker, I stand in this rich province of Ontario and ask that we undertake a comprehensive plan; not a plan such as we have before us in this bill, but one which is worthy of the rich province of Ontario, blessed as we are with great resources.

This Act is wrong, and because it is wrong we stand against it. It is because it is wrong that these men are marching up and down in front of this building tonight. They have a conviction and we have a conviction. So we ask that this House take the time to consider this amendment. We should take the time to take another long look at this bill, and when this Legislature meets again, at that time perhaps we will see what public opinion asks for.

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that almost every submission to the Hagey committee asked for the kind of health plan which we in this group have been advocating. Public opinion demands it. Yet in spite of that the government seems determined to jam this bill through and to pass it tonight.

So tonight I ask again that this House seriously consider its duty to the people of Ontario, seriously consider taking the step which is right to provide all our people with the kind of medical coverage which we in this province can afford, which we know how to set up and which in good time we are going to adopt. Let us not delay. Let us take the time to think about it and let us give this amendment our full support.

Mr. S. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish to allow this opportunity to go by without offering one or two short reflections to this House on the quality of this bill on this particular occasion.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it is rather fitting that at precisely the end of this session the competing political philosophies of this House should be arrayed, naked as it were, across the Chamber. There is not even a diverting fig leaf to hide the difference in political opinion. I for one, Mr. Speaker, am deeply depressed by what is happening this evening. That may be political naivete which is given to young and inexperienced members of this House, but I am frankly depressed by the quality of the bill and its stark deficiencies.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. S. Lewis: There is no need for that kind of irrelevance from the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions.

I am depressed by some, let me say, government back bench interventions because of the primordial qualities of Toryism which have injected themselves into this debate. The content that has been placed from the Opposition tonight has been placed in good faith and with deep earnestness and it need not be ridiculed.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the government will be haunted by this bill and by its content; that the hon. Prime Minister, who is usually a man of inordinate wisdom, has made a profound error in political judgment; that he has misjudged the tone of the provincial and public relation; that, as is well known in this Legislature when the bill was first introduced, on initial reading and on second reading and we discussed its substantive features at that point, there was a qualified agreement in the press and in the response of the public. And then we came down to the forthright intricate hammering, clause-by-clause analysis in this Legislature. It was revealed in all its glaring inadequacy and notoriety. It was at that point that the match was struck. The fight was on, the battle raged and the people in this province began to respond. I think it fair to say that the hon. members in this House began to respond. Indeed I think it fair to say that even some of the government hon. members of this House began to respond, because there were certain things which emerged that shocked the conscience of any hon. member, regardless of this political conviction.

I would agree, Mr. Speaker, that it is basically a difference in political philosophy at the crux of this bill. The hon. Prime Minister has been on television, he has been before the media, he has been before the press and he has said that he basically agrees with the principles to which the Opposition adhere, that he basically agrees with the long-run objectives about which we have spoken at length.

Let me say to him, Mr. Speaker, that I, for one, believe him. I have no doubt that he speaks with an absolute conviction. I say to him merely that he is waiting too long, that a great many people are suffering in the interim and that it does his government no credit to wait until his social philosophy catches up with his social convictions.

Now our fight against the features of this bill, Mr. Speaker, does not stop on this, the third reading. It will be maintained in every subsequent session of this Legislature; whenever the estimates of The Department of Health appear before this House, whenever a private member can put a resolution before this House, whenever an amendment to a bill can be moved that is relevant to the substance of this. We will continue the fight because I think that in the long run the bill can be reversed. We say on this side of the House that it is at root a pernicious bill; that it was conceived in irresponsibility and that it has been sustained in infamy and that one day, I say to the hon. gentlemen opposite, it will bring them down.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on third reading of this bill I do so with the same sense of depression as my hon. colleague from Scarborough West. We had endeavoured, as a responsible Opposition in this House, for several days to fight, to put forward in a responsible and a reasonable way, what we conceived to be the inherent defects in this bill. We think that we achieved our objective with everyone except the hon. members of the government, who stubbornly and persistently would permit only two or three very minor amendments to the bill. The government was not prepared even to consider the validity of the viewpoints which we expressed day in and day out in this Legislature.

The government has attempted to indicate that if the federal government were prepared to foot the cost of 50 per cent of Medicare for the people of the province of Ontario, in some way the Ontario government would then move the next step forward to make the kind of provision which we, in this party, deem essential for the welfare of the people of the province of Ontario. I say that we here are in the richest province in Canada; we here are constitutionally responsible for the provision of Medicare and other welfare benefits for the people of this province, regardless of the action of the federal government; we cannot sit idly by and allow this government to suggest that in some way its responsibility is shared with the federal government, because its responsibility is not shared with the federal government. Its responsibility is shared directly with the people of the province of Ontario. And the people of the province of Ontario do not like this bill.

Mr. Cowling: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I just bring to your attention again, sir, that the third reading has to do with the contents of the bill, and my point of order is that the hon. member is just a million miles away from the contents of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: How would the hon. member know the difference?

Mr. Cowling: Oh, is he not the smart wisecracker. There is that great big fat mouth again.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, the contents of the bill are deserving of so little comment, that I would devote the last brief remnants of my remarks on this bill on this occasion to the contents of the bill.

We object to a medical council established by this bill which gives the people of the province of Ontario, for practical purposes, no say in the way in which this bill will be operated.

We object to a medical carriers corporation which, in essence, is the originating body that will originate the recommendations that go through under the mechanism of this bill to the council, from the council to the Minister of Health, from the Minister of Health to the government, and which will ultimately determine, having originated it at the level of the medical carriers corporation, the maximum subscription rate to be paid by the people of this province for their medical coverage. We recognize, as everyone else in this House recognizes, that it is wrong for people to be charged different rates for the same insurance coverage under any modern, up-to-date scheme, whether it is administered by the government or by private insurance carriers, and we think that the government should seriously consider this particular aspect of the bill.

We think, in addition, Mr. Speaker, that the government should open up to all the people in the province of Ontario who wish it, the opportunity to subscribe for a standard contract of medical care insurance directly to the government itself, and to pay the premium which the government will charge, if they choose to do so.

We suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be withdrawn and reintroduced in the same way in which the hospital services bill was originally introduced, to make certain that in its own way the government can bring itself to make certain 99.3 or 99.4 per cent, at least, of the people of the province of Ontario are covered for the kind of services which they are entitled to.

We are not here for some idle political advantage this evening, we are here asking the government, before it brings this bill into effect, to take unto itself the obligation of bringing in the group insurance principle, of making this universally applicable, of making it compulsory in the same way in which it makes primary and secondary school education compulsory throughout this province, so that in our way, in our time, we can, through the health of the individual citizen of this province, contribute to the welfare of this province, its economic ability to live and survive, and ultimately we can lead the way to the kind of Medicare insurance throughout the Dominion of Canada which will be acceptable to all people.

It is essential this evening that the hon. Prime Minister take it upon himself to take this bill back out of this House now, and to make those changes. There is nothing unreasonable about them, and if the hon. Prime Minister is not prepared to do so, I reiterate what my hon. colleague has said, that the crack in the superstructure of the Conservative government in the province of Ontario has appeared and will widen until such time as this government is swept away.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, the debate on the second reading and on the clause-by-clause discussion of this bill revealed for all of the public in Ontario to understand, the position of the united Opposition—it was united at that time, sir, as you well recall. The stand of the united Opposition was against this bill, and sir, in order to reiterate, so there shall be no possibility of misunderstanding, except perhaps among the most droll of my listeners, our stand was based on three main contentions.

In the first place, sir, we said that this was not a health measure, it was a sickness measure and the hon. Prime Minister—a man of very acute perception normally—departed from his quality, highly developed on that score. He said, I think in an attempt to get his supporters to bang their desks, which is the last refuge of an insupportable argument, that he did not understand our position.

We said time and time again that we did not believe his first-step thesis, because if this is a first step, as he wants the public to think, through his remarks in this House and his remarks over the electronic medium, then it is a first step in the wrong direction. In order to be a valid first step, in other words, it must be a first step in a direction of promoting the health care of the Canadian people, in the way that is outlined by Mr. Justice Hall in the 2,500-odd pages of his report.

Second, we said that no one has the moral right to make a profit out of sickness. That is the philosophical cleavage between us, which my hon. friend from Scarborough West refers to. That is the difference in philosophical approach that separates the Opposition from the government on this score. No one, I repeat to you, sir, has the right morally to make a profit out of the sickness or the health of our people.

Of course, in upholding that philosophical principle, indeed an ethical principle, a religious principle, if you like, we are supported by no less an organ which has its ear tuned to public opinion than the Globe and Mail—a journal in this province and of this country which I have always respected very greatly, and ever will as long as it continues its high standard; an organ, let it be said, that has done a great deal to shape the public opinion of this province and of this nation. In fact, I heard the predecessor of the man who occupies the post of first citizen, say in this House one day, “I get some of my best ideas from the Globe and Mail.” And I suppose that was true. Indeed, not only from the Globe and Mail but other organs of the press of this province.

My friend the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) told me as recently as tonight that a Thomson newspaper of Guelph started off with a qualified support of this bill and has during the clause-by-clause study ended up with two editorials in denunciation of it. I say to the hon. Prime Minister in the context of some remarks that he will appreciate later, that ever since the bland announcement was made by the hon. Minister of Health that the sick and the aged would pay higher premiums, there has been a great shift of public opinion in this province.

I said during second reading that Medicare is a political matter. Of course, it is a political matter; it is a political matter in the sense that just about everybody who is alert to public events has an opinion about it. I can only report, and I am sure it is the experience of hon. members in all corners of the House, that when a constituent is asked what he thinks of the system of Robarts care that we are to have, his first reaction is to that announcement of the hon. Minister of Health about the higher premium for the very people who deserve it most, the people who need it. That is the very comment that one gets.

I report to you, sir, that during the last two weeks I sent out a questionnaire containing 10 questions. One of the questions was: “Do you favour government operation of medical care insurance?” More than 200 answers have been received and they are overwhelmingly in the affirmative. Once again I say in the affirmative in the context of our history and development of higher institutions; because I say to my dear friend, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) who looks at me, that we Canadians do not fear government.

Government in the 20th century has become the agent of human happiness. It is the agent through which human happiness can best be secured. I got the impression from his contribution to the debate that any further entrenchment of government in the private sphere of operation was something akin to Marxism, if not indeed communism.

That was the second ground on which we resisted this bill, and we feel tonight that we are doing a service to the people of Ontario by making a last ditch attempt to have this bill killed on the order paper.

The third one is that we pointed out beyond all possibility of contradiction, of intelligent contradiction, that the Act is an administrative monstrosity, that bureaucratically speaking—and once again I say I do not use the word bureaucrat as a term of opprobrium—that from the point of view of efficient bureaucracy the Act is almost impossible to administer.

I do not need to go into the details, but one I reflect upon that I referred to the hon. Minister of Health was section 7 that deals with the rights of people unemployed for 30 days to make application for partial or total subsidy. The government tells us they start off with at least 1,800,000 residents of Ontario, more than 25 per cent of our people in what is claimed to be the richest province in Canada, in need of total subsidy. It is a pocket of poverty that the hon. Prime Minister will not put in his vest pocket.

Beyond that, we are going to add a large number of people who work seasonally and who can claim the benefits of section 7. At that point the hon. Minister of Health agreed with me. He agreed with me that there was a fear that people would make use of that section who were not morally entitled to make use of it. That is to say they had $50,000 in bonds under the mattress and ought not to be coming to the public purse for assistance.

There are three bases upon which we took our stand. Now we intended, I might say to you, sir, we intended that the magnificent speech made by the hon. leader of the Opposition tonight ought to be enough to be said from our side. Then we looked with some dismay on the activities of our hon. friends to the left; who made their points and made them very well, made them very eloquently. I do not detract from their participation in the debate in the various stages in any way. I will say this, sir, that my hon. friends to the left, no matter what our differences in political approach, come to the House exceedingly well prepared; but then again they are full-time politicians and have the time to prepare themselves. Their contributions are commensurate with the efforts that they make.

Mr. Bryden: We take our job seriously.

Mr. Sopha: Well, yes, it is the only job you have; people offer me a number of them.

We were content to let the very eloquent statement of the hon. leader of the Opposition stand, but of course politics is always the art of the possible and it became necessary that one of us stand up to indicate that we have by no means lost any of our fervor for the support of this motion.

I hope it will soon be the end. We want to say this; I thought it quite a remarkable thing. I watched you, Mr. Speaker, and I would not be so presumptuous to anticipate what you were going to do, but I thought that you were getting ready to call the vote on this motion. If so it became apparent that no one from the government side was going to participate in the debate on this motion at all.

If that be the case, then I think it fair to say that notwithstanding the public protest, notwithstanding the activities of our friends from the clergy outside the House today, notwithstanding evidence of dissatisfaction in the public press of the province, that the chief citizen is content to say in respect of this bill: "I have the large majority, I have the 77 behind me, we feel this is the best means of social advance in this sphere that is possible at this time; the public be damned."

That, of course, is a hallmark of power which often attends people with large majorities; people with unbalanced majority, because after all we never forget that the 30 of us on this side represent more than 50 per cent of the people of Ontario. We have 30 members as against 78 of those who support the government.

Finally, sir, I want to make a prediction; and I am willing to stake my political future on this prediction. I predict to you—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Provincially or federally?

Mr. Sopha: Well, I was going to say—I am glad the hon. Minister raised that—I was going to say that when my hon. leader was talking about the shortcomings of the Liberal Party in Ottawa—and they are grave on this score, they are grave—I was going to suggest that it is time that somebody in this House went down there.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have been waiting for that.

Mr. Sopha: It is time somebody went down there to carry the message, and I will leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are going to miss the hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I want to make this prediction. I predict to you, sir, absolutely, that this bill in its present form will never become law. The last section but one says that this bill shall come into force on a day to be named by the Lieutenant-Governor in his proclamation, so that leaves entirely in the realm of the arbitrary when this Act is proclaimed.

This bill will never become law in its present form. The groundswells of protest in this province against this approach, against the inequity and the injustice of this so-called bold first step will swell into such a crescendo that you will hear me say at the next session, if the Lord preserves me to attend another one, you will hear me say, not in so few words, when the hon. Prime Minister and his hon. Minister of Health, who has given him a large assist—the hon. Minister of Health has given the first citizen a large assist into the ways of error—they will be back next year, the two of them, with substantial amendments to this statute before it is adopted as a faulty means of attending to the health needs of our people.

Let me repeat, sir, this bill in its present form will never become a law of this province. The hon. Prime Minister is too acute, he is too sharp a man, for that. He has the editorial of Arthur Ford to sustain him today: "Stature of Robarts Increasing Steadily."

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What has this to do with the content of this bill?

Mr. Sopha: Just a little sideline. Does he object to those words: "Stature of Robarts Increasing Steadily"? Are those words a defamation? Maybe this Ford is a Liberal. I continue:

Premier John Robarts will probably not thank me for this column—
It must be defamatory.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I have always felt that I was very naive and I suppose there is something I am missing in that. However, I will deal with that tomorrow when I make a few remarks to the House—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Later tonight?

Mr. Sopha: Well, perhaps later tonight if you are ready to sit here until about two in the morning.

However, sir, all we can do—we are under no illusion on this side of the House that our motion is going to carry—is to stand right until the last moment, taking the last opportunity as the hon. leader of the Opposition did, to move this amendment. We demonstrate to the people of Ontario, I think beyond all peradventure and beyond all possibility of misunderstanding, that we in the Liberal Party are saying: "This Bill 136 so far as it attempts to concern your health needs, you the citizen, is not good enough and that we, acting as legislators with the exercise of reason and good sense, could devise a plan that could better suit the needs of our people in this the year 1965."

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, in rising to oppose the motion that this bill now be read a third time and to support the amendment that it be read six months hence, there is little to be said, I must admit, after the speakers who have gone before, but I feel that it is the obligation of each of the Opposition members to do everything in his power to bring to the attention of the public the inadequacies of this particular bill—Bill 136.

I would think that I have spent as much time in the House during the debate on second reading, as well as in the committee of the whole House when we dealt with the bill section by section as anyone here. As we proceeded through the bill section by section, I began to feel that the hon. Minister of Health did not fully understand the bill he introduced himself; nor did he understand the substance and the main principle in the Hall commission report.

More than once the hon. Minister stated that Bill 136 was not the end-all of the medical health insurance programme for the province of Ontario, and he tried to indicate to the Opposition that he was following the recommendations of the Hall commission report inasmuch as it—in his words—called for a medical insurance programme in stages. But I would suggest, as I understand the main recommendation of His Honour Justice Hall, that the report stated that the provinces should proceed with a comprehensive medical insurance programme in stages and the first stage should be medical insurance for all the people of a province under the auspices of the particular government; not that there should be medical insurance in stages and only covering sections of our society.

Certainly this government could have introduced the type of medical insurance coverage that would be, in some sense, in keeping with the Hall commission report; medical insurance coverage covering all the people at one premium without regard to their ability to pay or their medical condition and, as the Hall commission report said:

One stage should not be entered into and concluded unless the second stage has been introduced and ready for implementation.

And it mentions a priority in the need for medical personnel and medical services, and one of the most important factors was the need for drug coverage.

Now, Mr. Speaker, certainly the speakers in the Opposition tonight have indicated that the hon. Prime Minister of this province has some responsibility in regard to this particular piece of legislation. I am sure that the hon. Minister and the hon. Prime Minister have noticed the lack of support for Bill 136 by the public in general. One does not have to repeat the opposing forces to this piece of legislation.

I know, personally, that the hon. Prime Minister has received from the Hamilton area many representations in regard to Bill 136, asking him not to have it go through this Legislature. I know that he has received over 3,000 signed names on petitions from one local union; a group of people who have what might be considered the best medical insurance coverage in this province, but a group of people who believe that there are many in this province who have not the same type of coverage and should be entitled to a medical insurance programme on equal footing with others.

I noticed in the press in the last two or three days a statement by the parliamentary secretary to the hon. Minister of Health and National Welfare in the federal government, saying that a comprehensive health insurance programme for Canada in the near future was inevitable, stating that medical insurance would be on the agenda for the federal-provincial conference on July 19. With this being a statement in the press, one would have thought that the hon. Prime Minister of this province would have made a statement saying that he was prepared to hold his bill until he could meet with the federal authorities in regard to medical health for the people of this country and to find out what kind of a financial programme they had in mind.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, that did not get much official support from the government, and I felt that they were running away from it as fast as they could.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I was just going to say to this House that I read the federal Hansard of the last couple of days and the hon. Prime Minister is right. The hon. member was accused of making statements that were not government policy, but certainly the fact that there is a federal-provincial conference on July 19 and medical insurance is on the agenda should have been enough for the hon. Prime Minister to hold this bill until he found out what kind of a financial deal was in the bag. At least he could have put the federal Liberals on the docket to tell us what they intend to do.

I urge the House to support the motion that this bill be hoisted for six months.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal very briefly with the amendment and, of course, I am going to suggest that this House not vote in favour of it. There are one or two points that I would like to make. I might say that this debate really follows the debate that has taken place in connection with this bill in the last two or three weeks, because I am not aware of hearing anything tonight that I have not heard before during the discussions of this bill—both in second reading when the principle of the bill was debated very fully and when it went through committee of the whole House, during which time it was examined item by item and section by section. I may be repeating myself, but perhaps it is time that there was some repetition, and that some of these points should be made again.

I have been very concerned with the efforts—and I might say that I was extremely disappointed to hear the leader of the Opposition indulge in it again tonight—to mislead the public concerning this bill. After all, as I have said before, what we are proposing here is just another part and another piece of a total health plan that has been developed over some long period of time in this province. I might point out to you that, in reading the Hall commission report, which has become the absolute bible—the ultimate authority—to say that this government, as of this moment, instead of this bill should be introducing a compulsory universal medical services plan is wrong. The Hall commission report has been used as an authority to say that is what this government should be doing at this moment, but every man in the Opposition who has read that report knows that the Hall commission says it cannot possibly be done before 1971; that there are some very important things that must be done first.

Mr. Bryden: All this talking for a total health programme—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. Prime Minister has conceded the floor—

Mr. Speaker: Does the member have a point of order? I do not recall—

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was pointing out to the hon. Prime Minister that he was quite wrong in his interpretation—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker, if this is a kind of interjection—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, unless the member has a point of order, he cannot intervene. And, in intervening on a point of order, he must state something that the Prime Minister has said, "That is out of order," and I do not recall that he has said anything that is out of order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would point out to you, sir, that on occasion the hon. Prime Minister has interrupted when we have spoken. We have conceded the floor and he has been permitted to make a comment. Now, the hon. Prime Minister has been kind enough to concede the floor. My comment is simply this, that the Hall commission report talked in terms of a total programme, including not only medical services, but dental, optical, drug services and so on.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I agree completely with my hon. friend, and I might say, Mr. Speaker, I have no particular objection to these comments when I am speaking. I would much rather sit down and hear it, than have it shouted across the floor and end up without the vaguest idea of what the hon. member is trying to tell me. But I quite agree with him.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I also have a point of order on this question. At no time have I suggested that the total health programme as outlined by the Hall commission is going to be implemented, but as we have stated in our own outlines—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see the point of order. My hon. friend would not yield the floor to me and at this time I am not yielding the floor.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Would you state your point of order.

Mr. Thompson: My point of order is that the hon. Prime Minister has misinterpreted what I and my hon. colleagues have said. We have had a phased-in programme for the Hall commission, and we had petitioned for optical and dental services for children receiving public assistance. We have worked out this theory and for the hon. Prime Minister to suggest that we are saying that all the health services should come at once, we did not—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am glad to hear it, because it is the clearest I have heard that said in this House during this entire debate. I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. leader of the Opposition at last, in this final debate on third reading, has come to the point where he admits that he could not and would not put in a compulsory, universal medical services plan tomorrow, if he sat in this seat.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intent to indulge in a debate with the hon. member who is jumping up and down at the moment. I sat and listened to him; I am quite prepared to listen to a point of order, if you require.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order, the hon. Prime Minister has said this is the first time I have stated this. I suggest to him that he might do me the courtesy of reading my first Budget speech, in which we outlined this completely clearly.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will simply say that if I have misinterpreted the hon. member's position in this debate I will go back and check and see what he has said during the course of the debate and what he has also said outside the Legislature.

In any event, I will get back to my point, that what we are proposing here with this bill, is only part of a total plan. I just reached the point where I was reiterating that the Hall commission report says that by 1971 we could have in this country a compulsory, universal medical services or medical health plan. But, says the Hall commission report, certain things must be done first, and I have these listed. I am not, repeat not, going to go through them again, because I have gone through them once in the course of this debate, but nonetheless, as I said in the beginning of my remarks, I have heard nothing from the other side tonight I have not heard before, so perhaps the hon. member would like to sit and listen to something which he has heard before, in order that we may keep the record completely straight.

I pointed out a number of recommendations made. The basic one, of course, is that the Hall commission report said that in effect we simply have not got enough nurses, we have not got enough doctors, we have not got enough paramedical people in this country at this moment to produce and be able to provide the services that the universal, compulsory medical health plan would have.

The report suggested the establishment of various things, such as a nursing planning committee, which we have already done. It suggested that the federal government should provide 50 per cent of the cost of new medical schools. We have gone ahead in this province, because we cannot afford to wait. Nobody has offered us the 50 per cent and the recommendations contained in the Hall commission report have not proved acceptable as yet to the federal government. They may in the future, but that remains to be seen. But this government said, "We cannot wait." It is one year—it was last May or June—since the Hall commission report was made public, and nothing has been done. But between June and October, in pursuance of other plans we had, we became the only jurisdiction in Canada that has done some of this basic implementation of the Hall commission report.

Instead of sitting around talking about it, we have the plans for the medical schools underway; we have plans for the nursing schools underway; we have plans for research facilities in our hospitals; we have plans for teaching facilities in our teaching hospitals. All these matters are at present underway and they are going to take some time.

Mr. Sopha: What have they been doing for 20 years?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It takes just about ten years to create a medical school, from the time you start planning it until the time you get your first graduate.

Mr. Sopha: And they have been in power since 1943.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening, as long as I have sat in this House, to these complaints and when I hear the Opposition say "Too little and too late," I know we have done the right thing—every time—because without a shadow of a doubt, that is the weakest and the most hackneyed argument I have been listening to about one department or another ever since I have been in this House.

Mr. Sopha: It hurts, does it not?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Oh, it hurts terribly. I was just pointing out to the hon. member, and I am making these arguments in support of my position, that what this bill represents is just another step. We propose through this bill to provide assistance for those in the province who need it most, and we propose to provide this starting next June, and that is a relatively short time. It is very simple to say that there is too much time expended between now and then, but these matters are not as simple when you have to arrange the administration of them. In any event, we will be providing care for people in this province in 1966, which we think they need.

I have said on many occasions that if we can work out satisfactory arrangements, and if the federal government comes to accept its responsibility and if it can make certain arrangements with the province of Quebec which I feel will be absolutely necessary—because believe me, at this stage in the history of this country it is not a simple thing to work out any national plan, and just think on that for a while—there will have to be a great deal of arranging and organizing and sorting out before we can hope to have what might be termed a national plan. I do hope that we will find it possible to do it on a somewhat more rational basis than when we worked out the Canada pension plan, and I doubt if there is anybody in this House who would disagree with me in that respect.

These are the things that are going to take time and these are the things that we have already started. I am not going to speak about dental teaching facilities and so on because I believe that the hon. members of this House know what we have set up. We have a plan which we estimate will cost about $112 million; it will run upward from that. Already, from the figures which have come in to us, I would say that the estimates of what our medical education plans in this province are going to cost, are low, very low. It seems that with all these facilities, whatever price is put on them, when it comes to creating and building them they are more expensive.

I want to go to a couple of other points and I would just say once again that as far as we are concerned, this bill will fill certain gaps and we do not feel that it will, in any way, prevent us from co-operating and working with any other jurisdiction in Canada if it is possible to work these things out. To date, we have no indication that it is.

I would not have the vaguest idea of what is going on in the province of Quebec, for instance, in this particular field. I know that the Quebec government is working out a pension plan and that, in itself, will be a very large project for it. I do not have any idea whether Quebec would be in any way receptive to the idea of joining a national plan, but I can tell hon. members from my experience to date, that I would say that they would not be, and I would say that there will have to be some sort of arrangement if we are to have a national plan.

But in the meantime, I am just saying we are going ahead and we do not think that this bill will, in any way, prevent us from working in co-operation with the federal government and, as I say, with any other government that may be involved.

Now, I just want to make a couple of comments. I do feel, and I repeat, that a very great effort has been made to mislead the public of this province.

For instance, in all the debates in this House I have not heard one hon. member of the Opposition mention a non-profit plan nor mention in any of these debates the co-operative medical societies which are providing medical care. No!

Hon. members opposite stand up and they say, "You are giving it all away to the insurance companies." This is their plea; this is the impression they are trying to leave; this is where they are trying to deceive the people of this province. Why, the Liberal Party itself—I cannot remember which one of their schemes this was, but in the last three did not rest firmly based on PSI?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I really must again object. I recall very clearly, for example, that the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) enlarged on this at great length. I am sorry that the hon. Prime Minister has either not attended to what we said or else—and I do not want to say this, because I think he is fair—and I do not want to say that he is purposely ignoring what we said but certainly we have spoken on co-operatives.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it runs in my mind that the hon. member for Bruce did have something to say about this. I do not remember what the hon. member had to say about it. Has he told the people of this province, for instance, that at the present time there are 2,600,000 people covered by non-profit plans in this province? They do not pay anything to insurance companies. Nobody is gouging them—this word "gouge" has been used here in reference to these people.

We have a system in the province developed on a co-operative basis, and the co-operative was developed by the associated medical services, and various groups of doctors. These are non-profit organizations and they are presently supplying service to 2,600,000 people in the province. Every insurance company in the province must compete with these co-ops, so that if they cannot compete I suppose they will do no business. That hardly agrees with the picture hon. members opposite try so hard to paint of the Conservative Party supporting only the insurance companies. I must stand up and say that I think they tried to do it deliberately.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I point out to the House that there will be not one penny, not one penny of public money paid to any insurance company. I make this point, because I must present the other side of this coin. There will not be a single penny of public money paid to any insurance company.

Mr. Speaker, it may be, as the hon. member for Sudbury says, that there is a great deep philosophical point here about not allowing any insurance company to handle insurance for anyone who is ill, and one can translate that into trafficking in illness, if they please.

All I say is that we are making them compete. If they can compete with the non-profit organizations and sell health insurance cheaper, I claim that the person who is the consumer, who wants the insurance, should be allowed to buy it. If they cannot compete then they will not do any business.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: These are a few of the points I would like to reiterate tonight.

I would like to finally make one comment. I am very disturbed at the attempt made by my hon. friend to compare the premium in Saskatchewan with the proposed premiums in this province. This is intellectual dishonesty at its worst. I am quite certain that he knows that there is no comparison, and I am quite certain that he knows how that plan—

Mr. Thompson: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker; or on a point of order then, if that is how I do it.

I am not going to stand in this House and have any hon. member—no matter who is—suggest to me that I am intellectually dishonest. I suggest that when they pay $26 as a premium and they also pay for other services; and we, sir, are paying—is it $180 for the premium—and will also pay for other services, then the hon. Prime Minister is being intellectually dishonest if he is calling me that.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thompson: Well, I will withdraw that the hon. Prime Minister is being intellectually dishonest.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I accept the hon. leader of the Opposition's point of view. Certainly if he meant something else. But he did not mention anything about any other services tonight; all he said was that there was a $26 premium in Saskatchewan and a $180 premium in Ontario. That is all he said, just the two things.

If he left out something that he intended to say, then I will accept that from him. From where I sit it sounded like a pretty intellectually dishonest comparison, but I realize that he did not mean it that way, so I accept his explanation.

Mr. Thompson: Would the hon. Prime Minister like me to go into the benefits in Saskatchewan?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I am not going to beat any more of this old straw. We do not think that this bill is the be-all and end-all; I do not know how many times we need to say that. I listened with some interest to my hon. friend's comments, and they were also made by the hon. member for Woodbine, that this bill in its present form would never become law. I want to make one comment. I hope that I will never have such a closed mind that I will not be able to make a change if I think it is necessary for better legislation.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we get on with the business, pass this bill and proceed to add a few more bricks in the structure we are building.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, it looked for a while as though we were not going to get a government spokesman on this bill. However—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, playing the numbers game, there is no question but that the government can have the last word in this debate, but playing the numbers game is not going to help them in the province of Ontario because the last word in this debate is that what they have produced is a failure.

The hon. Prime Minister talked about intellectual dishonesty and he rather hurled the words around loosely. I recall, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. Prime Minister, and I am sure he remembers vividly, the fancy advertisements that appeared in every newspaper in the province of Ontario. Now, Mr. Speaker, if he is going to talk about intellectual dishonesty, I think these facts must be placed before the people again.

I recall, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure the hon. Prime Minister does, the little dots in the advertisement with a square and a tick mark and it said, medical care for all the people of Ontario—and this was in September of 1963—done.

Mr. Speaker, the chorus of trained seals is in good voice tonight. If this was true in September of 1963, what do we need Bill No. 136 for tonight? We had it all in September of 1963.

Who are the intellectual hypocrites? Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised we have not heard about that tonight, I really am. I am rather shocked that the hon. leader of this government stands here with the cloak of self-righteousness and dignity about him, and rather than defend his bill he attacks the critics. What have the critics said? What has come out in this House about this bill in the last several weeks that we have debated it?

An hon. member: Hot air.

Mr. Singer: The hon. Prime Minister tells us—

Hot air! Which of the hon. Ministers says—oh, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett). Yes, I could expect that comment from the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management. The hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management, who is the authority on all known subjects, but who did not get into this debate at all. I would like to hear his views, perhaps we will before this evening is over. But the hon. Prime Minister tells us, Mr. Speaker, that this really is not the Hall report, this is a step, this is a further step in the implementation of a health plan.

I suggest that if this bill carries this House tonight, and if contrary to the views of my hon. leader and my hon. colleague from Sudbury and myself and maybe others, it is implemented, we have taken a backward step which will never allow the Hall report to be implemented in Canada. I suggest that once the government, having dug its heels in, has established this sort of pattern for attempting to take care of the health of the people of Ontario, it will be in a position from which it can never retreat.

I suggest that in the whole process of this debate, as mistake after mistake was pointed out, the government dug its heels in further and further and refused to budge an inch from what was presented in the original draft. It finally emerges that the government that likes to say, "We are so fair," and "We are so honest," is going to charge the old and the sick more for health insurance than it is going to charge anybody else. Is that reasonable, is that honest, is that medical care for all the people of Ontario, as they said in September, 1963?

The hon. Prime Minister was quoting the benefits of organizations such as the associated medical services. Does the hon. Prime Minister recall the words of Dr. Hanna, the president of that association? Does he recall what Dr. Hanna had to say about this report? Does he recall the criticism that Dr. Hanna levied at the government? Does the hon. Prime Minister recall that Dr. Hanna said that organizations such as his would probably have to go out of business if this plan came into being? That is the sort of thing at this, the 11th hour of this bill, that we would have hoped the hon. Prime Minister would have talked about. And when we are talking about honesty and frankness and fairness, we would like to know the premium structure and we have not been told, Mr. Speaker.

I suggest there is no point really in labouring this issue any further. The only reason that I rose to my feet to take part in this debate now, sir, was because I could not let the hon. Prime Minister's words be the last word in this debate. I suggest that what the hon. Prime Minister has done tonight is to cloak under the protective umbrella of a noisy group of backbenchers—noisy uninformed backbenchers—a tale full of sound and fury that signifies really very little; a tale that this government took out onto the hustings in 1963; a tale that was at that time, sir, accepted by the people; a tale which obviously meant nothing in 1963; a tale that does not fit into the four walls of the Hall report; a tale that does not provide what the people of Ontario need, and a tale by which this government has dug itself into a hole from which it will never emerge.

I suggest to you, sir, there is no point in appealing to the good sense, to the fairness, to the equity, to the reasonableness, to the sense of social justice, of this group who have been in power for 10, these 22 years. I suggest to you, sir, that the die has now been cast, but I think that the people of Ontario want to read at great length and with great care the hollow words that the hon. Prime Minister left on the record, as the last government contribution in this bill tonight.

Mr. Speaker: The Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), in the absence of the Minister of Health, moves third reading of the bill.

The leader of the Opposition, seconded by the member for Downsview moves that Bill No. 136 be not now read the third time, but be read the third time this date six months hence.

In accordance with the procedures outlined today, I shall now put the question.

All those in favour of the bill being now read a third time, please say "aye."

All those opposed say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Call in the members.

YEAS

NAYS

Allen	Bryden
Auld	Bukator
Bales	Davison
Boyer	Freeman
Brown	Gaunt
Brunelle	Gisborn
Butler	Lewis
Carruthers	(Scarborough West)
Cecile	Newman
Connell	Oliver
Cowling	Paterson
Demers	Racine
Downer	Reaume
Eagleson	Renwick
Evans	Sargent
Ewen	Singer
Gomme	Sopha
Grossman	Spence
Guindon	Thompson
Harris	Worton
Haskett	Young—20
Henderson
Hodgson
(Scarborough East)
Hodgson
(Victoria)
Johnston
(Parry Sound)
Johnston
(Carleton)
Kerr
Knox
Lawrence
(Russell)

YEAS

Lawrence
 (St. George)
 MacNaughton
 Morningstar
 McNeil
 Olde
 Peck
 Pittock
 Randall
 Reuter
 Robarts
 Roberts
 Rollins
 Root
 Rowntree
 Simonett
 Spooner
 Stewart
 Thrasher
 Villeneuve
 Wardrope
 Whitney
 Wishart
 Yakubuski
 Yaremko—53

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 53, the "nays" 20.

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the procedure set forth in Lewis at page 61, which indicates that at this stage there is an opportunity to amend the title of the bill if necessary, I am going to move, seconded by Mr. Gisborn, that the resolution that the bill be now passed and intituled as in the motion, be amended by striking out the words, "intituled as in the motion," and substituting the words, "intituled, An Act respecting temporary and partial medical services insurance."

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that that is a necessary amendment of the title to indicate properly the content of the bill. It is a bill for temporary and partial services and I think the title should so indicate. I so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I will have to rule the member's motion out of order. I consider this motion a complete negation of the bill, because the title of the bill has already been decided; we have had third reading and the bill has now been titled as in the motion. I consider this motion, at this time, completely out of order on these grounds.

Mr. Bryden: May I call your attention, sir, to Lewis' Parliamentary Procedure, page 61, which says:

When the motion for the third reading of a bill has been carried, the procedure is closed by the Speaker putting to the House the resolution, "Resolved that the bill do now pass and be intituled as in the motion." This gives an opportunity for the amendment of the title if necessary.

I believe, sir, that this is in accordance with what Lewis says is the proper procedure. We believe that it is necessary to amend the title and we would like to put that proposition to the House—

Mr. Speaker: I consider that the title has already been carried and at this time I would have to say that the member's motion is a complete negation of the bill, as I see it, and I would rule it out of order.

Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance.

Bill No. 137, An Act to amend The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Bill No. 138, An Act to amend The Meat Inspection Act (Ontario), 1962-1963.

Bill No. 139, An Act to amend The Seed Potatoes Act.

Bill No. 140, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Bill No. 142, An Act to provide for the establishment of regional detention centres.

Bill No. 143, The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965.

Bill No. 144, An Act to impose a tax on the consumers of tobacco.

Bill No. 146, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

On Bill No. 147, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of commuter services:

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to propose this motion, may I say to this House that, since the last time I spoke on this bill, I have received scores of letters from all parts of Ontario and I have read editorials in the press supporting the stand I have taken.

In effect, the intent of this bill is to spend $7 million, as outlined by the hon. Prime Minister, to give more mobility to one-third of the people of this province and to ask four million people to pay for mobility for two million people. Now this bill, the hon. Prime Minister repeatedly said, will divert more money to the rest of the province for other commuters' mobility.

Now the people of Ontario are paying the freight for this iniquitous and kite-flying legislation. We ask the hon. Prime Minister, how will he equalize or how will he offer the rest of the province equal sums of money?

In effect, we are giving $7 million, which is not spelled out in this bill, and $2 million a year for maintenance. Is this to infinity, or how long is it for?

The hon. Prime Minister says that he does not believe in giving on the same ratio to the rest of the province—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I did not say that; it is so far from the truth that it is ridiculous.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister will check Hansard, he will find that he made a statement that he did not believe in giving grants on a "ratio" basis? Is that not the word he used then—on a "ratio" basis?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I said on a "regional" basis.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: What I said was that we do not make a practice of giving grants on the basis of the amount of tax revenue that may be raised in any one area. I pointed out to the hon. member that, in the area to be served by this commuter service, it is very easy to prove statistically that it produces large sums of money in taxation from the people who live there—and those sums of money are spent in other areas of the province.

We do not do our taxation and spending on the basis of who produces, or how much, and that it must be spent in that area. We have large tax-producing areas and we have small tax-producing areas and we spread the tax revenue evenly across the province, and according to the ability of the communities to pay.

You know that this is so in our grants for schools as far as school taxes are concerned. We have formulas which take into account the relevant wealth of the community in looking after assessments. The lower the assessment, the higher the grant.

I realize that the hon. member for Woodbine is getting a little excited, but this is between the hon. member and myself.

But that is what is said in essence; that we do not allocate the tax revenues across the province on the basis of where they come from, but on the need of the people generally.

Mr. Sargent: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, but when every transit system in the North American continent is losing money, and every one in Ontario is losing money, how can we justify spending $7 million belonging to the rest of the people of Ontario to create a greater growth in the Metropolitan Toronto area? How do you tell the four million people living outside Toronto that this is a good deal?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I suggest to the hon. member that the building of better roads here just creates a bigger problem all the time, and you are offering nothing to the rest of the province on an equal basis.

Now, clause 4 of the bill—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the member not to refer to a particular clause, but speak on the whole of the bill.

Mr. Sargent: The $7 million the hon. Prime Minister mentioned was to acquire rolling stock, leased or otherwise, and the second clause is to create a maintenance fund of $2 million.

The hon. Prime Minister does not say if the term of this $2 million is to infinity, or would he guarantee that the amount will be $7 million? In other words, the amount of money that is in the air—the amount of $2 million each year—is to infinity. There is nothing to say that there is any term agreed there. Here we have a bill that is blank at legislation; it gives this government the right to dig into the provincial Treasury and to spend money with no set amount specified. The hon. Prime Minister says that it is $7 million this year—to take his word—and $2 million to pay the operating costs. In other words, it could be the same as the subway—a $20 million gift. In no other jurisdiction could they operate this way. They must spell out the amount of money they were going to give, the terms of the deal and the money involved; but here no amounts are mentioned at all.

This is giving this lop-sided government—this steamroller government—the right to sign a blank cheque, and what I would say is for a political slush fund.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: When one has the right to pass a bill asking four million people to give two million people $7 million.

In Boston there is a comparable commuter service. They were subsidized up to $10 million a year and they had to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I will wait, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: As I said, Mr. Speaker, in Boston they have a like system; it was subsidized up to $10 million a year and they had to increase the subsidy to increase the revenues. The figure submitted by the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton) is about as realistic as his performance in this House tonight—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: He said that there would be—if I read his figures right—6,000 commuters a day coming from Burlington, and from the scuttlebutt I hear there will not even be 400 a day from Burlington.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is wrong, not because we are opposed to any mobility for transportation for commuters down here in this area, but because the government does not tell the rest of Ontario, the four million people outside this area, what they will get.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Ask the hon. member for Sudbury what he thinks about “ratio spending”!

Mr. Sargent: We figure the bill is wrong because it is not stated how much will be spent this year. What we have in this bill is a blank cheque, and in spite of the hon. Prime Minister’s “guesstimate” of $7 million—and it is a guesstimate—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Actually it is $7.5 million—

Mr. Sargent: He is the big thunder there; he would know about that.

It is wrong because the government does not tell us how long it is going to spend $2 million a year on the subsidy. Every transportation system in the province of Ontario is losing its shirt, and the hon. Minister should know that. If this government, in its grab for votes in this area, says to all the rest of Ontario that it is going to tax the people $7 million to fly a kite for a commuter service down here and is not going to tell the rest of the province how much it is getting, I would suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that he should put a bus system along 401 and save the rest of Ontario $7 million or $20 million—how much is it?

As I said before, this bill is a blank cheque to let this government spend an unspecified sum of money for an unspecified term of years and no one in business could operate this way. What it is asking us to vote for in this legislation—

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): He can vote against it!

Mr. Sargent: Some day we will.

Mr. Sopha: I wish there was a gigantic television to show the people—

Mr. Sargent: If those government hon. members who live outside this area—and there are about 50 of them—can vote for this without specifying a like amount for their own home areas, then they are going to have a tough time explaining this to the people where they live.

I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister that he take back this bill and make it a fair bill; make the same amount of money available on a 3-to-1 ratio. All we ask for is a fair deal. If he wants to give $7 million for Metro and $2 million in subsidy, then give outside of Toronto $14 million in capital and $4 million subsidy. In other words, make it available to them—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Where would we give it? To whom, would the hon. member suggest?

Mr. Bryden: Give it to Owen Sound; that would solve it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! I am going to ask the members to desist from so many interjections. I think the debate is getting out of hand at times on third reading and I respectfully ask your co-operation to allow the member for Grey North to complete his remarks on third reading, which he is entitled to do. As long as he keeps fairly relevant within the scope of the bill, I shall allow him to proceed.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I think we should spell out in the bill the amount and the time limit for subsidy and maintenance, because this is not good legislation and we all know it. It is a piece of junk.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago, the hon. Prime Minister said that it appeared to him that I was getting excited. It may have appeared that way but I can assure him that that was not the situation at all. I was consumed by curiosity and interest to hear an exposition of Liberal policy with regard to Bill 147. I take it that it is an official statement on behalf of the Liberal Party since the hon. member who made it was designated earlier as the Liberal Party transport spokesman or critic. If this is Liberal policy, I am glad to hear about it. I can assure the House, Mr. Speaker, that it is not our policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am afraid that the member is not speaking to the contents of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: I was just commenting on—

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid it is not in order on third reading.

Mr. Bryden: I just want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that we in this group do not in any way want to associate ourselves with those comments. Quite the contrary, we take the position—and I think it is one well supported by expert authority in the field—that the most efficient and economical way to move people is by public transportation. Furthermore, we believe that public transportation will not be fully utilized if it is required to pay its own way in the narrow sense of the term. It requires a certain degree of subsidization for maximum utilization.

We believe that this bill aims at that. We believe, therefore, that the bill will save the province of Ontario and all its people money in the long run. It will obviate the necessity of much larger expenditures on other forms of transportation, and what is probably even more important, it will prevent the destruction of our cities through cars massing into them when the cities cannot accommodate them. We are wholeheartedly in support of this bill, and in view of the very strong exception to it that has been taken by the Liberal Party, we think it important that our position should be on record.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I want to make very clear the position of the Liberal Party. We have agreed in principle with this bill, but I may say that we do not naively say that just because public transportation is going to be the method of travel, therefore we will not ask any questions. I would think my hon. friend—who seems to worship a god when we say public transportation—a man with his experience—

Mr. Bryden: We do not ask questions on third reading.

Mr. Thompson: —a man with his reading, and a man with his experience on financial aspects, would discern clearly the very pertinent questions which my hon. colleague was raising. I say this for the reason that we know—and so does the hon. Minister and he is deeply concerned about it—that in Boston the federal government did subsidize the public transportation to the tune of $10 million. In order to try and attract the public transportation to keep going, they increased the rate of travel over a period and they also reduced the rates.

The hon. member for Grey North, Mr. Speaker, is simply raising questions about this. He has a concern about public finances, which perhaps others do not have. I look on it as a responsibility in this House, as the hon. member for Grey North does, that we should ask these questions; that it is not out of place.

He said there are situations in public transportation systems in other cities on the North American continent, and he asks, naturally, when these questions were raised, why do we choose Burlington? Are we assured that there will be 6,000 people on the train that will go every half hour from Burlington?

These are natural apprehensions. He is concerned about public expenditure and he raises the question. I hope, as I am sure he does, that the questions that we raise, the apprehension that he has, will not be justified. On the other hand, I would say he would be remiss in his duty if he had not stood up in the House and raised these questions. The fact that the new party in their approach, tried to twist the Liberal Party's philosophy and did not raise these questions, I say is a dereliction of duty.

We are for this bill, but we wanted to have more clarification.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, if I may; I do not know if this is the place to answer questions or not.

I think we have had ample opportunity, if I may say so, Mr. Speaker, to ask questions. I think many have been asked and many have been appropriately answered. I leave it to the hon. leader of the Opposition.

As I recall it, this bill, in the last words of the hon. member for Grey North, was described as a pile of junk.

Mr. Sopha: That is his opinion.

Mr. Eagleson: That is his way of saying he is for it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Very well. I would like simply to ask through you, Mr. Speaker, if it is the policy of the Liberal Party to refer to this bill as a pile of junk.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is how he described this bill, as a pile of junk.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, any bill that does not give equal treatment to all people of Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the member has to point out how the Minister is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: If the interpretation of the government is as the hon. Minister says, it is a pile of junk.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I thought that was what the hon. member said; now I am sure of it. This is well established again. If he is speaking for his party, we know what the Liberal Party thinks about the bill; they regard it as a pile of junk.

Mr. Sopha: Who said he is speaking for us?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, nobody said he was not.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have stated that the policy of the Liberal Party has been that in principle we agree with the bill, that we will vote on it, but I have also said that the hon. member for Grey North has raised many discerning questions and he is concerned that unless you run this efficiently around this province, it will end up like a pile of junk. He is concerned that you will have equal distribution throughout the whole of Ontario, and that to me is something that is justified by the hon. member.

Bill No. 147, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of commuter services.

Bill No. 148, An Act to amend The University of Toronto Act, 1947.

Bill No. 149, The York University Act, 1965.

Bill No. 150, An Act respecting Lakehead University.

Bill No. 151, An Act to amend The Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 152, An Act to amend The University of Guelph Act, 1964.

Bill No. 153, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Bill No. 154, An Act to amend The Children's Institutions Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 155, An Act to amend The Homes for Retarded Children Act, 1962-63.

Bill No. 156, An Act to amend The Department of Public Welfare Act.

Bill No. 157, The Pension Benefits Act, 1965.

Bill No. 158, An Act respecting Université d'Ottawa.

Bill No. 160, An Act to authorize the raising of money on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund.

Bill No. 161, An Act to amend The Ontario Mental Health Foundation Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 162, An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act.

Bill No. 163, An Act to amend The Liquor Licence Act.

Bill No. 164, An Act to amend The Assessment Act.

Bill No. 165, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement System Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 166, An Act to amend The Emergency Measures Act, 1962-63.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed with the Budget debate.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.20 o'clock, p.m.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, June 22, 1965

Morning Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow

Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 22, 1965

Motions to reappoint and appoint select committees, Mr. Robarts, agreed to	4501
Statement re 700th anniversary of Simon de Montfort's Parliament, Mr. Auld	4504
Resumption of the debate on the Budget, Mr. Whitney, Mr. Young	4505
Recess, 12.30 o'clock	4518

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1965

The House met at 10.30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always pleased to have visitors to the Legislature and today we welcome as guests: In the east gallery, students from Maywood public school, St. Catharines and Centennial Road public school, Scarborough; and in the west gallery, New Dundee public school, New Dundee and Ryerson public school, Owen Sound.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, you might also like to add a word of welcome to the students and teachers from Bedford Park public school. They are in the Speaker's gallery.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the member for Eglinton. I did not have the name of the students in the Speaker's gallery.

Presenting petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves, seconded by Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer), that the select committees on youth, aging, and mining appointed at the session of 1964 be respectively reappointed with the same powers and duties as heretofore.

That changes in the membership of the said committees be as follows:

Youth: Mr. Edwards and Mr. Rowe substituted for Mr. McKeough and Mr. Welch;

Aging: Mr. Whitney substituted for Mr. Carton;

Mining: Mr. Beckett and Mr. Letherby substituted for Mr. Eagleson and Mr. Henderson.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary):

That a select committee of this House be appointed to inquire into and review The Corporations Act of the province of Ontario and related Acts and regulations, including The Corporations Information Act and The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, and to consider the principles of the incorporation, operation, management and dissolution of corporations, including co-operatives, together with the legislation of other jurisdictions relating to the same matters.

And that the select committee have authority to sit during the interval between sessions and have full power and authority to employ counsel and such other personnel as may be deemed advisable and to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath, and the assembly doth command and compel attendances before the said select committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations, for which purpose the Honourable the Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

And the said committee to consist of ten members to be composed as follows:

Mr. Lawrence (St. George), chairman; Messrs. Carton, Eagleson, Henderson, Reilly, Renwick, Singer, Sopha, Thrasher and Welch.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make brief reference to this committee. I consider it to be a very important committee which has a very large task to do.

The present Corporations Act of the province came into effect on April 30, 1954, and it was the product of two years work by a select committee of this House. I think we could say that the legislation resulting from that committee's endeavours has been the most advanced in the country and has served as a model for other jurisdictions up to the present time.

In the intervening 11 years since that committee sat, we have witnessed an unprecedented economic growth in this province, and this has been accompanied by an unprecedented increase in the number of new incorporations. During the period since the committee reported, more new corporations have been incorporated in Ontario than in the whole previous 160 years in the province's history since its founding in 1792.

I therefore feel that it is particularly appropriate at this time that this important legislation be subjected to the scrutiny of a select committee.

It is anticipated that the committee will devote its efforts not only to recommending whatever amendments may be necessary to bring the legislation up-to-date but will also enter upon a full examination of the fundamental principles of the corporation law in all its aspects, a task which has never yet been undertaken by any legislative body in Canada.

A study of this magnitude, it is to be expected, would not enable the committee to bring in a report by next spring. The report of the committee on securities legislation, commonly known as the Kimber committee, which was tabled in the House at this session, has recommended a number of amendments, both to The Corporations Act and to The Securities Act. The government is of the opinion that legislation embodying such recommendations should be introduced into this House at an early opportunity and the necessary examination for drafting is presently going forward. Accordingly, it is felt that such legislation should not await any report of this select committee which has been appointed this morning.

No doubt the examinations envisaged by this select committee will touch on various aspects of financing and investments. However, I wish to make it quite clear that we intend to proceed with legislation in the securities field at the earliest opportunity, based on the recommendations that are before us.

I just want to make this clear because there will be some overlapping in the functions of the committee and as far as we are concerned, we want to proceed with the securities legislation at the next session. Now this may mean that subsequently there will be other adjustments after this committee reports, but they can come along in due course.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves, seconded by Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management):

That a select committee of this House be appointed to inquire into and review the provisions of The Conservation Authorities Act and such other Acts of this Legislature relevant to the powers exercised by conservation authorities as the committee may deem appropriate.

And that without limiting the generality of the foregoing to inquire into and review the following matters:

(a) the constitution and powers of conservation authorities including the number and method of appointment of members; (b) the system of financing the work of conservation authorities and the ability of local municipalities to pay for their share of conservation schemes; (c) the power of conservation authorities to acquire or expropriate lands and the methods used therefor; (d) the administrative practices and methods of conservation authorities in carrying out their responsibilities under The Conservation Authorities Act.

And that the select committee have authority to sit during the interval between sessions and have full power and authority to employ counsel and such other personnel as may be deemed advisable and to call for persons, papers and things and to examine witnesses under oath, and the assembly doth command and compel attendances before the said select committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations, for which purpose the Honourable the Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

And the said committee to consist of 13 members to be composed as follows:

Mr. Evans, chairman; Messrs. Hamilton, Harris, Hodgson (Scarborough East), Kerr, MacDonald, McKeough, Nixon, Olde, Oliver, Paterson, Pittock, and Reuter.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make brief reference to this committee as well.

In the Speech from the Throne, notice was given of the intention of the government to undertake a complete review of the operation of conservation authorities and determine what administrative or legislative changes or improvements might be needed to meet current and future requirements. To understand this, I think we must go back and look at the conservation authorities and some of their history.

The concept of conservation authorities as they have been developed in this province arose from a meeting held in the city of Guelph in 1941. The achievement of that particular conference was the formation of the Gawaraska survey, conducted under the joint auspices of the government of Ontario and the government of Canada. The report of this survey contained a very significant recommendation that legislation be enacted which would enable conservation work to be undertaken within the natural boundaries of a river valley. It was this report that established a pattern for the future development of conservation authorities.

In 1944, the conservation branch was established in The Department of Planning and Development and in 1946 The Conservation Authorities Act was passed. At that time the government of this province established three basic principles underlying conservation authorities: 1. The best unit on which to co-ordinate conservation is the watershed. 2. The initiative must come from local people. 3. The government of Ontario is prepared to provide technical advice and financial assistance.

While most authorities were brought into being originally because of the urgent need for correcting flooding within their areas, all are keenly aware of the necessity for water conservation. Water conservation includes not only the construction of large reservoirs but also such supplementary measures as the preservation of swamps and wetlands, the creation of small reservoirs, improved methods of land use and reforestation of sub-marginal lands. The Act was passed in 1946, and 33 conservation authorities have been established. They now cover 23,000 square miles and they embrace 487 municipalities.

In the 19-year period that they have been in existence, the conservation authorities have proved to be very effective agencies for the undertaking and administration of comprehensive water management programmes. There is no question in anybody's mind that the authorities have done an outstanding job in this field. Indeed, the conservation authorities have evolved one of the most useful and productive agencies for co-operative action at the local level and I am sure that all the hon. members of this House agree with me that the philosophy which underlies the existence of the authorities is sound in principle.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this province owe a vast debt of gratitude to the hundreds of dedicated public-spirited citizens who have devoted many days, months and years of their lives entirely gratuitously to the work of the conservation authorities. Without people of foresight and people who are prepared to give of their own time and effort, the conservation authorities programme would never have flourished and developed as it has.

As with any developing organization, however, changing demands and circumstances have placed many strains on the administrative procedures and on the financing of the conservation authorities. It is essential that we view the conservation authorities realistically and recognize that as these institutions have developed, new problems have emerged during the quarter-century since the Guelph conference. Expanding population, rapid urbanization and other factors have all given rise to new and increasing pressures.

Many authorities, for example, are faced with the necessity of building and operating multi-million-dollar projects which were not envisaged at the time the authorities were formed. As a result, the scope of water management programmes carried out by the conservation authorities had to broaden to meet these demands.

In recent years, the conservation authorities have demonstrated a growing awareness of the public need for recreational areas, their acquisition and preservation. As a result, outdoor recreation has steadily become a more important function of the authorities and we look to them for even greater accomplishment in the years ahead.

To ensure that they are able to meet the heavy demands put on them, we have decided that the time has now come for a complete review of conservation authorities, the legislation relating to them, and their activities.

Mr. Speaker, this is the background and basis for the appointment of this committee and the terms of reference which it has. I would only say in conclusion that while I recognize the enormity of the task and know there is a great deal of work to be done, I would hope that this committee will proceed with due despatch to conduct its investigations and make its recommendations, in order that we may have a basis for making whatever changes appear to be necessary in the whole setup for conservation authorities. I would like to say once again how important the work has been of the many volunteers, because it is a voluntary organization, and I think we all owe a great deal of gratitude to the many men and women who have served these conservation authorities over this 19-year period.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the indulgence of the House to make a brief announcement on behalf of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart) on a subject that in his words is of considerable interest to all members?

The hon. Minister's statement is as follows:

During the presentation of the estimates of my department I placed considerable emphasis on the success of our efforts to widen and stimulate the overseas food market both in the United Kingdom and on the continent through the Ontario food council.

To further consolidate and intensify our efforts in widening the overseas market I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Earl Mighton to assist Mr. Ted Marritt, marketing development specialist and vice-chairman of the overseas division of the Ontario food council at Ontario House, London.

Mr. Mighton brings to the department a wealth of experience in the marketing field. Born on a farm near Elora, he graduated from the Ontario agricultural college in 1931 with a BSA degree. Following graduation he was appointed research assistant on the staff of the department of botany and was actively engaged in research work.

On February 1, 1940, he joined Campbell Soup Company Ltd. as a fieldman in the purchasing department and was responsible for the procurement of contract crops and the purchasing of fresh vegetables. In 1945 he was made manager of the newly created agricultural department of that company and remained in charge of this department until December, 1959.

During this period he was responsible for the development of an agricultural programme for the company's contract growers and worked closely with growers' associations and with the provincial and federal Departments of Agriculture. He also participated in many of the negotiations for price and terms of contract for the various processing crops, under the terms of the farm products marketing legislation. In 1959 he was appointed senior purchasing agent for the company, responsible for the direction of all procurement in Canada.

On January 1, 1964, he was appointed personnel manager of Campbell Soup Company Ltd., the position which he has retained until the date of this appointment.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture further states that he is confident, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Mighton will make a valuable contribution in our efforts to widen the overseas markets.

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Tourism and Information): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short statement before the orders of the day.

Today, as perhaps many hon. members are aware, a special ceremony is being held in Westminster Hall, London, England, to mark the 700th anniversary of Simon de Montfort's Parliament of 1265. On this occasion both Houses of the British Parliament will present addresses to Her Majesty, the Queen, in the presence of the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada and other Commonwealth leaders. It is an event of great significance to all of us who value the well-tried system of parliamentary government.

De Montfort's Parliament of 1265 was particularly important because it was the first known occasion when representatives from the "communities of the realm," both the towns and the country, had been called to attend together. It may be regarded as the nucleus of the "Commons," and set a precedent for the future development of a popularly elected and representative House.

Ontario's interest in these celebrations is vital, Mr. Speaker, since our own legislative assembly, a provincial Parliament is a direct lineal descendant of the "Mother of Parliaments" at Westminster.

Our province was first established in 1791 as a result of the passing of The Constitutional Act in that year. Named "Upper Canada," provision had been made for a provincial Parliament and members of the legislative assembly were duly elected following the arrival of our first Lieutenant-Governor, John Graves Simcoe, in 1792. The legislative and executive councils were appointed, and the first session of the provincial Parliament took place at Niagara and was opened on September 17, 1792.

Colonel Simcoe, a distinguished soldier, was also an experienced parliamentarian, having represented a Cornish constituency in the British House of Commons. He was familiar with the British parliamentary system and did much to establish its essential features here in Upper Canada. All freedoms and privileges of Parliament, for which English parliamentarians had fought for so long, were transferred to our provincial Parliament, and provided a strong foundation from which our present system of government has evolved.

In recognition of these important celebrations, a special congratulatory message has been sent from the legislative assembly of Ontario to the House of Commons, to mark the occasion. In addition a permanent exhibit of documents and other historical material is being collected and will ultimately be displayed in our main Parliament building.

We consider it highly appropriate that Ontario should make its own contribution in connection with the important events taking place today in London. The benefits of parliamentary government are manifold, and are appreciated by all the nations of the world using this system. Despite its imperfections, no better substitute has yet been found. We may do well, Mr. Speaker, on this occasion to recall the words of that outstanding British parliamentarian and statesman, Benjamin Disraeli, who said:

Without parliamentary connection parliamentary government would be impossible; it would be at the same time the weakest and most corrupt in the world.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the hon. Provincial Treasurer. It has been submitted to him.

Would the hon. Provincial Treasurer please advise what were the findings of the inquiry ordered by Mr. Tupper Bigelow into the Ontario racing commission with regard to suspended racing drivers?

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not know about this question until 10.25, at which time I was at a Treasury board meeting and so was not able to get the information for the hon. member this morning.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, seeing that the hon. Minister of Highways is answering questions for the hon. Minister of Agriculture—are you?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will try.

Mr. Sargent: Would the hon. Minister please advise what steps are being taken to assist farmers in the drought areas of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member, I should say to him and to the House that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is unable to be in his seat today because he is fulfilling a previous engagement. It is my understanding, while I am not in a position to go into great detail, that he will be addressing a gathering in Arnprior today and will be commenting—I think it is fair to say, making statements—on the subject matter of the question of the hon. member.

An hon. member: He told us about—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He has done that already, that is true, and he was right.

Hon. I. Haskett (Minister of Transport): Before the orders of the day I would like to make a brief announcement. You may recall that about a month ago I had the pleasure of introducing to the House a group of visiting fellow legislators from the state of Michigan, who were studying methods and seeking the best possible way of indemnifying victims of motor vehicle accidents. Subsequent to their visit here, senior officials of our department attended, as witnesses, before the Michigan state Senate judiciary committee.

Hon. members will be proud and happy to learn that, largely as a result of these two visits, the Michigan Senate has approved legislation that is patterned after Ontario's Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before you proceed with the orders of the day, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister if he plans to table answers to questions 26 and 115 on the order paper?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that before we are completed here I will be able to answer practically all the questions. There was one put on the order paper in the last four or five days which might be a little difficult timewise, but the machinery is in motion and I hope to have those answers before we are finished here today.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether the private members' resolutions will be debated during this session? There are a number on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to call any of them. When we complete this present debate it is my intention that the House would rise.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order. Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you at this late time in the current session I will not make any lengthy remarks. However I did not want to let this occasion pass without adding my own congratulations to those that have already been uttered in respect to the way in which you conduct the business of this Legislature—with dignity, with courtesy and with great credit to yourself and the riding from which you come.

Before dealing with other subject matter, I would like to advise hon. members of the Legislature that the hon. member for Hastings West (Mr. Sandercock), who we all regret has been ill, is having an operation today in Belleville general hospital. I am sure that the good wishes of all the hon. members of this Legislature will go to our hon. colleague and we all wish for him a most speedy recovery.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whitney: One of my reasons for wishing to make a few remarks is the fact that I happened to have the honour to serve on the select committee dealing with municipal affairs, and it just so happened when the report of that committee was discussed I was unable to be present in the House. I do want to mention my personal appreciation of the work of the chairman of that committee, and also our great appreciation to those people—familiar with municipal matters as they were, whether from the level of municipal councils, boards, commissions, or in many other capacities—who came before us and expressed their views. I am sure it is heartening to any government body or to any committee when the people do come forward and of their great experience tell us of that experience and thereby give us ideas with which to carry out our task and make recommendations to the government of Ontario.

I would like to comment briefly on the report of this committee, namely, in respect to suggestions regarding regional government. I would say that we should pay great tribute to those early settlers and legislators of our province who established the county system as they did. I can think of certain counties, perhaps particularly counties such as Prince Edward—which by itself constitutes a fair economic area—and other nearby counties such as Hastings, Lennox and Addington, also Frontenac.

These three counties, and probably others, were established in such a way that along the waterfront there was an area where a town or village was established at or near the mouth of a river or stream. Logs could be cut in the north and floated down the river, creating an industry and employment for both those living in the north and south. Also, near the waterfront there was good land which could be developed for agriculture. In point of fact, there was an economic unit; the resources to the north, the agriculture for the supply of foods, and the lumbering and manufacturing industries along the waterfront, the products of which could be shipped out by water.

However, those conditions have changed. Manufacturing increased; the towns and villages grew and many of them became cities and separated towns. The result was that the timber from the north disappeared and people pursued various different interests. Of course, there were not the same mutual interests as when the resources of the north and the production of food and products of the industry to the south all contributed together to provide an adequate economy for all of the people.

In this present day and age, we have seen the expansion of cities and towns so that they have separate governments. Sometimes the industrial enterprises are located in a city or town, and many of the people working in those industries reside in rural areas which are faced with the cost of providing local municipal services without receiving in return any of the municipal taxes paid by the industries. In this day and age there have been difficulties; there have been inequalities; there have been annexations and there have been hard feelings as a result; there has been competition where there should have been co-operation.

We feel that it is in the best interests of the people of this province that a good hard look be taken at all of these local conditions and that people of goodwill be persuaded to consider these things themselves. Our ancestors had enough courage to establish units of government to serve the people and we believe that the people of Ontario in this day and age, as required and where necessary, will give study to the adjustment of local government units in a way that will best serve their interests. We do believe that by so doing, the people of this province will assist themselves, and where, of course, industry does not have a great effect on local living conditions as it does in other areas, both rural and urban, or perhaps we will say large areas of scanty population, we do believe that this policy would enable the government to provide greater assistance where needed, thereby helping to equalize the opportunities for all people throughout Ontario.

I would like to continue my remarks by speaking of our local parks in Prince Edward county, namely, the Outlet Beach park and the Sandbanks park which are now being developed. I might say that the Outlet Beach park has performed a magnificent service; it is well attended and I believe that on Sunday last, according to CJBQ radio in Belleville, there were some 5,000 visitors to this park. It was formed of sand dunes and its magnificent beach is used for swimming, camping and so on.

There are those who criticize the fact that it was not left in its natural state, and there are those who feel that by being put to park use, some of the natural condition was lost and that sand was being lost. They did not have too much to say publicly about this until the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts) proposed to establish the Sandbanks park, which is also composed of sand dunes some five miles in length and of which there is a corresponding five miles or more of beach on the West Lake side.

Truly these are magnificent natural assets to be enjoyed by the people of this province, and I certainly do appreciate the determination of the department to develop them and make available to our people the pleasures that may be derived by the people who visit them and camp there.

However, a year ago, when the Sandbanks park was proposed, Dr. Pimlott and a group of people, belonging to a conservation or naturalist association, came to Prince Edward county. They walked across the dunes of the proposed Sandbanks park and had pictures taken which appeared in a Toronto newspaper. They were very critical of this proposal, stating that a great deal in natural benefits which should be preserved would be lost by the general public, and, in point of fact, attempting to urge all possible public support against the proposal of developing this park.

Again this year, before our committee dealing with conservation, and so on, Dr. Pimlott appeared and made much the same argument. At this time, the hon. Minister presented some argument against his statements and I added to the hon. Minister's remarks, but the newspapers gave very little acknowledgment, if any, to what our hon. Minister said and no acknowledgment whatever to what I said.

I feel, in all honesty, that both sides of these stories should be told. Consequently, I obtained some statistical information from the Tweed office of The Department of Lands and Forests. I would like to compare some of the statements made by Dr. Pimlott with the facts as presented by The Department of Lands and Forests, and I think the people should be allowed to judge as to which is true conservation—that being carried on by our own department, or that suggested by someone who casually walks across a property and who appears to be totally unfamiliar with what has been done over the years.

I would say that in regard to the Outlet Beach park, Dr. Pimlott is quoted by the Globe and Mail as follows:

I camped there two years ago. The only signs were those that warned of fire. There was not a single sign which suggested to the campers that dunes are fragile things and that digging in stabilized dunes can be extremely injurious to the plant community and to the dunes. In addition, the integrity of the area was being destroyed by the planting of exotic species and by the massive trampling of the fore dunes.

In point of fact, when the Outlet Beach development first started, the chief growth there was poison ivy. That poison ivy had to be destroyed before the area could be developed. Some areas where there was natural plant life and so on were not developed for the use of the public. Also, there is a directive issued to everyone who camps in that park and Dr. Pimlott must have received it the same as anyone else.

Here are some of the directives contained in that pamphlet:

Sand is a wonderful attribute to bathing and romping feet; however, owing to the constant threat of shifting sand interfering with the movement of road traffic and parking lot facilities, we ask that you help preserve all vegetation that is so important a factor in controlling sand movement. A step taken aside will preserve for tomorrow a tree that nature, or a man with a spade, provided today.

We might also say sand-crossing steps have been provided, which encourage people to walk over these steps. These are marked, and there are a number of them which encourage people to just walk over the dunes in specified places. I can assure you, in my visits to the parks, it appears that this is being done.

In regard to the Sandbanks, reference has been made to leaving it in its natural state. Dr. Pimlott does not appear to realize that anything has been done in these parks. Since 1921, when The Department of Lands and Forests first assumed control of the Sandbanks, which Dr. Pimlott said should be left in its natural state, a total of 2,100,000 trees have been planted in the southern section where sand movement was threatening adjacent private land.

In conjunction with this reforestation, the sand was first mulched with straw or hay, following which several thousand feet of various types of fencing was erected to protect the planted areas from wind erosion.

Second, in regard to the Outlet Park, since 1958 the department has mulched this with hay and straw and planted a total of 103,000 trees. The pamphlet notes:

Placed over 25 sets of dune-crossing steps made from slats and old fire hose in key dune-crossing areas adjacent to the Lake Ontario beach. These dune-crossing steps make it much more convenient for people walking over the sand dunes and lessens disturbance and trampling of vegetation. Maintained during the past three seasons, from fall to spring, over one mile of double-spaced snow fencing on the Lake Ontario beach, which has helped considerably in cutting down wind velocity and sand drift. Have stressed in our Outlet Park hand-out pamphlet over the past six years the importance of preserving park vegetation to help control sand movement.

So I would say, Mr. Speaker, that rather than the promotion of these parks being in opposition to conservation, my belief is that they support conservation. This sand would be drifting from there had it not been for the work and the snow-fencing that The Department of Lands and Forests has done.

I know that it is the intention of The Department of Lands and Forests to preserve some parts of the Sandbanks in their natural state where desirable, and yet at the same time make other areas available for the people of Ontario to enjoy.

Therefore, it rather irks me when one side of the story receives publicity. The pictures are repeated; the same pictures are again published this year as were there last year. But the other side of the story gets no publicity, and I think it is time that The Department of Lands and Forests received credit for what it has done, rather than such statements as this. We can appreciate people having different views, but we do believe that there are a lot of facts to support the opposite position. That is what I am trying to outline at the present time.

By the same token, we do have some instances where we feel that statements in the press and elsewhere in regard to agriculture do not present as accurate a picture as they should. We feel that one side of the story does not get told to the general public. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve) gave a very excellent speech on agriculture here a few weeks ago. We saw no recognition of it whatsoever in the press.

In line with this remark, I would like to point out that two or three months ago the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation presented a programme on Country Calendar entitled "The Farmers' Image." I wrote to the CBC and the producer, Mr. Murray Creed, was kind enough to forward me a copy of the script from that programme. Here is something that I would like to call to the attention of the hon. members of the Legislature, namely, that many people may feel that the farm people are not doing a good job. It would seem, in a portion of the press at least, anything that would promote that idea is given considerable publicity; whereas there does not seem to be too much that tells the true story of what the farmer is endeavouring to do and the difficulties he has in carrying on farm operations.

However, strangely enough, these reports in the press do not seem to have too much effect on public opinion, because in the late summer of 1964 an organization known as MRC, or Market Research Centre Limited, called on its field staff of over 1,000 qualified interviewers to discover the true urban image of the farmer. Fifty preliminary interviews of a cross-section of city dwellers from coast to coast set the pattern approach for a further 500. The results were analyzed, causing considerable surprise.

Then a further survey of a second set of 500 cross-Canada interviews functioned as a check on the unexpected results. All three sets of interviews brought identical findings. These findings were analyzed with the aid of electronic computers, and interpreted by MRC's staff of experts in sociology, psychology, statistics and economics. The following quotations are from this report:

Eighty-nine per cent of the city dwellers reported to us that they felt that the farmer is harder working than the city dweller himself—a very surprising finding and very different from what some of the farmers themselves had thought. Then we went ahead to talk to them about government support for farmers. It was very interesting; 65 per cent of the city dwellers reported that the government does indeed give the farmer either some support or a great amount of support.

When we went ahead and asked them how much support the government should give the farmer 80 per cent of the city dwellers reported that the farmers should be given a great deal of support.

And why should they be given this support? Because as the farmer goes, so goes the nation. This was the thinking behind the average city dweller's belief that the farmer indeed should be given subsidies. We then went ahead to discuss the question of what contribution the farmer is making toward our Canadian growth and prosperity. Sixty per cent of the urban dwellers felt that the farmer is making a very important contribution to the Canadian economy. A very different and surprising finding in contrast to what the farmers themselves have believed.

For example, 18 per cent of the urban dwellers did think that the farmer was paying less taxes than the city dweller. We then discovered that 72 per cent of the urban dwellers felt that the farmer earns less than the urban dweller and that is why he pays less taxes. Surprisingly enough 80 per cent believed that the farmer is a better citizen than the city dweller and only some four per cent or five per cent felt that the city dweller was a better citizen.

I mention these things because sometimes I feel that perhaps newspaper reporters look at things and write as they feel the policy of the newspaper's editorial staff would indicate. It seems to me, sir, that perhaps when the papers send out someone to write on farm conditions, they should send someone who has some sympathetic knowledge and understanding of farm problems, not someone who has in the background a desire to look at some of these things with the jaundiced eye prevalent at the editorial level.

I do feel that here we have people who, faced with drought and with many adverse conditions, do everything possible, nevertheless, to help themselves. We know of farmers who of necessity work at other occupations in what is known as "moonlighting." Sometimes their wives, according to qualification, teach school, nurse, or engage in other work, but nevertheless it is with the objective of preserving their farm and home under difficult conditions so that when the time comes that they can no longer work, or when they can afford to do so, they will be no charge on the people of Ontario.

Sometimes, true, their homes do not look attractive and perhaps they have what appears to be rubbish in the back yard, but it may be fuel that could be used in the late spring or early fall. The true story behind some of these conditions is not apparent to the average city dweller who views these things. I do feel that instead of criticizing these people who have done so much to develop this country, and support themselves, others should look on them with a more sympathetic eye. I am very happy indeed that the CBC programme illustrated that many urban people do look with this sympathetic view and are not led astray by many of the viewpoints expressed in newspapers.

I would like to say also that sometimes these things carry over into other matters such as government policies, and I want to mention briefly the Budget. I have heard it said that—and I think it is rather a contradictory statement—"the fondest recollections are the memories of things long since forgotten." I think perhaps that sometimes in the past some of the remarks that have been made concerning provincial budgets are remarks that the sources from which they come would like to be forgotten. In fact when they are not forgotten, they are not always recalled very sweetly.

I would mention that in the old days the late member for Brant, whom we respected so much, could not conceive of the fact that progress was taking place and Ontario was progressing to the point where our debt should be as high as it was. He really felt that we were on the verge of bankruptcy. We honour him for his opinions and believe that he acted in good faith and according to his conscience.

Then we had a former leader of the Opposition who suggested contra-cyclical budgeting. His suggestion was that we were reaping a great deal because of good times and therefore we should tax for a lot more so that we would have a fund built up to stimulate the economy when the buoyance decreased. The good times, however, have continued in many ways. The revenue of the province has continually increased and therefore we feel that that policy has fallen by the wayside.

Then again we have heard of "cooking the books." I would not want to make any suggestions, but we just wonder if that was not a "half-baked" idea too. The economy of the province, under present policy and the present government in Ontario has been strong and has meant steady progress without looking back.

In conclusion, I do feel that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the government of this province are making a great contribution to the people.

I would say that everything can be criticized, and as our hon. Prime Minister and other hon. Ministers have said: "We do not say that any legislation or anything that we propose is the ultimate. Rather it is a progression." I believe that our progression is in good hands and that nothing is being done that will jeopardize our position of sound financial standing, that is encouraging industry and expansion in this province and at the same time permitting progress to be made in regard to welfare measures and supplying the needs of our people.

I will conclude my address with a quotation made by the late Theodore Roosevelt, a former President of the United States. He said:

It is not the critic who counts, not the man who points out how the strong man stumbled or where the doer of deeds could have done them better. The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena; whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again; who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions; who spends himself in a worthy cause; who at the best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement; and who, at the worst, if he fails, fails while daring greatly.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, we are coming to the end of a very long and very talkative session and I suppose, as the man who just spoke, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Whitney), has said, I suppose it does not behoove us to make long speeches at a time like this. At the same time there are some things that perhaps should be said, and in reviewing this session as a fairly new member in the Legislature, I want to make a few observations.

I do want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have appreciated the kindly smile on your face when you have been trying to smack us down from time to time. You have carried out your job with dignity and aplomb, and though we quarrelled with some of your decisions here and there, we realize that what you have done has been in real sincerity and we believe that you have done an outstanding piece of work here.

I would recommend to you, sir, that a stronger chairmanship should perhaps be looked into at the committee level and this might solve some of the problems which this House has faced over the past year.

We have gone through a tremendous amount of business. A province like Ontario just cannot expect to operate today on the kind of basis which we operated on 20 or 30 or even ten years ago. This province is larger now, in population and in wealth, than Canada itself was not too many years past. So I think we have to face the fact that the business of this House must be ordered and must be planned in a more rational way than we have done up to the present time.

During this past session we have seen a sort of hit-and-miss approach, which we in this party have criticized from time to time. We have seen very important legislation come in very late in the session and we have seen the kind of legislation, such as Medicare, which has universal appeal and universal interest, introduced almost the dying part of this session of the Legislature.

This should not be. I think over the next few years we should think in terms of the Legislature being a year-round proposition. For a long time this group has been advocating that we should think of longer sessions than the ones we have carried out, and I think this year has demonstrated the absolute necessity of this thesis.

So, Mr. Speaker, it would seem logical that we start to plan for the year as parliamentarians; that we think in terms of the winter session with a fairly lengthy recess at Easter; that we think in terms of a summer recess, of a fall session and a fairly long Christmas recess. As we think of that kind of timing we must order the business of this House in a rational way. Legislation should be prepared so that the Ministers concerned will introduce that legislation as early in the session as is humanly possible. That will give an opportunity, first of all, to the government caucus to scrutinize it. This year, the government caucus was meeting very late in the session to look over very important legislation. This should not be, and that legislation should be prepared as early as possible in the session.

More than that, in addition to giving the government caucus a chance to look at it, it also gives the caucuses of the other parties an opportunity to study this legislation carefully. It should go to the committees of the House as early as possible, and as many pieces of legislation as possible should go to those committees. There is a great deal of public interest in many of these measures, and if we want to mobilize public opinion behind them—or in the case of the Opposition, perhaps against certain features—and this is democracy—then time should be given to do this job.

With the committees meeting as early as possible and the legislation in hand as early as possible, we can move forward to do the kind of business which this House ought to do—the careful, detailed study and assessment, and the careful, detailed discussion of the clauses and of the general principles of the legislation.

I think one thing which has struck me this year, Mr. Speaker, is that the more leisurely pace of this session has been good and if we combine that more leisurely pace with the advance planning and with the kind of programme which I have outlined, I think we will be well on the way to doing a good job for this province in the future.

This has been a year of talk and a year of revelation in this province, a year when we have come face to face with many of the problems of the people of Ontario. The dry season again this year accentuates the problems we have with the Great Lakes levels and with the agricultural industry. Some of us were privileged to hear Mr. Kierans, the engineer from Sudbury, as he outlined his plan for the grand canal scheme to bring certain waters from the north down to solve part of our problems. Whether or not the Almighty is going to solve this problem before this kind of planning can get off the drawing board, I do not know. But if this happens, it is only going to be a temporary solution.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): You put more faith in Him than the government.

Mr. Young: It seems to me that this is the kind of challenging venture that this province ought to be undertaking and that we ought to look forward to stabilizing our resources in the lakes and rivers by the use of other resources which can be spent and used again, according to the Kierans report. It just seems that this is the imaginative kind of thing which we can address ourselves to, and if the water is not needed, the solution is there for that, too. But in a time of drought, we have this solution and we can do the job.

Over this last year, according to the economic surveys, the gross national product of this nation has risen remarkably—about nine per cent, if I remember. At least, across the nation, our gross national product has gone up by about $4 billion. This is a remarkable increase and I suppose certain government hon. members would say, "Well, that is because of good government." We give them the opportunity to say that if they want to, but the fact remains that this has been brought about right across the country, and it is a Canada-wide phenomenon, so that even places that do not have Tory governments are sharing in this prosperity.

Two things perhaps have contributed to this more than anything else. One is the sale of our surplus wheat to the communist world, and even though we do not like communist and sometimes look askance at trade with the East, we do find that the buying of our wheat has pumped purchasing power into our economy here and brought that purchasing power to the farmers and the railway workers, and has spread itself right across the board.

We also have the tremendous pressure of the baby boom from right after the war, which is now pushing and forcing us to build and to develop in the housing field, the educational field, all the fields across this nation, to prepare for this burgeoning new crop of young people who are now hitting the universities and who will be looking for homes, and are in fact, looking for homes right now, as this generation grows.

These are factors in the economy which likely will continue for some time. We do not know about the purchases of wheat, but we do know that this generation is here and it is going to demand services whether we plan to give them in a logical way or not.

In spite of this increase of wealth, an increase which I suppose averaged last year about $1,000 per Canadian family—we have about four million Canadian families and we had an increase of around $4 billion—that increased wealth, I am afraid, is not being spread around as it ought to be, Mr. Speaker. One of the significant revelations which occurred in this House was the matter of widespread poverty which still exists in the province of Ontario.

During the early part of this session, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) pointed out that according to recent studies there are 700,000 people, over 11 per cent, living in destitution, more than one million people, over 19 per cent, living in poverty or destitution, and two million people, over 32 per cent, living in deprivation, poverty or destitution. The immediate reaction, of course, was one of derision from the government benches and I remember that derision vividly from my left. But then later, both the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) and the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) gave us some details of this destitution and we were told that 17 per cent of Ontario's civil servants were in receipt of less than $3,000 a year and a further 18 per cent less than $3,600 a year. More than a third of the provincial government's employees are earning so little that they are eligible for a subsidy on their medical insurance.

Then we saw the hon. Minister of Health make that startling revelation, that one million of the people of this province are eligible for total subsidy in the health plan because they pay no income tax whatsoever, and that another 800,000 are eligible for partial help, meaning that we have a tremendous backlog of poverty and want in what should be one of the most prosperous provinces in the land.

Along with this revelation of figures, in the civil service particularly, came the revelation of the loss of efficiency and morale within many provincial institutions. We found that Mercer, for example, cannot find a new superintendent because this is not the kind of job and the kind of situation which is challenging to the kind of person who is needed and demanded in that position. Many of our other institutions in the reforms field are having the same difficulty to secure top staff and hold adequate staff within their institutions.

We saw, too, how some of the employees of our institutions came right here to Queen's Park and marched up and down and around and about in front of the doors in order to bring to this government and the people of this province their desperate plight of low wages and lack of proper fringe benefits. I think when that situation arises within a province like Ontario, then we should be asking ourselves very serious questions about the adequacy of our treatment of our own civil service.

It is all right to give our people who work for us a pat on the back—and I am one who would say that these people, in spite of the situation, are doing a good job within the limitations set for them. Our civil service perhaps deserves a tremendous pat on the back, and the hon. Cabinet Ministers who have rushed to their defence and have said that we were criticizing the civil service were just whistling against the wind because we were not criticizing these people as people. The fact is that we would like to see within this province a wage scale and salary scale which will demand the abilities and the training which these jobs ought to have, so that we can get the people to do the job. There is no question that it is an extremely expensive business to pay too low wages and get inefficiency within our civil service. So within the next year or so I hope that the hon. Provincial Treasurer and other people concerned with him will meet these people realistically and will do the job that ought to be done in this field.

We have seen in this House over this past session the passing of legislation, as I said on one other occasion, with the Opposition blindfolded. We have seen the introduction of community colleges, to use one example. We are not sure where these colleges are going;

just what their function is within the educational framework; and whether they are to be terminal facilities or whether they will be part and parcel of an on-going university structure. This has not been determined and perhaps all the details cannot at this time be determined, but it seems to me after the study and the experience that has gone into this type of institution we should know more clearly where we are heading as we set these colleges up.

On the Medicare plan, as has been said so often within this House, and I do not want to repeat it today, the Opposition here—perhaps the government members too, I do not know—have been voting blind because we have no idea what this plan is going to cost and what the total picture involves. So we have passed, and this government has rammed through, a Medicare plan which is inadequate and which is now catching the imagination of the people adversely because they are now commencing to understand what it all means.

After probe, after probe, after probe we have discovered the weaknesses of this plan; and the people of this province are just now realizing that it is not, as the hon. Minister himself has said, a Medicare plan but only a step toward something better. But when we realize that another province, without the resources of this one, can set up a Medicare plan which can adequately serve the people of that province, then Ontario should be hanging its head in shame.

We have seen, too, a government which has passed legislation demanded by a certain section of the population; legislation which is not generally needed, in my view. We saw the situation where the threatened hospital board refused to negotiate with its union. The government, instead of moving in and saying: "You must negotiate in good faith," because of a breakdown of the situation there, rammed through this House compulsory arbitration for all hospitals because of the intransigence of that one board.

We saw later, in the Toronto Hydro situation, where the government—in spite of the fact my leader (Mr. MacDonald) had taken steps and worked with the union and others to bring about what seemed to be a logical conclusion to this problem; in spite of that fact and because the Hydro board refused to accept what seemed to be a logical conclusion in this dispute—again rammed through compulsory arbitration. In this picture I must say that the official Opposition party here played a rather sorry role—having made up its mind that it would vote for the bill. Then the leader of that party used very violent and very unfair words against the leader of my party because he had stepped in and had tried to find the solution. It was wide open for the hon. leader of the Opposition, if he had so desired, to get in and do the same kind of mediating work to settle this dispute and to bring before this House a practical solution to it.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member suggests that I had made up my mind that I was going to vote for the bill. This, sir, shows some kind of insight that he had which I did not have. What we wanted was to have the facts of the case presented to us; then, having got the facts, as a responsible Opposition we would make our decision. That is exactly what we did.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Speaker, we accept the hon. leader's assertion that his insight into this situation was minimal and that he was not exactly clear on what he expected to do when he came into this House. We accept his word that he had not yet made up his mind.

Now, in a position like this, if a responsible leader of a party and a responsible party comes right down to the last minute not knowing what it is going to do in a situation like this, then there is something drastically wrong.

I was very interested in this morning's press, Mr. Speaker, to learn when a friend of his—Mr. Martin P. O'Connell, I understand it was—was nominated last night in some New Democratic territory, which he is now invading with some hope that he can win in that area—

Mr. Thompson: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: He had the hope, I said. There is going to be a little bit of disillusionment for Mr. O'Connell a little later on. But it was interesting to note that Mr. O'Connell had headed up, according to the morning paper, a squad of 150 researchers who have been helping the leader and others to get their speeches together. Well, this is good. I am delighted to see volunteers of this calibre who are doing a job, but it seems to me with 150 researchers this party should have had a little more stability through the session and have shown a little more dynamism and a little more leadership throughout the whole time.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Maybe the researchers did not agree with each other.

Mr. Young: Well, that is the situation. I think one thing has been made plain in that party, that one Charles Templeton has now been relegated to his proper place. I do not know just where he is now—we have not heard of him lately—but not being at the leader's side yet, we are just wondering where that gentleman is. However, if he is coming back, fine; this is all to the good, I suppose, as far as the party is concerned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having taken that little sideswipe here, I come back to the main basis of this speech, and I want to direct our attention for a few minutes to a very important report which has just been tabled in this House. Unfortunately I was away last week on an assignment which I had to undertake, but the Goldenberg report was tabled and I had a chance to look into it to some extent, and I have not been too impressed by its recommendations.

It seems to me that this report is simply an abortion of the possibilities for the area. It does not set out in clear detail what the possibilities of growth and development can be for Metropolitan Toronto, and it stops short of giving the kind of lead and the kind of framework within which the area can grow over the next two or three decades.

I think, for example, of the boundaries which it outlines. Now I was frankly disappointed when he outlined the boundaries of present Metro. I know that he talked something of an extension northward if that is necessary. I can see where his argument stands up east and west. Because to the east, that area might well be part of a regional government centred on Oshawa. On the west, it might well be another regional government. But to the north, for the life of me I cannot understand why, at this stage, Mr. Goldenberg has not recommended that the boundaries be pushed up to include the railway line which is a vital part of a planning area of Metro and to the watershed, which is going to be vitally affected by the sewer and the water complex in the whole of Metropolitan Toronto. It is just unrealistic to think we can plan effectively in that kind of a situation.

As far as the new city complex is concerned, it is simply Toronto-centred. I think the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Sargent) might applaud a bit here, when I mention this fact. The Smallwood report, issued three years ago, says this on page 29:

A similar, although not as dramatic, imbalance has become apparent with respect to the city's position. Whereas in 1953 the city had to be given half the council seats on the ground that it contained 57 per cent of the area's total population, by 1961 the city had dropped to 40 per cent of the area's total population and yet it still retained its 12 council seats.

Well now, what has happened? As far as Mr. Goldenberg is concerned, he has simply increased the size of the city of Toronto so that it again has half the population, and then he has cut off the other three cities and combined the smaller municipalities into those cities. But the same imbalance will remain in the days to come. He may redress it to some extent now, but that imbalance is still there potentially. The Smallwood report again says:

Any governmental federation must depend upon a meaningful degree of co-operative action between its component members if it is to realize its full potential. Yet the prospect for such co-operation can be diminished significantly if these members are separated by fundamental disparities and basic resources especially in the economic sphere. If this imbalance is overly drastic it tends to act as a cancer which can spread throughout the entire body politic, weakening the unity of the federal government and inhibiting its ability to act decisively.

In this case he applies this to the Metro government, of course. Then he shows something of that imbalance. The fact is that the new situation in Metro is better than it was before. The taxable assessment per capita in 1964 in these areas of Toronto, North York, Etobicoke and Scarborough is as follows: In Toronto an assessment per capita of $2,786; North York, $2,568; Etobicoke, $2,563; and in Scarborough, $1,969.

This means that an attempt has been made in three of the new cities to bring the per capita assessment into something near balance, but Scarborough is left away out on a limb in this regard. To make this picture complete we have to recognize that Scarborough particularly is a dormitory township with many large families. The Smallwood report points out that the assessment per pupil enrolled in public schools for the new city of Toronto will be $23,700. For the Etobicoke city it will be $17,000; for North York, the new city, $15,000; and for Scarborough $9,600. So that the imbalance of assessment per pupil enrolled in public schools remains.

I know that Mr. Goldenberg made some attempt, by a hodge-podge of school boards, and school board jurisdictions, to right this balance, but that is another story. He just cannot do it with these recommendations.

When we look at the burgeoning population of these new cities, the new city of Toronto is the central core. Its growth will be upward. There will be apartment redevelopment, I suppose, so the population will grow. But in the outer suburbs, with great areas of vacant land, the population will burgeon over the years to come and thousands upon thousands of people every year will be added until, within the next few years, the imbalance again will be something akin to what it is today.

So this kind of report, establishing the four-city complex with each one semi-independent, will not do the job that should be done. I appreciated the recommendation of the Goldenberg report that planning ought to be on a comprehensive scale; that there should be an official plan for the whole area in a hurry. Metro Toronto has been playing with this for a long time and we still do not have an official plan for the area. Also, he recommended that district plans should fit into this Metro plan. This is a consummation that must come very quickly if proper planning is to be done. But then he separates some of the planning devices from the Metro government, the Toronto transportation commission, for example.

Transport and rapid transit are as important a function in a metropolitan complex as the trunk sewers and the trunk water mains and the trunk streets. So transportation should be a vital part of planning. Transportation should be planned for the new subdivisions and the people who move into those subdivisions should know where the transport is; it should be there for them. This means that the suburbanite will get used to using public transit rather than his own motor car for much of his travel. In this way, transit becomes part of the warp and woof of a whole area.

Instead of simply putting the chairman of Metro Toronto on the TTC board, it would seem to me far more reasonable and sensible to make the Toronto transit commission a committee of the Metro government. Then it is part and parcel of the planning of the whole development of the area and its servicing.

In another respect, he has given the Ontario housing corporation almost complete control of housing development, that is low cost housing development, within the Metro area. This may be the only logical step at this moment, I do not know. I want to look into this thing a little more carefully, but again we come to the planning aspect of this matter. Ontario housing is undertaking to buy and to build housing for problem cases, large families and low income people. But if they are to plan efficiently as to where these houses ought to be in Metro, then they should be part and parcel of a planning process of the metropolitan complex. The Ontario housing authority is not part of the Metro government. So while there may be very close co-operation—and certainly the hon. Minister (Mr. Randall), I think, will see to it that there is—the fact is that these municipalities will drag their feet as they have in the past when it comes to low cost housing within their borders, because these kind of houses do not bring good assessment.

So when the hon. Minister and Ontario housing present plans, all kinds of road blocks will be put in their way, as there have been in the past. The hon. Minister is going to have a tough job to use all his good nature and all his persuasive power to get the houses where they ought to be, not just where he can find a bit of land and where, finally, he can bulldoze the individual city to accept them.

One other point which is serious in this matter of imbalance is industry and industrial development: I do not think any of us are naive enough to think that industry is going to be planned properly in an area where you have four municipalities fighting for industrial assessment. Industry does not demand schools and many other services. So the fight has always been on, right across this province and right across this land, to bring industrial assessment within the bounds of the municipalities. So each municipality has its own commissioner of industry, or whatever you want to call him, it has its committee and they try to get industry to locate within their borders.

This will continue, and instead of industry being located within the Metro complex where it ought to be and the housing spotted in relation to that industry, we are going to find the same old struggle for industrial assessment. North York, Etobicoke, Scarborough and Toronto fight for assessment and send their emissaries out to talk to industrialists who are thinking of setting up plants and put before them the importance of coming into this municipality, rather than another. The overall planning of industrial assessment and overall planning of the housing related to that assessment is going to be a very difficult thing.

When I look at the education setup, I see that it is perhaps the one place where Mr. Goldenberg made a real attempt to overcome this imbalance and this problem of a struggle. He says, as far as education is concerned, that taxes are going to go into a single treasury and out of that treasury, as far as I can understand it from the quick reading I have made. Then they are going to go back to the 11 various boards which are going to be set up, and those 11 boards will have no relationship whatsoever to the municipal boundaries.

One of the first problems that comes to the mind of an active politician, and I see the problem in Scarborough as well as other places, is how are elections going to be conducted for the board of education? There are going to have to be two sets of election officials. There will have to be two sets of ballot boxes. In other words, there are going to be two separate election organizations for the municipalities and for the school districts.

As if this is not bad enough, when we look at what is happening clear across the board on this matter of political divisions, then we become appalled. The province is dividing up Metro into various provincial ridings. Last week we had the announcement that the federal government is carving up Metro in another way, without regard whatsoever, it seems, to the provincial boundaries. Now the proposal is that we are going to have a municipal boundary of one kind for the purposes of electing aldermen or councillors, we are going to have another setup for the purpose of electing Metro councillors, and we are going to have another setup still in the matter of boards of education.

What the poor citizen, who has to make his choice, is going to do here, I just do not know. It is going to be a bewildering array of choices which he must make in a jigsaw puzzle of overlapping and overriding jurisdictions. What Mr. Goldenberg did was solve the electoral problem of the city of Toronto as far as council is concerned, and he carved it out and he said for each ward, "We will have a councillor and a member of the metropolitan council." But then having solved that problem, he compounded the problem in North York and Scarborough and Etobicoke by saying, "We are going to have so many wards in each and then we are going to divide it up so that the Metro councillor is elected over two wards."

In my own municipality of North York, just a year ago, we raised the number of wards for efficient government from eight to 12. Now we are going back on the eight-ward system, with two members in each ward. I think the experience with two members in each ward led Mr. Goldenberg to say, "In the city of Toronto we don't like it." But he is going to give it to the suburbs.

Why? And then he is going to say, "You two get together and elect your representative on Metro."

And then in education, we have a completely different setup.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that what is needed here is a different approach. Mr. Goldenberg has gone a little distance along the road to a solution. But the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts chaired by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Beckett) has done a far better job in outlining the direction which a solution of this kind ought to take. There is no question that if this is to be the pattern for new regional governments, then the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner) is going to be in real trouble in Ontario. In my opinion, at least, keyed to a new system of regional metropolitan government, call it what you will, his is the one treasury concept where all the income from industry and the property assessment and the business tax flows into the one treasury.

It seems to me more than four boroughs of equal size, or more or less equal size, should be carved out—more than four, at least five. Those boroughs, within their own powers, would draw up their budgets and submit them to the central council, and that central council would then deal with the budgets and would send word back to the boroughs that "This year your budget is so-and-so; you have made a good case for sidewalks [or sewers or roads]; you can have so much, and then you administer that budget and decide where the sidewalks [or sewers or roads] are going to go within your borough."

This gives ultimate financial autonomy to the local government and the boroughs have the power of detailed administration. This way, they can plan where industry ought to go or where housing ought to go, because it makes no great difference to each of the municipalities, financially, where these installations occur. So the whole area can be looked at as a unit and can be planned as a unit and can move forward as a unit.

But the report falls short of this; it goes part way and makes recommendations and then fails to give that ultimate power to a central authority for doing the job.

I know there are those who think in terms of total amalgamation. I am not one of those. But certainly a total amalgamation might be better than this, and certainly a borough system with a central treasury and with centralized administration, financial power in particular, would be far better able to do the job which has to be done.

Mr. Speaker, I want to move on to one other matter and then I should be fairly well completed with my morning talk. During this past period, we have seen in this province a serious situation emerging in the field of public responsibility and public morality. Yesterday a question was raised in this House regarding a matter which has been much in the newspapers of late—I have a sheaf of clippings here dealing with it—and that is the matter of the expropriation in respect to the University of Toronto.

Over the years, this Legislature has given substantial powers of expropriation to various universities. We have now just passed a bill making the powers uniform, just in this session. This bill gives unlimited powers of expropriation of private property, subject to The Expropriation Procedures Act, to all universities in the province that are supported by public funds. In this group, we do not object to this statute; we believe that universities are performing a vital public function and need the same powers of expropriation as public authorities.

We normally object to delegation of authority by this Legislature where there is no accountability to elected representatives of the people in the exercise of that authority, but in this case we do not object to that feature of the statute. We believe that a wide degree of autonomy is desirable in the case of universities, and that it is not compatible with detailed scrutiny of their activities by the government or the Legislature.

I notice that we have had a new Speaker for the last few minutes. I congratulate him on his achievement and his elevation. We do not know whether this is—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Young: I do not like to disappoint my hon. friend but I doubt if he is going to sit there in the very near future.

At the same time, to continue with what I was saying, we believe that a clear responsibility devolves on universities to exercise the broad powers of expropriation granted to them by statute in a manner that will provide no reasonable ground for suspicion of impropriety. It is with great regret that we are impelled to state that in our opinion the University of Toronto has not met this standard of conduct in expropriation of certain properties on the Streetsville road for the ultimate use of Erindale college, and the controversy that has occurred over this would seem to add to that feeling.

All or most of the properties being expropriated have been built upon. In some cases the buildings are extremely valuable. In fact, in one case a real estate firm has said it is worth $200,000. One of the statements here says that the land in question was bought for about $300,000, for land and building, and it is a fairly large estate.

On the other hand there is in the immediate vicinity a substantial amount of land that has not yet been built upon. I am in no position to state whether or not this vacant land would meet the university's purposes adequately, I do not know. I want to make it clear that I am in no way passing judgment on the merit of the university's choice. What concerns me, and what leads me to raise this matter here, is the procedure the university followed in arriving at this choice.

It retained the services of a company known as Don Mills Development Limited to advise it. This company is part of E. P. Taylor's corporate empire. The vacant land which the university might conceivably have chosen is owned by Erin Mills Developments Limited, of which E. P. Taylor is chairman of the board. It is asking just a little too much of human nature to expect that a company would not possibly be influenced in its recommendations by a consideration of the interests of a sister company in the same corporate empire. This might not happen, but it seems to me this is running into a dangerous situation when this sort of thing occurs.

The university's vice-president in charge of administration is reported in the press to have said that Don Mills Developments Limited performed useful services for the university in the assembly of land for Scarborough college. That was good. This company knows its job and did a good service there. But he is also reported to have stated further that the company made its possible interest quite clear to the university's board of governors before undertaking to give advice regarding the acquisition of land for Erindale college. It made it clear that there was land in the area which was owned by another subsidiary of the same industrial and commercial empire and it wanted that to be known to the board of governors, and so it did its duty.

It is my contention that at that point the board of governors should have thanked the company for its past services and engaged the services of another adviser who could not possibly be considered to have any interest in any of the land in the area concerned, direct or indirect, or any interest whatsoever in the ultimate choice.

It is not good enough for a quasi-public body spending public funds voted by this Legislature, in exercising its expropriation powers under an Act of this Legislature, to act in a way that might be acceptable in the case of a private business, but cannot possibly be regarded as acceptable for a public authority. In a private business the possibility of a conflict of interest is of concern only to the shareholders, but in a public or quasi-public body it is a matter of public concern. Such a body should avoid like the plague even the appearance of such a conflict of interest.

Furthermore, it is to be noted that at least two other members of the board of governors of the university are directors of the same commercial empire concerned, which is the Argus Corporation, which is a holding company for the E. P. Taylor network of companies.

The university owes it to the public to disclose what role, if any, these gentlemen played in the proceedings leading to the expropriation of the properties on the Streetsville road. It may well be that these men declared their interest, and it may well be that they gave the advice that this other company should not be retained to act in the Streetsville situation. If that happened and is on the record it should be made known, so that the public is fully aware of the events which happened.

Another event of the past week which I bring before this Legislature, and which causes me some concern as well as many others, is the item in the Toronto Daily Star of June 16, 1965.

JUDGE ACQUITS EX-MAYOR AFTER TONGUE LASHING

County Judge Colin Bennett today tongue lashed former Orillia mayor Wilbur Cramp as he acquitted him of three municipal corruption charges. "You have seriously violated your public trust by accepting Northern Ontario Natural Gas shares and dealing in them. You had no business whatsoever accepting those shares," said the judge.

Cramp, 56, four times the mayor of Orillia, pleaded not guilty accepting $1,436 worth of NONG stock as a consideration for granting NONG the town's franchise in 1956, blocking a rival firm's bid. As the portly ex-mayor stood blinking and red faced the judge continued: "You did offend the morality of your public office. I have to take this opportunity of condemning what you did in the strongest possible terms. The rule of English law that the accused is entitled to the benefit of the doubt is coming to your rescue. You stuck your neck out and you came very close to getting it chopped off."

In other words, no definite connection between the two events could be proved in the court and the judge was willing to give the defendant the benefit of the doubt, and this has happened in other cases. A present judge of the supreme court was involved in the same kind of activity in another city.

The time is here, I think, when we have to recognize that public officials, dealing with public funds and with public responsibility, need to have a code of morality and a standard of morality which is above reproach. I can understand, in view of some of these things why we have members of the clergy parading in front of the door this morning. They are concerned, they are the conscience of the people and they are concerned, about this and about the kind of Medicare plan which we have brought forward in this Legislature.

So it is that the time is here when I think that we in this Legislature have got to understand that these men have a right to say to us: "We expect a higher standard of the people in this body. We expect the people who are governing Ontario to use the resources of this great province first of all for the need of the people." As we see our gross national product and gross provincial product go up steadily, that surplus should come more and more into play in building the kind of prosperity and the kind of comfort to which our people here are entitled. The time is here for the government of this province to use the Budget in a more realistic way as a planning instrument for prosperity, to eliminate this poverty which has been revealed this year, to give all our people a minimum standard beyond the poverty level. And particularly, see to it that our own employees are efficient and effective, because they have the training and the living standard which will make them effective and self-respecting citizens of this province.

I hope that we will mobilize our resources, and that in Metro and right across this province this Budget in another year will prove to be a more realistic and a more proper document for all of us.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Before adjourning the House I would like to take this opportunity of welcoming to the House this afternoon, students from Briarwood junior vocational school, Hamilton, in both the east and the west galleries.

It being 12.30 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ONTARIO

Legislature of Ontario Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT—DAILY EDITION

Third Session of the Twenty-Seventh Legislature

Tuesday, June 22, 1965
Afternoon Session

Speaker: Honourable Donald H. Morrow
Clerk: Roderick Lewis, Q.C.

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER
TORONTO
1965

CONTENTS

Tuesday, June 22, 1965

Conclusion of the debate on the Budget, Mr. Sopha, Mr. Robarts	4521
Resolution re grant out of consolidated revenue fund, concurred in	4549
Act granting certain sums to Her Majesty for public service, Mr. Allan, first, second, third readings	4549
Tabling answers to questions on the order paper, Mr. Robarts	4550
Royal assent to certain bills, the Lieutenant-Governor	4554
Prorogation speech, the Lieutenant-Governor	4555
Prorogation	4556

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1965

The House resumed at 2 o'clock, p.m.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May it please Your Honour, I am moved to say that surely in a lifetime there can be few pleasures as satisfying to the mind and the spirit as participation in the parliamentary process. One of the things that I shall remember about this session, Your Honour, let me say to you, in sincerity, is the unfailing kindness and courtesy which you have demonstrated through your personal attributes to myself, as your humble servant.

One of the other pleasures, I beg leave to refer to, Your Honour, is the association with fellow hon. members of the chamber, from all shades of political opinion. There are many shades of political opinion in each of the parties, and particularly do I deem it a privilege to be associated with the senior hon. members of the assembly. I do not presume to point any out, but it is a source of great inspiration and great personal gratification to be associated with such persons as my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver), my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Gordon), the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer), the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mackenzie), scion of the great family in the history of this country, as well as my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Noden).

It seems, sir, that through experience, the older and senior hon. members of the assembly have more time to devote to one than the younger ones do. Perhaps that is because the younger hon. members of the assembly are too busy striving for pride of place and guided by what sometimes appears to be an insatiable ambition to make their mark on the affairs of the nation.

One noticed, as a matter of fact I cannot help but advert to it, that when the great inspirational philosopher of the Conservative Party was in this chamber, none other than George Hogan himself, the source of all wisdom in the editorial pages of the leading newspapers, that the younger members of the chamber set up a veritable pilgrimage to the lower Speaker's gallery to be seen sitting on his left. To occupy such a seat, I do not know, may provide some stimulus to advancement within the party circles.

Sir, this session has proved that if words were raindrops, Ontario would not be in a state of drought. It has been a long session and I beg your indulgence to devote the first portion of my remarks to some suggestions for the improvement for the procedure of this House. Not in order that we may shorten the session, for I am one of those who is content to stay here during any of the months of the year—though hopefully not summer, which is Canada's and Ontario's best season—from the point of view, your Honour, of attempting to encourage a more orderly handling of the affairs of this assembly.

The assembly, really, according to May—I cannot claim credit for the approach that I make—according to May the affairs of this assembly are denoted by three main characteristics, the first of which is what he calls the forms of proceedings. That includes the procedures in dealing with bills in their various stages, the process of debate by motion, question and decision and a whole range of proceedings for the control and direction of the administration.

The second characteristic is the machinery, which includes yourself there, as the guide of the House, the other officers of the House and the committees to which portions of the business are delegated.

The third attribute is the rules of procedure, the directions which govern the working of the forms of proceedings and the machinery of the House. I would beg leave to devote a portion of my remarks to each one of these attributes.

But I dismiss the machinery by saying a word, and I hope I do not sound pedantic. I have no wish to put myself on a pedestal, it is out of my love for Parliament which I have been studying from at least the age of seven or eight. My father, you see, your Honour, met Sir John A. Macdonald once and never let us forget it at the dinner table. He met him in Peterborough in the election of 1891. That marked my father's political complexion for the rest of his life, I regret to say.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Brant): Like meeting R. B. Bennett.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, something similar.

I just make this reflection that out of respect for the dignity of Parliament I would ask Your Honour to consider, during the interstice of the session, instructing your officers and your servants to require of the strangers who come to our galleries, and they are perfectly welcome, that they abide by certain rules of decorum and not give the impression that this assembly has some of the characteristics of a poolroom and would not drape themselves over the railings, as I have seen them so do so many times, and have felt a sense of resentment. I put it this way: If a gentleman is required to wear a coat and a tie and a shirt to get into the clubhouse at Woodbine racetrack, then all the more reason that he should be required to dress in a certain state of decorum when he comes into this very hallowed and very distinguished place, which is the seat of all government in Ontario. I leave that.

Now, sir, it would seem to me that a stranger sitting in the gallery, having been here all session, when he arrived at this, to use the word the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Wardrope) likes, this penultimate stage of the proceedings of the House, the last but one speech, he would be indeed taxed in wondering just what we were doing in debating the Budget. After all, in dealing with the estimates of each of the several departments, the Budget has been passed, the Budget has been approved. The money has been voted and allocated to each one of the ministries. At this stage it is a "fait accompli"; the business of providing the money to carry on the administration of the government has been done. The money is provided. It is true the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) is not yet authorized to give that money to the various departments, but that, after all, is a mere matter of formality. Then at the very last stage of the session of the Legislature we get around to debating that which is complete.

I make this suggestion that in order to give the impression of the orderly conduct of debate, to render what we do in the style of true argument there ought to be, by agreement between all parties, a time limit on each of the important debates. We in the Opposition have the opportunity to present two amendments, to exercise our rights of protest in respect of the government's actions in each or either of the important debates, the Throne debate and the Budget debate. I feel that I can say, on behalf of this party, that this party would be agreeable to coming to an arrangement whereby the Throne debate occupied six or eight days; that the speeches were more or less continuous, or continual, until it was finished; and then the vote on the amendment and the sub-amendment took place and we had done with it.

There is absolutely no excuse, in my view, for the Throne debate and the Budget debate going on at the same time, side by side. That seems to me to give the impression of a chaotic handling of our affairs. What all sides of the House would approve, I would think, would be a procedure whereby the debate went on in orderly fashion so that one member might rise in his place and advert to remarks from another member from some other corner of the House and seek to dispute and confute what had been said within a relatively short period before. As it is now, if one wishes to make reference to something the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) said, then he must get Hansard and refer the House's memory back to a period of ten or 12 days before. That sir, in no sense of the word, can be called properly a parliamentary debate. So I would suggest to the House leader, whomever he might be next year, that he consider that representatives of all parties meet and see whether some procedure might not be adopted whereby we would put a limit on the Throne debate.

I would further suggest, sir, that the Budget debate should be limited in the same way and the Budget resolution moved by the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko) ought to be determined before we proceed to the estimates. Really, in my view, the Budget debate has become something of an obsolescent vehicle for protest. We have the opportunity over here, and really Parliament exists for us, to voice all our complaints and protests and make all our grievances in respect of government policy and the spending of our money during the estimates. Everything that can be said in that respect is said. We have the capability, the time and the opportunity to say it. I will show that is not so in respect of another important function that we are called upon to perform, but I think, and I make this suggestion to you in all seriousness, that next year we might try to end these two debates within some reasonable length of time in order to see how it will go, whether everyone will be satisfied with that procedure. By doing that and getting them out of the way we will leave plenty of time to conduct the day-to-day business of the House.

Now then I turn to that part of our function, sir, which we do not have an opportunity to perform, and that is the part that concerns our duty to grieve—to make grievances—in respect of current matters which concern the body politic. We have a real responsibility to raise on the floor of this Legislature matters of grievance to the body politic, the citizenry of our province that are as fresh as the ink on the morning's newspaper. If we see something in the morning press that relates to a grievance of our people, then we have the responsibility to come here and confront the government with it and say, "What is your stand on that? What has such-and-such ministry done? What remedial action do you intend to take in respect of it?" Indeed to question the ministry in the performance of their responsibilities.

There is no vehicle presently that permits us to do that. It is an opportune time to show Your Honour how, at one time, there was a vehicle. I do it with some embarrassment, because I must expose to the public view something of the nature of a weakness in us, that neither we in this party nor our friends in the New Democratic Party were alert enough to see the disappearance of one of our hard-won rights—one of our hard-won rights—disappear before our very eyes in this chamber and we did nothing about it. This is the first time to my knowledge that this has been raised, when I advert to it. Until the emergence of the hon. member for London North (Mr. Roberts) as the leader of this government, it was common and usual practice prescribed by the rules of the House that on each occasion that you, sir, left the chair to resolve this House into committee of supply, it was done by motion. If you look back through Hansard, you will see that:

Mr. Frost moved that the Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

You see, Your Honour; how you could get out of the chair on the intonation of the Clerk's voice is beyond my comprehension. How you can get out of that chair without a motion being put defies my understanding, because it took a Stuart king to send the troops to a House of Commons, in which sat one of your predecessors, to remove him from the chair.

Now you wander out—I do not use that as a term of opprobrium in any sense—when the Clerk of the House intones: "House in committee of supply." You pick up your hat and you make for the door. Until December of 1961, you and your predecessors only left your chair on motion being put, and that motion was a valuable one. That motion gave the Opposition the opportunity to amend it and to raise by way of amendment those things which were by way of current daily concern.

You see, sir, the affairs of this province are not ordered in the Speech from the Throne; things in this province are not as the Speech from the Throne says they are, and they remain that way until we get an opportunity later on in the session to discuss matters. We live in times of great change; there are matters that concern our people every day of the week. The procedure of this House, I am saying in my limited fashion, needs to be accommodated to deal with those things. That was the value of that motion: "That you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply."

In December, 1961, came the grey area. According to my researches, and going through the book, when the hon. member for London North became the leader of the government—I pick out December 5, 1961—the moisture had not yet dried on his cheeks; the moisture of tears of thankfulness for naming him as the leader of the Conservative Party. On December 5, Hon. J. P. Roberts moves:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Then if we turn to December 7, 1961—I have not looked to see if that is the day that our right disappeared or not; that would be a significant day—but, Mr. Speaker, it says:

Orders of the day. House moves into committee of supply. Mr. K. Brown in the chair.

At that point the Clerk had intoned the 57th order, House in committee of supply. Then we look a little further on, and I call it a grey area because we come back to another time—I think it is December 17.

Hon. J. P. Roberts moves Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair.

At that stage, some days the motion was put and other days the motion was not put. Finally, in February of 1962, the old practice had disappeared. Our right had gone to amend that motion, and from then on down to this day it is done in the way I have described it. The Clerk merely intones: "House in committee of supply," and you go out of the Chamber.

It is unfortunate in the historical development that in 1961—the spring session of 1961—the former leader of the party had amended that motion, and it was an unfortunate amendment. I do not want to go into the details, but it was an amendment that did not suit the motion. The amendment had to do with second reading of a bill and, really, that is too much of a marriage of two distinct procedures in this House. There was great dispute about whether that amendment was in order.

But, sir, I merely end in this way. I say to you that, according to the custom of parliamentary institutions, our right must come back. There is no other vehicle of which I know that gives us the opportunity to raise current matters and gives us the opportunity to grieve. Because when all is said and done, we are grievors—that carries out our responsibilities. We are here to grieve on behalf of others; to grieve in respect of administration of the government; and to grieve in respect of what we feel ought to be the conduct of public business—that is a vehicle that we desperately need.

What is the other side of the coin? These things flow one into the other naturally; the other side is that the government has lots of opportunity to make statements in respect of current matters and, indeed, they abuse the right. Not only does the hon. Prime Minister permit the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Grossman) to wander in here—and I just picked one out of the air—and make lengthy statements about the appointment of some official to some position of responsibility in his department. Now how does that concern us? All sorts of people are being appointed by the government to various positions of responsibility. We are not concerned; we are only concerned if the individual appointed does not perform the tasks to which he is assigned, although we might like to hear of some spectacular demonstration of efficiency by some official. However, the mere appointment is of no concern to this House.

The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions, in the case I cite, presumes upon our good nature and our time in order to seek a headline: The heading: "A news story." It gets him into the papers. Now, he is only an example. All the ministry does it. They come in with silly announcements that they want to make before the orders of the day. I say they have lots of opportunity to comment on current things. How much, sir, do they abuse their right to make a short statement about the introduction of a bill? That is one of the most unfair ones.

Bill No. 136 is an excellent example. The hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), on first reading of that bill, delivered a polemic that would win him a master of arts degree in some obscure university in central Afghanistan. We must perforce sit silent and listen to it as he dealt with the advantages of private operation of medical care insurance. He raked the government of Saskatchewan over the coals, and Britain, and in passing took swipes hither and thither and yon. We have to sit silent and listen to it. I say to the hon. Prime Minister, do one of two things, require the Ministers to make a brief statement on first reading or adopt the procedure in the House of Commons and move bills by resolution. At Ottawa they have to have a resolution which gives all parties the opportunity to debate the principle surrounding a bill that is about to be introduced. Now, let us have one or the other.

Question period: here I am dealing with the forms of proceedings of the House. I ask the hon. Prime Minister rhetorically, why should not his high-priced help be required to answer questions? Why should they not be able to demonstrate that they have some knowledge of the machinery and the running of their department? Why should they not be required to do it on an impromptu extemporaneous basis?

At the risk of repeating old jokes, the main reason is of course that some of the Ministers are so ill-acquainted with the affairs of their department that they would not dare tell you the time of day unless the Deputy Minister telephoned the Dominion observatory first. That is true. Some of them you would not let out at night without a keeper. There are exceptions. I was disappointed in one of the exceptions the other day, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Spooner)—a man who can field questions and answer them because he has the administration of his department in the palm of his hand. But the other day I watched him as my friend, the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborne) was asking him a question, and he was sitting on the edge of his chair, just waiting to get up because the question invited a single word, "No answer," and he could hardly wait to get up to say the "No." One word.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Municipal Affairs): "No answer" is two words.

Mr. Sopha: And then he licked his chops like a dog that has just had a can of Dr. Ballard's, because he had squelched the hon. member for Wentworth East. He thought it was smart to do it. He is one of the Ministers who could have made an explanation surrounding the government policy which was being dealt with in that question.

The rules of the House provide for a question period. Hon. members are supposed to file their questions with the Clerk according to the rules, not with the Speaker. The questions are none of the business of the Speaker; they are filed with the Clerk, they go on the order paper. Then one or two days a week there is an hour-long question period in which the ministry, having had an opportunity to research the information, makes answer to the questions. One of the writers says it is a time eagerly looked forward to by hon. members of the House and indeed by the press gallery.

I remember being at Westminster, the "Mother of Parliaments," and watching the question hour when Winston Churchill had the honour of being the first citizen of the United Kingdom. I remember the sparring that took place between the two sides; the able people in the Labour Opposition sparred with him and with the other Ministers and it was a mark of a high development of parliamentary institutions. We should return to that. The question period keeps the ministry on its toes. I would suspect that the hon. Prime Minister would not object to that. He would not object to some demonstration of the competence of those who sit in the House by his leave, sit by his advice to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor. In other words, like every other employer he wants to see whether they are worth the pay that they are getting.

Why are we denied private members' time, unlike other Parliaments—an hour a week to deal with private members' public orders? We make many suggestions on this side, and we produce many bills which are eventually adopted and become part of the great body of law of our province. Why should we not have an hour a week on Wednesdays from five to six in which to call the private members' orders? Why should we in the Opposition be at the whim of the government in respect of that? The hon. Prime Minister late in the session set aside a few hours. I will say this, I deliberately absented myself from the House because my orders were high on the list and I had spoken on those subjects on many occasions. I had taken the time of this House. My numbers were high up and I wanted to avoid my bills being called so that my hon. colleagues might have theirs called, and in respect of a couple of them it worked. My hon. friend's (Mr. Reaume's) Remembrance Day Act was called, as was my hon. friend's (Mr. Worton's) resolution on divorce, and the bill on the ombudsman was called.

Some day I know that we will do what justice demands and we will give recovery compensation, relief damages, to gratuitous passengers. We cannot be behind the rest of Canada forever. We have a banner province. Every other province gives compensation to gratuitous passengers. We will, some day, eventually.

Those are some of the things that concern me and some of the suggestions I put forward in an endeavour to promote the more orderly business of the House.

Sir, the rules are the property of the House; the rules of the House belong to the House, and the House may change them at any time that it so desires. The rules, of course, were adopted when this Legislature became a Parliament in 1867. They were adopted almost without change from the statutes of Westminster. Minor changes were made in 1868 and 1869. In 1875 we saw the first complete re-examination, but only minor changes were made. Minor changes again came in 1876, 1885, 1891, 1897, 1904, 1907, 1910 and 1914. Then in 1929 there was a second complete re-examination of the rules. None of the fundamental procedures of the House was changed but the Speaker was given more power. In 1939 there was a third general revision of the rules.

There have been no amendments to the rules of the House. The striking thing since April, 1939, is that there has been a complete lack of formal innovation, and, sir, I say to you—and it is no criticism of you; you inherited a system—there has developed a practice of ignoring the written rules, of relying upon precedent. Rule 42 of the House, sir, by your leave, refers to the very thing that I was speaking about, our right to amend that supply motion. Only one amendment may be made to a motion for the Speaker to leave the chair for the House to go into committee of supply or ways and means. I say, sir, if the precedents are valuable then they should be moulded into the written rules.

One thing an orderly parliamentary system needs is a codification of its rules and procedure. It is too unsafe, uncertain and dangerous to rely upon precedent because precedents may change. I say to you, sir, that I deeply regretted the interpretation of Rule 56, I believe it is, in respect of the second reading of a bill, so far as it affected the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden).

I held no brief for his position, but I regretted him being put in the position, by the interpretation of that rule, which required him to vote according to his conscience and against his party and indeed against every other hon. member in the House.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): It did not bother me.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. member tried to get out of it. He did not object but he tried to get out of it, because he got up on a point of order and tried to avoid the necessity of voting as he did. He is a remarkable person. One cannot say anything complimentary about him. If one criticizes him he gets mad, if one compliments him he gets mad. He is a man of even disposition—he is mad all the time.

Therefore, sir, I draw your attention to the fact that this House was pleased to appoint a select committee to review the rules of the House, and I am unable to say in which year it was appointed. But it reported on March 11, 1947. That committee was under the distinguished chairmanship of W. J. Stewart, a former Speaker of the House. It was appointed April 4, 1946, and in its report, the attitude of whoever was responsible for the report was demonstrated by the fact that it is the only select committee report which I know of, of which no copy is available and which may only be found in the journals of the House of 1947. He made reference to the fact that that committee had the advantage of the advice of Alex C. Lewis, KC, and Arthur Beauchesne, Clerk of the House of Commons. L. R. MacTavish, municipal legislative counsel, acted as counsel and secretary, and a very thorough-going revision of the rules was attempted by the work of that committee. Do note one of the recommendations, sir, and I am now quoting:

In order to secure an orderly disposition of the session's business two old practices are made the subject of standing orders. The first is that the Budget is not to be presented until the debates on the address are completed; and the second that the estimates are not to be considered until the Budget debate is ended.

Then aside from the recommendation, there was appended a complete new set of rules under the new title: "Standing Orders of the House." I am not going to go into detail of what they say, but mark you, sir, they were a complete revision of the rules of the House.

Now my hon. leader (Mr. Thompson) put a motion on the order paper standing in his name, and which of course will not be reached this year, in which he suggested the appointment of a select committee:

Resolved, that a select committee of eight members of this House be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient despatch a review with recommendations for the improvement of the rules of procedure of the House, with special emphasis on reorganization of the committee system and such other matters as the procedure for questions of the day.

I would therefore suggest to you, sir, with the greatest respect, that perhaps the time has come when an appropriate committee, and I do not say it need be a select committee of the House, but an appropriate vehicle be appointed in order to revise the rules of the House.

In that connection I make two comments, one of a very minor nature. With all respect to the author of the book I think the edition of Lewis is unsuitable for our needs. It has much in it of an historical nature, it contains statistical references and historical recounts of who was Premier and Speaker from time to time, but one must really dig into the book in order to find the rules of the House. The precedents which are relied upon are not in conjunction with the rules, you have to seek them in a different part of the volume. What I would recommend, sir, is that we have a very compact volume which would embrace the rules and the standing orders, perhaps with a reference to a precedent where the Speaker has ruled in connection with that rule.

The other thing I must say to you, sir, is that if we do not have a compact set of rules of ready reference to us, in order that at least two or three members of the House will become expert on the rules in the way that Stanley Knowles and Allan MacEachen and Paul Martin are experts on the rules in the House of Commons, then we are always in danger; and especially we in the Opposition. There will always be a tendency, sir, for you to be the target of gratuitous advice.

That I conceive to be your greatest danger in carrying out the heavy responsibilities on you. You are the target and the object of gratuitous advice which you do not need. You are a man of uncommon ability, as I observe you, and you are a man who can make up his mind in respect of most situations which you confront. You are a man who is deeply conscious of your responsibilities to all sides of the House, and after two years in the chair that you now occupy a set of rules, really, sir, and a volume of May, is all that you need to hand.

I leave that, hoping that I have made some minor contribution in respect of the improvement of procedure of this House. Perhaps the hon. Prime Minister over the summer when he has nothing else to do, when he is sitting up at his cottage on Georgian Bay, this will revolve within his entelechy and he will say: "We will have to do something about what Sopha said there on the last day about according more rights and privileges to the Opposition for them to carry out their onerous responsibilities." I say to him, mark you, prepare well for the day when you are occupying these benches.

Now, sir, I am tempted at this point, knowing the patience of my hon. friends, especially on the government benches, I am tempted, when I survey the 16 motions which remain on the order paper, to say a word in respect of each of them. I am tempted to do so. I happily inform the House that I am not going to do so, except in respect of one or two. I would happily have the one standing in my name discharged; that is to say in the opinion of this House the assignment of wages should be prohibited by law because the select committee of the House—I took an opportunity to go up and have a look at their report, which is not yet available—the select committee has recommended that all blanket assignments of wages be prohibited by law.

I am hopeful that the government will act upon that. A man's wages to me have a sacrosanct quality. The first charge upon his wages are food and shelter for his children, his dependants. They come ahead of the claims of creditors, far and away above. Creditors rank well behind those claims. Meat and potatoes, a roof that does not leak over their heads, suitable and decent clothing on his children's backs to go to school. Those are the first things, not the claims of finance companies or other financial institutions.

We have a disgraceful situation in this province where sometimes a man will have three or four assignments. We ran into one recently who had eight assignments against his wages. The assignments ranked according to the jurisprudence of the courts ahead of the claims of creditors. If you are a creditor, if you have advanced credit to that man and you sue him for judgment, you rank behind the wage assignments. The government is greatly influenced by the financial institutions; it is greatly influenced, this government. This government is greatly influenced by the insurance companies, the banks and the financial institutions. I will say something about that later.

It summoned its courage into hand and introduced a bill last year, did they not, to amend The Wages Act. Then lo and behold, it was three months after the session ended—I felt like an absolute lout—three months after the session ended I first found out that the Clerk stood at the end of that table when asking for Royal assent from the Lieutenant-Governor and skipped that bill.

I did not even notice that he had. Supposing the bill was 146, the Clerk went from 145 to 147. In other words, he sank my ball on the table without me knowing it, until a judge of the district court pointed out to me that that is what had happened to that bill. I thought it was law, a control over wage assignments, only to discover that I had been euchred in this very Chamber where I am paid to be alert. That is what happened, that bill died. It has not yet been resurrected.

I hope the government will summon up enough courage to re-enact some sensible amendment to The Wages Act to protect a man's wages from the point of view of his responsibility to his family.

I am not going to refer to any of the other of the resolutions, but to the questions my hon. colleague from Downsview (Mr. Singer) who made such a remarkable contribution this year, in his criticism of The Department of the Attorney General. The public of this province will benefit from the scrutiny he made of that one government department. I hope he turns his attention next year to another department and gives it the same quality of criticism that he gave in respect of this one.

He asks me to refer to the fact that several of his questions, that have long been on the order paper, have not been answered. I am particularly interested in number seven. I hope the answer to number seven is tabled today, because my hon. friend from Downsview and I have asked that one each year that we have been here: How much are the downtown lawyers being paid, how much are the Conservative lawyers getting? Nobody need rise up and say this government does not hire only Conservative lawyers, because I know, my optics tell me that is all they hire. The Conservative lawyers fight between themselves as to who is to get the benefit of the government munificence. It is unseemingly in our profession to see them squabble in the market place about the crumbs that this government dispenses from the table. Something like $500,000 a year.

An hon. member: It might be more.

Mr. Sopha: It might be more, more than $500,000 a year.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Does the hon. member ever see it changed when the Liberal government is in power?

Mr. Sopha: I never cease to refer to the fact that I was hired by the Diefenbaker government on one occasion. It did not pay me very well, but it hired me and I had to work for it.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): It paid the hon. member what he is worth.

Mr. Sopha: One thing Diefenbaker did in respect of my account is, he taxed it. I have always wanted to say that the great difference between that civil service up in Ottawa and ours, is that our civil service is much more friendly, much more kind. That one up in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, is sometimes autocratic to the extreme. I recall that occasion when it taxed my bill, and it did not even write a letter and say, "We took off $200"; it merely sent me the cheque with no letter, but with my bill reduced by that amount. Sometimes I believe that the federal government of this country, and those who serve it, treat everybody else as being about in the position of the equivalent of the county council. However, I leave that.

We would want to know who the beneficiaries of this legal business are, who are currently getting it and how much they are being paid. Of course I refer to the report of the public accounts committee under the able chairmanship of our recently married colleague, the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. McKeough), which recommends great changes in the method of handling the legal work of this province. I commend its reading to every person who is interested in that.

The hon. Prime Minister informed us this morning that these questions will all be answered, or most of them will be answered. I want to say in respect of question 116 that I did not put that question on the order paper in a moment of frivolity. That question was put on the order paper seriously, to find out how much it cost the public of this province to entertain the Shahanshah of Iran. I did not know; I did not go. I made the mistake of being so careless as not to reply to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor's invitation. I should have replied, and I regret that. I should have declined to him in writing. However, it was not done. I did not go for reasons I would not care to state. I would be embarrassed to state them, as to why I would not go. But the holding of that dinner was a brazen act on the part of this government, in relation to the people whom they invited to it—a brazen misuse of the public funds of this province to entertain the faithful.

What status in our community has a defeated candidate in a political party? Who is he to be wined and dined? Indeed, H. L. Mencken, in a moment of humour, said that the best thing that could be done for defeated political candidates was to shoot them all. One of the penalties of losing an election would be that the defeated ones would be shot and the public would be relieved of the burden of hearing from them. Why should they be invited? The man defeated by the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) was there; the man defeated by the hon. member for Grey South was there, and the place was crawling, an advisedly used word, with executives from Conservative associations. We heard afterwards, indeed, that the hon. Prime Minister of the province had the presumption to furnish the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor with a list of 300 names of people he wished to see invited to wine and dine off the public purse.

On the day the question went on the order paper, when you, sir, and I had the dispute about it, I said we wanted to know how much it cost so we could prepare for inviting Haile Selassie to a dinner for defeated Liberal candidates and executives of the Liberal Party. but this has a serious aspect to it. This government perpetuates itself in power by the use of public funds in the public relations sphere. I refer to the moving of the desks by the hon. Provincial Secretary.

The hon. Provincial Secretary moved his desks from the south end of the building to the north end, just as if they ordered me to move my desk out of the room on the first floor and put it in some room on the second floor. That is about all he did. He invited 8,000 people to see his move. He invited every lawyer in the province of Ontario to come and see his new quarters, as if there is anything to be seen. My hon. friends and I went over to have a look at this, to have a look at these canapes, these hors d'oeuvres, anchovies and shrimps, to hear the light conversation and to see the public money being spent. I cannot prove it, but I am told by the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Beaulieu) that he recognized quite a few of the people from the hon. Provincial Secretary's riding. He invited them, too, to come down and have a little tidbit off the public purse. And, of course, they do it all the time—any excuse to throw a ball, any excuse to go on a junket, any excuse to get into the public relations way.

I am going to advert to another, and the hon. Prime Minister ought not to feel that this is a personal reference. I hope he does not; he is in the public domain, he is subject to criticism. I want to tell him a little anecdote about how this is done. Some of the techniques are developed to an extent that would put Madison Avenue to shame. I will tell him about one.

There is nothing quite so captivating as to come into this Chamber and hear those young ladies in red, those nice young ladies down on the first floor from The Department of Tourism and Information, make the political pitch. The hon. Prime Minister should hear it. They will have 40 or 50 school children here and they will stand up there and they will say this:

"What is the name of the Prime Minister of the province?" Some small voices say, "John Robarts." "Come on, you can do better than that," the girl says. "Altogether." And they all say, "John Robarts." The hon. Prime Minister should hear it. And then the girl goes on and she says, "How many members have the Conservative Party got?" I have heard it with my own ears. Somebody says, "Seventy-seven." "Come on, There are 77." They never say anything about the Opposition.

Mr. Reilly: Yes, they do.

Mr. Sopha: No, they never do. I never heard them ask what the name of the leader of the Opposition is.

Mr. Reilly: Oh, yes they do. The hon. member has obviously not heard the guide.

Mr. Sopha: We have shown during this session, time and time again, how this government has perfected the art of public relations. One of the great accomplishments of the session was the calling of the attention of the people of this province to the managed news, how they had gone into the electronic media and were making use of the press. In fact, they wanted the press to become harlots for the carrying of propaganda of their activities. Scarcely an important speech could be made by a Minister in the House but the Minister did not have to get in front of the television cameras and prerecord it for free dissemination throughout the province.

I say to you, sir, that a government that uses the techniques to that extent is hard to beat. It is hard to dislodge, because it has the wealth of the province behind it and it does not shy away from the misuse of it for its own political ends. To borrow the word of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. S. Lewis), I think I have documented it sufficiently.

Sir, I turn to the final subject. I make no apologies for referring to the recent speech of the hon. Prime Minister. Indeed, I do not have to make any reference to it at all in adverting to it because he provided us all with a copy of it. When I took mine home I found it was in such demand in my constituency I had to give it away to someone and I had to come back and get another. But it is a strange thing—and I have said this before, and I give a little tip to the young and ambitious in this Chamber—that though the hon. Prime Minister of this province makes an important speech outside this Legislature and that speech is widely reported by the press and indeed, very effusive editorial comment is made about the speech, we never hear one of the hon. members make reference to the fact that he made the speech and discussed its contents with him. I say in all seriousness that one wonders if the young and ambitious around here really know what is going on. Do they really know? Or are they so busy that they really do not have time to be interested in what is going on?

What the hon. Prime Minister of the province says is of importance beyond any other subject concerning the management of the affairs of our citizens. He should be watched constantly and every word he uses in the public forum about our province should be weighed for its sagacity and for its reasonableness. That is the duty of the members on all sides of the House. Indeed, there is one person who does not miss a trick. That is Arthur R. Ford, the former editor of the London Free Press who, just yesterday, acting in emeritus fashion, wrote an editorial which the London Free Press put on the front page of its paper—widely read, I am told, in western Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He writes one every Saturday. It is just the usual editorial; there is nothing unusual about it.

Mr. Sopha: I am told that this paper is widely read in western Ontario. I sometimes wonder about its impact because I recall just before the election of 1963—the federal election in April, 1963—when I was in Fergus, Ontario, speaking at a political meeting, the London Free Press came out with an editorial urging its readers to vote for Mr. Pearson—to vote Liberal. Somebody remarked that the original owner—I think his name is Blackwell—turned over in his grave at that. However, one noticed that virtually all of western Ontario remained in the Diefenbaker camp, so the paper had very little impact upon the voting habits of its reader circulation in that respect.

However, to return to Mr. Ford, the heading is this:

STATURE OF ROBERTS INCREASING STEADILY.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: I am only going to read the first line of the editorial for two reasons: First, I do not want to burden the House with the effusiveness of the writer's pen; and second, it will become apparent. He says in the first line: "Premier John Roberts will probably not thank me for this column—" and at that point the writer takes leave of accuracy.

He and accuracy are never on speaking terms again throughout the rest of the piece. The second reason why I will not read it is because, really it is rather insulting—as I read it—to the hon. Prime Minister. It is rather insulting and I will tell you why, and I am serious. The writer says that when a group of his friends in London decided to put forward the hon. Prime Minister's name as Ontario leader to succeed the hon. Leslie Frost, they knew they were advocating "a young man of high principles, conscientiously honest, devoted to public service and with a charming personality."

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: Save your hands; do not bruise them—"But they did not appreciate the statesmanlike qualities which he has since developed, and did not realize his administrative capacity and his genius for getting on with people. He has the loyal support of his followers in the legislative assembly and has shown vision and courage in facing up to the colossal problems of a province which is expanding at a fantastic rate."

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: Now those are remarkable words; and I call those words insulting—really I do. Because what they are really saying is that when a group of his friends put this man forward to be the leader of a political party, they knew he had such-and-such qualities and they listed them.

Look at the qualities again—"able to get along with people—devoted to public service." There is nothing uncommon about those qualities, and what the editor is saying is: "Lo and behold, in spite of all those qualities that do not count, now we have discovered he has also got brains."

It is like going into a restaurant and ordering six oysters and saying: "My, those oysters are nice," and as you eat you discover a pearl. They had not looked for this quality in the hon. Prime Minister; they did not know he had it, so what a pleasant surprise to show to the people of London—to find out that this man chosen to lead our province also had some ability.

Of course the truth is—and I say it to him—that he was picked as the leader of this party because he was considered to be safe. Look at the two runner-up candidates; just look at them. It is significant to point this out: Robert Macaulay and the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Roberts), both very erratic; while the hon. Minister of Mines was in the second platoon, away back so far that he was almost out of sight. But the two runners-up were not safe people; they were uncertain. The business community could not rely upon their judgment and their performance, so they picked a safe man.

Now, Arthur Ford comes forward—and my hon. friend from Grey North (Mr. Sargent) appreciates that—and says: "Lo and behold, to the eternal credit of London, this fellow also has some ability besides being safe."

Now, what was Ford referring to? He is referring to the recent speech that the hon. Prime Minister made—the speech, and I blush when I say it, that I had something to do with. Because if you will look at pages 704 and following of Hansard of February 23 of this year you will see that I made quite a lengthy statement—a polemic almost—on the need for a national development policy; but what I say, I have to accept, is not important in the affairs of this province. But when those words find their utterance through the mouth of the chief citizen of the province, they become important.

The resemblance between what I said is further reinforced by the fact that he makes allusion in his speech to the letter from Laurier to Blake of 1894. I quoted that letter during that speech; the letter of foreboding and despair when Laurier said in the letter to Blake that this union was dissolving—it was being destroyed—the confederation that so much was hoped for was drifting apart. However, I am going to refer to parts of this speech.

The hon. Prime Minister spoke to the Canadian association of manufacturers on June 7 at Toronto. Now, that is a very august assembly of people. I imagine that a lot of the wealth in this country is inherent in this association. I imagine, as I will refer later, that many members of the corporate élite—to use a phrase from Professor Porter's book that I am going to read a little later; those people who really rule this country; the people who really boss our affairs—would be in that assembly of personages. The hon. Minister of Economics and Development would know them because he was a member of the corporate elite at one time.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Economics and Development): Pay the taxes and provide the jobs.

Mr. Sopha: Another aphorism, exactly. He said:

Is the concept of confederation outdated in the second half of the twentieth century? No! Confederation has as much meaning today as it did 100 years ago.

Now, I read that one because it typifies the large ovals, what they call on Madison Avenue, the large ovals with which he spoke. It is like a child chewing bubble gum; she has about four sticks in her mouth, as sometimes my daughter has, then suddenly there appears a large bubble of the gum.

That was the character of this speech. It was large ovals of big, huge generalities. Later on we are co-operating with the federal government in a review of fiscal relations and the advisory committee on federation established this year is looking at the broader aspects of confederation. Well, I say to my hon. friend from Grey South that, in the years that he has sat here when this government has been in power, there must have been appointed so many advisory committees to various departments of government that you would need a cemetery four times the size of Mount Pleasant cemetery here in Toronto to bury them all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Your hon. leader asks for more research every time he gets on his feet.

Mr. Sopha: I do not ask for any more. One is minded of the economic advisory council. Whoever hears of the economic advisory council any more? It was under the distinguished chairmanship of none other than the Minister of Economics and the president of Algoma Steel was on it, as well as other distinguished persons. This was going to be the be-all and the end-all. The great panacea to advise this government on economic policy. Gone! Disappeared like the Arab. No, not gone in the sense that it is dissolved, but gone in the sense that it has virtually no impact as far as we are aware and has disappeared like the Arab into the gathering sandstorm.

There was great fanfare when the Ontario advisory council was appointed. The Premier got up and read off the names of the people, and it sounds like a page from Who's Who, the social register. I made my remarks about his reference to a couple of them being Rhodes scholars, I will not repeat that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: One of your pet prejudices.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, I am prejudiced in favour of Canadian scholarship, I am prejudiced in favour of everything Canadian, though like the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) I am not a professional patrioteer. But he reels off the names. They have become a group of name-droppers, professional name-droppers. Everybody that makes his mark on the social and political life of our country, it seems, they want to appoint to some council.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Mines): Give credit where credit is due.

Mr. Sopha: The status symbol, it becomes nothing but a status symbol. We have not heard whether the advisory council has had any meetings, we have not heard if it has advised on anything, we have not even heard whether it has been asked to advise on anything.

The thing that disturbs me about it is that some of the people on it are some of our best critics, some of the best critics of our way of life. I am just afraid that this is a means whereby the teeth of those people are pulled.

For example, Bora Laskin. Bora Laskin could not be sold on the validity of the Fulton-Favreau formula. He would be the first to criticize this government's endorsement of that formula; and indeed our own, though I regret I have some second thoughts about endorsing that formula. He is on it. Is this a means of doing away with the criticism these people might otherwise give and upon which the viability of our political life depends?

I wish, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe was in his seat so he could hear the excerpt I am going to quote of one of them and I will identify them. I am going to quote it without making any reference to the implications of it, because it would be too dangerous for me to make any comment. But I beg all hon. members of the Legislature, all hon. members within my hearing, to listen to what this man says. Let me read it slowly. I think hon. members will find that it will have a profound impact upon them. He says this:

We Canadians have so far failed to enter fully into our legacy and this is our one great overarching problem as our centennial approaches. On its solution everything else depends. We have failed to vest sovereignty where it belongs, in the people. Instead we have allowed it to remain in the British monarchy, and in doing so we have divided our country and inhibited our emotional and creative development as a people.

Now are those not startling words, when one considers the implications of what the man is saying? I wish my hon. friend from Dufferin-Simcoe were here, because the type of speech he makes—my hon. friend from Downsview has called “fossilized” old moss-backed Toryism. That type of speech he might be able to sell in Dufferin-Simcoe. He could only sell it to a very few people in Sudbury. We live in times of great change.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Does the hon. member agree with the author's conclusion?

Mr. Sopha: We live in times of great change and I merely say this—I am going to answer the hon. member's question—that we cannot capture the imagination of our young people by putting emphasis on those things which are only connected with tradition. We must emphasize those things on our national life that have a viability to them, because our young people are no longer interested in many of the ideas of their fathers.

Mr. White: Does the hon. member agree with the major premise of that article?

Mr. Sopha: We cannot commend their loyalties. That quotation—who is it by—a member of the advisory council, Professor Conway, who has the chair of the humanities at York University.

I had a letter from Professor Underhill about my stand on the flag, in which Professor Underhill referred to many of the same things, but Professor Underhill has never made any secret of his resentment of the WASPs, the people he has called the white Anglo-Saxon Protestants and their hegemony in the life of our province within the recluses of their private clubs—the York and the Toronto and the National and the Albany and the Carleton and the Rideau and the St. James, and the Richmond and all of them—the profound impact that they make on the political life of this country.

Not many months ago the members of this assembly marched out of the assembly and went down in front to pay their first homage to Canada's new national flag. Then a few short months later the Premier of this province deprived me of the right of being Canadian. It is my greatest resentment about this session, that I am not permitted to be a Canadian; that the hon. Prime Minister must take hold of me by the scruff of the neck and must direct my eyes to a foreign country to pay homage to a symbol which no longer commands my first loyalty. I had to split with my party about that, but at least we have the freedom that I can split with my party on a matter of deep principle and I can still at the end of the session sit with them.

It has a ludicrous side, it has a humorous side. Hon. members must never lose their sense of humour in this business. We started out on the fateful day when Canada adopted one flag, the national flag with the maple leaf. We started out with one flag. Now on June 22, 1965, we in Ontario have the great benefit that we now have five flags. We now have five.

I will list them to the House. We have Canada's national flag; we have the flag that Queen Victoria granted us in 1868 which never has been repealed or altered; we have Ontario's new flag, the Red Ensign; we have the Commonwealth flag decreed by the Parliament of Canada; and indeed His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has one. We now have five, so there are enough flags to go around for everybody in this province.

May I say just in passing, it is in no sense a criticism, some day when you are speaking to the Lieutenant-Governor would you do me a favour, Mr. Speaker, and tell him that he is not vice-regal. He is in no sense the representative of the Queen in this province. For the sake of accuracy, he is the representative of the Governor-General. When he was appointed in 1867, the Lieutenant-Governor was thought to be nothing more than a job-boy for the federal government to come into the province and act as a spy.

He was a spy to watch the provincial government and report back. He was a fink. If you do not believe me, look at the Confederation debate of 1865, page 42.

I was deprived, and I continue to be deprived, but I am going to speak up against it, of the right to be a Canadian first. Many people bemoan the fact that we have not got a Canadian identity, that is what Conway was speaking about. We have no sense of Canadian identity and we will not have a sense of Canadian identity until the hon. Prime Minister stops rattling the old bones of Governor Simcoe in the resting place in far-off Britain, leaves those things alone and emphasizes the traditions that really count, the traditions of liberty, of humanity and responsibility.

Those are the traditions that really count. Yet the Lord Simcoe hotel was permitted to bastardize the name of Sir John Graves Simcoe. They could have called that hotel General Simcoe, Governor Simcoe, Sir John Graves Simcoe; but the one thing they could not have called it with historical accuracy they called it, Lord Simcoe. He was in no sense ever a lord. Now I should say in all fairness that when Leslie Frost was asked down to open the blessed place, he told them so, he told them. But the government might have a responsibility to intervene.

These things are important to me; whether they are to anyone else I have no way of knowing. The real nub of the hon. Prime Minister's speech to the association of manufacturers was that he called for the return to a national development policy. Here is what he said:

Today we need the same broad and bold approach to national economic development, the same type of political commitment to a concept of the Canadian economy. The greatest challenge facing the federal government today is, therefore, to create a truly national policy which will capture the allegiance of the people of Canada, one which will incorporate our aspirations and ambitions. Too often in recent years the federal government has adopted policies without prior consultations with the provinces, which more properly should be carried out by the provinces only after due consultation.

I use the phrase "large oval" in describing it—a phrase of great accuracy.

When he rises in his place I challenge him to tell us what areas he wants the federal government to move in. What does he want the federal government to do? He speaks in generalities, but where are the specifics? Let him tell us. In what area of our economy is the provincial government of this province deprived of the mobility to move? It has control of our resources, it is not inhibited by our political system. I will sit down right now if he will get up and tell us, in answer to that question, in what specific area does the federal government inhibit this government from having a national development policy of its own. The difference between the hon. Prime Minister and me is that when we speak of a national development policy he uses vague generalities and I refer to specifics.

What does the federal government do to prevent this government from utilizing the resources of the great northwest of our province? What have they done? What about the steel mill that should be located at the Lakehead? We have every attribute that is necessary for the establishment of another steel industry. We have the iron ore; we have the hydro; we have water transportation; we have a labour force and, indeed, we have markets. I wish the hon. Minister of Economics and Development would realize that two-thirds of the surface of this earth does not need to manufacture products that he is peddling in every place from Vienna to Formosa, that what is needed is transportation, what is needed is steel rail. Two-thirds of the land mass of this globe needs the necessities, the attributes, of the transportation system. Why should not this government take the step, like the government of Quebec did, to establish an indigenous steel industry?

A couple of years ago the hon. Minister of Mines got up in the House—the hon. Minister who deals with a $1 billion industry. Did he talk about a steel industry, the utilization of our own resources to provide jobs for our own people? No. He talked about collecting rocks as a hobby. If I did not observe the proprieties I would have brought my lunch up right in the midst of the assembly. To think that he would waste our time when what the world needs is the materials to shape a decent standard of living, materials which we in this country can supply to the world.

I said before if the hon. Prime Minister would put some flesh on these large ovals that he talks to, the manufacturers that he spouts to, he would say something along the line: "Do any of you know Cyrus Eaton? Will you say to Cyrus Eaton, 'You are a Canadian, you were born in this country. Come along with us and let us establish a steel mill at Port Arthur, and use the ore which you have at Steep Rock Iron Mines, 50 or 100 miles away?'" But instead—and I throw out the challenge again—I hope when he rises that he will tell us the areas in which the federal government inhibits the national development of this country, and to be specific, let us hear about his representations to the federal government. In what way has he made his complaints known to it, about its inhibiting activity? He said, "Too often in recent years the federal government has adopted programmes without prior consultation with the provinces." What policies has it adopted?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: All right, I will tell the hon. member of a couple that were debated in this House, if he would only use his own memory. What about that fund that was established to assist the municipalities? We had to go to a federal-provincial conference and simply say to the federal people, "In Ontario this will not work." So what happened? After the event, the federal government changed the Act and now it works very well. There is a glowing example that has been debated on the floor of this House—with the hon. member present, if he was here—of precisely what I was speaking about. I have others.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Give us the story of Algoma using Ontario iron ore.

Mr. Sopha: What is the hon. Minister of Mines muttering about? I thought we were talking about national development policies. I thought we were talking about—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am making my speech when the hon. member is finished. Just wait.

Mr. Sopha: I thought that was what national development meant, the contributions to our economy. He gets up and he says they need loans to municipalities. I am not talking about municipalities. I am talking about the Keirans scheme to replenish the Great Lakes. That is what I thought he was talking about when he talked to the association of manufacturers. Must I conclude that when he was talking to the manufacturers he did not know what he was talking about? Probably, probably. He says the greatest challenge facing the federal government is to create a truly national policy which will capture the allegiance of the people of Canada. What policy? What specific has he in mind? Otherwise, unless he puts in specifics he stands there as a great emblazing generality that means nothing.

I want to make reference to one more instance. One could spend all of his time studying what the hon. Prime Minister of this province says out on the hustings. Such as:

I would ask you to consider the sudden and abrupt economic, social, cultural and political upheaval—his speechwriters really let the adjectives get away on them there:

—the social, economic, cultural and political upheaval that has taken place in the province of Quebec. The government of Quebec has been able to harness the creative forces in the "quiet" revolution in the formulation of a progressive policy of economic development. The people of Quebec identify themselves with new steel mills and factories.

Is that not wonderful? That is the end of the quotation. What an indictment. What a self-indictment of himself and his government to say that, to point to the intellectual, cultural and spiritual activity that is going on in a sister province, as he does, and to have an absolute vacancy about what is going on in his own.

The truth is, of course, that the people identify themselves with the ferment in Quebec because there are channels of communication between the people and the government of Quebec. Rene Levesque is looked upon as a true representative of the aspirations of the Quebecois. But this government has lost contact—there are no channels of communication between the people and the government. For 22 years the majority of the people have voted against the Tory party, and for 22 years the majority of the people of this province have got what they did not want—they have had to suffer the Tory party.

The one possibility of some contact and communication—that is to say, the criticism and the stimuli provided by our intellectuals—is successfully castrated because the first citizen appoints those intellectuals to an advisory council, to which I have adverted before. He gives them a place of status and prestige. When he gets up I would like to hear more about this. He can occupy all of my time that he wants in telling me what the federal government has done to prohibit the development of a national policy.

A remarkable book has come out, a book that is very much at point in the light of the passage of the medical care statute. I thought it a rather interesting fact that the man who piloted the medical care insurance scheme through this House, who unhappily is absent today, should tell us that during his youth he heard three eminent personages in the political life of our nation speak. He heard J. S. Woodsworth, he heard Mackenzie King and he declined to follow either of them.

Surprisingly enough he chose to follow the one man, the one man who treated his Canadianism so lightly that he dispensed with it, he sloughed it off. The country that had made that man wealthy, the people who had made him wealthy, were relegated to a very distant place in his affection and that man, R. B. Bennett, having sloughed off his citizenship in this country, having achieved the highest honour that his fellow citizens could bestow upon him, he chose to go and live the life in a foreign land in the guise of a country squire. I thought that rather remarkable, that the hon. Minister of Health should tell us during that debate that that man was his spiritual bellwether, the man who had guided him in politics—

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): What foreign land?

Mr. Sopha: The foreign land? The United Kingdom, and if the hon. member does not like that description, he can lump it.

At this session we in the Opposition took on the financial institutions of this country. I said before that the financial institutions had great influence on this government. Of course they have. The insurance industry has written all the insurance legislation that we have on the books. It is there as the echo of their desires in the realm of insurance.

Once again the insurance industry—and when one speaks of that industry they are talking about all of the institutions of corporate finance. We cannot single out the insurance industry from the banks and the trust companies, because they are all parts of one piece, they are all parts of one mosaic, which is the title of Professor Porter's book, "The Vertical Mosaic."

The corporate élite imprinted its desires upon the hon. leader of this government and in some way or other said to him: "You will not remove medical care insurance from our purview. You will not deprive us of the right to sell insurance policies in respect of the health of our people."

I was one that appreciated the seriousness of the antagonists that we took on, because they are a powerful group. I came to the conclusion, sir, that though I was a member of this assembly, I was not the member of an assembly that really rules the province, this is not the place where real power resides. Real power resides with others.

Now I understand, having seen the events of this session and having had the opportunity to read Professor Porter's survey, now I understand why the members of the corporate élite do not descend into the realm of politics. They do not run for political office because they do not have to. There is no need to run for political office when you can control the government of the province without the necessity of getting into the arena and becoming bloodied and muddied by the dust of that arena.

Professor Porter hearkened, if anybody is still listening after 557 pages of study, to those members of the Legislature who have not read a book for 20 years. I commend this one, read this one. His study is a scholarly study. After 557 pages he comes to a conclusion. Listen to it in its starkness:

Canada, it may be concluded from the evidence presented in the preceding chapters, has a long way to go to become in any sense a thoroughgoing democracy.

That is a remarkable statement, is it not?

—has a long way to go to become in any real sense a thoroughgoing democracy.

In the first part of the book we saw something of the way in which class differences act as barriers to individual achievement. Even into the 1960s Canadian educational systems have yet to become democratized through to the university level. The possibilities for upward social mobility are reduced and at the same time shortages of highly trained people for the new occupational structure continue. In this respect Canada is behind 20th century democracy elsewhere.

What a terrible indictment of our system. In 1965 this scholar, resident at Carleton University where he shares one of the important departments, is saying that we are not a democracy.

In a nutshell his thesis is this: There is no mobility of ability. Able people cannot get to the top in our system. Able people are held down and we know bloody well, we know damn well, that in many of the institutions, in many of the important institutions of this country, and I say it today, Anglo-Saxons only wanted. No Jews and hunkies and no central European and no wops; Anglo-Saxons only permitted.

That is true of the Toronto stock exchange. That is true of most of our private clubs. That is true of most of our philanthropic organizations.

The other day, because they treated my son so well, I sent a small donation to the hospital for sick children and I looked over their list of trustees. A remarkable institution. I just pick it as an example of philanthropic organizations which give the individual a place of status and prestige in our community if he is on the board; he is somebody if he is on the board. Anglo-Saxons only! What Professor Underhill calls the WASP.

No wops, no Frenchmen, no hunkies, nobody but the White Anglo-Saxon Protestant. That is true. Until we change that—and I do not know how we are going to change that in this country to allow mobility of ability. An Italian said to me recently that in some of their private clubs, where they control the economy and the government and everything else that is important in this country in order to dislodge them, one would have to go in with a baseball bat. That is how entrenched they are, at the very least.

I hesitate to say it, but in all honesty I must say it, that one of the chief contact men between the "corps d'élite," those who really control power in this country, in this government, is Leslie Frost. Leslie Frost laid down the reins of office and hardly a day went by until Leslie Frost was embraced by the managers of corporate finance. He went on one board after another, and how brazen they can get. How brazen one of them got, in taking him on the board; you need only look at statutes 1950, chapter 33, to see the reason he went on one of the boards.

I saw him around here during the Medicare debate; I saw him with the hon. Prime Minister and a couple of other Ministers.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The hon. member never saw me with Frost during the Medicare debate.

Mr. Sopha: Forgive me. I saw him walking down the stairs to the Cabinet dining room and I thought I saw—perhaps I was mistaken—I thought I saw the hon. Prime Minister with Mr. Frost. He was with a couple of Ministers.

But he is probably the chief contact man: Canada Life Insurance Company, Bank of Montreal, National Trust, and so on.

It is the truth. I speak the truth. I point to these things and if they are not true, then they will be swept aside, but I submit to hon. members on the basis of Professor Porter's book, that they are true; power does not reside in this Legislature, power resides somewhere else.

Finally, to show what Professor Porter thinks of the government, I am going to read one more excerpt. I prefer the judgment of Professor Porter to that of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests. This man is a scholar.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Minister of Lands and Forests): Does the hon. member agree with Porter?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed. This man is a scholar. I will not use the fitting term to describe his antithesis. Listen to what he thinks of the government hon. members. Every private member of the Legislature should listen to what Professor Porter thinks of him.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Labour): Is the hon. member excluded?

Mr. Sopha: He says:

It is doubtful if members of Parliament or members of provincial Legislatures have important decision-making powers. In his collective portrait, Professor Ward has shown how short-lived is the political career of members of Parliament—about 40 per cent of each Parliament is made up of newcomers. Most members of Legislatures, provincial and federal, do what their leaders tell them or suggest to them as being the correct course of action. Collectively they may act as checks on Cabinets or sources of information about how the country feels on certain public issues, but they do not partake in any real sense in political decision-making.

That is what he thinks of the hon. members. They do not partake in any real decision-making, and we know that the Medicare bill was handed to the Conservative caucus as a fait accompli. We know that many members of the caucus cannot stomach it to this day—

Mr. White: That is entirely incorrect.

Mr. Sopha:—but it was handed to them as being the policy of the government and party discipline demanded that they support it. I do not know what the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) and the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Walker) are going to do to be re-elected, having voted for that statute, and how they will be able to bail themselves out of that stigma, if it remains in its present form. Many of them have told us privately how much they revile it, how much they hate it. They would not say it on the floor of the House, but it is an example of what Professor Porter was talking about. The decision was handed to them by John Parmenter Robarts, who says, "This is the policy and party discipline requires you to support it." That is the way the Legislature functions.

I have talked a long time and I have said a good many things, but I say this to the hon. Prime Minister, in conclusion. He has not got the moral courage—let me repeat that, he has not got the moral courage—to dissolve this House and go to the people of this province on his Medicare bill.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is the biggest joke—

Mr. Sopha: We are willing to go to the people on that issue. This is an important social matter, the way the health of our people will be cared for. One sat in this House last night and watched two characteristics of the hon. members of the government in respect of that important social reform. One watched arrogance among them. The other thing was buffoonery—the way they banged their desks, the way the hon. Minister of Highways sat there and banged his desk in order to demonstrate to the first citizen how loyal he is.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways): The hon. member is a buffoon right now.

Mr. Sopha: They will bang their desks this afternoon, and when they bang their desks, I will remember the words of Sir James George Frazer, who wrote a better book than Berton's "The Comfortable Pew." The hon. Minister of Highways should remember this, and the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) should remember this. Frazer said:

Modern man's similarities with the ancient savage are more profound than his differences.

That strikes me, when I see them bang their desks at the slightest stimulus.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The hon. member is providing a striking example of man's similarity with the ancient savage!

Mr. Sopha: I say to the hon. Prime Minister that if he cares to summon up the moral courage, let us go to the people on this issue. At the very least we will test this issue in the Bracondale byelection, sometime this fall, if he calls that byelection at an appropriate time where we can put his Medicare policy to the people as against ours—public operation as against operation by those who pursue the private motive.

Unfortunately I will always be free to say these things. That is one of my qualities, in contrast to the hon. Prime Minister—I am free to say the things; he is not free, he is the captain of others, the real rulers of the province. But I am free to say these things. May the Lord preserve me in my freedom. That is a good test between us.

He spoke last night about our political cleavage. It is a long time since the people of this province have had the opportunity to choose between two competing political philosophies. They have the opportunity now.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is not even two years ago that they had this choice.

Mr. Sopha: They had no issue like this one.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, they had a wonderful issue.

Mr. Sopha: They had no issue like this one. They had "done," the election of the "done."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, and of course, was it on the television? He got on the television. Or was it in the paper that he said that he was sorry about that, because when all is said and done, he is an honest man and he was sorry that he allowed the Madison Avenue manipulators of his image to put him in the false position of appearing before the millions of our people and saying, "Done," in respect of a social measure that drastically needed action and was not yet touched.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Reform Institutions): He meant it was done in respect of—

Mr. Sopha: But that now is very current. That was 1963. Now in 1965 the people of this province have the advantage of seeing what the government has done, and what it has done does not measure up, because at least half a dozen—a corporal's guard—of the clergy are outside picketing these buildings, expressing their discontent with the move that the government has made. They are merely symptomatic.

I walked out last night with one of the government hon. members, and there were people risking the regard that their parishioners hold them in. They risk that regard to come here and to demonstrate, and one of the government hon. members, an utter, absolute fool, looked at them, these people acting in sincerity, and he said, "Is it not a shame?" I said, "What is a shame?" He said, "Is it not shame that those clergymen would act in that fashion?" At that moment I could not reply, because there was no reply possible to him. That person so misunderstood what is going on in this country that he would not know enough to come in out of the rain, unless the Whip went to him and said, "It is raining out, come on in."

Sir, thank you for your indulgence and I bid you adieu until next year.

Hon. J. P. Roberts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in this House in the last few years, I have had many very enjoyable occasions to follow what I have come to term the gospel and the fables according to Saint Sopha, and today I think that we have been treated to just about as undisciplined an exhibition as I have heard in this House for many years.

I will say nothing about his comments on Mr. Ford's editorial other than to say it did seem to me that the only thing that prompted him to mention it at all was the fact that I touched on something in that speech that he had touched on and he felt I might have intruded on his preserves.

I will tell the hon. member that I am glad to share his desire for a national policy and I think that the writings of Sir Wilfrid Laurier are, after all these years, in the common domain and the public domain and he really has no right to build a fence around them so that no one else can use them.

I noticed very carefully the parts that he did not quote as well as the parts he did quote, and I felt that the whole performance really related right back to him personally as an individual, because he was a little miffed.

With that I will leave those comments, except to quote from the speech I made—and I have no desire whatsoever to repeat this speech in the House of Commons. The hon. member quoted some comments I made about the ability of the government of Quebec to harness the creative forces in the quiet revolution in the formulation of progressive policies of economic development in the province of Quebec. I said that the people of Quebec identify themselves with new steel mills and factories and that there is a sense of participation that they feel in this revolution which is going on in Quebec, industrially, culturally, educationally and socially.

I see nothing wrong with the adjectives I used. They seem to be pretty reasonable examples of the English language; perhaps not quite so exotic as some my hon. friend uses, but perhaps a little more understandable to average people.

He stopped at that point, having quoted from the speech, and then lashed out at me personally to say, "What kind of man is this who speaks thus about a neighbouring province?" I must admit that he stopped at the bottom of a page, and like some of the explanations I hear from that side of the House; maybe he just failed to turn the page over, but on the next page I go on to say, and I quote:

Here in Ontario you can find the same sets of personal identification in the accomplishments of the past 20 years.

Now this is the part of the speech the hon. member conveniently left out:

There is, for example, a general feeling of pride among the residents of Metropolitan Toronto in the fact that their city has evolved a truly cosmopolitan centre which has a rich and varied cultural life. In almost every city, town or village of Ontario, people will point with pride to new homes, factories, public buildings, schools and highways as physical reminders of their material and cultural advancement. The pace of growth in Ontario has been very rapid but it has also been spread over a longer period. I am convinced, however, that the people of Ontario are very proud of their achievements. There is, I believe, a deep feeling of confidence in the economic strength of this province.

I go on to suggest that:

This sense of identification and pride is recognizable in every province of Canada; where economic growth has taken place this feeling of the people is intensified.

Perhaps this should be put in association, just for the record, with the remarks that the hon. member withdrew from this speech and the comments he made about them.

As a matter of fact, perhaps you would really be interested to know—what I was saying in relation to the national policy is that, within our country today, these feelings are developing in the provinces as entities. What I was suggesting was a national policy, instead of allowing this sense of identification to be associated only with the province in which one lives, with a truly national policy developed by a federal government. These feelings which exist among our people now are directed particularly toward the province in which we live, and I think we have examples of this right across the country. They should be funnelled together, striving toward one common country rather than only the association with the province in which the individual may reside.

This really was the nub of my remarks concerning a national policy, and I believe it, and I think it is so.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Are you preaching for a call?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Not I. I am glad you raised it because this is another part of that editorial. I said I was not going to refer to it, but now I will read on from where you stopped. You will pardon my immodesty, but I live in London and read the London paper, so it would be natural that I would have read this editorial. I will read from it:

Premier John Robarts will probably not thank me for this column. He has definitely told me that he is very happy at Queen's Park. He feels he has a job to do in Ontario and has not the slightest interest in moving to Ottawa to undertake the difficult task of leader of the federal Conservative party, if and when Right Honourable John Diefenbaker retires.

Now that part of it, of course, you conveniently left out. Then, in the face of that, you turned to me and said: "Are you preaching for a call?"

Mr. Sopha: I am not a press relations man.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I will just allow hon. members to make up their own minds.

Now I did want to go back to some of the comments that were made, not only by the hon. member for Sudbury but by the hon. member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), concerning the proceedings in the House. I point out this particular session breaks itself naturally into two parts. There was the period from January 20 to April 14; we recessed from April 14 to April 27; and then resumed until today's date. Now the House has actually been in session for 101 days. Two of those days we did not sit in order to attend the regional development conference and one other day was devoted to trips that committees of the House wished to make.

This is the longest session that has ever been held and while that does not necessarily mean it is the best session, I think that the record of achievement here this year has been very high. Since I have the honour of leading the government and therefore being in charge of the affairs of this House, I have made a very conscious effort to bring more of the hon. members into the debates and activity of the Legislature and I am happy to say that, as far as I am concerned, I feel that we have achieved something.

I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Sudbury that there would be virtue in limiting the time of the large general debates that we have. The debate on the Speech from the Throne, for instance, lasted for 15 days. That is, it was debated on 15 separate days; but I do not think that on very many days it constituted the full business of the session. I would point out to you that, during those 15 days, there were 51 hon. members who participated.

Regional development, the Mercer reformatory—I had these things analyzed for my own information—education, automation, mental health, retarded and emotionally disturbed children and hospitals were all debated and gave hon. members an opportunity to make their contribution and put before the House what sense of foreboding they might have or what areas in which they felt there was legislative need. I would hate to see those debates limited. I do not see any virtue in looking at some other particular organization and picking one aspect of it and saying that it would work well here.

If you are going to look at the rules of this House, in my view you have to look at them as a whole. In other words, you cannot pick the part dealing with those two debates and say if they are changed we would have to completely change our procedure when we are dealing with the estimates. That procedure has been built up over the years and while it becomes perhaps tiresome, particularly for the Minister concerned when he answers many times the same questions in a great variety of ways, nonetheless over the years this method of dealing with the examination of the functions of government, the administration of government, has come into being and in my opinion is quite efficient—even though it takes up a good deal more time than it used to.

The Budget debate lasted for 13 days as opposed to 15 days for the Throne debate. There were 33 speakers in that debate, and once again the same remarks I made would apply. I will not go into these other matters about speaking before the orders of the day.

There are two points the hon. member for Sudbury has made in this House on many, many occasions; that is, if you support the Progressive-Conservative Party you are supposed to disappear off the face of the earth. You cannot be recognized at any time as Progressive-Conservative, otherwise it is dirty politics. Now, Mr. Speaker, there are lots of Progressive-Conservatives in this province and they think they are just as much entitled to go about their business, to do as they please, as are members of the Opposition.

As for that discussion here about the young lady—and this is indicative of what I mean—asking these children who the Prime Minister of Ontario or Canada might be; it is as if to say in a schoolroom you cannot ask a child who the Prime Minister of Canada is because he is a Liberal and therefore that is a political remark. Now, if you are going to speak about the leaders of our country, and our provinces, and in all sorts of areas, you are going to have to name them by name and the political persuasion. What would the hon. member have this young lady say? What would you have her say as she stands here with these children? Would you have her say: "I cannot tell you the name of the Prime Minister of Ontario because that would be a political remark"?

Mr. Sopha: I would suggest that she would teach them catechism.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sopha: We do not permit it in our public schools—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a completely ridiculous argument. I can assure the hon. member that there is no policy on the part of this government which instructs these young ladies. I have not listened to one of them for some years. I used to come here fairly frequently when I was Minister of Education and greet these various groups. Frankly I was always impressed with the knowledge these young ladies had of the Chamber and the affairs of the province.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have not been in recently, but I can assure the hon. member there is no such policy. Frankly, I just have a feeling that the hon. member is ultra-sensitive in certain areas.

As for the question of statements before the orders of the day, I make no apologies for what the government does. We will continue to do it. We will continue to do it as long as we think that as a government we have positions to put before the people of this province upon which they eventually will pass judgment. I am sure that the hon. member would be the first one to complain if he could not find out what the policy of this government was. If there were not statements made here before the orders of the day upon which the Opposition for instance can base an attack—this is what many of their questions are for, they are seeking to find out what the government's position is in order to see if they agree or disagree with it. I think most often they disagree and this is quite proper.

But to stand and say that a Minister of the Crown and a man who is responsible for the administration of a department and a man who establishes the record of the government upon which the people inevitably and eventually vote; to say that he should be muzzled; to stand in his place here and not tell the people of this province what he is doing and indeed how he is doing it, would be in my opinion a negation of the rights of our people.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury asked a question and threw out some kind of a challenge about what the position was that we as a government put to the federal government concerning some of the economic matters that are being noised abroad at the present time. Perhaps just for the sake of the record I will read to him a position that was put to the federal government on May 31, last. If the hon. members will recall, there had been a federal-provincial conference scheduled for that date which was to last for several days. Due to various movements of some of the Premiers, pressure of business here and there, the conference was postponed.

However, there was a federal-provincial meeting held to discuss the question of low employment areas. This is a policy being developed by the federal government in connection with what is called ADA—and, if I can just recall, it is area development agency. This is a programme the federal government is developing to replace the taxation incentives they have offered in the past in order to move industry into areas in which they think industry should be moved.

This discussion between the federal and provincial government took place at the senior service level. As a result the conference itself was postponed until mid-July.

This is the position that the Ontario government put. I do not know whether this particular document has been made public. I do not think it was released here in Toronto, it may have been in Ottawa. In any event I see no reason why it should not be released here at the moment. I want to disabuse the hon. member's mind of the idea that we do not have positions in this province and that I talk in these—I like the reference to the bubble gum. I sometimes feel that he blows out clouds and then gets on top of them and we have to look a long way up to find where he is. However, he always comes down with something of a smile.

But in order to assure him that we have positions and we do not always talk in generalities—I have analyzed some of his own remarks and it is pretty difficult to make a speech in anything other than generalities, unless one wants to turn it into a lecture and fill it full of statistics and so on. In any event here is the presentation we made, and the hon. member may draw his own conclusions as to whether it has had any effect on events since.

All Canadians are genuinely interested in the problems of economic development.

Now that is a pretty general statement but like all truisms it is true.

The Canada economic council has recently published target goals for 1970 which set out the economic growth which will be necessary if Canada is to provide growing employment and income opportunities for all her citizens. These goals provide an excellent framework within which economic development across Canada can proceed over the next few years.

The real validity of the economic council and its goals for 1970 lies in stimulating Canadians to take up and achieve the challenge of higher levels of economic performance. The targets will mean nothing unless they are implemented at the practical policy level. Ontario believes in the validity and achievability of these goals and intends to utilize them fully in the design of public policy over the next five years.

Now I believe that this is nothing more than a repetition of what the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall) said during his Budget debate, and the hon. member cannot have it much firmer than that.

Proposals, policies and programmes dealing with regional development in Canada need clarification over what is meant by the term "regional." Lack of agreed terminology may lead to overlapping jurisdiction and needless duplication of effort. This confusion is often an inhibiting factor influencing the growth and development plans of the public and private sectors.

Ontario interprets the role and responsibility of the federal government in regional matters as ensuring that all Canadians share in the opportunity to achieve and enjoy a continually rising standard of living.

That might be termed a generality, too, but I think it is a goal to which we all aspire and I do not know how else you could put it.

The federal government's economic point of view must be national and no erosion of power or responsibility in such fields as monetary, fiscal or exchange rate policy should occur. The federal government has a legitimate concern for ensuring minimum standards of social and economic welfare for all Canadians through such national programmes and institutions as the Bank of Canada, the unemployment insurance commission, the national employment service and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Ontario firmly supports the federal government, in principle and with tax revenue, in measures designed to facilitate income redistribution. Allocating and administering these intergovernmental transfers is and must remain one of the federal government's major regional responsibilities. However, while Ontario firmly believes in the validity of the present sharing arrangements for these intergovernmental transfers, it will be up to the provinces to allocate these funds internally in the form and manner which they see best for improving their own economic base and furthering their regional development programme.

If the federal government's responsibilities are broad, relating to Canadians as a whole, so the regionalization employed should also be broad. For some purposes there will be only one effective region and that is the whole nation. In other cases, a regional grouping of provinces may be required.

What Ontario stresses most emphatically is that regional development inside Ontario is primarily a provincial matter and responsibility. Ontario is most anxious to co-operate with the federal government over a wide area where there is parallel jurisdiction under The British North America Act, but Ontario reserves the right to set its own policies and priorities concerning internal economic development.

The tremendous expansion in the public sector in the 20th century has largely been concentrated in highways, power developments, schools and educational centres, health and welfare services, water supply and sewage disposal. These are areas of provincial responsibility and jurisdiction. The provinces have come of age quickly and forcefully. The huge investment expenditures which must be made for attendant physical assets in these areas of responsibility must be effectively planned and co-ordinated as to economic timing and impact within both the overall structure of the provincial economy and its regional components. In Ontario's case, efforts to meet public needs have been handicapped by inadequate sources of revenue.

Ontario reaffirms its Prime Minister's stand that "the ultimate responsibility for the equitable distribution of economic opportunity within a province must rest with the government of that province" and not with the federal government. Thus, while Ontario affirms its belief in the soundness of the recently announced economic goals for Canada to 1970, Ontario must be free to apply the necessary policy and programmes designed to achieve those targets as they apply to Ontario, given the broad framework of federal policy mentioned previously.

Ontario is primarily concerned with promoting the growth of the provincial economy as a whole. Its regional development policies in themselves, then, become a secondary though vitally important aspect of provincial growth policy generally. Ontario's development policy should be determined and operated within the province—for, by and with the various elements of the community. Ontario must be free in her regional development policy to avoid the dangers either of single-formula principles or of "solutions" which are imposed by outside authorities. Regional development problems in Ontario stem partly from pockets of low income, partly from the strains put upon our present municipal structure by rapid rural-urban shifts, and partly from resource-base problems. Just as there are differences in attitudes, needs and resources, both human and material, among the regions, so there will have to be different solutions.

To enhance productivity growth and expand income and employment in the province, Ontario must achieve effective co-ordination between provincial, municipal and regional authorities including a fundamental restructuring of local government. In this regard, specific regional development priorities may be upset if the federal government initiates programmes without prior consultation and agreement with Ontario, the result of which may have significant effects on Ontario's regional economic structure.

There are many examples of effective federal-provincial co-operation on programmes which affect provincial economic development, and we may affirm strongly that Ontario's relationships with most federal government departments are characterized by thorough co-operation and prior consultation on new programmes, as well as a mutual respect for each other's capabilities and responsibilities.

The federal government with its special responsibility for Canadian economic growth and its international treaty-making power was the relevant authority to deal with the United States concerning the automotive trade plan. However, the federal authorities should have explored more fully the avenues of consultation with Ontario prior to announcing the plan. Canada's automotive industry is largely concentrated in this province and, while Ontario may have much to gain in long-run benefits from the agreement, its impact on our industrial structure and labour force will bring about important short- and long-term dislocations. We feel that we should have been consulted extensively beforehand. Not only will the effects involve worker retraining, population shifts, housing and basic education, but also present and future industrial location and structure.

Ontario recommends recognition of the principle in federal-provincial economic relations that prior consultation take place with the provinces with regard to agreements, domestic or international, relating to a particular industry or group of industries. Ontario feels this principle is consistent with both federal responsibility for overall Canadian economic growth and provincial responsibility for the scope and direction of provincial growth. Ontario cannot subscribe to the illusion that Canadian productivity growth may be increased through measures which, intentionally or not, sap the productivity base of any partners in Confederation.

Similarly, in regional matters within a province, Ontario's position is that such programmes as ARDA or the ADA—that is a new programme—designated area programme must be the outgrowth of federal-provincial consultation. This feeling stems from the development priorities adopted by Ontario. Programmes and policies designed to ameliorate conditions of low income must, in our view, be adapted to fit a province's overall growth programme and not the other way around. After all, many of the problems of regional development become much more tractable against the background of a buoyant and growing economy. A misallocation of resources may occur if undue devotion to regional problems were to divert our attention from growth generally.

In this light, we view the recent suggestions of the federal government with regard to designated areas as raising two major issues.

First, the programme involves regional economic development within Ontario, and yet was developed without the extensive consultation and consent of the Ontario government.

Second, we in Ontario are not convinced of the economic rationale of the designated-area proposals. They are designed to attract new manufacturing and processing industries by means of substantial cash grants and tax incentives into areas that have been characterized by low non-farm family income levels or by persistently high unemployment rates, or both. Many of these designated areas in Canada, particularly those suggested for Ontario, may be unsuitable for the establishment of new manufacturing and processing firms.

Ontario believes that these firms may siphon off economic resources in terms of skilled labour, entrepreneurship and ancillary services that could make a larger and more productive contribution to provincial output were they to locate in other more favourable growth centres. In short, Ontario believes the present ADA approach conflicts with the provincial economic objective of efficient overall growth.

Ontario also believes that there could be greater co-ordination among federal government policies which affect regional development within provinces. We believe that the area development administration could perform a most useful function if its energy were co-ordinated with ARDA and other federal agencies in the provision of technical assistance and advice to the provinces in their provincial regional development programmes.

While we are pleased with the recent announcement on the labour mobility programme, we believe there may be some inconsistency in its relationship to the designated-area programme. Ideally, such a programme should help labour to relocate from areas of low income opportunity and productivity to areas of greater economic opportunity and productivity. It would appear logical that any special assistance in addition to the national programme—in other words, grants rather than loans—should be directed to moving people from designated areas rather than into designated areas.

The economic council of Canada review stressed the vital importance of government assistance to labour mobility if its targets were to be met. We believe that the provision of relocation grants on a national scale is the type of programme required.

While much of the above has been critical, and deliberately so, there is much room for closer liaison between Ontario and the federal government. Ontario is most anxious to explore, and where possible extend the range of federal-provincial consultation and co-operation. We believe that the basis of economics is sound logic. An economic division of labour as between the federal and provincial governments dictates that each authority undertake to exploit the comparative advantage it possesses. In this case, comparative advantage has already been partially determined by, and to some degree already developed through, The British North America Act.

To achieve both federal and provincial objectives the principles used in the exercise of economic authority should be stated clearly and unequivocally:

"The federal government must be the relevant authority to develop and implement national economic policies and programmes designed to optimize the growth of per caput national income.

"The provinces must be the relevant authority responsible for the design and implementation of policies affecting the optimal allocation of resources within their geographic areas. Ontario is of the opinion that ADA could perform a useful function if its energy were co-ordinated with ARDA and other federal agencies in the provision of technical assistance to the provinces in the development of provincial regional development programmes.

"Ontario believes that the federal government should provide financial assistance to the provinces for regional development purposes according to a formula which would help to narrow the gaps in Canadian living standards. Such intergovernmental transfers should leave the provinces free to allocate the funds in accordance with their own regional development policies."

Mr. Speaker, that was the position put. These matters, of course, are not yet complete. There are discussions still continuing in this area.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Leader of the Opposition): I wonder if I could ask the hon. Prime Minister—and I appreciate very much getting clarification—the paper that he has just read, was that a paper presented by the representatives of the government of Ontario to a federal-provincial conference?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It was presented as a position in a conference of officials from various departments of both governments.

Mr. Thompson: Would the hon. Prime Minister tell me, was this last year or—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, this was May 31 last. As I explained in the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, the federal-provincial conference was scheduled for May 31 and was not held for a variety of reasons. So, to deal with this one phase, certain officials from this government and from the government in Ottawa got together. The hon. leader of the Opposition was challenging me to put before this House some of the positions that we put before the federal government. This is a position we put before the federal government.

Mr. Thompson: Could I ask then, sir: In view of this, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me first, as the hon. member for Sudbury pointed out, we understood the approach taken on federal-provincial conferences was that they had been secret. We appreciate now that these documents obviously are going to be made public. We assume therefore that this will be the government's approach. To follow through in logic the government will have representation, not only from government but I had hoped from Opposition at these conferences if they feel that they can publicize these documents that are presented to the federal-provincial conference. One of the criticisms, as I think the hon. Prime Minister has been aware, is that—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, the leader of the Opposition is making a speech.

Mr. Thompson: I am sorry! Could I ask the hon. Prime Minister: One of the criticisms has been that the federal-provincial conferences have been secret and therefore there has been no debate on the floor of the Legislature and the public across Ontario is not informed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I am aware, of course, of what the hon. leader of the Opposition is saying. I am also aware of the difficulty in both respects. I am personally of the opinion that there are areas in which there could be less secrecy than there is now, but I can assure the hon. leader of the Opposition I am one of 11 and my opinions do not necessarily predominate.

On the other hand, I would say that by the mere nature of some of these consultations I feel that there has to be some degree of disclosure. It is not a question of secrecy necessarily, because there are many press gathering at these conferences and many press meet there.

In fact I think the press security of it is a bit of a joke. Reporters are enterprising and the people from all across the country, from different provinces, are not too inclined to observe 100 per cent agreement on press security. However, I must say this, that anything that is decided at these conferences, it seems to me, will eventually have to be discussed and debated in this House in any event.

Let us take, for instance, the question of the amendment to The British North America Act. It does not matter what decision this government makes, it comes back here for debate. As a government, once again we must behave like a government and we must take a position. We cannot wait to consult everybody. We have the responsibility of government, if we discharge it poorly we will be defeated. This is our system.

So we come back here with a position that we have taken and we put it before this House and if it is simply not acceptable, why the resolution we introduce would not have been supported by you and so on. But we had a full debate.

As a matter of fact I was going to mention that in my remarks, but I got sidetracked on various other things. In my opinion the debate we had dealing with the Constitution of Canada was one of the better debates that I have heard in this House since I have been here.

I note the hon. member for Sudbury says that he now has second thoughts about the position he took at that time. The point I make to the House is this: Regardless of the fact that the discussions we had as a group of 11 governments meeting together, regardless of the fact the press may not have been allowed to be in those meetings, eventually what was decided was subjected to just about as close scrutiny as anything I have seen across the country. If one reads the newspaper articles and editorial opinions from coast to coast, it was very intense and I might say, by the same token, it was very diverse. There were distinctly opposite positions held.

This really is what I would term a working paper, but it fills in the gap that the hon. member for Sudbury felt was there. He wanted to know what our position was. I had at hand a position taken as recently as May 18, outlining what we considered to be our position vis-à-vis the federal government in this one particular field, so I brought it forward for his edification.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this debate—

Mr. Thompson: Would the hon. Prime Minister mind! I think that he is as concerned as many of the rest of us are, that there are people who are suggesting and our papers suggest, that when the governments have their federal-provincial conference it is a fait accompli. We do not agree with them; I agree with the hon. Prime Minister that when he comes back we have a debate, for example, on the amendment to The British North America Act. If it is examined and the very fact that the Rt. hon. Prime Minister of Canada is a Liberal does not necessarily mean that I must go along with whatever he says and so on, and similarly across the provinces. But I noticed the hon. Prime Minister mentioning that there are areas of secrecy which he thinks are really unnecessary. He mentioned this working paper. I listened with considerable interest; a lot of thought has gone into it and it may lessen the difficulty where the government feels Ontario would move in on shared programmes and so on, in designated areas.

I think we get very informed debate in the House. There would be better debate in the House if it would be possible for some of these papers to be made available to the Opposition. As I understand, on this occasion, because of the hon. member for Sudbury, you decided that you would show this paper as an example of the kind of thing that goes on. I think the hon. Prime Minister said that this was the first time that this paper had ever been revealed.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am not certain of that, but I must tell the hon. member the history of this particular document. At one stage I considered bringing it in here before the orders of the day, but various events transpired and it did not happen. I would be very interested in exploring, during these long summer months when I have nothing to do, the possibility of arranging some form of procedure. This is why I do not like tight rules in the Legislature—and this is something else I was going to mention.

Various devices we have adopted in this House, where we have flexibility, have worked well. For instance, I could mention to you the way we handle the reports of select committees when they are put on the order paper and debated. Search as you will, you will find no justification or no rule that provides for this procedure; but this is an ad hoc arrangement that has now grown into something a little greater than that.

If you recall, upon occasion when there was no liquor legislation before the House, we used the device of taking the report of the liquor licence board and putting it upon the order paper to get an item of business on the order paper which could serve as the basis for a debate. Now perhaps we need to exercise our ingenuity and find some way that some of these matters dealing with federal-provincial relationships and the attitudes that this government might take, and is taking, would be open to debate. I would be very happy to see if we could not find some means of arranging for debates of this kind to take place—

Mr. Thompson: Before the event.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Pardon?

Mr. Thompson: Before the event, rather than after.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: These would be basic positions but I might say to you, in all frankness and honesty, there is very little in the statement that I read to you today that was not in the opening statement of the hon. Minister of Economics and Development, Mr. Speaker. He laid out before this House a very complete report—I believe it took some hours—but I have not checked this statement against his statement exactly. I think that I would be correct in saying that there is very little in what I have put on the record here this afternoon that is not contained in the statement that he made.

There may be some things that relate in particular to this one programme, which the federal government brought forth in more detail after his estimates were in, but I would be happy to attempt to arrange some method of debating. When you get down to the tax agreements I suppose that, while these decisions will be multilateral in one respect, in another respect they could be completely unilateral because the federal government could tax us within its own jurisdiction. It has a right to impose taxes on the people generally, and I think inevitably that it is its final right to decide where that tax money is going to go. For instance, in the whole area of equalization payments, special subsidies for certain areas and so on—while there may be a good deal of discussion beforehand—it will be inevitably and finally a bill of the Parliament of Canada that will decide that.

However, there are areas where these things can be debated and people can make their positions known. Perhaps this is another reason why we should not be too hasty in disposing of the debates that can take place on the Throne Speech and the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the question at hand. We are dealing, at this moment, with a motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means, which was amended by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. member for Sudbury mentioned so many unrelated topics in his speech, and I was looking for a little bit of information, that now I have decided not to deal with them because they do not seem to be of as much consequence now as they did when he was saying them—a tribute to your oratory but not to your content.

The first item of the amendment is moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition as stated:

That this House regrets that the Budget has failed to make adequate provision for the proper use of Ontario's financial resources as well as its human resources in that it has neglected to include action upon:

1. The encouragement, fostering and development of new industries throughout the province.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by the time I am finished commenting on these various amendments, I am quite sure the hon. leader of the Opposition, and his friends over there will see the utter ridiculousness of this amendment and will agree with us that it should not have been put on the order paper. It should not have been made in the first place.

Now, sir, during this past year The Corporations Tax Act was amended to make our incentives coincide with those of the federal government in the field of encouragement to industry. The Ontario trade crusade, of course, was continued during this year. Eighteen sales missions are planned for this current year to carry the story of Ontario's secondary industry around the world. There will be 90 buyers brought into Ontario from abroad to observe for themselves the products that are made here.

This government will participate in eight international fairs. We have launched an international advertising programme. In 1964 there were 163 new branch plants located in Ontario and these 163 branch plants created 5,000 new jobs. There were 104 new manufacturing arrangements completed between people manufacturing here and people manufacturing in other countries, and 523 companies expanded production facilities. This all resulted in the creation of 87,000 new jobs in toto during 1964, so I think that we have done what you asked; we have encouraged, fostered and developed new industries throughout this province.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The second one provides:

Neglected to include action upon the following:

2. Provision of proper educational facilities for training and retraining of workers in view of the challenge of automation.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rowntree) laid before this House, his department has been completely reorganized and he has launched an on-the-job training programme.

Since the vocational training agreement was signed in 1961, this province has taken 64 per cent of the total investment in new technical and vocational training facilities. In 1963-64, 51 per cent of all the unemployed persons in Canada, who were undertaking training, were enrolled here in Ontario. Of course, your amendment completely ignores everything that has been done in our vocational training centres, our institutes of technology and the expansion of composite schools throughout the province to bring technical training and retraining into areas that have never had it before. Certainly it completely ignores the Ontario institute for studies and education, which will examine the need for further changes in our educational system.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is completely unrealistic to say that we have not made provision for proper educational facilities.

Now, sir, the third one is that we have failed the assurance of prosperity to those who draw their incomes from our agricultural industry. Well, we have introduced into the House in this session The Milk Act, which is a complete revision of this very contentious problem and which appears to have been accepted very enthusiastically by some 87,000 milk producers in the province. We have introduced amendments to assist in farm marketing. We have provided assistance for the construction of farm labour residence, and this is very important, in dealing with seasonal employment for harvesting. We have established a meteorological service and this, of course, is also of increasing importance to our farm population.

We have amended The Workmen's Compensation Act, in order that it would apply and extend to farmers, and this was done with the intent of helping in the provision of farm labour.

The Opposition ignores completely, with this resolution, what we are doing in the Ontario food council, and I am not going to repeat it, but during the estimates of The Department of Agriculture, the hon. Minister (Mr. Stewart), I thought, produced quite an amazing story of what that council is at present doing.

The Opposition has ignored what we are doing in promoting the exports of our agricultural products abroad, and of course, it has ignored the policies we introduced last fall and which are being revised now to deal with the present drought situation. But if hon. members recall, we paid subsidies on hay and we provided subsidies to help the farmers in eastern Ontario to get their herds to the market, when they were short of water and feed. So, Mr. Speaker, I must suggest that this amendment does not really make much sense to me either.

"The problems faced by local government in 1965 have been disregarded." That is the next point made. Sir, I would simply say that in the Legislature this year, two major reports have been tabled. One was the report of the Royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto—the Goldenberg report—and I was very interested to hear the comments of the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) on that report this morning. I express no opinion as to their validity, but at least he took a different point of view than the report does, and we will be very interested in looking at the comments that he made.

Of course, the final report of the select committee on The Municipal Act is now in and the committee has been appointed to examine that report with the greatest of care, with a view to rewriting The Municipal Act in order to incorporate those of its recommendations that appear to be feasible.

There are 37 major amendments that have been made to The Municipal Act. There have been amendments to The Assessment Act. We introduced what was referred to last night as a pile of junk, but I think that some people, from a municipal point of view, will think it is very important, and that is an experimental commuter train service for, not the Metropolitan Toronto area only, but from one side of Toronto across to the other.

Finally, as to problems faced by local government in 1965, at the present time we are assisting Welland and Lincoln counties in their studies, which we hope will lead to alterations in government. There is a study proceeding in Ottawa and in Carleton county. Another study is proceeding in Sault Ste. Marie. Another study is proceeding at the Lakehead, not to mention the Goldenberg report just completed. So it is really, without being facetious, quite ridiculous to say that we have failed to face the problems faced by local government in 1965.

Sir, the fifth comment is that we have failed to provide a comprehensive programme of development of the vast resources in the northern part of our province and fair and reasonable payments to mining municipalities. In The Department of Mines—I would say, in commenting very briefly indeed on this particular aspect of it—the airborne magnetometer surveys are being continued and I think that they have done a great deal to provide the basis upon which exploration can be made. The roads to resources programme is continuing in The Department of Highways. Our Department of Lands and Forests has done a great deal in improving the management of our forest resources and seeing that they are utilized properly.

In this regard, hon. members might like to hear of the following pulp mill expansions that have been announced since January 1, 1964: Abitibi at Smooth Rock Falls, $13,000,000; Domtar at Red Rock Ontario, $14.5 million; Domtar at Cornwall, Ontario, $10,000,000; Great Lakes Paper at Fort William, $31,000,000; KVP at Espanola, $20,000,000; Provincial Paper Company, Port Arthur, $8,000,000; Spruce Falls Company at Kapuskasing, $20,000,000; Dryden Paper Company, Dryden, Ontario $5,000,000.

Cochrane Enterprises in Cochrane has rebuilt its chip plant there and its plywood plant, costing $1.5 million. Weldwood of Canada at Long Lac has built a new $2,000,000 plywood plant. A.M.L. Plywood, Chapleau, has built a plant costing $1,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, while these announcements have been made individually over this period of time, I must admit that I was very pleased myself when we gathered all these figures into one place, because I had never heard them recited just like that before. If anybody asks, "Is anything wrong with our forest industries?" he does not know what he is talking about.

Sir, the sixth point was the elimination of the serious danger arising from air pollution and water pollution in Ontario. The OWRC has been expanded considerably. I have not the figures here for what it has done, although these figures are in the record of this session and were put before the House, or for the number of municipalities in which plants have been built. The OWRC has been expanded in this past year with the appointment of four new assistant general managers. We have introduced in the last year a new policy for building water pipelines, in which we will build and finance the construction of the pipeline and sell the water from it on a user basis to those who want it. This is a very broad change in policy and I think one—I know full well—that will expand greatly as the years go on.

We have been co-operating with the international joint commission in studies of Great Lakes levels. I must say, Mr. Speaker, while I had something kind to say about the hon. member for Yorkview, a few minutes ago, when he said that the Kierans plan could have any effect on the drought in Ontario, I changed my mind. He mentioned the drought, and asked why we would not go ahead with the Kierans water diversion. These are the two problems we have that of course are completely unrelated. One is an internal water problem, within the boundaries of the province, and the other, of course, is a much larger, much more complex, much more difficult problem, of how we are to deal with the water levels in the Great Lakes. I might say I have asked that this be put on the agenda and looked at during the next federal-provincial conference, in order merely that we can build the machinery of co-operation between the provinces, and that we can proceed with studies of these matters.

Mr. Speaker, in fighting water pollution in Ontario, we have a long way to go, but we have come a very long way too and what I have outlined here indicates just how far we have come. I think it is a complete answer to that particular portion of the amendment.

The final one, Mr. Speaker, is No. 7. It says:

The provision of leadership in the field of labour relations, the lack of which has resulted in harmful dislocation in the industrial sphere.

Mr. Speaker, what does the record show in this area? Between 1946 and 1959 the average yearly loss of manhours in industry from strikes and lockouts was 1.8 million manhours each year. Between 1960 and 1964 the average yearly loss of manhours declined to an average of 1.2 million manhours each year, a one-third reduction during a period in which our labour force was increasing mightily and the number of manhours worked in industry was increasing as well.

Mr. Speaker, without belabouring the point—after all it has been said here this afternoon—let us address our minds to the matter at hand and that is the question of the amendment upon which we are now to vote. As I have outlined the record here, I would hope that my hon. friends opposite would agree that as this session has unfolded since the Budget came in, while we might have had the excuse of ignorance before the estimates were presented when this amendment was made, now that they have heard the full story of the administration of the government and how it is being done, I am sure they will all agree with me that this was a nonsensical amendment in the first place.

Mr. Speaker: The Budget debate now being concluded, I shall put the main motion and the amendment before the House for a vote.

Mr. Allan moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

Mr. Thompson moves, seconded by Mr. Oliver, that the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House regrets the Budget has failed to make adequate provision for the proper use of Ontario's financial resources as well as its human resources in that it has neglected to include action upon the following:

1. The encouragement, fostering and development of new industry throughout the province.
2. Provision of proper educational facilities for training and retraining of workers in view of the challenge of automation.
3. The assurance of prosperity to those who derive their income from our agricultural industries.
4. The problems faced by local governments in 1965.
5. A comprehensive programme of development of the vast resources in the northern part of our province and fair and reasonable payments to mining municipalities.
6. The elimination of the serious danger arising from air pollution and water pollution in Ontario.
7. The provision of leadership in the field of labour relations, the lack of which has resulted in harmful dislocation in the industrial sphere.

The House will vote first on the amendment to the motion moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

YEAS

Bryden
Bukator
Davison
Freeman
Gaunt
Gishorn
Lewis
(Scarborough West)
Newman
Nixon
Oliver
Paterson
Renwick
Singer
Sopha
Spence
Taylor

NAYS

Allan
Auld
Bales
Beckett
Boyer
Brown
Brunelle
Butler
Carruthers
Carton
Cecile
Cowling
Demers
Downer
Eagleson
Evans
Gomme

YEAS Thompson
Worton
Young—19.

NAYS
Grossman
Guindon
Harris
Haskett
Henderson
Hodgson
(Scarborough East)
Hodgson
(Victoria)
Johnston
(Parry Sound)
Johnston
(Carleton)
Kerr
Lawrence
(Russell)
Lawrence
(St. George)
Letherby
Lewis
(Humber)
Mackenzie
MacNaughton
Morningstar
McNeil
Olde
Peck
Pittock
Price
Randall
Reilly
Reuter
Robarts
Roberts
Rollins
Root
Rowe
Rowntree
Simonett
Spooner
Thrasher
Villeneuve
Walker
Wardrope
Welch
White
Whitney
Wishart
Yaremko—59.

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.
I declare the main motion carried.

The House resolved itself into the committee of ways and means; Mr. A. W. Downer in the chair.

Clerk of the House:

Resolved,

That there be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of this province a sum not exceeding $1,468,410,200, to meet the supply to that extent granted to Her Majesty.

Resolution concurred in.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves that the committee on ways and means rise and report that it has come to a certain resolution.

Motion agreed to; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee on ways and means begs to report it has come to a certain resolution.

Report agreed to.

ACT GRANTING CERTAIN SUMS OF MONEY

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal years ending the 31st day of March, 1965, and the 31st day of March, 1966.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Allan moves second reading of Bill No. 168, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Allan moves third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to; third reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Resolved the bill do now pass and be intituled as in the motion.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before I wait upon His Honour, I would like to table the answers to questions Nos. 7, 19, 21, 22, 26, 37, 63, 115 and 116.

This leaves one question unanswered, 117, which was asked on Friday, June 18, and

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 19, the "nays" 59.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

All those in favour of the main motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

there has not been time to make the necessary research.

The hon. Prime Minister tabled answers to questions as follows:

19. Mr. Singer—Inquiry of the Ministry—(a) Will the Ministry advise which official, either of The Attorney General's Department, or other legal official appointed by the province of Ontario, gave instructions that Vernon Wilcox continue to be confined at the Ontario hospital at Orillia on December 25, 1964; (b) The reason such order was given; (c) The reason that consideration as recommended by Dr. A. L. Rice, superintendent of the Ontario hospital at Orillia, was refused?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General (Mr. Wishart):

The Crown attorney at Toronto advised The Department of Health that the criminal code contemplated custody in a mental hospital and that if the accused were dangerous then he should be kept in strict custody. He gave no direction as to strict custody.

The Honourable Mr. Justice C. D. Stewart, chairman of the advisory committee on the detention of patients in The Department of Health held a hearing for the purpose of determining whether or not the offence alleged had actually been committed. He came to the conclusion that if the accused could be tried he would be acquitted and recommended that he be released on probation. In the result, Wilcox was placed in the care of his parents at his home on April 15 and is still there.

21. Mr. Singer—Inquiry of the Ministry—Will the Attorney General advise whether or not all procedures as set out in The Conservation Authorities Act and The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963 have been followed insofar as those provisions affect the expropriations carried out for the Conservation Dam known as the "Gordon W. Pittock Dam" and other properties required in connection therewith?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

According to the opinion of the law officers of The Department of the Attorney General, based on the documents and information supplied and made available by the Upper Thames River conservation authority, the procedures as set out in The Conservation Authorities Act and The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963 with regard to the expropriations carried out in respect of the conservation dam known as the Gordon W. Pittock dam and other properties required in connection therewith were carried out with the following exceptions:

(a) No approval, in writing, of the Minister required by section 16 of The Conservation Authorities Act has been obtained.

(b) No substantial compliance with the provision of subsection 3 and 4 of section 25 of The Conservation Authorities Act has been carried out.

(c) No registration of an amending plan in accordance with the provisions of subsection 3 of section 4 of The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963 has yet been effected.

(d) Four registered owners expropriated did not receive notice required by section 5 of The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963, within the prescribed time limit.

Note:

The properties of three of the four owners abovementioned were inadvertently included in the expropriation plan and in one case the owner rather than the registered owner was served with notice. The latter case has subsequently been rectified.

22. Mr. Singer—Inquiry of the Ministry—Will the Attorney General advise whether or not all of the persons from whom land was expropriated as referred to in question 21 above have been given the necessary notice and information provided for in the Ontario statutes which authorize such expropriations or set out the manner in which compensation for such expropriation is to be determined?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

According to the legal opinion of the law officers of The Department of the Attorney General, based on the documents and information supplied and made available by the Upper Thames conservation authorities, the necessary notice in form 1 to The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963 was served upon all registered owners as required by section 5(1) of the Act save and except as indicated under (d) to question 21.

Note:

No uniformity has been found in the service of notices upon owners other than registered owners under the permissive provisions of sections 5 and 9 of The Expropriation Procedures Act, 1962-1963.

Adequate notices in respect of possession and of information pertaining to the settlement of compensation have been given to registered owners by the authority.

26. Mr. Bryden—Inquiry of the Ministry—1. In the current fiscal year how many breeders received grants from the government's annual grant made to the Canadian thoroughbred horse society; 2. What breeders received in excess of $1,000 in individual grants, and how much did each of them receive?

Answer by the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan):

1. 156 (1964-65)

2. The Canadian thoroughbred horse society awarded to the following the amounts shown:

Armstrong Bros. Co. Ltd., $2,225.25; Beasley, W. R. $1,224.12; Bell, G. M. & Gardiner, C., $1,016.75; Boylen, J. A., $1,039.50; Boylen, Mrs. M. J., $1,279.50; Conklin Farm Ltd., $2,623.25; Gardiner, G. R., $1,143.37; Gaul, W. A., $1,254.25; Hardinge, Viscount, $1,758.75; Mann, Mrs. C. C., $1,405.75; McClelland, D. G., $2,151.75; Pasquale, E. C., $1,154.25; Sherwood, P. A., $1,832.75; Smallwood, J. W., $1,037.50; Smythe, C., $1,204.12; Stafford Farms, $2,055.00; Taylor, E. P., $15,096.25; Tomlinson, J., $1,339.75.

63. Mr. Singer—Inquiry of the Ministry—Will the Ministry advise:

1. Re each of the years 1963 and 1964, how many persons have been imprisoned in Ontario:

- (a) in lock-ups;
- (b) in reformatories;
- (c) in jails;
- (d) in training schools;
- (e) in other places of detention for periods greater than eight days;

who have later been released as a result of charges against them being withdrawn or dismissed at magistrate's courts, on preliminary hearings, at trial by a higher court, or on appeal;

- 2. Names of all such persons so detained;
- 3. The length of time for which all such persons were so detained;
- 4. (a) How many of such persons were held without bail for all or part of such detention; or (b) continued to be detained because they were unable to meet the bail requirements fixed in their particular case?

Answer by the hon. Attorney General:

The Department of the Attorney General has not been maintaining complete statistical data indicated in this question.

However, the Ontario police commission has been instructed to establish a "Statistics Section" within its organization. The appropriate statistical data referred to in this question will be collected on a day-to-day basis for future reference and comparison.

115. Mr. Bryden—Inquiry of the Ministry—1. What was the cost of: (a) dinner, (b) liquor, (c) fashion show, (d) music and other entertainment, at the banquet held on Thursday, May 20, following the provincial conference for women sponsored by The Department of Economics and Development; 2. How many people, including invited guests, attended; 3. (a) What was the price of tickets, and (b) how many paid this price?

Answer by the hon. Minister of Economics and Development (Mr. Randall):

In common with many other Ontario industries, the women's and children's garment industry must look to the export markets for any appreciable increase in production over and above the normal expansion resulting from increases in population and rising standards of living.

It has long been realized that this industry needed to create a fashion image recognizable beyond the borders of Canada. A small fashion show aimed at the United States market was organized. The reception was so favourable that several firms were able to rapidly increase their exports to the United States and some entered the market for the first time.

In 1964, a small group of manufacturers, assisted by this department and the federal Department of Trade and Commerce, exhibited independently in the northeastern United States, and again, reception was favourable.

As a result of these successes, the industry approached the department requesting sponsorship of an industry-wide promotion.

In May, 1964, the women's advisory committee recommended that a fashion design awards competition together with a fashion show be undertaken.

To make the necessary new and unusual impact, the competition—limited to Canadian designers—involved judging designs inspired by Canadian paintings selected by the director of the Toronto art gallery.

The paintings were displayed in a special area of the gallery, and manufacturers and designers were invited to visit the display.

It was decided that the awards would be given the name of "EEDEE." This word stands for excellence of design and the letters were taken from the name of The Department of Economics and Development.

An independent jury was appointed to judge the entries and to recommend awards. Judging took place during April, 1965, and the winning creations were shown and the "EEDÉE" awards presented at a dinner and fashion show held in the Royal York hotel, May 20, 1965, the date of the symposium held by the women's advisory committee when the theme was "Woman in the Economy."

Buyers from Europe, the Middle East the United Kingdom and the United States were brought to Toronto to attend the fashion show and examine the merchandise on display in the manufacturers' sample rooms in the Royal York hotel. These buyers represented the leading department stores and buying offices in their respective countries.

From May 20, 1965 to May 22, 1965, manufacturers of women's and children's garments displayed their products in sample rooms in the Royal York hotel.

The following statistics give an indication of the interest in this promotion:

FASHION DESIGN AWARDS COMPETITION

Number of manufacturers entering competition	64
Number of creations submitted	157
Number of creations nominated for final showing	80
Number of "EEDÉE" awards	24
Best of show award	1

BUYER'S PROGRAMME

Number of manufacturers exhibiting in sample rooms at the Royal York hotel May 20-22, 1965	74
Number of foreign buyers attending	67
Countries represented by the buyers	15
Number of languages used in conducting business	5

DINNER AND FASHION SHOW

Number of fashion editors attending	6
Number attending dinner and fashion show	850

Much interest was shown by the foreign buyers and many sample orders were placed with the manufacturers who exhibited in the sample rooms. Fur garments, high fashion dresses, women's sportswear and lingerie, children's wear, especially sportswear and protective clothing, aroused considerable enthusiasm and it was in these areas that the majority of sample orders were placed.

Several of the buyers evinced interest in additional merchandise such as giftware, toys, boys' and men's wear and arrangements were made for them to visit manufacturers of these products. Again, several substantial sample orders were placed.

A survey of manufacturers and foreign buyers is, at present, under way, and will not be completed for approximately four to six weeks. Twelve buyers heard from to date report $140,000 of sample purchases. The full results of this survey should indicate clearly, the value of the promotion and the prospects for Ontario-based manufacturers of women's and children's clothing in the export markets of the United States, the United Kingdom, Europe and the Middle East. It is estimated that the business transacted could reach $1,000,000.

In the meantime, it is fair to state that the first Ontario fashion design awards competition, fashion show and buyer's programme was enthusiastically received by designers, manufacturers, and buyers alike and all groups learned much from the promotion.

The foreign representatives at the fashion show were so impressed that a number of them asked if the government would sponsor similar promotions in their countries. The department is now consulting the federal Department of Trade and Commerce to see whether an arrangement can be worked out for Ontario participation in Canada Weeks abroad.

A preliminary survey was made by the department as to the effectiveness of this promotion among the general public. At last count the fashion show had been reported in more than 100 daily and weekly newspapers in Ontario. Stories and pictures appeared in newspapers in eight provinces. This newspaper space would have cost about $10,000 if purchased as advertising lineage. Instead, it was editorial content and was read by thousands of households.

A 30-minute programme about the fashion show, called "Take 30," was carried by the CBC—35 stations on microwave and 11 stations on delayed relay. CFTO—in Toronto—did a 30-minute show, nine other TV stations across the province showed "EEDÉE" fashion film on their news broadcasts, and radio stations throughout Ontario mentioned the "EEDÉE" awards on the news. Cost of this TV and radio space would amount to another $10,000 if purchased as advertising lineage. There is no way of knowing how many thousands of people learned about the "EEDÉE" awards through this free publicity.

The competition inspired Ontario designers to design truly Canadian creations.

It stimulated interest in, and enhanced the reputation of Canadian fabrics and design both in Canada and abroad.

It encouraged manufacturers to set higher standards of workmanship.

It gave manufacturers a real opportunity to judge foreign interest in Canadian women's and children's clothing.

And, finally, it proved once again that well-designed, quality merchandise, which is competitively priced will find buyers in the major markets of the world.

Replies to questions:

1. (a) cost of dinner, $5,100; (b) cost of liquor, $1,608; (c) cost of fashion show, $5,899; (d) music and entertainment—included in (c), $550.

2. Number of people attending, 850.

3. (a) price of tickets, $7.50; (b) number of paid admissions, 636, designers, manufacturers, buyers, women's advisory committee, head table, press, officials and staff, 214; 850.

116. Mr. Sopha—Inquiry of the Ministry—1.

What was the total cost of the dinner tendered to the Shahanshah of Iran. 2. (a) Were invitations sent to candidates of the Progressive-Conservative Party defeated at general elections in the province; (b) If so, how many; 3. (a) Were invitations sent to presidents and/or officers of local Progressive-Conservative associations; (b) If so, how many; 4. (a) Were invitations sent to Liberal and/or New Democratic Party candidates defeated at general elections in the province; (b) If so, how many; 5. (a) Were invitations sent to presidents and/or officers of local Liberal and/or New Democratic Party associations; (b) If so, how many.

Answer by the hon. Prime Minister:

In the latter part of May, 1965, at the invitation of the federal government of Canada, the Shahanshah of Iran, accompanied by the Empress Farah Pahlavi, was on a state visit to Canada.

As a consequence of official contacts and representations by The Department of State at Ottawa with his office here, the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario acceded to the request of the government of Canada that hospitality be extended to this distinguished royal couple. On behalf of the people of Ontario this was done, during their stay in Toronto, to pay tribute to His Imperial Majesty Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlavi who, since his accession to the throne, has given new leadership to the Iranian nation.

The western democracies have important and interesting links with the nations of the Middle East and Africa, and the people of our province can take considerable satisfaction in the international reputation of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

More than 6,000 miles from Toronto on Iran's Dez River is the site of Iran's vast $65 million hydro-electric station. It is a project which, under agreement, is being developed with the assistance of specialized Ontario Hydro personnel, for upon the 10-man Hydro team in Iran, headed by Donald Haig, formerly plant superintendent of our Nipigon River generating stations, was laid the responsibility of commissioning the 520,000 kilowatt Dez project, and for training young Iranians to operate it. Under the Shah's programme for the development of Iran, Ontario by invitation has been proud to play its part, which emphasizes that as Canadians we are accepting our responsibility to lend a helping hand in the cause of world peace and understanding.

No untoward action, therefore, should becloud in any way the goodwill we feel towards, and the respect we have for, the Iranian people whose nation, formerly the heart of the Persian empire—of great antiquity, oriental culture and military history—is keeping abreast of modern practices and the great potentialities which are of benefit to their country and its citizens.

(1) to (5): The dinner tendered to the Shahanshah by the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario will be paid for, out of funds allotted to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor's office, after the account is rendered to him and when settlement is made.

The Lieutenant-Governor is appointed by the Dominion government at Ottawa, acts upon the counsel of his provincial constitutional advisers, and in the discharge of the responsibilities of his high office represents the Governor General of Canada and, thus, Her Majesty the Queen.

His Honour would be unaware officially, and completely disinterested in, the political complexion and views of his invited guests, who it is said, constituted a cross-section of representative Canadian citizens across Ontario.

The detailed particulars sought under question 116 form no part of, and are not contained in, the records of the Lieutenant-Governor, as the official host, or of the government.

The hon. Prime Minister also tabled returns to questions No. 7 and 37—Sessional Papers Nos. 87 and 88.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I will now leave the House and wait upon His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario entered the Chamber of the legislative assembly and took his seat upon the Throne.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour, the legislative assembly of the province has, at its present sittings thereof, passed several bills to which, in the name and on behalf of the said legislative assembly, I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

The Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles to the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

Bill No. 44, An Act to make uniform the powers of expropriation granted to universities.

Bill No. 66, An Act to amend The Public Service Works on Highways Act.

Bill No. 73, The Private Investigators and Security Guards Act, 1965.

Bill No. 83, An Act to amend The Energy Act, 1964.

Bill No. 84, An Act to amend The Gas and Oil Leases Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 85, An Act to amend The Planning Act.

Bill No. 87, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Bill No. 88, An Act to amend The Public Schools Act.

Bill No. 89, An Act to amend The Separate Schools Act.

Bill No. 90, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

Bill No. 94, An Act to establish a foundation for the preservation of the burial place of John Graves Simcoe and his wife.

Bill No. 95, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Bill No. 100, An Act to amend The General Sessions Act.

Bill No. 101, An Act to amend The Ontario Housing Corporation Act, 1964.

Bill No. 102, An Act to amend The Sheridan Park Corporation Act, 1964.

Bill No. 104, An Act to amend The Ontario Energy Board Act, 1964.

Bill No. 106, An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act.

Bill No. 107, An Act to amend The Ophthalmic Dispensers Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 108, An Act to amend The Pharmacy Act.

Bill No. 109, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Bill No. 110, An Act to amend The Registry Act.

Bill No. 111, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Bill No. 112, An Act to amend The Partnerships Registration Act.

Bill No. 113, An Act to amend The Limited Partnerships Act.

Bill No. 114, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of the centennial centre of science and technology.

Bill No. 115, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Bill No. 116, An Act to amend The Power Commission Act.

Bill No. 117, An Act to amend The Fire Marshals Act.

Bill No. 118, An Act to amend The Justices of the Peace Act.

Bill No. 119, The Child Welfare Act, 1965.

Bill No. 120, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Bill No. 121, An Act to amend The Surrogate Courts Act.

Bill No. 122, An Act to amend The Securities Act.

Bill No. 123, An Act to amend The Police Act.

Bill No. 124, An Act to amend The Public Service Superannuation Act.

Bill No. 125, An Act to amend The Public Service, Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 126, An Act to amend The Racing Commission Act.

Bill No. 127, An Act to establish the Ontario institute for studies in education.

Bill No. 128, An Act to amend The Ontario Water Resources Commission Act.

Bill No. 129, An Act to amend The Financial Administration Act.

Bill No. 130, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act.

Bill No. 131, An Act to amend The Logging Tax Act.

Bill No. 132, An Act to amend The Income Tax Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 133, An Act to amend The Retail Sales Tax Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 134, An Act to amend The Succession Duty Act.

Bill No. 135, The Milk Act, 1965.

Bill No. 136, An Act respecting medical services insurance.

Bill No. 137, An Act to amend The Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Bill No. 138, An Act to amend The Meat Inspection Act (Ontario), 1962-1963.

Bill No. 139, An Act to amend The Seed Potatoes Act.

Bill No. 140, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Bill No. 142, An Act to provide for the establishment of regional detention centres.

Bill No. 143, The Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1965.

Bill No. 144, An Act to impose a tax on the consumers of tobacco.

Bill No. 146, An Act to amend The Municipal Act.

Bill No. 147, An Act to provide for the establishment and operation of commuter services.

Bill No. 148, An Act to amend The University of Toronto Act, 1947.

Bill No. 149, The York University Act, 1965.

Bill No. 150, An Act respecting Lakehead University.

Bill No. 151, An Act to amend The Agricultural Research Institute of Ontario Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 152, An Act to amend The University of Guelph Act.

Bill No. 153, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act.

Bill No. 154, An Act to amend The Children's Institutions Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 155, An Act to amend The Homes for Retarded Children Act, 1962-1963.

Bill No. 156, An Act to amend The Department of Public Welfare Act.

Bill No. 157, The Pension Benefits Act, 1965.

Bill No. 158, An Act respecting Université d'Ottawa.

Bill No. 160, An Act to authorize the raising of money on the credit of the consolidated revenue fund.

Bill No. 161, An Act to amend The Ontario Mental Health Foundation Act, 1960-1961.

Bill No. 162, An Act to amend The Liquor Control Act.

Bill No. 163, An Act to amend The Liquor Licence Act.

Bill No. 164, An Act to amend The Assessment Act.

Bill No. 165, An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Employees' Retirement System Act, 1961-1962.

Bill No. 166, An Act to amend The Emergency Measures Act, 1962-1963.

To these Acts the Royal assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: In Her Majesty's name, the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth assent to these bills.

Mr. Speaker: May it please Your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects, the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, in session assembled, approach Your Honour with sentiments of unfeigned devotion and loyalty to Her Majesty's person and government and humbly beg to present for Your Honour's acceptance a bill intituled, An Act granting to Her Majesty's certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1965 and March 31, 1966.

To this Act the Royal assent was announced by the Clerk of the legislative assembly in the following words:

Clerk of the House: The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor doth thank Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, accept their benevolence and assent to this bill in Her Majesty's name.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor of the province was then pleased to deliver the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Lieutenant-Governor): Mr. Speaker and members of the legislative assembly of Ontario, during this third session of the 27th Parliament, hon. members have diligently and conscientiously discharged their duties as the elected representatives of the people of Ontario. In your deliberations you have considered 168 public bills and 43 private bills. Of these, 177 bills have now received Royal assent.

In the Speech from the Throne, a very extensive legislative programme was outlined, encompassing education, resource development, social, health and welfare services, municipal development and the administration of justice. I am very pleased to note that hon. members have dealt with every item mentioned in that document and have also considered and passed several major Acts which were subsequently introduced to complete the comprehensive legislative programme submitted to the legislative assembly.

In the field of education, your recognition of this most vital responsibility of the province of Ontario is reflected in the estimates passed for both The Department of Education and The Department of University Affairs, and in the amendments to several Acts. In particular, I should like to mention the establishment of colleges of applied arts and technology and the Ontario institute for studies in education. The bills respecting Lakehead University and the University of Ottawa represent important milestones in the development of our institutions of higher learning.

There have been presented to you economic goals for the province of Ontario, and on the realization of those goals all of the aggressive programmes now under way in The Departments of Economics and Development, Agriculture, Lands and Forests, Energy and Resources Management, Mines, and Tourism and Information will benefit industry and the people of Ontario as a whole. Of major significance was the passing of The Milk Act, which pioneers in a new approach to the marketing of milk in Canada.

Hon. members have been concerned with the challenge of providing progressive social, health and welfare services to the people of this province, commensurate with the tax revenues of the province and the existing financial arrangements with the federal government. During this session you have broken new ground in the legislation respecting penal reform, child welfare, industrial safety legislation, workmen's compensation, and medical services insurance. I congratulate hon. members on their continuing concern for the furthering of human rights in the province of Ontario as expressed in the amendment to The Ontario Human Rights Code introduced by my government.

The creation of an effective municipal system was fully examined by hon. members. You had occasion to study and debate the final report of the select committee on The Municipal Act and related Acts. You have considered and passed several amendments to legislation respecting our municipalities. Hon. members also took a significant step forward, in the field of efficient transportation services, by passing an Act to establish a rail commuter service in the heavily congested areas between Burlington and Dunbarton. Highway and municipal road construction, together with extensive research studies, will be facilitated by the record gross appropriations for The Department of Highways approved by the Legislature.

Hon. members devoted considerable time to matters relating to the administration of justice. In addition to the fullest opportunities accorded for extensive and detailed discussion of the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General, you passed amendments to a large number of bills including, among others, The Expropriation Procedures Act and The University Expropriation Powers Act. Four major reports—the report of the joint committee on legal aid, the first report of the Ontario law reform commission, the report of the committee on securities legislation, and the final report of the select committee on consumer credit—were received by the Attorney General and tabled in the House for the information of and review by hon. members.

This third session of the 27th provincial Parliament has been a lengthy one during which my government has provided every facility to hon. members to discharge their responsibilities and to fulfill their duties to their constituents. I congratulate all of you on the manner in which the debates on the legislation were conducted in the assembly and in committee. You have accomplished a great deal and I am sure that your dedication of purpose will be fully appreciated by the people whom you serve.

This session has been highlighted by several lengthy discussions of the highest quality on matters of public concern. I wish to commend the hon. members who, in taking part in these debates, expressed the varied views and sentiments of the people of this province to the end that legislative enactments, proposed by my government and passed by hon. members, will prove to be of inestimable benefit to the people of Ontario as a whole.

With a well-ordered economy, and revenues which result from that commendable condition of provincial affairs, you have been enabled to approve of a record budget for Ontario. In doing so, you have had every opportunity to scrutinize thoroughly, and have passed, the estimates of the several departments of government, providing for the requirements of the province whose people are served by an able and conscientious civil service which will continue to discharge its functions in the usual capable and efficient manner.

May divine providence guide you in the days to come.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of the legislative assembly, it is the will and pleasure of the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor that this legislative assembly be prorogued and this legislative assembly is accordingly prorogued.

The Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor was pleased to retire from the Chamber.

The House prorogued at 5.20 o'clock p.m.

JOURNALS AND PROCEDURAL RESEARCH BRANCH
DIRECTION DES JOURNAUX ET DES RECHERCHES EN PROCEDURE
ROOM 1640, WHITNEY BLOCK
QUEEN'S PARK, TORONTO, ON M7A 1A2

